Then I come the next day and they give me a dose of Stravinsky which sounds in places like a million GI's rubbing dungarees on tin washboards. The rubbing is fearsome. I am told that it all has to do with some kind of ancient Russian springtime ritualistic dance. If that is a Russian springtime, then those people have never walked down a lane with a pretty girl in the newness of the year. If that is the music they used to dance to, it must have been done with caterpillar tractors.

The critics say this is absolute music, but I am a simple fellow who likes Beethoven, Brahams, Schubert and even Jerome Kern and Gershwin. But do I have to like noise, too? Do I have to go to Tanglewood to hear the Boston Symphony produce the sounds of a newspaper press room? Maybe the critics like the arithmetic of music; as for me, give me beauty of melody, rapture of expression, intensity of feeling. I leave the physics of the celestial orbs to the atomic scientists. Their music is, boom! That's really what Copland and Stravinsky sound like to me—just a lot of boom.

Maybe I ought not to step into the domain of the music critics. They apparently know what it is all about and like it. Or maybe up at Tanglewood, they ought to have special sessions for critics and musicologists and such experts who can do their calculus while they watch Maestro Koussevitzky or his protege, Leonard Bernstein belabor their minions through the cacophony called modern music. But for simple folks who just want to listen to beauty, this fare is too heady, like vodka spiked with anisette.

And the question arises: Why must everything modern be so exhibitionistic, so bombastic, so tough on the ear and the soul? Why must it all sound like a lie—like a small boy's lie? Why must even music be so unmannerly, so gross, so grotesque? Youth tells me it is the spirit of the age—two wars with a depression in between. What a spiritless age!

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 18,073)

This Clipping From
POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
NEW YORKER

AUG 1 - 1947

Boston Symphony Concerts Arranged

In the last week of the Tanglewood season which will close Aug. 10, the Boston Symphony orchestra will play four concerts and the students of the Berkshire Music center, Lenox, Mass., will give seven performances. Beethoven's Fourth and Fifth symphonies will be heard in the program tomorrow night with Jacob Lateiner as soloist in the Beethoven Emperor concerto.

The Beethoven Symphonies No. 6 and No. 7 will be played in the concert at 3:30 o'clock Sunday afternoon and Joseph Battista will be soloist in the Piano Concerto No. 4 in G. Major. The Beethoven cycle will be concluded with a program Tuesday night at 7:30 o'clock when the Symphonies No. 8 and No. 9 will be presented.

For the last weekend, Leonard Bernstein will conduct on Thursday night Haydn's Symphony in B flat; Hindemith's Violin Concerto, Ruth Posselt, soloist; and Schumann's Symphony No. 2. Robert Shaw will conduct Saturday night's concert, which will include the Mozart "Requiem", the Bach Cantata No. 50 "Nun is das Heil"; and Stravinsky's "Symphony of Psalms".

Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the closing concert of the season Sunday afternoon, Aug. 10, with Martinu's "Concerto Grosso for Chamber Orchestra, with two Pianos; Revel's "Pavane" and "Bolero", and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 4.

The student events for this weekend include opera scenes this afternoon at 4:30, and symphony concert tonight by a student orchestra, conducted by students and Dr. Stanley Chapple; a chamber music concert Sunday morning at 10:30 o'clock, an auditors' orchestral concert Monday at 1:30 o'clock, the first performance in America of Mozart's "Idomeneo", Monday night; a chamber music concert, Eleazar deCarvalho conducting, Wednesday at 4:30; a second performance of "Idomeneo" Wednesday night; a symphony concert Thursday afternoon, the last student orchestral concert of the season, Friday night; opera scenes Saturday afternoon at 2:30 and a chamber music concert Sunday morning.

Rehearsals for Festival concerts will be open to the public each Saturday morning for the benefit of the pension fund.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD - TELEGRAM
AUG 1 - 1947

Music

Beethoven Cycle Starts at Festival

By ROBERT BAGAR,

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 1.—A Beethoven cycle opened the second week of the symphonic part of the Berkshire Festival last evening at Tanglewood. We are to hear Beethoven in three more programs, two of them this week and an extra concert Tuesday following. During the cycle all nine of the symphonies and the Fourth and Fifth Piano Concertos will have been presented before audiences which, from the looks of things, are Beethoven-starved.

Frankly, I don't know why they shouldn't be. Beethoven, for all the intellectualizing, seems to be the one composer who can be depended upon to put on the kind of show to suit almost everybody's musical needs. That is, if he isn't bastinadoed into saying and doing things he never intended.

It isn't likely that Beethoven will be given in any other way than expressively and with dignity here, if last night's results are any indication. Dr. Koussevitzky, offering the First, Second and Third Symphonies, gave us the true feel of Beethoven, his peasant strength and poetic imaginings. Witness, for instance, the combination of classic and muscular grief in the performance of the Funeral March from the "Eroica," or the pure and lofty song of the larghetto from the Second Symphony.

Idea of Completeness.

These were only moments in an evening of successful dealings with one of the most difficult of all composers to project. In each case there was continuity and the idea of completeness. A work began and lived its life in a natural manner, without the interference of personal prejudice of any kind.

This scarcely means that Dr. Koussevitzky gave us Beethoven without touching him with his own individuality. That would be like reading it from the book in a cold, even impeccable manner, yet without the voice or the breath of life. Here and there, as you can say of any conductor, you came across accents that were stronger, perhaps, than you'd heard from someone else, rhythms more decisive, a more languid flow of the melody.

Cohesive Performances.

But the important thing I remember about the performances is that they were cohesive, everything was connected with everything else. The plan was there and its realization in every case.

I think it's about time to say that the Boston Symphony was marvelously in tune. How much that relates to a musical rendering no one can calculate right down to irreducible minimums. But certainly none, save the tone-deaf, can be blithe about orchestral flatting or sharping.

Beethoven cycles, like the poor, are always with us. However, I'll go to them willingly wherever there is promise of honesty and dedicated performance; especially, that is, if such windfalls can be had, as now, in the Berkshires.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. ~~(D 358,813)~~ ~~(S 708,754)~~

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

AUG 2 - 1947

Beethoven Series Opens At Berkshire Festival

LENOX, Mass., July 31.—The first of four Berkshire Festival concerts devoted to Beethoven's music was given Thursday in Tanglewood's Music Shed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Kous[illegible] before an audience of [illegible]. The works performed were the first three symphonies.

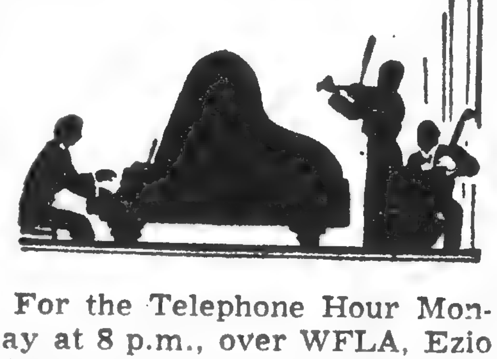
The orchestra and conductor united in a lucid exposition of this highly transitory period in the composer's writings. The contrast between the lyric style of the first symphony and the stern dramaticism of the "Eroica" was vividly illustrated. The first symphony was imbued with a disarming freshness, and the performance of the finale was particularly outstanding in its enthusiasm and crystalline clarity of detail. The second symphony received an effectively intergrated reading, and the "Eroica" symphony gave an impression of unusual strength.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 14,638)

This Clipping From
ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.
INDEPENDENT

AUG 1 1947

Week End Listening For Music Lovers



For the Telephone Hour Monday at 8 p.m., over WFLA, Ezio Pinza, basso, will sing arias by Mozart and Lully. Donald Voorhees will direct the orchestra in Richard Strauss' "Rosenkavalier" waltzes, Cui's "Orientale," and Tucci's "La Bama de Vera Cruz."

In its final broadcast of the season and the last to come from the Berkshire Music festival in Tanglewood, Mass., this year, the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, will be heard Tuesday over station WSUN and ABC in Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. The broadsast will be on extended time, starting at 8:30 and concluding at 9:45 p.m., so that the entire symphony may be heard.

OKOLSKY

music critic. But I like to go uring the Winter, when I am to listen to the Philharmonic. in the Berkshires in Massames each week to listen to the as I do a table of statistics or e are scientists called musicol-erstanding music. With them, th formulae.

nglewood most of all because the sky while I listen. I even is good to listen to music and [illegible] rain. It is soothing.

This year I shall hear all nine of Beethoven's symphonies, one right after the other in order. That will be a new experience for me, although I have tried it with records. Still, records are not the same as sitting in the big shed in Tanglewood up in the green Berkshires. No records can be like that.

I know that I shall stretch my legs, relax, maybe chew a cigar, and listen. Do I know why Beethoven wrote No. 1 or No. 5 or No. 9? No! And I don't care. It would be the same to me if his name were Smith or Jones. All I want to do is to listen and to be transported to the infinite.

So the musicians spoil it all for me. They play something by Aaron Copland that hits me over the head. To me it is no longer music because I cannot listen. I am pushed. I am kicked around. It has something to do with the Century of the Common Man or the Nazi or Communists or other busy-bodies. It is a factory, a mill, a mine. It is terrific — that is, the noise is terrific.

Then I come the next day and they give me a dose of Stravinsky which sounds in places like a million GI's rubbing dungarees on tin washboards. The rubbing is fearsome. I am told that it all has to do with some kind of ancient Russian springtime ritualistic dance. If that is a Russian springtime, then those people have never walked down a lane with a pretty girl in the newness of the year. If that is the music they used to dance to, it must have been done with caterpillar tractors.

The critics say this is absolute music, but I am a simple fellow who likes Beethoven, Brahams, Schubert and even Jerome Kern and Gershwin. But do I have to like noise, too? Do I have to go to Tanglewood to hear the Boston Symphony produce the sounds of a newspaper press room? Maybe the critics like the arithmetic of music; as for me, give me beauty of melody, rapture of expression, intensity of feeling. I leave the physics of the celestial orbs to the atomic scientists. Their music is, boom! That's really what Copland and Stravinsky sound like to me—just a lot of boom.

Maybe I ought not to step into the domain of the music critics. They apparently know what it is all about and like it. Or maybe up at Tanglewood, they ought to have special sessions for critics and musicologists and such experts who can do their calculus while they watch Maestro Koussevitzky or his protege, Leonard Bernstein belabor their minions through the cacophony called modern music. But for simple folks who just want to listen to beauty, this fare is too heady, like vodka spiked with anisette.

And the question arises: Why must everything modern be so exhibitionistic, so bombastic, so tough on the ear and the soul? Why must it all sound like a lie—like a small boy's lie? Why must even music be so unmannerly, so gross, so grotesque? Youth tells me it is the spirit of the age—two wars with a depression in between. What a spiritless age!

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

Cir. (S 144,999) (D 41,048)

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

Music on the Air

BEETHOVEN'S N[illegible]

Details

TODAY

[illegible] Rimsky-Korsakoff
[illegible] Schubert
[illegible] Liszt
[illegible] NBC Symphony
[illegible] Mendelssohn
[illegible] Turina
[illegible] Sunday Evening Four [illegible] Orchestra, directed by [illegible] Chabrier
[illegible] Offenbach
[illegible] Debussy
[illegible] Delibes
[illegible] Saint-Saens
[illegible] Bizet

MONDAY

[illegible]

La Bamba de Vera Cruz .... Tucci
Orchestra
Bois Epais .... Lully
Pinza
Orientale .... Cui
Orchestra
Bacco Ubbriaco .... Guerrini
Pinza
Rosenkavalier Waltzes .... Strauss
Orchestra
Aprite Un Po 'Quegl' Occhi from "The Marriage of Figaro" .... Mozart
Pinza

WJAR—10:30-11 p. m.—The "First Piano Quartet," four-piano group composed of Adam Garner, Vee Padwa, Frank Mittler and Edward Edson.

Dance of the Toy Pipes .... Tchaikovsky
Etude in F Minor Opus 25, No. 3 . Chopin
Finale from "Classical Symphony" Prokfolev
Moonlight Sonata—First Movement .... Beethoven
Golliwog's Cakewalk .... Debussy
Andalucia .... Lecuona
Sorcerer's Apprentice .... Dukas

WEDNESDAY

WPRO—11:30 p. m.—midnight—"Invitation to Music" with Bernard Herrmann conducting the CBS Symphony Orchestra.

Suite for Strings .... Szabo
Two Aquarelles .... Delius
Air and Dance .... Delius

THURSDAY

WJAR—11:30 p. m.-midnight—The "Concert of Nations," featuring the CBR Singers directed by Burton Kurth and the CBR String Orchestra, conducted by Albert Steinberg in music by Brahms.

Come Soon
Vineta
Choir
Minutes I and II from "Serenade in D"
Orchestra
Love Song Waltzes
Choir

FRIDAY

WPRO—10:30-11:00 p. m.—Eileen Farrell, soprano, with the Columbia Concert Orchestra directed by Alfredo Antonini.

Calm as the Night .... Bohm
Morning .... Speaks
Psyche .... Paladilhe
Through the Years .... Youmans
Chere Nuit .... Bachelet
Suicidio from "La Gioçonda" ..... Ponchielli

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD - TELEGRAM

AUG 2 - 1947

Starlets Shine in Berkshire Opera

By ROBERT BAGAR.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 2.—The opera department of the Berkshire Music Center put on a show of its own yesterday afternoon. This of course, was a mere prelude to the performance of Mozart's "Idomeneo," which takes place next Monday and Wednesday evenings. In "Idomeneo," we shall get quite a good all-around impression of what goes on here, operatically speaking, since this little known work of Mozart's, boasting one of his finest scores, will supply interpreters with as much challenge as they probably will ever get.

Yesterday, Boris Goldovsky's young charges in opera entertained a cap[illegible] audience in the concert hall [illegible] scenes from the great works. [illegible] singers had only piano supp[illegible] situation quite expected and [illegible] at all inhibiting to the liste[illegible] imagination.

Generally, the whole performance proceeded engagingly, the chief feat[illegible] being the alert mu[illegible] jo[illegible] done.

[illegible] were three young artists, wh[illegible] excellent performance recom[illegible]ds them to interesting ca[illegible] in the great big world outside. These were Florence Kopleff, a [illegible]-soprano, Frank Guerrera, a [illegible]one, and David Poleri, a te[illegible].

[illegible] Kopleff has a warm, round an[illegible]ious voice. She uses it co[illegible], most of the time, and it is [illegible] that she possesses a [illegible] flair for operatic work. She was heard, together with Michael Guida, tenor, in a fragment from the last act of "Il Trovatore."

Frank Guerrera's strong and agreeable voice, which needs refining here and there, did justice to Ford's monologue from "Falstaff." And David Poleri, who, to my mind, is the most promising of all who appeared yesterday afternoon, did the duet with Amneris (Angelica Sarris) from the last act of "Aida." Here is a tenor almost raady to break loose. His voice is true and substantial, his understanding of the Italian operatic style remarkable for one so young, and his phrasing and self-pacing quite professional.

There were scenes also from Madama Butterfly," "Wozzek" in which Ingrid Robertson sang the difficult lines intelligently, and "Turandot" where Ping, Pang and Pong, were effectively portrayed by Warren Galjuor, Mr. Guida and Robert Holland.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

Cir. (D 277,172) (Sat. 209,766)

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN

AUG 2 - 1947

Series "C" of the Berkshire Festival concerts will begin on Thursday, when Leonard Bernstein conducts the Boston Sympony in Haydn's Symphony in B flat (No. 102), the Hindemith Violin Concerto with Ruth Posselt as soloist, and Schumann's Second Symphony. The Saturday evening concert, directed by Robert Shaw, includes a Bach cantata (No. 50, "Nun ist das Heil"), Stravinsky's "Symphony of Psalms," and the Mozart Requiem. Serge Koussevitzky resumes leadership at the final concert on Sunday afternoon with the Martinu "Concerto Grosso" for two pianos, the Ravel "Pavane" and "Bolero," and Tschaikowsky's Fourth Symphony.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

Cir. (D 11,286)

This Clipping From
GLENS FALLS, N. Y.
POST STAR

AUG 1 - 1947

The Tenth Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood is now as its height, audiences estimated at 7,000 are in attendance at the concerts being held in the large shed which seats 6,000. The other 1,000 seat themselves under the trees and on the surrounding lawns, where they enjoy relaxation and picnic lunches before the programs begin.

The first concert at which the complete resources of the famous Boston Symphony Orchestra were employed was held in the shed last Thursday night. Previous programs had been given, but in the smaller Theatre-Concert Hall, and with a reduced orchestra.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, famed musical director of the orchestra, had arranged a program of unusual interest which, of course, was superbly played. Compositions heard were Arthur Honegger's "Symphony for String Orchestra," Debussy's "The Sea" and Brahms' Second Symphony. Some might have made a different arrangement of the numbers, placing Debussy's Sea pieces after the Brahms work, but not Dr. Koussevitzky. He chose to play the Debussy before Brahms, thus making a fine effect.

The conductor is famous for his interpretation of Debussy's "The Sea" and for good reason. In this work he caught the ephemeral character of the French spirit as he brought out all the limitless possibilities of this great orchestra.

The Honegger work was new to this listener, nevertheless was much enjoyed. It was written in 1941, in Paris, when France was under German occupation. It has three movements, all of which reveal the sombre and stark reality of the situation. Only in the very last movement does one catch a ray of light; this, when a chorale is introduced in the trumpet part. It was most effective. The playing of the composition brought forth rounds of applause, which unfortunately the composer could not acknowledge because he was ill. Honegger is professor of composition at the Berkshire Music Center.

The Brahms symphony received an interpretation which only a master could give, the final chords bringing forth an enthusiastic demonstration. The venerated leader was recalled many times, sharing the applause with the men on each occasion.

Other programs were given in the shed on Friday night, when a student orchestra played under several members of Koussevitzky's conducting class and his assistant in teaching, Eleazor de Carvalho. One of the highlights of this program was Carvalho's interpretation of Richard Strauss' "Death and Transfiguration." The other was the little ceremony in honor of Koussevitzky's seventy-third birthday. Eight trombones and one violin played a humorous Fanfare, and a chorus group sang an original composition honoring the conductor.

Other concerts were on Saturday night under Koussevitzky and Sunday afternoon, when Leonard Bernstein made his first appearance at Tanglewood as conductor.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

Cir. (D 77,465)

This Clipping From
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

AUG 3 - 1947

According to reports from Tanglewood, with particular reference to the unique "contest" held there in connection with last Tuesday's concert, when a new custom built phonograph competed for playing honors with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the results conformed to the traditional biblical story of David vs. Goliath. In this unprecedented musical exhibition, the phonograph was totally more pure, and showed higher fidelity than the orchestra.

This is especially significant when one considers that the demand for classical recordings has increased tremendously in recent years. As an illustration, Bach's esotoric Goldberg Variations for Harpsichord, which sold around 50 copies in 1933, sold more than 29,000 albums when recorded recently by the same performer, Wanda Landowska.

Unfortunately, the present cost of the radio-phonograph used in the test is prohibitive, but an RCA engineer was quoted as saying that mass production would undoubtedly bring the price within the pocketbook range of the average music lover.

This afternoon at 3:30, the third concert of the Beethoven cycle at Tanglewood will be given. The program will consist of the sixth and seventh symphonies and the Piano Concerto, No. 4, with Joseph Battista as soloist. The cycle will conclude Tuesday evening at the earlier hour of 7:30, when the eighth and ninth symphonies will be performed, with the Festival chorus prepared by Robert Shaw singing Schiller's "Ode to Joy." The soloists will be Frances Yeend, soprano, Eunice Alberts, contralto, David Lloyd, tenor, and James Pease, bass.

For the last weekend, Leonard Bernstein will conduct next Thursday evening, when Haydn's Symphony in B flat, Hindemith's Violin Concerto with Ruth Posselt as soloist, and Schumann's Symphony No. 2 will be performed. Robert Shaw will conduct Saturday evening's concert, when the program will include the Mozart "Requiem," with the same soloists as for Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, the Bach Cantata No. 50, "Nun is das Heil," and Stravinsky's "Symphony of Psalms."

Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the closing Festival concert of this season next Sunday afternoon, August 10, at 3:30, with a program consisting of Martinu's "Concerto Grosso for Chamber Orchestra," with two pianos, Ravel's "Pavane" and "Bolero," and Tschaikovsky's Symphony No. 4.

[108]

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (S 144,999) (D 41,048)
This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

AUG 3 - 1947

Music on the Air

BEETHOVEN'S Ninth Symphony will be broadcast from Tanglewood by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Festival Chorus conducted by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky on Tuesday night. It will be the last program from the Berkshire Festival. Soloists will be Frances Yeend, soprano; Eunice Alberts, contralto; David Lloyd, tenor; and James Pease, bass.

Details:

TODAY

WPRO—3-4:30 p. m. — CBS Symphony Orchestra directed by Bernard Herrmann.
Overture to "Abu Hassan" .... Weber
Symphonic Suite. "Antar" Opus 9 ..... Rimsky-Korsakoff
Symphony in B Minor, No. 8 ("Unfinished") .... Schubert
Les Preludes .... Liszt

WJAR—5-6 p. m.—The NBC Symphony Orchestra, directed by Milton Katims.
Symphony No. 3 in A Minor ("Scotch") .... Mendelssohn
Oracion del Torero .... Turina
Gayane Suite .... Khatchaturian

WFCI—8-9 p. m.—Sunday Evening Hour, Detroit Symphony Orchestra, directed by Walter Poole.
Marche Joyeuse .... Chabrier
Overture to "La Belle Helen" .... Offenbach
Clair de Lune .... Debussy
Waltz from "Naila" ballet .... Delibes
Bacchanale from "Samson et Dalila" .... Saint-Saens
Excerpts from "L'Arlesienne" Suite... Bizet

MONDAY

WJAR—9-9:30 p. m.—Ezio Pinza, bass, and orchestra, Donald Voorhees conducting.
La Bamba de Vera Cruz .... Tucci
Orchestra
Bois Epais .... Lully
Pinza
Orientale .... Cui
Orchestra
Bacco Ubbriaco .... Guerrini
Pinza
Rosenkavalier Waltzes .... Strauss
Orchestra
Aprite Un Po 'Quegl' Occhi from "The Marriage of Figaro" .... Mozart
Pinza

WJAR—10:30-11 p. m.—The "First Piano Quartet," four-piano group composed of Adam Garner, Vee Padwa, Frank Mittler and Edward Edson.
Dance of the Toy Pipes ....Tchaikovsky
Etude in F Minor Opus 25, No. 3. .Chopin
Finale from "Classical Symphony" Prokfolev
Moonlight Sonata—First Movement .... Beethoven
Golliwog's Cakewalk ....Debussy
Andalucia ....Lecuona
Sorcerer's Apprentice ....Dukas

WEDNESDAY

WPRO—11:30 p. m.—midnight—"Invitation to Music" with Bernard Herrmann conducting the CBS Symphony Orchestra.
Suite for Strings ....Szabo
Two Aquarelles ....Delius
Air and Dance ....Delius

THURSDAY

WJAR—11:30 p. m.-midnight—"The Concert of Nations," featuring the CBR Singers directed by Burton Kurth and the CBR String Orchestra, conducted by Albert Steinberg in music by Brahms.
Come Soon
Vineta
Choir
Minutes I and II from "Serenade in D"
Orchestra
Love Song Waltzes
Choir

FRIDAY

WPRO—10:30-11:00 p. m.—Eileen Farrell, soprano, with the Columbia Concert Orchestra directed by Alfredo Antonini.
Calm as the Night ....Bohm
Morning ....Speaks
Psyche ....Paladilhe
Through the Years ....Youmans
Chere Nuit ....Bachelet
Suicidio from "La Gioconda" .....Ponchielli

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD - TELEGRAM

AUG 2 - 1947

Starlets Shine in Berkshire Opera

By ROBERT BAGAR.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 2.—The opera department of the Berkshire Music Center put on a show of its own yesterday afternoon. This of course, was a mere prelude to the performance of Mozart's "Idomeneo," which takes place next Monday and Wednesday evenings. In "Idomeneo," we shall get quite a good all-around impression of what goes on here, operatically speaking, since this little known work of Mozart's, boasting one of his finest scores, will supply interpreters with as much challenge as they probably will ever get.

Yesterday, Boris Goldovsky's young charges in opera entertained a capacity audience in the concert hall [illegible] scenes from the great works. [illegible] singers had only piano support, a situation quite expected and [illegible] at all inhibiting to the listener's imagination.

Generally, the whole performance proceeded engagingly, the chief feature being the alert musical job done.

There were three young artists, wh[illegible] excellent performance recommends them to interesting careers in the great big world outside. These were Florence Kopleff, a [illegible]-soprano; Frank Guerrera, a [illegible]ne, and David Poleri, a tenor.

[illegible] Kopleff has a warm, round and [illegible] voice. She uses it [illegible], most of the time, and it is [illegible]nt that she possesses a [illegible] flair for operatic work.

She was heard, together with Michael Guida, tenor, in a fragment from the last act of "Il Trovatore."

Frank Guerrera's strong and agreeable voice, which needs refining here and there, did justice to Ford's monologue from "Falstaff." And David Poleri, who, to my mind, is the most promising of all who appeared yesterday afternoon, did the duet with Amneris (Angelica Sarris) from the last act of "Aida." Here is a tenor almost raady to break loose. His voice is true and substantial, his understanding of the Italian operatic style remarkable for one so young, and his phrasing and self-pacing quite professional.

There were scenes also from Madama Butterfly," "Wozzek" in which Ingrid Robertson sang the difficult lines intelligently, and "Turandot" where Ping, Pang and Pong, were effectively portrayed by Warren Galjuor, Mr. Guida and Robert Holland.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 277,172) (Sat. 209,766)
This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN

AUG 2 - 1947

Series "C" of the Berkshire Festival concerts will begin ~~on Thursday~~, when Leonard Bernstein conducts the Boston Sympony in Haydn's Symphony in B flat (No. 102), the Hindemith Violin Concerto with Ruth Posselt as soloist, and Schumann's Second Symphony. The Saturday evening concert, directed by Robert Shaw, includes a Bach cantata (No. 50, "Nun ist das Heil"), Stravinsky's "Symphony of Psalms," and the Mozart Requiem. Serge Koussevitzky resumes leadership at the final concert on Sunday afternoon with the Martinu "Concerto Grosso" for two pianos, the Ravel "Pavane" and "Bolero," and Tschaikowsky's Fourth Symphony.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 11,286)
This Clipping From
GLENS FALLS, N. Y.
POST STAR

AUG 1 - 1947

The Tenth Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood is now as its height, audiences estimated at 7,000 are in attendance at the concerts being held in the large shed which seats 6,000. The other 1,000 seat themselves under the trees and on the surrounding lawns, where they enjoy relaxation and picnic lunches before the programs begin.

The first concert at which the complete resources of the famous Boston Symphony Orchestra were employed was held in the shed last Thursday night. Previous programs had been given, but in the smaller Theatre-Concert Hall, and with a reduced orchestra.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, famed musical director of the orchestra, had arranged a program of unusual interest which, of course, was superbly played. Compositions heard were Arthur Honegger's "Symphony for String Orchestra," Debussy's "The Sea" and Brahms' Second Symphony. Some might have made a different arrangement of the numbers, placing Debussy's Sea pieces after the Brahms work, but not Dr. Koussevitzky. He chose to play the Debussy before Brahms, thus making a fine effect.

The conductor is famous for his interpretation of Debussy's "The Sea" and for good reason. In this work he caught the ephemeral character of the French spirit as he brought out all the limitless possibilities of this great orchestra.

The Honegger work was new to this listener, nevertheless was much enjoyed. It was written in 1941, in Paris, when France was under German occupation. It has three movements, all of which reveal the sombre and stark reality of the situation. Only in the very last movement does one catch a ray of light; this, when a chorale is introduced in the trumpet part. It was most effective. The playing of the composition brought forth rounds of applause, which unfortunately the composer could not acknowledge because he was ill. Honegger is professor of composition at the Berkshire Music Center.

The Brahms symphony received an interpretation which only a master could give, the final chords bringing forth an enthusiastic demonstration. The venerated leader was recalled many times, sharing the applause with the men on each occasion.

Other programs were given in the shed on Friday night, when a student orchestra played under several members of Koussevitzky's conducting class and his assistant in teaching, Eleazor de Carvalho. One of the highlights of this program was Carvalho's interpretation of Richard Strauss' "Death and Transfiguration." The other was the little ceremony in honor of Koussevitzky's seventy-third birthday. Eight trombones and one violin played a humorous Fanfare, and a chorus group sang an original composition honoring the conductor.

Other concerts were on Saturday night under Koussevitzky and Sunday afternoon, when Leonard Bernstein made his first appearance at Tanglewood as conductor.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 77,465)
This Clipping From
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

AUG 3 - 1947

According to reports from Tanglewood, with particular reference to the unique "contest" held there in connection with last Tuesday's concert, when a new custom built phonograph competed for playing honors with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the results conformed to the traditional biblical story of David vs. Goliath. In this unprecedented musical exhibition, the phonograph was totally more pure, and showed higher fidelity than the orchestra.

This is especially significant when one considers that the demand for classical recordings has increased tremendously in recent years. As an illustration, Bach's esotoric Goldberg Variations for Harpsichord, which sold around 50 copies in 1933, sold more than 29,000 albums when recorded recently by the same performer, Wanda Landowska.

Unfortunately, the present cost of the radio-phonograph used in the test is prohibitive, but an RCA engineer was quoted as saying that mass production would undoubtedly bring the price within the pocketbook range of the average music lover.

This afternoon at 3:30, the third concert of the Beethoven cycle at Tanglewood will be given. The program will consist of the sixth and seventh symphonies and the Piano Concerto, No. 4, with Joseph Battista as soloist. The cycle will conclude Tuesday evening at the earlier hour of 7:30, when the eighth and ninth symphonies will be performed, with the Festival chorus prepared by Robert Shaw singing Schiller's "Ode to Joy." The soloists will be Frances Yeend, soprano, Eunice Alberts, contralto, David Lloyd, tenor, and James Pease, bass.

For the last weekend, Leonard Bernstein will conduct next Thursday evening, when Haydn's Symphony in B flat, Hindemith's Violin Concerto with Ruth Posselt as soloist, and Schumann's Symphony No. 2 will be performed. Robert Shaw will conduct Saturday evening's concert, when the program will include the Mozart "Requiem," with the same soloists as for Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, the Bach Cantata No. 50, "Nun is das Heil," and Stravinsky's "Symphony of Psalms."

Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the closing Festival concert of this season next Sunday afternoon, August 10, at 3:30, with a program consisting of Martinu's "Concerto Grosso for Chamber Orchestra," with two pianos, Ravel's "Pavane" and "Bolero," and Tschaikovsky's Symphony No. 4.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 673,708) (S 1,216,488)

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN
AUG 3 - 1947

MUSIC -:-

By Miles Kastendieck

THIS mid-Summer music madness at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass., has too much method in it. Most of the programs duplicate the works heard when the Boston Symphony makes its regular visits here in New York through the Winter season. So far as some underlying ideal is concerned, the Berkshire Festival appears to have none. All that takes place is a series of regular concerts presented as concerts.

It is true that the programs of the first weekend stressed contemporary music and that this weekend brings a Beethoven Cycle. But where is there a real purpose except that of giving the opportunity to hear the Boston Symphony play in beautiful surroundings? Some all-encompassing idea should embrace the whole undertaking.

24,000 Attend

WITH almost 24,000 people attending last weekend, the notion might grow that this show of interest stamps approval on present procedure. It is worth noting that last Tuesday when a novel event was promoted, almost 7,000 people turned up. This "Music for All" program aroused plenty of curiosity.

It made a definite contribution. A crystalization of progress in the field of musical reproduction was needed. During the Harvard Symposium of Musical Criticism last May, the importance of recorded performance was stressed.

Until now the history of musical performance has been a matter of written record. With the advent of the phonograph, it has become a matter of sound reproduction. Tracing the "March of Musical Fidelity," as staged at Tanglewood last Tuesday, had considerable practical value.

Research in Sound

RESEARCH in electronics has now made possible the hearing life-like reproductions of actual performances. A keen ear might still perceive some difference between the two when the Boston Symphony stopped playing Beethoven's Overture to "Egmont" and the new RCA Victor instrument, "The Berkshire," carried on the performance. The advance over other recorded performances as played on the machines of 1917, 1927, and 1937, however, is little short of revolutionary in fidelity reproduction.

For the first time the normal auditory expanse between 30 and 15,000 cycles is controlled. Up to this time the frequency range in most phonograph reproduction had been between 80 and 4,000 cycles.

Since the survey also included other reproducing mediums such as the radio, motion pictures, and television, the "Music for All" program was well named. Staging it simply emphasized that a program with a purpose carried more than just entertainment value.

It remains for the Berkshire Festival to develop a singleness of purpose which will give it the significance it deserves to have in the musical world.

SOPRANO . . . Frances Yeend will sing Saturday at the Berkshire Music Festival in Tanglewood, Mass.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 358,813) (S 708,754)

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
AUG 3 - 1947

Mozart Opera's U.S. Premiere In Berkshires

'Idomeneo' Will Be Sung Monday and Wednesday Nights at Tanglewood

Mozart's opera seria "Idomeneo, Re di Creta" will have its first performances in this country tomorrow and next Wednesday nights in the Berkshire Music Center's Theater-Concert Hall at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., under the conductorship and stage direction of Boris Goldovsky, who has edited the score for this production. Admission is by invitation to members of the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center. The dress rehearsal will be held tonight.

The cast, orchestra and chorus will consist of members of the Center, with Joseph Laderoute, tenor, as Idomeneo. The role of Idamante, originally written for a castrato, will be sung in the original range by a soprano, Elizabeth Ann Bollinger in one performance and Dorothy Dawson in the other. Others in the cast are Nancy Trickey as Ilia, Paula Lenchner as Agamemnon and Frank Garreva as Neptune.

The opera was written for the Bavarian court in 1780, and first performed in Munich on Jan 29, 1781. Its 150th anniversary was observed in 1931 by the Vienna State Opera in a version edited by Richard Strauss and Lothar Wallerstein, and in Munich in an edition by Ermanno Wolf-Ferrari. It was performed in London in English in 1938. The libretto by the Abbe Varesco is based upon Danchet's libretto for Campra's opera "Idomenee."

Since no printed parts of the score exist, they had to be copied for the coming production. Mr. Goldovsky, in condensing "Idomeneo" to a practicable length, has made some changes in the order of the score so as to obtain coherence and continuity of the dramatic action, but has made no changes in the music itself. The original Italian text will be used.

The Boston ~~Symphony~~ Orchestra completes the second subscription cycle, Series B, of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood this afternoon, when Serge Koussevitzky will conduct a Beethoven program. An extra concert, devoted to Beethoven's eighth and ninth symphonies, will be held next Tuesday at 7:30. The remaining festival programs are:

Today, 3:30 (Series B); Serge Koussevitzky conducting. Beethoven, Symphony No. 6 (Pastoral); Piano Concerto No. 5 ("Emperor," soloist, Joseph Battista); Symphony No. 7.

Tuesday, 7:30 (Extra concert), Serge Koussevitzky conducting. Beethoven, Symphony No. 8; Symphony No. 9, with Festival Chorus; soloists, Frances Yeend, soprano; Eunice Alberts, contralto; David Lloyd, tenor; James Pease, bass.

Thursday, 8:15 (Series C), Leonard Bernstein conducting. Haydn, Symphony No. 102 in B flat; Hindemith, violin concerto (soloist, Ruth Posselt); Schumann, Symphony No. 2, in C major.

Saturday, 8:15 (Series C), Robert Shaw conducting, with Festival Chorus. Bach, Cantata No. 50, "Nun ist das Heil"; Stravinsky, Symphony of Psalms; Mozart, Requiem. (Soloists as on Tuesday.)

Sunday, Aug. 10, 3:30 (Series C), Serge Koussevitzy conducting. Martinu, Concerto Grosso for chamber orchestra with two pianos; Ravel, Pavane and Bolero; Tchaikovsky, Symphony No. 4.

The Boston Symphony's rehearsal next Saturday morning will be open to the public for the benefit of the orchestra's Pension Fund. The following programs of the Berkshire Music Center, in addition to the performance of "Idomeneo," are open to members of the Society of the Center's Friends:

Today, 10:30 a. m., chamber music. Monday, 1:30, orchestral concert. Wednesday, 4:30, chamber music, Eleazar de Carvalho conducting. Thursday, afternoon, symphony concert. Friday, evening, student orchestral concert. Saturday, 2:30, opera scenes. Next Sunday, morning, chamber music.

Inquiries should be directed to Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 358,813) (S 708,754)

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
AUG 3 - 1947

ore, as reg. primitive.

Local Works and Standard Repertory

THE closing concert of the Green Mountain Festival on July 2 featured local composers. It began with a Fugue for orchestr by Joel Hayden, twenty-six, formerly of Cleveland, Ohio, now student at Middlebury College and second bassoon-player of the state orchestra. First played by the Cleveland Orchestra under Artur Rodzinski in 1939, this is a work that merits revival. The tune is jolly, its working-out thoroughly tasteful. Somewhat more naive in style but genuinely original and expressive was the "Procession of Kings," an interlude from "Macbeth," opera on Shakespeare's text by Alan Macneil, forty, a nationally known grower of lily bulbs from Springfield, Vermont. Otto Luening, formerly professor at Bennington College, was represented by his Prelude to a Hymn Tune, a set of sweetly poetic polytonal variations composed around William Billings's "Hymn to Music." This visitor sensed no reserve or lack of understanding on the part of the public toward any of those works, varied though they were in aesthetic approach and in the case of Mr. Luening's piece, advanced in musical technique.

Standard repertory was represented by the Beethoven Violin Concerto, with Albert Spalding as soloist, and Brahms's First Symphony. Both were performed with passion. And if the orchestral amenities were less suavely observed than by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which your travelling reporter had heard two evenings earlier at Tanglewood, the expressive content of the works was no less clearly exposed. Mr. Carter, the conductor, did not try for unattainable elegances of balance and phraseology. He gave an animated and eloquent reading, and the faces of all present, including those of the musicians in the orchestra, shone with joy. Some six thousand persons were present, I was told.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 358,813) (S 708,754)

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
AUG 4 - 1947

Beethoven Cycle

Record Audiences Hear Two Tanglewood Performances

By Raymond Morin

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 3.—All-time record audiences of 14,000 last night and 13,000 this afternoon attended the second and third concerts in a ✓ Beethoven cycle by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky in the music shed at Tanglewood. Two young pianists, Jacob Lateiner, of Cuba, and Joseph Battista, of Philadelphia, were soloists in the fifth and fourth concerti yesterday and today respectively. Orchestral works were the fourth through seventh symphonies.

Although the pianists exhibited widely divergent talents both were received with equal enthusiasm. Mr. Lateiner's interpretation of the Emperor Concerto was intellectual rather than spontaneous. The technical requirements were fulfilled with security but the pianist was unusually conservative toward its emotional content. It was scholarly playing but unfortunately the joie-de-vivre element with which the work is imbued was too frequently absorbed by moments of serious contemplation.

Mr. Battista's pianism was marked by enthusiasm that reflected energetic treatment of rhythm and balanced sonorities. The filagreed passages of the first movement and finely chiseled cadenza were executed with refinement and virility. The sensitive dialogue between piano and orchestra in the andante was expressively exchanged. The pianist related its gentle phrases with singing tones that were effectively enhanced by stern replies from the orchestra. Although the opening piano sequences of the rondo were excessively vigorous, a good resume was made of its ebullience.

While Dr. Koussevitzky's conception of the Fourth Symphony reflected realistically its almost bucolic nature, the Fifth Symphony lost some of its potency by the retarded tempo of its motive. In its last movements and the finale of the Seventh, the brasses were given undue prominence. The graceful lines of the opening movement of the Pastoral Symphony were delicately molded, and the entire work was marred only by a quality of shrillness from the brasses in the storm sequences of the third movement. There was conspicuously fine playing throughout by the woodwinds. The Eighth and Ninth Symphonies will be played Tuesday night.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 673,708) (S 1,216,488)

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN
AUG 3 - 1947

MUSIC -:- By Miles Kastendieck

THIS mid-Summer music madness at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass., has too much method in it. Most of the programs duplicate the works heard when the Boston Symphony makes its regular visits here in New York through the Winter season. So far as some underlying ideal is concerned, the Berkshire Festival appears to have none. All that takes place is a series of regular concerts presented as concerts.

It is true that the programs of the first weekend stressed contemporary music and that this weekend brings a Beethoven Cycle. But where is there a real purpose except that of giving the opportunity to hear the Boston Symphony play in beautiful surroundings? Some all-encompassing idea should embrace the whole undertaking.

24,000 Attend

WITH almost 24,000 people attending last weekend, the notion might grow that this show of interest stamps approval on present procedure. It is worth noting that last Tuesday when a novel event was promoted, almost 7,000 people turned up. This "Music for All" program aroused plenty of curiosity.

It made a definite contribution. A crystalization of progress in the field of musical reproduction was needed. During the Harvard Symposium of Musical Criticism last May, the importance of recorded performance was stressed.

Until now the history of musical performance has been a matter of written record. With the advent of the phonograph, it has become a matter of sound reproduction. Tracing the "March of Musical Fidelity," as staged at Tanglewood last Tuesday, had considerable practical value.

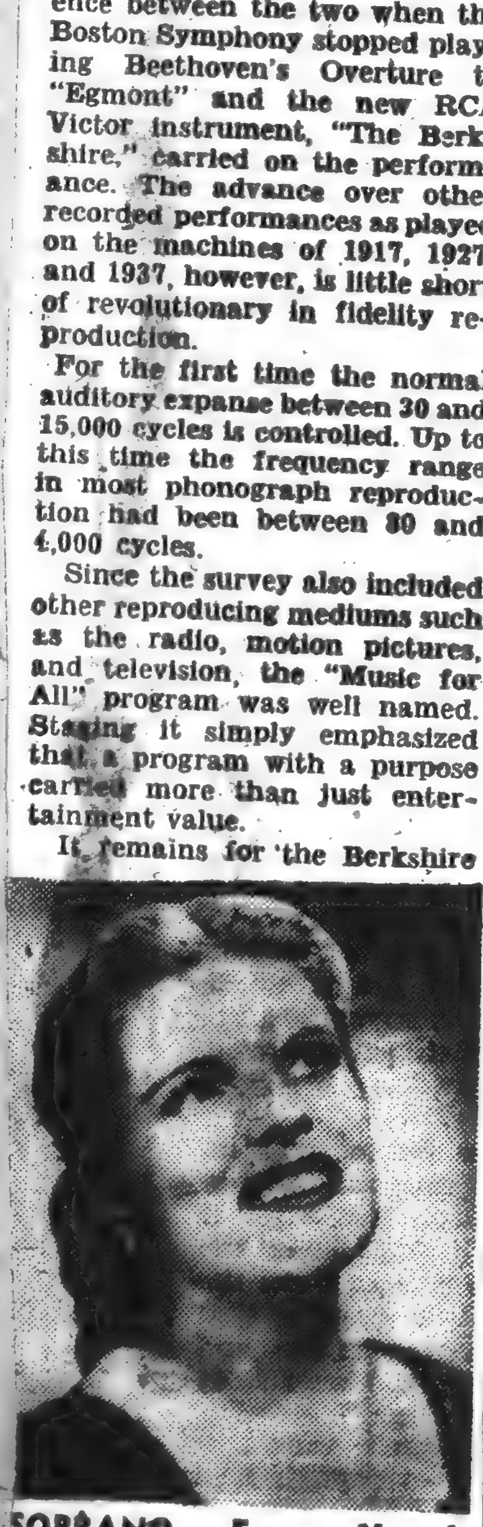
Research in Sound

RESEARCH in electronics has now made possible the hearing life-like reproductions of actual performances. A keen ear might still perceive some difference between the two when the Boston Symphony stopped playing Beethoven's Overture to "Egmont" and the new RCA Victor instrument, "The Berkshire," carried on the performance. The advance over other recorded performances as played on the machines of 1917, 1927, and 1937, however, is little short of revolutionary in fidelity reproduction.

For the first time the normal auditory expanse between 30 and 15,000 cycles is controlled. Up to this time the frequency range in most phonograph reproduction had been between 80 and 4,000 cycles.

Since the survey also included other reproducing mediums such as the radio, motion pictures, and television, the "Music for All" program was well named. Staging it simply emphasized that a program with a purpose carried more than just entertainment value.

It remains for the Berkshire Festival to develop a singleness of purpose which will give it the significance it deserves to have in the musical world.



SOPRANO . . . Frances Yeend will sing Saturday at the Berkshire Music Festival in Tanglewood, Mass.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 358,813) (S 708,754)

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
AUG 3 - 1947

Mozart Opera's U.S. Premiere In Berkshires

'Idomeneo' Will Be Sung Monday and Wednesday Nights at Tanglewood

Mozart's opera seria "Idomeneo, Re di Creta" will have its first performances in this country tomorrow and next Wednesday nights in the Berkshire Music Center's Theater-Concert Hall at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., under the conductorship and stage direction of Boris Goldovsky, who has edited the score for this production. Admission is by invitation to members of the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center. The dress rehearsal will be held tonight.

The cast, orchestra and chorus will consist of members of the Center, with Joseph Laderoute, tenor, as Idomeneo. The role of Idamante, originally written for a castrato, will be sung in the original range by a soprano, Elizabeth Ann Bollinger in one performance and Dorothy Dawson in the other. Others in the cast are Nancy Trickey as Ilia, Paula Lenchner as Agamemnon and Frank Garreva as Neptune.

The opera was written for the Bavarian court in 1780, and first performed in Munich on Jan 29, 1781. Its 150th anniversary was observed in 1931 by the Vienna State Opera in a version edited by Richard Strauss and Lothar Wallerstein, and in Munich in an edition by Ermanno Wolf-Ferrari. It was performed in London in English in 1938. The libretto by the Abbe Varesco is based upon Danchet's libretto for Campra's opera "Idomenee."

Since no printed parts of the score exist, they had to be copied for the coming production. Mr. Goldovsky, in condensing "Idomeneo" to a practicable length, has made some changes in the order of the score so as to obtain coherence and continuity of the dramatic action, but has made no changes in the music itself. The original Italian text will be used.

The Boston ~~Symphony~~ Orchestra completes the second subscription cycle, Series B, of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood this afternoon, when Serge Koussevitzky will conduct a Beethoven program. An extra concert, devoted to Beethoven's eighth and ninth symphonies, will be held next Tuesday at 7:30. The remaining festival programs are:

Today, 3:30 (Series B), Serge Koussevitzky conducting. Beethoven, Symphony No. 6 (Pastoral); Piano Concerto No. 5 ("Emperor," soloist, Joseph Battista); Symphony No. 7.

Tuesday, 7:30 (Extra concert), Serge Koussevitzky conducting. Beethoven, Symphony No. 8; Symphony No. 9, with Festival Chorus; soloists, Frances Yeend, soprano; Eunice Alberts, contralto; David Lloyd, tenor; James Pease, bass.

Thursday, 8:15 (Series C), Leonard Bernstein conducting. Haydn, Symphony No. 102 in B flat; Hindemith, violin concerto (soloist, Ruth Posselt); Schumann, Symphony No. 2, in C major.

Saturday, 8:15 (Series C), Robert Shaw conducting, with Festival Chorus. Bach, Cantata No. 50, "Nun ist das Heil"; Stravinsky, Symphony of Psalms; Mozart, Requiem. (Soloist as on Tuesday.)

Sunday, Aug. 10, 3:30 (Series C), Serge Koussevitzy conducting. Martinu, Concerto Grosso for chamber orchestra with two pianos; Ravel, Pavane and Bolero; Tchaikovsky, Symphony No. 4.

The Boston Symphony's rehearsal next Saturday morning will be open to the public for the benefit of the orchestra's Pension Fund. The following programs of the Berkshire Music Center, in addition to the performance of "Idomeneo," are open to members of the Society of the Center's Friends:

Today, 10:30 a. m., chamber music. Monday, 1:30, orchestral concert. Wednesday, 4:30, chamber music, Eleazar de Carvalho conducting. Thursday, afternoon, symphony concert. Friday, evening, student orchestral concert. Saturday, 2:30, opera scenes. Next Sunday, morning, chamber music.

Inquiries should be directed to Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 358,813) (S 708,754)

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
AUG 3 - 1947

...ore, as rega primitive.

• • •

Local Works and Standard Repertory

THE closing concert of the Green Mountain Festival on July featured local composers. It began with a Fugue for orchest by Joel Hayden, twenty-six, formerly of Cleveland, Ohio, now student at Middlebury College and second bassoon-player of th state orchestra. First played by the Cleveland Orchestra unde Artur Rodzinski in 1939, this is a work that merits revival. T tune is jolly, its working-out thoroughly tasteful. Somewhat mo naive in style but genuinely original and expressive was the "Pr cession of Kings," an interlude from "Macbeth," opera on Shake speare's text by Alan Macneil, forty, a nationally known grower lily bulbs from Springfield, Vermont. Otto Luening, formerly pr fessor at Bennington College, was represented by his Prelude to Hymn Tune, a set of sweetly poetic polytonal variations compose around William Billings's "Hymn to Music." This visitor sensed n reserve or lack of understanding on the part of the public towar any of those works, varied though they were in aesthetic approach and in the case of Mr. Luening's piece, advanced in musical technique

Standard repertory was represented by the Beethoven Violi Concerto, with Albert Spalding as soloist, and Brahms's First Symphony. Both were performed with passion. And if the orchestral amenities were less suavely observed than by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which your travelling reporter had heard two evenings earlier at Tanglewood, the expressive content of the works was n less clearly exposed. Mr. Carter, the conductor, did not try for unattainable elegances of balance and phraseology. He gave an animated and eloquent reading, and the faces of all present, including those of the musicians in the orchestra, shone with joy. Some si thousand persons were present, I was told.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 358,813) (S 708,754)

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
AUG 4 - 1947

Beethoven Cycle

Record Audiences Hear Two Tanglewood Performances

By Raymond Morin

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 3.—All-time record audiences of 14,000 last night and 13,000 this afternoon attended the second and third concerts in a Beethoven cycle by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky in the music shed at Tanglewood. Two young pianists, Jacob Lateiner, of Cuba, and Joseph Battista, of Philadelphia, were soloists in the fifth and fourth concerti yesterday and today respectively. Orchestral works were the fourth through seventh symphonies.

Although the pianists exhibited widely divergent talents both were received with equal enthusiasm. Mr. Lateiner's interpretation of the Emperor Concerto was intellectual rather than spontaneous. The technical requirements were fulfilled with security but the pianist was unusually conservative toward its emotional content. It was scholarly playing but unfortunately the joie-de-vivre element with which the work is imbued was too frequently absorbed by moments of serious contemplation.

Mr. Battista's pianism was marked by enthusiasm that reflected energetic treatment of rhythm and balanced sonorities. The filagreed passages of the first movement and finely chiseled cadenza were executed with refinement and virility. The sensitive dialogue between piano and orchestra in the andante was expressively exchanged. The pian related its gentle phrases wi singing tones that were effectiv enhanced by stern replies fr the orchestra. Although the ope ing piano sequences of the ron were excessively vigorous, a go resume was made of its ebullien

While Dr. Koussevitzky's conce tion of the Fourth Symphony r flected realistically its almost b colic nature, the Fifth Sympho lost some of its potency by the r tarded tempo of its motive. In last movements and the finale the Seventh, the brasses w given undue prominence. T graceful lines of the open movement of the Pastoral Sy phony were delicately molded, the entire work was marred by a quality of shrillness from brasses in the storm sequences the third movement. There conspicuously fine playi throughout by the woodwinds. T Eighth and Ninth Symphon will be played Tuesday night.

…estore, as reg… primitive.

pertory

een Mountain Festival on July began with a Fugue for orchest merly of Cleveland, Ohio, now and second bassoon-player of th y the Cleveland Orchestra unde a work that merits revival. Th oroughly tasteful. Somewhat mor inal and expressive was the "Pro from "Macbeth," opera on Shake rty, a nationally known grower o ont. Otto Luening, formerly pro represented by his Prelude to tic polytonal variations compose to Music." This visitor sensed no on the part of the public towar they were in aesthetic approach ce, advanced in musical technique sented by the Beethoven Violin soloist, and Brahms's First Sym passion. And if the orchestral d than by the Boston Symphony eporter had heard two evenings ve content of the works was no e conductor, did not try for un- d phraseology. He gave an ani- e faces of all present, including stra, shone with joy. Some six was told.

pressively exchanged. The pianis related its gentle phrases with singing tones that were effectivel enhanced by stern replies from the orchestra. Although the open- ing piano sequences of the rond were excessively vigorous, a goo resume was made of its ebullience

While Dr. Koussevitzky's concep- tion of the Fourth Symphony re- flected realistically its almost bu colic nature, the Fifth Symphon lost some of its potency by the re- tarded tempo of its motive. In it last movements and the finale o the Seventh, the brasses wer given undue prominence. Th graceful lines of the openin movement of the Pastoral Sym phony were delicately molded, an the entire work was marred onl by a quality of shrillness from th brasses in the storm sequences o the third movement. There wa conspicuously fine playin throughout by the woodwinds. Th Eighth and Ninth Symphonie will be played Tuesday night.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 358,813) (S 708,754)
This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
AUG 3 - 1947

MUSIC ON THE RADIO

By B. H. HAGGIN

AWSTHORNE is a new name in British music that I have encountered recently in the B. B. C.'s short-wave schedule and the New Statesman and Nation's concert and radio reviews, I [illegible] I would learn something about his music last Sunday n the English conductor Her- Menges opened his broadcast the C. B. S. Symphony with sthorne's Overture, "Street ner." But it demonstrated only ab [illegible] to produce a very brief [illegible] piece of music of that lish genre.

n the preceding Wednesday's ta [illegible] to Music Mr. Menges ducted the C. B. S. Symphony what the announcer described eldom heard works of Mozart Haydn—one of which was art's Overture to "Cosi Fan te." Haydn's Symphony No. though known to the public ough a recording, is in fact om performed, and though it its occasional fine passages, oes not in its entirety, add up one of the examples of the dn process carried to incan- cence as in No. 92 or 98 or 104.

e give all our attention, the icologists complain, to Haydn Mozart, who are only two of many composers who used the ical language and style of that iod to produce excellent music. once in a while we have an ortunity to hear what the ers produced—for example, the ture and symphony of Ditters- performed on the July 16 In- tion to Music by C. B. S. Sym- ony under Herrmann. Then we rn the difference the musicolo- s are incapable of hearing— ween the language and style the period as Haydn's and Mo- s contemporaries used it, and personal and unique media of pression that Haydn and Mo- made of it and what they duced with it. And we also rn, incidentally, to pay no at- tion to the musicologists.

The Dittersdorf pieces weren't at music; but even if it had n one of the finest of Haydn's Mozart's symphonies that was ng played, Station WGAN in rtland still would have broken o one of the movements, in- ad of waiting a minute or two it to finish, to let "The Port- d Press-Herald" announce cky Graziano's victory.

The second broadcast from the rkshire Festival (A. B. C., July began with another mouthful straw—this time Mozart's Sere- de in B flat (K. 361) for wind struments. What different im- ession the piece might make as ced and moulded and phrased by oscanini I don't know; but as formed under Koussevitzky's ection—and performed with im- ccable technique and tone by the oston Symphony players—it was at it has always been to my rs: one of the products of an- her busy eighteen-century musi- craftsman that represented the operation of nothing beyond his expert craftsmanship.

This performance came over the air perfectly; but with the opening flourishes of the so-called "Jupiter" Symphony there began a strange distortion—the kettle-drum-beats all sounding like the twanging of a bass-string of a single pitch different from that of either drum; and the rest of the sound being tremulous. Since some other stations also sounded wrong I decided something had happened to my small radio (which has acted perfectly ever since); but a technician I wrote to answered that he had had the same experience. During the Serenade he had congratulated himself on the clear, distinct sounds his machine was reproducing; but the "Jupiter" had sent him running to the control-knobs; and finding the violent disproportions of the drum-beats and the wavering tone at other times impossible to get rid of and impossible to listen to, he had shut off the broadcast. I'd be interested in knowing whether any one else had this experience.

And here are a few programs:

Today—A. M.: Mozart's Piano Sonata in F, played by Earl Wild, WJZ, 8:30; organ works of Bach and Johann Walther, played by Mary Crowley, C. B. S., 9:15. P. M.: Mendelssohn's "Scotch" Symphony, performed by the N. B. C. Symphony under Milton Katims, N. B. C., 5.

Tuesday—P. M.: The Boston Symphony's first broadcast of the entire Ninth Symphony of Beethoven, WJZ, 8:30.

Wednesday—P. M.: Works by Szabo and Delius, performed by Bernard Herrmann with the C. B. S. Symphony, C. B. S., 11:30.

Friday—P. M.: Works of Mozart, WNYC, 8 to 10:30.

Saturday—P. M.: Quartets by Haydn, WNYC, 4; Beethoven's Grosse Fugue, a Boccherini cello concerto (Luigi Silva), Roy Harris's Contrapuntal Suite, performed by the Colorado College Summer School Orchestra under Harris, WJZ, 5; Cincinnati Opera: "Aida," WINS, 9:30.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 538,914) (S 1,002,765)
This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
AUG 5 - 1947

MOZART OPERA AT LENOX

'Idomeneo,' at Tanglewood, Offered for 1st Time in U. S.

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 4—Mozart's opera, "Idomeneo," received its first American performance last night in the Theatre Concert Hall at Tanglewood, where it was presented by the opera department of the ~~Berkshire Music~~ Center. Boris Goldovsky, head of the department, conducted the work, which was attended by a capacity audience.

The cast comprised Joseph Laderoute, in the title role; Elizabeth Ann Bollinger, as Idamante; Nancy Trickey, as Ilia; Paul Lechner, as Elektra, and Frank Guarrera, as the High Priest.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD - TELEGRAM
AUG 4 - 1947

Two Pianists In Solos at Tanglewood

By ROBERT BAGAR.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 4.—Two young artists had their fling at the big time as they came up for solo appearances with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood last week. Both are pianists and both played Beethoven concertos.

On Saturday evening Jacob Lateiner, born in Havana of Polish parents, displayed his keyboard wares in the "Emperor" Concerto, one of the numbers in the current Beethoven Cycle, which ends tomorrow evening. Mr. Lateiner, 19 and looking about 30, was a boy prodigy not too long ago. Season before last he made a recital tour of the United States. Actually, therefore, he is no simon-pure.

His performance of the "Emperor" showed his remarkable technique to excellent advantage. He has all the flourish of the virtuoso, although nothing in his demeanor at the piano reveals that. It all comes out in the notes, the accuracy with which they are played and the whopping sound, anything but forced, which he has at his command. He also spins nice legatos, has the power to play unusually loud trills and, in general, seems to possess every mechanical need for the brilliant performer.

Needs Maturing.

However, he did not give a clear indication that this concerto means much more to him than a display piece. He needs maturing, and there is no doubt about that. Of course you don't expect an artist at 19 to play the "Emperor" like a Hoffman, but the talk about him around here has been so throbbing with superlatives that one did expect the sensational.

Furthermore, the music was not entirely well treated, spiritually, that is, and even downright musically, for, as regards the latter, orchestra and soloist were at odds, every so often, and the seams did not always hold the way they should. The rest of the program on Saturday evening offered the Fourth and Fifth symphonies of the Bonn master. Neither was, particularly, a gem of insight and vividness in the rendering. Dr. Koussevitzky worked valiantly, the orchestra, too, but the net results were no better than good routine. And the last two movements of the Fifth did come off so slowly as to sound like Andantinos, rather than the Allegros they really are.

World of Contrasts.

Yesterday afternoon Joseph Battista, 30 and looking about 19, gave a New York recital. He is a product of Philadelphia, of Italian parents, and he, too, is being talked about as being something special.

Mr. Battista's forte apparently is his pianissimo. All through the Fourth Concerto he scarcely ever went beyond a moderate tone, a situation which led one to think that either the young man was very nervous or he just couldn't play louder.

Yet his work yesterday had sensitiveness, poetic grace and refinement. Though he went whispering along the Beethoven highways and byways, he did so with much artistry and a world of contrasts even in the small tone he had to start with.

The Bostonians' account of the "Pastoral" Symphony had some unscheduled assistance, especially in the "Scene by the Brookside," from a battery of swifts nesting in the rafters above the orchestra stand. The performance flowed evenly, and it was mellow warm and ingratiating. The Seventh Symphony, done with the usual regard for its straight tempos, was the other item.

The audiences this week end were the biggest so far, 14,000 on Saturday, 13,000 yesterday.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (49,549)
This Clipping From BILLBOARD
CINCINNATI, OHIO
AUG 9 - 1947

6,000 Hear Boston Symph Test New Phono's Fidelity

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 2.—The Berkshire, a new combination radio, television and phonograph machine, was demonstrated for the first time Tuesday (29) by RCA Victor during a special concert at the Berkshire Music Festival in Tanglewood by the Boston Symphony batoned by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

A switch was pulled with split-second timing, during Beethoven's overture to Egmont, from the live orchestra to a recording of the work played on the instrument. The audience of 6,000 in the festival's "Shed" was then asked, Which is which?

The presentation was broadcast from coast-to-coast and filmed for a forthcoming pic. It was designed to celebrate 37 years of Victor recording of the Boston Symphony.

With the collaboration of Robert Edmund Jones, the demonstration was directed by Robert Wood, of Theater, Inc.; staged by Richard Rychtarik of the Met and written by Victor's Harold Desfor. Gene Hamilton was the narrator. The presentation was witnessed by 100 music critics, feature writers, stage and radio stars, as well as leaders in the field of merchandising and finance from all over the country.

The instrument will be on display for the rest of the festival at the Lenox Brotherhood Club, Lenox, Mass.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 35,696)
This Clipping From
HEMPSTEAD, L. I., N. Y.
NEWSDAY
AUG 26 1947

Ardent music lovers may not believe this, but bats which swoop down through Tanglewood, at Lenox, Mass., where the Berkshire Music Festival is held, are considered one of the Festival's greatest assets. That's what Clay Perry, writing in the September issue of Mechanix Illustrated, claims. They keep the entire area free of mosquitoes, a bat delicacy.

* * *

OPERA goers are going to see cottons on the singers who re-enact the roles of their favorite works. Right in the exalted and rarified atmosphere of grand opera, cotton made its debut in "Marthe" and "Fidelio," produced by the Central City Opera House in Central City, Colo. The cotton fabrics were especially dyed to interpret the two operas and harmonize with the settings . . . Corduroy does a neat trick this Fall season, and comes up with a realistic leopard print.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 358,813) (S 708,754)
This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
AUG 3 - 1947

MUSIC ON THE RADIO

By B. H. HAGGIN

AWSTHORNE is a new name in British music that I have encountered recently in the B. B. C.'s short-wave schedule and the "New Statesman and Nation's" concert and radio reviews, I thought I would learn something about his music last Sunday n the English conductor Her- Menges opened his broadcast the C. B. S. Symphony with sthorne's Overture, "Street er." But it demonstrated only ability to produce a very brief slight piece of music of that lish genre.

n the preceding Wednesday's tation to Music Mr. Menges ducted the C. B. S. Symphony hat the announcer described eldom heard works of Mozart Haydn—one of which was art's Overture to "Cosi Fan e." Haydn's Symphony No. though known to the public ugh a recording, is in fact om performed, and though it its occasional fine passages, oes not, in its entirety, add up ne of the examples of the dn process carried to incandnce as in No. 92 or 98 or 104.

e give all our attention, the icologists complain, to Haydn Mozart, who are only two of many composers who used the ical language and style of that iod to produce excellent music. once in a while we have an rtunity to hear what the s produced—for example, the rture and symphony of Dittersf performed on the July 16 Intion to Music by C. B. S. Symny under Herrmann. Then we n the difference the musicolos are incapable of hearing—ween the language and style he period as Haydn's and Mo-'s contemporaries used it, and personal and unique media of ression that Haydn and Mot made of it and what they duced with it. And we also n, incidentally, to pay no attion to the musicologists.

The Dittersdorf pieces weren't t music; but even if it had n one of the finest of Haydn's Mozart's symphonies that was ng played, Station WGAN in rtland still would have broken o one of the movements, ind of waiting a minute or two it to finish, to let "The Portd Press-Herald" announce ky Graziano's victory.

The second broadcast from the rkshire Festival (A. B. C., July began with another mouthful straw—this time Mozart's Serede in B flat (K. 361) for wind struments. What different imession the piece might make as ced and moulded and phrased by scanini I don't know; but as formed under Koussevitzky's ection—and performed with imccable technique and tone by the ston Symphony players—it was hat it has always been to my n: one of the products of anther busy eighteen-century musicraftsman that represented the operation of nothing beyond his expert craftsmanship.

This performance came over the air perfectly; but with the opening flourishes of the so-called "Jupiter" Symphony there began a strange distortion—the kettledrum-beats all sounding like the twanging of a bass-string of a single pitch different from that of either drum; and the rest of the sound being tremulous. Since some other stations also sounded wrong I decided something had happened to my small radio (which has acted perfectly ever since); but a technician I wrote to answered that he had had the same experience. During the Serenade he had congratulated himself on the clear, distinct sounds his machine was reproducing; but the "Jupiter" had sent him running to the control-knobs; and finding the violent disproportions of the drumbeats and the wavering tone at other times impossible to get rid of and impossible to listen to, he had shut off the broadcast. I'd be interested in knowing whether any one else had this experience.

And here are a few programs:

Today—A. M.: Mozart's Piano Sonata in F, played by Earl Wild, WJZ, 8:30; organ works of Bach and Johann Walther, played by Mary Crowley, C. B. S., 9:15. P. M.: Mendelssohn's "Scotch" Symphony, performed by the N. B. C. Symphony under Milton Katims, N. B. C., 5.

Tuesday—P. M.: The Boston Symphony's first broadcast of the entire Ninth Symphony of Beethoven, WJZ, 8:30.

Wednesday—P. M.: Works by Szabo and Delius, performed by Bernard Herrmann with the C. B. S. Symphony, C. B. S., 11:30.

Friday—P. M.: Works of Mozart, WNYC, 8 to 10:30.

Saturday—P. M.: Quartets by Haydn, WNYC, 4; Beethoven's Grosse Fugue, a Boccherini cello concerto (Luigi Silva), Roy Harris's Contrapuntal Suite, performed by the Colorado College Summer School Orchestra under Harris, WJZ, 5; Cincinnati Opera: "Aida," WINS, 9:30.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 538,914) (S 1,002,765)
This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
AUG 5 - 1947

MOZART OPERA AT LENOX

'Idomeneo,' at Tanglewood, Offered for 1st Time in U. S.

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 4—Mozart's opera, "Idomeneo," received its first American performance last night in the Theatre Concert Hall at Tanglewood, where it was presented by the opera department of the ~~Berkshire Music~~ Center. Boris Goldovsky, head of the department, conducted the work, which was attended by a capacity audience.

The cast comprised Joseph Laderoute, in the title role; Elizabeth Ann Bollinger, as Idamante; Nancy Trickey, as Ilia; Paul Lechner, as Elektra, and Frank Guarrera, as the High Priest.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD - TELEGRAM
AUG 4 - 1947

Two Pianists In Solos at Tanglewood

By ROBERT BAGAR.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 4.—Two young artists had their fling at the big time as they came up for solo appearances with the Boston ~~Symphony Orchestra~~ at Tanglewood last week. Both are pianists and both played Beethoven concertos.

On Saturday evening Jacob Lateiner, born in Havana of Polish parents, displayed his keyboard wares in the "Emperor" Concerto, one of the numbers in the current Beethoven Cycle, which ends tomorrow evening. Mr. Lateiner, 19 and looking about 30, was a boy prodigy not too long ago. Season before last he made a recital tour of the United States. Actually, therefore, he is no simon-pure.

His performance of the "Emperor" showed his remarkable technique to excellent advantage. He has all the flourish of the virtuoso, although nothing in his demeanor at the piano reveals that. It all comes out in the notes, the accuracy with which they are played and the whopping sound, anything but forced, which he has at his command. He also spins nice legatos, has the power to play unusually loud trills and, in general, seems to possess every mechanical need for the brilliant performer.

Needs Maturing.

However, he did not give a clear indication that this concerto means much more to him than a display piece. He needs maturing, and there is no doubt about that. Of course you don't expect an artist at 19 to play the "Emperor" like a Hoffman, but the talk about him around here has been so throbbing with superlatives that one did expect the sensational.

Furthermore, the music was not entirely well treated, spiritually, that is, and even downright musically, for, as regards the latter, orchestra and soloist were at odds, every so often, and the seams did not always hold the way they should. The rest of the program on Saturday evening offered the Fourth and Fifth symphonies of the Bonn master. Neither was, particularly, a gem of insight and vividness in the rendering. Dr. Koussevitzky worked valiantly, the orchestra, too, but the net results were no better than good routine. And the last two movements of the Fifth did come off so slowly as to sound like Andantinos, rather than the Allegros they really are.

World of Contrasts.

Yesterday afternoon Joseph Battista, 30 and looking about 19, gave a New York recital. He is a product of Philadelphia, of Italian parents, and he, too, is being talked about as being something special.

Mr. Battista's forte apparently is his pianissimo. All through the Fourth Concerto he scarcely ever went beyond a moderate tone, a situation which led one to think that either the young man was very nervous or he just couldn't play louder.

Yet his work yesterday had sensitiveness, poetic grace and refinement. Though he went whispering along the Beethoven highways and byways, he did so with much artistry and a world of contrasts even in the small tone he had to start with.

The Bostonians' account of the "Pastoral" Symphony had some unscheduled assistance, especially in the "Scene by the Brookside," from a battery of swifts nesting in the rafters above the orchestra stand. The performance flowed evenly, and it was mellow warm and ingratiating. The Seventh Symphony, done with the usual regard for its straight tempos, was the other item.

The audiences this week end were the biggest so far, 14,000 on Saturday, 13,000 yesterday.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (49,549)
This Clipping From BILLBOARD
CINCINNATI, OHIO
AUG 9 - 1947

6,000 Hear Boston Symph Test New Phono's Fidelity

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 2.—The Berkshire, a new combination radio, television and phonograph machine, was demonstrated for the first time Tuesday (29) by RCA Victor during a special concert at the Berkshire Music Festival in Tanglewood by the Boston Symphony batoned by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

A switch was pulled with split-second timing, during Beethoven's overture to Egmont, from the live orchestra to a recording of the work played on the instrument. The audience of 6,000 in the festival's "Shed" was then asked, Which is which?

The presentation was broadcast from coast-to-coast and filmed for a forthcoming pic. It was designed to celebrate 37 years of Victor recording of the Boston Symphony.

With the collaboration of Robert Edmund Jones, the demonstration was directed by Robert Wood, of Theater, Inc.; staged by Richard Rychtarik of the Met and written by Victor's Harold Desfor. Gene Hamilton was the narrator. The presentation was witnessed by 100 music critics, feature writers, stage and radio stars, as well as leaders in the field of merchandising and finance from all over the country.

The instrument will be on display for the rest of the festival at the Lenox Brotherhood Club, Lenox, Mass.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 35,696)
This Clipping From
HEMPSTEAD, L. I., N. Y.
NEWSDAY
[illegible] 26 1947

Ardent music lovers may not believe this, but bats which swoop down through Tanglewood, at Lenox, Mass., where the Berkshire Music Festival is held, are considered one of the Festival's greatest assets. That's what Clay Perry, writing in the September issue of Mechanix Illustrated, claims. They keep the entire area free of mosquitoes, a bat delicacy.

* * *

OPERA goers are going to see cottons on the singers who re-enact the roles of their favorite works. Right in the exalted and rarified atmosphere of grand opera, cotton made its debut in "Marthe" and "Fidelio," produced by the Central City Opera House in Central City, Colo. The cotton fabrics were especially dyed to interpret the two operas and harmonize with the settings [illegible]. Corduroy does a neat trick this Fall season, and comes up with a realistic leopard print.

Berkshire Music Festival:

Amerikanische Erstaufführung von Mozarts "Idomeneo"

Von ARTUR HOLDE

Tanglewood, im August.

Die Feststellung, dass eines der musikdramatischen Meisterwerke Mozarts, "Idomeneo", erst 166 Jahre nach der Münchner Uraufführung auf einer amerikanischen Bühne erscheint, könnte eine Anklage gegen das Opernleben des Landes bedeuten, wenn nicht die in Europa verschiedentlich gemachten Versuche der Wiederbelebung immer gescheitert wären. Das — nach meiner Kenntnis — letzte Unternehmen ging von Richard Strauss und Lothar Wallerstein aus. Es war schon deshalb zum Misslingen verurteilt, weil Strauss mit grosszügiger Geste in die unveräusserlichen geistigen Rechte Mozarts eingegriffen und sich als "Bearbeiter" in einem Umfange eingeschaltet hatte, der zerstörerisch auf die Partitur wirken musste. Beträchtliche Ergänzungen aus der eigenen Werkstatt und modernisierende Retouchen in der Orchestrierung im Straussischen Stil schufen einen peinlichen Zwitter.

Die Ursache für das Versagen der Oper im Bühnenrahmen, während doch einzelne Arien bei Konzertaufführungen das Verlangen nach szenischer Wiedergabe wekken, liegt in dem Libretto. Genau so, wie Mozarts "Titus", oder wie Opern von Monteverdi, Händel und auch Verdi, denen eine glaubhafte, und innerlich berührende Handlung fehlt, trotz aller musikalischer Grösse nicht für das Theater zurückgewonnen sind. Gewiss, die überwiegende Menge der Zuhörer geht nicht den Einzelheiten der Geschehnisse und Gefühlsregungen in einer italienisch gesungenen Oper nach. Aber der dramatische Konflikt muss Geist und Seele mehr beschäftigen als es bei den merkwürdigen Schicksalen der königlichen Familie im antiken Kreta der Fall ist.

Idomeneo, das Haupt des regierenden Hauses, legt bei seiner Rückkehr vom trojanischen Kriege während eines Seesturms das Gelübde ab, der Gottheit nach glücklicher Rettung den ersten Menschen als Opfer darzubringen, der ihm am Lande begegnen werde. Wie es kaum anders sein kann, damit eine tragische Situation entsteht: dieser erste ist der geliebte Sohn Idomeneos, Idamante. Ein Priester des Poseidon gibt dem bedrängten Vater den vernünftigen, wenn auch nicht ganz ehrenhaften Rat, den Sohn einfach von der Insel Kreta fortzuschaffen. Der Ratschlag ist schon deshalb beherzigenswert, weil Idamante zwischen zwei liebenden Frauen, Ilia, der Tochter des Königs von Troja, und Elletra, der Tochter Agamemnons von Argos, steht. Ein neuer Seesturm vereitelt die Fahrt. Als Idomeneo zum Vollzug seines Gelübdes schreiten will, greift unter dem Ausbruch wilder Naturgewalten das barmherzige kretische Orakel ein: Idomeneo muss zugunsten seines Sohnes auf den Thron verzichten, und dieser tritt an der Seite Ilias die Regierung an.

Von Potentaten des 17. und 18. Jahrhunderts in Auftrag gegebene Festopern hatten zu Dutzenden Libretti dieses Stils. Bei keiner wünschte man mehr, als bei Mozarts "Idomeneo", dass ein gütiges Orakel auch hier praktische Anweisungen zur Rettung gäbe. Was vom Dramaturgischen her geschehen konnte, ist in der Aufführung des "Berkshire Music Center" — so weit sich dies ohne genauen Vergleich der Originalpartitur mit der aufgeführten Musik sagen lässt — erfüllt worden. Kürzungen und Umstellungen haben das Gefüge gefestigt und die bei "statischen" Opern bestehende Gefahr der Ermüdung des Zuschauers beseitigt. Durch das Nichteintreffen der englischen Uebersetzung musste Boris Goldowsky, der als Dirigent und als Regisseur wirkte, das Werk, entgegen seinen guten Grundsätzen, italienisch singen lassen. Aber, ob englisch oder italienisch, man hört im Grunde nur eins: die herrliche Musik Mozarts. Bedeutet es, wenn man die Arien des ersten und zweiten Aktes, das Finale des zweiten, und die grandiose, dämonische Chorszene zu Beginn des dritten herausgreift, nicht ein Unrecht gegenüber zahllosen anderen Partien, die ebenso voll des schöpferischen Genies Mozarts sind? Meisterwerke der Weltliteratur haben jeder Generation neue Probleme und neue Lösungen aufgetragen. Auch der "Idomeneo" wird die Kärrner der Op in Bewegung halten, bis ein längliche oder wenigstens nismässig befriedigende U mung des Textbuchs gelungen

Ein ad hoc zusammengestell Sänger und Orchester-Ensem das auf einer technisch natur mäss mit bescheidenen Mitteln au gestatteten Bühne grosse "Auss tungsoper" geben soll, kann sel bei intelligentester Führung nic alle Ansprüche erfüllen. Trotzd

(Fortsetzung auf Seite 16)

PLACID MANOR
LAKE PLACID, N. Y.
◆
A Private Estate of Highest Distinction. The Ultimate in Taste, Standard and Location. Large, private Beach, Swimming and Boating in front of the Hotel. European Cuisine par excellence. All rooms with private Bath, Dressing Rooms, and enclosed Porches or private Lakefront Terraces. Steamheat in every room. Free use of Motorboats, Sailboats, Canoes.
OPEN UNTIL LATE OCTOBER!
Special Fall Rates from $10 per person, incl. all meals.
Reserve Now for September!
THEODORE A. FRANKEL Owner
Phone: 667 Lake Placid, N. Y.

in world-famous
Lake Placid
. . it's the luxurious new Hotel Marcy. De luxe outside room, three superb meals and complete service from $12

VERBRINGEN SIE
Ihre Sommerferien
im
HIGHLAND HOUSE
Lake Placid, N. Y.
Der ideale Platz
Hübsche Aussenzimmer mit Aussicht auf den Mirror Lake
$8.– und mehr
September-Raten v. $7. aufwärts
Drei ausgezeichnete Mahlzeiten
VORZÜGL. WIENER KÜCHE
Täglich nachmittags 3 Uhr
Tee auf der Terrasse
Schriftliche, telegrafische oder telefonische Anfragen an das Owner-Management:
FRED WERTHEIM
Telefon: Lake Placid 877

Mozart

(Fortsetzung von Seite 13)

wiegt aber ein mit Begeisterung und Ehrfurcht durchgeführtes Experiment mehr, als die eilige Routinearbeit, mit der Oper so oft ideen- und ziellos behandelt wird. Die Sänger waren alle ausgezeichnet vorbereitet und in überraschendem Masse den vokalen Forderungen gewachsen. Joseph Laderoute (Idomeneo), die beiden (in der Pressevorführung alternierenden) Ann Bollinger und Dorothy Dawson (Idamante) und die im letzten Akt mit packender dramatischer Wucht gestaltende Elletra Paula Lenchners liessen den Gedanken an eine "Studienaufführung" so wenig aufkommen wie die meisten Vertreter der kleinen Partien, und der Chor, der durch Frische und Schliff der Stimmen das Ohr immer wieder anzog.

Von den für die Präsentation mit in erster Linie Verantwortlichen seien nur noch Felix Wolfes als assistierender Kapellmeister, Frederic Cohen als zweiter Spielleiter, Elsa Kahl als Ballettmeisterin, ferner Fritz Waldman, Sarah Caldwell und Gerard Samuel als Korrepetitoren der Solisten und des Chores mit hoher Anerkennung genannt. Die (bis auf unverständliche Ruinen) zweckentsprechenden Bühnenbilder stammten von Richard Rychtarik.

Beethoven-Zyklus

Die mittlere Serie umfasste (mit einem Sonderkonzert) alle Symphonien von Beethoven und zwei seiner Klavierkonzerte. Aus dieser Fülle sei die mittlere Aufführung herausgegriffen, in der Jacob Lateiner, ein neunzehnjähriger, in Cuba geborener Pole, der soeben seine Studien am Curtis Institute abgeschlossen hat, das Klavierkonzert Es-Dur von Beethoven spielte. Lateiner, der sich vor wenigen Wochen in einem NBC-Sonntagskonzert sehr vorteilhaft eingeführt hat, festigte die Ueberzeugung, dass in ihm ein Talent grossen Stils heranreift oder besser: schon weitgehend herangereift ist. Mit mächtigem, rundem Ton in den leidenschaftlichen, mit schwingendem Anschlag in den kantablen Partien, und in der architektonischen Gestaltung bester Tradition folgend, gab Lateiner ein sehr imposantes Bild seiner Künstlerschaft. Koussevitzky setzte mit de IV. und V. Symphonie von Bee hoven den Zyklus fort. Einwänd die sich gegen Temporückunge und ein häufiges Uebergewicht d Blechbläser machen lassen, hinde nicht, die Grösse der Darstell anzuerkennen. Niemand besitzt lein den Schlüssel zur "auth schen" Interpretation. Seien deshalb froh, dass ein so herrl Orchester unter dieser Leit die Huldigung Beethovens zieht. Auch diesmal konnt Halle nicht entfernt die Er nenen fassen.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 22,106)
This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
AUG 19 1947

Tanglewood Volunteers

To the Editor of THE EAGLE:—

On behalf of the trustees and management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, I want to express my appreciation for the courteous and efficient service rendered during the recently concluded Berkshire Festival by the 245 ticket takers, ushers, aides and program girls. With the exception of 15 ticket-takers, who are paid a nominal fee, the service is on a volunteer basis.

The problems involved in handling record-breaking crowds were solved with a minimum of delay or difficulties. Many favorable compliments were received from the management and concertgoers which rightly belong to the volunteers, and are herewith passed along with my own gratitude and appreciation of their services, and the wish that most or all of them will again be available next season.

WILLARD M. SISTARE.
Pittsfield.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 7,465)
This Clipping From
NEW KENSINGTON, PA.
DISPATCH
AUG 28 1947

Phonograph Rivals "Live" Orchestra

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 20.—(U.P.)—Pitting a phonograph against a full symphony orchestra and inviting an audience to tell when the orchestra leaves off playing and the phonograph picks up is quite an acoustical stunt.

It was tried out successfully by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony orchestra during this summer's Berkshire Music festival at the Tanglewood estate outside Lenox.

The demonstration was held in the big music shed, seating 6,000. Another [illegible] listened on the lawn outside. The occasion was the public introduction of The Berkshire, a new instrument developed by RCA Victor and named in honor of the Tanglewood festival.

This combination radio, television and phonograph set is aimed at making available in the home a wider range of tonal reproduction, bringing out qualities hitherto lost.

THE ORIGINAL
HENRY ROMEIKE NEW YORK
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
220 West 19th St., New York 11, N. Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

[illegible] YORK A[illegible]
[illegible] YORK, [illegible]
[illegible] '47

Negro Musicians Enrolled At Berkshire Music Center

By GLADYS P. GRAHAM

LENOX, Mass. — One of the [illegible] and most brilliant group of Negro students since it's inception in 1940 are enrolled at the Berkshire Music Center located at Lenox, Massachusetts, for the six[illegible] summer session. The school is under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, Aaron Copland, assistant director, and Stanley [illegible] dean.

There are 425 students from [illegible] different states, including several European countries of these eight are Negroes.

Adele Addison, soprano from Springfield, Massachusetts, is a graduate of the Westminister Choir College of Princeton, N. J. and is studying on the $400 John Hancock prize, the only Negro in the opera department.

Kermit Moore, cellist is from Akron, Ohio and has studied at the Cleveland, Institute and is a member of the Cleveland Philharmonic. The student of Jean Bedetti played the Saint Saens cello concerto with the advanced orchestra here this week. Also in the advanced orchestra class is the Penelope Johnson, internationally known violinist and violist of New York who is enrolled for her second year on a scholarship. Miss Johnson is a member of the David Mannes Orchestra and a pupil of Vera Fonaroff.

Studying under the G. I. Bill of Rights is Earnest W. Simms, oboeist, a graduate of Tuskegee, Institute. Kenneth M. Burke, timpanist from Boston is a graduate of Tufts College with a degree in engineering. He has conducted the Naval ROTC Band of his alma mater and in addition is a member of the Civic Symphony of Boston. Another student of oboe is Harry Smyles a graduate of Western Reserve, Cleveland, Ohio, who is also a student of the advanced orchestra. [illegible] Smyles has held both the [illegible] and Presser Foundation Scholarships.

Jancie B. Johnson, pianist-composer, who holds her degrees from Miner Teachers College and Howard University as well as her master's from the Chicago Musical College, is a member of the composition class and is slated to sing in the Festival Chorus under Robert [illegible]. From the Southland comes Kemper Herrald of Atlanta, Georgia, who is an auditor working in the Festival chorus and doing research in several classes.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (33,169)
This Clipping From NATION
NEW YORK, N. Y.
AUG 9 - 1947

Records

B. H. HAGGIN

ADDITIONAL London Decca recordings I have heard include one of Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony performed by de Sabata with the London Philharmonic (Set ED-19; $15). From it I have learned more about de Sabata as a musician—that he is capable, as Toscanini is not, of occasional eccentricity or perversity, like the incredibly slow pace of the first movement; but also that he is able to maintain in the music, even at that pace, the sustained continuity it must have. After the first movement there is just a very fine performance in the usual tempos (there are, I must add, some discontinuities of pace at the breaks of the records). The recorded sound is dull, and the winds are much too weak.

As far as I am concerned there has been only one reason for listening to Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloé"; and that has been Koussevitzky's performance with the Boston Symphony. But now I have heard a performance by Münch with the Paris Conservatory Orchestra which I judge—from what it sounds like as it comes off the London Decca records (Set ED-29; $7)—to be fully the equal of the Boston. That is, as it comes off the records it has all the miraculous refinement and subtlety of coloring of the Boston performance in Carnegie Hall (which the Boston doesn't have on the recent Victor records). In other words, it is marvelously recorded, with only a slight edge to the violins and a little high-frequency distortion at climaxes.

The first movement of Brahms's Third Symphony, as performed by van Beinum with the London Philharmonic (Set ED-22; $11) is too stolid, the finale over-deliberate; and the second movement, which begins as the Andante it should be, is spoiled by too many changes of pace. The recorded sound is clear but not lustrous with the wide-range Brush pickup, and best with one of limited range like the Zenith.

Some of the fine Tchaikovsky music that we hear in American performances of "Swan Lake" (the introduction, the swan queen's solo, the dance of the four cygnets), together with some that we don't, is well-performed by the National Symphony under Sidney Beer; and the recorded sound is very good except for a slight edge to the violins (Set ED-11; $5). Also, some of the music from Tchaikovsky's "Sleeping Beauty" that we have heard in performances of "Aurora's Wedding" and "Princess Aurora" (the introduction, the Bluebird), together with some fine music that we haven't, is well-performed by the B. B. C. Theater Orchestra under Stanford Robinson; but this time the recorded sound, though good on a limited-range machine, is dull with bad distortion in loud passages on a machine of wide range (Set ED-18; $5).

Schubert's Piano Sonata Opus 122, one of the earlier members of the series, and of smaller stature than the later ones, has nevertheless its moments of power in addition to the characteristic Schubert loveliness. And even this loveliness requires some sharpness of contour in its phrases—of which there is none in Kathleen Long's smooth, pallid performance. The sound of the piano has the usual London Decca dullness and weakness of treble (Set ED-26; $7).

On London Decca single records: Berlioz's delightful "Beatrice and Benedict" Overture, well played by Sargent with the National Symphony, and superbly recorded, with only a slight edge to the violins and a little high-frequency distortion in loud passages (K-1416; $2). The Overture and Pastoral Symphony from Handel's "Messiah," well-played by Sargent with the London Symphony, and well-recorded (K-1499). Mendelssohn's fine "Hebrides" or "Fingal's Cave" Overture, well-played by Unger with the National Symphony, and well-recorded except for violins that are lusterless and edged on a wide-, but not on a limited-range machine (K-1120). Weber's "Freischütz" Overture, well-played by Leinsdorf with the London Philharmonic, the violins in loud passages weak and veiled on a wide-range, muffled on a limited-range machine (K-1589). "O Rest in the Lord" and "Woe Unto Them" from Mendelssohn's "Elijah," music I don't care for, beautifully sung by Katherine Ferrier, contralto (K-1556). A Chopin Mazurka in F minor and his Valse Brillante Opus 34 No. 3, well-played by Nicolas Orloff, and the Impromptu Opus 29 with its middle section distorted by the usual exaggerated rubato—the sound of the piano again being weak in treble (K-1424). And on a Parlophone single (R-20444; $2) the tenor arias from "Don Giovanni" sung with beauty of voice by Tauber—Il mio tesoro with a vitality that gets explosive, Dalla sua pace occasionally with the mannered phrasing of the operetta style.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

Cir. (D 28,849)

This Clipping From
PORTLAND, ME.
EXPRESS

AUG 18 1947

New York Philharmonic Faces Biggest Season In 15 Years

Works Of Many American Composers To Be Heard; Top Batonists To Lead

By Helen Havener

New York City, Aug. 18.—Guest conductors or no guest conductors, the New York Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra seems to be heading for a booming season. Perhaps it is the brilliant roster of first string batonists that has been secured—they include Leopold Stokowski, Bruno Walter, Charles Muench, George Szell and Dimitri Mitropoulos—perhaps it is the fact that Bruno Walter is the music adviser, or perhaps New Yorkers are just becoming more music-minded.

In any event the biggest seat sale at this season for 15 years is reported, the figures beating all records back to 1933-1934 when Arturo Toscanini and Bruno Walter were the conductors.

Also it is matter for gratification, in examining the advance schedule, that a considerable number of works by native composers or by composers for some time resident in the United States will be heard during the Winter. Among these is Aaron Copland's Lincoln Portrait, which is by way of becoming a hardy, though very welcome perennial. Two Hindemith works are also scheduled, one the New York premiere of the composer's Sinfonia Serena, the other Concertmusik for Strings and Brass. Also the first public performance will be given of Douglas Moore's Symphony in A Major. (Incidentally Mr. Moore's The Devil and Daniel Webster has been a popular feature of the opera repertoire at Chautauqua this Summer, and friends of the kindly and competent head of Columbia University's music department are rejoicing in this recognition of his gifts).

Other American works will crop up before the season is over, but these will be among the most noteworthy performances.

Youngsters' Concerts Sold Out

Adult patrons of the Philharmonic are not the only ones who are stepping briskly up to the boxoffice. The Young People's Concerts Committee of the Philharmonic Symphony Society is observing its 25th anniversary in the Fall and Winter of 1947-1948, and the entire Carnegie Hall series of six concerts is already sold out. Also there has been a brisk sale for the special pair of concerts, for children in the five-to-nine age bracket, which are to be given at Town Hall as a part of the anniversary observance.

Leon Barzin, the popular conductor of the National Orchestral Association, is to conduct one of these concerts and Walter Hendl, the young assistant conductor of the Philharmonic, the other. It is rumored that there will be two concert premieres on the repertoire for the tiny tots.

The little town of Ridgefield, Connecticut, is pluming itself these days. No less a personage than the great Arturo Toscanini is conducting a concert there. The small orchestra will be composed of members of the NBC Symphony and the proceeds of the concert will be used for the Ridgefield Library and Historical Association. Tickets are priced at $50—but then, Ridgefield residents are mostly suburban New Yorkers who can easily meet this figure—and a sell-out is guaranteed, as it always is when Toscanini wields a baton.

Americans Invade Europe

It has been "hands across the sea," musically speaking, all Winter, what with young American singers heading the casts at London's Covent Garden and invading Scandinavian opera houses and concert halls, and American instrumentalists drawing huge crowds in all the big cities of Europe. Now it is about to become "hands across the channel." The Vienna State Opera, it is announced, will pay London a visit in October, presenting Mozart's Don Giovanni, Le Nozze di Figaro and Cosi fan tutte, Beethoven's Fidelio and Strauss' Salome. This is a somewhat unprecedented gesture indicative of how the world, culturally speaking, is drawing together.

Now, to strengthen our own relationship to South America, it is announced that young composers from Argentina, Brazil and Uruguay are to be granted scholarships at the Berkshire Music School next Summer. Aaron Copland, who heads the composition department of the Berkshire Music Center, will be chairman of the selection committee and associated with him will be Paul Bowles, Gilbert Chase, Henry Cowell, Ethel S. Cohen and Carleton Sprague Smith, all eminent composers. One composer from each country will be chosen for the scholarship, which is open to contestants under 30.

Berkshire Records Broken

All attendance records were broken this year by the Berkshire Music Festival, according to announcements following the close of the season on Sunday, Aug. 10, with more than 100,000 people attending the 15 concerts. Also, attendance at the school was larger, with 425 students enrolled.

Brahms appears to be stacking highest in public favor, according to echoes from the 25th annual Salzburg Music Festival, which is attracting a big attendance of continental and American music-lovers. To date the largest advance sale is for the Brahms concert to be conducted by Paul Hindemith with Yehudi Menuhin as solcist. Second in popularity is the Weber, Strauss, Schubert concert to be conducted by Wilhelm Furtwaengler.

Two continental orchestras will be imported to make Edinburgh's summer festival, opening next Sunday, an epochal occasion. They are the Vienna Philharmonic, which will be under the baton of its longtime conductor, Bruno Walter, and the Colonne Orchestra of Paris under Conductor Paul Paray. These, with the Halle Orchestra of Manchester under John Barbirolli, the Liverpool Philharmonic under the recently knighted Sir Malcolm Sargent, and the Scottish and BBC Concert Orchestra will make the welkin ring between Aug. 24 and Sept. 14. Eleanor Steber and John Brownlee, both of the Metropolitan Opera, have gone over to sing in the Glyndebourne Opera Company's performance of Mozart's Le Nozze di Figaro.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

Cir. (1,091,513)

This Clipping From TIME MAGAZINE
CHICAGO, ILL.

AUG 25 1947

Married. Serge Alexandrovitch Koussevitzky, 73, longtime conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra; and Olga Naumoff, 46, spinster niece of his second wife (who died in 1942), and his secretary for 18 years; near Lenox, Mass.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

Cir. (D 277,172) (Sat. 209,766)

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN

AUG 21 1947

Defense of Modern Music Cites Some Major Sponsors.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE SUN—Sir: A recent letter to the editor by Mr. Brommer in regard to modern music served as a source of great amusement to me, as, I suppose, it did to many others.

Reader Brommer suggests that modern music should be done away with, as it is nothing more than "a passing fad." Does he realize that this would put a stop to all progress in music? Music would then become a lost art.

Men who think as Mr. Brommer does are not new in musical history. Others tried to sentence the great Beethoven into obscurity with the title, "a modern composer." They could not understand the dissonances of his "Eroica" symphony. Yet today we recognize it as one of the great classics in music.

Brommer's statement, "Real music lovers and musicians never have been misled by it (modern music) and never will be," shows his ignorance of the situation as it really is. Let him listen to the many modern selections that artists like Heifetz play, and request to be written for them. Bruno Walter has devoted a good part of his life trying to get the public to understand and appreciate the music of Mahler. Many modern pieces have been commissioned by Dr. Koussevitzky for his orchestra. These artists know that much of modern music deserves a place with the already accepted classics.

Modern music is admittedly new and strange, but in this case "familiarity breeds respect."

LAURENCE M. COHEN.

New York.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

This Clipping From CHICAGO, ILL.
SUN

AUG 24 1947

PROKOFIEV. "Romeo and Juliet" Ballet Suite No. 2. Played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Serge Koussevitzky. R.C.A. Victor Red Seal. Two 12-inch records.

These are characteristic pieces from a ballet which Prokofiev wrote in 1939 and from which he fashioned two orchestral suites four years previously. Music palpitating with amorous emotion—such as Gounod's or Tschaikowsky's—was not within Prokofiev's power to write, but in sections, such as "Montagues and Capulets," or the poignant episode of Romeo beside Juliet's grave, Prokofiev is remarkably successful. The Boston Symphony Orchestra under Koussevitzky, gives a notable performance and the recording is first-rate.

* * *

HANDEL (?). Concerto for Viola and Orchestra, arranged by Henri Casadesus. Played by William Primrose, with the RCA Victor Orchestra. R.C.A. Red Seal. Three 12-inch records [illegible]

If record collectors are not particular about the authenticity of their music they will enjoy the contents of this album and, more particularly, the beautiful performance of it on the viola by William Primrose, the leading exponent of the instrument. The music certainly is not by Handel, for almost every phrase denies such a possibility. The last side of Record 2 offers what the label entitles Kreisler's "Praeludium in the Style of Paganini." But Kreisler said Pagnani — a very different composer.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

Cir. (D 22,938) (S 19,556)

This Clipping From
ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.
PRESS

AUG 24 1947

Books And Tl

'Lemonade' Opera Scor

By W. G. ROGERS
Associated Press Arts Reporter

NEW YORK, Aug. 23—If you want "lemonade opera," now is the time to ask for it. Greenwich Mews Opera which has attracted hundreds of New Yorkers to a Greenwich Village church basement this Summer is thinking of taking to the road.

There are two pianists, a director, a musical director and two casts, totaling about 20 persons. The cast for Mozart's "Don Giovanni" ushers and takes tickets while the other cast presents the double bill of Humperdinck's "Hansel and Gretel" and Pergolesi's "La Serva Padrona," and then they switch around for the next performance. Lemonade is the intermission bevefage.

It's a home-made affair which has won the praise of professionals. The performers fixed up their own sets, made their own costumes, even translated the operas into English. To start the ball rolling, they chipped in $25 apiece, and each one, besides the invaluable experience, will get about $250 at the end of the 10-week season. They are graduates of music schools, sing in church choirs, have given their first New York recitals or have appeared with traveling opera companies.

Greenwich Mews Opera is an activity of the village Presbyerian Church's "Village House," 139 W. 13th st., New York, of which Mr. and Mrs Charles V. Erickson are codirectors. This Summer it has presented three programs a week, and is considering a tour this Fall. At every performance, Erickson estimates, from 50 to 100 persons have been turned away. . . . The house seats 260 and admission is from 60 cents to $1.80.

Next season thre are more ambitious plans for an "opera workshop," with a succession of small groups singing for experience. The idea was started when a soprano at the church discussed it with Musical Director Kenneth Hieber. Hieber and Director Max Leavitt assembled the current casts.

Composer Aaron Copland is on his way to Argentina, Brazil and Uruguay to lecture on a grant-in-aid from the State Department. Copland is the new chairman of the United States group for Latin-American music, of which the members are Paul Bowles, Gilbert Chase, Henry Cowell, Ethel S. Cohen and Carleton Sprague Smith. This group, under the sponsorship of the Empire Tractor Corporation, offers composition scholarships in the three countries which Copland is visiting. Winners will study at the Berkshire Music Center, of which Copland is associate director.

Three albums and three singles recently issued by Decca probably would be a welcome addition to your library. All of them 12-inch records, the albums are suites one and two of Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloe," by the Conservatoire Orchestra conducted by Charles Munch; the Brandenburg Concerto No. 2 by the Boyd Neel Orchestra conducted by Neel and distinguished in particular by George Eskdale with the old high-pitched trumpet, and Stravinsky's "Firebird" suite, shorter version, Ernest Ansermet conducting the London Philharmonic.

The singles are Tchaikovsky's "March Slav," national symphony, and Fistoqpari; two numbers from Mendelssohn's "Elijah," Kathleen Ferrier, contralto, and Neel Orchestra; Weber's "Der Freischutz" overture, London Philharmonic, and Leinsdorf.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (450,259)
This Clipping From
DAYTON, OHIO
NEWS-WEEK
AUG 18 1947

MUSIC

Mozart and the Long Ears

"You know there are a hundred ignorant people for every ten connoisseurs," wrote Leopold Mozart to his wonder child, Wolfgang Amadeus. "So do not forget what is called popular and tickle the long ears." Plunged in the composition of his fifth opera, "Idomeneo, Re di Creta," the 24-year-old Wolfgang replied: "As to the matter of popularity, be unconcerned, there is music in my opera for all sorts of persons—but none for long ears."

That shrewd father Leopold had cause to worry about the popularity of "Idomeneo" has been borne out by operatic history. Although the opera was well received at its première in Munich on Jan. 29, 1781, it has never racked up anything like the success of "The Marriage of Figaro," "Don Giovanni," and "The Magic Flute"—or, for that matter, "The Abduction from the Seraglio."

Mozart is said to have cared as much for "Idomeneo" as for "Don Giovanni," and eminent musicologists like Alfred Einstein and Paul Láng agree that its pages contain some of his finest operatic inspiration. Yet, as far as records show, "Idomeneo" had never been given in this country until the Opera Department of the Berkshire Music Center presented the work last week.

Despite the undeniable quality and appeal of most of its music, it is easy to see why "Idomeneo" has been neglected. Its production is a complicated and difficult task; its singing-acting assignments are among the toughest; and its libretto, by the Abbé G. B. Varesco, is overlong and confused. To eliminate some of these headaches, Boris Goldovsky, who prepared "Idomeneo" for its Tanglewood presentation, edited and rearranged the text.

The story is classical. Idomeneo, King of Crete, is returning from the Trojan Wars. A violent storm at sea prompts him to promise Neptune, as a sacrifice, the first human being he meets upon his safe return. The victim turns out to be his son, Idamante, who is in love with Ilia, captive daughter of King Priam of Troy. Out of the resulting complications, the Voice of the Oracle allows a happy ending, providing Idomeneo renounces the throne in favor of Idamante and Ilia.

But even streamlined by so expert a hand as Goldovsky's, "Idomeneo" can hardly be envisaged as joining the operatic hit parade. For Mozartians and musicologists, that made no difference; the important thing was that "Idomeneo" had been given at all.

H. S. Babbitt Jr.

A scene from Mozart's "Idomeneo" during its American première at the Berkshire Music Center

---

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 70,851)
This Clipping From SAN DIEGO, CALIF.
TRIBUNE SUN
AUG 26 1947

Two American conductors in particular have done much to enrich collectors of symphonic Americana—Sergei Koussevitzky, of the Boston Symphony, and Howard Hanson, director of the Eastman School of Music, at Rochester, N. Y. (one of the four leading music schools in the country), composer and conductor of the Eastman School of Music Orchestra.

Recently the Eastman School (a non-profit institution) celebrated a double anniversary, as Founders' Day, of 1947, came around. There were eulogies of the late George S. Eastman, known as the kodak king, who endowed the conservatory bearing his name. There were tributes also in honor of Dr. Howard Hanson, whose foresight and strength not only guided this school but who added to the school activities a seasonal American Music Festival which, for the last 12 years, has introduced an impressive total of creative American talent.

Today, Koussevitzky still leads as a conductorial sponsor of new Americana. It seemed only appropriate that the principal Founders' Day address, at Eastman, should have come from him, as it inferentially pointed also to his pioneering for American music as a national and broadly human expression.

After acknowledging George Eastman's vision in endowing an American music school, headed by an American, Koussevitzky continued:

"Today in a period of unprecedented crisis in history, when men find no common contact and means of understanding each other, when all notions and values have lost their former significance, music retains the element of unity.

"In the light of music, the soul beholds the good and the beautiful. The heart awakens to renewed faith in man and a better future. If you deprive men of music—just as they were deprived of honor, dignity, human rights, conscience, faith and freedom—you will witness the decline of such a people to a state of brutality and barbarism. (The eminent maestro undoubtedly refers to Nazi government regulations on music in the Hitler Reich.)

"Music alone can still tame the least in man—it remains our comfort and hope. The meaning of music is justifying also the spiritual aspiration and spiritual sources of man."

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 36,240) (S 35,693)
This Clipping From MADISON, WIS.
CAPITAL TIMES
AUG 24 1947

◆ ◆ ◆

Koussevitzky

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY and the Boston Symphony orchestra have recorded a brilliant performance of excerpts from Serge Prokofieff's ballet, Romeo and Juliet, for RCA Victor and the set (DM-1129, two 12-inch) is now released. It offers the first, second, fourth and seventh movements of Prokofieff's second suite, his first suite having been rearranged because it was too unweildy.

The music is aptly thematic of Shakespeare's age-old tale. The hostility of the Montagues and the Capulets is evidenced in the ironic twists of the music; exquisite tender passages portray the emotions of the immortal lovers. Prokofieff wrote the work in 1935. He was the fourth noted composer to use this love tragedy as the basis for a musical work. Berlioz, Gounod and Tchaikowsky had done it previously.

◆ ◆ ◆

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 70,404) (S 88,556)
This Clipping From
COLUMBUS, OHIO
CITIZEN
AUG 24 1947

'Romeo' by a Russian

Serge Prokofieff's Ballet Music Put on Discs

By NORMAN NADEL

Album: Prokofieff's Romeo and Juliet Ballet Suite No. 2, played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Koussevitzky conducting. (two 12-inch Victor records, $3).

This is among the most refreshing of modern ballet recordings. Prokofieff is a master at writing for the orchestra, and judging by this he has an equal faculty for ballet scoring. The Romeo and Juliet music is wonderfully descriptive; its [illegible] is profound and its lighter characterization of Juliet is light and graceful.

The performance is about the best of any reviewed this week and the recording is clear and full-bodied, for the most part.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 47,872) (S 80,138)
This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT
AUG 20 1947

The People's Forum

A PARKING PENALTY

Experiences With Overtime Parking and the Police System

To the Editor of The Courant:

I enclose for your attention a copy of a letter I am sending to Mayor Allen, telling of my recent experiences in Hartford.

EDWARD M. RYAN.

Waterbury.

Hon. Edward Allen,
Mayor, City of Hartford.

A short time ago the writer had a most unusual experience in your city and because I am of the opinion that you are unaware of the condition which exists in your city I am taking the liberty to write to you.

A short time ago the writer made a business call on the Arrow, Hart and Hegeman factory at 4:35 p. m. My business conference lasted about fifteen minutes. I returned to my car which I had parked directly across the street from the factory and in line with many other cars that were parked solidly in front of my car, to find a parking violation tag on my windshield. Directly in front of my car there was a motor patrol car in which sat a grinning officer. When I reached my car, he leaned his head out of the patrol car and cried out that I had worse things ahead than a mere ticket. How right he was.

The grinning ofifcer informed me that he had called for a tow car to tow my car away. I asked him, in view of the fact that I had returned to my car before the arrival of the tow car, to call back and cancel the call for the tow car. He refused. Then we had to stand there on the side of the road for 24 minutes waiting for the arrival of the wrecking car. (This could all have been avoided if the officer had only asked the gateman at the factory who owned the car that was parked in violation and the gateman would have contacted me).

The Peculiar Part

Now comes the peculiar part of my complaint. Instead of towing my car away to the garage the driver of the tow car told me to get into my car and to drive it to the Automotive Associates Garage on Trumbull Street. Mind you, Mayor, the driver of the tow car told me to drive my car to the garage in the presence of the officer. I asked the officer what had been the necessity of calling a tow car, if I was to drive the car to the garage myself. He made some foolish answer. When I arrived at the garage known as the Automotive Associates, Trumbull Street, I asked that some one connected with the garage drive over to the Police Station with me. You see, I had been told that I would have to go to the Police Station to get a release before I could reclaim my car. The operator of the tow car then told me that if a person went to the Station House with me I would have another penalty to pay. Therefore I left my car on the road in front of the garage and one of the garage employees went out to my car and drove it into the garage, where it stayed until I returned from the Station with the release.

Dozens and Dozens

While I was at the Station House I learned that there are dozens and dozens of cars towed off your streets every day. I also found that there have been thousands of cars towed off the streets, or driven to the garage by the owners, since the first of the year.

Now comes the pay off. I learned also while at the Station House that EVERY SINGLE CAR TOWED OFF THE STREETS, OR DRIVEN OFF BY THE OWNER AT THE REQUEST OF THE POLICE OFFICER, GOES TO ONE, I REPEAT, ONE GARAGE. THE SAME GARAGE. THE AUTOMOTIVE ASSOCIATES nicks each and every driver the tidy sum of $3 each. So let's assume that 4000 cars have been taken into custody at the request of the police, this means that Automotive Associates has cleaned up the magnificent sum of $12,000, all of which is clear profit.

Three Hours Late

This incident made me three hours late in getting home.

Naturally, as a former newspaperman, I was a little inquisitive as to the ownership of the Automotive Associates Garage. I thought there might be some political tie-up, or something. But imagine my surprise when I checked with the office of the Secretary of State to learn that the owners of the garage are not even Hartford residents. No indeed. They live outside of your fair city.

Please understand, Mayor, that I am bringing this matter to your attention because I feel that you are not aware of the "system" that I have outlined and I know you to be the type of person to frown on such manipulations going on under your administration.

EDWARD M. RYAN.

Waterbury.

NO INSPECTION LANES

They Have Already Been Proved Nothing But a Farce

To the Editor of The Courant:

If the article in The Courant Monday headed "Ten Benefits Cited in Auto Inspections" is inspired by the Motor Vehicles Department, I hope the department isn't getting ready to spring inspections on this State again. The war didn't give us much to be thankful for, but it did end, and we hope for all time, those inspection lanes that figures have proven had very little to do with cutting down death tolls on the highways, but was a good racket for the politicians who got their friends and relatives in as inspectors, easy jobs with good pay.

As an example of what kind of racket it was, I will give an instance of what happened to me at the Willimantic inspection lane just before the war.

I started through the lane but was told that my brakes needed attention.

"Where can I go to get them attended to?" I asked.

The inspector pointed to a garage, conveniently located close to the lane. Even a slow-witted person would perceive that the lane was made as convenient as possible to that garage, where the proprietor and several assistants were as busy as bees, taking care of "adjustments" for us poor devils. The owner could hardly waddle around, his pockets were so bulging with bills and silver. I paid him his fee of two dollars for five minutes work, went back to the lane and as if by a miracle, I passed.

No, I don't care for that sort of thing, and I hope motorists will protest a resumption of that inspection farce, which, as I said in the beginning of this letter, would benefit only a bunch of politicians and their ilk.

NUTMEG.

Hartford.

MILK PRODUCERS

Pasteurization Gives Them the Small End of the Deal

To the Editor of The Courant:

Marian Wells' letter on milk pleased me immensely. I was glad somebody, who knew the ground, had the courage to write. I am for raw milk. And there is a field here for free enterprise."

Imagine allowing western milk to come in and be repasteurized to avoid decay! Everybody that knows about pasteurized milk knows that it has to be given a drop of this and a shot of that before it is fit to feed babies.

Why is there not some way to bring milk, as nature made it, to our tables? Free enterprise may yet find a way. I hope so.

But it will be a fight. Ever since I was a young man, I have known of the highhanded pressure methods of big business in milk and how often it resulted in the producer getting the small end.

WARREN P. GRANT.

West Hartford.

MORE WHITEWASHING

The Hughes Probe Shows Little of the Real Issues

To the Editor of The Courant:

The current status of the Hughes investigation seems to be headed for a whitewash similar to the Pearl Harbor probe. The barrage of charges and counter charges has produced an aura of confusion which will probably completely blanket the real issues.

Elliott Roosevelt has hidden behind the familiar wheeze of an attempt to smear his father. Hughes prefers toe-dancing behind a story of his unwillingness to "kowtow" to Army officers. Meyers, Hughes' free spending (with other people's money) publicity man, became strangely missing.

Some $40,000,000 of the taxpayers' money has been spent and we have nothing to show for it, so far, except a few items in Meyers' expense account for showgirls, nylons, liquor and other entertainment, lavished upon those responsible for obtaining the contracts and appropriations for 101 planes which have never been delivered.

One fact, however, has been clearly established by stirring up this mess. If your proposition has been rejected by the experienced government experts, paid to pass judgment on such matters, don't let that stop you. Just hire yourself a personable public relations man or woman, give him a bagful of folding money and instruct him to "blow" it on the insiders who control our military, naval and technical experts. The chances are that you will get the contract and the money and, if you fail to deliver and somebody has the temerity to question that shortcoming, the insiders will help to bail you and them out of the mess. Also, the suggestion that such spending in the procurement of war-time contracts might be bribery will probably not be raised.

Finally, never make an appearance before a dignified Congressional investigating committee until and unless you have an appreciative audience, preferably teen-agers and bobby-soxers. They are more easily enthused by dramatic and irrelevant remarks and, therefore, more easily confuse the real issues.

HARLAN L. REYCROFT.

West Hartford.

RAGWEED GROWTH

The State Highway Department Should Mow Diligently

To the Editor of The Courant:

While driving about the State it is a pleasure to see the well-kept picnic areas along the highways. That is a credit to the State Highway Department as is also the cutting of the grass along the four-lane parkways. But there is one thing that seems not to be so well done as it was once. That is mowing the sides of the highway off the shoulders. In many stretches where guard rails are maintained the crews mow just around the posts and leave an unsightly mess beyond them.

Now that the ragweed season is here, these areas are productive of a lot of weeds growing up to pester those persons unfortunate to be afflicted with hay fever. Moreover, the Department is permitting so many bushes to grow up, including the detestable wild cherry that is always covered with worms' nests that [illegible] of the countryside is [illegible] Since the law places control of these areas in the hands of the Highway Department it would seem that the Department should be a bit more diligent in taking care of them.

COUNTRY LIFE LOVER.

Windsor.

HEIGHT OF ABSURDITY

To The Editor of The Courant:

"Critique's" letter concerning Serge Koussevitzky's marriage is the height of absurdity. Certainly music critics are not vindicated by such poor excuses.

This writer made one journey to Lenox and heard several broadcasts of the festival. The good Doctor was as marvelous as ever; the orchestra was a gem of perfection. Certainly, Mr. Critique, you cannot say that the great conductor's marriage was the cause of T. H. P.'s criticisms. I know my music and realize that a mature musician would not fall to pieces when conducting Beethoven. To a musician, his music comes before anything else. The Boston conductor is truly a musician.

R. BURKE.

Rockville.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
36
This Clipping From
LINTON, IND.
CITIZEN
AUG 25 1947

VICTROLA RIVALS 'LIVE' ORCHESTRA

New Instrument Aimed at Wider Range of Reproduction.

LENOX, Mass. (U.P.)—Pitting a phonograph against a full symphony orchestra and inviting an audience to tell when the orchestra leaves off playing and the phonograph picks up is quite an acoustical stunt.

It was tried out successfully by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra during this summer's Berkshire Music Festival at the Tanglewood estate outside Lenox.

The demonstration was held in the big music shed, seating 6,000. Another 1,000 listened on the lawn outside. The occasion was the public introduction of The Berkshire, a new instrument developed by RCA Victor and named in honor of the Tanglewood festival.

This combination radio, television and phonograph set is aimed at making available in the home a wider range of tonal reproduction, bringing out qualities hitherto lost.

The orchestra, in the course of a long program, played the Beethoven "Egmont" Overture. Midway in the performance, the "live" musicians ceased playing and the phonograph took over. The change, under the ideal acoustical conditions of the music shed, was almost imperceptible.

Not For Apartments

Of course, the instrument used as a de luxe model which will retail at $4,000 and is over-elaborate for apartment dwellers or small home owners. The price range of the "custom built" line is from $1,800 to $4,000.

The phonograph demonstration was part of a day-long program called "Music for All" which traced the development of reproduction by phonograph, radio and television over the last 30 years.

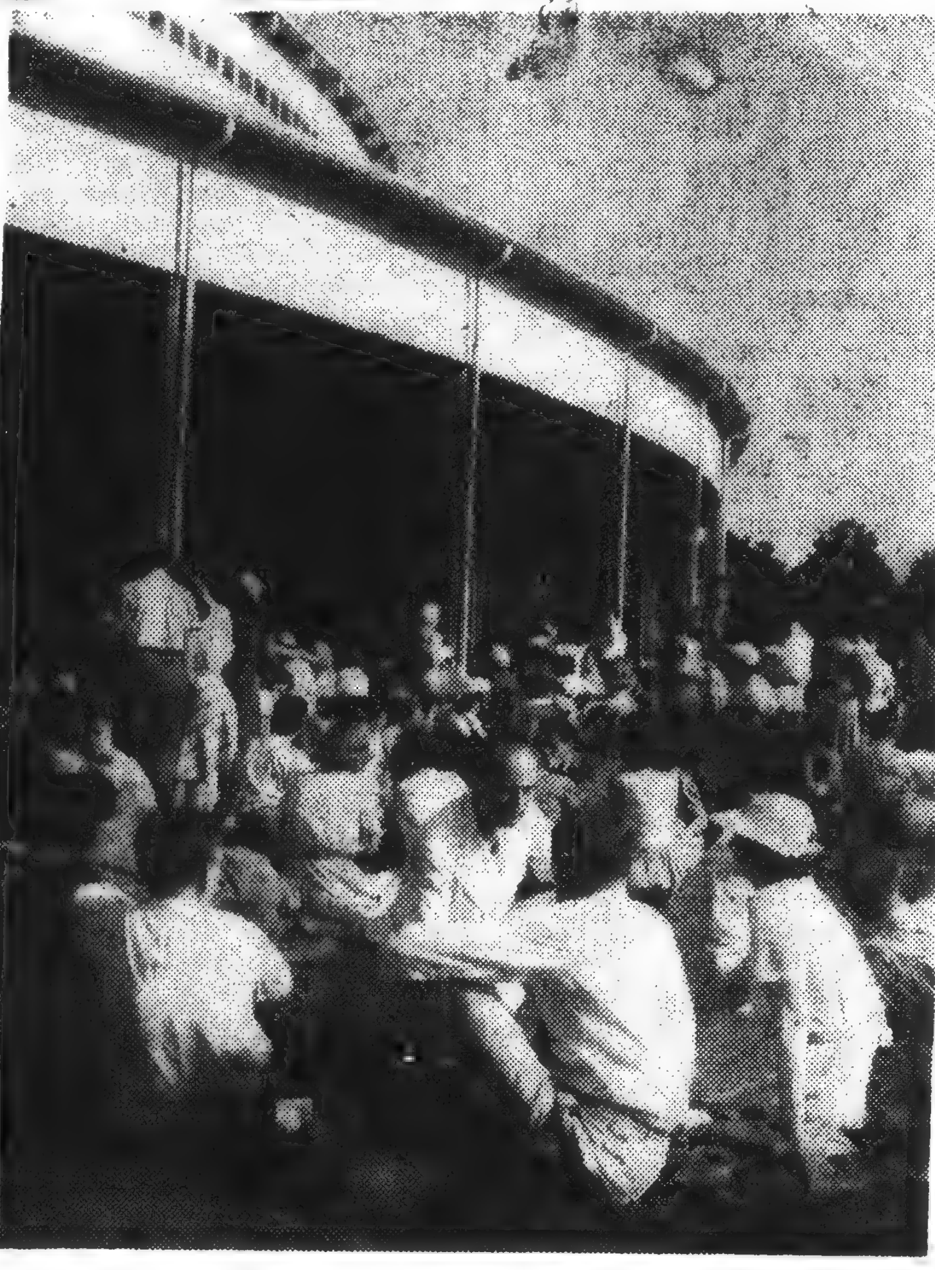
Recordings by the Boston Symphony since that organization first began making records for Victor in 1917 were played on machines of the period, giving a graphic picture of how the tonal range has been more fully captured over the decades.

During the course of events, movies were made of the audience, to be incorporated in a forthcoming film by MGM, dramatizing the history and growth of the festival, along the lines of the recent production which glorified Carnegie Hall.

It was announced that the first 200 sets of the new Berkshire instrument line will be sold on a subscription basis, the proceeds to benefit the Berkshire Music Center scholarship fund. A silver plaque, with the customer's name and Dr. Koussevitzky's signature will be placed in each set.

BLANK PAGE

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NE[illegible]
Tel. CHe[illegible]
Cir. (D 48,3[illegible]) (S 97,521)
This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
JUN 6 - 1948



AT MUSIC FESTIVAL

Audience enjoying a concert behind the shed at the Berkshire Music Festival, Tanglewood.

Music

TANGLEWOOD READY FOR BEST SEASON YET

By RAYMOND MORIN

The overseers at Tanglewood are preparing for the biggest season in the Berkshire Music Festival's 15-year history. This is no light undertaking because nearly 150,000 persons visited the Boston Symphony's Summer headquarters between Lenox and Stockbridge last year.

Activities will begin Sunday afternoon, July 18, with an all-Bach program in the Theater-Concert Hall. The following Tuesday night, an all-Mozart concert will be given. Three series of three concerts each will follow on the weekends of July 29, August 5, and August 10.

How do you account for Tanglewood's magnetic attraction?

Battle Inconvenience

Throughout the Fall and Winter, most of its patrons have heard great orchestras, conductors, and many more soloists. They have not encountered difficult transportation problems in doing so. After each of the Berkshire concerts they are required to crowd into a small space in an interminably long line of cars that crawl sluggishly down the mile-and-a-half stretch from the grounds to the center of Lenox.

They have to struggle to find a place to sleep and gasp at what it costs them If they have not reserved seats in the Shed, they frequently run the risk of being drenched and pray that the weatherman will be merciful for just a few more hours.

Yet, it is true that when they set out for Tanglewood these things hardly cross their minds. They know that they are headed for a place with an atmosphere to be found nowhere else.

Music Real Value

Tanglewood has a decorativeness, but it is incidental. Celebrities plod their way across the expansive grounds like everyone else . . . the press typewriters chatter away in great numbers. . .music begins at dusk and lasts into the night. . .thousands of people happily seat themselves on the ground and the huge Shed bulges with the more fortunate. . .the wonderful cleanliness and brilliant color reaches from where you sit to the very horizons of the Berkshire Hills.

In spite of all this, it is the music itself that creates the real incentive. The concerts are not social events. While you can don your best finery without becoming an object of sartorial curiosity, most people just try to dress comfortably. Even the boxes are so located they allow little opportunity for display.

The strongest evidence of music worship at Tanglewood is the attentiveness of its huge audiences. Of course there are always a few who flunk their concert manners and who really should have gone to a Western movie. And there are always those with an irrestible weakness for oral annotation to music.

Concerts Undisturbed

However, by and large, these audiences of 10,000 and more are remarkably quiet. The acoustics being what they are, each concert is a comparatively undistrubed pleasure from first row orchestra to far distances on the ground.

Again this year, Serge Koussevitzky has protected the welfare of his festival with music of interest and substance.

The Bach and Mozart programs are an eloquent prelude to the main series. They will include several lesser-known works like Bach's "Concerto in C Major, for Three Pianos and Strings."

Bach To Shostakovitch

The three succeeding series will explore widespread schools from Bach to Shostakovitch. The first American performance of Vaughan Williams' "Symphony No. 6" is of special interest, as is the appearance of Seymour Lipkin, Berkshire Center alumnus, almost on the wake of his Rachmanioff Contest Award.

While we are completely devoted to the great interpretive art that is Koussevitzky's, the podium appearances of Robert Shaw, Eleazar de Carvalho, and Leonard Bernstein will broaden the perspective. Each has proven his metier in similar assignments and the outlook has added intrigue.

Speaking of the Berkshire Festival's story did you know that there is a close tie between it and the Worcester Festival?

Henry Hadley conducted the Worcester Festival in 1924. Ten years later, he and 65 players from the New York Symphony Society made the horse-shoe ring and surrounding terrain of the Dan Hanna Farm in Stockbridge echo with symphonic music for the first time.

That Fall, what had been merely an experiment became a permanent project. Under the presidency of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., was founded.

Like the Worcester Festival, the Tanglewood project had to defeat many challenges in order to survive. It needed better shelter than canvas, more space, coordinated management, and the essential attraction — music of unwavering excellence.

The real test came during the destructive years of 1940-41-42. Mild inconveniences developed into hardships but the still young tradition was kept alive.

All of these factors have created the magnet that draws America to its favorite Mecca of music during the Summer, and it looks as if its guardians have outdone themselves this year.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (S 53,909)
This Clipping From
PORTLAND, ME.
SUNDAY TELEGRAM
MAY 30 1948

Music World

By Helen Havener

New York, May 29.—Musical thought hereabouts has been pretty well deflected this week to the various summer festivals, chiefly, in these immediate environs, to the Berkshire Music Festival of mid-July and August, which draws by far the largest attendance of Manhattanites. Strikingly interesting things are in store, including the all-Bach and all-Mozart concerts which will precede the regular symphonic series, starting at Tanglewood on July 18.

Three young conductors, all proteges of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, will share the conductorial honors with the veteran batonist this season. They are Eleazar de Carvalho, the Brazilian who has been receiving the finishing touches to his conductorial education in recent seasons at the Berkshire resort, Leonard Bernstein and Robert Shaw, the latter being scheduled to conduct a combined choral and orchestral program.

Dr. Koussevitzky will be on the podium for the final concert of the season, scheduled for Aug. 15, with a program of super-inspirational content, inclusive of both the Beethoven Eroica Symphony and the Sibelius Second.

It seems that the young modernists who started the Lemonade Opera last season are not the only ones who got the bright idea of presenting an opera based on Richard Brinsley Sheridan's play The Duenna this season. A week or so ago it was announced that these youthful and enterprising musicians would do the Prokofieff opus of that title with a new English text by Jean Karsavina as the opening bill of their season at the Greenwich Village Playhouse. Now it develops that a Spanish composer, Roberto Gerhard, has done a while new Duenna score, inspired by the Sheridan play which will have its world premiere at the festival of the International Society for Contemporary Music June 5 to 13 in Amsterdam.

tor, whose experience has been largely on Broadway, grapples sensibly, intuitively and effectively with compositions that have no remote relationship to the Great White Way. Critics welcomed the orchestra with enthusiasm to the limited roster of the city's top ensembles.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 14,335) (S 20,117)
This Clipping From
DAVENPORT, IOWA
DEMOCRAT & LEADER
MAY 2[illegible]

THE NEW SIXTH

. . . symphony by Ralph Vaughan Williams which received its premiere in London last month will be performed for the first time in this country during the Berkshire Music Festival with Serge Koussevitzky conducting the Boston Symphony orchestra. The work by the 75-year-old British composer takes an hour and a half to play. Other works newly announced for the festival are Prokofieff's Violin concerto with Isaac Stern as soloist and the same composer's "Romeo and Juliet" suite No. 2. Eleazar de Carvalho will conduct Siqueira's "Nordestina" and in Robert Shaw's program will be Brahms "Requiem" and Debussy's "The Blessed Damozel."

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 87,909) (S 99,790)
This Clipping From LITTLE ROCK, ARK.
GAZETTE
MAY 30 19[illegible]

Bach's "Brandenburg Concerto No. 6 in B-Flat" is the fifth of Bach's works in this form, performed by Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, released by RCA Victor. Recorded at Tanglewood, Mass., during the Berkshire Music Festival, it may be questioned whether Bach's music has ever been more beautifully and expressively presented. A feature of the work is the concertino for two violas, played with consummate artistry by Joseph de Pasquale and Jean M. Cauhape. Album of two disks, RCA Victor.

Rossini's "William Tell—Overture," has been newly recorded by Andre Kostelanetz and his Orchestrta. The music finds in Mr. Kostelanetz a congenial interpreter, while the excellence of the recording makes it take precedence over the old poorly recorded version by Toscanini and the NBC Symphony Orchestra. Album of two disks, Columbia.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 22,412)
This Clipping From LYNN, MASS.
ITEM
MAY 28 1948

Piston Symphony Wins Hub Prize

BOSTON, May 23—(AP)—Harvard Professor Walter Piston's Third Symphony has been chosen winner of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's $1,000 Horblit Award for 1948.

Prof. Piston's Pulitzer prize-winning composition will be presented by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony and a member of the Horblit selection committee, at the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, July 31.

The award, established last year by Mark M. Horblit of Boston, is intended to recognize outstanding symphonic compositions by United States residents.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 41,597)
This Clipping From
SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH
DESERET NEWS
[illegible]

Allen Jensen to Study With Serge Koussevitzky

ALLEN JENSEN, MUSICAL director and conductor of the Intermountain Little Symphony, announced today he will study with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, famous conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, at the Berkshire Music Festival, Lennox, Mass., beginning July 5.

Serving as a laboratory for Dr. Koussevitzky's conducting classes will be the Boston Symphony.

IN ADDITION TO HIS work with the Boston conductor, Mr. Jensen plans to study early and modern music under Aaron Copland and Julius Herford, orchestral conducting with Leonard Bernstein, and has plans to participate in actual performances of the Brahms Requiem, Stravinsky's Oedipus Rex and Mahler's Second Symphony under direction of Hugh Ross and Robert Shaw.

He will also study aspects of music, consisting of talks on music literature, score analysis, and various phases of orchestral, choral and operatic music under noted specialists of each field.

[117]

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 82,213)
This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

JUN 3- 1948

Tanglewood Donor Dies at Concord

Conccord, Mass. — Mrs. Rosamond Sturgis Dixey Brooks Hepburn, 60, a donor of the 210-acre estate Tanglewood, near Stockbridge, Mass., for the annual Berkshire Music Festivals conducted by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and wife of Andrew H. Hepburn, Boston architect, died Tuesday at her home on Lowell Road.

Mrs. Hepburn donated the property as the site for the summer festivals in 1937 with her aunt, the late Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan. The gift permitted Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony, to implement his long-cherished dream of developing a festival and music center rivaling that at Salzburg, Austria.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 156,903) (S 248,245)
This Clipping From LOUISVILLE, KY.
COURIER-JOURNAL

MAY 30 1948

Berkshire Festival

The Berkshire Festival, at Lenox, Mass., will open July 29 under Serge Koussevitzky, preceded by four Bach and Mozart programs, July 18, 20, 25 and 27.

Chicago will have two series of outdoor concerts: one in Grant Park opens June 23, and another, at Ravinia, will begin June 29.

Nearer home, the Cincinnati Summer Opera Association will open its annual season at the "zoo" June 27 with a performance of "Der Rosenkavlier." Tickets for the Cincinnati productions will be on sale in Louisville at the Shackleton Piano Company.

The premiere of a new American folk opera by Kurt Weill, "Down In the Valley," will be given in mid-July at Indiana University, Bloomington. Marion Bell is scheduled to have the feminine lead, and Ernest Hoffman will conduct.

The Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra will open a series of outdoor concerts July 18.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 140,791)
This Clipping From
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
MORNING TRIBUNE

MAY 30 1948

Adyline Johnson Joins MacPhail Staff

William MacPhail announced Saturday that Adyline Johnson will join the MacPhail School of Music voice faculty. She will study opera at the Berkshire music camp from July 5 to Aug. 15. Boris Goldovsky will direct the opera and Serge Koussevitsky the orchestra. On Sept. 1, Miss Johnson will return to Minneapolis to take up her duties as teacher and to continue her studies under Clara Williams.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 82,213)
This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

MAY 29 1948

Festival to Open With Bach, Mozart

The Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky will open the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood with two pairs of weekend concerts devoted to the music of Bach and Mozart.

Sunday afternoon, July 18 (Bach)

Brandenburg Concerto No. 3 in G major for strings; Cantata No. 65, "Sie Werden aus Saba Alle Kommen" (tenor, bass, chorus); Concerto in D minor for three pianos and strings (soloists: Lukas Foss, Bernard Zighera, Ralph Berkowitz); Suite No. 2 in B minor for flute and strings (soloist: George Laurent); Concerto in C major for three pianos and strings.

Tuesday evening, July 20 (Mozart)

Symphony in C major, K. 338 (34); Serenade, "Nacht Musique," for winds, K. 388; Piano Concerto in G major, K. 453 (soloist: Lukas Foss); Symphony in E flat major, K. 543 (39).

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 116,216)
This Clipping From
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD JOURNAL

JUN 2 - 1948

Opera Star Sings Tonight

GUEST ARTIST with the General Electric Chorus, Robert Kirk, director, mixed in a concert in the Syracuse Museum of Fine Arts to[illegible] o'clock will be Maria San Filippo, soprano, member of the Metropolitan Opera Association [illegible] one-time scholarship winner [illegible] Berkshire Music Festival. [illegible] Tanglewood" there, she sang the soprano lead in Mozart's "Cosi fan tutte."

Miss San Filippo, who with her mother, is passing her vacation with her brother-in-law and sister, Mr. and Mrs. Walter T. Lowe, in Mattydale, is a pupil of Vera Curtis, former Metropolitan Opera coach. Her favorite role is Santuzza in Mascagni's opera, "Cavalleria Rusticana." Among her other rules are Leonora in "Il Trovatore" and "Butterfly" in "Madame Butterfly."

Tonight Miss San Filippo will sing "My Hero" from "The Chocolate Soldier," Santuzza's aria from "Cavalleria Rusticana," Schubert's "Serenade" and Lieurance's "From the Land of the Sky Blue Water." Her accompanist will be Miss Mary Humphries of Syracuse. Miss San Filippo, daughter of Mrs. Alberto San Filippo and the late Mr. San Filippo, lives in New York City.

Her father, a singer, was known in New York and in the South. Her grandfather was town band leader in Sciacca, Provence of Agrigento, Sicily. Miss San Filippo, born in the States, was educated in this country.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 33,028)
This Clipping From
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE

JUN 1 1948

A crew of 12 men is getting the grounds and buildings at Tanglewood, Mass., in shape for the opening of the Boston Symphony summer concert season on July 18. The Berkshire Music Center will open for the season on July 5. A new reception room and music store will be located near the box office at the main entrance. The entrance itself will be widened to about 45 feet.

A Bach program on the afternoon of July 18 will be conducted in the Theatre-Concert hall by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. It will include the Brandenburg Concerto 3, in G major, for strings; Cantata 65, "Sie Werden aus Saba Kommen," for tenor, bass and chorus; Concerto in D minor for three pianos and strings with Lukas Foss, Bernard Zighera and Ralph Berkowitz as the soloists; Suite 2, in B minor for flute and strings with Georges Laurent as soloist; and the Concerto in C major for three pianos and strings. This program will be repeated on the evening of July 27.

An all-Mozart program will be directed by Dr. Koussevitzky on the evening of July 20. It will include Symphony in C major, K. 338 (34); Serenade ("Natch Musique") for Winds, K. 388; Piano Concerto in G major, K. 453 with Lukas Foss as soloist; and Symphony in E flat major, K. 543 (39). This program will be repeated on the afternoon of July 25.

44

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D [illegible],055)
This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

JUN 3 - 1948

Donor of Tanglewood Dies in Her Concord Home

LENOX, June 3 — Mrs. Rosamond (Dixey) Hepburn, about 61, wife of Andrew Hopewell Hepburn, an architect, died last night in her home at Concord.

She and her aunt, the late Miss Mary (Aspinwall) Tappan in 1937 gave Tanglewood at Lenox to the Boston Symphony Orchestra. A native of Boston, Mrs. Hepburn was the daughter of Richard C. and Ellen Strugis (Tappan) Dixey. Her father was an eminent musician, her mother was an equally distinguished artist, some of whose murals may be seen in the Tanglewood administration building.

Mrs. Hepburn's mother enlarged and improved the Tanglewood gardens, which her maternal grandfather, William Aspinwall Tappan, laid out many years before. Mrs. Hepburn spent most of her early life and later her Summers at 200-acre Tanglewood. She was a member of Chilton Club of Boston, Lenox Club at Lenox and Trinity Episcopal Church, Lenox.

Mrs. Hepburn was twice married. She and her first husband, Gorham Brooks, were divorced. Survivors besides her husband are two sons and two daughters by her first marriage. A brother, Arthur Sturgis Dixey, died when in the American diplomatic service at Seoul, Korea.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 210,256) (S 224,889)
This Clipping From
WASHINGTON, D. C.
STAR

MAY 30 1948

Hayes Bureau Lists 7 Major Concerts For 1948-49 Season

The Patrick Hayes Concert Bureau announces seven major concerts for next season. The successful piano series, inaugurated last season, will continue with recitals by Rudolf Serkin, Guiomar Novaes and Artur Schnabel on three Monday evenings, November 29, February 14 and March 14, respectively. Although Mme. Novaes has appeared here frequently as symphony soloist and recitalist, this will be the first recital she has given in Constitution Hall.

Mr. Hayes will bring the Robert Shaw Chorale of 32 voices for its first local hearing on Sunday, April 10. Mr. Shaw is famed for his choral conducting and recordings, especially that of Bach's "Mass in B Minor." He recently has been appointed by Dr. Koussevitsky a guest conductor at Tanglewood for this summer's Berkshire Festival. Another Sunday afternoon event will be a concert by the New York Philharmonic Orchestra with Bruno Walter conducting on May 1. This concert will be broadcast as one of the regular Sunday afternoon series of the Philharmonic over CBS. Burl Ives will return for an evening of folk songs on Tuesday, March 1

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 120,518) (S 122,392)

This Clipping From
JACKSONVILLE, FLA.
TIMES-UNION

JUN 4 - 1948

MUENCHES TAKE OVER

BOSTON (UP) — The un-New Englandish name of Muench promises to become a power in this realm of the Lowell's Cabots and Lodges. Charles Muench will take over the baton of Serge Koussevitsky as permanent conductor of the Boston Symphony next Spring and Charles Lawrence Muench, president of Hood Rubber Co., has just become president of the chamber of commerce. The two men are not related.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 383,454) (Sat. 251,970)

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM

JUN 5 - 1948

Four Will Win Vocal Awards

Winners of the four free scholarships to the National Academy of Vocal Arts, 6 Fifth Ave., will be chosen next Saturday afternoon, June 12, at 2 p. m. in the Julia Richman High School, Second Ave. and 67th St. The scholarships are offered in cooperation with the New York City Board of Education.

Eight finalists from June graduating classes of the city high schools will come before the board of judges Saturday. On the board will be Peter J. Wilhousky, assistant director of music, Board of Education; Arthur Lessac, director of the academy; Vivian Della Chiesa and Donald Dame, opera, concert and radio stars, and Constance Keene, concert pianist.

Miss Keene and Mr. Dame were both scholarship winners at the beginning of their professional careers. Mr. Dame won scholarships at Western Reserve and Juilliard School of Music. Miss Keene won the contest of the Madrigal Society of New York, the gold medal of the Federated Music Clubs (for four years in succession), the Naumburg Foundation Award, and a scholarship to the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 95,644) (S 87,902)

This Clipping From
BROOKLYN, N. Y.
EAGLE

JUN 6 - 1948

MASSACHUSETTS

Probably no State in the Union boasts more historic landmarks than does the State of Massachusetts. Here is where America began. Here the Pilgrims struggled, and the Patriots fought to gain and preserve freedom.

To the vacationist Massachusetts offers splendid recreational facilities ranging from the sand dunes and marvelous bathing beaches of Cape Cod to the verdant beauty of the Berkshire Hills.

The long arm of Massachusetts' Cape Cod stretches out into the cool Atlantic to capture soft breezes and the salty tang of the sea. Thoreau said that Cape Cod was not to be found in words, pictures or maps. It must be seen, smelled, felt, and heard.

From the two beautiful new bridges spanning the Cape Cod Canal is an enchanting land of scrub pine and sand dunes, of quaint elm-shaded villages and thrilling ocean vistas. Smooth, safe beaches and delightfully warm ocean waters welcome you.

Cape Cod offers many attractions. There are Summer theaters, artists and writers colonies, interesting antique shops, tennis, baseball and polo. Picturesque windmills add their charm, the oldest, at Eastham, still producing corn, "ground with the wind."

Modern highways and winding, hide-and-go-seek byways carve Cape Cod into jig-saw-puzzle parts, carrying you over moor and dune past delightful original Cape Cod cottages. There is every variety of splendid accommodations for food and lodging, from swank hotels to cozy inns, snug tourist homes and charming cabins.

From the sapphire sea to the beckoning Berkshire Hills is but a short and oh-so-pleasant journey. These rolling New England hills invite hiking and riding in Summer, fine skiing in Winter.

Those who drive over the Mohawk Trail will never forget its beauty. Through the four seasons it remains one of Massachusetts' outstanding attractions. In Summer it reveals the rolling green sea of hills, and in the Fall when the mountain foliage blushes, the sight is breath-taking!

The highlight for most tourists is regal Mount Greylock, near North Adams, with its fine motorway to the top. For hikes there are two splendid trails, Hopper and Cheshire Harbor: for skiers, the mighty Thunderbolt, catapulting 1,800 feet into the broad valley below.

Stockbridge becomes the musical capital of the world in Summer, when Dr. Serge Koussevitzky directs the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. Here, too, Broadway and Hollywood thrive on mountain air at the Berkshire Player's famous Summer theater.

Pittsfield, former home of Oliver Wendell Holmes, thriving industrial city located in the center of this delightful region, is convenient to all its natural attractions. From this locality were mustered troops led by Colonel Ethan Allen at Ticonderoga.

Lenox and Lee have beautiful mansions and estates. Williamstown, attractive doorway to the Berkshire Hills, is also the home of Williams College with its famous campus.

You'll find splendid accommodations everywhere in the Berkshires and friendly folk ready to welcome you to a Summer of rest and fun.

For the seasoned fisherman, or for the novice eager for a new thrill, the waters off the north coast are one of the favorite haunts of the mighty tuna. For the bather and sun-worshipper, there are wide sandy beaches, like those at Ipswich, Plum Island, Swampscott and Lynn.

South Shore resorts offer the Summer visitor an unsurpassed variety of sports, lovely scenery and historic spots. Here you can revel in the joys of bathing, boating, fishing, canoeing, hiking and horseback riding. Fine golf courses and well-kept tennis courts dot the shore from Boston to the Cape Cod Canal.

You'll find it hard to equal the beaches at Plymouth, Scituate and Wollaston on Quincy Shore Drive, or Nantasket Beach, where an amusement park offers entertainment for the whole family.

For a free illustrated booklet describing Massachusetts' recreational facilities write

MASSACHUSETTS DEVELOPMENT COMMISSION,
Dept. M-34, STATE HOUSE,
BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 13,720) (S 15,269)

This Clipping From ZANESVILLE, OHIO
NEWS

JUN 4 1948

CONDUCTOR

Prof. J. H. Bloom Chosen To Attend Music Center

NEW CONCORD — Professor John H. Bloom, head of the Conservatory of Music of Muskingum college has been chosen as one of the 15 conductors from throughout the nation to attend the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Mass.

This is the summer festival of the Boston Symphony orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitsky. Prof. Bloom will engage in conducting under Robert Shaw, the choral director.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 116,398)

This Clipping From
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
NEWS

JUN 3 1948

New Policy Shaping on Concerts

By Marjory M. Fisher
The News Music Editor

It is good news that Dmitri Mitropoulos has been secured by the Art Commission to inaugurate its new policy whereby the Civic Symphony concerts will be given as a May Music Festival in 1949 rather than scattered throughout the regular symphony season.

That the concerts will be given in the Opera House rather than the Civic Auditorium, is a distinct advantage both for conductor and audiences.

The Athens-born Mitropolous has long been regarded as one of the top ranking conductors in the country and it would be a pity if he had to make his San Francisco debut under the acoustical handicaps of the Auditorium. The chances are that he might not have come under the old plan.

As it is, the conductor knows San Franciscans will hear the best he has to give, and San Franciscans know that the present conductor of the Minneapolis Symphony and frequent guest conductor of Boston Symphony and New York Philharmonic will undoubtedly provide an exciting and refreshing musical experience as guest conductor of the San Francisco Symphony next May.

Spinster Dinner

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 4,012)

This Clipping From
NAUGATUCK, CONN.
NEWS

JUN 4 - 1948

Adele Addison, Gifted Young Soprano, To Appear Oct. 29

The Women's Study Club, which for many years has sponsored programs of cultural and educational benefit to the borough of Naugatuck, is introducing a new concert-lecture series for its 1948-1949 season. Mrs. Jesse F. Davis, chairman, has announced three concerts and one lecture to be held on Friday evenings during the fall and winter months, at the Hillside Congregationl church auditorium. Artists of first quality have been engaged, and the keenest interest and enthusiasm for the new venture is being shown by residents of Naugatuck, Middlebury, and Waterbury.

The opening attraction, on the evening of October 29, is a concert by Miss Adele Addison, gifted young Negro soprano, who has already won the admiration of local music-lovers through her appearance as guest soloist with the Naugatuck Men's Chorus last December. A year ago, Miss Addison was one of ten young people personally selected from a group of 2500 of the country's most promising young musicians by Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony, to receive a scholarship for study at Tanglewood, the orchestra's summer music center in the Berkshires. Miss Addison, who possesses a most unusual talent and great personal charm, appeared twice last March as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Symphony Hall, and received only the highest praise from Boston critics for her artistry and rarely beautiful voice.

BEARING FRUIT

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

This Clipping From CHICAGO, ILL.
DEFENDER

JUN 5 - 1948

26-Year-Old Symphony Conductor Makes Debut

By Chauncey Northern

NEW YORK — Town Hall rang with applause recently when Everett Lee, 26-year-old symphony conductor made his formal debut directing the Cosmopolitan Little Symphony, an interracial group of men and women formed a year ago by Lee.

Last season Lee directed the orchestra for the shows, "On the Town," and "Carmen Jones," both hit on Broadway. He was the first and only Negro to conduct a white orchestra on the great white way.

Vested with rich experience at station CBS New York as violinist and director, and three years as teacher at the Birkshire Festivals with Koussevitsky and at Columbia University's workshop for the opera, Lee was naturally at home when he stepped before the 36 professional musicians comprising his orchestra.

The entire performance showed thorough work on each score which was presented with true imagination, excellent reading and musicianship.

The well-balanced program opened with, Concerto Grosso for the Orchestra in D minor by Vivaldi.

Other offerings were, "Symphony No. 2 in D major" by Beethoven and "Brief Elegy" a modern composition by the Negro composer, Ulysses Kay who was in the audience. "The Comedians" a modern work by Kabalevsky completed the program. This was brilliantly done, with brisk tempo and melodic line. This orchestra under the skill direction of the talented youngster, is destined to make musical history.

Virginia Mae Watters, coloratura soprano, guest soloist sang the well known, "O Zittre nicht, from, "The Magic flute" by Mozart and Zerbinetta's Aria, from "Ariadne auf Naxos" by Strauss.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 37,265) (S 59,918)

This Clipping From ROANOKE, VA.
TIMES

JUN 6 -

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky's direction, will open the Berkshire Festival this summer with two pairs of week-end concerts devoted to the music of Bach and Mozart. The concerts will be given at the theater-concert hall at Tanglewood, the summer home of the orchestra near Lenox, Mass. The Bach program will be given July 18 and the Mozart on July 20.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 59,370) (S 58,181)

This Clipping From
FLINT, MICH.
JOURNAL

JUN 6 1948

Berkshire Festival

Boston—UP—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky's direction, will open the Berkshire Festival this Summer with two pairs of week-end concerts devoted to the music of Bach and Mozart.

The concerts will be given at the theater-concert hall at Tanglewood, the Summer home of the orchestra near Lenox, Mass. The Bach program will be given July 18 and the Mozart on July 20.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 25,153) (S 38,361)

This Clipping From
WHEELING, W. VA.
NEWS-REGISTER
JUN 6 - 19

What About the Ninth?

A controversy has developed about the latest recording of the Beethoven "Choral" symphony, the ninth. The performance given last summer during the Berkshire festival was recorded in the Shed at Tanglewood by RCA-Victor. The orchestra was nothing less than the incomparable Boston conducted by Koussevitsky. The chorus was directed by Robert Shaw, while James Pease, basso, headed the list of soloists. The recording was released not very long ago as RCA-Victor DM-1190.

After reading at least a half dozen generally unfavorable reviews, at last I have managed to hear the album on my own equipment. My conclusion? Well, for one thing, the shellac surfaces are unforgivably bad for peace-time manufacturing conditions. During the war we willingly bought records that were much worse, but the manufacturers had a good alibi. For another thing, the acoustics of the Tanglewood Shed appear to be responsible for "diffuse" recording. I should guess that the Shed was empty when the recording was made.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (S 50,431)

This Clipping From
SCRANTON, PA.
SCRANTONIAN
JUN 6 - 194

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky's direction, will open the Berkshire Festival this Summer with two pairs of week-end concerts devoted to the music of Bach and Mozart. The concerts will be given at the theater - concert hall at Tanglewood, the Summer home of the orchestra near Lenox, Mass. The Bach program will be given July 18 and the Mozart on July 20.

Free music is being offered to New York this Summer by local 802 of the American Federation of Musicians. The musicians will be paid by the union out of funds derived from its recording and transcription royalty fund.

According to the union, about 250,000 people will hear the programs. Tentatively scheduled are 675 performances at public schools, veterans' and [illegible] hospitals, home for the [illegible] and infirm, and settlement [illegible]

Mary Bothwell, soprano, will be guest soloist at the festival in Williamsport, Pa., on June 19 under the auspices of the United Singers of Pennsylvania. On Aug. 14 she will be soloist at the festival in Brevard, N. C., and then will sail for London for appearances at the promenade concerts in Albert Hall.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 129,670)

This Clipping From
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
NEWS

JUN 2 - 1948

noon.

* * *

RADIO COMEDIAN HENRY MORGAN will be in town the week of the Republican convention to stage his own campaign for the presidency under the slogan: "Morgan—Never!" . . . The comic will hold press conferences and we understand several delegates already have assured Henry's promoters that his name will be on the ballot. Among other things Morgan will make five personal appearances at the Earle theater, June 24. The date, by a coincidence, will also see the premiere of Morgan's new film, "So This Is New York," at the Earle. . . . Eddie Sherman who gave up booking here in favor of Hollywood, sends a postcard from Holland. Eddie's on tour looking over the European movie industry with an eye to producing a picture or two abroad. . . . Phil Colbert, brother of Helen Colbert (last year's Marian Anderson award-winner) is now doing the vocals for Luis Russell's band. . . . Gordon Staples, young local violinist, won a full scholarship to the Boston Symphony's student orchestra at Tanglewood. . . . The Passyunk Avenue Businessmen's association is planning a July 4th festival along the lines of Walnut st's Devon show, with such added touches as folk songs and international dance fetes.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 538,914) (S 1,002,765)

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

JUN 6 - 1948

MASSACHUSETTS

Bunker Hill Celebration, Charlestown, June 27.

Berkshire Music Festival, Tanglewood, near Lenox, July 18-Aug. 15.

Pilgrim Progress, Plymouth, Aug. 6, 13, 20, 27. Re-enactment of procession of Pilgrims from homes on First Street to Fort on Burial Hill.

Fishermen's Memorial, Gloucester, Aug. 8. Annual tribute to departed fishermen at 2:30 P. M.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 24,774)
This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

JUN 3 - 1948

Last Rites Are Held for Mrs. Hepburn

Tanglewood Donor Helped Koussevitzky Realize a Dream

CONCORD — Funeral services were held at the Unitarian Church here this afternoon for Mrs. Rosamond Sturgis Dixie Brooks Hepburn, 60, who donated her 210-acre estate, Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge, to the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1936. Mrs. Hepburn, wife of Andrew H. Hepburn, Boston architect, died Tuesday at her home on Lowell Road.

Mrs. Hepburn donated the property with her aunt, the late Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan. The gift permitted Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to implement his long-cherished dream of developing a festival and music center rivaling that at Salzburg, Austria. Dr. Koussevitzky is now vacationing in Saratoga, N.Y.

The estate overlooks and borders Lake Mahkeenac. Mrs. Hepburn decided to make the gift to the Boston Symphony Orchestra while listening to a Festival concert one afternoon after the location was changed to Tanglewood from Holmwood, the former Vanderbilt estate, now the Foxhollow School for Girls.

Mrs. Hepburn was a granddaughter of William Aspinwall Tappan, who laid out the estate in 1849. During the 1850's Nathaniel Hawthorne wrote "The House of Seven Gables" and "Tanglewood Tales" while living in a cottage on the property. A replica of the "Little red cottage" is nearing completion and will be dedicated July 24.

Tanglewood was a wild spot in the woods near the cottage where children used to play. They visited Mr. Hawthorne regularly to hear him spin tales of ancient mythology which later became "Tanglewood Tales," from which the estate later drew its name.

Active for many years in Boston music and dramatic circles, Mrs. Hepburn was a member of the Chilton Club and the Vincent Club. Her marriage to Gorham Brooks was terminated by divorce in 1941 and she married Mr. Hepburn later that year. He was the architect for the restoration of Williamsburg, Va., and is a member of the firm of Perry, Shaw & Hepburn in Boston.

Surviving are two daughters, Mrs. Curtis Prout, and Miss Violet Brooks, and two sons, Peter and Shepherd Brooks.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 5,425) (S 5,426)
This Clipping From
BLACKWELL, OKLA.
JOURNAL-TRIBUNE

JUN 6 1948

Fritz Busch, musical director of the Cincinnati May Festival, has been engaged to conduct the festival again next year.

It is one of the high spots in Cincinnati's musical life, which is by no means restricted to the spring or winter.

The Cincinnati summer opera will open on June 27 with a performance of Strauss' "Rosenkavavalier." Mary Henderson, Metropolitan Opera soprano, will sing the role of Sophie.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky's direction, will open the Berkshire Festival this summer with two pairs of week-end concerts devoted to the music of Bach and Mozart.

The concerts will be given at the theater-concert hall at Tanglewood, the summer home of the orchestra near Lenox, Mass.

The Bach program will be given July 18 and the Mozart on July 20.

Free music is being offered to New York this summer by local 802 of the American Federation of Musicians.

The musicians will be paid by the union out of funds derived from its recording and transcription royalty fund.

According to the union, about 250,000 people will hear the programs.

Tentatively scheduled are 675 performances at public schools, veterans' and municipal hospitals, homes for the aged and infirm, and settlement houses.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 17,962)
This Clipping From
TROY, N. Y.
OBSERVER & BUDGET

JUN 6 - 1948

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky's direction will open the Berkshire Festival this summer with two pairs of week-end concerts devoted to the music of Bach and Mozart. The concerts will be given at the theater-concert hall at Tanglewood, the summer home of the orchestra near Lenox, Mass. The Bach program will be given July 18 and the Mozart on July 20.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 17,540) (S 38,658)
This Clipping From
ASHEVILLE, N. C.
TIMES

JUN 6 - 1948

World Of Music

Soprano Mary Bothwell To Sing At Brevard Before Sailing For London

NEW YORK (UP)—The Texas composer, Don Gillis, is making an impression not only in his native habitat but throughout the 48 states.

His latest distinction will come on June 6, when he will be awarded a degree of doctor of music by Texas Christian university. At the ceremony, a concert will be performed consisting entirely of his works.

The compositions of Gillis have been played by most of the country's big symphony orchestras. The premiere of his "Symphony Five-and-a-Half" was conducted by Arturo Toscanini with the NBC Symphony last September.

His newest work, now in composition, will be in keeping with his American musical tradition. It is an orchestral suite based on the story of Sam Houston, the Texas pioneer. It was commissioned by Efrem Kurtz, conductor of the Houston Symphony orchestra, who will give its first performance in Houston next fall.

* * *

Mary Bothwell, soprano, will be guest soloist at the festival in Williamsport, Pa., on June 19 under the auspices of the United Singers of Pennsylvania. On Aug. 14 she will be soloist at the festival in Brevard, N. C., and then will sail for London for appearances at the promenade concerts in Albert hall.

* * *

The Boston Symphony orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky's direction, will open the Berkshire festival this summer with two pairs of week-end concerts devoted to the music of Bach and Mozart. The concerts will be given at the theater-concert hall at Tanglewood, the summer home of the orchestra near Lenox, Mass. The Bach program will be given July 18 and the Mozart on July 20.

* * *

Free music is being offered to New York this summer by local 802 of the American Federation of Musicians. The musicians will be paid by the union out of funds derived from its recording and transcription royalty fund.

According to the union, about 250,000 people will hear the programs. Tentatively scheduled are 675 performances at public schools, veterans' and municipal hospitals, homes for the aged and infirm, and settlement houses.

Astrid Varnay, noted for her many Wagnerian roles at the Metropolitan Opera House, has switched to the Italian side, apparently with considerable success. The soprano sang her first Italian role at the Palacio des Bellas Artes in Mexico City last week, appearing as Leonora in "Il Trovatore."

The audience held up the performance for five minutes with an ovation after her aria in the first act. Miss Varnay also is singing the leading soprano roles in "La Gioconda," "Otello" and "Aida" in Mexico City this month.

* * *

Fritz Busch, musical director of the Cincinnati May Festival, has been engaged to conduct the festival again next year. It is one of the high spots in Cincinnati's musical life, which is by no means restricted to the spring or winter. The Cincinnati summer opera will open on June 27 with a performance of Strauss' "Rosenkavalier."

Mary Henderson, Metropolitan Opera soprano, will sing the role of Sophie.

* * *

Virginia MacWatters, young American soprano who sang with Guatemala Symphony Orchestra earlier this year, will return to Guatemala City in mid-July for six operatic appearances. She then will leave for Hollywood to be soloist with the Philadelphia Orchestra under Eugene Ormandy at the Hollywood Bowl in August.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 24,774)
This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

JUN 9 - 1948

City Notes

—Miss Anne Talbot, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Leland C. Talbot of 293 Pomeroy Avenue, and Miss Nancy Walker, daughter of Mrs. Nelson M. Walker of 275 South Street, have taken summer positions with the Boston Symphony [illegible] at Tanglewood.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 18,928) (S 38,614)
This Clipping From
AUSTIN, TEXAS
AMERICAN STATESMAN
JUN 6 1948

Fine Arts Faculty Ranges Far Afield To Get Summer Posts

Faculty members of the Department of Music of the University of Texas will go to leading music centers of Europe and the United States to study and teach during the summer.

Helen Haupt, pianist, will sail for London on June 14. After two weeks in England she will proceed to St. Andrews University, Scotland, where she will attend the summer course in Traditions of European Civilization. Following that she will be on hand for the internationally famous Edinburgh Festival of Fine Arts to take place the latter part of August and first of September.

Jay Dietzer, assistant conductor of the University Symphony Orchestra will be a pupil of the great conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, at the Berkshire Massachusetts Summer School and Festival.

The head of the Piano Department, Dalies Frantz, will conduct his annual Master Class for the Lamont School of Music of the University of Denver, beginning on June 21. Lois Zebel, teaching fellow, will be assistant to Mr. Frantz for the first summer session.

The University of California at Los Angeles will receive Charlotte Dubois, assistant professor of music education, as summer guest professor.

Joan Kuhlman, instructor in piano, will resume her study with the noted European teacher, Casadesus, at Fontainbleu, France.

Studing with outstanding American teachers of piano are Verna Harder who will be a member of Guy Maier's Master Class at Santa Monica, Calif., and Betty Jean Huser, who will work with Carl Friedberg in Kansas City.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 4,369) (S 4,485)
This Clipping From HENDERSON, TEXAS
TEXAS NEWS

JUN 6 1948

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky's direction, will open the Berkshire Festival this summer with two pairs of week-end concerts devoted to the music of Bach and Mozart. The concerts will be given at the theater-concert hall at Tanglewood, the summer home of the orchestra near Lenox, Mass. The Bach program will be given July 18 and the Mozart on July 20.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 97,371) (S 143,799)
This Clipping From
ROCHESTER, N. Y.
DEMOCRAT-CHRONICLE
JUN 6 - 1948

* * *

Berkshire Festival Programs Set

PROGRAMS are announced by Serge Koussevitzky for the 1948 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass. The Festival opens with an all-Bach program in the Theater-Concert Hall on Sunday afternoon, July 18, and an all-Mozart program on Tuesday evening, July 20. The Mozart program will be repeated on Sunday afternoon, July 25, and the Bach program on Tuesday evening, July 27.

Concerts by the full Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Shed follow:

Series A—July 29, Serge Kousservitaky conducting: Bach, Suite in D. major, No. 3; Hindemith, Mathis der Maler; Beethoven, Sympohny No. 5; July 31, Koussevitzky: Piston, Symphony No. 3; Prokofieff, Violin Converto No. 1, Isaac Stern soloist; Brahms, Symphony No. 1; Aug. 1, Leonard Bernstein conducting: Haydn, Symphony No. 104; Mahler, Symphony No. 2 (Resurrection) with chorus and soloists.

Series B—Aug. 5, Koussevitzhy; Beethoven, Symphony No. 6; Stravinsky, Oepidus Rex, with male chorus and soloists; Aug. 7, Koussevitzky; Prokofieff, Romeo and Suite No. 2; Vaughan Williams, Symphony No. 6; Strauss, Don Quixote, Gregor Piatigorsky soloist; Aug. 8, Eleazar de Carvalhc conducting; Beriloz, Fantastic Symphony; Villa Lobos, Madona; Falla, El Amor Brujo; Siqueira, Nordestina.

Extra concert, Aug. 10—Koussevitzky: Tschaikowsky, Symphony No. 6; Piano Concerto No. 1, Seymour Lipkin soloist; Overture 1812.

Series C — Aug. 12, Leonard Bernstein: Weber, Overture to Der Freischutz; Stravinsky, Petrouchka; Shostakovitch, Symphony No. 5; Aug. 14, Robert Shaw: Debussy, The Blessed Damozel; Brahms, Requiem, chorus and soloists; Aug. 15, Koussevitzky: Beethoven, Symphony No. 3; Sibelius, Symphony No. 2.

* * *

ODDS 'N ENDS: Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, Boston Symphony conductor, was awarded the National Music League's 1947-48 award in New York recently "as the conductor who contributed the most outstanding service to young American musicians." The dean of America's conductors was chosen by a poll of music editors of more than 500 newspapers . . . Antal Dorati of the Dallas Symphony has been named music director of the World's Fair of Music, Grand Central Palace, New York, July 19-24. . . . A $1,000 prize for the outstanding musical composition to be submitted in a world-wide contest" is offered by the 80-year-old Peabody Conservatory of Music, Baltimore 2. Information may be obtained from Joseph Weisman at the conservatory. . . . Ogunquit Art Center, Ogunquit, Me., a non-profit artists organization, will hold its 28th annual national exhibition of paintings, July 3-Sept. 6, composed of works by professional artists. . . . A loan exhibit of woodblock color-prints, oils, pastels and watercolors by Jane Berry Judson, is on display during May and June in the Cordelia A. Greene Library, Castile. Miss Judson and her sister Frances Judson lived many years in Castile. Besides prints and paintings which she did in Europe, much of her work consists of studies in and around Castile.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 39,169) (S 44,213)
This Clipping From
EL PASO, TEXAS
TIMES
JUN 6 1948

Bach, Mozart Programs Planned

New York. (UP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky's direction, will open the Bershire Festival this Summer with two pairs of week-end concerts devoted to the music of Bach and Mozart. The concerts will be given at the theater-concert hall at Tanglewood, the Summer home of the orchestra near Lenox, Mass. The Bach program will be given July 18 and the Mozart on July 20.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 144,892) (S 160,408)
This Clipping From HOUSTON, TEX.
POST
JUN 6 1948

Opening Programs Set For Berkshire Fetes

BOSTON, June 5.—(Sp)—The Boston Symphony orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky, will open the Berkshire festival this summer with two pairs of week-end concerts devoted to the music of Bach and Mozart.

The concert[illegible] will be given in the theater-concer[illegible]t Tanglewood, summer home of the orchestra in Lenox, Mass.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 538,914) (S 1,002,765)
This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
JUN 6 - 1948

BAY STATE'S VACATIONLAND AS VARIED AS NATION'S

By JOHN H. FENTON

BOSTON—Vacationists headed for Massachusetts in 1948 will find preparations long since made for the most attractive season since before the war. In addition to improvements to existing summer housing facilities throughout the Commonwealth, stockpiles of gasoline are reported ready for an 8 per cent increase in consumption, while railroads and airlines have added equipment to take care of transportation needs.

The Massachusetts summer tourist season may be said to have opened April 18 in Lisbon, Portugal. On that day, following appropriate religious ceremonies, a cedar statue of Our Lady of Good Voyage was placed in a chapel aboard the Portuguese hospital ship Gil Eanes, bound for Gloucester.

The vessel, escorted by the Portuguese maritime training ship Sagres, arrived in Gloucester on the eve of last week-end's three-day fiesta incident to the blessing of the fishing fleet by the Most Rev. Richard J. Cushing, Archbishop of Boston. Following this ceremony the statue was placed back of the altar in Gloucester's Church of Our Lady of Good Voyage as a memorial to the fishermen of all lands.

Many Attend Fiesta

This fiesta, now attracting upwards of 40,000 annually during the three days ending May 30, was the first of a series of special events, anniversaries and celebrations that will bring several million persons into Massachusetts during a vacation season that extends to the first fall frost.

As the vacation season may be said to have begun at sea, it will return there in October as yachtsmen traditionally close out their competitions with "chowder regattas." In these, participants and spectators alike will consume huge bowls of the coast's famous fish chowders that are part of the season's seafood dinners.

Triangle Photo Service

Almost everyone is an artist on Cape Cod.

Everything Is Plentiful

The nearly 200 miles of Massachusetts territory stretching from the Atlantic Ocean to the New York State line occasionally has been likened to a miniature replica of the entire United States. Virtually all activities found elsewhere may be enjoyed in the Bay State.

For those who prefer a summertime reminder of Florida there is the 100-mile stretch of beaches along Cape Cod. For the first time since 1941 the New Haven Railroad will offer week-end sleeper service from New York. The night Cape Codder will leave New York late Friday nights, arriving at Hyannis and Woods Hole early Saturday morning. It will return to New York Sunday night.

The Cape, as well as the adjacent islands of Martha's Vineyard and Nantucket, also will be well served by steamers as well as by the airlines. The famous Cape Playhouse at Dennis will open its twenty-sixth season on June 28.

Those who enjoy visiting historic spots will find hundreds of them, from Boston all the way west. In addition, nearly 900 recreational events, including art exhibits and summer fairs, golf tournaments and surf fishing, have been catalogued by the New England Council. Massachusetts, it is expected, will have a lion's share of all of these.

The Massachusetts North Shore, with Gloucester as its capital, will attract those who enjoy ocean scenery at its rugged best. Gloucester and neighboring Rockport are summer meccas for artists, but there are other attractions as well. Deep-sea fishing is available, with daily trips at an average charge of $2 per person. Hotel rates range from $6.50 upwards on the American plan.

Inland Country

Gloucester as well as Cape Cod has summer cottages for seasonal or monthly rental. These are priced from $200-$300 for the season to $3,500-$5,000 for the larger summer homes.

Inland, following the pattern of a miniature United States, the Commonwealth offers rolling lands back to the Connecticut River, which is the Bay State equivalent of the Mississippi. And beyond that, the hills rise again to the Berkshires as small-scale Rocky Mountains.

Pioneer Valley

This area is known as Pioneer Valley. For years, before the Revolution, it was the last outpost of civilization in Massachusetts. There are historic shrines, lush valleys and streams of typical New England countryside.

This section, like all others, has a variety of hotels, inns, boarding places and overnight cabins. Rates range all the way from $1.50 overnight to $40 a day in the more luxurious establishments.

One of the most pleasant motor trips in Massachusetts is along the Mohawk Trail from Greenfield to North Adams. This winding highway cuts through the Berkshire hills and brings the visitor to the edge of New York's Catskill and Adirondack Mountains.

Tanglewood Festival

In the area west of Pioneer Valley are the Berkshires themselves. There, at Lenox, is the Tanglewood Music Festival, where visitors are privileged to hear the Boston Symphony Orchestra during its annual summer stay.

Appropriate souvenirs of any particularly appealing section of Massachusetts always are available throughout the season. Visitors to Cape Cod may take home model schooners, hand-carved toys and other handicraft of retired sailing men.

On the North Shore, lobster shells are fashioned into intriguing patterns. In the pastoral areas, handicraft includes hooked and braided rugs.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 123,685) (S 130,056)
This Clipping From
CHARLOTTE, N. C.
OBSERVER
JUN 6 - 1948

BACH

Bach's "Brandenburg Concerto No. 6," performed by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, is the fifth of Bach's works in this form recorded for RCA Victor at Tanglewood, Mass., during the Berkshire Music festival.

It is the longest of the concertos and unique in that it features a concertino for two violas, which in this interpretation is played by Joseph de Pasquale and Jean M. Cauhape.

Koussevitzky has valid claim to authoritativeness when it comes to the presentation of the Brandenburg Concertos. They figure prominently in his Boston and New York concerts, and have been represented perennially in his Bach programs at the Berkshire festivals each summer.

This album is up to the high standard, musically and technically, as its predecessors.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 210,256) (S 224,889)

This Clipping From
WASHINGTON, D. C.
STAR

JUN 4 - 1948

Music Director of D. C. Church To Study Under Koussevitzky

There's a lot more to conducting than arm-waving—but you're not likely to learn it in school.

That's the opinion of Charles Dana Beaschler, music director of the New York Avenue Presbyterian Church. That, however, isn't going to keep him from going to school to study conducting this summer.

Mr. Beaschler.

Mr. Beaschler has just been notified he's to be one of five students of Serge Koussevitsky, famed Boston Symphony conductor, at the Berkshire Music Center in Massachusetts starting next month.

To young musicians, this is a coveted honor. The only other Washingtonian to earn it in the last decade is National Gallery Music Director Richard Bales.

Seven Weeks Intensive Study.

Under guidance of Dr. Koussevitzky and Leonard Bernstein, his assistant, Mr. Beaschler expects to have seven weeks of more intensive training than he ever had in the six conservatories where he had his musical education.

"But it is the idea of personal contact with Koussevitzky that really interests me," he explained. "You can't write or teach or explain conducting. What I will learn is mainly by my own observation."

Compulsory attendance at 14 Boston Symphony concerts will give him plenty of opportunity, he added—not to speak of endless rehearsals, other concerts and the violin playing he will also have to do.

To Mr. Beaschler — a musician since he was 9, it is quite understandable why conducting is a mystery to the uninitiated.

"Anybody can give the first downbeat, but what comes next is the hard part," he observed. "Only the experienced conductor can know what should happen from one beat to the next—and how to get it." Mr. Beaschler, who tops six feet by several inches, waved his hand to demonstrate. But he was quick to deny, on further questioning, that he is one of the "gesticulation" school of conductors.

Nine Years at Church.

"In fact, I've been accused of undergesticulating to the point that people don't know what I want," he remarked. His nine-year career at the New York avenue church, where he leads a 150-voice choir and a 35-piece orchestra in frequent choral programs, suggests this may be a considerable overstatement, however.

Mr. Beaschler started his career by studying piano, and before he was through he had learned violin, organ and singing besides band, orchestral and choral conducting. For the future, he looks forward to making recordings of church music. He already has made 50 records now used by Navy chaplains all over the world and is helping to build a well rounded civic music program, which will include a civic orchestra and chorus.

The 42-year-old musician and his wife and three children live at 906 South Seventeenth street, Arlington.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 267,826) (Sat. 179,960)

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
POST
JUN 9 - 1948

New England Possesses Variety for All Tastes

There's more than rural beauty in the New England States. There's whatever type of scenery or activity you seek. And it's packed close together. You can trace the trail of Paul Revere to Lexington and Concord, or in no time be in the midst of green mountains, or twiddling your toes in the warm, fine sand of an ocean beach.

There are mountain peaks for those who like to climb. New England's mountains range from the rolling green hills of the Berkshires to those highest in the Northeast, the White Mountains.

Many hundreds of miles of New England coastline provide relaxation and recreation to suit the most varied tastes. There are luxurious resorts like Ogunquit, Bar Harbor and Newport. There's Cape Cod, teeming with activity as its scores of hotels, fashionable clubs and cottages open their doors.

In fact, every section of New England has its own distinctive attraction. Quaint, little villages are tucked away in the foothills along with cities steeped in tradition and atmosphere.

There are artist colonies in Rockport and Provincetown where one can paint and sketch. Or there are places like Plymouth Rock where history was made; places of which you have read and studied and which bring to mind historic battles.

It's even possible to catch next season's Broadway hits at the summer theatres. In July and August there are the yacht races, and the Boston Symphony plays at the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood. Also a series of art exhibits in Gloucester and Rockport run through the entire summer.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 281,682)

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
NEWS

JUN 11 1948

Plans are now going full speed ahead at Tanglewood for the 1948 Berkshire Festival, which begins July 18 with a Bach-Mozart series by the Boston Symphony under Koussevitsky. Eleven concerts will be played by the orchestra, with Leonard Bernstein, Eleazar de Carvalho and Robert Shaw also sharing the baton.

This summer's operatic production at the Berkshire Music Center will be "The Turk in Italy," a Rossini work which has been virtually lost for more than 100 years. Under Boris Goldowsky, head of the school's opera department, it will be presented in English for the first time on record, and with a newly revised libretto during the first week of the four-week festival. Another highlight will be the first American performance of Vaughan Williams' sixth Symphony

---

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 49,564)

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
JUN 9 - 1948

'Lost' Opera by Rossini Slated at Tanglewood

Boris Goldovsky Tells of Search That Brought About The Discovery of 'The Turk in Italy'

Boston, June 8—A Rossini work, virtually lost for more than 100 years, will be this summer's operatic production at the Berkshire Music Center, Boris Goldovsky, head of the opera department of the school, has announced. "The Turk in Italy," in English for the first time on record and with a newly rebised libretto, will be presented in he Theatre-Concert Hall at Tanglewood, the evenings of August 9 and 11 during the final week of the Berkshire Festival.

This year's Festival begins on July 18 with the Bach-Mozart series conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and continues through August 15. In adition to the opening series, there will be 11 concerts by the full Boston Symphony.

As with the American premiere of "Peter Grimes," the first American performances of Mozart's "Idomeneo," and other previous opera productions at the Berkshire Music Center, "The Turk in Italy" will be performed for Friends of the Berkshire Music Center only.

This season's novelty was suggested by Helmuth Wolfes, conductor and coach and a brother of Felix Wolfes of the Berkshire Music Center faculty, who was doing some research on the Rossini comedy. Mr. Wolfes is supplying orchestrations where they are absent from existing scores. Mr. Goldovsky himself is responsible for the revised text.

Operatic Wherelsit

Mr. Goldovsky's account of his pursuit of "The Turk in Italy" is almost as good as a detective story. A manuscript copy was found in a collection of scores which Maj. Henry L. Higginson, founder of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bought from the opera house in Palermo and which have reposed for years stored in three crates in the top floor of Symphony Hall. Where Italy itself seems unable to yield a complete score, another partial orchestral score turned up in Boston, in the Brown Collection of the Public Library. Piano scores were discovered in the Widener Library at Harvard and the library of the Harvard Musical Association.

Rossini himself was very free with "The Turk in Italy," Mr. Goldovsky found. Arias and concerted numbers were shifted about, appearing in one version where they were absent from others and even turning up in later Rossini operas. Antedating "The Barber of Seville" by three years, "The Turk in Italy" was Rossini's 13th opera and was first produced in 1814 at Milan. The Garcias brought it to America in 1826, but there is no record of any performance here after that time.

" 'The Barber of Seville' is the only Rossini opera in the standard repertoire today," Mr. Goldovsky says, "and it has survived because it is the only one of his plots which we can accept today. We can't take the others any more. The new version will attempt to preserve all the charm of Rossini's delightful music while the rejuvenated plot will permit a radically new style of staging." The main character, acording to Mr. Goldovsky is not the title role but a post who "lives in front of the curtain." virtually writes the opera as it progresses, and is on equal terms witht he people on both sides of th efootlights.

Letters of invitation for renewal of membership have gone out from Dr. Lewis Perry, Chairman of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center. Thirty or more school events, in addition to the opera performances, will be open to the members. Requests for information may be adressed to the office of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, Lenox.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 83,520)

This Clipping From
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

JUN 13 1948

TANGLEWOOD SCHOOL

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, returning from a mid-season vacation, has just announced plans for the 1948 Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. There will be a six week session from July 5 to August 15, through the period of the Berkshire Festival concerts. As usual, Dr. Koussevitzky will direct the school, with Aaron Copland as assistant director. Among the faculty, in addition to 25 principal players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be Leonard Bernstein, Richard Burgin, and Eleazar de Carvalho, assisting Dr. Koussevitzky in conducting; Hugh Ross and Robert Shaw in charge of choral conducting; and Gregor Piatigorsky, head of chamber music. Darius Milhaud will return from France to join Aaron Copland as teacher of composition while Boris Goldovsky will be head of the opera department.

There will be five departments, as in former seasons: Conducting, Orchestra and Chamber Music, Composition, Opera, and Chorus. New features of the curriculum include a chamber orchestra under Mr. de Carvalho to be made up of members of the opera orchestra, a course in costume design in the Opera Department under Leo Van Witsen, and a seminar in very old and very new music to be headed by Aaron Copland and Julius Herford. There will be some 40 school performances, including a special opera production in the tradition of "Peter Grimes" and "Idomeneo," to which members of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, an organization of contributors to the school, will be invited. The Music Center was initiated by Dr. Koussevitsky in 1940 and is sponsored by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Information about the school may be secured by writing to the Berkshire Music Center, Symphony Hall, Boston, 15, Massachusetts.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 3,986)

This Clipping From NILES, OHIO
TIMES

JUN 8 - 1948

Also it is the most modern attempt at portraying the great drama evident in the old master's music. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony with Robert Shaw and the Berkshire Festival Chorus are the featured artists in the album (1196).

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NE[illegible] YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CH[illegible] 3-8860
Cir. (D 210,256) (S 224,889)

This Clipping From
WASHINGTON, D. C.
STAR

JUN 4 - 1948

Music Director of D. C. Church To Study Under Koussevitzky

There's a lot more to conducting than arm-waving—but you're not likely to learn it in school.

That's the opinion of Charles Dana Beaschler, music director of the New York Avenue Presbyterian Church. That, however, isn't going to keep him from going to school to study conducting this summer.

Mr. Beaschler.

Mr. Beaschler has just been notified he's to be one of five students of Serge Koussevitsky, famed Boston Symphony conductor, at the Berkshire Music Center in Massachusetts starting next month.

To young musicians, this is a coveted honor. The only other Washingtonian to earn it in the last decade is National Gallery Music Director Richard Bales.

Seven Weeks Intensive Study.

Under guidance of Dr. Koussevitzky and Leonard Bernstein, his assistant, Mr. Beaschler expects to have seven weeks of more intensive training than he ever had in the six conservatories where he had his musical education.

"But it is the idea of personal contact with Koussevitzky that really interests me," he explained. "You can't write or teach or explain conducting. What I will learn is mainly [illegible] own observation."

Compulsory attendance at 14 Boston Symphony concerts will give him plenty of opportunity, he added—not to speak of endless rehearsals, other concerts and the violin playing he will also have to do.

To Mr. Beaschler — a musician since he was [illegible]—it is quite understandable why conducting is a mystery to the uninitiated.

"Anybody can give the first downbeat, but what comes next is the hard part," he observed. "Only the experienced conductor can know what should happen from one beat to the next—and how to get it." Mr. Beaschler, who tops six feet by several inches, waved his hand to demonstrate. But he was quick to deny, on further questioning, that he is one of the "gesticulation" school of conductors.

Nine Years at Church.

"In fact, I've been accused of undergesticulating to the point that people don't know what I want," he remarked. His nine-year career at the New York avenue church, where he leads a 150-voice choir and a 35-piece orchestra in frequent choral programs, suggests this may be a considerable overstatement, however.

Mr. Beaschler started his career by studying piano, and before he was through he had learned violin, organ and singing besides band, orchestral and choral conducting. For the future, he looks forward to making recordings of church music. He already has made 50 records now used by Navy chaplains all over the world and is helping to build a well rounded civic music program, which will include a civic orchestra and chorus.

The 42-year-old musician and his wife and three children live at 906 South Seventeenth street, Arlington.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 281,682)

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
NEWS

[illegible] 11 1948

Plans are now going full speed ahead at Tanglewood for the 1948 Berkshire Festival, which begins July 18 with a Bach-Mozart series by the Boston Symphony under Koussevitsky. Eleven concerts will be played by the orchestra, with Leonard Bernstein, Eleazar de Carvalho and Robert Shaw also sharing the baton.

This summer's operatic production at the Berkshire Music Center will be "The Turk in Italy," a Rossini work which has been virtually lost for more than 100 years. Under Boris Goldowsky, head of the school's opera department, it will be presented in English for the first time on record, and with a newly revised libretto during the first week of the four-week festival. Another highlight will be the first American performance of Vaughan Williams' Sixth Symphony.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 267,826) (Sat. 179,960)

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
POST

JUN 9 - 1948

New England Possesses Variety for All Tastes

There's more than rural beauty in the New England States. There's whatever type of scenery or activity you seek. And it's packed close together. You can trace the trail of Paul Revere to Lexington and Concord, or in no time be in the midst of green mountains, or twiddling your toes in the warm, fine sand of an ocean beach.

There are mountain peaks for those who like to climb. New England's mountains range from the rolling green hills of the Berkshires to those highest in the Northeast, the White Mountains.

Many hundreds of miles of New England coastline provide relaxation and recreation to suit the most varied tastes. There are luxurious resorts like Ogunquit, Bar Harbor and Newport. There's Cape Cod, teeming with activity as its scores of hotels, fashionable clubs and cottages open their doors.

In fact, every section of New England has its own distinctive attraction. Quaint, little villages are tucked away in the foothills along with cities steeped in tradition and atmosphere.

There are artist colonies in Rockport and Provincetown where one can paint and sketch. Or there are places like Plymouth Rock where history was made; places of which you have read and studied and which bring to mind historic battles.

It's even possible to catch next season's Broadway hits at the summer theatres. In July and August there are the yacht races, and the Boston Symphony plays at the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood. Also a series of art exhibits in Gloucester and Rockport run through the entire summer.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 49,564)

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
JUN 9 - 1948

'Lost' Opera by Rossini Slated at Tanglewood

Boris Goldovsky Tells of Search That Brought About The Discovery of 'The Turk in Italy'

Boston, June 8—A Rossini work, virtually lost for more than 100 years, will be this summer's operatic production at the Berkshire Music Center, Boris Goldovsky, head of the opera department of the school, has announced. "The Turk in Italy," in English for the first time on record and with a newly rebised libretto, will be presented in the Theatre-Concert Hall at Tanglewood, the evenings of August 9 and 11 during the final week of the Berkshire Festival.

This year's Festival begins on July 18 with the Bach-Mozart series conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and continues through August 15. In adition to the opening series, there will be 11 concerts by the full Boston Symphony.

As with the American premiere of "Peter Grimes," the first American performances of Mozart's "Idomeneo," and other previous opera productions at the Berkshire Music Center, "The Turk in Italy" will be performed for Friends of the Berkshire Music Center only.

This season's novelty was suggested by Helmuth Wolfes, conductor and coach and a brother of Felix Wolfes of the Berkshire Music Center faculty, who was doing some research on the Rossini comedy. Mr. Wolfes is supplying orchestrations where they are absent from existing scores. Mr. Goldovsky himself is responsible for the revised text.

Operatic Whereisit

Mr. Goldovsky's account of his pursuit of "The Turk in Italy" is almost as good as a detective story. A manuscript copy was found in a collection of scores which Maj. Henry L. Higginson, founder of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bought from the opera house in Palermo and which have reposed for years stored in three crates in the top floor of Symphony Hall. Where Italy itself seems unable to yield a complete score, another partial orchestral score turned up in Boston, in the Brown Collection of the Public Library. Piano scores were discovered in the Widener Library at Harvard and the library of the Harvard Musical Association.

Rossini himself was very free with "The Turk in Italy," Mr. Goldovsky found. Arias and concerted numbers were shifted about, appearing in one version where they were absent from others and even turning up in later Rossini operas. Antedating "The Barber of Seville" by three years, "The Turk in Italy" was Rossini's 13th opera and was first produced in 1814 at Milan. The Garcias brought it to America in 1826, but there is no record of any performance here after that time.

" 'The Barber of Seville' is the only Rossini opera in the standard repertoire today," Mr. Goldovsky says, "and it has survived because it is the only one of his plots which we can accept today. We can't take the others any more. The new version will attempt to preserve all the charm of Rossini's delightful music while the rejuvenated plot will permit a radically new style of staging." The main character, acording to Mr. Goldovsky is not the title role but a post who "lives in front of the curtain," virtually writes the opera as it progresses, and is on equal terms witht he people on both sides of th efootlights.

Letters of invitation for renewal of membership have gone out from Dr. Lewis Perry, Chairman of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center. Thirty or more school events, in addition to the opera performances, will be open to the members. Requests for information may be adressed to the office of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, Lenox.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D [illegible]3,520)

This Clipping From
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

JUN 1[illegible] 194[illegible]

TANGLEWOOD SCHOOL

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, returning from a mid-season vacation, has just announced plans for the 1948 Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. There will be a six week session from July 5 to August 15, through the period of the Berkshire Festival concerts. As usual, Dr. Koussevitzky will direct the school, with Aaron Copland as assistant director. Among the faculty, in addition to 25 principal players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be Leonard Bernstein, Richard Burgin, and Eleazar de Carvalho, assisting Dr. Koussevitzky in conducting; Hugh Ross and Robert Shaw in charge of choral conducting; and Gregor Piatigorsky, head of chamber music. Darius Milhaud will return from France to join Aaron Copland as teacher of composition while Boris Goldovsky will be head of the opera department.

There will be five departments, as in former seasons: Conducting, Orchestra and Chamber Music, Composition, Opera, and Chorus. New features of the curriculum include a chamber orchestra under Mr. de Carvalho to be made up of members of the opera orchestra, a course in costume design in the Opera Department under Leo Van-Witsen, and a seminar in very old and very new music to be headed by Aaron Copland and Julius Herford. There will be some 40 school performances, including a special opera production in the tradition of "Peter Grimes" and "Idomeneo," to which members of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, an organization of contributors to the school, will be invited. The Music Center was initiated by Dr. Kousevitsky in 1940 and is sponsored by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Information about the school may be secured by writing to the Berkshire Music Center, Symphony Hall, Boston, 15, Massachusetts.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
22[illegible] St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
[illegible] CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 3,986)

This Clipping From NILES, OHIO
TIMES

[illegible] 8 - 1948

Also it is the most modern attempt at portraying the great drama evident in the old master's music. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony with Robert Shaw and the Berkshire Festival Chorus are the featured artists in the album (1196).

[123]

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

Cir. (D 188,617)

This Clipping From TORONTO, CANADA
GLOBE & MAIL

JUN 12 1948

Notes on Music

A 'New' Rossini Opera; Auditorium's Programs; Abravanel at the Prom

A Rossini work, virtually lost for more than a hundred years, will be this summer's operatic production at the Berkshire Music Centre. "The Turk in Italy," in English for the first time on record and with a newly revised libretto, will be presented in the Theatre-Concert Hall at Tanglewood, the evenings of Aug. 9 and 11 during the final week of the Berkshire Festival.

This year's festival begins on July 18 with the Bach-Mozart series conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and continues through Aug. 15. In addition to the opening series, there will be 11 concerts by the full Boston Symphony.

As with the American premiere of "Peter Grimes," the first American performances of Mozart's "Idomeneo," and other previous opera productions at the Berkshire Music Centre, "The Turk in Italy" will be performed for friends of the Berkshire Music Centre only.

This season's novelty was suggested by Helmuth Wolfes, conductor and coach and a brother of Felix Wolfes of the Berkshire Music Centre faculty, who was doing some research on the Rossini comedy. Mr. Wolfes is supplying orchestrations where they are absent from existing scores. Mr. Goldovsky himself is responsible for the revised text.

Goldovsky's account of his pursuit of "The Turk in Italy" is almost as good as a detective story. A manuscript copy was found in a collection of scores which Major Henry L. Higginson, founder of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bought from the opera house in Palermo and which have reposed for years stored in these crates in the top floor of Symphony Hall. Where Italy itself seems unable to yield a complete score, another partial orchestral score turned up in Boston, in the Brown Collection of the Public Library. Piano scores were discovered in the Widener Library at Harvard and the library of the Harvard Musical Association.

Rossini himself was very free with "The Turk in Italy," Mr. Goldovsky found. Arias and concerted numbers were shifted about, appearing in one version where they were absent from others and even turning up in later Rossini operas. Antedating "The Barber of Seville" by three years, "The Turk in Italy" was Rossini's thirteenth opera and was first produced in 1814 at Milan. The Garcias brought it to America in 1826, but there is no record of any performance here after that time.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

Cir. (S 53,909)

This Clipping From
PORTLAND, ME.
SUNDAY TELEGRAM

World

en Havener

Carol Brice, contralto, one of the many Negro soloists whose career has been launched by Serge Koussevitsky at the Berkshire Music Center, will make her Stadium debut this year. She will sing the solo role in Manuel de Falla's El Amor Brujo on June 23 with Fritz Reiner conducting.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

Cir. (D 210,256) (S 224,889)

This Clipping From
WASHINGTON, D. C.
STAR
JUN 6 - 1948

Dorothy Maynor's Solos to Feature Water Gate Event

Dorothy Maynor, famous American soprano of Negro and Indian descent, will be the soloist at the gala opening concert of the National Symphony season at the Water Gate on July 4. Howard Mitchell, musical director of the series will conduct an all-American program.

This is the second time that Miss Maynor has been the special attraction of the first concert of the season at the Watergate. She opened the season in 1946, but has appeared on programs in two previous years, each time drawing a capacity audience. Her rise to fame dates from the day when Serge Koussevitsky, after hearing her at the Berkshire Music Festival exclaimed: "The world must hear her voice." A debut in Town Hall that same autumn followed. Since then she has been heard with all the outstanding symphony orchestras in North America and Great Britain, over the radio networks and on Victor Red Seal recordings.

The opening concert of the four weeks season will be a part of the Board of Trade's Greater National Capital Committee's three-day celebration of the hundredth anniversary of the laying of the foundation stone of the Washington Monument. During the series the concerts will be given on Sunday, Wednesday and Friday nights at 8:15. Mail orders are being received for choice seats before the public sale begins. Special rates will apply to those who purchase series or strip tickets in advance of the opening date. Additional information may be had by telephoning the National Symphony's box office in Kitt's Music Store, 1330 G street N.W.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

Cir. (D 24,774)

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
JUN 9 - 1948

Music Room Hours Are Announced

LENOX—The music room of the Lenox Library will be open Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday from 2 to 5 PM, and Saturday from 7 to 9 PM, it was announced today.

Mrs. Bertha Belair of the Lee road, has been named attendant. She will play requested records during hours listed. It has also been announced that persons wishing to hear records at any other time may call the library for appointments.

Two more albums have been given to the library, in addition to the 25 albums presented recently by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Mrs. [illegible] "Peter and the Wolf," recorded by Nathan Hale, and "The White Cliffs of Dover," by Lynn Fontaine.

Miss Irene Poirier, librarian, has announced that gifts of record albums will be welcome.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

Cir. (D 39,424)

This Clipping From
HACKENSACK, N. J.
RECORD

JUN 10 1948

Bach's "Brandenburg Concerto No. 6" is recorded by Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra in another of Victor's releases of the orchestra's 1947 Tanglewood concerts, in Lenox, Mass.

This work features a concerto for two violas, performed by Joseph de Pasquale and Jean M. Cauhape.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

Cir. (D 19,909)

This Clipping From
HANOVER, PA.
SUN
JUN 12 1948

A Rossini work, virtually lost for more than a hundred years, will be this summer's operatic production at the Berkshire Music Center, Boris Goldovsky, head of the opera department of the school, has announced. "The Turk In Italy," in English for the first time on record and with a newly revised libretto, will be presented in the Theater-Concert Hall at Tanglewood, the evenings of August 9 and 11 during the final week of the Berkshire Festival.

"'The Barber Of Seville' is the only Rossini opera in the standard repertoire today," Mr. Goldovsky says, "and it has survived because it is the only one of his plots which we can accept today. The new version will attempt to preserve all the charm of Rossini's delightful music while the rejuvenated plot will permit a radically new style of staging." The main character, according to Mr. Goldovsky, is not the title role but a poet who "lives in front of the curtain," virtually writes the opera as it progresses, and is on equal terms with the people on both sides of the footlights.

As with the American premiere of "Peter Grimes," the first American performances of Mozart's "Idomeneo," and other previous opera productions at the Berkshire Music Center, "The Turk In Italy" will be performed for Friends of the Berkshire Music Center only.

This year's Festival begins on July 18 with the Bach-Mozart series conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and continue through August 15. In addition to the opening series, there will be eleven concerts by the full Boston Symphony.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

Cir. (D 7,465)

This Clipping From
NEW KENSINGTON, PA.
DISPATCH
JUN 8 - 1948

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky's direction, will open the Berkshire Festival this summer with two pairs of week-end concerts devoted to the music of Bach and Mozart. The concerts will be given at the theater-concert hall at Tanglewood, the summer home of the orchestra near Lenox, Mass. The Bach program will be given July 18 and the Mozart on July 20.

Free music is being offered to New York this summer by local 802 of the American Federation of Musicians. The musicians will be paid by the union out of funds derived from its recording and transcription royalty fund.

According to the union, about 250,000 people will hear the programs. Tentatively scheduled are 675 performances at public schools, veterans' and municipal hospitals, homes for the aged and infirm, and settlement houses.

[124]

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

Cir. (D 30,229)

This Clipping From
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR

JUN 12 1948

Newcomers Meet Monday

Plans for summer activities will be made at a meeting of the Newcomers club at 8:30 p.m. Monday in the Jewish Community center.

The executive committee, headed by Miss Sophie Aberbach, will present suggestions. These include a swimming party at White's beach June 20, to be followed by periodic dances at the center; trips to Saratoga and Tanglewood for the Berkshire Music festival; trips to summer stock theaters, movies, and folk dancing.

Men and women between 19 and 30 have been invited to attend meetings of the Newcomers club every Monday night.

Plans for the Newcomers club, Junior Hadassah, the Jewish Athletic club and other unaffiliated young adult groups to form a young adult council at the center, were announced today. Phil Ziffer was elected recently as president of the New York state Youth Division of the National Jewish Welfare board.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

This Clipping From PEOPLE'S WORLD
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

JUN 9 - 1948

with [illegible]
Toscanini, Metr[illegible] and Bruno Walter

'New' Rossini Opera Scheduled

A Rossini work, virtually lost for more than a hundred years, will be this summer's operatic production at the Berkshire Music Center, Boris Goldovsky, head of the opera department of the school, has announced. "The Turk in Italy", in English for the first time on record and with a newly revised libretto, will be presented in the Theater-Concert Hall at Tanglewood, the evenings of August 9 and 11 during the final week of the Berkshire Festival.

This year's Festival begins on July 18 with the Bach-Mozart series conducted by Serge Koussevitsky, Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and continues through August 15. In addition to the opening series, there will be eleven concerts by the full Boston Symphony.

Mr. Goldovsky's account of his pursuit of "The Turk in Italy" is almost as good as a detective story. A manuscript copy was found in a collection of scores which Major Henry L. Higginson, founder of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bought from the opera house in Palerno and which have reposed for years stored in three crates in the top floor of Symphony Hall. Where Italy itself seems unable to yield a complete score, another partial orchestral score turned up in Boston, in the Brown Collection of the Public Library. Piano scores were discovered in the Widener Library at Harvard and the library of the Harvard Musical Association.

Guest Trumpeter At Recital

Kenneth Baird of 16 Ann Street, Bergenfield, will be guest trumpeter at the fifteenth annual piano recital of the pupils of Alice W. Jones to be held Monday at 8:15 P. M. at All Saints' Episcopal Hall, Bergenfield. Friends invited.

Wins Pianists' Award

Janet Pratt of 26 Cleveland Street, Bergenfield, was among the piano students who received their awards at the Mosque Theater at Newark for participation in the annual piano playing auditions held by the Griffith Music Foundation April 17.

She was also an entrant in the National Guild Auditions held yesterday at the Juilliard School, New York City.

Janet will play a piano solo at the annual recital of the pupils of Alice W. Jones to be held June 14.

and Johnson's "Laffing Room Only". He is currently awaiting screen tests by a major film company.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YO[illegible], N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-[illegible]
Cir. (D 50,684) (S 108,091)
This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES-UNION
JUN 13 1948

Music

K. of C. Glee Club Lauded

By EDGAR S. VAN OLINDA

THE reorganized glee club of Albany Council, Knights of Columbus, was heard in a concert last Sunday night in the Playhouse. Henry Hamacher is the conductor. The male group was assisted by the Gena Branscombe girls' choir, conducted by Joseph Wiesner, John J. Hession, baritone of Albany was guest soloist.

It was the consensus that the K. of C. choral group is a distinct addition to the several singing societies of the Albany Area. The four parts were well blended, and achieved some very artistic choral effects. They had been well prepared in advance, resulting in group singing which measures up to many of the older singing groups in this city. Mr. Hession's fine baritone was heard to advantage in several groups of solos, and as incidential soloist with both the K. of C. group and the Gena Branscombe choir. Mrs. Edmund L. Conklin was the accompanist.

THE ANNUAL outing of the Albany Mendelssohn club will be held Friday of this week at White Sulphur Springs hotel on Saratoga lake. It is expected that some 60 members of the club will be present. Dr. Reinald Werrenrath, conductor of the club, will come up from New York to attend the dinner and direct the impromptu concert on the hotel porch in the evening. Several stunts by members of the organization have been arranged by the program committee. Many of the members will go to Saratoga Springs for golf in the afternoon.

THE COMPLETE programs of the Boston Symphony orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitsky at Tanglewood for the coming season, have been arranged. Guest conductors will include Eleazar de Carvalho, Leonard Bernstein and Robert Shaw.

For the first week of concerts in the Music Shed on Thursday evening, July 29, Saturday evening, July 31, and Sunday afternoon, August 1, the programs will include Beethoven's Fifth Symphony, in C minor; Brahms' Second Symphony, in D major; Mahler's Second ("Resurrection") Symphony with chorus and soloists; Piston's Third Symphony; a Symphony of Haydn; Bach's Third Orchestral Suite, in D major; and Hindemith's "Mathis der Maler."

The concerts of Series B will take place on Thursday evening, August 5, Saturday evening, August 7, and Sunday afternoon August 8. At these concerts the Sixth ("Pastoral") Symphony by Beethoven will be played; the Fifth Symphony by Shostakovitch; the Fantastic Symphony by Berlioz; Strauss' "Don Quixote" ('Cello Soloist—Gregor Piatigorsky); Stravinsky's "Oedipus Rex"; "Madona," by Villa-Lobos, and Palla's "El Amor Brujo."

An extra concert on Tuesday evening, August [illegible], will be devoted to the music of Tschaikovsky.

The concerts of Series C will take place on Thursday evening, August 12, Saturday evening, August 14, and Sunday afternoon, Augst 15, and will include Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony No. 3; Schumann's First Symphony ("Spring"); Weber's "Freischuetz" Overture; Stravinsky's "Petrouchka" (complete); the Second Symphony by Sibelius, and a major choral work to be announced.

The Festival will open with two concerts devoted to the music of Bach and Mozart, to be played on Sunday afternoon and Tuesday evening, July 18 and 20, in the Theatre-Concert hall, each program to be repeated on Sunday afternoon and Tuesday evening in the following week. Dr. Koussevitsky will conduct these concerts.

AT THE THEATRES—Colleen Gray (top left) in "Fury at Furnace Creek," at the Strand Wednesday; Judy Garland (top right) in "The Pirate," at the Palace Wednesday; Howard Da Silva (bottom left) in "Unconquered;" Pat O'Brien (bottom right) at the Ritz Wednesday in "Flowing Gold."

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 383,454) (Sat. 251,970)
This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
JUN 15 1948

courses.

Smiles Bustin' Out.

All over New England resort operators are busting out in smiles, the seasons looks that good. It'll cost as much as last year, too, or just a little more.

All sorts of events of interest to visitors are on the program in New England this summer. Summer theatres dot the area, with long-established ones at Provincetown and Stockbridge, Mass., and Ogunquit and Skowhegan, Maine.

County fairs run all through summer, the first at Bradford, N. H., July 10. Yacht races at Marblehead, Mass., windjammer cruises in Penobscot Bay, Maine, and the famed Boston Symphony concerts at Tanglewood in the Berkshires are other entertainment highlights.

Each state has a publicity bureau anxious to tell of the charms out a variety of recreational thrills.

Of Quebec in general more is said elsewhere. As a touring suggestion there is the Gaspe Peninsula, in the southeast corner of Quebec, as big as New Hampshire and Vermont together. Unspoiled by the machine age, its humble villages make for fascinating visiting. Here Norman tradition lives on with the quiet people, undisturbed in a disturbed world.

Motor Tours Planned.

From July 1 to Aug. 31 Canadian National Railways will conduct motor tours of the Gaspe. Canadian National and Canadian Pacific reach most of the resorts from the Laurentians to the Rockies.

One can see some of Canada's attractions by water. Eastern Steamship has thrice-weekly sails from Boston to Yarmouth, N. S., on which one can take his car.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 358,813) (S 708,754)
This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
JUN 13 1948

Free Programs for Children in Berkshires

Pittsfield Plans Special Playground Activities Open to Visitors; 14 Special Concerts Listed for Music Festival at Tanglewood

PITTSFIELD, Mass.

Pittsfield, biggest city in the Berkshires, plans several tourist attractions which will be free, or cost little. Vacationists with small children will endorse the games and swimming programs at the city's thirteen playgrounds, which start June 28. Youngsters of all ages will find organized recreation and supervised games and sports which cost nothing, and are open to visitors and residents alike.

Planned for July is a highlight for the youngsters, the gypsy roundup, to be staged for the second year. Playground youngsters in gypsy costumes will gather at the city's Springside Park, where there will be big pots of soup cooking over open fireplaces, gypsy-style, plus hotdogs, ice cream and chocolate milk. Most of the refreshments will be donated by business firms, and all will be provided free. It will be an all-day affair, with games, fortune tellers and story hours.

For the same age groups there will be the Mardi Gras at the end of August. Prizes will be given for costumes, floats and original parade ideas.

Biggest entertainment feature of the season will be the fourteen concerts of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Starting July 18, four concerts will be presented in the theater-concert hall; the second July 20, the third July 25 and the fourth July 27. The regular series starts in the big music shed July 29, July 31 and Aug. 1. Second group will be Aug. 5, 7 and 8; the third, Aug. 12, 14 and 15. An extra Tchaikovsky concert will be played Aug. 10.

From July 5 to Aug. 15 the educational department of the Berkshire Festival will instruct students in the Berkshire Music Center. During the season, pupils of the center will give concerts free to members of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky is director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and head of the Music Center. Guest conductors will be Leonard Bernstein, Eleazar de Carvalho and Robert Shaw. This season will be the next to the last for Koussevitzky, who has announced his retirement, and whose successor in 1950 will be Charles Muench, director of the Paris Conservatoire Orchestra.

Visitors are welcomed at the Berkshire Trout Hatchery in Sheffield, near Great Barrington, on Under Mountain Road. It was created as a hobby by the late New York City inventor William L. Maxon, and cost more than $500,000. Brook and speckled trout are raised.

Sports include Canadian-American League professional baseball played about three nights a week under lights at Pittsfield's Wahconah Park, and Sunday afternoons. Outdoor polo is under way on the E. Marshall Crane Field in Pittsfield, with opponent teams from Blindbrook, N. Y., and Farmington, Conn., Sunday afternoons. Golfers may play on several good courses in the Berkshires, including the Berkshire Hills Country Club and Pontoosuc Lake Country Club, which are members this year of the Western Massachusetts Four-Ball League.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 14,335) (S 20,117)
This Clipping From
DAVENPORT, IOWA
DEMOCRAT & LEADER
JUN 13 1948

LEONARD BERNSTEIN

. . . has started work on his firs large composition since the "Jeremiah" symphony. It is based on ideas suggested by W. H. Auden in his "Age of Anxiety" and will call for piano as well as orchestra. Jennie Tourel will premiere Mr. Bernstein's "La Bonne Cuisine," during her coming European tou. It is a cycle of songs based o recipes in an old French cookbook. Rather an unusual source of inspiration but it will be remembered that when Mr. Bernstein delivered the five student pieces for brasses commissioned by the Juillard Musical Foundation, it was found that each one memorialized a different dog, the final one being "Fanfare for Bima," Serge Koussevitsky's cocker spaniel.

EIKE
CLIPPINGS
EW YORK 11, N.Y.
3-8860
(S 1,002,765)
pping From ORK, N.Y.
MES

LD OF MUSIC: 'TURK IN ITALY'

lection of scores bought long ago from the opera house in Palermo by Henry Lee Higginson, founder of the Boston Symphony. The collection had been stored for years in three crates on the top floor of Symphony Hall.

LEAK: The Metropolitan Opera tries to keep its new singers a secret until they are announced at the general manager's annual press conference in the fall. But the news often gets out in advance. The Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra, unwittingly, has provided such a leak in the case of Marimi del Pozo, new coloratura soprano engaged for next season. The orchestra has listed her among its sixteen soloists. There is an asterisk in front of her name similar to those before the names of Cloe Elmo, James Melton, Leonard Warren and Helen Traubel. A small explanatory note explains the asterisk thus: "Subject to release by the Metropolitan Opera Association."

PAPER: Last summer Dr. Kurt Roger, head of the theory department of the Music School Settlement, went back to Vienna to give some lectures at his alma mater, the Vienna Conservatory. He found that the rebuilding of the city's musical life was handicapped by the lack of musical manuscript paper. When he returned here he relayed the information to Julius Rudel, director of the Music School Settlement. It fell on sympathetic ears, for the director was born in Vienna and studied at the Vienna State Academy. Mr. Rudel has since launched a drive to collect manuscript paper which he will send to the academy and the conservatory.

THREAT: Willem Mengelberg has been barred for life from conducting in the Netherlands for having collaborated with the Nazis. The latest move of the Netherlands Government is to refuse to extend his passport unless he returns to Holland from his chalet in Val Sinestra, Switzerland. This will have the effect of preventing him from conducting anywhere else. According to a dispatch from Amsterdam, Dutch feeling is against the refusal of the extension; not out of friendliness to the 76-year-old conductor, but as a precedent threatening the Netherlanders' personal freedom to travel.

WORCESTER

The Philadelphia Orchestra has been engaged for the eighty-ninth Worcester Music Festival which will be held from Oct. 25 to 30. It will play at the six concerts, with Eugene Ormandy and Alexander Hilsberg conducting. The 400-voice festival chorus, directed by Walter Howe, will sing at four. Bach's "Magnificat," scenes from Honegger's "King David," Kodaly's "Psalmus Hungaricus," Mussorgsky's "The Rout of Sennacherib" and his Coronation Scene from "Boris Godunoff" will be the choral selections.

RURAL: England continues to decentralize its music by arranging to have eminent musicians appear at festivals at points outside London. Earlier this year there was a festival at Bath and last week there was one at Aldeburgh. Now comes further word of the Mozart

---

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 142,968) (S 150,656)
This Clipping From DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS
JUN 14 1948

TANGLEWOOD TO RESURRECT ROSSINI OPERA

Special to The News

BOSTON, Mass., June 13.—A Rossini work, virtually lost for more than a hundred years, will be this summer's operatic production at the Berkshire Music Center, Boris Goldovsky, head of the opera department of the school, has announced.

"The Turk in Italy," in English for the first time on record and with a newly revised libretto, will be presented in the Theatre-Concert Hall at Tanglewood, the evenings of Aug. 9 and 11 during the final week of the Berkshire Festival.

This year's festival begins on July 18 with the Bach-Mozart series conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and continues through Aug. 15. In addition to the opening series there will be eleven concerts by the full Boston Symphony

---

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 20,532)
This Clipping From MANCHESTER, N. H.
LEADER
JUN 12 1948

Plan Feature of Rossini Score Lost Over 100 Years

A Rossini work, virtually lost for more than a hundred years, will be this summer's operatic production at the Berkshire Music Center, Boris Goldovsky, head of the opera department of the school, has announced. "The Turk in Italy," in English for the first time on record and with a newly revised libretto, will be presented in the Theatre-Concert hall at Tanglewood, the evenings of August 9 and 11 during the final week of the Berkshire Festival.

This year's festival begins on July 18 with the Bach-Mozart series conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, Music Director of the Boston Symphony orchestra, and continues through August 15. In addition to the opening series, there will be 11 concerts by the full Boston Symphony.

As with the American premiere of "Peter Grimes," the first American performances of Mozart's "Idomeneo," and other previous opera productions at the Berkshire Music Center, "The Turk in Italy" will be performed for Friends of the Berkshire Music Center only.

This season's novelty was suggested by Helmuth Wolfes, conductor and coach and a brother of Felix Wolfes of the Berkshire Music Center faculty, who was doing some research on the Rossini comedy. Mr. Wolfes is supplying orchestrations where they are absent from existing scores. Mr. Goldovsky himself is responsible for the revised text.

Mr. Goldovsky's account of his pursuit of "The Turk in Italy" is almost as good as a detective story. A manuscript copy was found in a collection of scores which Maj. Henry L. Higginson, founder of the Boston Symphony orchestra, bought from the opera house in Palermo and which have reposed for years stored in three crates in the top floor of Symphony Hall. Where Italy itself seems unable to yield a complete score, another partial orchestral score turned up in Boston, in the Brown Collection of the Public Library. Piano scores were discovered in the Widener Library at Harvard and the library of the Harvard Musical association.

Rossini himself was very free with "The Turk in Italy," Mr. Goldovsky found. Arias and concerted numbers were shifted about, appearing in one version where they were absent from others and even turning up in later Rossini operas. Antedating "The Barber of Seville" by three years, "The Turk in Italy" was Rossini's 13th opera and was first produced in 1814 at Milan. The Garcias brought it to America in 1826, but there is no record of any performance here after that time.

"'The Barber of Seville' is the only Rossini opera in the standard repertoire today," Mr. Goldovsky says, "and it has survived because it is the only one of his plots which we can accept today. We can't take the others any more. The new version will attempt to preserve all the charm of Rossini's delightful music while the rejuvenated plot will permit a radically new style of staging." The main character, according to Mr. Goldovsky, is not the title role but a poet who "lives in front of the curtain," virtually writes the opera as it progresses, and is on equal terms with the people on both sides of the footlights.

Letters of invitation for renewal of membership have gone out from [illegible] Perry, chairman of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center. Thirty or more school events, in addition to the opera performances, will be open to the members. Requests for information may be addressed to the office of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 715,201)
This Clipping From PHILADELPHIA, PA.
BULLETIN
JUN 13 1948

'Lost' Rossini Opera to Mark Berkshire Summer Garden

By Max de Schauensee

IT is interesting to hear that this summer's operatic production at the Berkshire Music Center will be a Rossini work virtually lost for more than 100 years—"The Turk in Italy."

Boris Goldovsky, who is responsible for this production, announces with pardonable pride that the lost opera will be sung in English for the first time on record. It will be presented by Mr. Goldovsky in the Theater-Concert Hall at Tanglewood.

The circumstances under which the score was found are almost as good as a detective story. It appears that the late Major Henry L. Higginson, founder of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, several years ago bought a collection of scores from the opera house — the Massimo—in Palermo. These scores reposed for many years in three crates in the top floor of Boston's Symphony Hall.

However, this score of "The Turk in Italy," which was found among other works, was incomplete and it was only when the Brown Collection of the Public Library was searched that the complete opera was pieced together from this finding, plus the Palermo score and piano scores unearthed at the Widener Library at Harvard and the library of the Harvard Musical Association.

The "Turk in Italy" antedates "The Barber of Seville" by three years and was first produced in 1814 at Milan. The celebrated Garcias brought it to America in 1826, but there is no record of any performance since that time.

Rossini operas that turn up after 100 years of hiding are as scare as hen's teeth. It will be interesting to see how the "Turk in Italy" is received by that fastidious and discriminating audience that gathers at Tanglewood each year with regularity and enthusiasm.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 358,813) (S 708,754)
This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
JUN 16 1948

Tanglewood Premiere

Rossini's "Turk in Italy" to Get Hearings Aug. 9 and 11

Rossini's long forgotten opera, "The Turk in Italy" will be produced for the first time in this country by the opera department of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., on Monday and Wednesday nights, Aug. 9 and 11, under Boris Goldovsky's direction. Admission will be limited to members of the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center; information about the society is obtainable at Tanglewood.

This will be the third successive American premiere to be presented by the Center, which staged Benjamin Britten's "Peter Grimes" in August, 1946, and Mozart's "Idomeneo" last August.

[126]

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 261,180) (S 387,214)

This Clipping From
ST. LOUIS, MO.
POST DISPATCH

JUN [illegible]

* * *

BACH'S BRANDENBURG CONCERTO NO. 6 gets a sober and rather heavy-footed performance from the Boston Symphony strings under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky. The recording was made at Tanglewood during a performance and the cuts, at the end of each side, are awkward. (RCA Victor, three records.) . . . The Suite from "De Rosenkavalier" is handsomely played by the Philadelphia Orchestra under Eugene Ormandy. . . . This abstraction, made by Richard Strauss himself, presents a resume of all the opera's important material. The recording is brilliant. (Columbia, three records.) . . . Andre Kostelanetz and his orchestra give a dashing, though not always Italianate, performance of Rossini's "William Tell" Overture. A curious error occurs at the end of side No. 3 when one part of the orchestra finishes before the rest. The sound is good and well reproduced. (Columbia, two 10-inch records.)

* * *

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 45,960)

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, ILL.
ILL. STATE JOURNAL

JUN 1 4 1948

ACCEPTS SUMMER POSITION

HOWARD GROTH.

Howard Groth, a member of the music department of Springfield Junior college, has been accepted as a member of the opera department of the Berkshire Music center in Tanglewood, Mass., for the summer and will leave for Tanglewood tomorrow.

The music center is an adjunct of the Berkshire festival sponsored each summer by the Boston Symphony orchestra under the directorship of Serge Koussevitzky. The department head of the opera school is Boris Goldovsky, who also heads the opera school of the New England Conservatory of Music.

Those attending the music center enjoy the instruction and association of such outstanding musicians as Leonard Bernstein, Gregor Piatigorsky, Ralph Berkowitz, Aaron Copland, Darius Milhaud, Hugh Ross, Robert Shaw, Irving Fine and many others.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 11,821)

This Clipping From
NEW ROCHELLE, N. Y.
STANDARD STAR

JUN 1 5 1948

Miss Pincus, who has just completed an undergraduate thesis on religious beliefs and attitudes of Bard students, majored in social studies. Graduated from New Rochelle High School, she was a member of the entertainment committee and chairman of the senior class-faculty dinner. She was a member of the Student Council and wrote for the school newspaper. Miss Pincus plans to do graduate work in the field of religion and sociology this Fall.

Miss Wender, a music major, composed and directed music for the college dance group and was a member of the orchestra and accompanist for string and choral groups. She has been accepted in Columbia University Graduate School and will study for the master's degree in musical composition with Otto Leuning, and piano with William Bellser. Miss Wender will be accompanist for the advanced string section at the Berkshire Music Festival, Tanglewood, Mass., this Summer.

Mr. Russo completed his studies at Bard last Summer and has just completed the first year at Fordham University Law School. He served in the Navy two and a half years during the war.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 203,600)

This Clipping From
NEW ORLEANS, LA.
TIMES-PICAYUNE-STATES

JUN 1 3 1948

Revive Rossini Opera

A Rossini work, virtually lost for more than a hundred years will be this summer's operatic production at the Berkshire Music Center, Boris Goldovsky, head of the opera department of the school, has announced. "The Turk in Italy," in English for the first time on record and with a newly revised libretto, will be presented in the Theater-Concert Hall at Tanglewood, Mass., August 9 and 11 during the final week of the Berkshire festival.

This year's festival begins on July 18 with the Bach-Mozart series conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and continues through August 15. In addition to the opening series, there will be eleven concerts by the full Boston Symphony.

This season's novelty was suggested by Helmuth Wolfes, conductor and coach and a brother of Felix Wolfes of the Berkshire Music Center faculty, who was doing some research on the Rossini comedy. Mr. Wolfes is supplying orchestrations where they are absent from existing scores. Mr. Goldovsky himself is responsible for the revised ext.

Mr. Goldovsky's account of his pursuit of "The Turk in Italy" is almost as good as a detective story. A manuscript copy was found in a collection of scores which Major Henry L. Higginson, founder of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bough. from the opera house in Palerm. and which have reposed for years stored in three crates in the top floor of Symphony Hall. Where Italy itself seems unable to yield a complete score, another partial orchestral score turned up in Boston, in the Brown collection of the public library. Piano scores were discovered in the Widener library at Harvard and the library of the Harvard Musical Association.

The main character, according to Mr. Goldovsky, is not the title role but a poet who "lives in front of the curtain." Virtually writes the opera as it progresses, and is on equal terms with the people on both sides of the footlights.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 11,821)

This Clipping From
NEW ROCHELLE, N. Y.
STANDARD STAR

JUN 15 1948

ELIZABETH LOW

* * *

Miss Elizabeth Low Is Oberlin Graduate

Miss Elizabeth Low, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth B. Low of 105 Trenor Drive, has received the Bachelor of Arts degree from Oberlin College, Oberlin Ohio.

A music major with specialty in violin study, Miss Low was a member of the college glee club, a junior adviser to the freshman class and captain of a volley ball team. She expects to do recreation work in the Fall with the YWCA and this Summer plans to attend the Berkshire Music Festival in Tanglewood, Mass.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 118,632) (S 97,382)

This Clipping From
BROOKLYN, N. Y.
EAGLE

JUN 20 1948

Berkshire Hills Set to Offer Tops In Entertainment

Early weekend visitors to the Berkshire Hills, Mass., have returned with news that the section is prepared to a greater extent than ever to provide the maximum of entertainment and an abundance of recreational facilities.

A half-dozen of the area's large estates have been converted into hostelries catering to those who wish the best in New England food and hospitality.

These are estates that, under private ownership, entertained the great and the near-great in New York society, with acres of rolling lawns and terraces, miles of bridle paths and convenient streams and private ponds.

On the entertainment side the Berkshire Playhouse at Stockbridge has issued its detailed program of plays, changing each week from its opening tomorrow through Aug. 30.

The world-famed Berkshire Festival under the direction of Serge Koussevitsky opens July 18 and closes on Aug. 15 at Tanglewood, where ticket reservations are now being accepted for single concerts or for the entire season.

Just off the Jacob's Ladder road the Jacob's Pillow Dance Studio under the direction of Ted Shawn will offer programs beginning early in Jnly.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 137,100) (S 136,912)

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
PM

JUN 1 3 1948

Rossini's 'Turk' to Be Produced at Tanglewood

Rossini's The Turk in Italy will be this Summer's operatic production at the Berkshire Music Center. Virtually lost for more than a hundred years, the Rossini opera will be given in English for the first time on record and with a newly revised libretto. It will be presented in the Theater-Concert Hall at Tanglewood, Leonx, Mass., on the evenings of Aug. 9 and 11, during the final week of the Berkshire Festival.

As with the American premiere of Peter Grimes, the first American performances of Mozart's Idomeneo and other previous opera productions at the Center, The Turk in Italy will be performed for Friends of the Berkshire Music Center only.

Presentation of the Rossini work was suggested by Helmuth Wolfes, who is supplying orchestrations where they are missing in existing scores. Boris Goldovsky, head of the school's opera department, is responsible for the revised text.

Mr. Goldovsky's account of his pursuit of The Turk in Italy is almost as good as a detective story. A manuscript was found in a collection of scores which Maj. Henry L. Higginson, founder of the Boston Symphony, bought from the opera house in Palermo, and which have reposed for years stored in three crates in the top floor of Symphony Hall in Boston. Where Italy itself seems unable to yield a complete score, another partial orchestral score turned up in the Brown Collection of the Boston Public Library. Piano scores were discovered in the Widener Library at Harvard and the library of the Harvard Musical Association.

Rossini himself was very free with The Turk in Italy, Mr. Goldovsky found. Arias and concerted numbers were shifted about, appearing in one version and not in another, and even turning up in later Rossini operas. Antedating The Barber of Seville by three years, The Turk was Rossini's 13th opera and was first produced in 1814 in Milan. The Garcias brought it to America in 1826, but there is no record of any performances here after that time.

"The Barber of Seville is the only Rossini opera in the standard repertoire today," Mr. Goldovsky says, "and it has survived because it has the only one of his plots which we can accept today. We can't take the others. The new version of The Turk will attempt to preserve all the charm of Rossini's music while the rejuvenated plot will permit a radically new style of staging."

Letters of invitation for renewal of membership have gone out from Dr. Lewis Perry, chairman of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center. Thirty or more school events, in addition to the opera performances, will be open to members. Requests for information may be addressed to the office of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 150,364) (S 181,496)

This Clipping From
COLUMBUS, OHIO
DISPATCH
JUN

'Lost' Opera By Rossini In Revival

BOSTON—A Rossini work, virtually lost for more than a hundred years, will be this summer's operatic production at the Berkshire Music Center, Boris Goldovsky, head of the opera department of the school, has announced. "The Turk in Italy," in English for the first time on record and with a newly revised liberetto, will be presented in the Theater-Concert Hall at Tanglewood, the evenings of Aug. 9 and 11 during the final week of the Berkshire Festival.

This year's Festival begins on July 18 with the Bach-Mozart series conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and continues through Aug. 15. In addition to the opening series, there will be eleven concerts by the full Boston Symphony.

As with the American premiere of "Peter Grimes," the first American performances of Mozart's "Idomeneo," and other previous opera productions at the Berkshire Music Center, "The Turk in Italy" will be performed for Friends of the Berkshire Music Center only.

THIS season's novelty was suggested by Helmuth Wolfes, conductor and coach and a brother of Felix Wolfes of the Berkshire Music Center faculty, who was doing some research on the Rossini comedy. Mr. Wolfes is supplying orchestrations where they are absent from existing scores. Mr. Goldovsky himself is responsible for the revised text.

Mr. Goldovsky's account of his pursuit of "The Turk in Italy" is almost as good as a detective story. A manuscript copy was found in a collection of scores which Major Henry L. Higginson, founder of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bought from the opera house in Palermo and which have reposed for years stored in three crates in the top floor of Symphony Hall. Where Italy itself seems unable to yield a complete score, another partial orchestral score turned up in Boston, in the Brown Collection of the Public Library. Piano scores were discovered in the Widener Library at Harvard and the library of the Harvard Musical Association.

Rossini himself was very free with "The Turk in Italy," Mr. Goldovsky found. Arias and concerted numbers were shifted about, appearing in one version where they were absent from others and even turning up in later Rossini operas. Antedating "The Barber of Seville" by three years, "The Turk in Italy" was Rossini's thirteenth opera and was first produced in 1814 at Milan. The Garcias brought it to America in 1826, but there is no record of any performance here after that time.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 14,335) (S 20,117)

This Clipping From
DAVENPORT, IOWA
DEMOCRAT & LEADER
JUN 13 1948

Catching The Beat In Music World Today

BY

INA WICKHAM

> "I shall know but one country—America.
> "To it I owe my utter loyalty.
> "The ends I aim at shall be for my Country,
> 'My God and Truth.'"
> —National Federation of Music Clubs Collect.

A ROSSINI work, "The Turk in Italy" virtually lost for more than one hundred years, will be the summer's operatic production at the Berkshire Music festival. It will be presented in English for the first time on record and with a new revised libretto. The opera will be performed for the friends of the Berkshire Music Center only. Antedating "The Barber of Seville" by three years, "The Turk in Italy" was Rossini's 13th opera and was first produced in 1814 at Milan. The Garcias brought it to America in 1836 but there is no record of any performance here at that time. The main character in the opera is not the title role but a poet who "lives in front of the curtain," virtually writes the opera as it progresses, and is on equal terms with the people on both sides of the footlights.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 110,428) (S 147,448)

This Clipping From RICHMOND, VA.
TIMES DISPATCH
JUN 13 1948

Festival Coming Up

BOSTON.

A ROSSINI work, virtually lost for more than 100 years, will be this Summer's operatic production at the Berkshire Music Center, Boris Goldovsky, head of the opera department of the school, has announced.

"The Turk in Italy," in English for the first time on record and with a newly revised libretto, will be presented in the Theater-Concert Hall at Tanglewood, the evenings of August 9 and 11 during the final week of the Berkshire festival.

Premiere for Friends

This year's festival begins on July 18 with the Bach-Mozart series conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and continues through August 15. In addition to the opening series, there will be 11 concerts by the full Boston Symphony.

As with the American premiere of "Peter Grimes," the first American performances of Mozart's "Idomeneo," and other previous opera productions at the Berkshire Music Center, "The Turk in Italy" will be performed for friends of the Berkshire Music Center only.

This season's novelty was suggested by Helmuth Wolfes, conductor and coach and a brother of Felix Wolfes, of the Berkshire Music Center faculty, who was doing some research on the Rossini comedy. Mr. Wolfes is supplying orchestrations where they are absent from existing scores. Mr. Goldovsky himself is responsible for the revised text.

How It Was Found

Mr. Goldovsky's account of his pursuit of "The Turk in Italy" is almost as good as a detective story. A manuscript copy was found in a collection of scores which Major Henry L. Higginson, founder of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bought from the opera house in Palermo and which have reposed for years stored in three crates in the top floor of Symphony Hall. Where Italy itself seems unable to yield a complete score, another partial orchestral score turned up in Boston, in the Brown Collection of the Public Library. Piano scores were discovered in the Widener Library at Harvard and the library of the Harvard Musical Association.

Rossini himself was very free with "The Turk in Italy," Mr. Goldovsky found. Arias and concerted numbers were shifted about, appearing in one version where they were absent from others and even turning up in later Rossini operas. Antedating "The Barber of Seville" by three years, "The Turk in Italy" was Rossini's thirteenth opera and was first produced in 1814 at Milan. The Garcias brought it to America in 1826, but there is no record of any performance here after that time.

"'The Barber of Seville' is the only Rossini opera in the standard repertoire today," Mr Goldovsky says, "and it has survived because it is the only one of his plots which we can accept today. We can't take the others any more. The new version will attempt to preserve all the charm of Rossini's delightful music while the rejuvenated plot will permit a radically new style of staging." The main character, according to Mr. Goldovsky, is not the title role but a poet who "lives in front of the curtain," virtually writes the opera as it progresses, and is on equal terms with the people on both sides of the footlights.

Letters of invitation for renewal have gone out from Dr. Lewis Perry, chairman of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center. 30 or more school events, in addition to the opera performances, will be open to the members. Requests for information may be addressed to the office of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, Lenox, Massachusetts.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 13,720) (S 15,269)

This Clipping From ZANESVILLE, OHIO
NEWS
JUN

SHAW ENOUGH

The Robert Shaw Chorale takes over for Charlie McCarthy and Edgar Bergen, who are vacationing in Sweden. The chorale, which consists of 30 specially selected voices, will sing a program ranging from popular show tunes to the classics. Shaw, 32, has directed choruses for Toscanini, Koussevitsky, Stokowski, as well as Billy Rose, Fred Waring and Olsen and Johnson.

DAMAGE IN COLTSVILLE: During the early part of the ev lakes of rain on main thoroughfares everywhere in the area. But after its work, and here at the intersection of Dalton and Hubbard Avenue around a tree that was felled shortly before 2 this

40 Musical Events Are Listed For Six Weeks at Music Center

TANGLEWOOD—Forty musical events will be open, by invitation, to Friends of the Berkshire Music Center here during the six-week session of the school. Starting with initial exercises Sunday afternoon, July 4, they will include symphony concerts, choral and chamber music concerts on four successive Wednesday evenings, gift of Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, and two by the Juilliard String Quartet.

The performances, excepting the Coolidge and Juilliard concerts, will be by students admitted to the school because of outstanding musical talent.

With one or more events scheduled nearly every day, student performances will be under the direction of a faculty, directed by Dr. Koussevitzky, assisted by Aaron Copland, composer. The major orchestra will be under Dr. Koussevitzky's personal direction, with Leonard Bernstein first guest conductor at the Berkshire Festival, assisted by Eleazar deCarvalho, Brazilian conductor, and members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. An orchestra in Department 5 will be under Fredrick Fennell of the Eastman School of Music, Rochester, N.Y., and in the opera department under deCarvalho.

Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist, will return after a season's leave to head the chamber music; Hugh Ross and Robert Shaw, choral conducting; Boris Goldovsky, opera; Copland and Darius Milhaud of France, composition. Members of the Boston Orchestra will give sectional training and coaching. Miss Katharine Wolff, director of music at Shipley School, Bryn Mawr, Pa., student adviser and only woman faculty member, will teach solfege.

Friends of the center and their guests will be admitted to all performances within the limits of seating capacities. Last season more than 1000 music lovers from all parts of the country, contributed to the school's support, attending as many performances as their time in the vicinity permitted. Many, too far away to attend the Festival, sent gifts because of their interest in the center.

A voluntary contribution to the support of the center constitutes membership in the society, which is headed by Dr. Lewis Perry, headmaster emeritus of Phillips-Exeter Academy. Donations should be addressed to Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, Lenox.

Pontoosuc Park Opens Tomorrow

The Pontoosuc Lake Park will

Notes on Music

A 'New' Rossini Opera; Auditorium's Programs; Abravanel at the Prom

A Rossini work, virtually lost for more than a hundred years, will be this summer's operatic production at the Berkshire Music Centre. "The Turk in Italy," in English for the first time on record and with a newly revised libretto, will be presented in the Theatre-Concert Hall at Tanglewood, the evenings of Aug. 9 and 11 during the final week of the Berkshire Festival.

This year's festival begins on July 18 with the Bach-Mozart series conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and continues through Aug. 15. In addition to the opening series, there will be 11 concerts by the full Boston Symphony.

As with the American premiere of "Peter Grimes," the first American performances of Mozart's "Idomeneo," and other previous opera productions at the Berkshire Music Centre, "The Turk in Italy" will be performed for friends of the Berkshire Music Centre only.

This season's novelty was suggested by Helmuth Wolfes, conductor and coach and a brother of Felix Wolfes of the Berkshire Music Centre faculty, who was doing some research on the Rossini comedy. Mr. Wolfes is supplying orchestrations where they are absent from existing scores. Mr. Goldovsky himself is responsible for the revised text.

Goldovsky's account of his pursuit of "The Turk in Italy" is almost as good as a detective story. A manuscript copy was found in a collection of scores which Major Henry L. Higginson, founder of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bought from the opera house in Palermo and which have reposed for years stored in these crates in the top floor of Symphony Hall. Where Italy itself seems unable to yield a complete score, another partial orchestral score turned up in Boston, in the Brown Collection of the Public Library. Piano scores were discovered in the Widener Library at Harvard and the library of the Harvard Musical Association.

Rossini himself was very free with "The Turk in Italy," Mr. Goldovsky found. Arias and concerted numbers were shifted about, appearing in one version where they were absent from others and even turning up in later Rossini operas. Antedating "The Barber of Seville" by three years, "The Turk in Italy" was Rossini's thirteenth opera and was first produced in 1814 at Milan. The Garcias brought it to America in 1826, but there is no record of any performance here after that time.

* * *

With the present musical se... the harmonica. . . . The Revelers Male Quartet, reorganized since the war and once more supreme in their field in concert, radio and recording, will add more lustre to the series, while the young American duo-pianists, Whittemore and Lowe, who aroused such enthusiasm here before they enlisted in the American Navy, will doubtless find as warm a welcome as they are meeting in their native United States since the war, where they can't even fill all the engagements offered them.

* * *

At the annual meeting of the Toronto Mendelssohn Choir Mr. Paul H. Mills, OBE, KC, was re-elected president for the coming year.

The following other officers were also elected: Honorary president, Edward Johnson, CBE, LL.D, Mus.D; hon. vice-president, F. R. MacKelcan, KC; hon. treasurer, F. J. Coombs; vice-presidents, Lt.-Col. E. G. Lidstone and Herbert F. Secord; secretary-treasurer, Griffin W. Jones.

* * *

The first Canadian performance of two songs by Michael Head, famous English composer, singer and pianist, will be given at his recital on Tuesday evening, June 15, in the Royal Ontario Museum Theatre. Mr. Head's program will include a group of Elizabethan and early English songs, and some by Grieg and Strauss, as well as his own songs and some traditional airs of Irish and Scottish origin.

* * *

Next Thursday's Prom Concert in Varsity Arena will be conducted by Maurice Abravanel, with Uta Graf, soprano, as soloist.

Uta Graf studied under the most distinguished teachers in Europe including Ria Ginster, Helena Schlussnuss, Charlotte Busch-Gadski and Anna Pahr-Mildenburg. She made her debut in opera in Dusseldorf and sang the leading soprano roles under such conductors as von Karajan and van Kempen. Her performances at the opera houses in Aachen, Dresden and Cologne established her as one of Europe's finest young singers. She was equally successful in oratorio and concert work. In 1944 Uta Graf migrated to Belgium and a few weeks ago she sang for the first time in North America. Her appearance at next Thursday's Prom will be her first in Canada.

UTA GRAF

* * *

10 THE GLOBE AND MAIL, SATURDAY, JUNE 12, 1948.

Behind the Footlight

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 16, 1948

NEW YORK HERALD TRIBUNE

Tanglewood Premiere

Rossini's "Turk in Italy" to Get Hearings Aug. 9 and 11

Rossini's long forgotten opera, "The Turk in Italy" will be produced for the first time in this country by the opera department of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., on Monday and Wednesday nights, Aug. 9 and 11, under Boris Goldovsky's direction. Admission will be limited to members of the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center; information about the society is obtainable at Tanglewood.

This will be the third successive American premiere to be presented by the center, which staged Benjamin Britten's "Peter Grimes" in August, 1946, and Mozart's "Idomeneo" last August.

THE SPRINGFIELD DAILY NEW

NS, SPRINGFIELD, MASS., SATURDAY, JUNE 26, 1948

[129]

THEATERS

OFF Stage
By W. Harley Rudkin
THEATERS

[illegible] friendly collaboration between the Boston [illegible] and the Springfield Orchestra Association, the [illegible] at Tanglewood this summer will move a little nearer to [illegible] life of Springfield and the rest of Western Massachusetts [illegible] before. More and more, it has become apparent that in its [illegible] activities, the Springfield Orchestra [illegible] physically and artistically expanding its cultural scope, [illegible] that this expansion will reflect nothing [illegible] musical attainments.

At other times and in other columns we have cast a doubtful eye in the direction of the coming Fall and Winter music season. By implication and by direct accusation, we have stated that this community was, in a sense, due to be exploited by outside organizations who have discovered that Springfield is a rich field for the promotion of musical interests.

* * *

[illegible] Koussevitzky [illegible] Boston Symphony [illegible] of our [illegible] musical [illegible]

* * *

It has already been noted that Adele Addison, young Springfield lyric soprano of more than ordinary promise, will again study at Tanglewood. In addition, Miss Frances Z. Kleinerman of 15 Meadowbrook Rd., Longmeadow, pianist, has also been accepted for study there this summer. Miss Kleinerman is a graduate of Classical High School and American International College. She also holds a degree of Bachelor of Music from the Juilliard Foundation, New York City.

* * *

[illegible] Stearns Ter. [illegible] National [illegible] Washington [illegible] summer at [illegible] High [illegible] Music [illegible] Hartford [illegible]

* * *

For the average concertgoer, the Berkshire Music Festival means the series of concerts held in the big shed at Tanglewood, but a good many may not know that 40 musical events will be held at the Lenox music center this summer, during the six weeks session of the school. They will start with the initial exercises on Sunday afternoon, July 4, and will include symphony concerts, choral and chamber music concerts on four successive Wednesday evenings, the gift of Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, and two by the Juilliard String Quartet.

[illegible] this column will list the Tanglewood concerts.

* * *

On July 7, in the theater at 8.15, there will be a Coolidge Chamber Music Concert, featuring Schubert's Quartet for flute, guitar, viola and violoncello, the Sonata for Arpeggione, and Winterreise. On July 10, the Juilliard String Quartet will play Bartok's third, second and fifth string quartets. This will also be at 8.15 in the theater.

* * *

At 8.15, on July 14, the Coolidge group will offer the Albeneri Trio in Schubert's Piano Trio in B-Flat, the Violin Sonata in A Major, and the Piano Trio in E-Flat. Saturday, July 17, same time, same place, the Juilliard Quartet: Bartok's fourth, first and sixth string quartets. July 21, the Boston String Quartet playing Schubert's String Quartet in D Minor (Death and the Maiden), the String Quartet Movement in C Minor, and the String Quintet in C Major.

* * *

On Wednesday, July 28, same time, same place, the Boston Conservatory String Quartet will present Schubert's String Quartet in A Minor, Quintet for Piano and Strings in A Major (Sometimes styled "The Trout") and the Octet for Wind and String Instruments in F Major. So much for the chamber music concerts. Along with these, and as a corollary to the Berkshire Festival symphonic Concerts will be Organ recitals by E. Power Biggs, a presentation of Rossini's "The Turk in Italy," by the opera department (in the theater at 8.15, Wednesday, Aug. 11) and concerts by the Festival chorus with Robert Shaw conducting.

* * *

To switch abruptly from one form of classics to another, this column recommends very highly the motion picture, "The Fugitive," currently at the Capitol Theater. It is not a pretty picture, nor is it entertaining, in the strict sense of the word. But then, tyranny and suffering are neither pretty nor entertaining subjects. But this Mexican-made film has the nigh gloss of realism, the presentation of an essentially simple problem in simple terms.

* * *

It deals with religious persecution, and, in fact, with all persecution of a physically weak but spiritually strong people by a militant minority. It had its counterpart in Germany; it is having an unhappy renascence in Russia. As a scenario, "The Fugitive" has its weak spots, and you will find them very quickly. One of them is the sudden impulse of Ward Bond, thief and murderer, who, without any visible motivation, gives up his own life to help the fleeing priest escape the governor's soldiers. And there are other places where the impetus fails to carry the conviction of high purpose which is the foundation of the picture.

* * *

But, with even the few shortcomings, it is a picture that carries this message: That man can break his neighbor's body, and drive the spirit into hiding, but that he can never completely quench the individual spark of mind and purpose. It richly outlines, in bold dramatic language, that even in its hour of physical defeat, the spirit still emerges the victor.

SPRINGFIELD FREE PRESS—SATURDAY,

JUNE 26, 1948

Music Center Opens July 4th

Forty musical events will be open, by invitation, to friends of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., during the six weeks session of the school. Starting with initial exercises Sunday afternoon, July 4, they will include symphony concerts, choral and chamber music concerts on four successive Wednesday evenings, gift of Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, and two by the Juilliard String Quartet.

The performances, excepting the Coolidge and Juilliard concerts, will be by students admitted to the school because of outstanding musical talent. Initiated in 1940 by Serge Koussevitzky, and founded by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the center is not a school for technical musical training, "but rather a place where provision is made for the study of music on an advanced level through experience in group performance." Dr. Koussevitzky states the purpose as "to give our students constructive advice and a practical method which will stimulate their gifts, round out their abilities gained during their years of study and broaden their acquaintance with musis."

With one or more events scheduled nearly every day, student performances will be under the direction of a distinguished faculty, directed by Dr. Koussevitzky, asssisted by Aaron Copland, composer. The major orchestra will be under Dr. Koussevitzky's personal diretcion, with Leonard Bernstein, first guest conductor at the Berkshire Festival, assisted by Eleazar deCarvalho, Brazilian conductor and members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. An orchestra in department V will be under Fredrick Fennell of the Eastman School of Mus Rochester, N. Y., and in the ope department under Mr. deCarvalho.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 10,963)

This Clipping From
GLENS FALLS, N. Y.
POST STAR

JUN 18 1948

Two concerts devoted to music by Bach and Mozart will open the 1948 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass., on the afternoon of July 18 and the evening of July 20. The programs, to be presented by Boston Symphony players under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, will be repeated July 25 and July 27.

The full Boston Symphony will play three series of three concerts each, as well as an extra Tchaikovsky program, in the 6,000-seat Music Shed. In addition to Mr. Koussevitzky, who will direct most of the concerts, three guest conductors will appear—Leonard Bernstein, Eleazar de Carvalho and Robert Shaw, who will conduct Debussy's Blessed Damozel and Brahms' Requiem Aug. 14.

The dates of the three series of concerts are: Series A, the evenings July 29, 31 and Sunday afternoon, Aug. 1; series B, Aug. 5, 7, and afternoon of Aug. 8; series C, Aug. 12, 14, and the afternoon of Aug. 15.

Soloists to be heard are Lukas Foss, Ralph Berkowitz and Bernard Zighera in Bach's concertos in D minor and C major for three pianos and strings (July 18, 27); Lukas Foss in Mozart's Piano Concerto in G major (K. No. 453), (July 20, 25); Isaac Stern, in Prokofieff's Violin Concerto No. 1, (July 31); Gregor Piatigorsky as violincello soloist in Strauss' Don Quixote on Aug. 7, and Samuel Lipkin on Aug. 10 in Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto No. 1.

Reserved seats may be secured by writing the Boston Symphony Orchestra, George Judd, manager, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (M. & E. 84,738)

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

JUN 18 1948

EIGHT SINGERS TO BE HEARD AT FESTIVAL

Young Artists Will Appear With Boston Symphony in Berkshire Program

Eight singers, 11 of them American born and trained, will appear as soloists at the Berkshire Festival this summer, Serge Koussevitzky, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has announced. Although young artists make up the entire list, all but one of them has sung before the Boston Symphony.

They are: Ellabella Davis, soprano; Ellen Faull, soprano; Frances Yeend, soprano; Eunice Alberts, contralto; Carol Brice, contralto, David Lloyd, tenor; and James Pease, bass baritone. The single newcomer is Nan Merriman, mezzo-soprano, who will be soloist with Miss Davis Sunday afternoon, Aug. 1, in the Mahler Symphony No. 2 ("Resurrection"), Leonard Bernstein conducting. The large chorus which the work calls for will be that of the Berkshire Music Center. Miss Davis sang in the Mahler Symphony with Mr. Bernstein in Boston last February.

Addy To Be Narrator

Wesley Addy, who has appeared in the Shakespearan production of Maurice Evans and with Katherine Cornell in "Antigone," will be the narrator in Stravinsky's "Oedipus" with the full orchestra, soloists and chorus on Thursday evening, Aug. 5, Dr. Koussevitzky conducting. The singers are Miss Brice, Mr. Lloyd, and Mr. Pease. The trio and Mr. Addy made a profound impression when Dr. Koussevitzky led Stravinsky's version of the Greek tragedy at two performances in Symphony Hall, Boston, last March.

Miss Brice, who was a Koussevitzky discovery, and was introduced at a meeting of the Friends of the Boston Syhphony Orchestra two years ago, will sing the passage for voice in Falla's "El Amor Brujo" Sunday afternoon, Aug. 8, under the direction of Eleazer de Carvalho.

At the concert which Robert Shaw will conduct on Saturday evening, Aug. 14, Miss Faull and Miss Alberts will be soloists in "The Blessed Damozel" of Debussy and Miss Yeend and Mr. Pease in the Brahms "Requiem." Miss Yeend, Miss Alberts, and Mr. Pease with Mr. Lloyd made up the quartet of soloists for the Beethoven Ninth Symphony at last year's Festival. Miss Faull was the soprano in the Beethoven Missa Solemis in Boston this season.

Already announced as soloists for the Berkshire Festival are Isaac Stern, violinists; Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist; and Seymour Lipkin, pianist. On Saturday evening, July 31, Mr. Stern will repeat, again under Koussevitzky's baton, the Prokofieff Concerto No. 1 which he played at his first appearanec with the orchestra in Boston last March. Piatigorsky, who has been soloist with the Boston Symphony on 25 previous occasions, two of them at Tanglewood, will be heard in Richard Strauss' tone poem "Don Quixote," Koussevitzky conducting. This was the work in which the distinguished 'cellist made his most recent appearance with the orchestra, in April of this year.

Seymour Lipkin's performance of the Piano Concerto No. 1 under Koussevitzky at the all—Tchaikowsky concert Tuesday evening, Aug. 10, will be both his Boston Symphony and Tanglewood debut. The 20-years-old Detroit pianist is this year's winner of the Rachmaninoff Fund Award.

The Festival begins with a Bach concert on Sunday afternoon, July 18, and a Mozart concert Tuesday evening, July 20, to be repeated, July 25 and July 27, all under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 49,564)

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

JUN 15 1948

Eight American Singers On Tanglewood Program

Schedule Taking Shape for Summer's Biggest Musical Event in Berkshires; Nan Merriman Only Vocal Newcomer

Eight singers, all of them American born and trained, will appear as soloists at the Berkshire Festival this summer, Serge Koussevitzky, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has announced. Although young artists make up the entire list, all but one of them has sung before with the Boston Symphony.

FRANCES YEEND

They are: Ellabelle Davis, soprano; Ellen Faull, soprano; Frances Yeend, soprano; Eunice Alberts, contralto; Carol Brice, contralto; David Lloyd, tenor; and James Pease, bass-baritone. The single newcomer to the Orchestra is Nan Merriman, mezzo-soprano, who will be soloist with Miss Davis Sunday afternoon, August 1, in the Mahler Symphony No. 2 ("Resurrection"), Leonard Bernstein conducting. The large chorus which the work calls for will be that of the Berkshire Music Center. Miss Davis sang in the Mahler Symphony with Mr. Bernstein in Boston last February.

Wesley Addy, who has appeared in the Shakespearean productions of Maurice Evans and with Katharine Cornell in "Antigone," will be the narrator in Stravinsky's "Oedipus" with the full orchestra, soloists and chorus on Thursday evening, August 5, Dr. Koussevitzky conducting. The singers are Miss Brice, Mr. Lloyd, and Mr. Pease. The trio and Mr. Aaddy made a profound impression when Dr. Koussevitzky led Stravinsky's version of the Greek tragedy at two performances in Symphony Hall, Boston, last March.

Koussevitzky Protege

Miss Brice, who was a Koussevitzky discovery and was introduced at a meeting of the Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra two years ago, will sing the passages for voice in Falla's "El Amor Brujo" Sunday afternoon, August 8, under the direction of Eleazar de Carvalho.

At the concert which Robert Shaw will conduct on Saturday evening, August 14, Miss Faull and Miss Alberts will be soloists in "The Blessed Damozel" of Debussy and Miss Yeend and Mr. Pease in the Brahms "Requiem." Miss Yeend, Miss Alberts, and Mr. Pease with Mr. Lloyd made up the quartet of soloists for the Beethopen Ninth Symphony at last year's Festival. Miss Faull was the soprano in the Beethoven Missa Solemnis in Boston this season.

Already announced as soloists for the 1948 Berkshire Festival are Isaac Stern, violinist; Gregor Piatiyorsky, 'cellist; and Seymour Lipkin, pianist. On Saturday evening, July 31, Mr. Stern will repeat, again under Koussevitzky's baton, the Prokofief Concerto, No. 1 which he played at his first appearance with the Orchestra in Boston last March. Piatigorsky, who has been soloist with the Boston Symphony on 25 previous occasions, two of them at Tanglewood, will be heard in Richard Strauss' tne poem "Don Quixote," Koussevitzky conducting. This was the work in which the distinguished 'cellist made his most recent appearance with the Orchestra, in April of this year.

Seymour Lipkin's performance of the Piano Concerto No. 1 under Koussevitzky at the all-Tchaikowsky concert Tuesday evening, August 10, will be both his Boston Symphony and Tanglewood debut. The 20-year-old Detroit pianist is this year's winner of the Rachmaninoff Fund Award.

The Festival begins with a Bach concert on Sunday afternoon, July 18, and a Mozart concert Tuesday evening, July 20, to be repeated, respectively, July 25 and July 27, all under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 33,028)

This Clipping From
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE

JUN 15 1948

Music Notes

By D. E. RITZ

Frederick Jagel, Metropolitan opera tenor, has been signed as assisting artist for the spring concert of the Thursday Musical Club. Dates for the coming season's concerts were set as Nov. 18 and April 7 at the recent meeting of the club's executive committee at the home of Mrs. F. David Schweizer, president. Fall rehearsals will start on Sept. 8, when the first will be held at the president's home at West Charlton.

Schenectady Choral Society members will be interested in the announcement of the Worcester (Mass.) Music Festival for Oct. 25 to 30. One of the choral selections to be presented by the 400-voice festival chorus will be Kodaly's "Psalmus Hungaricus."

From Symphony hall in Boston we receive the news that Rossini's "The Turk in Italy" will be presented Aug. 9 and 11 at the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood for the "Friends of the Berkshire Music Center." It will be given in English under the direction of Boris Goldovsky, head of the center opera department.

The work, which has been announced as having been "virtually lost for more than 100 years," was found in manuscript in a collection of scores which Major Henry L. Higginson, founder of the Boston Symphony, bought from the opera house in Palermo. The Higginson purchased manuscript has been stored for many years in three crates on the top floor of Symphony hall. Although Italy seems to be unable to yield a complete score, another partial orchestral score was found in the Brown Collection of the Public Library in Boston. Piano scores have been discovered in the Widener Library at Harvard and the library of the Harvard Musical Association.

"The Turk in Italy" was Rossini's 13th opera and was first produced at Milan in 1814. The Garcias brought it to America in 1826, but there is no record of any performance here after that time.

On the editorial page of the May "Musical America" under the title of "The Three B's, Public School Version" is an article worth thinking over. It concerns itself with the overbalance of band music presented at the Music Educators National Conference. The editor points out that:

"We have since heard educators from all parts of the country murmur in dissatisfaction about the too strong emphasis put on this branch of music in schools. Not only is it tiresome to many to listen to the brassy sounds hour after hour, but there is a broader significance in that string music seems to be neglected. We are told that conductors find string pickings mighty slim these days, that a good violinist to sit at any stand except the first is rarer than a first oboe used to be.

"The reasons for this condition are not far to seek. School authorities like the pomp and show of a big, blaring band on the football field, in the gymnasium and in convocations. It is a better 'service' instrument than an orchestra, which mainly depends on strings and more subtle effects.

"Children naturally like to tootle and blow, there can be no denying. But surely some of their talents might be channelled into bowing and plucking. Thus a happy balance might be restored to the group participation in school music, which is the backbone of musical education.

"The prevalence of band music today may also be due somewhat to the enterprise of instrument manufacturers and dealers, a large part of whose market is the public school. We would not wish a reform of the situation at their expense, but unless there is a wiser and more equable distribution of children's musical energies over a broader base, our symphony orchestras will eventually suffer."

BERKSHIRES AREA ONE OF TOP MASS. VACATION SPOTS

Fishing, Hiking, Scenery, Music, Historic Points of Interest Await Tourists in Western Part of State

Boston, June 19—The highlands of Western Massachusetts, only 125 miles from Boston, are rated by the Massachusetts Development and Industrial Commission as one of the state's top vacation spots for tourists interested in fishing, hiking, scenery, music and historical sites

2000 Miles of Roads

With almost 2000 miles of modern roads running through Berkshire county—from Williamstown, northern gateway to these highlands and home of Williams College, to Tolland's great forests in the south—the area offers a year-round variety of vacation possibilities.

The famed Boston Symphony Orchestra will again revisit Lenox, beginning July 18, to play for music-lovers from the world over at the Berkshire Festival. Held in the Music Shed on the spacious grounds of beautiful Tanglewood Estate, the Festival is rivaled only by the Berkshire Playhouse which attracts leading artists from Manhattan's stages during the summer months.

Native Soloists at Tanglewood

Eight singers, all American born and trained, will appear as soloists at the Berkshire Festival this summer, Serge Koussevitzky, Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has announced. Although young artists make up the list, all but one of them has sung before with the Boston Symphony.

They are Ellabelle Davis, soprano; Ellen Faull, soprano; Frances Yeend, soprano; Eunice Alberts, contralto; Carol Brice, contralto; David Lloyd, tenor; and James Pease, bass-baritone. The single newcomer to the orchestra is Nan Merriman, mezzo-soprano, who will be soloist with Miss Davis Sunday afternoon, Aug. 1, in the Mahler Symphony No. 2 ("Resurrection"), Leonard Bernstein conducting. The large chorus which the work calls for will be that of the Berkshire Music Center. Miss Davis sang in the Mahler Symphony with Mr. Bernstein in Boston last February.

* * *

Wesley Addy, who has appeared in the Shakespearean productions of Maurice Evans and with Katharine Cornell in "Antigone," will will be the narrator in Stravinsky's "Oedipus" with the full orchestra, soloists and chorus on Thursday evening, Aug. 5, Dr. Koussevitzky conducting. The singers are Miss Brice, Mr. Lloyd, and Mr. Pease. The trio and Mr. Addy assisted when Dr. Koussevitzky led Stravinsky's version of the Greek tragedy at two performances in Symphony Hall, Boston, last March.

Miss Brice, a Koussevitzky discovery who was introduced at a meeting of the Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra two years ago, will sing the passages for voice in Falla's "El Amor Brujo" Sunday afternoon, Aug. 8, under the direction of Eleazar de Carvalho.

At the concert which Robert Shaw will conduct on Saturday evening, Aug. 14, Miss Faull and Miss Alberts will be soloists in "The Blessed Damozel" of Debussy and Miss Yeend and Mr. Pease in the Brahms "Requiem." Miss Yeend, Miss Alberts, and Mr. Pease with Mr. Lloyd made up the quartet of soloists for the Beethoven Ninth Symphony at last year's Festival. Miss Faull was the soprano in the Beethoven Missa Solemnis in Boston this season.

* * *

Already announced as soloists for the 1948 Berkshire Festival are Isaac Stern, violinist; Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist; and Seymour Lipkin, pianist. On Saturday evening, July 31, Mr. Stern will repeat, again under Koussevitzky's baton, the Prokofiev Concerto No. 1, which he played at his first appearance with the orchestra in Boston last March. Piatigorsky, who has been soloist with the Boston Symphony on 25 previous occasions, two of them at Tanglewood, will be heard in Richard Strauss' tone poem, "Don Quixote," Koussevitzky conducting. This was the work in which the distinguished cellist made his most recent appearance with the orchestra, in April of this year.

Seymour Lipkin's performance of the Piano Concerto No. 1 under Koussevitzky at the all-Tchaikovsky concert Tuesday evening, Aug. 10, will be both his Boston Symphony and his Tanglewood debut. The 20-year Detroit pianist is this year's winner of the Rachmaninov Fund Award.

The festival begins with a Bach concert on Sunday afternoon, July 18, and a Mozart concert Tuesday evening, July 20, to be repeated, respectively, July 25 and July 27, all under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky.

'Oklahoma!' Fifth Week

A fifth week is being added to the current engagement of "Oklahoma!" at the Boston Opera House, carrying the booking up to Saturday, July 3. No more extensions of the run are possible, it is said, for the show is due to open an Atlantic City visit on July 5.

When the Opera House stay is concluded a total [illegible] weeks will have been spent in Boston by various "Oklahoma!" companies.

AMUSEMENTS

NEW YORK CITY

STADIUM CONCERTS
Lewisohn Stadium
Amsterdam Ave., 136 to 138th Sts.
PHILHARMONIC-SYMPHONY
FRITZ REINER, Conductor
MONDAY, JUNE 21, at 8:30
ISAAC STERN, Violin Soloist
WEDNESDAY, JUNE 23, at 8:30
FRANCES MAGNES, Violin Soloist
THURSDAY, JUNE 24, at 8:30
WILLIAM KAPELL, Piano Soloist
PRICES: (incl. Tax) 30c, 60c, $1.40, $2.00
Stadium Box Office. WA. 6-0600

NEW YORK (STAGE)

THE THEATRE GUILD presents
A NEW MUSICAL PLAY
ALLEGRO
Music by RICHARD RODGERS
Book & Lyrics by OSCAR HAMMERSTEIN 2d
Entire Production Staged by AGNES de MILLE
Air-Conditioned MAJESTIC THEATRE
44th St. W. of B'way. Evgs. 8:30—$6 to $1.20
Matinees Thurs. and Sat. 2:30—$3.60 to $1.20

"The marvellous and indestructible Hartmans . . . adding new multitudes of admirers to those who already consider them the funniest in the U. S.."
—John Beaufort, The Christian Science Monitor
THE HARTMANS & HANK LADD
in the Smash Musical Hit
ANGEL IN THE WINGS
CORONET W. 49th St. Eves. 8:30. Mats. Wed. & Sat.

CRITICS' PRIZE MUSICAL
"Tremendously exciting and enchanting."
—Atkinson, N. Y. Times
BRIGADOON
ZIEGFELD Theatre, 54th St. & 6th Ave. Eves. 8:30
Prices: Sun. thru Thur. $1.20-4.80; Fri. Sat. $1.20-$6
Mats. Sat. 2:30 and Sun. at 3. No Mon. Perf. Air Cond.

BROCK PEMBERTON presents
JAMES DUNN in Pulitzer Prize Play by MARY CHASE
HARVEY
Directed by ANTOINETTE PERRY
48TH ST. THEA. E. of B'y. Eves. 8:40—$1.20-4.20. Mats. Wed. & Sat. 2:40—$1.20-$3. Tax incl.
(Air-Conditioned)

"Nancy Walker is hilarious in a top-drawer Broadway show."—Atkinson, Times
NANCY WALKER in a New Musical Comedy

Springfield Republican
June 20

MUSICIANS

Eight American Singers Among Soloists Engaged for Berkshire Festival

Eight singers, all of them American born and trained, will appear as soloists at the Berkshire Festival this Summer. Although young artists make up the entire list, all but one of them has sung before with the Boston Symphony.

The are Ellabelle Davis, Ellen Faull and Frances Yeend, sopranos; Eunice Alberts and Carol Brice, contraltos; David Lloyd, tenor; and James Pease, bass-baritone. The single newcomer is Nan Merriman, mezzo-soprano, who will be soloist with Miss Davis Sunday afternoon, Aug. 1, in the Mahler Symphony No. 2 ("Resurrection,") Leonard Bernstein conducting. The large chorus which the work calls for will be that of Berkshire Music Center.

Wesley Addy, who has appeared in the Shakespearean productions of Maurice Evans and with Katharine Cornell in "Antigone," will be the narrator in Stravinsky's "Oedipus," Thursday evening, Aug. 5, Serge Koussevitzky conducting. The singers will be Miss Brice, Mr. Lloyd, and Mr. Pease.

Miss Brice will sing the passages for voice in Falla's "El Amor Brujo" Sunday afternoon, Aug. 8, under the direction of Eleazar de Carvalho.

At the concert which Robert Shaw will conduct, Saturday evening, Aug. 14, Miss Faull and Miss Alberts will be soloists in "The Blessed Damozel" of Debussy, and Miss Yeend and Mr. Pease in the Brahms Requiem.

Already announced as soloists for the 1948 Berkshire Festival are Isaac Stern, violinist; Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist, and Seymour Lipkin, pianist. On Saturday evening, July 31, Mr. Stern will repeat, again under Koussevitzky's baton, the Prokofieff Concerto No. 1 which he played at his first appearance with the orchestra in Boston last March. Piatigorsky, who has been soloist with the Boston Symphony on 25 previous occasions, two of them at Tanglewood, will be heard in Richard Strauss' tone poem, "Don Quixote," Koussevitzky conducting.

Seymour Lipkin's performance of the Piano Concerto No. 1 under Koussevitzky at the all-Tchaikowsky concert Tuesday evening, Aug. 10, will be both his Boston Symphony and Tanglewood debut. The 20-year-old Detroit pianist is this year's winner of the Rachmaninoff Fund Award.

The Festival begins with a Bach concert Sunday afternoon, July 18, and a Mozart concert Tuesday evening, July 20, to be repeated, respectively, July 25 and 27, all under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky.

SUNDAY HERALD JUNE 20, 1948

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR, BOSTON, SATURDAY, JUNE 19, 1948

AMERICAN SINGERS BERKSHIRE SOLOISTS

Eight singers, all of them American born and trained, will appear as soloists at the Berkshire Festival this summer, Serge Koussevitsky, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has announced. Although young artists make up the entire list, all but one of them has sung before with the Boston Symphony. They are:

Ellabelle Davis, soprano; Ellen Faull, soprano; Frances Yeend, soprano; Eunice Alberts, contralto; Carol Brice, contralto; David Lloyd, tenor; and James Pease, bass-baritone. The single newcomer is Nan Merriman, mezzo-soprano, who will be soloist with Miss Davis Sunday afternoon, August 1, in the Mahler Symphony No. 2 ("Resurrection"). Leonard Bernstein conducting. Miss Davis sang in the Mahler Symphony with Mr. Bernstein in Boston last February.

Wesley Addy, who has appeared in the Shakespearean productions of Maurice Evans and with Katharine Cornell in "Antigone," will be the narrator in Stravinsky's "Oedipus" with the full orchestra, soloists and chorus on Thursday evening, August 5, Dr. Koussevitsky conducting. Seymour Lipkin's performance of the Piano Concerto No. 1 under Koussevitsky at the all-Tchaikowsky concert Tuesday evening, August 10, will be both his Boston Symphony and Tanglewood debut. The 20-year old Detroit pianist is this year's winner of the Rachmaninoff Fund Award.

PM, SUNDAY, JUNE 20, 1

Music in America

Engage 8 Young Singers For Berkshire Fstival

Eight singers, all of them American born and trained, will appear as soloists at the Berkshire Festival this summer, Serge Koussevitzky, music director of the Boston Symphony, has announced. Although young artists make up the entire list, all but one of them was previously sung with the Boston Symphony.

The roster includes Ellabelle Davis, soprano; Ellen Faull, soprano; Frances Yeend, soprano; Eunice Alberts, contralto; Carol Brice, contralto; David Lloyd, tenor, and James Pease, bass-baritone. The single newcomer to the orchestra is Nan Merriman, mezzo-soprano, who will be co-soloist with Miss Brice Sunday afternoon, Aug. 1, in Mahler's Resurrection Symphony, Leonard Bernstein conducting. The large chorus which the work calls for will be that of the Berkshire Music Center.

Wesley Addy, who has appeared in the Shakespearean production of Maurice Evans and with Katharine Cornell in Antigone, will be the narrator in Stravinsky's Oedipus Rex, with full orchestra, soloists and chorus under the baton of Dr. Koussevitzky, on Thursday evening, Aug. 5. The singers are Miss Brice, Mr. Lloyd and Mr. Pease.

Miss Brice, who was a Kouusevitzky discovery and was introduced at a meeting of the Friends of the Boston Symphony two years ago, will sing the passages for voice in Falla's El Amor Brujo on Sunday afternoon, Aug. 8, under the direction of Eleazar de Carvalho.

At the concert which Robert Shaw will conduct on Saturday evening, Aug. 14, Miss Faull and Miss Alberts will be heard in The Blessed Damozel of Debussy, and Miss Yeend and Mr. Pease in the Brahms Requiem.

Soloists already announced for the 1948 Berkshire Festival are Isaac Stern, violinist, in the Prokofiev Concerto No. 1, on July 31; Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist, in Strauss' Don Quixote, on Aug. 7, and Seymour Lipkin, 20-year-old Detroit pianist, who will make his Tanglewood debut under Dr. Koussevitzky in Tchaikowsky's Concerto No. 1, in the special all-Tchaikowsky concert on Aug. 10.

The Festival begins in the Theater-Concert Hall at Tanglewood with a Bach concert on Sunday afternoon, July 18, and a Mozart concert on Tuesday evening, July 20, to be repeated, respectively, July 25 and 27—all under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky.

For information about tickets, etc., address the Berkshire Festival office, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

RKO PALACE B'WAY & 47th ST. LATE SHOWS EVERY NIGHT
NOW PLAYING
DANA ANDREWS · GENE TIERNEY 'THE IRON CURTAIN'
JOE E. BROWN "THE TENDER YEARS"
EXTRA! GRAZIANO vs ZALE FIGHT PICTURES

RKO TODAY
MANHATTAN
COLISEUM
HAMILTON
23rd STREET
58th STREET
81st STREET
86th STREET
125th STREET
REGENT
ALHAMBRA
COLONIAL
BRONX
FORDHAM
CHESTER
FRANKLIN
ROYAL PELHAM
CASTLE HILL MARBLE HILL WESTCHESTER
MT. VERNON
NEW ROCH.
"IT'S A CORKER" says WINCHELL
DANA ANDREWS
GENE TIERNEY
'THE IRON CURTAIN' and 2nd feature
'The TENDER YEARS'
JOE E. BROWN

Clark to Croo

By Aline Mosby

HOLLYWOOD, June 18 —Buddy Clark, the crooner a deep, dark Hollywood day: some of the movie stars borrow somebody else's pipes.

Offstag guy for t tr

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 13,848)

This Clipping From
NEW ROCHELLE, N. Y.
STANDARD STAR

JUN 19 1948

ELLABELLE DAVIS TO JOIN FESTIVAL

Miss Ellabelle Davis of 89 Horton Avenue, noted soprano who has just returned from a triumphal tour of Europe, will be one of eight American born and trained singers who will appear as soloists at the Berkshire Festival this Summer, Serge Koussevitzky, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra announced today.

Miss Davis and Nan Merriman, mezzo-soprano, will be soloists Sunday afternoon, Aug. 1 in the Mahler Symphony No. 2 ("Resurrection"), Leonard Bernstein conducting. The Berkshire Music Center Chorus will be heard in the work.

THE ORI
ROM
PRESS CI
220 W. 19th St., NE
Tel. CHel
Cir. (D

This Clipping From
MONTREAL, CANADA
GAZETTE

JUN 19 1948

Berkshire Festival Is to Include Rare Rossini Opera Production

A Rossini work, virtually lost for more than 100 years, will be this summer's operatic production at the Berkshire Music Centre, Boris Goldovsky, head of the opera department of the school, has announced. The Turk in Italy, in English for the first time on record and with a newly revised libretto, will be presented in the Theatre-Concert Hall at Tanglewood, the evenings of August 9 and 11 during the final week of the Berkshire Festival.

This year's festival begins on July 18 with the Bach-Mozart series conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and continues through August 15. In addition to the opening series, there will be 11 concerts by the full Boston Symphony.

As with the American premiere of Peter Grimes, the first American performances of Mozart's Idomeneo and other previous opera productions at the Berkshire Music Centre, The Turk in Italy will be performed for Friends of the Berkshire Music Centre only.

This season's novelty was suggested by Helmuth Wolfes, conductor and coach and a brother of Felix Wolfes of the Berkshire Music Centre faculty, who was doing some research on the Rossini comedy. Mr. Wolfes is supplying orchestrations where they are absent from existing scores. Mr. Goldovsky himself is responsible for the revised text.

Mr. Goldovsky's account of his pursuit of The Turk in Italy is almost as good as a detective story. A manuscript copy was found in a collection of scores which Major Henry L. Higginson, founder of the Boston Symphony Orchestra bought from the opera house in Palermo and which have reposed for years stored in three crates in the top floor of Symphony Hall. Where Italy itself seems unable to yield a complete score, another partial orchestral score turned up in Boston, in the Brown Collection of the Public Library. Piano scores were discovered in the Widener Library at Harvard and the library of the Harvard Musical Association.

Rossini himself was very free with The Turk in Italy, Mr. Goldovsky found. Arias and concerted numbers were shifted about, appearing in one version where they were absent from others and even turning up in later Rossini operas. Antedating The Barber of Seville by three years, The Turk in Italy was Rossini's 13th opera and was first produced in 1814 at Milan. The Garcias brought it to America in 1826, but there is no record of any performance here after that time.

of comedy which is all his own. Jack Wallace comes to Montreal for his first visit and will be long-remembered for his hilarious antics

Carlton and Karrell, who have played the better hotels of America, will come direct from the Capitol City of Washington, with their act of classical and semi-classical music on the violin and piano accordian.

The Gibsons' act, which has been acclaimed as "a thrill if there ever was one" in the art of knife-throwing, will do their blood-curdling feats which must be seen to be appreciated.

Larry Lazar, a young man always in demand at booking offices, will sing songs in his own peculiar manner. Ray Riggs, the harmonica virtuoso, and George Rowland, the novelty juggler, will round out this bill, with Len Howard and his boys playing the musical accompaniment.

[132]

Berkshire Hills in Western Massachusetts Are Beautiful

Over 70,000 Acres of State Forests In the Area; Miles of Modern Roads

The highlands of western Massachusetts, only 125 miles from Boston, are rated by the Massachusetts Development and Industrial Commission as one of the state's top vacation spots for tourists interested in fishing, hiking, scenery, music and historical sites.

With almost 2000 miles of modern roads running through Berkshire County—from Williamstown, northern gateway to these highlands and home of Williams College, to Tolland's great state forests in the south—the area offers a year-round variety of vacation possibilities.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will again revisit Lenox beginning July 18 to play for music lovers from the world over at the Berkshire Festival. Held in the Music Shed on the spacious grounds of beautiful Tanglewood Estate, the festival is rivaled only by the Berkshire Playhouse which attracts leading artists from Manhattan's stages during the summer months.

Over 70,000 acres of state forests, ideal for picnicking, hiking, fishing and camping, are available to vacationers who prefer roughing it. For those desiring hotel accommodations, the Berkshire Hills Conference has accredited more than 50 hotels located throughout the countryside.

At the highest point in the state, Mount Greylock, stands a beacon, erected to the memory of Massachusetts men who lost their lives in the first World War, which can be seen from five neighboring states.

Great Barrington, with the brooks of Bish Bash State Forest nearby, is the business and shopping center of the Southern Berkshires. Here, too, may be found the spot on the village green where the British first encountered armed resistance by the colonies in the early days of the Republic.

The Mohawk Trail—old marching route of the Canadian Indian tribes who marauded the first colonizers of the western part of the state—follows some of the finest timber land in the Commonwealth. Bathing facilities, picnic sites and camping grounds make a leisurely trip through the northwestern section of the county a visit to be remembered.

So whether it be fishing for brook trout in Bish Bash State Forest, motoring along the Mohawk Trail, hiking up Mount Greylock, or whiling away the hours in the pleasant country inns of Sheffield, Great Barrington, or Pittsfield—follow the tradition of early Americans and explore Massachusetts. Discover the Berkshires, western playground of the Commonwealth.

Cut Excursion Rates To Latin America

Travelers in Boston and in more than seventy other cities served by Eastern Air Lines now benefit from sharp fare reductions on circle trips made in conjunction with Pan American Airways to international points via the company's five Latin American "gateways," Miami, New Orleans, Houston, Corpus Christi and Brownsville. The new rates mark a reduction of 25 per cent. below the standard fares involved.

The new excursion fares apply only on travel to and from Mexico, Central and South America and the West Indies when the entire itinerary is purchased in advance. Thus, a local traveler may take advantage of the new fares on any circle trip made to Latin America via Miami, New Orleans, Houston, Corpus Christi or Brownsville; and may return by any combination of these "gateways." The tariff has a 21-day limit and will expire August 31st.

"The new circle-trip fares," said Captain Eddie Rickenbacker, president and general manager of Eastern Air Lines, "will permit the vacationist an opportunity to visit Latin America at the lowest rates in the history of scheduled air transportation. Further, the 21-day limit on such trips will permit the traveler to include three week-ends in a two-weeks' vacation program."

Boston Herald. June 20.

8—The Berkshire Evening Eagle, Thursday, July 1, 1948

Tanglewood Belongs to World, Koussevitzky Tells Committee

LENOX — Tanglewood belongs to the world and the Berkshire Festival is "the greatest musical event in the world today," Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and director of the Berkshire Music Center, said yesterday at the annual luncheon meeting of the Tanglewood advisory committee and staff at the Curtis Hotel.

"If we ask objectively to whom Tanglewood belongs," Dr. Koussevitzky told the 56 guests, "we must answer, 'To the world.' Morally, you will excuse me, it belongs to me. By destiny it belongs to the Boston Symphony Orchestra."

Picking up one of the calendars of the season from the table, he said: "Every day there is something. If you will look at Salzburg and the other festivals, you will not find anything like this."

Other speakers were Miss Irene Poirier, librarian of the Lenox Library; Paul W. Foster, public relations director of the Berkshire Hills Conference; Stuart C. Henry, curator of the Berkshire Museum; and George W. Edman, former managing editor of The Berkshire Evening Eagle and now first secretary of the U.S. embassy in Athens.

Edman Praised

George E. Judd, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, presided; he paid tribute to Mr. Edman's contribution to the Berkshire Festival. Mr. Edman turned the compliment to Dr. Koussevitzky. "Many people worked at Tanglewood and were responsible for it," he said, "but they needed the inspiration of the great maestro."

Miss Poirier invited students and staff to use the facilities of the Lenox Library where the Monday night student forums were held last summer, and she called attention to the outdoor reading park open this summer.

Rooms Secured for 800

The Berkshire Hills Conference has secured housing accommodations thus far for 800 music lovers who will attend the festival this season, reported Mr. Foster. "You say you are grateful to the Conference," he said; "we are grateful to the festival."

Mr. Henry called attention to the exhibits at the Berkshire Museum, particularly that of the works of Ivan Mestrovich, scheduled for later this summer. The sculptor will teach there as a member of the summer faculty of the Boston Museum of Fine Arts.

"Actually, it is only a part of our staff we have here today," Mr. Judd said. "There isn't a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra here yet. Our students don't start coming in until registration begins tomorrow. And I don't think we should forget the public. They work for us."

Members of the Tanglewood advisory committee in addition to Mr. Edman and Mr. Judd who attended the luncheon were Alan J. Blau of Pittsfield, Henry W. Dwight of Stockbridge, Lawrence K. Miller of Pittsfield, James T. Owens of Lee, Lester Roberts of Lenox and Robert K. Wheeler of Great Barrington.

Miss Colagiacomo Engaged to Navy Veteran with their refreshing individuality

The Berkshire Evening Eagle, Thursday, July 1, 1948—5

REHEARSING FOR CONCERT: The Juilliard String Quartet will give a pair of concerts of the works of Bela Bartok in the Theatre-Concert Hall at Tanglewood Saturday evening, July 10, and Saturday, evening, July 17. The two programs together will cover all six quartets of the Hungarian master, his entire output in this form. The events are open to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

Clapp Park Area Viewed by

W. R. Tooker Joins Staff of

Leon Hazelton Dies in Becket

Entertainment In Our Own Back Yard

This spring, as in every other spring, the News-Republican has devoted many columns of news to the reappearance and plans of the cultural and entertainment enterprises in our midst. After a snowbound and gruelling winter, it seems a great privilege to know that we, in this rural area, can take advantage of music, drama and dance performances that are among the greatest in our country. Because of our proximity to the Berkshires, which have become the great summer cultural colony of the east, we are able to see and hear artists whom others living in outlying areas must travel long distances, and go to great expense, ever to witness.

Before the founding of the Tanglewood colony, where the great Boston Symphony Orchestra takes up its summer residence, an unequalled luster was attached to the Salzburg Music Festival in Austria. Many Americans made it their summer goal, crossing the ocean and spending great sums of money to attend this outstanding European musical event. Since the founding of Tanglewood, fostered so generously by Serge Koussevitzky, there are many music lovers who claim now that the American summer music festival has eclipsed the Salzburg gatherings. It has drawn the musical great not only of America, but every country of the world. It has also introduced many new musicians, who have since become famous, and brought the works of young composers to the public for premier hearings.

Music Mountain, in Falls Village, Connecticut, has also served the public not only in enjoyable evenings, of chamber music but in bringing new works to them. In this country, where serious music is so lightly treated, many composers live out their entire life without once hearing their works performed. While "pop" songs, and tunes from Broadway shows earn their composers fame and fortune, serious music is heartbreakingly unrewarding to its authors. It's a gratifying and wonderful thing to know that the summer musical colonies feel a responsibility to the newcomers in their ranks. By presenting new works, they are giving sorely needed impetus to the dull pulse of American interest in serious music.

Although music and drama were the forerunners of the cultural movement to the Berkshires, dance has also taken its place The Jacob's Pillow Festival is becoming known for its school and performances, and its progress in new forms of the dance. Many of the dancers who take part in the summer recitals have won critical acclaim on Broadway during the winter.

There are many other groups of entertainers, notable among them the summer theatres. The Stockbridge group is as talented and competent as anything seen on Broadway, and New York state too has its theatre with the Starlight players in Pawling, and there is of course the inimitable Pitchfork Playhouse in Sharon. In the schedules announced for the coming season, they have all included tryouts of new dramas.

The criticism has often been leveled at the United States that all serious drama, and too much of our music, centers solely around Broadway and New York City. In most European countries the theatre is competently represented in every major city, and the best in drama is available for people living in the equivalents of our Cincinnati, St. Louis, Kansas City, Des Moines or San Antonio etc. There is no onus attached to playing in cities other than the nation's capitol, and well known stars willingly accept engagements in what Americans disparagingly term the "provinces". The result, of course for these countries, is a better appreciation of drama, and greater opportunities for the theatre to grow and progress than in our highly centralized "Broadway" system. They have avoided the escapist clap-trap that forms the greater part of American entertainment by taking their art to all parts of the country, instead of just one city, and educating their countrymen to appreciate the best.

One of the greatest cultural strides made in our country since the First World War has been the growth

THE NEWS-REPUBLICAN, JUNE 24, 1948

to be built tha hard to find a and who relig.

Last yea
estimated and man living a f
that spring.
died. No repl owners started found these pl had practically
That is, wet e mained, then a
at the end of t
these peddlers
as:—"So and S them all after I rather than car
Right here is beautiful tree w
(A reliable gard line. Home ow has run over w stuck with prett

About six
the salesman ga
are, my friends,
pleasant is it?

Watch ou
nothing but a tr
stock may have only because the home. In nine nursery or was s for new propaga

'Tis a gre gets away with

Don't let

"If yo
E. J. Beach, I

Letter T

The News-Republ
Dear Mr. Hage:

I have once
editorial "Is C Answer" in the
and must thank this situation to your readers.

Any American
that militarism in not belong in a we must have a conditions seem us offer sufficient secure a good th
teer army at dece
under decent livi

It will be argu
salaries may me
costs, but I doub
cost would equal required to insta boards across th
all phases of pc
gery, plus maint
ial police for "A.
which there wil
time of peace, no
this will be an a

The old adag
horse to water s

The volunteer
much better pupi
lects his vocation
ed in its future policeman, firema employee.

Congress is no
of child birth or which we all kno none because it hodgepodge.

---

have the item called

Hartford Times

Berkshire Reaches Largest Enrollment

With an enrollment of 445 students, 28 more than last year and the largest in its history, the Berkshire Music Center will begin its sixth season at exercises in the Theater-Concert Hall at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., next Sunday afternoon, July 4, at 3:30.

The students come from 42 states and 13 foreign countries. Of the 262 men students, 111 are former GI's.

Speakers will be Serge Koussevitzky, founder and director of the school; Aaron Copland, assistant director; and Dr. Lewis Perry, chairman of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, who will also represent the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The audience at this first event at Tanglewood this summer will see a number of improvements and additions to the 200-acre estate between Lenox and Stockbridge. A reception and exhibition room is being erected to the right of the main entrance. Entirely plate glass front and back, the room is 15 feet high and its roof spreads over the gate, bringing the offices to the left into one harmonious unit. The new building will also house the school book and music store.

* * *

OF HIGHLY functional design, the new building is the work of Saarinen and Saarinen and Associates, Bloomfield Hills, Mich., architects of the Theater-Concert Hall and Chamber Music Hall at Tanglewood. Use of slender supporting columns of steel gives the new construction the same lightness which makes the Music Shed and other buildings at Tanglewood memorable architectural achievements.

The Music Shed, which accommodates 6,000 persons at the Festival concerts, is getting a new roof. The great wedge-shaped expanse covers nearly an acre and a half and the new roofing material weighs approximately four pounds per square foot.

Refreshment facilities have been considerably enlarged. Portable booths, making special bills of fare easily accessible, will be ready when the Festival begins with the first of the Bach-Mozart concerts July 18.

The school has a number of new tudios, including three in the Red Cottage which the National Fed- ration of Music Clubs has rebuilt n the site and in exact reproduc- ion of the little house where Hawthorne wrote "Tanglewood ales" and "The House of Seven ables." The Center has also ased the adjoining estate for- erly owned by the Drake family d 50 men students will be oused there.

The first concert in the Music ed will be given Thursday eve- ng, July 29.

NEW YORK—The old familiar cry of "stop those Boston Red Sox" is being heard once again around the American League.

During the past month this has been the most Herculean task in baseball. Paced by Ted Williams and Vern Stephens at the plate and Joe Dobson and Dave (Boo) Ferriss on the mound, the Red Hot Sox have knocked off every kind of opposition to leap right back into the pennant schamble.

Today, with 17 victories in 22 starts during the month of June, the Sox are firmly entrenched in the first division only 5½ games behind the pace-setting Cleveland Indians. This easily has been the best June showing of any club in the circuit.

In four weeks, the Red Sox have gained five full games on the Indians, and six on the second place Philadelphia Athletics. Joe McCarthy's Climbers also have gained three games on the third place New York Yankees despite the Bronx Bombers' .615 pace this month.

The Red Sox moved another full game nearer the top yesterday when they swept a double-header from the Browns, 2-0 and 6-3, in St. Louis. The twin triumph gave the Red Sox a record of nine victories in their last 11 games. Yesterday's second game was li to seven innings

The Berkshire Evening E

Entertainment In Our Own Back Yard

This spring, as in every other spring, the News-Republican has devoted many columns of news to the reappearance and plans of the cultural and entertainment enterprises in our midst. After a snowbound and gruelling winter, it seems a great privilege to know that we, in this rural area, can take advantage of music, drama and dance performances that are among the greatest in our country. Because of our proximity to the Berkshires, which have become the great summer cultural colony of the east, we are able to see and hear artists whom others living in outlying areas must travel long distances, and go to great expense, ever to witness.

Before the founding of the Tanglewood colony, where the great Boston Symphony Orchestra takes up its summer residence, an unequalled luster was attached to the Salzburg Music Festival in Austria. Many Americans made it their summer goal, crossing the ocean and spending great sums of money to attend this outstanding European musical event. Since the founding of Tanglewood, fostered so generously by Serge Koussevitzky, there are many music lovers who claim now that the American summer music festival has eclipsed the Salzburg gatherings. It has drawn the musical great not only of America, but every country of the world. It has also introduced many new musicians, who have since become famous, and brought the works of young composers to the public for premier hearings.

Music Mountain, in Falls Village, Connecticut, has also served the public not only in enjoyable evenings, of chamber music but in bringing new works to them. In this country, where serious music is so lightly treated, many composers live out their entire life without once hearing their works performed. While "pop" songs, and tunes from Broadway shows earn their composers fame and fortune, serious music is heartbreakingly unrewarding to its authors. It's a gratifying and wonderful thing to know that the summer musical colonies feel a responsibility to the newcomers in their ranks. By presenting new works, they are giving sorely needed impetus to the dull pulse of American interest in serious music.

Although music and drama were the forerunners of the cultural movement to the Berkshires, dance has also taken its place The Jacob's Pillow Festival is becoming known for its school and performances, and its progress in new forms of the dance. Many of the dancers who take part in the summer recitals have won critical acclaim on Broadway during the winter.

There are many other groups of entertainers, notable among them the summer theatres. The Stockbridge group is as talented and competent as anything seen on Broadway, and New York state too has its theatre with the Starlight players in Pawling, and there is of course the inimitable Pitchfork Playhouse in Sharon. In the schedules announced for the coming season, they have all included tryouts of new dramas.

The criticism has often been leveled at the United States that all serious drama, and too much of our music, centers solely around Broadway and New York City. In most European countries the theatre is competently represented in every major city, and the best in drama is available for people living in the equivalents of our Cincinnati, St. Louis, Kansas City, Des Moines or San Antonio etc. There is no onus attached to playing in cities other than the nation's capitol, and well known stars willingly accept engagements in what Americans disparagingly term the "provinces". The result, of course for these countries, is a better appreciation of drama, and greater opportunities for the theatre to grow and progress than in our highly centralized "Broadway" system. They have avoided the escapist clap-trap that forms the greater part of American entertainment by taking their art to all parts of the country, instead of just one city, and educating their countrymen to appreciate the best.

One of the greatest cultural strides made in our country since the First World War has been the growth

THE NEWS-REPUBLICAN, JUNE 24, 1948

to be built tha
hard to find a
and who relig

Last yea
estimated and man living a f
that spring.
died. No repl
owners started found these pl
had practically
That is, wet e
mained, then a
at the end of t
these peddlers
as:—"So and S them all after I rather than car
Right here is beautiful tree w
(A reliable gard line. Home ow has run over w
stuck with prett

About six
the salesman ga
are, my friends,
pleasant is it?

Watch ou
nothing but a tr
stock may have only because the home. In nine nursery or was s
for new propaga

'Tis a gre
gets away with

Don't let

"If yo
E. J. Beach, I

Letter T

The News-Republ
Dear Mr. Hage:

I have once r
editorial "Is C Answer" in the
and must thank this situation to your readers.

Any American
that militarism in not belong in a we must have a conditions seem us offer sufficient secure a good th
teer army at dece
under decent livi
It will be argu
salaries may me
costs, but I doub
cost would equal required to insta boards across th
all phases of pc
gery, plus maint
ial police for "A.
which there wil
time of peace, no
this will be an a
The old adag
horse to water s
The volunteer
much better pupi
lects his vocation
ed in its future policeman, firema
employee.

Congress is no
of child birth or which we all kno none because it hedgepedge.

---

have the item called

Hartford Times

Berkshire Reaches Largest Enrollment

JUN 28 1948

With an enrollment of 445 students, 28 more than last year and the largest in its history, the Berkshire Music Center will begin its sixth season at exercises in the Theater-Concert Hall at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., next Sunday afternoon, July 4, at 3:30.

The students come from 42 states and 13 foreign countries. Of the 262 men students, 111 are former GI's.

Speakers will be Serge Koussevitzky, founder and director of the school; Aaron Copland, assistant director; and Dr. Lewis Perry, chairman of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, who will also represent the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The audience at this first event at Tanglewood this summer will see a number of improvements and additions to the 200-acre estate between Lenox and Stockbridge. A reception and exhibition room is being erected to the right of the main entrance. Entirely plate glass front and back, the room is 15 feet high and its roof spreads over the gate, bringing the offices to the left into one harmonious unit. The new building will also house the school book and music store.

* * *

OF HIGHLY functional design, the new building is the work of Saarinen and Saarinen and Associates, Bloomfield Hills, Mich., architects of the Theater-Concert Hall and Chamber Music Hall at Tanglewood. Use of slender supporting columns of steel gives the new construction the same lightness which makes the Music Shed and other buildings at Tanglewood memorable architectural achievements.

The Music Shed, which accommodates 6,000 persons at the Festival concerts, is getting a new roof. The great wedge-shaped expanse covers nearly an acre and a half, and the new roofing material weighs approximately four pounds per square foot.

Refreshment facilities have been considerably enlarged. Portable booths, making special bills of fare easily accessible, will be ready when the Festival begins with the first of the Bach-Mozart concerts July 18.

The school has a number of new studios, including three in the Red Cottage which the National Federation of Music Clubs has rebuilt on the site and in exact reproduction of the little house where Hawthorne wrote "Tanglewood Tales" and "The House of Seven Gables." The Center has also leased the adjoining estate formerly owned by the Drake family and 50 men students will be housed there.

The first concert in the Music Shed will be given Thursday evening, July 29.

NEW YORK—The old familiar cry of "stop those Boston Red Sox" is being heard once again around the American League.

During the past month this has been the most Herculean task in baseball. Paced by Ted Williams and Vern Stephens at the plate and Joe Dobson and Dave (Boo) Ferriss on the mound, the Red Hot Sox have knocked off every kind of opposition to leap right back into the pennant schamble.

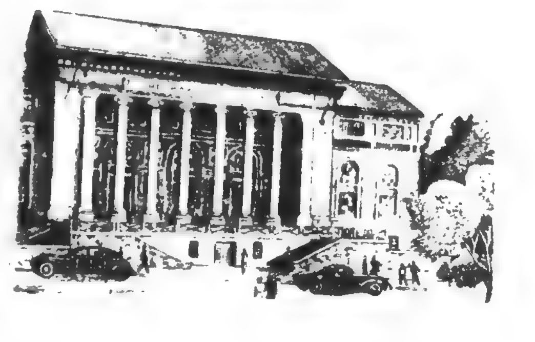
Today, with 17 victories in 22 starts during the month of June, the Sox are firmly entrenched in the first division only 5½ games behind the pace-setting Cleveland Indians. This easily has been the best June showing of any club in the circuit.

In four weeks, the Red Sox have gained five full games on the Indians, and six on the second place Philadelphia Athletics. Joe McCarthy's Climbers also have gained three games on the third place New York Yankees despite the Bronx Bombers' .615 pace this month.

The Red Sox moved another full game nearer the top yesterday when they swept a double-header from the Browns, 2-0 and 6-3, in St. Louis. The twin triumph gave the Red Sox a record of nine victories in their last 11 games. Yesterday's second game was [illegible] to seven innings [illegible]

The [illegible] Evening E[illegible]

The Hartford Time



A clipping of an article that appeared in to-day's issue of The I Times is attached. Because of your interest in the subject y wish to have the item called to your attention.

The Hartford Tim

Music by Commission Is Koussevitzky's Way

—By CARL E. LINDSTROM—

TANGLEWOOD is more than a summer concert series; Berkshire Music Center is more than a summer school; Koussevitzky is more than just a conductor. The ramifications of his genius are so widespread that it is difficult to take account of them all at once.

We have heard the name Koussevitsky Music Foundation without realizing the extent of its accomplishments in a scant six years since its establishment. It has already commissioned 28 compositions of which 11 are symphonies, three are other works for orchestra, three are opera and six are chamber music compositions.

Here's the list:

Berezowsky's Symphony No. 4, Benjamin Britten's "Peter Grimes," Samuel Barber (an opera in preparation); Martinu's Symphony No. 3, Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra, Stravinsky's "Ode," William Schuman's Symphony for Strings, William Bergsma's String Quartet No. 2, Robert Palmer's String Quartet, Milhaud's Symphony No. 2, Aaron Copland's Symphony No. 3. Nicolai Lopatnikoff's Concertino for Orchestra, Burrill Phillips' "Tom Paine" Overture for Orchestra, Olivier Messiaen (Symphony in preparation), Villa-Lobos' "Madonna," Howard Hanson (Piano Concerto in preparation), Lukas Foss' Capriccio for Violincello and Piano, Alexei Haieff's Ecologue for Violoncello and Piano, David Diamond's Symphony No. 4, Harold Shapero's Symphony, Nicolai Nabokov's "The Return of Pushkin" for Soprano and Orchestra, Walter Piston's Symphony No. 3, Marc Blitzstein's "The Little Foxes" (an opera in preparation), Roy Harris' Symphony (in preparation), Malipiero's Symphony No. 4, Schoenberg, a composition for symphony orchestra, Blas Galindo and Earl George, compositions for one instrument and piano.

* * *

SUMMER CONCERTS are getting under way everywhere. It has never been my privilege to be in Washington during the Watergate concerts but a first-hand report comes to hand from John Crockett who once wrote for this paper and is now resident in Washington. He writes:

"The Watergate concerts here are quite unique. A huge barge has been pulled up the Potomac and is tied to a few stakes near the Lincoln Memorial. Gaily got-up, it is painted red and white, bedecked with shrubberies, flowers, flags. A huge stage, about 80 feet long and 40 feet deep, occupies the major part of it, with balconies to either sides and dressing rooms and back-stage equipment to the rear. A little bridge connects it with the land.

"On this strange flatboat are performed the major musical events in Washington during the hot summer. The audience sits either on the reserved folding seats on the highway where the traffic has been detoured, or brings a pillow and sits on the concrete steps along the embankment of the river which form a kind of amphitheater.

"The season began June 17 with performances of 'Cavalleria Rusticana' and 'Pagliacci' by the Chicago Opera Company, which moved onto the boat for three nights of music drama. 'Carmen' and 'Madame Butterfly' were given on the weekend.

"'Sold-out' can hardly convey a description of the attendance at these Watergate concerts. Each seat is taken, and for a quarter mile along the river just north of Key Bridge, the population of the Capitol lolls on the grassy banks. A more poetic setting for summer cannot be imagined. Even the huge shed at Tanglewood, the Lewisohn Stadium in New York, the Esplanade Shell in Boston or the Bowl in Hollywood have none of the intimacy and romance of this festival.

"Perhaps it is the dark background of the water that enhances the music, or the flickering lights, the bridge over which the musicians carry their instruments like fishermen in a Japanese print, the unusual quiet, or the shape of familiar landmarks seen under the stars. In such a setting, Elda Ercole is really 'Butterfly' and Martha Lipton 'Carmen,' and one won't forget them.

"After the opening weekend of opera, Howard Mitchell, associate conductor of the National Symphony, returns to the barge podium to conduct the three series of symphonic music.

"Dorothy Maynor opens the Sunday evening program with a recital of American songs on the Fourth of July. Subsequent programs will be devoted to all Tschaikowsky, Rachmaninoff and Wagner.

"Albert Spaulding, Todd Duncan, and Claudia Arrau are soloists with the symphony orchestra on Wednesday evenings.

"The Friday evenings are given over to music of a less serious nature. There will be the annual Gershwin program, with Sidney Foster playing Rhapsody in Blue, and Agnes Davis and Harold Ronk singing excerpts from Porgy and Bess. An evening of ballet conducted by Franz Allers will present Nora Kaye and Igor Youskevitch in scenes from famous ballets.

"The final concert will be on July 30, bringing to conclusion the most elaborate summer the bedizened old barge has known.

"One thinks of Hartford and the Connecticut River and the possibility of doing the same thing there. ANYBODY GOT AN OLD BARGE?"

* * *

MUSIC MOUNTAIN, don't forget, begins its season tomorrow afternoon at 4 o'clock. The program has been announced as follows: Haydn Quartet, Op. 76, No. 1; Debussy Quartet, Op 10; Beethoven Quartet, Op. 95.

15 from State To Attend Berkshire

Fifteen Connecticut students are participating in the Berkshire Music Center classes this summer. Students from Hartford are Biruta M. Ramoska of 33 Hamilton St. and Alexander Ogilby of 15 Woodside Circle. Miss Ramoska will study in the opera department under Boris Goldovsky. Mr. Ogilby will sing with the chorus.

Other Connecticut students are: William Skelton, Joan Brainerd, Parke Barnard, and Mrs. R. Parker Collins of Hamden; William Gromko, New Haven; Raymond Montoni, Bridgeport; Frank Jakubowski, Norwich; Richard Chute, Falls Village; Phyllis Bellin, Ansonia; Catherin Ameer, Norwalk; Alice Kellogg, Lakeville; Bennett Klamkin, Waterbury, and Margaret H. Travis, Torrington.

* * *

Schubert, Bartok Feature Programs

Chamber music concerts at the Berkshire Music Center this summer will be devoted to the works of two widely divergent masters, Franz Schubert and Bela Bartok. The Schubert concerts are the contribution of Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge and will be given on the four Wednesday evenings of July. The six Bartok quartets will be divided between two Saturday evenings, July 10 and 17, and will be played by the Juilliard String Quartet as a contribution of the Julliard School of Music. These events will be in the Theatre-Concert Hall at Tanglewood and Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited to each of the concerts.

* * *

THE Schubert series will include the following works: July 7—Quartet for Flute, Guitar, Viola and Violoncello, the Sonata in A minor for Piano and Arpeggione, and the "Winterreise" song cycle with Ralph Herbert, baritone; July 14—the Trios in B flat major and the Sonata in A major for Violin and Piano by the Albeneri Trio; July 21—String Quartet in D minor ("Death and the Maiden"), the Quartet Movement in C minor, and the String Quintet in C major by the Boston String Quartet; July 28—String Quartet in A minor, the Quintet in A major ("Trout"), and the Octet in F major by the Boston Conservatory String Quartet and assisting artists.

* * *

THE PAIR of Bartok programs cover the modern Hungarian master's output from 1907 to 1939 but the numbers are not, however, played in chronological order. The first concert will offer the Third, Second and Fifth Quartets while the second will bring his Fourth, First and Sixth works in this form.

Students at the school will present programs of chamber music in the Chamber Music Hall each Sunday morning beginning July 11 and continuing through the last day of the Festival, Aug. 15. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct at one or more of these events.

SUN, HANOVER, PA., SATURDAY, JUNE 26, 1948

The twentieth anniversary begins July sixth for Boston's Esplanade Concerts, conducted alongside the Charles River, at the foot of Beacon Hill, by Arthur Fiedler their founder.

These are the wall-less concerts where a man in shirt-sleeves or a girl in slacks may hear a large orchestra of Boston Symphony men six nights a week—and not pay unless willing and able. Yet the resulting volume of coins, combined with modest donations by check from the general public, make the concerts self-supporting, or very close to it.

Begun by Mr. Fiedler in 1929 as an experiment that might fold up in a few summers, the Esplanade Concerts have reached a position of such public affection and official esteem, that the attainment of their twentieth season is being celebrated by a committee of citizens representative of all ranks of public and private life in city and state.

* * *

Chamber music concerts at the Berkshire Music Center this summer will be devoted to the works of two widely divergent masters, Franz Schubert and Bela Bartok. The Schubert concerts are the contribution of Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge and will be given on the four Wednesday evenings of July. The six Bartok quartets will be divided between two Saturday evenings, July 10 and 17, and will be played by the Juilliard String Quartet as a contribution of the Juilliard School of Music. These events will be in the Theater-Concert Hall at Tanglewood and Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited to each of the concerts.

Students at the school will present programs of chamber music in the Chamber Music Hall each Sunday morning beginning July 11 and continuing through the last day of the Festival, August 15. Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited to all events of the school including the concerts by the student orchestras and chorus.

This summer marks the third consecutive year the Berkshire Festival has benefitted by the generosity of Mrs. Coolidge, the guiding spirit of chamber music in this country. The past two seasons the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress was responsible for the chamber music concerts at Tanglewood. This year the Schubert series is the personal gift of Mrs. Coolidge.

The Berkshire Festival will open at Tanglewood in the Theater-Concert Hall with an all Bach program on Sunday, July 18, and an all Mozart program on Tuesday evening, July 20. These programs will be repeated the following Sunday and Tuesday in reverse order. The first concert in the Shed by the full Orchestra, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, Conductor, will be given Thursday evening, July 29th. The program will consist of the Bach Suite No. 3, Hindemith's Symphony "Mathis der Maler", and the Beethoven Symphony No. 5.

* * *

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (S 224,080)

This Clipping From
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD-AMERICAN
[illegible] 4 1948

1948 Berkshire Music Center School July 5-Aug. 15

DR. SERGE KOUSSEVITSKY, returning from a [illegible] vacation, announces plans for the 1948 B[illegible] Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. There will be [illegible] July 5 to Aug. 15, through the period [illegible] concerts. Dr. Koussevitzky will direct the [illegible] land, assistant director. Among the fa[illegible] principal players of the Boston Symph[illegible] Leonard Bernstein, Richard Burgin, a[illegible] assisting Dr. Koussevitzky in conducting[illegible] Shaw in charge of choral conducting[illegible] head of Chamber Music. Darius Milhaud [illegible] to join Aaron Copland as teacher of com[illegible] will be head of the Opera Department.

THERE WILL be five departments, as in former [illegible] ducting, Orchestra and Chamber Music, C[illegible] Chorus. New features of the curriculum [illegible] chestra under Mr. de Carvalho to be made [illegible] opera orchestra, a course in costume design [illegible] ment under Leo VanWitsen, and a seminar [illegible] new music to be headed by Aaron Copland [illegible] Some 40 school performances will incl[illegible] tion in the tradition of "[illegible] members of the Friends of the Berksh[illegible] ization of contributors to the school, will be [illegible] Center, iniated by Dr. Koussevitzky in 194[illegible] Boston Symphony Orchestra. Information a[illegible] be secured by writing to the Berkshire Musi[illegible] Hall, Boston 15, Mass.

[135]

INFORMATION OBSCURED

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
CHelsea 3-8860

This Clipping From CONN.
TIMES

sevitzky Announces Programs conducting. Piston, Symphony No. 3; Prokofieff, Violin Concerto No. 1; Brahms, Symphony in C minor, No. 1 (Soloist: Isaac Stern).

Sunday, Aug. 1, Leonard Bernstein, conducting. Haydn, Symphony No. 104; Mahler, Symphony No. 2, "Resurrection" (with chorus and soloists).

* * *

SERIES B

Thursday, Aug. 5, Serge Koussevitzky, conducting. Beethoven, Symphony No. 6, "Pastoral"; Stravinsky, "Oedipus Rex" for Orchestra with Male Chorus and Soloists.

Saturday, Aug. 7, Serge Koussevitzky, conducting. Prokofieff, "Romeo and Juliet," Suite No. 2; Vaughan Williams, Symphony No. 6 (first performance in America); Strauss, "Don Quixote" (soloist: Gregor Piatigorsky).

Sunday, Aug. 8, Eleazar de Carvalho, conducting. Berlioz, Fantastic Symphony; Villa Lobos, Madoña; Falla, El Amor Brujo; Siqueira, "Nordestina."

EXTRA CONCERT, Tuesday, Aug. 10, Serge Koussevitzky, conducting. Tchaikovsky program: Symphony No. 6, "Pathétique"; Piano Concerto No. 1, Overture "1812" (Soloist: Seymour Lipkin

* * *

SERIES C

Thursday, Aug. 12, Leonar Bernstein, conducting. Webe Overture to "Der Freischütz" Stravinsky, "Petrouchka" (com plete); Shostakovitch, Symphon No. 5.

Saturday, Aug. 14, Robert Shaw conducting. Debussy, The Blesse Damozel; Brahms, Requiem chorus and soloists.

Sunday, Aug. 15, Serge Kous sevitzky, conducting. Beethoven Symphony No. 3, "Eroica"; Sibe lius, Symphony in D major, No.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

Cir. (S 156,194) (S 45,527)

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

MAY 23 1948

Berkshire Festival Will Open With Bach Program July 18

THE Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., will open with an all-Bach program in the Theater Concert Hall Sunday afternoon, July 18, and continue the following Tuesday night with an all-Mozart session. The Mozart program will be repeated Sunday afternoon, July 25, and the Bach program Tuesday evening, July 27.

Programs are announced for the three series in the Shed by the full Boston Symphony Orchestra as follows: Series A—Thursday, July 29, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, Suite in D-minor, No. 3, Bach; Symphony "Mathis der Maler," Hindemith; Symphony in C-minor, No. 5, Beethoven; Saturday, July 31, Koussevitzky conducting, Symphony No. 3, Piston; Violin Concerto No. 1, Prokofieff, Isaac Stern, soloist; Symphony in C-minor, No. 1, Brahms; Sunday, Aug. 1, Leonard Bernstein conducting, Symphony No. 104, Haydn; Symphony No. 2, "Resurrection," Mahler, with chorus and soloists.

Series B—Thursday, Aug. 5, Koussevitzky conducting, Symphony No. 6, "Pastoral," Beethoven; "Oedipus Rex," for orchestra, male chorus and soloists, Stravinsky; Saturday, Aug. 7, Koussevitzky; conducting, "Romeo and Juliet," Suite No. 2, Prokofieff; Symphony No. 6 (first performance in America), Vaughan Williams; "Don Quixote," Strauss (soloist, Gregor Piatigorsky); Sunday, Aug. 8, Eleazar de Carvalho conducting, "Fantastic" Symphony, Berlioz; "Madona," Villa Lobos; "El Amor Brujo," Falla; "Nordestina," Siqueira. Extra concert Tuesday, Aug. 10, Koussevitzky conducting, Tschaikowski program — Symphony No. 6, "Pathetique;" Piano Concerto No. 1, Seymour Lipkin, soloist; Overture "1812."

Series C—Thursday, Aug. 12, Bernstein conducting, Overture to "Der Freischutz," Weber; "Petrouchka" (complete), Stravinsky; Symphony No. 5, Shostakovitch, Saturday, Aug. 14, Robert Shaw conducting, "The Blessed Damozel," Debussy; "Requiem," Brahms. Sunday, Aug. 15, Koussevitzky conducting, Symphony No. 3, "Eroica;" Symphony in D-major No. 2, Sibelius.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

Cir. (D 353,813) (S 708,754)

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

APR 6 - 1948

Berkshire Finals Today

Final auditions for admission to the Opera Department of the Berkshire Music Center will be held today at 1 o'clock in the Carnegie Recital Hall, 154 West Fifty-seventh Street, by Boris Goldovsky, head of the department, and other members of the faculty. An accompanist will be present.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

Cir. (D 140,791)

This Clipping From
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
MORNING TRIBUNE

Selvig to Study With Koussevitzky

Orton Selvig, professor of piano and organ at MacPhail School of Music and organist and choir director at Augustana Lutheran church, was notified last week he had been accepted by Serge Koussevitzky as a member of a small conducting class the Boston Symphony director will teach this summer at the Berkshire Music festival at Tanglewood, Mass.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

Cir. (D 48,307) (S 97,521)

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

Berkshire Music Festival Program Announced

The programs are announced by Serge Koussevitzky for the Berkshire Festival for 1948 at Tanglewood in Lenox. The festival will open with an all Bach program in the Theater-Concert Hall on Sunday afternoon, July 18.

An all-Mozart program on Tuesday evening, July 20, will follow and will be repeated on Sunday afternoon, July 25. The Bach program will be repeated on Tuesday evening, July 27.

The concerts by the full Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Shed will be as follows:

Series A will be performed Thursday evening, July 29, the following Saturday evening, and Sunday afternoon.

Program I: Suite in D major, No. 3 by Bach; Symphony, "Mathis der Maler" by Hindemith; Symphony No. 5 by Beethoven—Koussevitzky conducting.

Program 2: Symphony No. 3 by Walter Piston; Violin Concerto No. 1 by Prokofieff (Isaac Stern, soloist); Symphony No. 1 by Brahms — Koussevitzky conducting.

Program 3: Symphony No. 104 by Haydn; Symphony No. 2 "Resurrection" by Mahler (with chorus and soloists) — Leonard Bernstein, conductor.

Series B

Dates for Series B are Thursday evening, Aug. 5, and the following Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon.

Program 1: Symphony No. 6 (Pastoral) by Beethoven; "Oedipus Rex" for orchestra with male chorus and soloists, by Stravinsky — Koussevitzky conducting.

Program 2: "Romeo and Juliet" Suite No. 2 by Prokofieff; the first American performance of Vaughan Williams' "Symphony No. 6"; and "Don Quixote" by Richard Strauss (Gregor Piatigorsky, soloist) — Koussevitzky conducting.

Program 3: Fantastic Symphony by Berlioz; Madona, by Villa Lobos; El Amor Brujo by de Falla; "Nordestina" by Siqueira — Eleazar de Carvalho conducting.

Series B will be followed by an extra concert on Tuesday evening, Aug. 10. The program follows: Symphony No. 6, "Pathetique" by Tschaikowsky; Piano Concerto No. 1 (Seymour Lipkin, pianist) by Tschaikowsky, and Overture, "1812." Koussevitzky conducting.

Series C

Series C will take place Thursday evening, Aug. 12, and the following Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon.

Program I: Overture to "Der Freischutz" by Weber; the complete "Petrouchka" by Stravinsky; Symphony No. 5 by Shostakovich—Bernstein conducting.

Program 2: The Blessed Damozey by Debussy; Requiem by Brahms (chorus and soloists) — Robert Shaw conducting.

Program 3: Symphony No. 3, "Eroica" by Beethoven; Symphony in D major, No. 2, by Sibelius—Koussevitzky conducting.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

Cir. (D 353,813) (S 708,754)

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

MAY 27 1948

Festival at Tanglewood Opens July 18 With Bach

The 1948 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., will open with programs of Bach's and Mozart's music played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky's direction. The Bach program, scheduled for Sunday afternoon, July 18, and Tuesday night, July 27, consists of the third Brandenburg Concerto, the cantata "Sie werden aus Saba alle kommen" (No. 65), the concertos in D minor and C major for three pianos and strings, and the second suite, in B minor. Georges Laurent, flutist, and Lukas Foss, Bernard Zighera and Ralph Berkowitz, pianists, will be the soloists.

The Mozart program, to be played on Tuesday night, July 20, and Sunday afternoon, July 25, includes the symphonies in C and E flat major (K. 338 and 543), serenade for winds (K. 388) and piano concerto in G major (K. 453), with Mr. Foss as the soloist. These concerts will be held in the Tanglewood Theater-Concert Hall. As previously announced, the regular festival series by the full orchestra in the Tanglewood Music Shed will be held on Thursday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons, July 29, 31, Aug. 1, 5, 7, 8, 12, 14 and 15. An extra concert with a Tchaikovsky program will be held on Tuesday night, Aug. 10.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
CHelsea 3-8860
(S 1,002,765)

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

APR 6 - 1948

Opera Auditions

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
CHelsea 3-8860
(S 181,496)

This Clipping From
COLUMBUS, OHIO
DISPATCH

Mozart Programs

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 538,914) (S 1,002,765)

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
MAY 17 1948

TANGLEWOOD LISTS WORK BY WILLIAMS

Symphony No. 6 Will Have Its U. S. Premiere — Revisions in Programs Announced

Ralph Vaughan Williams' new Symphony No. 6, which received its première last month in London's Royal Albert Hall, will be performed for the first time in this country during the Berkshire Festival, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, announced yesterday.

The announcement was included in a revised list of the programs that the orchestra will play during the annual festival at Tanglewood near Lenox, Mass. Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the symphony on Aug. 5.

The work, which was introduced in England by Sir Adrian Boult, is said to take an hour and a half to play. The 75-year-old British composer was present at the première, and, at its conclusion, was called to the stage by the audience four times to acknowledge applause.

Prokofieff's Violin Concerto, No. 1, with Isaac Stern as the soloist, and his "Romeo and Juliet" Suite No. 2, are among the other works newly announced for the festival. Eleazar de Carvalho will conduct Siqueira's "Nordestina" on Aug. 8. And the two choral works to be included in Robert Shaw's program on Aug. 14 will be Debussy's "The Blessed Damozel" and Brahms' "Requiem."

Selections on the all-Tchaikovsky program, to be given as an additional concert on Aug. 10, will be the "Pathétique" symphony, the "1812" Overture and the Piano Concerto No. 1. The soloist will be Seymour Lipkin, recent winner of the Rachmaninoff Fund contest. Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct.

Other revisions are as follows: Schumann's First Symphony has been eliminated; in the A series Brahms' First Symphony has been substituted for his Second; the Haydn symphony scheduled will be No. 104 and Shostakovich's Symphony No. 5 has been shifted from Series B to Series C.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 353,813) (S 708,754)

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
MAY 18 1948

Boston Symphony Plans For Berkshire Concerts

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has announced the programs which it will play under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky and guest conductors in the three principal series of the 1948 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. The dates and programs are:

Series A

Thursday night, July 29, Dr. Koussevitzky conducting: Bach, Suite No. 3; Hindemith, Symphony, "Mathis der Maler"; Beethoven, Symphony No. 5.

Saturday night, July 31, Dr. Koussevitzky conducting: Piston, Symphony No. 3; Prokofieff, violin concerto No. 1 (soloist, Isaac Stern), Brahms, Symphony No. 1.

Sunday afternoon, Aug. 1, Leonard Bernstein conducting: Hadyn, Symphony No. 104; Mahler, Symphony No. 2 (with chorus and soloists).

Series B

Thursday night, Aug. 5, Dr. Koussevitzky conducting: Beethoven, Symphony No. 6 (Pastoral); Stravinsky, Oedipus Rex (with chorus and soloists).

Saturday night, Aug. 7, Dr. Koussevitzky conducting: Prokofieff, "Romeo and Juliet" Suite No. 2; Vaughan Williams, Symphony No. 6 (first American performance; Strauss, Don Quixote (cello soloist, Gregor Piatigorsky).

Sunday afternoon, Aug. 8, Eleazar de Carvalho conducting: Berlioz, Fantastic Symphony; Villa Lobos, Madona; Falla, El Amor Brujo; Siqueira, Nordestina.

Extra concert, Tuesday, Aug. 10, Dr. Koussevitzky conducting, Tchaikovsky program: Pathetic Symphony, Piano Concerto No. 1 (soloist, Seymour Lipkin); Overture, 1812.

Series C

Thursday night, Aug. 12, Mr. Bernstein conducting: Weber, Overture to "Der Freischuetz," Stravinsky, Petrouchka (in full); Shostakovitch, Symphony No. 5.

Saturday, Aug. 14, Robert Shaw conducting: Debussy, The Blessed Damozel; Brahms, Requiem (with chorus and soloists).

Sunday, Aug. 15, Dr. Koussevitzky conducting: Beethoven, Symphony No. 3 (Eroica); Sibelius, Symphony No. 2.

These concerts will be given in the Music Shed. Dr. Koussevitzky will also conduct a Bach program on Sunday afternoon, July 18, and Tuesday night, July 27, and a Mozart program on Tuesday night, July 20, and Sunday afternoon, July 25. The Bach and Mozart programs will be given in Tanglewood's Theater-Concert Hall.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 383,454) (Sat. 251,970)

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
MAY 18 1948

Music

Plans Shaping For Berkshire Festival

By ROBERT BAGAR.

The Berkshire Music Festival is scheduled to open with an all-Bach program in the Theater-Concert Hall at Tanglewood on July 18. An all-Mozart program will follow on the 20th, full details to be announced later.

The symphonic part of the Berkshire Festival will begin on Thursday evening, July 29, when Serge Koussevitzky will conduct a program of Bach, Hindemith and Beethoven. This date opens the Series A set of concerts, which also will include two others, that of Saturday evening, July 31, when Piston, Prokofieff and Brahms music comprise the program, with Isaac Sterne, violinist, as the soloist, and the following Sunday afternoon's Haydn and Mahler program with Leonard Bernstein conducting.

Series B offers on Thursday evening, Aug. 5, Beethoven and Stravinsky. The latter's "Oedipus Rex" will be featured. On the Saturday evening following Prokofieff's "Romeo and Juliet" Suite No. 2, a first American performance of the Vaughan Williams Symphony No. 6, and the Strauss "Don Quixote" will provide the entertainment. For the Sunday afternoon concert, Eleazar de Carvalho, young batonist groomed by Mr. Koussevitzky, will conduct a program of compositions by Berlioz, Villa Lobos, Falla and Siqueira.

The Series C concerts will start on Thursday evening Aug. 12, when Mr. Bernstein will lead the orchestra through pieces by Weber, Stravinsky and Shostakovich. Robert Shaw will do the batonistic honors on the evening of the 14th with performances of Debussy's "Blessed Damozel" and the Brahms "German" Requiem. The Berkshire Symphonic Festival will close the next day, Sunday, Aug. 15, with Mr. Koussevitzky offering the "Eroica" Symphony of Beethoven and the Sibelius Symphony No. 2.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 150,364) (S 181,496)

This Clipping From
COLUMBUS, OHIO
DISPATCH
MAY 18 1948

Berkshire Festival Programs are Listed

THE programs are announced by Serge Kouss the Berkshire Festival of 1948 at Tanglewood in L Mass. The festival will open with an all Bach prog the Theater-Concert Hall on Sunday afternoon, July and an all Mozart program on Tuesday evening, July 20. The Mozart program will be repeated on Sunday afternoon, July 25 and the Bach program on Tuesday evening, July 27. The programs in detail with soloists will be announced shortly.

The concerts by the full Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Shed will be as follows:

SERIES A
Thursday, July 29
Serge Koussevitzky, Conducting
Bach....Suite in D major, No. 3
Hindemith....Symphony, "Mathis der Maler"
Beethoven....Symphony in C Minor, No. 5

Saturday, July 31
Serge Koussevitzky, Conducting
Piston...........Symphony No. 3
Prokofieff..Violin Concerto No. 1
Brahms—Symphony in C minor, No. 1
(Soloist: Isaac Stern)

Sunday, Aug. 1
Leonard Bernstein, Conducting
Haydn........Symphony No. 104
Mahler.........Symphony No. 2 "Resurrection"
(With Chorus and Soloists)

SERIES B
Thursday, Aug. 4
Serge Koussevitzky, Conducting
Beethoven.......Symphony No. 6 "Pastoral"
Stravinsky.."Oedipus Rex" for orchestra with male chorus and soloists

Saturday, Aug. 7
Serge Koussevitzky, Conducting
Prokofieff...."Romeo and Juliet" Suite No. 2
Vaughan Williams.....Symphony No. 6
(First Performance in America)
Strauss..........."Don Quixote"
(Soloist: Gregor Piatigorsky)

Sunday, Aug. 8
Eleazar de Carvalho, Conducting
Berlioz......Fantastic Symphony
Villa Lobos ....Madona
Falla.............El Amor Brujo
Siqueira ...."Nordestina"

EXTRA CONCERT
Tuesday, Aug. 10
Serge Koussevitzky, Conducting
Tchaikovsky Program:
Symphony No. 6, "Pathetique"
Piano Concerto No. 1
Overture, "1812"
(Soloist: Seymour Lipkin)

SERIES C
Thursday, Aug. 12
Leonard Bernstein, Conducting
Weber..........Overture to "Der Freischutz"
Stravinsky .... "Petrouchka" (Complete)
Shostakovitch...Symphony No. 5

Saturday, Aug. 14
Robert Shaw, Conducting
Debussy....The Blessed Damozel
Brahms .... Requiem
(Chorus and Soloists)

Sunday, Aug. 15
Serge Koussevitzky, Conducting
Beethoven.....Symphony No. 3, "Eroica"
Sibelius....Symphony in D ma
No. 2

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 538,914) (S 1,002,765)

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
MAY 27 1948

TANGLEWOOD PROGRAMS

Initial Concerts Will Be Devoted to Bach and Mozart Works

Programs for the two pairs of week-end concerts with which the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky, will open the Berkshire Festival this summer at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., were announced yesterday. These initial concerts devoted to works by Bach and Mozart will be presented in the Theatre-Concert Hall.

The Bach program, scheduled for Sunday afternoons, July 18 and 25, will comprise the Third Brandenburg Concerto; Cantata, No. 65, "Sie werden aus Saba alle kommen"; Three-piano Concerto in D minor, with Lukas Foss, Bernard Zighera and Ralph Berkowitz as soloists; Suite No. 2, in B minor, with George Laurent, flutist, as soloist, and Three-piano Concerto in C minor. The Mozart program to be given Tuesday nights, July 20 and 27, contains the Symphony in C major (K. 338); Serenade for Winds (K. 388); Piano Concerto in G major (K. 453), with Lukas Foss as soloist, and Symphony in E flat major (K. 543).

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 236,659)

This Clipping From
NEWARK, N. J.
NEWS
MAY 9 - 1948

Wins Berkshire Post

Donald Havas, son of Mr. and Mrs. John J. Havas, 17 Carpenter terrace, Belleville, who was auditioned several weeks ago by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has been accepted for membership in the student orchestra at the Berkshire Music Center Summer School. In addition to his orchestral studies, Donald, a string bassist, will receive instruction in chamber music from Gregor Piatigorsky, concert cellist. Following the Summer season, Donald will enter the Oberlin Conservatory of Music. He has been studying string bass for more than two years with Charles Brennand of Newark.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 108,692)

This Clipping From
ROCHESTER, N. Y.
TIMES-UNION
MAY 12 1948

Fennell Named To Berkshire Post

Frederick Fennell of the Eastman School of Music faculty has been appointed to the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center, Lenox, Mass., for the coming Summer session.

The session will coincide with the Berkshire Festival of the Boston Symphony, conducted by Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, with whom Fennell studied conducting in 1942. Fennell conducts the Eastman School Little Symphony Orchestra and the Symphony Band. Recently he was guest conductor of the Houston, Tex., Symphony at the Texas Festival of Creative Arts.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 24,774)
This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

New Roof on Festival Shed Will Cover 1½ Acre Area

Much Building Activit at Tanglewood—Gaston Has Crew of 12 Preparing For Opening of M Center July 5

LENOX — Wa perintendent of T crew of 12 men get in shape for the 1948 Berkshire Fest roofers have starte new 1½ acre roof Shed.

The Shed is still protective winter the storm sides will a few days. The new made of gravel and winter's heavy snow an many new leaks in the

In addition to the there is much othe tivity on the grounds state Department of P in co-operation with Stockbridge and the Berkshire has started new hard surfaced thorne Street leading to the Festival property. Mr. Gaston has about completed work on a new 300-yard storage shed r, benches, scenery, machin- nd other equipment used on rounds. Sections, measuring square, were made under Gaston's supervision in the kshop during the winter hs. During the spring the ns were put in place and rs are now putting on a to blend with the color of the buildings on the grounds.

Work also has started on a new ption room and music store, located near the box office at the main entrance. The roof will be extended from the ticket office to the music store and the entrance the grounds will be widened to out 45 feet.

Mr. Gaston has also completed the manufacture of 120 lockers for the students to use in Tracy Hall. They are made of wooden frames masonite boards on the top, les and bottom.

The Berkshire Music Center will open for ~~the season July 5~~

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 55,764) (S 93,871)
This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

Tanglewood Concert: Serge Koussevitzky has announced the programs for the 1948 Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

First off, there will be all-Bach and all-Mozart programs on Sunday afternoon, July 18 and Tuesday evening, July 20. The first will be repeated on Tuesday evening, July 27, and the later on Sunday afternoon, July 25.

The regular series concerts begin Thursday evening, July 29, with Bach's Suite in D Major, No 3; Hindemith's "Mathis der Maler" and the Beethoven Fifth Symphony.

Saturday 31—Third Symphony, Piston; Violin Concerto No. 1, Prokofieff soloist Isaac Stern; Symphony No 1, Brahms.

Sunday, August 1 — Leonard Bernstein conducting Symphony No. 104, Hayden; Symphony No. 2 (Ressuerrection), Mahler, with chorus and soloists.

Thursday, August 5—Symphony No. 6 (Pastoral), Beethoven; "Oedipus Rex", Stravinsky, orchestra, male soloists and chorus; Saturday, August 7—"Romeo "And Juliet" Suite No. 2, Prokofieff; Symphony No. 6, Vaughan Williams (first performance in America); "Don Quixote," Strauss (soloist, Geegor Piatigorsky).

Sunday, August 8—Eleazar de Carvalho conducting "Fantastic" Symphony, Berlioz; "Madona," Villa Lobos; "El Amor Brujo," Falla; "Nordestina," Siqueira.

Thursday, August 12—Leonard Bernstein conducting Overture to "Der Freischuetz," Weber; "Petrouchka" (complete), Stravinsky; Symphony No. 2, Shostakovitch.

Saturday, August 14 — Robert Shaw conducting "The Blessed Damozel," Debussy; Requiem, Brahms (chorus and soloists).

Sunday, August 15—Beethoven's "Eroica"; Symphony No. 2, Sibelius.

Mr. Koussevitzky will also conduct an extra concert on Tuesday August 10, at which the Tschaikowsky "Pathetique" Symphony, the First Piano Concerto with Seymour Lipkin as soloist and the "1812" Overture will be performed.

* * *

Curtain: "Oklahoma!" is about to close on Broadway. Nobody ever thought it would, but it will, on Saturday evening. It opened on March 31, 1943 (Julian calendar), and has played 2202 performances since then.

Twenty eight more days on Broadway and the Rogers-Hammerstein hit would have rivaled the all time record holder, "Chu-Chin-Chow" 30 years ago in London.

Festiv are I unced by Ser of 1948 at T with an Sunday

Berkshire F
To Open On

The Boston
will open the Music Festival, day afternoon,
Bach program
Hall. On Tuesda will be an all-will be repe Bach pr season's performa Williams' conductor
Koussevitz
Symphony
Bernstein, de Carvalh

THE O
ROM
PRESS C
220 W. 19th St., NE
Tel. CHels
Cir. (D
This Clipp
HUDSON
DAILY
APR

MUSIC CEN
TO

The sixth se Music Center at mer school of zky is director.
continue for si Festival period pervising the c be assisted by including the with department ing, chamber opera, and chor activities will in of concert and
A special operat ing the precede and "Idomeneo"
mers, will be an

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 166,696) (S 173,806)
This Clipping From
WASHINGTON, D. C.
POST
MAY

Three Berkshire Guest Conductors

Serge Koussevitzky has announced three guest conductors for the Berkshire Festival of 1948, to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass., from July 18 to August 15 next.

While Koussevitzky will lead most of the concerts, others will be conducted by Leonard Bernstein, Eleazar de Carvalho and Robert Shaw. Music of Bach, Mozart and Tchaikovsky will be stressed.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 137,100) (S 136,912)
This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
PM
MAY 23 1948

Music in America:

List Programs for Berkshire Festival

Koussevitzky

Programs for the 1948 Berkshire Festival, given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., have been announced by Serge Koussevitzky, the orchestra's director.

Three series of three concerts each will be presented in the huge Music Shed at Tanglewood, between July 29 and Aug. 15, with an extra all-Tchaikowsky program scheduled for Tuesday, Aug. 10. Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct six of the concerts; Leonard Bernstein will direct two, and Eleazar de Carvalho and Robert Shaw, one each.

In addition, there will be an all-Bach program in the Theater-Concert Hall on Sunday afternoon, July 18, and an all-Mozart program on Tuesday evening, July 20. The Mozart concert will be repeated on Sunday afternoon, July 25, and the Bach on Tuesday evening, July 27. Programs for these concerts are to be announced later. The regular Festival programs are:

Series A

Thursday evening, July 29: Koussevitzky conducting.

Suite in D, No. 3	Bach
Symphony, Mathis der Maler	Hindemith
Symphony No. 5	Beethoven

Saturday evening, July 31: Koussevitzky conducting; soloist, Isaac Stern, violinist.

Symphony No. 3	Piston
Violin Concerto No. 1	Prokofiev
Symphony No. 1	Brahms

Sunday afternoon, Aug. 1: Bernstein conducting.

Symphony No. 104	Haydn
Symphony No. 2 (Resurrection)	Mahler

Series B

Thursday evening, Aug. 5: Koussevitzky conducting; soloists and chorus to be announced.

Symphony No. 6 (Pastoral)	Beethoven
Oedipus Rex	Stravinsky

Saturday evening, Aug. 7: Koussevitzky conducting; soloist, Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist.

Romeo and Juliet, Suite No. 2	Prokofiev
Symphony No. 6 (1st American performance)	Vaughan Williams
Don Quixote	Strauss

Sunday afternoon, Aug. 8: De Carvalho conducting.

Symphonie Fantastique	Berlioz
Madona	Villa Lobos
El Amor Brujo	Falla
Nordestina	Siqueira

Extra Tchaikowsky Concert

Tuesday evening, Aug. 10: Koussevitzky conducting; soloist, Seymour Lipkin, pianist.

Symphony No. 6 (Pathetique); Piano Concerto No. 1; Overtiure, 1812.

Series C

Thursday evening, Aug. 12: Bernstein conducting.

Freischutz Overture	Weber
Petrouchka (complete)	Stravinsky
Symphony No. 5	Shostakovich

Saturday evening, Aug. 14: Shaw conducting; with chorus and soloists.

The Blessed Damozel	Debussy
Requiem	Brahms

Sunday afternoon, Aug: 15: Koussevitzky conducting.

Symphony No. 3 (Eroica)	Beethoven
Symphony No. 2	Sibelius

For information about available tickets and prices for the Festival, write to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass.

Berkshire Music Center

Plans for the 1948 Berkshire Music Center call for a six-week session from July 5 to Aug. 15. Dr. Koussevitzky will direct the school, with Aaron Copland as assistant director. Among the faculty, in addition to 25 principal players of the Boston Symphony, will be Leonard Bernstein, Richard Burgin and Eleazar de Carvalho, assisting Dr. Koussevitzky in conducting; Hugh Ross and Robert Shaw, in charge of choral conducting; and Gregor Piatigorsky, head of chamber music. Darius Milhaud will return from France to join Mr. Copland as teacher of composition. Boris Goldowsky will be head of the opera department.

As in former seasons, there will be five departments: conducting, orchestra and chamber music, composition, opera and chorus. Some 40 school performances, including a special opera production, will be given, to which members of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, an organization of contributors to the school, will be invited. Information about the school may be secured by writing to the Berkshire Music Center, Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 29,023) (S 81,796)
This Clipping From TOLEDO, OHIO
TIMES

THE plans of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., have progressed to the extent that classes and teachers have already been announced. As is generally known, the school is sponsored by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and directed by Serge Koussevitsky. The session this year will run from July 5 to Aug. 15.

The classes in conducting will be under Dr. Koussevitzky, Leonard Bernstein, Richard Burgin, and Eleazar de Carvalho; those in choral conducting under Hugh Ross and Robert Shaw; composition under Aaron Copland and Darius Milhaud; opera under Boris Goldovsky and costume design under Leo Van Witsen; chamber music under Gregor Piatigorsky; orchestra under 25 principal players of the Boston Orchestra; chamber orchestra under Mr. de Carvalho. In addition there will be offered a seminar in old and new music under the direction of Aaron Copland and Julius Herford.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 24,774)
This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

Programs for 1948 Festival Announced by Koussevitzky

TANGLEWOOD—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, today announced the programs for the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood this summer.

The Festival will open with an all-Bach program in the theatre-concert hall on Sunday afternoon, July 18, and an all-Mozart program Tuesday evening, July 20. The Mozart program will be repeated Sunday afternoon July 25 and the Bach program on Tuesday evening, July 27.

Dr. Koussevitzky said the programs in detail and additional soloists will be announced soon.

Guest conductors at the Festival this year will be Leonard Bernstein, Eleazar de Carvalho and Robert Shaw.

On Aug. 7, Dr. Koussevitzky announced, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give the first performance in America of Vaughan Williams' Symphony No. 6.

The concerts by the full Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Shed will be as follows:

SERIES A

Thursday, July 29

Serge Koussevitzky, conducting.

Suite in D major, No. 3	Bach
Symphony, Mathis de Maler	Hindemith
Symphony in C minor, No. 5	Beethoven

Saturday, July 31

Serge Koussevitzky, conducting.

Symphony No. 3	Piston
Violin Concerto No. 1	Prokofieff
Symphony in C minor, No. 1	Brahms

Soloist, Isaac Stern.

Sunday, Aug. 1

Leonard Bernstein, conducting.

Symphony No. 104	Haydn
Symphony No. 2, Resurrection	Mahler

With chorus and soloists.

SERIES B

Thursday, Aug. 5

Serge Koussevitzky, conducting.

Symphony No. 6, Pastoral	Beethoven
Oedipus Rex	Stravinsky

For orchestra with male chorus and soloists.

Saturday, Aug. 7

Serge Koussevitzky, conducting.

Romeo and Juliet, Suite No. 2	Prokofieff
Symphony No. 6	Vaughan Williams

First performance in America.

Don Quixote	Strauss

Soloist, Gregor Piatigorsky.

Sunday, Aug. 8

Eleazar de Carvalho, conducting.

Fantastic Symphony	Berlioz
Madona	Villa Lobos
El Amor Brujo	Falla
Nordestina	Siqueira

EXTRA CONCERT

Tuesday, Aug. 10

Serge Koussevitzky, conducting.

Tchaikovsky Program:

Symphony No. 6, Pathetique
Piano Concerto No. 1.
Overture, 1812.

Soloist, Seymour Lipkin.

SERIES C

Thursday, Aug. 12

Leonard Bernstein, conducting.

Overture to De Freischutz	Weber
Petrouchka, complete	Stravinsky
Symphony No. 5	Shostakovitch

Saturday, Aug. 14

Robert Shaw, conducting.

The Blessed Damozel	Debussy
Requiem	Brahms

Chorus and soloists.

Sunday, Aug. 15

Serge Koussevitzky, conducting.

Symphony No. 3, Eroica	Beethoven
Symphony in D major, No. 2	Sibelius

NY He. Trib.

Maria
CATALOG ON 120 CLAREMONT

Berkshire Music Center

Serge Koussevitzky,
DIRECTOR
TANGLEWOOD-LENOX, MASS.
6th Season — July 5 to August 15

FINAL NEW YORK AUDITIONS
For Admission and Scholarships in Student Orchestras

CARNEGIE RECITAL HALL, 154 W. 57:
STRINGS .... Wed. at 10 AM
WOODWINDS .... Fri. at 10 AM
PIANO .... Fri. at 11:30 AM
BRASS .... Sat. at 9:30 AM

BACKSTAGE CARNEGIE HALL:
TYMPANI & HARP ...... Wed. at 7 PM

Applicants please notify T. D. PERRY, Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass.

Arved Kurtz, Dir

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 118,830) (S 204,456)

This Clipping From
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
CHRONICLE

BENJAMIN BRITTEN saw the Tanglewood performance, and when he took the boat to go back to England he complained to the reporters that he had not been given a professional production. This remark was doubly ungracious in view of the fact that the opera had been commissioned by the Koussevitzky Foundation and was therefore justly introduced to America at Koussevitzky's Tanglewood. One wonders what he would have said if he had seen the Metropolitan production, which was superior to the Tanglewood job only in the quality of its orchestra.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 86,284)

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

MAR 8 1948

Dr. Koussevitzky Announces Tanglewood Study Program

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky has announced plans for the 1948 Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

There will be a six-week session from July 5 to Aug. 15, through the period of the Berkshire Festival concerts. Dr. Koussevitzky will direct the school, with Aaron Copland as assistant director.

* * *

AMONG THE FACULTY, in addition to 25 principal players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be Leonard Bernstein, Richard Burgin, and Eleazar de Carvalho, assisting Mr. Koussevitzky in conducting; Hugh Ross and Robert Shaw in charge of choral conducting; and Gregor Piatigorsky, head of chamber music. Darius Milhaud will return from France to join Aaron Copland as teacher of composition. Boris Goldovsky will be head of opera department.

* * *

THERE WILL BE five departments, as in former seasons: conducting, orchestra and chamber music, composition, opera and chorus. New features of the curriculum include a chamber orchestra under Mr. de Carvalho to be made up of members of the opera orchestra, a course in costume design in the opera department under Leo VanWitsen, and a seminar in very old and very new music to be headed by Aaron Copland and Julius Herford. Some 40 school performances, including a special opera production in the tradition of Peter Grimes and Idomeneo, will be presented to which members of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, an organization of contributors to the school, will be invited.

Information about the school may be secured by writing to the Berkshire Music Center, Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 198,955) (S 562,259)

This Clipping From PITTSBURGH, PA.
SUN TELEGRAPH

MAY 2 - 1948

Berkshire Programs

The annual Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood in Massachusetts opens July 18 with Serge Koussevitsky directing the orchestra concerts and remaining chief advisor for the wonderful music center.

Beethoven, a complete Tchaikowsky program, Strauss, Schumann, Mahler, Piston, Stravinsky, Hindemith, Villa-Lobos and DaFallo are the names which grace his programs.

The annual Bach festival at Baldwin-Wallace College, in Berea, O., always attracts many Pittsburghers. Friday, June 4, and Saturday, June 5, are the dates, the first devoted to the Passion According to St. John, Saturday to cantatas for Easter Day and the weeks following as celebrated in the St. Thomas Church at the time.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 33,028)

This Clipping From
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE

MAY 18 1948

Music Notes

By D. E. RITZ

Complete programs for the coming Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood have been announced by Serge Koussevitzky, director. The festival will open with an all Bach program at the Theater-Concert Hall on the afternoon of July 18 and an all-Mozart program on the evening of July 20. The Mozart program will be repeated on the afternoon of July 25 and the Bach program on the evening of July 27.

Shed concerts for series A will open on July 29 with Dr. Koussevitzky conducting. The program will include Bach, Suite in D major, number 3; Hindemith, Symphony, "Mathis der Maler,"; and Symphony in C minor, number 5.

Dr. Koussevitsky will conduct the July 31 concert to include Piston, Symphony number 3; Prokofieff, Violin Concerto number 1; Brahms, Symphony in C minor, number 1. Isaac Stern will be the soloist.

Leonard Bernstein will conduct the Aug. 1 concert. The program, Haydn, Symphony, number 104; Mahler, Symphony number 2, "Resurrection," with chorus and soloists.

Series B will open Aug. 5 with Dr. Koussevitzky conducting the Beethoven Symphony number 6, "Pastoral"; and Stravinsky, "Oedipus Rex" for the orchestra with male chorus and soloists.

The Aug. 7 concert, also to be conducted by Dr. Koussevitzky, will include Prokofieff, "Romeo and Juliet" suite number 2; Vaughan Williams, Symphony number 6 (First performance in America); and Strauss, "Don Quixote" with Gregor Piatigorsky as soloist.

Eleazar de Carvalho will conduct the Aug. 8 concert. The program will include Berlioz, "Fantastic Symphony"; Villa Lobos, Madona; Falla, Amor Brujo; and Siqueira, Nordestina.

Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct an extra concert on Aug. 10 with an all Tchaikovsky program. It will include Symphony number 6, "Pathetique," the piano concerto number 1 and the 1812 Overture. Seymour Lipkin will be the soloist.

Leonard Bernstein will conduct the Aug. 12 concert and Robert Shaw the Aug. 14 concert of Series C.

The Aug. 12 program will include Weber, Overture to "Der Freischutz"; Stravinsky, "Petrouchka," (complete; and the Shostakovitch Symphony number 5.

The Aug. 14 program will include Debussy's "The Blessed Damozel"; and Brahms "Requiem" with chorus and soloists.

Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the final program on Aug. 15. The program, Beethoven, Symphony number 3, "Eroica"; and Sibelius, Symphony in D major, number 2.

Choir festivals seem to be the order of the week, with regional festival being held at Christ Episcopal Church tomorrow night under the direction of David Woolcock and the 15th annual festival of the Episcopal Diocese of Albany be held Saturday at the Cathedral of All Saints in Albany. The Albany festival will be held at 4:30 p.m. and tomorrow evening's local festival at 8 o'clock.

"Our Musical Heritage," a short history of world music by Dr. Curt Sachs, musicologist and professor of music at New York University, will be published by Prentice-Hall on May 24.

Carlton James, organist at Plymouth Church, Syracuse, and brother of Mrs. Stanley A. Clark of Scotia, served as one of the directors for the recent festival of the Central New York Association of Music Teachers. The piano festival was given by more than 750 piano students and two choral groups. Mass presentations with pianists at each of 34 pianos on the stage were featured.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 33,028)

This Clipping From
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE

MAR 9 1948

Boris Goldovesky, head of the opera department at the Berkshire Music Center, will hold auditions in New York Saturday afternoon at the Baldwin Piano company, 20 East 54th street. Goldovsky will be assisted by his faculty associates and the auditions will start at 4 o'clock.

Those wishing to audition must notify Thomas D. Perry Jr. at Symphony Hall, Boston 15, before Thursday. The music center, which is sponsored by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is directed by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky with Aaron Copland as assistant director. The center will hold its sixth session at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., from July 5 to Aug. 15.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 12,764)

This Clipping From
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

FEB 10 1948

KOUSSEVITZKY NAMES AIDES FOR FESTIVAL

Leonard Bernstein, Eleazer de Carvalho and Robert Shaw have been invited to be guest conductors of the Boston Symphony orchestra during [illegible]shire Music festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, this summer, it was announced yesterday. They will participate, along with Serge Koussevitzky, the orchestra's conductor, in the three series of concerts to be given in the music shed.

Koussevitzky Announces Tanglewood Programs

Serge Koussevitzky today announces the programs to be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Festival in Tanglewood next Summer. Guest conductors will be Eleazar de Carvalho, Leonard Bernstein and Robert Shaw.

The first week, starting July 29, the programs will include Beethoven's Fifth Symphony; Brahms' Second Symphony;; Mahler's Second ("Resurrection") Symphony; Piston's Third Symphony; a Symphony of Haydn; Bach's Third Orchestral Suite, and Hindemith's "Mathis der Maler."

The concerts of Series B, starting Aug. 5, will bring the Sixth ("Pastoral") Symphony of Beethoven; the Fifth Symphony by Shostakovitch; the Fantastic Symphony by Berlioz; Strauss' "Don Quixote" (cello soloist, Gregor Piatigorsky); Stravinsky's "Oedipus Rex"; "Madona," by Villa-Lobos, and Falla's "El Amor Brujo."

An extra concert Aug. 10 will be devoted to Tchaikovsky. The concerts of Series C, starting Aug. 12., will include Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony; Schumann's First "Spring" Symphony; Weber's "Freischuetz" Overture; Stravinsky's "Petrouchka" (complete); the Second Symphony by Sibelius, and a major choral work to be announced.

The festival will open with two concerts devoted to the music of Bach and Mozart, Sunday afternoon and Tuesday evening, July 18 and 20, in the Theatre-Concert Hall, each program to be repeated the following week.

STAGE IN TOWN

SHUBERT

[139]

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 144,892) (S 160,408)

This Clipping From HOUSTON, TEX.
POST

Berkshire Festival To Open July 18 At Tanglewood

B[illegible] Feb. 14 [illegible] Berkshire Festival of 1948 [illegible] Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky [illegible] of 14 concerts from July 18 through Aug. 15.

In the first two weeks two programs from the music of Bach and Mozart will be performed. These concerts will be given in the intimate Theater Concert Hall.

Three series will be given July 29 through Aug. 15, with a Thursday evening, Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon concert for each series. An extra concert will be performed on Tuesday, Aug. 10, with an all-Tschaikowsky program. These concerts will be given in the Music Shed.

While Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct most of the concerts, three guest conductors have been invited: Leonard Bernstein, Eleazar de Carvalho and Robert Shaw. Soloists will be announced later.

The sixth season of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, the summer school of which Serge Koussevitzky is director, will begin July 5 and continue for six weeks.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 31,262)

This Clipping From
OTTAWA, CANADA
CITIZEN

FEB 21 1948

Festival Fare In 1948 Is Rich And Varied

Now that your worries about local travel are over, since we have decided to buy the OER, perhaps you are letting your mind wander to the possibility of travel farther afield this summer.

You have an embarrassment of festivals to choose from this summer. Nearest to you is the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. The Boston Symphony Orchestra will present fourteen concerts, with Dr. Kousssevitsky, Leaonard Bernstein, Eleazar de Carvalho and Robert Shaw conducting. Special programs of music by Bach, Mozart and Tschaikowsky will be presented. The special programs will begin on July 18, and the regular concert series runs from July 29 to August 15.

At Salzburg

Seven concerts by the Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra, five operas sung by the Vienna State Opera, four chamber music concerts and several choral concerts are on the program for the Salzburg Music Festival, July 27-August 31. The operas will be Beethoven's Fidelio, Gluck's Orpheus, and three by Mozart — The Magic Flute, Abduction from the Seraglio, and The Marriage of Figaro.

Britain's Plans

Four great festivals of the arts will be held in Britain during 1948:—the International Festival of Music and Drama at Edinburgh from August 22nd to September 11th; the Bath Assembly from April 21st to May 1st; the Shakespeare Festival at Stratford-upon-Avon from April 15th to October 2nd, and the Malvern Festival from July 26th to September 4th.

The 1948 Edinburgh Festival is to be staged on an even more ambitious scale than last year's. Artists already booked to appear include the Yehudi Menuhin, Louis Kentner (pianoforte), Cortot (pianoforte), the Russo-American 'cellist Piatigorski, and Segovia, the world's leading guitarist. Artur Schnabel is to pay a return visit and the names of many other world-famous artists who are to appear will be announced later.

Chopin Centenary

To mark the centenary anniversary of Chopin's visit to Edinburgh, which falls this year, Cortot, who is acclaimed the best contemporary exponent of this composer's works, will play the same program as that presented by Chopin a hundred years ago.

Another international attraction running currently with the festival is to be an exhibition of paintings and sculpture in the Royal Scottish Academy.

Britain's greatest national festival of the theater is the annual Shakespeare Festival at the Memorial Theatre, Stratford-upon-Avon. The 1948 season extends over a period of six months from April 25th to October 2nd and this year a cast of outstanding players has been assembled. They include Diana Wynyard, Godfrey Tearle, Robert Helpmann, Anthony Quayle, Paul Scofield, Esmond Knight and Alfie Bass. Diana Wynyard, as the leading lady of the company, will be acting for the first time at Stratford, although she is no stranger to Shakespeare. Godfrey Tearle, who is at present playing in the United States in "Anthony and Cleopatra", joins the company in July to play Othello. The role of Hamlet is to be played alternately by Robert Helpmann and Paul Scofield.

The Malvern Festival, which is to be revived on July 24 after a wartime lapse, honors Britain's greatest living playwright. Malvern is to Bernard Shaw as Stratford-upon-Avon is to Shakespeare. Before the war, the Malvern Festival, with a different play each night, with its garden parties, tea-time talks, Sunday concerts and an attractive festival club, was a delightful social occasion.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 105,682) (S 160,274)

This Clipping From
FORT WORTH, TEXAS
MORNING STAR-TELEGRAM

Auditions for Music School To Be Available

Auditions and interviews for one of the most important American summer music schools for instrumentalists will be available this week in this region.

Due to the presence of Ralph Berkowitz, accompanist for Gregor Piatigorsky, who is to play next week with the Dallas Symphony Orchestra both in Fort Worth and Dallas, auditions and interviews may be arranged for Thursday, March 4, at Hotel Adolphus, Dallas. Berkowitz may be called between 10 and 10:30 a. m. Thursday for appointments.

The school will be held at Tanglewood (Lenox), Mass., from July 5 to Aug. 15 in connection with the Berkshire Festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Serge Koussevitzky in charge. Mail inquiries are to be addressed to Thomas D. Perry Jr., Berkshire Music Center, Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 353,813) (S 708,754)

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

FEB 9 [illegible]

Berkshire Music Center Plans 6-Week Schedule

Plans for this summer's six-week session of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., July 5 to Aug. 15, were announced yesterday by its director, Serge Koussevitzky, who has resumed his Boston Symphony schedule after a mid-season vacation. Aaron Copland will again be assistant director, and Darius Milhaud will teach composition. The faculty also includes Leonard Bernstein, Richard Burgin and Eleazar de Carvalho for orchestral conducting, Hugh Ross and Robert Shaw for choral conducting, Gregor Piatigorsky for chamber music and twenty-five of the Boston Symphony's principals.

Boris Goldovsky will again head the opera department, which will stage another special production along the lines of the performances of "Peter Grimes" in 1946 and "Idomeneo" last summer. New features will include a chamber orchestra under Mr. de Carvalho, a course in costume design in the opera department under Leo Van Witsen, and a seminar in very old and very new music under Mr. Copland and Julius Herford. Members of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, a group of contributors to the school, will be invited to the concert and opera performances, about forty in all, which it will give this summer.

Full information about the Berkshire Music Center is obtainable by writing to it at Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 22,106)

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

FEB 4 1948

Fourteen Concerts Scheduled At Berkshire Music Festival

The 1948 Berkshire Festival will consist of 14 concerts—the customary 3 series of 3 concerts each and 3 extra concerts, according to an announcement today by George E. Judd, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The Bach-Mozart concerts will open in the Theatre Concert Hall July 18. The first of the series of concerts in the Music Shed will open July 29. On Tuesday evening, Aug. 10, there will be an all-Tchaikovsky extra concert in the Music Shed.

Guest conductors during the 1948 Festival will be Leonard Bernstein, Eleazar de Carvalho and Robert Shaw.

The schedule follows: Extra concerts, two programs, Bach-Mozart Festival, Theatre Concert Hall, July 18, 20, 25 and 27; Music Shed, Series A, July 29, 31 and Aug. 1; Series B, Aug. 5, 7 and 8; extra concert, Aug. 10; Series C, Aug. 12, 14 and 15.

A six-week session will open at the Berkshire Music Center on July 5, ending Aug. 15, under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, with Aaron Copland as assistant director and a faculty which will include principal players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Instructions will be offered in five departments: Orchestral and choral conducting; orchestra and chamber music; composition; opera; choral singing and ensemble playing.

Numerous instrumental, choral and operatic performances will again be given by the Berkshire Music Center in 1948. Last year 48 such performances were presented. These performances will be open to members of the Society of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center and no tickets will be sold. A voluntary contribution to the support of the Music Center constitutes membership in the society.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 131,044) (S 352,329)

This Clipping From
BOSTON, MASS.
MORNING GLOBE

FEB 11 1948

1948 Berkshire Festival of 14 Concerts to Run From July 18-Aug. 15

The Berkshire Festival of 1948 to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra — Serge Koussevitzky, conductor—at Tanglewood, the orchestra's Summer home in Lenox, consisting of 14 concerts from July 18 through Aug. 15. In the first two weeks two programs from the music of Bach and Mozart will be performed on Sunday afternoon, July 18, and Tuesday evening, July 20, and repeated on Sunday afternoon, July 25, and Tuesday evening, July 27. These concerts will be given in the intimate Theatre Concert Hall and conducted by Dr. Koussevitzky.

Three series will be given July 29-Aug. 15 with a Thursday evening, Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon concert for each series. An extra concert will be performed on Tuesday, Aug. 10, with an all-Tchaikovsky program. These concerts will be given in the Music Shed. While Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct most of the concerts, three guest conductors have been invited: Leonard Bernstein, Eleazar de Carvalho and Robert Shaw.

The sixth season of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, the Summer home of which Dr. Koussevitzky is director, will begin on July 5 and continue through the festival period. Dr. Koussevitzky, supervising the conducting classes, will be assisted by a distinguished faculty including the orchestra's principals with departments in orchestral playing, chamber music, composition, opera and choral singing. The school activities will include concert and operatic performances.

A secial operatic production continuing the precedent of "Peter Grimes" and "Idomeneo" in the last two Summers will be announced shortly. Those who join the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center will be invited to these school performances.

[140]

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 144,892) (S 160,408)

This Clipping From HOUSTON, TEX.
POST

Berkshire Festival To Open July 18 At Tanglewood

BOSTON, Feb. 14 (Sp)—The Berkshire Festival of 1948 to be given by the Boston Symphony orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky will consist of 14 concerts from July 18 through Aug. 15.

In the first two weeks, two programs from the music of Bach and Mozart will be performed. These concerts will be given in the intimate Theater Concert Hall.

Three series will be given July 29 through Aug. 15, with a Thursday evening, Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon concert for each series. An extra concert will be performed on Tuesday, Aug. 10, with an all-Tschaikowsky program. These concerts will be given in the Music Shed.

While Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct most of the concerts, three guest conductors have been invited: Leonard Bernstein, Eleazar de Carvalho and Robert Shaw. Soloists will be announced later.

The sixth season of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, the summer school of which Serge Kousesvitzky is director, will begin July 5 and continue for six weeks.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 353,813) (S 708,754)

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

FEB 28 1948

Berkshire Music Center Plans 6-Week Schedule

Plans for this summer's six-week session of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., July 5 to Aug. 15, were announced yesterday by its director, Serge Koussevitzky, who has resumed his Boston Symphony schedule after a mid-season vacation. Aaron Copland will again be assistant director and, with Darius Milhaud, will teach composition. The faculty also includes Leonard Bernstein, Richard Burgin and Eleazer de Carvalho for orchestral conducting, Hugh Ross and Robert Shaw for choral conducting, Gregor Piatigorsky for chamber music and twenty-five of the Boston Symphony's principals.

Boris Goldovsky will again head the opera department, which will stage another special production along the lines of the performances of "Peter Grimes" in 1946 and "Idomeneo" last summer. New features will include a chamber orchestra under Mr. de Carvalho, a course in costume design in the opera department under Leo Van Witsen, and a seminar in very old and very new music under Mr. Copland and Julius Herford. Members of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, a group of contributors to the school, will be invited to the concert and opera performances, about forty in all, which it will give this summer.

Full information about the Berkshire Music Center is obtainable by writing to it at Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 31,262)

This Clipping From
OTTAWA, CANADA
CITIZEN

FEB 21 1948

Festival Fare In 1948 Is Rich And Varied

Now that your worries about local travel are over, since we have decided to buy the OER, perhaps you are letting your mind wander to the possibility of travel farther afield this summer.

You have an embarrassment of festivals to choose from this summer. Nearest to you is the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. The Boston Symphony Orchestra will present fourteen concerts, with Dr. Kousssevitsky, Leaonard Bernstein, Eleazar de Carvalho and Robert Shaw conducting. Special programs of music by Bach, Mozart and Tschaikowsky will be presented. The special programs will begin on July 18, and the regular concert series runs from July 29 to August 15.

At Salzburg

Seven concerts by the Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra, five operas sung by the Vienna State Opera, four chamber music concerts and several choral concerts are on the program for the Salzburg Music Festival, July 27-August 31. The operas will be Beethoven's Fidelio, Gluck's Orpheus, and three by Mozart — The Magic Flute, Abduction from the Seraglio, and The Marriage of Figaro.

Britain's Plans

Four great festivals of the arts will be held in Britain during 1948:—the International Festival of Music and Drama at Edinburgh from August 22nd to September 11th; the Bath Assembly from April 21st to May 1st; the Shakespeare Festival at Stratford-upon-Avon from April 15th to October 2nd, and the Malvern Festival from July 26th to September 4th.

The 1948 Edinburgh Festival is to be staged on an even more ambitious scale than last year's. Artists already booked to appear include the Yehudi Menuhin, Louis Kentner (pianoforte), Cortot (pianoforte), the Russo-American 'cellist Piatigorski, and Segovia, the world's leading guitarist. Artur Schnabel is to pay a return visit and the names of many other world-famous artists who are to appear will be announced later.

Chopin Centenary

To mark the centenary anniversary of Chopin's visit to Edinburgh, which falls this year, Cortot, who is acclaimed the best contemporary exponent of this composer's works, will play the same program as that presented by Chopin a hundred years ago.

Another international attraction running currently with the festival is to be an exhibition of paintings and sculpture in the Royal Scottish Academy.

Britain's greatest national festival of the theater is the annual Shakespeare Festival at the Memorial Theatre, Stratford-upon-Avon. The 1948 season extends over a period of six months from April 25th to October 2nd and this year a cast of outstanding players has been assembled. They include Diana Wynyard, Godfrey Tearle, Robert Helpmann, Anthony Quayle, Paul Scofield, Esmond Knight and Alfie Bass. Diana Wynyard, as the leading lady of the company, will be acting for the first time at Stratford, although she is no stranger to Shakespeare. Godfrey Tearle, who is at present playing in the United States in "Anthony and Cleopatra", joins the company in July to play Othello. The role of Hamlet is to be played alternately by Robert Helpmann and Paul Scofield.

The Malvern Festival, which is to be revived on July 24 after a wartime lapse, honors Britain's greatest living playwright. Malvern is to Bernard Shaw as Stratford-upon-Avon is to Shakespeare. Before the war, the Malvern Festival, with a different play each night, with its garden parties, tea-time talks, Sunday concerts and an attractive festival club, was a delightful social occasion.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 22,106)

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

FEB 4 1948

Fourteen Concerts Scheduled At Berkshire Music Festival

The 1948 Berkshire Festival will consist of 14 concerts—the customary 3 series of 3 concerts each and 3 extra concerts, according to an announcement today by George E. Judd, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The Bach-Mozart concerts will open in the Theatre Concert Hall July 18. The first of the series of concerts in the Music Shed will open July 29. On Tuesday evening, Aug. 10, there will be an all-Tchaikovsky extra concert in the Music Shed.

Guest conductors during the 1948 Festival will be Leonard Bernstein, Eleazar de Carvalho and Robert Shaw.

The schedule follows: Extra concerts, two programs, Bach-Mozart Festival, Theatre Concert Hall, July 18, 20, 25 and 27; Music Shed, Series A, July 29, 31 and Aug. 1; Series B, Aug. 5, 7 and 8; extra concert, Aug. 10; Series C, Aug. 12, 14 and 15.

A six-week session will open at the Berkshire Music Center on July 5, ending Aug. 15, under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, with Aaron Copland as assistant director and a faculty which will include principal players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Instructions will be offered in five departments: Orchestral and choral conducting; orchestra and chamber music; composition; opera; choral singing and ensemble playing.

Numerous instrumental, choral and operatic performances will again be given by the Berkshire Music Center in 1948. Last year 48 such performances were presented. These performances will be open to members of the Society of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center and no tickets will be sold. A voluntary contribution to the support of the Music Center constitutes membership in the society.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 105,682) (S 160,274)

This Clipping From
FORT WORTH, TEXAS
MORNING STAR-TELEGRAM

Auditions for Music School To Be Available

Auditions and interviews for one of the most important American summer music schools for instrumentalists will be available this week in this region.

Due to the presence of Ralph Berkowitz, accompanist for Gregor Piatigorsky, who is to play next week with the Dallas Symphony Orchestra both in Fort Worth and Dallas, auditions and interviews may be arranged for Thursday, March 4, at Hotel Adolphus, Dallas. Berkowitz may be called between 10 and 10:30 a. m. Thursday for appointments.

The school will be held at Tanglewood (Lenox), Mass., from July 5 to Aug. 15 in connection with the Berkshire Festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Serge Koussevitzky in charge. Mail inquiries are to be addressed to Thomas D. Perry Jr., Berkshire Music Center, Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 131,044) (S 352,329)

This Clipping From
BOSTON, MASS.
MORNING GLOBE

FEB 11 1948

1948 Berkshire Festival of 14 Concerts to Run From July 18-Aug. 15

The Berkshire Festival of 1948 to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra — Serge Koussevitzky, conductor—at Tanglewood, the orchestra's Summer home in Lenox, consisting of 14 concerts from July 18 through Aug. 15. In the first two weeks two programs from the music of Bach and Mozart will be performed on Sunday afternoon, July 18, and Tuesday evening, July 20, and repeated on Sunday afternoon, July 25, and Tuesday evening, July 27. These concerts will be given in the intimate Theatre Concert Hall and conducted by Dr. Koussevitzky.

Three series will be given July 29-Aug. 15 with a Thursday evening, Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon concert for each series. An extra concert will be performed on Tuesday, Aug. 10, with an all-Tchaikovsky program. These concerts will be given in the Music Shed. While Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct most of the concerts three guest conductors have been invited: Leonard Bernstein, Eleazar de Carvalho and Robert Shaw.

The sixth season of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, the Summer home of which Dr. Koussevitzky is director, will begin on July 5 and continue through the festival period. Dr. Koussevitzky, supervising the conducting classes, will be assisted by a distinguished faculty including the orchestra's principals with departments in orchestral playing, chamber music, composition, opera and choral singing. The school activities will include concert and operatic performances.

A secial operatic production continuing the precedent of "Peter Grimes" and "Idomeneo" in the last two Summers will be announced shortly. Those who join the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center will be invited to these school performances.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 353,813) (S 708,754)
This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
FEB 15 1948

Dates Listed For Berkshire 1948 Events

14 Concerts Announced; Koussevitzky to Share Series With Three Guests

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give fourteen concerts in the 1948 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., from July 18 through July 25. Two programs of Bach and Mozart works will be conducted by Serge Koussevitzky on Sunday afternoons and Tuesday evenings, July 18-20 and 25-27, in the Berkshire Music Center's theater-concert hall. The usual three regular festival series will be given on Thursday and Saturday nights and Sunday afternoons; July 29, 31 and Aug. 1 (Series A); Aug. 5, 7 and 8 (Series B) and Aug. 12, 14 and 15 (Series C) in the Music Shed. Dr. Koussevitzky an three guests, Leonard Bernstein, Eleazar de Carvalho and Robert Shaw, will conduct these concerts. An extra concert of Tchaikovsky's music will be given on Tuesday night, Aug. 10.

The sixth season of the Berkshire Music Center under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction will be held at Tanglewood for six weeks beginning Monday, July 5, with departments of orchestral playing chamber music, composition, opera and choral singing. As before, the Center will give many concert and opera performances, including a special production of a new or unfamiliar opera. Members of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center will be invited to these performances.

Members of the Boston Symphony will hold auditions for those who wish to join the Berkshire Music Center's student orchestras this week in the Chapter Room of Carnegie Hall; on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday mornings at 10 o'clock for strings, wood winds and brass, respectively, and Friday morning at 10:30 for pianists. Auditions for tympani, percussion and harp will be held backstage in Carnegie Hall Wednesday evening at 7 o'clock. Applicants must notify Thomas D. Perry jr., Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass., which audition they wish to attend. Catalogues and other information about the Center can also be obtained by writing to Mr. Perry.

The first Berkshire Festivals were held in 1934 and 1935 under Henry Hadley's direction; the Boston Symphony began its long association with this series in 1936. The festivals were moved to Tanglewood in 1937, and the Music Shed was opened the following summer. The Berkshire Music Center made its debut in 1940. In 1942, owing to war-time conditions, the Boston Symphony did not take part, but students at the Center gave a festival series under Dr. Koussevitzy. There were no Tanglewood concerts in 1943, but a Mozart series in 1944 and a Bach-Mozart series in 1945 prefaced the resumption of the full-scale festivals in 1946

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 42,100)
This Clipping From
PORTLAND, ME.
PRESS HERALD
FEB 10 1948

Dates Listed For Festival

14 Concerts Slated By Symphony

Announcements have been received here of the dates and particulars for the Berkshire Festival of 1948 to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood, the orchestra's summer home in Lenox, Mass. Of unusual interest to Maine persons are the dates of the festival as it will be during the summer season that dedication of the Little Red House, the project of the National Federation of Music Clubs, under the chairmanship of Mrs. Guy Patterson Gannett of this city, will take place.

The festival will consist of 14 concerts from July 18 through Aug. 15 Programs from the music of Bach and Mozart will be performed on Sunday afternoon, July 18, and Tuesday evening, July 20, and repeated Sunday afternoon, July 25, and Tuesday evening, July 27.

These concerts will be given in the Theater Concert Hall and conducted by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. Three series will be given the third, fourth and fifth weeks. An extra concert will be performed Tuesday, Aug. 10, with an all-Tschaikovsky program. These concerts will be given in the Music Shed. While Doctor Koussevitzky will conduct most of the concerts, three guest conductors have been invited, Leonard Bernstein, Eleazar de Carvalho and Robert Shaw.

The sixth season of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, the summer school of which Doctor Koussevitzky is the director, will begin July 5 and continue for six weeks through the Festival period.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 48,307) (S 97,521)
This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
FEB 11 1948

14 Concerts Scheduled For Berkshire Fete

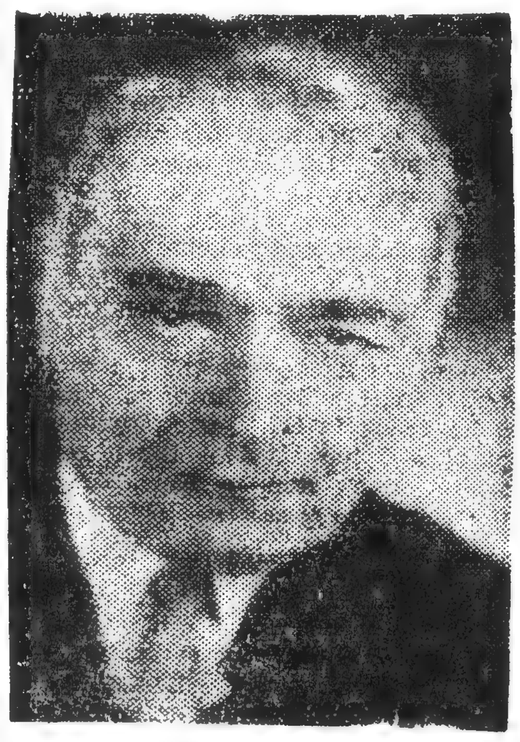
BOSTON, Wednesday (AP)—A schedule of 14 concerts from July 18 through Aug. 15 was announced by the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday for the 1948 Berkshire Festival. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct most of the concerts, but Leonard Bernstein, Eleazar De Carvalho and Robert Shaw have been invited as guest conductors.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 49,564)
This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
FEB 9 1948

Berkshire Music Festival Summer Plans Announced

Tanglewood Event Will Start July 18; Guest Conductors Will Include Bernstein, de Carvalho and Shaw; Opera Also On Agenda

Boston, Feb. 9—Dates and particulars are announced for the Berkshire Festival of 1948 to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra—Serge Koussevitzky, conductor—at Tanglewood, the orchestra's summer home in Lenox. The Festival will consist of 14 concerts from July 18 through August 15. In the first two weeks, two programs from the music of Bach and Mozart will be performed on Sunday afternoon, July 18, and Tuesday evening, July 20, and repeated on Sunday afternoon, July 25, and Tuesday evening, July 27. These concerts will be given in the intimate Theater Concert Hall and conducted by Dr. Koussevitzky. Three series will be given in the third, fourth, and fifth weeks (July 29—August 15) with a Thursday evening, Saturday evening, and Sunday afternoon concert for each series. After Series B, an extra concert will be performed on Tuesday, August 10, with an all-Tchaikovsky program. These concerts will be given in the Music Shed. While Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct most of the concerts, three guest conductors have been invited: Leonard Bernstein, Eleazar de Carvalho, and Robert Shaw. ~~Soloists are to be announced.~~



SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

Summer School

The sixth season of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, the summer school of which Serge Koussevitzky is director, will begin on July 5, and continue for six weeks (through the Festival period). Dr. Koussevitsky, supervising the conducting classes, will be assisted by a distinguished faculty including the orchestra's principals with departments in orchestral playing, chamber music, composition, opera, and choral singing. The school activities will include a large number of concert and operatic performances. A special operatic production continuing the precedent of "Peter Grimes" and "Idomeneo" in the last two summers will shortly be announced. Those who join the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center will be invited to these school performances.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (S 181,496)
This Clipping From
COLUMBUS, OHIO
DISPATCH

Tanglewood Schedule Is Listed

BOSTON—Dates and particulars are announced for Berkshire Festival of 1948 to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra—Serge Koussevitzky, conductor—at Tanglewood, the orchestra's summer home in Lenox, Mass. The Festival will consist of 14 concerts from July 18 through Aug. 15. In the first two weeks, two programs from the music of Bach and Mozart will be performed on Sunday afternoon, July 18, and Tuesday evening, July 20, and repeated on Sunday afternoon, July 25, and Tuesday evening, July 27. These concerts will be given in the intimate Theater Concert Hall and conducted by Dr. Koussevitzky. Three series will be given in the third, fourth and fifth weeks (July 29-Aug. 15) with a Thursday evening, Saturday evening, and Sunday afternoon concert for each series. After Series B, an extra concert will be performed on Tuesday, Aug. 10, with an all-Tchaikovsky program. These concerts will be given in the Music Shed. While Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct most of the concerts, three guest conductors have been invited: Leonard Bernstein, Eleazar de Carvalho, and Robert Shaw. Soloists are to be announced.

The sixth season of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, the summer school of which Serge Koussevitzky is director, will begin on July 5, and continue for six weeks (through the Festival period.) Dr. Koussevitzky, supervising the conducting classes, will be assisted by a distinguished faculty including the orchestra's principals with departments in orchestral playing, chamber music, composition, opera, and choral singing. The school activities will include a large number of concert and operatic performances. A special operatic production continuing the precedent of "Peter Grimes" and Idomeneo" in the last two summers will shortly be announced. Those who join the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center will be invited to these school performances.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

E ORIGINAL
MEIKE
S CLIPPINGS
, NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
CHelsea 3-8860

Clipping From INGTON, D. C.
ES HERALD

sic Laments Its Own Housing

c Shed Shelter ss Arts

DILLARD GUNN

bration of Washsesquicentennial, take place two hence, looms omi-
the local musical calls for music, drama. All of will have to be from neighboring the arts are pized than in this endent community, possible if not really ington allows its al Symphony to ck of a mere $165,- resident orchestra,

Capital will revert and unhonored
the cultural sticks,
even by Nashville,
Colo. or Norfolk.
the 23 large support resident stras and make creditable gestures independent opera.
pital of the world's but it has no
no opera house, concert hall, so the sesquicentennial its pageants,
dramas be staged?
present unsettled dition of the the world will Con-appropriation for
That seems un-will not spend 20 an opera house worthy of the Being as-committee of headed by Harriman, is seek-the great foun-

THIS IS TANGLEWOOD, the Boston Symphony's acoustic shed which cost $50,000 and changed the orchestra's summer activities from a loss to a profit. The National Symphony wants a similar shed to weather-proof its summer festival.

dations or from wealthy estates and individuals.

But time is short. Great buildings do not arise at the command of a magician's wand. Eighteen months were required by the architect to perfect plans for the National Gallery of Art, and three years were needed to build it. The total cost was $15,500,000.

♫

EVIDENTLY Washington will be obliged to content itself with something more modest if plans commensurate with the importance of the occasion are to be carried out by 1950.

In that connection, it has been recommended that a great acoustic shed be built in some suitable location, perhaps on a hillside in Rock Creek park. The Boston Symphony built such a shed for its summer concerts at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass., at a cost of only $50,000. It is pictured herewith.

It has proved practical. Unlike our Watergate, or New York's Lewisohn stadium, its costly programs of symphony, opera, and chamber music proceed according to schedule, regardless of weather conditions.

At $50,000, costs would not be prohibitive. Congress might even be persuaded to assume them. Washington's summer music would find permanent shelter from the elements and the sesquicentennial celebrations could be adequately housed.

♫

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 18,124)

This Clipping From MANCHESTER, N. H.
LEADER

FEB 14 1948

Symphony to Be At Tanglewood

BOSTON—Dates and particulars are announced for the Berkshire Festival of 1948 to be given by the Boston Symphony orchestra—Serge Koussevitsky, conductor—at Tanglewood, the orchestra's summer home in Lenox, Mass. The festival will consist of 14 concerts from July 18 through August 15.

In the first two weeks, two programs from the music of Bach and Mozart will be performed on Sunday atfernoon, July 18, and Tuesday evening, July 20, and repeated on Sunday afternoon, July 25, and Tuesday evening, July 27. These concerts will be given in the intimate Theatre Concert hall and conducted by Dr. Koussevitzky.

Three series will be given in the third, fourth, and fifth weeks (July 29-August 15) with a Thursday evening, Saturday evening, and Sunday afternoon concert for each series. After Series B, an extra concert will be performed on Tuesday, August 10, with an all-Tchaikovsky program. These concerts will be given in the Music Shed. While Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct most of the concerts, three guest conductors have been invited: Leonard Bernstein, Eleazar de Carvalho and Robert Shaw. Soloists are to be announced.

THE ORIGINAL
OMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
(D 353,813) (S 708,754)

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

FEB

Symphony to Give wood Concerts

Boston Symphony Or-announced today that it fourteen concerts in the Festival at Tangle-
Mass. Two programs and Mozart's music will each under Serge direction in the Center's theateron Sunday afternoon nights, July 18-20
The customary three series will be given Shed, as usual, on and Saturday nights afternoons, July 29,
1 (Series A); Aug. 5,
Series B), and Aug. 12, Series C). An extra of Tchaikovsky's music
Tuesday night, Aug. will be conducted by
and three guests,
Bernstein, Eleazar de
Robert Shaw.
Music Center will session at Tangle-
Dr. Koussevitzky's di-Monday, July 5. The will include a of concert and opera among these a spe-
of a new or un-

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 142,968) (S 150,656)

This Clipping From DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS

MAR

Berkshire Festival To Have Three Guest Conductors

BOSTON, Mass., March 10.—Leonard Bernstein, Robert Shaw, and Eleazar de Carvalho will be the guest conductors for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood this summer, according to Serge Koussevitzky, the orchestra's permanent conductor.

Opening with two concerts, July 18 and 20, conducted by Koussevitzky, the festival also will include three series of three concerts each and a special Tchaikovsky concert August 10. The first series, July 29 and 31 and August 1, will include performances of Mahler's Second ("Resurrection") Symphony and Piston's Third.

Strauss' "Don Quixote" with Gregor Piatigorsky, as soloist, "Oedipus Rex" by Stravinsky, "Madona" by Villa-Lobos, "El Amor Brujo" by Falla, wil be included on the second series, August 5, 7, 8. The third, August 12, 14, 15, will include music by Beethoven, Schumann, Weber, Stravinsky, Sibelius.

Berkshire Music Center Classes Begin Today

With an enrollment of 445 students, twenty-eight more than last year and the largest in its history, the Berkshire Music Center will begin its sixth season at exercises in the Theater-Concert Hall at Tanglewood today at 3:30 o'clock. The students this year come from forty-two states, the District of Columbia, Alaska, and thirteen foreign countries. Of the 262 men students, 111 are former G. I.s.

Speakers at the opening will be Serge Koussevitzky, founder and director of the school; Aaron Copland, the assistant director, and Dr. Lewis Perry, chairman of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, who will also represent the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. There will be the traditional singing by the entire student body of Randall Thompson's "Alleluia," composed for the first opening exercises in 1940.

The Berkshire Festival will begin Sunday afternoon, July 18, with the first of the Bach-Mozart concerts in the Theater-Concert Hall. The first concert in the Music Shed will be Thursday evening, July 29.

THE ORIG
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 23,990)

This Clipping From LEWISTON, ME.
SUN

FEB 25 1948

Boston Symphony To Give Ninth Berkshire Festival

Dates and particulars are announced for the Berkshire Festival of 1948 to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra—Serge Koussevitzky, Conductor—at Tanglewood, the orchestra's summer home in Lenox, Mass. The Festival will consist of fourteen concerts from July 18 through August 15. In the first two weeks, two programs from the music of Bach and Mozart will be performed on Sunday afternoon, July 18, and Tuesday evening, July 20, and repeated on Sunday afternoon, July 25, and Tuesday evening, July 27. These concerts will be given in the intimate Theatre Concert Hall and conducted by Dr. Koussevitzky.

Three series will be given in the third, fourth, and fifth weeks (July 29—August 15) with a Thursday evening, Saturday evening, and Sunday afternoon concert for each series. After Series B, an extra concert will be performed on Tuesday, August 10, with an all-Tchaikovsky program. These concerts will be given in the Music Shed. While Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct most of the concerts, three guest condctors have been invited: Leonard Bernstein, Eleazar de Carvalho, and Robert Shaw. Soloists are to be announced.

The sixth season of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, the summer school of which Serge Koussevitzky is director, will begin on July 5, and continue for six weeks (through the Festical period). Dr. Koussevitzky, supervising the conducting classes, will be assisted by a distinguished faculty including the orchestra's principals with departments in orchestral playing, chamber music, composition, opera, and choral singing.

The school activities will include a large number of concert and operatic performances. A special operatic production continuing the precedent of "Peter Grimes" and "Idomeneo" in the last two summers will shortly be announced. Those who join the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center will be invited to these school performances.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 12,764)

This Clipping From
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
MAR 6 1948

Festival to Offer Present Day Music

To Balance Classical Compositions at Nine Tanglewood Concerts at Lenox This Summer.

Contemporary works will balance classical compositions at the nine Berkshire festival concerts to be given at Tanglewood, Lenox, this summer, it was disclosed today when Dr. Serge Koussèvitzky, music director of the Boston Symphony orchestra, announced his program selections.

Five extra concerts, however, will be devoted exclusively to the works of classic masters. Four of them will comprise the music of Bach and Mozart and the fifth of Tschaikowsky's compositions.

At the first series of festival concerts, which will be given on Thursday evening, July 29, Saturday evening, July 31, and Sunday afternoon, Aug. 1, the Boston Symphony orchestra will play Beethoven's fifth symphony, Brahms' second, Mahler's second ("Resurrection") with chorus and soloists, Piston's third, a Hayden symphony, Bach's third orchestral suite and Hindemith's "Mathis der Maler."

In the B series, on the evenings of Aug. 5 and 7 and the afternoon of Aug. 8, the orchestra will perform Beethoven's sixth ("Pastoral") symphony, the fifth symphony of Shostakovich whose work Dr. Koussevitzky introduced to this country and still likes, although the Russian Soviet hierarchy recently denounced it; "Berlioz's "Fantastic" symphony, Strauss's "Don Quixote" with Gregor Piatigorsky as 'cello soloist; Stravinsky's "Oedipus Rex," the "Madona" by Villa-Lobos and Falla's "El Amor Brujo."

At the concerts in Series C, on Aug. 12, 14 and 15, the orchestra will play Beethoven's third "Eroica") symphony, Schumann's first ("Spring") symphony, Weber's "Freischuetz" overture, Stravinski's "Petrouchka" complete, Sibelius' second symphony and a major choral work still to be chosen.

The Bach-Mozart concerts which Dr. Koussevitsky will conduct will be presented on Sunday afternoon, July 18, and Tuesday evening, July 20, in the Tanglewood theater-concert hall and will be repeated the following Sunday and Tuesday. The extra Tschaikowsky concert will be given Tuesday evening, Aug. 10.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 538,914) (S 1,002,765)

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
FEB 10 1948

3 PODIUM GUESTS AT BERKSHIRE FETE

Bernstein, de Carvalho, Shaw Invited to Aid Koussevitzky With Festival Concerts

Leonard Bernstein, Eleazar de Carvalho and Robert Shaw have been invited to be guest conductors of the Boston Symphony Orchestra during the month-long Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., it was announced yesterday. They will participate, along with Serge Koussevitzky, the orchestra's conductor, in the three series of concerts to be given in the Music Shed.

The music of Bach and Mozart will be presented in the first two weeks of the Festival, the concerts of Sunday, July 18, and Tuesday, July 20 (evenings), to be repeated the next Sunday and Thursday.

These performances will be given in the Theatre Concert Hall, under Dr. Koussevitzky. He will be assisted ~~by guest~~ conductors for some of the following concerts in the Music Shed:

Series A: Thursday evening, July 29; Saturday evening, July 31, and Sunday afternoon, Aug. 1.

Series B: Aug. 5-8, same times.

Extra concert, Tuesday, Aug. 10, All-Tchaikovsky program.

Series C: Aug. 12-15.

The Berkshire Music Center, also at Tanglewood, will open on July 5 and continue for six weeks. It will present classes in orchestral and chamber music, opera and choral singing, composition and conducting. Another operatic production will be undertaken.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 82,213)

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
JUN 19 1948

8 American Soloists Booked for Berkshire

Eight singers, all of them American born and trained, will appear as soloists at the Berkshire Festival this summer, Serge Koussevitzky has announced. Although young artists make up the entire list, all but one of them has sung before with the Boston Symphony.

They are: Ellabelle Davis, Ellen Faull, and Frances Yeend, sopranos; Eunice Alberts and Carol Brice, contraltos; David Lloyd, tenor; and James Pease, bass-baritone. The single newcomer to the orchestra is Nan Merriman, mezzo-soprano, who will be soloist with Miss Davis Sunday afternoon, Aug. 1, in the Mahler Symphony No. 2 ("Resurrection"), Leonard Bernstein conducting.

* * *

WESLEY ADDY, who has appeared in the Shakespearean productions of Maurice Evans and with Katharine Cornell in "Antigone," will be the narrator in Stravinsky's "Oedipus" with the full orchestra, soloists and chorus on Thursday evening, Aug. 5, Dr. Koussevitzky conducting. Singers are Miss Brice, Mr. Lloyd, and Mr. Pease.

Miss Brice, who was a Koussevitzky discovery and introduced at a meeting of the Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra two years ago, will sing the passages for voice in Falla's "El Amor Brujo" Sunday afternoon, Aug. 8, under the direction of Eleazar de Carvalho.

At the concert which Robert Shaw will conduct on Saturday evening, Aug. 14, Miss Faull and Miss Alberts will be soloists in "The Blessed Damozel" of Debussy and Miss Yeend and Mr. Pease in the Brahms "Requiem." Miss Yeend, Miss Alberts, and Mr. Pease with Mr. Lloyd made up the quartet of soloists for the Beethoven Ninth Symphony at last year's Festival. Miss Faull was the soprano in Beethoven's Missa Solemnis in Boston this season.

* * *

ALREADY ANNOUNCED as soloists are Isaac Stern, violinist; Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist, and Seymour Lipkin, pianist. On Saturday evening, July 31, Mr. Stern will play the Prokofieff Concerto, No. 1. Piatigorsky will be heard in Richard Strauss' tone poem, "Don Quixote," Koussevitzky conducting.

Seymour Lipkin's performance of the Piano Concerto No. 1 under Koussevitzky at the all-Tchaikowsky concert Tuesday evening, Aug. 10, will be both his Boston Symphony and Tanglewood debut. The 20-year-old Detroit pianist is this year's winner of the Rachmaninoff Fund Award.

The Festival begins with a Bach concert on Sunday afternoon, July 18, and a Mozart concert Tuesday evening, July 20, to be repeated, respectively, July 25 and July 27, all under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIK
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11,
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 167,987) (S 216,785)

This Clipping From MEMPHIS, TENN.
COMMERCIAL APPEAL
MAR 7 1948

Berkshire Festival Will Open July

Koussevitzky Making 194 Plans Early

BOSTON, March 6. — Dr. Se ~~Koussevitzky~~ Saturday nounced plans for the 1948 Be shire Music Center at Tanglew Lennox, Mass., a six-week ses from July 5 to Aug. 15, thro the period of the Berkshire tival concerts.

Dr. Koussevitzky will direct schools, with Aaron Copland assistant director. Among the ulty, in addition to 25 prin players of the Boston Symph Orchestra, will be Leonard B stein, Richard Burgin and El da Carvalho, assisting Dr. Ko vitzky in conducting, Hugh and Robert Shaw in char choral conducting, and G Piatigorsky, head of Chamber sic. Darius Milhaud will re from France to join Aaron C land as teacher of composi Boris Goldovsky will be hea
the Opera Department.

There will be five departm as in former seasons: Conduc
Orchestra and Chamber M
Composition, Opera and Ch
New features of the curriculu clude a chamber orchestra
Mr. de Carvalho to be made members of the opera orches course in costume design
Opera Department under Leo
Witsen, a seminar in very ol very new music to be headed by Aaron Copland and Julius Herford.

There will be some 40 school performances, including a special opera production in the tradition of "Peter Grimes" and "Idomeneo" to which members of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, an organization of contributors to the school, will be invited. The Music Center was initiated by Dr. Koussevitzky in 1940, and is sponsored by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 18,073)

This Clipping From
POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
NEW YORKER
FEB 15 1948

Berkshire Festival Dates Made Known

Dates and particulars are announced for the Berkshire Festival of 1948 to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra—Serge Koussevitzky, conductor—at Tanglewood, the orchestra's summer home in Lenox, Mass. The Festival will consist of 14 concerts from July 18 through August 15. In the first two weeks, two programs from the music of Bach and Mozart will be performed on Sunday afternoon, July 18, and Tuesday night, July 20, and repeated on Sunday afternoon, July 25, and Tuesday night, July 27. These concerts will be given in the intimate Theater Concert Hall and conducted by Dr. Koussevitzky. Three series will be given in the third, fourth, and fifth weeks (July 29-August 15) with a Thursday night, Saturday night and Sunday afternoon concert for each series. After Series B, an extra concert will be performed on Tuesday, t 10, with an all-Tchaikovsky ram. These concerts will be given in the Music Shed. While Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct most of the concerts, three guest conductors have been invited: Leonard Bernstein, Eleazar de Carvalho, and Robert Shaw. Soloists are to be announced.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 353,813) (S 708,754)

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
FEB 12 1948

Boston Symphony to Give 14 Tanglewood Concerts

The Boston Symphony Orchestra announced Tuesday that it will give fourteen concerts in the 1948 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. Two programs of Bach's and Mozart's music will be given twice, each under Serge Koussevitzky's direction in the Berkshire Music Center's theater-concert hall on Sunday afternoons and Tuesday nights, July 18-20 and 25-27. The customary three regular festival series will be given in the Music Shed, as usual, on Thursday and Saturday nights and Sunday afternoons, July 29, 31 and Aug. 1 (Series A); Aug. 5, 7 and 8 (Series B), and Aug. 12, 14 and 15 (Series C). An extra concert of Tchaikovsky's music will be given Tuesday night, Aug. 10. These will be conducted by Dr. Koussevitzky and three guests, Leonard Bernstein, Eleazar de Carvalho and Robert Shaw.

The Berkshire Music Center will open its sixth session at Tanglewood under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction on Monday, July 5. The school's activities will include a large number of concert and opera performances; among these a special production of a new or unfamiliar opera.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (S 181,496)

This Clipping From COLUMBUS, OHIO
DISPATCH
JUN 20 1948

SEYMOUR LIPKIN'S performance of the Piano Concerto No. 1 under Koussevitzky at the all-Tchaikowsky concert Tuesday evening, August 10, will be both his Boston Symphony and Tanglewood debut. The 20-year old Detroit pianist is this year's winner of the Rachmaninoff Fund Award.

The festival begins with a Bach concert on Sunday afternoon, July 18, and a Mozart concert Tuesday evening, July 20, to be repeated, respectively, July 25 and July 27, all under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 1,026,164) (S 1,473,491)

This Clipping From CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE
JUN 20 1948

'Turk in Italy' to Be Played at Tanglewood

The Berkshire Music Center has chosen an almost forgotten Rossini opera, "The Turk in Italy," for production in the Theater-Concert hall at Tanglewood (between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass.) the evenings of Aug. 9 and 11, during the final week of the Berkshire Festival. Third in an annual series begun with "Peter Grimes" and continued with "Idomeneo," the Rossini work will be sung in English with a revised libretto.

Festival programs played by the Boston Symphony orchestra follow:

A Bach program under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky July 18 at 3:30 and July 27 at 8:15; a Mozart program also under Mr. Koussevitzky's direction, July 20 at 8:15 and July 25 at 3:30. These in the Theater-Concert hall.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

THE ORIGINA
ROMEI
PRESS CLIPPING
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 167,987) (S 216,7

This Clipping From MEMPHIS, TENN.
COMMERCIAL APPEA

MAR 7 - 1948

Berkshire Festiva Will Open July

Koussevitzky Making Plans Early

BOSTON, March 6. — Dr. Koussevitzky Saturday nounced plans for the 1948 shire Music Center at Tangl Lennox, Mass., a six-week from July 5 to Aug. 15, t the period of the Berkshir tival concerts.

Dr. Koussevitzky will dir schools, with Aaron Copl assistant director. Among t ulty, in addition to 25 p players of the Boston Sy Orchestra, will be Leonard stein, Richard Burgin and da Carvalho, assisting Dr. vitzky in conducting, Hu and Robert Shaw in c very much alive and will on the scene in the flesh appointed hour. It is the of those involved as to how will react to his appearance occupy much of the action. cast which Mr. Yerian will is as follows:

Actress) ..Virginia Estes Busby Adopted Daughter).Blanche Pope Husband) ....Hubert Lewis Leading Man)..Starke Patteson
(Her Friend
Protege) ....Patricia Maher
Father) ....George R. Wells Personal Maid).Jane Martin

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 116216)

This Clipping From
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD JOURNAL

Berkshire Festival Soloists All American Born and Trained

EIGHT SINGERS, all of them American born and trained, will [illegible] val this summer, Serge [illegible] ton Symphony Orchestra, [illegible] the entire list, all but [illegible] Boston Symphony. They are: [illegible] soprano; Frances Yeend, [illegible] ol Brice, contralto; David [illegible] tone. The single newcomer [illegible] zo-soprano, who will be [illegible] on, Aug. 1, in the Mahler [illegible] Leonard Bernstein conducting. [illegible] is for will be that of the [illegible] sang in the Mahler Symphony [illegible] ruary, Wesley Addy, who has [illegible] ons of Maurice Evans and [illegible] will be the narrator in [illegible] with the full orchestra, soloists and chorus [illegible] day night, Aug. 5, Dr. Koussevitzky conducting. The [illegible] Miss Brice, Mr. Lloyd, Mr. Pease. Miss Brice, who was a [illegible] discovery and was introduced at a meeting of the [illegible] of the Boston Symphony Orchestra two years ago, will sing [illegible] Falla's "El Amor Brujo" Sunday after- [illegible] Aug. 8, under the direction of Eleazar de Carvalho. At the [illegible] which Robert Shaw will conduct on Saturday night, Aug. [illegible] Faull and Miss Alberts will be soloists in "The Blessed [illegible] of Debussy and Miss Yeend and Mr. Pease in the Brahms

---

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 55,764) (S 93,871)

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

JUN 20 1948

The Lively Arts

By T. H. PARKER

With its flair for the recherche, the opera department of the Berkshire Music Center will present Rossini's "Il Turco in Italia" at Tanglewood on the evenings of August 9 and 11, during the last week of the Berkshire Festival.

"Il Turco," or "The Turk In Italy" as it will be called because the work will be presented in English, was first presented in Milan in August, 1814, and had its premiere in the King's Theater, London about two years later. Then, after a lapse of five years, the Garcias presented it in America in 1826.

Since then, there is no record of its performance. Whether it was inspired by Rossini's sense of humor as a counter-piece to "L'Italiana in Algeri" has never been speculated, but it followed that work by about a year. "Aureliano in Palmira" came between the two, being presented in December 1813.

"Aureliano" turned out to be far from a success, and "Il Turco" was not too well received, though later it gained in public enthusiasm, and parts of it were pillaged for inclusion in other Rossini operas.

* * *

The idea that "Il Turco" should be revived for presentation at the Berkshire Festival came from Helmuth Wolfes, conductor and coach and a brother of Felix Wolfes of the Berkshire Music Center faculty, who was doing research on the Rossini comedy. Mr. Wolfes will supply orchestrations where they are missing from existing scores. Boris Goldovsky, head of the Center opera department will be responsible for the revised text.

Scores for "Il Turco" are hard to come by. Mr. Goldovsky reports that a manuscript copy of it was found in a collection of music which Major Henry L. Higginson, founder of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bought from the Palermo opera house. Italy was unable to yield a complete score, but curiously enough, another partial orchestral score was found in Boston, in the Brown Collection of the Public Library. Piano scores were found in the Widener Library at Harvard and in the library of the Harvard Musical Associataion.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 166,696) (S 173,806)

This Clipping From
WASHINGTON, D. C.
POST

JUN 20 1948

Bach and Mozart at Berkshire

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky's direction, will open the Berkshire Festival this summer with two pairs of weekend concerts devoted to the music of Bach and Mozart. These concerts will be given in the Theater-Concert Hall at Tanglewood, the summer home of the orchestra in Lenox, Mass. Dr. Koussevitzky announces for Sunday afternoon, July 18, a Bach program consisting of:

Brandenburg Concerto No. 3, in G major, for strings.
Cantata No. 65, "Sie Werden aus Saba Alle Kommen" (tenor, bass, chorus).
Concerto in D minor for three pianos and strings.
(Soloists: Lukas Foss, Bernard Zighera, Ralph Berkowitz.)
Suite No. 2, in B minor, for flute and strings.
(Soloist: Georges Laurent.)
Concerto in C major, for three pianos and strings.

On Tuesday evening, July 20, the following all-Mozart program will be performed:

Symphony in C major, K. 338 (34).
Serenade ("Nacht Musique") for Winds, K. 338.
Piano concerto in G major, K. 453.
(Soloist: Lukas Foss.)
Symphony in E-flat major, K. 543 (39).

The Mozart program will be repeated on Sunday afternoon, July 25, and the Bach program on Tuesday evening, July 27.

HENRY THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE NEW YORK
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
220 West 19th St., New York 11, N. Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

MONTICELLO, N.Y
NEWS
6/20/48

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky's direction, will open the Berkshire Festival this summer with two pairs of week-end concerts devoted to the music of Bach and Mozart. The concerts will be given at the theater-concert hall at Tanglewood, the summer home of the orchestra near Lenox, Mass. The Bach program will be given July 18 and the Mozart on July 20.

ORIGINAL
EIKE
LIPPINGS
NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Chelsea 3-8860
12,764)

This Clipping From ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

5 1948

phonic Festival sts 14 Concerts

Program to Feature Major Concerts Five Extra Ones, July 18.

the same pattern as last the 1948 program Berkshire Symphonic festi- Stockbridge, is a concerts and five extra the Boston Symphony manager of the announced the program at the same time the Berkshire Music school for advanced conducted each Tanglewood by Serge Boston Symphony di- [illegible] season [illegible] Aug. 15 with the [illegible]

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 116,216)

This Clipping From
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD JOURNAL

JUN 20 1948

Seymour Lipkin, 20, Rachmaninoff Fund Award Winner, to Play Aug. 10

ALREADY ANNOUNCED as soloists for the Festival are Isaac Stern, violinist; Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist; and Seymour Lipkin, pianist. On Saturday night, July 31, Mr. Stern will play under Dr. Koussevitzky's baton, the Prokofieff Concerto, No. 1. Piatigorsky, who has been soloist with the Boston Symphony on 25 previous occasions, two of them at Tanglewood, will be heard in Richard Strauss' tone poem "Don Quixote," Dr. Koussevitzky conducting.

Seymour Lipkin's performance of the Piano Concerto No. 1 under Dr. Koussevitzky at the all-Tchaikowsky concert Tuesday night, Aug. 10, will be both his Boston Symphony and Tanglewood debut. The 20-year-old Detroit pianist is this year's winner of the Rachmaninoff Fund Award. The Festival begins with a Bach concert on Sunday afternoon, July 18, and a Mozart concert Tuesday night, July 20, to be repeated, respectively, July 25 and July 27, all under direction of Dr. Koussevitzky.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 77,362) (S 94,069)

This Clipping From
YOUNGSTOWN, OHIO
VINDICATOR

JUN 20 1948

FRANCES YEEND

Never in memory has the Berkshire Festival been of as much local interest as it is this Summer, with a number of Alabama folks vacationing in the Berkshires and such Birmingham artists as John and Martha Light working with Serge Koussevitzky, musical director of the Boston Symphony and his staff.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 33,028)

This Clipping From
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE

JUN 22 1948

When the Berkshire Music Center opens at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., on July 5 it will have a registration of 416 students. There were 914 applicants. The group accepted includes 256 men and 160 women representing 40 states and 10 foreign countries.

Serge Koussevitzky, who directs both the center and the Berkshire Festival, has returned to Lenox after vacationing at Saratoga Springs. He has announced eight young vocalists, American born and trained, as the soloists for this summer's festival. They are Ellabelle Davis, Ellen Faull and Frances Yeend, sopranos; Nan Merriman, mezzo-soprano; Eunice Alberts and Carol Brice, contraltos; David Lloyd, tenor; and James Pease, bass-baritone.

Other soloists for the festival will include Isaac Stern, violinist; Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist; and Seymour Lipkin, pianist. Lipkin is the 20-year-old Detroit pianist who won this year's Rachmaninoff Fund award.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 221,127)
This Clipping From
BALTIMORE, MD.
NEWS-POST
JU 3 1948

BachProgram To Open Fete In Berkshires

Under Serge Koussevitsky, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will open the music festival at Tanglewood in the Berkshires, on the afternoon of Sunday, July 18, with the first two all-Bach programs.

The string orchestra will play the third Brandenburg Concerto, and collaborate in two concerts for three pianos and strings. The three soloists will be Lukas Voss, Bernard Zighern and Ralph Berkowitz.

The Cantata No. 65, "Sie Werden aus Saba All Kommen," for tenor, bass and chorus, will be given also, and Georges Laurent will be the flute soloist for the B-minor Suite.

The first All-Mozart program will be given on July 20 and repeated on Sunday, July 25, with the Bach program to be repeated on July 27.

Two series of concerts by the full orchestra will be given, the first series opening on July 29.

The many Baltimoreans who spend their holiday enjoying the festival in the Berkshires, will be happy to learn that, though Dr. Koussevitsky's resignation as conductor of the Boston Orchestra will take effect at the end of the 1948-49 season, he will continue to direct the festival at Lenox, on the Tanglewood estate. H.A.F.P.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 6,868)
This Clipping From
BURLINGTON, N. C.
TIMES NEWS
JUN 21 1948

Music Notes . . .

By HELEN KING

The National Federation of Music Clubs will have three scholarship students at the Berkshire Music School at Tanglewood this summer. These scholarships are made possible through the generosity of the Newport, Rhode Island. Music Club. The Berkshire Music Center, in Massachusetts is under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, with Robert Shaw, choral director. The scholarships offered are unusually generous in that they not only cover full tuition for the season but also an allowance of $180 for living expenses while the students are registered at the Center.

Mr. Koussevitzky in resigning his post as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has named Charles Muench as his successor. While Mr. Koussevitzky will remain with the Boston Orchestra as guest conductor and does not intend to give up the leadership of the Berkshire Music Center, there is little doubt that his resignation closes a musical chapter for Boston, and for the country. His twenty-five years with the Boston Symphony will have been the longest for any conductor in the U. S., save Frederick Stock in Chicago.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 162,923) (S 164,519)
This Clipping From PORTLAND, ORE.
JOURNAL
JU

HEADS MUSIC CLUBS—Mae Ross Walker, elected president at recent convention of state music federation.

NEW PRESIDENT—Donald W. Allton heads new district of Oregon Music Teachers association at Eugene.

Berkshire Music Festival Offers Special Features

Announcement of special features for the annual Berkshire Music festival, which is of interest to musicians and students all over the country, has been made. This year's festival begins July 18 with the Bach-Mozart series conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, music director of the Boston Symphony orchestra, and continues through August 15. In addition to the opening series, there will be 11 concerts by the Boston symphony.

The operatic production will be a Rossini work, virtually lost for more than 100 years. Boris Goldovsky, opera department head, announced "The Turk In Italy" will be given in English for the first time on record August 9 and 11 in the Theatre-Concert hall at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. As with "Peter Grimes," which had its American premiere at the festival, "The Turk" will be presented for Friends of the Berkshire Music Center only.

* * *

THIS OPERA was Rossini's 13th and first was produced in 1814 at Milan. The Garcias brought it to America in 1826 and there is no record of any performance here after that time.

Letters of invitation for renewal of membership in the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center have gone out from Dr. Lewis Perry, chairman. In addition to the opera, 30 or more school events will be open to members. Requests for information may be addressed to the office of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 8,534)
This Clipping From
TORRINGTON, CONN.
REGISTER
JUN 25 1948

40 Events Scheduled On Tanglewood Program

Forty musical events will be open, by invitation, to friends of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., during the six weeks session of the school. Starting with initial exercises Sunday afternoon, July 4, they will include symphony concerts, choral and chamber music concerts on four successive Wednesday evenings, gift of Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, and two by the Juilliard String Quartet.

The performances, excepting the Coolidge and Juilliard concerts, will be by students admitted to the school because of outstanding musical talent. Initiated in 1940 by Serge Koussevitzky, and founded by the Boston Symphony orchestra, the center is not a school for technical musical training, "but rather a place where provision is made for the study of music on an advanced level through experience in group performance." Dr. Koussevitzky states the purpose as "to give our students constructive advice and a practical method which will stimulate their gifts, round out their abilities gained during their years of study and broaden their acquaintance with music."

With one or more events scheduled nearly every day, student performances will be under the direction of a distinguished faculty, directed by Dr. Koussevitzky, assisted by Aaron Copland, composer. The major orchestra will be under Dr. Koussevitzky's personal direction, with Leonard Bernstein, first guest conductor at the Berkshire Festival, assisted by Eleazar deCarvalho, Brazilian conductor, and members of the Boston Symphony orchestra. An orchestra in department V will be under Fredrick Fennell of the Eastman school of music, Rochester, N. Y., and in the opera department under Mr. deCarvalho.

Music Concert Programs Set

Chamber music concerts at the Berkshire Music Center this summer will be devoted to the works of two widely divergent masters Franz Schubert and Bela Bartok. The Schubert concerts are the contribution of Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge and will be given on the four Wednesday evenings of July. The six Bartok quartets will be divided between two Saturday evenings, July 10 and 17, and will be played by the Juilliard String Quartet as a contribution of the Juilliard School of Music. These events will be in the Theatre-Concert Hall at Tanglewood and Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited to each of the concerts.

The Schubert series will include the following works: July 7—Quartet for Flute, Guitar, Viola and Violoncello, the Sonata in A minor for Piano and Arpeggione, and the "Winterreise" song cycle with Ralph Herbert, baritone; July 14—the Trios in B flat major and E flat major and the Sonata in A major for Violin and Piano by the Albeneri Trio; July 21—String Quartet in D minor ("Death and the Maiden"), the Quartet Movement in C minor, and the String Quintet in C major by the Boston String Quartet; July 28—String Quartet in A minor, the Quintet in A major ("Trout"), and the Octet in F major by the Boston Conservatory String Quartet and assisting artists.

The pair of Bartok programs cover the modern Hungarian master's output from 1907 to 1939 but the numbers are not, however, played in chronological order. The first concert will offer the Third, Second and Fifth Quartets while the second will bring his Fourth, First and Sixth works in this form.

This summer marks the third consecutive year the Berkshire Festival has benefitted by the generosity of Mrs. Coolidge, the guiding spirit of chamber music in this country. The past two seasons the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress was responsible for the chamber music concerts at Tanglewood. This year the Schubert series is the personal gift of Mrs. Coolidge.

Students at the school will present programs of chamber music in the Chamber Music Hall each Sunday morning beginning July 11 and continuing through the last day of the Festival, August 15. Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited to all events of the school including the concerts by the student orchestras and chorus, Serge Koussevitzky, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Director of the Center, will conduct at one or more of these events.

The Berkshire Festival will open at Tanglewood in the Theatre-Concert Hall with an all Bach program on Sunday, July 18.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 1,026,164) (S 1,473,491)
This Clipping From CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE
JUN 20 1948

• • •

Series A—July 29 at 8:15, Koussevitzky conducting Bach, Hindemith, Beethoven; July 31 at 8:15, Koussevitzky conducting Piston and Brahms, with Isaac Stern playing Prokofieff's First Violin Concerto; Aug. 1 at 3:30, Leonard Bernstein conducting Haydn and Mahler's Resurrection Symphony. In the Shed.

Series B—Aug. 5 at 8:15, Koussevitzky conducting Beethoven's "Pastoral" and Stravinsky's "Oedipus Rex"; Aug 7 at 8:15, Koussevitzky conducting Prokofieff, Vaughan Williams' Symphony No. 6, first American performance, and Strauss' "Don Quixote," with Gregor Piatigorsky; Aug. 8 at 3:30, Eleazar de Carvalho conducting Berlioz, Villa Lobos, Falla and Sequiera. In the Shed.

Extra concert—Aug. 10 at 8:15, Koussevitzky conducting Tschaikowsky's "Pathetique" and "1812" Overture, with Seymour Lipkin, Rachmaninoff award winner, playing Piano Concerto No. 1. In the Shed.

• • •

[145]

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 221,127)
This Clipping From
BALTIMORE, MD.
NEWS-POST
JUN 23 1948

BachProgram To Open Fete In Berkshires

Under Serge Koussevitsky, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will open the music festival at Tanglewood in the Berkshires, on the afternoon of Sunday, July 18, with the first two all-Bach programs.

The string orchestra will play the third Brandenburg Concerto, and collaborate in two concerts for three pianos and strings. The three soloists will be Lukas Voss, Bernard Zighern and Ralph Berkowitz.

The Cantata No. 65, "Sie Werden aus Saba All Kommen," for tenor, bass and chorus, will be given also, and Georges Laurent will be the flute soloist for the B-minor Suite.

The first All-Mozart program will be given on July 20 and repeated on Sunday, July 25, with the Bach program to be repeated on July 27.

Two series of concerts by the full orchestra will be given, the first series opening on July 29.

The many Baltimoreans who spend their holiday enjoying the festival in the Berkshires, will be happy to learn that, though Dr. Koussevitsky's resignation as conductor of the Boston Orchestra will take effect at the end of the 1948-49 season, he will continue to direct the festival at Lenox, on the Tanglewood estate. H.A.F.P.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 6,868)
This Clipping From
BURLINGTON, N. C.
TIMES NEWS
JUN 21 1948

Music Notes . . .

By HELEN KING

The National Federation of Music Clubs will have three scholarship students at the Berkshire Music School at Tanglewood this summer. These scholarships are made possible through the generosity of the Newport, Rhode Island. Music Club. The Berkshire Music Center, in Massachusetts is under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, with Robert Shaw, choral director. The scholarships offered are unusually generous in that they not only cover full tuition for the season but also an allowance of $180 for living expenses while the students are registered at the Center.

Mr. Koussevitzky in resigning his post as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has named Charles Muench as his successor. While Mr. Koussevitzky will remain with the Boston Orchestra as guest conductor and does not intend to give up the leadership of the Berkshire Music Center, there is little doubt that his resignation closes a musical chapter for Boston, and for the country. His twenty-five years with the Boston Symphony will have been the longest for any conductor in the U. S., save Frederick Stock in Chicago.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 162,923) (S 164,519)
This Clipping From PORTLAND, ORE.
JOURNAL
JUN 20 1948

HEADS MUSIC CLUBS—Mae Ross Walker, elected president at recent convention of state music federation.

NEW PRESIDENT—Donald W. Allton heads new district of Oregon Music Teachers association at Eugene.

Berkshire Music Festival Offers Special Features

Announcement of special features for the annual Berkshire Music festival, which is of interest to musicians and students all over the country, has been made. This year's festival begins July 18 with the Bach-Mozart series conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, music director of the Boston Symphony orchestra, and continues through August 15. In addition to the opening series, there will be 11 concerts by the Boston symphony.

The operatic production will be a Rossini work, virtually lost for more than 100 years. Boris Goldovsky, opera department head, announced "The Turk In Italy" will be given in English for the first time on record August 9 and 11 in the Theatre-Concert hall at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. As with "Peter Grimes," which had its American premiere at the festival, "The Turk" will be presented for Friends of the Berkshire Music Center only.

* * *

THIS OPERA was Rossini's 13th and first was produced in 1814 at Milan. The Garcias brought it to America in 1826 and there is no record of any performance here after that time.

Letters of invitation for renewal of membership in the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center have gone out from Dr. Lewis Perry, chairman. In addition to the opera, 30 or more school events will be open to members. Requests for information may be addressed to the office of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 8,534)
This Clipping From
TORRINGTON, CONN.
REGISTER
JUN 25 1948

40 Events Scheduled On Tanglewood Program

Forty musical events will be open, by invitation, to friends of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., during the six weeks session of the school. Starting with initial exercises Sunday afternoon, July 4, they will include symphony concerts, choral and chamber music concerts on four successive Wednesday evenings, gift of Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, and two by the Juilliard String Quartet.

The performances, excepting the Coolidge and Juilliard concerts, will be by students admitted to the school because of outstanding musical talent. Initiated in 1940 by Serge Koussevitzky, and founded by the Boston Symphony orchestra, the center is not a school for technical musical training, "but rather a place where provision is made for the study of music on an advanced level through experience in group performance." Dr. Koussevitzky states the purpose as "to give our students constructive advice and a practical method which will stimulate their gifts, round out their abilities gained during their years of study and broaden their acquaintance with music."

With one or more events scheduled nearly every day, student performances will be under the direction of a distinguished faculty, directed by Dr. Koussevitzky, assisted by Aaron Copland, composer. The major orchestra will be under Dr. Koussevitzky's personal direction, with Leonard Bernstein, first guest conductor at the Berkshire Festival, assisted by Eleazar deCarvalho, Brazilian conductor, and members of the Boston Symphony orchestra. An orchestra in department V will be under Fredrick Fennell of the Eastman school of music, Rochester, N. Y., and in the opera department under Mr. deCarvalho.

Her. [illegible]

Music Concert Programs Set

Chamber music concerts at the Berkshire Music Center this summer will be devoted to the works of two widely divergent masters, Franz Schubert and Bela Bartok. The Schubert concerts are the contribution of Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge and will be given on the four Wednesday evenings of July. The six Bartok quartets will be divided between two Saturday evenings, July 10 and 17, and will be played by the Juilliard String Quartet as a contribution of the Juilliard School of Music. These events will be in the Theatre-Concert Hall at Tanglewood and Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited to each of the concerts.

The Schubert series will include the following works: July 7—Quartet for Flute, Guitar, Viola and Violoncello, the Sonata in A minor for Piano and Arpeggione, and the "Winterreise" song cycle with Ralph Herbert, baritone; July 14—the Trios in B flat major and E flat major and the Sonata in A major for Violin and Piano by the Albeneri Trio; July 21—String Quartet in D minor ("Death and the Maiden"), the Quartet Movement in C minor, and the String Quintet in C major by the Boston String Quartet; July 28—String Quartet in A minor, the Quintet in A major ("Trout"), and the Octet in F major by the Boston Conservatory String Quartet and assisting artists.

The pair of Bartok programs cover the modern Hungarian master's output from 1907 to 1939 but the numbers are not, however, played in chronological order. The first concert will offer the Third, Second and Fifth Quartets while the second will bring his Fourth, First and Sixth works in this form.

This summer marks the third consecutive year the Berkshire Festival has benefitted by the generosity of Mrs. Coolidge, the guiding spirit of chamber music in this country. The past two seasons the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress was responsible for the chamber music concerts at Tanglewood. This year the Schubert series is the personal gift of Mrs. Coolidge.

Students at the school will present programs of chamber music in the Chamber Music Hall each Sunday morning beginning July 11 and continuing through the last day of the Festival, August 15. Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited to all events of the school including the concerts by the student orchestras and chorus, Serge Koussevitzky, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Director of the Center, will conduct at one or more of these events.

The Berkshire Festival will open at Tanglewood in the Theatre-Concert Hall with an all Bach program on Sunday, July 18.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 1,026,164) (S 1,473,491)
This Clipping From CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE
JUN 20 1948

• • •

Series A—July 29 at 8:15, Koussevitzky conducting Bach, Hindemith, Beethoven; July 31 at 8:15, Koussevitzky conducting Piston and Brahms, with Isaac Stern playing Prokofieff's First Violin Concerto; Aug. 1 at 3:30, Leonard Bernstein conducting Haydn and Mahler's Resurrection Symphony. In the Shed.

Series B—Aug. 5 at 8:15, Koussevitzky conducting Beethoven's "Pastoral" and Stravinsky's "Oedipus Rex"; Aug 7 at 8:15, Koussevitzky conducting Prokofieff, Vaughan Williams' Symphony No. 6, first American performance, and Strauss' "Don Quixote," with Gregor Piatigorsky; Aug. 8 at 3:30, Eleazar de Carvalho conducting Berlioz, Villa Lobos, Falla and Sequiera. In the Shed.

Extra concert—Aug. 10 at 8:15, Koussevitzky conducting Tschaikowsky's "Pathetique" and "1812" Overture, with Seymour Lipkin, Rachmaninoff award winner, playing Piano Concerto No. 1. In the Shed.

• • •

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 12,764)
This Clipping From
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

JUN 24 1948

MISS SCHIFF SIGNS FOR MUSIC COURSE

Former Adams Girl to Study at Tanglewood

Miss Muriel Schiff of Boston, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Miles Schiff of 2 Crandall street, will be a student at the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, Lenox, this season for the second consecutive year. Miss Schiff's registration is the only one the center has received from an applicant with Northern Berkshire identification, it was stated at the center.

An administrative assistant in the department of psychiatry at Harvard Medical school in Boston, Miss Schiff also is studying violin in Boston with Alfred Krips, Boston Symphony orchestra violinist, concert [illegible] orchestra and a member of the Music Center faculty. She plays first violin with the Civic Symphony orchestra of Boston and with the Springfield Symphony orchestra. As a student at Syracuse university she was a member of the Syracuse Symphony orchestra.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 145,550)
This Clipping From BIRMINGHAM, ALA.
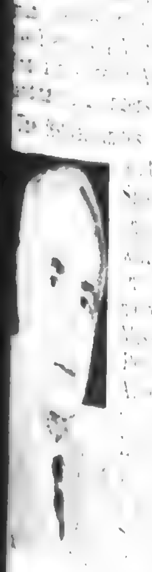
NEWS
JUN 20 1948



[illegible] Koussevitzky and [illegible] Summer [illegible] soprano [illegible] Miss Yeend [illegible] with Robert Shaw [illegible] Birmingham [illegible] Miss Yeend [illegible] contralto [illegible] David [illegible] tenor [illegible] Chorale [illegible]

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 24,774)
This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

JUN 23 1948

Mrs. Coolidge Gives Berkshire Another Historic Music Event

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

Thirty years ago this coming September the inaugural concert was held in the newly built Temple of Music on South Mountain. This epoch-making event proved to be the cornerstone of a musical edifice which may well be of more lasting influence than a structure constructed of mere tangible stone, steel or cement.

Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, whose generosity made the buildings and the musical events possible, showed herself, as Harold Spivacke of the music department of the Library of Congress has said, to be a lady of "high ideals, indomitable purpose and tireless energy."

The record of the ensuing 29 years spreads out over the breadth of this country, of Mexico, and of most of the countries of Europe. But "what's past is prologue." This year, the 30th anniversary of the first Berkshire Festival of Chamber Music, is to be one of even greater scope than any which has preceded it. There are to be two independent observances of the event, both right on our very doorstep. One, at Tanglewood, is a continuation of a series established three years ago and will consist of four concerts devoted to the music of Franz Schubert—quartets, trios, sonatas, the song cycle "Winterreise," with several of his rarely heard and newly discovered works. These will be played in the theatre at Tanglewood and will be sponsored by the Berkshire Music Center and invitations will be issued by the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center. These will take place on Wednesday evenings, July 7, 14, 21 and 28.

Second at Museum

The second observance will be held in the Berkshire Museum and admission, also free, is available on application. It will consist of eight concerts, starting Wednesday, Aug. 11, with a program by the Berkshire Woodwind Ensemble of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and continuing the following seven Wednesday evenings with programs by the newly reorganized Berkshire String Quartet. These concerts are presented through the courtesy of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress, another source endowed by the "Lady Bountiful of Chamber Music."

The quartet concerts will adhere to a well-planned pattern in which each program will include a Mozart quartet, a contemporary quartet, and an ensemble work enlisting the services of an assisting artist. The new Berkshire Quartet made its Pittsfield debut in a concert in the museum June 5, and it will be in residence in Falls Village for the entire summer.

The original Berkshire Quartet consisted of Hugo Kortschak, first violin; Sergei Kotlarsky, second violin; Clarence Evans, viola; and Emmeran Stoeber, cello. That first festival started with a program in September on a Monday afternoon, and was followed by two programs on each of the two following days, in the morning at 11, and the afternoon at 4, ending with a huge reception at the Maplewood Hotel to which Mrs. Coolidge invited all the participating artists and the hosts of distinguished guests which included as spectators some of the most famous artists of the day. Each festival was the occasion for the first performance of a prize-winning work, selected by an eminent jury, from compositions submitted to a contest by composers from all the corners of the musical world.

The interest kindled in chamber music and the inspiration and stimulation accorded composers are incalculable. The ensembles organized or introduced to the United States under Mrs. Coolidge's auspices form a register of chamber music of this country. They include, among others, the previously mentioned Berkshire Quartet, the Elshuco Trio, the London String Quartet, the Wendling Quartet, the Festival Quartet of South Mountain, the Roth, Kolisch and Busch Quartets, the Casella Trio, the South Mountain Quartet, the Coolidge String Quartet, not to mention the innumerable individual artists as George Enesco, Myra Hess, and a long list of others equally famous and well known.

Of Great Significance

The significance of all this lavish providence of musical opportunities is possibly not completely grasped by many who have enjoyed the unique privileges, but there has not been in musical history a patron who has originated, developed and planned so well with so certain a purpose in constant view. It has been the choice of some philanthropists to make possible the erection of buildings in which institutions of great worth and merit have been given all facilities. The sum of Mrs. Coolidge's benevolences has not been computed for public information, but she has used vast sums of money for more than 30 years to provide education and enjoyment for countless music-lovers. Through her efforts and her particular desires and means, she has brought chamber music down from what was once unfamiliarly considered high-brow to its proper level for the enjoyment of a much larger public, and in so doing has established a music-consciousness which has every reason to last beyond the normal endurance of more tangible but soulless monuments for the elevation of society.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 55,764) (S 93,871)
This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

* * *

Mr. Goldovsky points out that "The Barber Of Seville," written three years after "Il Turco," is the only Rossini opera in the standard repertoire "because it is the only one of his plots which he can accept today. We can't take the others any more." The new version will try to keep all the charm of the Rossini music while the rejuvenated plot will permit a departure in staging. The main character, according to Mr. Goldovsky, is not the title role, but "a poet who lives in front of the curtain," virtually writes the opera as it progresses and is on equal terms with the people on both sides of the footlights.

As in the case of the opera department's two previous works, Britten's "Peter Grimes" and Mozart's "Idomeneo," "The Turk In Italy" will be performed for "Friends of the Berkshire," Music Center only. Letters of invitation for renewal of membership have gone out from Dr. Lewis Perry, chairman of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center. Thirty or ~~more school~~ events, in addition to the opera performances, will be open to the members.

Requests for information may be sent to the office of the Center, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 538,914) (S 1,002,765)
This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

[illegible] 20 1948

MAESTRO'S PROTEGES

Serge Koussevitzky has proved a good friend to the young artists who have caught his fancy, and he has gathered a number of his favorite chicks together for the forthcoming Berkshire Festival. His young conductors will be Leonard Bernstein, Eleazar de Carvalho and Robert Shaw. And all but three of the eleven soloists are young people who have appeared with him before, either at the festival or in Boston.

The exceptions are Nan Merriman, mezzo-soprano, and Seymour Lipkin, pianist, who are joining the fold for the first time. Gregor Piatigorsky is an exception of a different kind. He is a veteran, having played with the Boston Symphony twenty-five times.

Others returning are the violinist, Isaac Stern, the actor, Wesley Addy (who will be the narrator in Stravinsky's "Oedipus"), and these singers: Ellabelle Davis, Ellen Faull and Frances Yeend, sopranos; Eunice Alberts and Carol Brice, contraltos; David Lloyd, tenor, and James Pease, bass-baritone. Many of them are alumni of the Berkshire Music Center, where they knew Dr. Koussevitzky as a teacher, too.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 42,495)
This Clipping From TACOMA, WASH.
TIMES

JUN 12 1948

Berkshire Festival

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky's direction, will open the Berkshire Festival this summer with two pairs of week-end concerts devoted to the music of Bach and Mozart. The concerts will be given at the theater-concert hall at Tanglewood, the summer home of the orchestra near Lennox, Mass. The Bach program will be given July 18 and the Mozart on July 20.

HENRY
THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
NEW YORK
220 West 19th St., New York 11, N. Y
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

WHITE PLAINS, N.Y
HERALD
6/11/48

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky's direction, will open the Berkshire Festival this summer with two pairs of week-end concerts devoted to the music of Bach and Mozart. The concerts will be given at the theater-concert hall at Tanglewood, the summer home of the orchestra near Lenox, Mass. The Bach program will be given July 18 and the Mozart on July 20.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 4,483)
This Clipping From
KINGSTON, N. Y.
LEADER

JUN 17 1948

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY orchestra, ~~under Serge Koussevit-~~zky's direction, will open the Berkshire Festival this summer with two pairs of week-end concerts devoted to the music of Bach and Mozart. The concerts will be given at the theatre-concert hall at Tanglewood, the summer home of the orchestra, near Lenox, Mass. The Bach program will be given July 18 and the Mozart on July 20.

FREE MUSIC is being offered to New Yor kthis sum[illegible]

[146]

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 12,764)
This Clipping From
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

JUN 24 1948

MISS SCHIFF SIGNS FOR MUSIC COURSE

Former Adams Girl to Study at Tanglewood

Miss Muriel Schiff of Boston, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Miles Schiff of 2 Crandall street, will be a student at the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, Lenox, this season for the second consecutive year. Miss Schiff's registration is the only one the center has received from an applicant with Northern Berkshire identification, it was stated at the center.

An administrative assistant in the department of psychiatry at Harvard Medical school in Boston, Miss Schiff also is studying violin in Boston with Alfred Krips. Boston Symphony orchestra violinist, concert [illegible] orchestra and a member of the Music Center faculty. She plays first violin with the Civic Symphony orchestra of Boston and with the Springfield Symphony orchestra. As a student at Syracuse university she was a member of the Syracuse Symphony orchestra.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 145,550)
This Clipping From BIRMINGHAM, ALA.
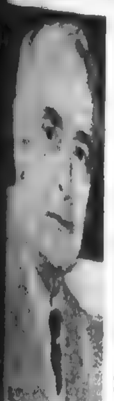
NEWS
JUN 20 1948

Appearing with Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony this Summer [illegible] Yeend, soprano, who has a large following of music lovers in Alabama where she has sung many times, and a number of warm-personal friends. She will be soloist at the Berkshire Festival for the third time this year at the invitation of Koussevitzky. Others will include James Pease, bass-baritone, and Nan Merriman, mezzo-soprano, who, like Miss Yeend, is a Victor recording artist and is one of America's outstanding young singers.

The festival unites Miss Yeend with Robert Shaw and his chorale, which will be heard in Birmingham next season. Miss Yeend, Mr. Pease, Eunice Alberts, contralto, and David Lloyd, tenor will sing solo parts with Shaw's Chorale the night of Aug. 14 when Debussy's "The Blessed Damozel" and Brahms' "Requiem" are presented with the orchestra under Koussev



SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 24,774)
This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

JUN 23 1948

Mrs. Coolidge Gives Berkshire Another Historic Music Event

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

Thirty years ago this coming September the inaugural concert was held in the newly built Temple of Music on South Mountain. This epoch-making event proved to be the cornerstone of a musical edifice which may well be of more lasting influence than a structure constructed of mere tangible stone, steel or cement.

Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, whose generosity made the buildings and the musical events possible, showed herself, as Harold Spivacke of the music department of the Library of Congress has said, to be a lady of "high ideals, indomitable purpose and tireless energy."

The record of the ensuing 29 years spreads out over the breadth of this country, of Mexico, and of most of the countries of Europe. But "what's past is prologue." This year, the 30th anniversary of the first Berkshire Festival of Chamber Music, is to be one of even greater scope than any which has preceded it. There are to be two independent observances of the event, both right on our very doorstep. One, at Tanglewood, is a continuation of a series established three years ago and will consist of four concerts devoted to the music of Franz Schubert—quartets, trios, sonatas, the song cycle "Winterreise," with several of his rarely heard and newly discovered works. These will be played in the theatre at Tanglewood and will be sponsored by the Berkshire Music Center and invitations will be issued by the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center. These will take place on Wednesday evenings, July 7, 14, 21 and 28.

Second at Museum

The second observance will be held in the Berkshire Museum and admission, also free, is available on application. It will consist of eight concerts, starting Wednesday, Aug. 11, with a program by the Berkshire Woodwind Ensemble of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and continuing the following seven Wednesday evenings with programs by the newly reorganized Berkshire String Quartet. These concerts are presented through the courtesy of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress, another source endowed by the "Lady Bountiful of Chamber Music."

The quartet concerts will adhere to a well-planned pattern in which each program will include a Mozart quartet, a contemporary quartet, and an ensemble work enlisting the services of an assisting artist. The new Berkshire Quartet made its Pittsfield debut in a concert in the museum June 5, and it will be in residence in Falls Village for the entire summer.

The original Berkshire Quartet consisted of Hugo Kortschak, first violin; Sergei Kotlarsky, second violin; Clarence Evans, viola; and Emmeran Stoeber, cello. That first festival started with a program in September on a Monday afternoon, and was followed by two programs on each of the two following days, in the morning at 11, and the afternoon at 4, ending with a huge reception at the Maplewood Hotel to which Mrs. Coolidge invited all the participating artists and the hosts of distinguished guests which included as spectators some of the most famous artists of the day. Each festival was the occasion for the first performance of a prize-winning work, selected by an eminent jury, from compositions submitted to a contest by composers from all the corners of the musical world.

The interest kindled in chamber music and the inspiration and stimulation accorded composers are incalculable. The ensembles organized or introduced to the United States under Mrs. Coolidge's auspices form a register of chamber music of this country. They include, among others, the previously mentioned Berkshire Quartet, the Elshuco Trio, the London String Quartet, the Wendling Quartet, the Festival Quartet of South Mountain, the Roth, Kolisch and Busch Quartets, the Casella Trio, the South Mountain Quartet, the Coolidge String Quartet, not to mention the innumerable individual artists as George Enesco, Myra Hess, and a long list of others equally famous and well known.

Of Great Significance

The significance of all this lavish providence of musical opportunities is possibly not completely grasped by many who have enjoyed the unique privileges, but there has not been in musical history a patron who has originated, developed and planned so well with so certain a purpose in constant view. It has been the choice of some philanthropists to make possible the erection of buildings in which institutions of great worth and merit have been given all facilities. The sum of Mrs. Coolidge's benevolences has not been computed for public information, but she has used vast sums of money for more than 30 years to provide education and enjoyment for countless music-lovers. Through her efforts and her particular desires and means, she has brought chamber music down from what was once unfamiliarly considered high-brow to its proper level for the enjoyment of a much larger public, and in so doing has established a music-consciousness which has every reason to last beyond the normal endurance of more tangible but soulless monuments for the elevation of society.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 55,764) (S 93,871)
This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

JUN 20 1948

* * *

Mr. Goldovsky points out that "The Barber Of Seville," written three years after "Il Turco," is the only Rossini opera in the standard repertoire "because it is the only one of his plots which he can accept today. We can't take the others any more." The new version will try to keep all the charm of the Rossini music while the rejuvenated plot will permit a departure in staging. The main character, according to Mr. Goldovsky, is not the title role, but "a poet who lives in front of the curtain," virtually writes the opera as it progresses and is on equal terms with the people on both sides of the footlights.

As in the case of the opera department's two previous works, Britten's "Peter Grimes" and Mozart's "Idomeneo," "The Turk In Italy" will be performed for "Friends of the Berkshire," Music Center only. Letters of invitation for renewal of membership have gone out from Dr. Lewis Perry, chairman of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center. Thirty or m[illegible]ol events, in addition to the opera performances, will be open to the members.

Requests for information may be sent to the office of the Center, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 538,914) (S 1,002,765)
This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

JUN 20 1948

MAESTRO'S PROTEGES

Serge Koussevitzky has proved a good friend to the young artists who have caught his fancy, and he has gathered a number of his favorite chicks together for the forthcoming Berkshire Festival. His young conductors will be Leonard Bernstein, Eleazar de Carvalho and Robert Shaw. And all but three of the eleven soloists are young people who have appeared with him before, either at the festival or in Boston.

The exceptions are Nan Merriman, mezzo-soprano, and Seymour Lipkin, pianist, who are joining the fold for the first time. Gregor Piatigorsky is an exception of a different kind. He is a veteran, having played with the Boston Symphony twenty-five times.

Others returning are the violinist, Isaac Stern, the actor, Wesley Addy (who will be the narrator in Stravinsky's "Oedipus"), and these singers: Ellabelle Davis, Ellen Faull and Frances Yeend, sopranos; Eunice Alberts and Carol Brice, contraltos; David Lloyd, tenor, and James Pease, bass-baritone. Many of them are alumni of the Berkshire Music Center, where they knew Dr. Koussevitzky as a teacher, too.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 42,495)
This Clipping From TACOMA, WASH.
TIMES

JUN 12 1948

Berkshire Festival

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky's direction, will open the Berkshire Festival this summer with two pairs of week-end concerts devoted to the music of Bach and Mozart. The concerts will be given at the theater-concert hall at Tanglewood, the summer home of the orchestra near Lennox, Mass. The Bach program will be given July 18 and the Mozart on July 20.

HENRY
THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
NEW YORK
220 West 19th St., New York 11, N. Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

WHITE PLAINS, N.Y
HERALD
6/11/48

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky's direction, will open the Berkshire Festival this summer with two pairs of week-end concerts devoted to the music of Bach and Mozart. The concerts will be given at the theater-concert hall at Tanglewood, the summer home of the orchestra near Lenox, Mass. The Bach program will be given July 18 and the Mozart on July 20.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 4,483)
This Clipping From
KINGSTON, N. Y.
LEADER

JUN 17 1948

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY orchestra, ~~under Serge Koussevit-~~zky's direction, will open the Berkshire Festival this summer with two pairs of week-end concerts devoted to the music of Bach and Mozart. The concerts will be given at the theatre-concert hall at Tanglewood, the summer home of the orchestra, near Lenox, Mass. The Bach program will be given July 18 and the Mozart on July 20.

FREE MUSIC is being offered to New Yor kthis sum

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 137,100) (S 136,912)

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
PM
JUN 20 1948

Music in America

Engage 8 Young Singers For Berkshire Fstival

Eight singers, all of them American born and trained, will appear as soloists at the Berkshire Festival this summer, Serge Koussevitzky, music director of the Boston Symphony, has announced. Although young artists make up the entire list, all but one of them was previously sung with the Boston Symphony.

The roster includes Ellabelle Davis, soprano; Ellen Faull, soprano; Frances Yeend, soprano; Eunice ~~Alberts, contralto~~; Carol Brice, contralto; David Lloyd, tenor, and James Pease, bass-baritone. The single newcomer to the orchestra is Nan Merriman, mezzo-soprano, who will be co-soloist with Miss Brice Sunday afternoon, Aug. 1, in Mahler's Resurrection Symphony, Leonard Bernstein conducting. The large chorus which the work calls for will be that of the Berkshire Music Center.

Wesley Addy, who has appeared in the Shakespearean production of Maurice Evans and with Katharine Cornell in Antigone, will be the narrator in Stravinsky's Oedipus Rex, with full orchestra, soloists and chorus under the baton of Dr. Koussevitzky, on Thursday evening, Aug. 5. The singers are Miss Brice, Mr. Lloyd and Mr. Pease.

Miss Brice, who was a Kouusevitzky discovery and was introduced at a meeting of the Friends of the Boston Symphony two years ago, will sing the passages for voice in Falla's El Amor Brujo on Sunday afternoon, Aug. 8, under the direction of Eleazar de Carvalho.

At the concert which Robert Shaw will conduct on Saturday evening, Aug. 14, Miss Faull and Miss Alberts will be heard in The Blessed Damozel of Debussy, and [illegible] Mr. Pease in the Brahms Requiem.

Soloists already announced for the 1948 Berkshire Festival are Isaac Stern, violinist, in the Prokofiev Concerto No. 1, on July 31; Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist, in Strauss' Don Quixote, on Aug. 7, and Seymour Lipkin, 20-year-old Detroit pianist, who will make his Tanglewood debut under Dr. Koussevitzky in Tchaikowsky's Concerto No. 1, in the special all-Tchaikowsky concert on Aug. 10.

The Festival begins in the Theater-Concert Hall at Tanglewood with a Bach concert on Sunday afternoon, July 18, and a Mozart concert on Tuesday evening, July 20, to be repeated, respectively, July 25 and 27—all under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky.

For information about tickets, etc., address the Berkshire Festival office, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

MUSICIANS

Varied Chamber Music Programs at Tanglewood During Month of July

Chamber music concerts at the Berkshire Music Center this Summer will be devoted to the works of two widely divergent masters, Franz Schubert and Bela Bartok. The Schubert concerts are the contribution of Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge and will be given on the four Wednesday evenings of July. The six Bartok quartets will be divided between two Saturday evenings, July 10 and 17, and will be played by the Juilliard String Quartet as a contribution of the Juilliard School of Music. These events will be in the Theatre-Concert Hall at Tanglewood and friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited to each of the concerts.

The Schubert series will include the following works: July 7, Quartet for Flute, Guitar, Viola and Violoncello, the Sonata in A minor for Piano and Arpeggione, and the "Winterreise" song cycle with Ralph Herbert, baritone; July 14, the Trios in B flat major and E flat major and the Sonata in A major for Violin and Piano by the Albeneri Trio; July 21, String Quartet in D minor ("Death and the Maiden"), the Quartet Movement in C minor, and the String Quintet in C major by the Boston String Quartet; July 28, String Quartet in A minor, the Quintet in A major ("Trout"), and the Octet in F major by the Boston Conservatory String Quartet and assisting artists.

The pair of Bartok programs cover the modern Hungarian master's output from 1907 to 1939 but the numbers are not, however, played in chronological order. The first concert will offer the Third, Second and Fifth Quartets while the second will bring his Fourth, First and Sixth.

This Summer marks the third consecutive year the Berkshire Festival has benefitted by the generosity of Mrs. Coolidge, the guiding spirit of chamber music in this country. The past two seasons the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress was responsible for the chamber music concerts at Tanglewood. This year the Schubert series is the personal gift of Mrs. Coolidge.

Students at the school will present programs of chamber music in the Chamber Music Hall each Sunday morning beginning July 11 and continuing through the last day of the Festival, August 15. Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited to all events of the school including the concerts by the student orchestras and chorus. Serge Koussevitzky, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Director of the Center, will conduct at one or more of these events.

The Berkshire Festival will open at Tanglewood in the Theatre-Concert Hall with an all Bach program on Sunday, July 18, and an all Mozart program on Tuesday evening, July 20. These programs will be repeated the following Sunday and Tuesday in reverse order. The first concert in the Music Shed by the full orchestra, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, will be given Thursday evening, July 29. The program will consist of the Bach Suite No. 3, Hindemith's Symphony "Mathis der Maler," and the Beethoven Symphony No. 2.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 39,169) (S 44,213)

This Clipping From
EL PASO, TEXAS
TIMES

Rossini Work To Be Presented

New York. (UP)—A Rossini work, forgotten for more than 100 years, will be this Summer's operatic production at the Berkshire Festival in Massachusetts. The opera will be given in English under the title of "The Turk in Italy." The revised text is by Doris Goldovsky, head of the opera department of the music center.

The score was re-assembled from a manuscript copy found in Palermo, Italy, and from parts in the Boston public library and the Widener Library at Harvard.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
JUN 27 1948

LIFE-LONG PURPOSE

Koussevitzky's Aid to Our Composers Highlights His Career Here

By OLIN DOWNES

THE announcements of the the forthcoming Berkshire Music Festival and of the opening of Dr. Koussevitzky's Berkshire Music Center, which is scheduled for next Wednesday, have a particular significance at this stage in the conductor's career.

The announcement of his retirement as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was news in the spring. News implicit in the announcement, to which no particular attention was given, was the fact that the leader gave no indication, express or implied, of his intention to retire from the direction of the Music Centre. And indeed Dr. Koussevitzky has no such intention. The Centre is the apple of his eye. It is no accident of his career, nor is it a recent conception with him.

He has developed this school in late years, not as an incidental offshoot of other activities which have long been a dominant obligation but actually as the fulfillment of a life-long purpose which has become more than a dream. It is the school which will receive the major part of Koussevitzky's time and effort, as he plans it, in the years before him—years which, at present numbering seventy-four, will be just as active and filled with projects vividly imagined and practically executed in the past of a man whose energy feeds on activity and with whom to live is to work and plan.

Planned School

The school was in fact Koussevitzky's fundamental motivation when he accepted the invitation of Gertrude Robinson Smith, then representing the Berkshire Festival Association, to come with the Boston Symphony to Stockbridge for an annual symphonic festival. He then stated his interest in the project, which, however, he would entertain not merely as the occasion for some crack orchestral performances under conditions that would ensure the highest artistic standards, but as the place at which he would be able to establish a music school which he had envisioned far back in his Russian days, and before circumstances made such an undertaking possible. With him the idea of the school has been entertained as an integral part of his life's plan.

GUEST ARTIST

Halman

Jan Peerce, tenor, appears at Stadium Thursday.

This is not a statement advanced to give journalistic color to a newspaper article. It is cited as something which throws a light upon the quality of one of the leading musicians of this epoch, and the singular breadth of his purpose which distinguishes Koussevitzky from all his colleagues, however gifted or pre-eminent.

Contrary to the general assumption of those who only know and hear one of the most famous of the virtuoso conductors of his period when he functions on the podium, Koussevitzky has never been a one-man show. He has had the normal ambitions and the human share of delight in success and acclaim which have accrued to one of the brilliant figures in a highly competitive field. This does not in the least modify the fact that it was the grand perspective of music seen in its broadest and most humanitarian aspects that has characterized his activity in every step of his development. No musician of this century has conducted such a broadly planned offensive on all the fronts of a distinguished interpreter's career.

Own Experience

Psychoanalysts—or sentimentalists—might talk lengthily of the effect upon Koussevitzky's thinking of his own experience as a young boy; when he left, against his father's bidding, the little Russian town of Vyshny Volochek in the province of Tver, arriving with nothing much even to keep him alive, to obtain the education he knew he had to have to fulfil his ideas. He will ever remember the shock of discovering that both the leading conservatories of Moscow had completed registration for the season, and that his chances of gaining adequate instruction had largely gone glimmering. He remembers how he surprised himself by his fury on breaking into the director's room of the Music School of the Philharmonic and interrupting that gentleman's complacent performance on the piano by stamping and shouting "I came to study at this conservatory." That was his start, at the conservatory which gave him the scholarship for the instrument that the orchestra was short of—the double-bass.

Thus the need of opportunities for the musical education of the young was early impressed upon Koussevitzky. That has happened to plenty of men of genius in circumstances similar to his. The distinction remains. One of the three most famous double-bass players that the world has known, in a position where he had all the fame and fortune that a feted virtuoso might need, he threw that in the wastebasket for a conductor's career. Again not an unnatural proceeding, or one lacking in self-interest. But the conductor of the first permanently organized symphony orchestra in Russia was not in the least content to give show performances for the dilettantes and fashionables of Moscow and St. Petersburg, as it then was called.

Concerts at 10 cents a ticket were given. Young composers, young virtuosos, were given opportunities to be heard with the orchestra. Russian musicians, now famous, made first appearances there. Then came the famous tour down the Volga, the concerts given at bridgeheads, to audiences which in most cases had never heard an orchestra before.

Friend of New

The conductor established a music publishing house. The conductor-publisher became the passionate protagonist of composers with new ideas—the composer from whom all music must flow.

Precisely the same policies and attitude, if not circumstance, have characterized Koussevitzky's course from the moment he arrived in America, in 1924, as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. And this has been of immense importance to American music.

Koussevitzky began immediately an investigation of contemporaneous American music. He did this in a way which has made history, greatly advancing the position of the native composer, inaugurating the most active and fruitful period of symphonic composition that the nation has known.

He played the music of young Americans. He gave them critical counsel when he rejected a piece. We recall his invitation privately issued to a certain composer, prominent today, to conduct at a rehearsal a score that was impracticably written, and profit by the experience. He once suggested to the writer that he listen carefully to certain measures in an overture which otherwise was commonplace. "But there are seventeen measures there," he said, "which show the real talent, and where there are seventeen good measures, there is more to come."

Gave Them Courage

One need not praise unstintedly all the new American or other music Koussevitzky has presented the public. But he gave the composers the opportunity and courage to proceed. They went to work with a new energy and faith in themselves. In the twenty-four years of his symphonic regime the native sons have produced scores unprecedented in number and of sufficient quality to indicate the beginnings of a national school. When he arrived here in 1924, it would hardly have been believed that twenty years later he could devote the two New York programs of the Boston Symphony Orchestra exclusively to American works composed since he came to our shores.

It is a whole period of American musical culture which he and his work represent. Young composers and conductors, teachers and students of ensemble, gather again this year at Tanglewood to participate in the activities of the Berkshire Music Centre, and in a number of instances to take part in the ensuing symphonic festival. Meanwhile, Dr. Koussevitzky drinks a health "to the next ten years" of the continuation of his service to the future of music in America.

[147]

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 82,332) (S 111,081)

This Clipping From
SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH
TRIBUNE

New Soloist Makes Bow At Berkshire

EIGHT singers, all of them American born and trained, will appear as soloists at Berkshire Festival this summer, Serge Koussevitzky, music director of Boston symphony orchestra announced.

The single newcomer to the orchestra is Nan Merriman, mezzo-soprano, who will be soloist with Ellabelle Davis August 1 in the Mahler Symphony No. 2 ("Resurrection"), Leonard Bernstein conducting. The large chorus which the work calls for will be that of the Berkshire Music Center. Miss Davis sang in the Mahler Symphony with Mr. Bernstein in Boston last February.

Wesley Addy, who has appeared in the Shakespearean productions of Maurice Evans and with Katharine Cornell in "Antigone," will be the narrator in Stravinsky's "Oedipus" with the full orchestra, soloists and chorus on August 5, Dr. Koussevitzky conducting.

Carol Brice, who was a Koussevitzky discovery, will sing the passages for voice in Falla's "El Amor Brujo" August 8, under the direction of Eleazar de Carvalho.

At the concert which Robert Shaw will conduct on August 14, Ellen Faull and Eunice Alberts will be soloists in "The Blessed Damozel" of Debussy and Frances Yeend and James Pease in the Brahms "Requiem."

On Saturday evening, July 31, Isaac Stern, violin soloist, will repeat, again under Koussevitzky's baton, the Prokofieff Concert, No. 1 which he played at his first appearance with the Orchestra in Boston last March. Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist, who has been soloist with the Boston symphony on twenty-five previous occasions, will be heard in Richard Strauss' tone poem "Don Quixote," Koussevitzky conducting.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 70,752) (S 113,621)

This Clipping From TULSA, OKLA.
WORLD

JUN 27 1948

Bach, Mozart Music By Boston Symphony

BOSTON (U.P.) — The Boston Symphony orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky's direction, will open the Berkshire Festival this Summer with two pairs of weekend concerts devoted to the music of Bach and Mozart. The concerts will be given at the theater-concert hall at Tanglewood, the Summer home of the orchestra near Lenox, Mass. The Bach program will be given July 18 and the Mozart on July 20.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 142,968) (S 150,656)

This Clipping From DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS

THE MUSICAL DIGEST

By MARION CRUME

1 Soloists to Appear Berkshire Festival

LENOX, Mass.: Eleven soloists, [illegible]

HANOVER, PA.
SUN

JUN 26 1948

Chamber music concerts at the Berkshire Music Center this summer will be devoted to the works of two widely divergent masters, Franz Schubert and Bela Bartok. The Schubert concerts are the contribution of Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge and will be given on the four Wednesday evenings of July. The six Bartok quartets will be divided between two Saturday evenings, July 10 and 17, and will be played by the Juilliard String Quartet as a contribution of the Juilliard School of Music. These events will be in the Theater-Concert Hall at Tanglewood and Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited to each of the concerts.

Students at the school will present programs of chamber music in the Chamber Music Hall each Sunday morning beginning July 11 and continuing through the last day of the Festival, August 15. Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited to all events of the school including the concerts by the student orchestras and chorus.

This summer marks the third consecutive year the Berkshire Festival has benefitted by the generosity of Mrs. Coolidge, the guiding spirit of chamber music in this country. The past two seasons the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress was responsible for the chamber music concerts at Tanglewood. This year the Schubert series is the personal gift of Mrs. Coolidge.

The Berkshire Festival will open at Tanglewood in the Theater-Concert Hall with an all Bach program on Sunday, July 18, and an all Mozart program on Tuesday evening, July 20. These programs will be repeated the following Sunday and Tuesday in reverse order. The first concert in the Shed by the full Orchestra, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, Conductor, will be given Thursday evening, July 29th. The program will consist of the Bach Suite No. 3, Hindemith's Symphony "Mathis der Maler", and the Beethoven Symphony No. 5.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 30,229)

This Clipping From
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR

JUN 29 1948

Music Center At Tanglewood Opens July 4

Enrollment of 445 Exceeds Last Year's By 28 Students

The Berkshire Music center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., will begin its sixth season at 3:30 p.m. July 4 with an enrollment of 445 students, 28 more than last year.

Forty musical events will be open, by invitation, to friends of the center during the six weeks' session. They will include symphony concerts, choral and chamber music concerts on four successive Wednesday evenings and two concerts by the Julliard string quartet.

The first of the Berkshire festival concerts of the Boston Symphony orchestra will be held Sunday afternoon, July 18, at the theater-concert hall. A Bach program will be presented. A Mozart concert will be given Tuesday night, July 20. Both of these programs will be in the theater-concert hall.

Series A of the concerts in the music shed will include programs at 8:15 p.m. July 29 and 31, and at 3:30 p.m. Aug. 1. Series B will include programs at 8:15 p.m. Aug. 5 and 7 and at 3:30 p.m. Aug. 8. There will be an extra concert, a Tschaikowsky program, at 8:15 p.m. Aug. 10. Series C will open at 8:15 p.m. Aug. 12 and will include an 8:15 concert Aug. 14 and a 3:30 concert Aug. 15.

One of the innovations on the grounds this year is the reception and exhibition room to the right of the main entrance. The music shed is getting a new roof and refreshment facilities have been enlarged considerably.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 146,135) (S 258,957)

This Clipping From
BUFFALO, N. Y.
COURIER-EXPRESS

JUN 27 1948

Tanglewood Chamber Series

The Chamber Music concerts at the Berkshire Music Center this Summer will rest entirely in the works of two composers, Franz Schubert and Bela Bartok. The Schubert concerts, a contribution of Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, will be given on the Wednesday evenings of July. The six Bartok quartets will be divided between two Saturday evenings, July 10th and 17th, and will be performed by the Juilliard String Quartet, a contribution of the Juilliard School of Music.

[148]

Millerton, N.Y.
News-Republican
6/24/48

Entertainment In Our Own Back Yard

This spring, as in every other spring, the News-Republican has devoted many columns of news to the reappearance and plans of the cultural and entertainment enterprises in our midst. After a snowbound and gruelling winter, it seems a great privilege to know that we, in this rural area, can take advantage of music, drama and dance performances that are among the greatest in our country. Because of our proximity to the Berkshires, which have become the great summer cultural colony of the east, we are able to see and hear artists whom others living in outlying areas must travel long distances, and go to great expense, ever to witness.

Before the founding of the Tanglewood colony, where the great Boston Symphony Orchestra takes up its summer residence, an unequalled luster was attached to the Salzburg Music Festival in Austria. Many Americans made it their summer goal, crossing the ocean and spending great sums of money to attend this outstanding European musical event. Since the founding of Tanglewood, fostered so generously by Serge Koussevitzky, there are many music lovers who claim now that the American summer music festival has eclipsed the Salzburg gatherings. It has drawn the musical great not only of America, but every country of the world. It has also introduced many new musicians, who have since become famous, and brought the works of young composers to the public for premier hearings.

Music Mountain, in Falls Village, Connecticut, has also served the public not only in enjoyable evenings, of chamber music but in bringing new works to them. In this country, where serious music is so lightly treated, many composers live out their entire life without once hearing their works performed. While "pop" songs, and tunes from Broadway shows earn their composers fame and fortune, serious music is heartbreakingly unrewarding to its authors. It's a gratifying and wonderful thing to know that the summer musical colonies feel a responsibility to the newcomers in their ranks. By presenting new works, they are giving sorely needed impetus to the dull pulse of American interest in serious music.

Although music and drama were the forerunners of the cultural movement to the Berkshires, dance has also taken its place The Jacob's Pillow Festival is becoming known for its school and performances, and its progress in new forms of the dance. Many of the dancers who take part in the summer recitals have won critical acclaim on Broadway during the winter.

There are many other groups of entertainers, notable among them the summer theatres. The Stockbridge group is as talented and competent as anything seen on Broadway, and New York state too has its theatre with the Starlight players in Pawling, and there is of course the inimitable Pitchfork Playhouse in Sharon. In the schedules announced for the coming season, they have all included tryouts of new dramas.

The criticism has often been leveled at the United States that all serious drama, and too much of our music, centers solely around Broadway and New York City. In most European countries the theatre is competently represented in every major city, and the best in drama is available for people living in the equivalents of our Cincinnati, St. Louis, Kansas City, Des Moines or San Antonio etc. There is no onus attached to playing in cities other than the nation's capitol, and well known stars willingly accept engagements in what Americans disparagingly term the "provinces". The result, of course for these countries, is a better appreciation of drama, and greater opportunities for the theatre to grow and progress than in our highly centralized "Broadway" system. They have avoided the escapist clap-trap that forms the greater part of American entertainment by taking their art to all parts of the country, instead of just one city, and educating their countrymen to appreciate the best.

One of the greatest cultural strides made in our country since the First World War has been the growth of the summer theatre and the founding of music and dance centers outside New York City. It has made possible enjoyment for many people who would otherwise never have the opportunity to view a "live" stage drama, and it has brought to light new dramatic talents, many new and great musical compositions, and provided a showcase for many plays which otherwise might never have been produced.

The continuance and growth of these enterprises of course depend on the reception of the public, but it's no one-sided philanthropic project. You're not just doing a good deed when you buy a ticket to hear great music, or see a great drama. A deeply rewarding pleasure, the kind denied most of us during the long winter months, and a new kind of artistic experience is your return.

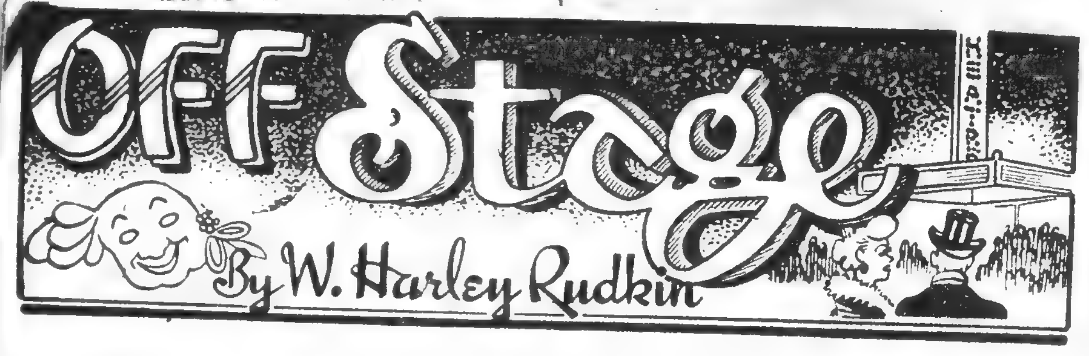
We sometimes wonder just how many local residents take advantage of the opportunities that are literally in our "backyard" each summer. City people flock to the Berkshires filling inns, hotels and restaurants because of their desire to have the best in entertainment. But how about the local residents who need only take an hour's drive to witness some of the greatest artistic virtuosity in America's history?

INFORMATION OBSCURED

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 49,564)

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

JUN 2 1948



Because of the close and friendly collaboration between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Springfield Orchestra Association, the coming events at Tanglewood this summer will move a little nearer to the musical life of Springfield and the rest of Western Massachusetts than ever before. More and more, it has become apparent that in its symphony orchestra and associated activities, the Springfield Orchestra Association is physically and artistically expanding its cultural scope, and there can be no question but that this expansion will reflect nothing but credit on this city's musical attainments.

At other times and in other columns, we have cast a doubtful eye in the direction of the coming Fall and Winter music season. By implication and by direct accusation, we have stated that this community was, in a sense, due to be exploited by outside organizations who have discovered that Springfield is a rich field for the promotion of musical interests.

* * *

The sheer quantity of music that this area will be exposed to in the coming months speaks for itself, and only the close of the 1948-49 season will tell whether or not these fears have been justified. But about the Berkshire Music Festival, there can be no doubts at all, and it is with the utmost pleasure that we contemplate the friendly relationships between our own symphonic organization and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The fact that Dr. Koussevitzky, founder of Tanglewood, will come to Springfield with the Boston Symphony next year, the year of his retirement, is eloquent proof of our standing and growth in the musical world.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 144,892) (S 160,408)

This Clipping From HOUSTON, TEX.
POST

27 1948

Bartok to Be 'Done' In Berkshire Festival

BOSTON, June 26.—(Sp)—Chamber music concerts at the Berkshire Music Center this summer will be devoted to the works of two widely divergent masters, Franz Schubert and Bela Bartok.

The Schubert concerts are the contribution of Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge and will be given on the four Wednesday evenings of July.

The six Bartok quartets will be divided between two Saturday evenings, July 10 and 17, and will be played by the Juilliard String Quartet as a contribution of the Juilliard School of Music. These events will be in the Theatre-Concert Hall at Tanglewood.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 152,979) (S 173,578)

This Clipping From MIAMI, FLA.
HERALD

JUN 27 1948

Boston Symphony Orchestra Plans 14 Berkshire Concerts

THE 1948 Berkshire Festival will consist of 14 concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra, with Serge Koussevitzky as music director.

Concerts in the Theatre-Concert Hall on July 18 and 20, July 25 and 27, will be devoted to the music of Bach and Mozart. An all-Tchaikovsky concert will be presented Aug. 10 in the Shed.

Guest conductors will be Leonard Bernstein, Eleazar de Carvalho and Robert Shaw.

The festival repertoire is as follows: first series, Bach's Third Suite, Hindemith's "Mathis der Maler" symphony, the Second Symphonies of Brahms and Mahler, Piston's Third and Beethoven's Fifth; second series, Beethoven's Sixth, Schostakovich's Fifth, Berlioz' Fantastic Symphony, Strauss's "Don Quixote" (with Gregor Piatigorsky as 'cello soloist), Stravinsky's "Oedipus Rex," deFalla's "El Amor Brunjo" and Villa-Lobos' "Madonna;" third series, Schumann's First, Sibelius's Second, Beethoven's Third, overture to Weber's "Freischutz," a complete performance of "Petrouchka," and a large choral work still to be announced.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 156,572) (S 258,489)

This Clipping From
NEW ORLEANS, LA.
TIMES-PICAYUNE

JUN 29 1948

MUSICIANS TO STUDY WITH BOSTON GROUP

Four Louisiana musicians will take a course of study at Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., which starts Thursday. The course is conducted by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky. Louisianians who will attend are Ned C. Wright, Shreveport; Sidney Conger, Arcadia; Ralph Pottle, Hammond, and Marshall E. Bretz, Ruston.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 75,888)

This Clipping From SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS
NEWS

JUN

Willing to Attend Berkshire Center

Donald Willing will attend the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., for a six weeks' session beginning Sunday, July 4. The school is under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 64,134)

This Clipping From
LONG ISLAND CITY, N. Y.
STAR-JOURNAL

JUN 29 1948

Nine to Study Music At Berkshire Center

Nine North Queens residents will study at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., attending the six-week session opening Thursday at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school.

They are Ellen Faull of 62-63 Saunders street, Rego Park; Mary Zuckerbrod of 85-07 Abingdon road, Kew Gardens; Mr. and Mrs. Richard Gilbert of 83-00 Talbot street, Kew Gardens; Jane Delson of 14-49 162nd street, Beechhurst.

Peggy Whiting of 143-20 Franklin avenue, Flushing; Walter Botti of 33-51 60th street, Woodside; Sonia Stolin of 30-76 35th street, Astoria, and Robert Klein of 83-2 Cornish avenue, Elmhurst.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (M. & E. 82,265)

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

JUN 28 1948

IMPROVEMENTS AT BERKSHIRE MUSIC CENTER

445 Students Enrolled for Sixth Season, Which Will Begin Sunday

With an enrolment of 445 students, 28 more than last year and the largest in its history, the Berkshire Music Center will begin its sixth season at exercises in the theater-concert hall at Tanglewood next Sunday at 3.30 o'clock. The students this year come from 42 states, the District of Columbia, Alaska, and 13 foreign countries. Of the 262 men students 111 are former GI's.

Koussevitzky To Speak

Speakers at the opening will be Serge Koussevitzky, and Dr. Lewis Perry, chairman of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, who will also represent the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. There will be the traditional singing by the entire student body of Randall Thompson's "Alleluia," composed for the first opening exercises in 1940.

The audience will be greeted with a number of striking improvements and additions to the beautiful 200-acre estate between Lenox and Stockbridge. The innovations begin at the front gate where a handsome reception and exhibition room is being erected to the right of the main entrance. Entirely plate glass front and back, the room is 15 feet high and its roof spreads over the gate, bringing the offices to the left into one harmonious unit. The new building will also house the school book and music store.

Of highly functional design, the new building is the work of Saarinen and Saarinen and Associates, Bloomfield Hills, Mich., architects of the theater-concert hall and chamber music hall at Tanglewood.

New Roof On Shed

The music shed, which accommodates 6000 persons at the festival concerts, is getting a new roof. The great wedge-shaped expanse covers nearly an acre and a half and the new roofing material weighs approximately four pounds per square foot.

Refreshment facilities have been considerably enlarged. Portable booths, making special bills of fare easily accessible, will be ready when the festival begins with the first of the Bach-Mozart concerts Sunday afternoon, July 18.

The school has a number of new studios, including three in the Red Cottage which the National Federation of Music Clubs has rebuilt on the site and in exact reproduction of the little house where Hawthorne wrote "Tanglewood Tales" and "The House of Seven Gables." The center has also leased the adjoining estate formerly owned by the Drake family and fifty men students will be housed there.

The Berkshire festival will begin Sunday afternoon, July 18, with the first of the Bach-Mozart concerts in the Theater-concert hall. The first concert in the music shed will be Thursday evening, July 29.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW
Tel. CHelsea
Cir. (D 17,540)

This Clipping
ASHEVILLE,
TIMES

JUN 2

A Rossini work, more than 100 yea summer's operatic pr Berkshire Festival in The opera will be under the title of Italy." The revised Goldovsky, head of partment of the mu

The score wa from a manuscript Palermo, Italy, an the Boston public Widener Library a Melvin Bartell, one of the finalis concert awards o Theater Wing, ha sing leading roles Garden Opera in

The annual fe tral City opera will see presen mer of "Cosi Fan of Hoffman" for the clouds." Th town is 9,000 fee 35 miles west o

---

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 155,523) (S 197,017)

This Clipping From
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
STAR

JUN 27

Hoosier Pease Named Soloist At Berkshire

Bo[illegible], June 26.

JAMES PEASE, bass-baritone formerly [illegible]anapolis, and seven other singers, all American born and t[illegible] will comprise the list of [illegible]ists with the Boston Sym[illegible] Orchestra at the Berkshire Festival this summer, accord[illegible] an announcement today [illegible]ductor Serge Koussevitzky. Although young artists make up the entire list, all but one has appeared previously with the Boston ensemble.

They [illegible] Ellabelle Davis, soprano; Ellen Faull, soprano; Frances Yeend, soprano; Eunice Alberts, contralto; Carol Brice, contralto; David Lloyd, tenor; and Mr. Pease. The single newcomer to the Orchestra is Nan Merriman, mezzo-soprano, who will be soloist with Miss Davis Sunday afternoon, Aug. 1, in the Mehler Symphony No. 2 ("Resurrection"), Leonard Bernstein conducting. The large chorus which the work calls for will be that of the Berkshire Music Center. Miss Davis sang in the Hahler Symphony with Mr. Bernstein in Boston last [illegible].

WESLEY ADDY, who has appeared in the Shakespearean productions [illegible] Maurice Evans and with Katherine Cornell in "Antigone," [illegible] be the narrator in Stravinsky's "Oedipus" with the full orchestra, soloists and chorus on Thursday evening, Aug. 5, Dr. Koussevitzky conducting. Singers will be Miss Brice, Mr. Lloyd and Mr. Pease. The trio and Mr. Addy made a profound impression when Dr. Koussevitzky led Stravinsky's version of the Greek tragedy at two performances in Symphony Hall, Boston, last March.

Miss Brice, who was a Koussevitzky discovery and was introduced at a meeting of the Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra two years ago, will sing the passages for voice in Falla's "El Amor Brujo" Sunday afternoon, Aug. 8, under the direction of Eleazar de Carvalho.

At the concert which Robert Shaw will conduct on Saturday evening, Aug. 14, Miss Faull and Miss Alberts will be soloists in "The Blessed Damozel" of Debussy and Miss Yeend and Mr. Pease in the Brahms "Requiem." Miss Yeend, Miss Alberts, and Mr. Pease with Mr. Lloyd made up the quartet of soloists for the Beethoven Ninth Symphony at last year's Festival. Miss Faull was the soprano in the Beethoven Missa Solemnis in Boston this season.

ALREADY announced as soloists for the 1948 Berkshire Festival are Isaac Stern, violinist; Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist, and Seymour Lipkin, pianist. On Saturday evening, July 31, Mr. Stern will repeat, again under Koussevitzky's baton, the Prokofieff Concerto, No. 1, which he played at his first appearance with the Orchestra in Boston last March.

Piatigorsky, who has been soloist with the Boston Symphony on 25 previous occasions, two of them at Tanglewood, will be heard in Richard Strauss' tone poem "Don Quixote," Koussevitzky conducting. This was the work in which the distinguished 'cellist made his most recent appearance with the Orchestra, in April of this year.

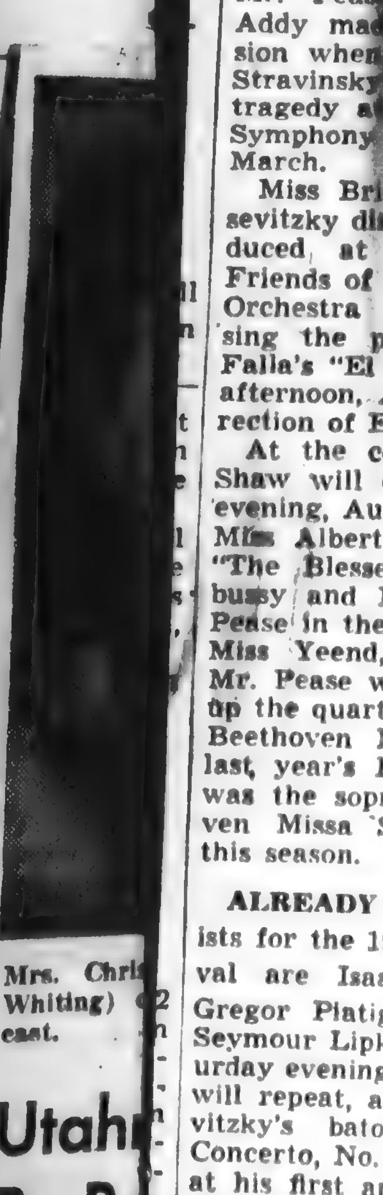
Seymour Lipkin's performance of the Piano Concerto No. 1 under Koussevitzky at the all-Tschaikowsky concert Tuesday evening, Aug. 10, will be both his Boston ~~Symphony~~ and Tanglewood debut. The 20-year old Detroit pianist is this year's winner of the Rachmaninoff Fund Award.

The Festival begins with Bach concert on Sunday afternoon, July 18, and a Mozart concert Tuesday evening, July 20, be repeated, respectively, July and July 27, all under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS
220 W. 19th St.,
Tel. CH
Cir. (D 82,3

This Cl
SALT LAK
TR



Mrs. Chri Whiting) cast.

Utah By Be

BERKSHIR are con musical cen They've had musicians c to go forth in the natio

Latest U at the Tang val is Mrs. Lee Whitin formerly of ter of Mr. Whiting of was one of for the op Berkshire out of musicians auditio a full scholarship held in Tanglewood 15, is conducted by sevitzky, music dire ton symphony orche

At present, Pe studying with Mme.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 2,086)

This Clipping From ARLINGTON, VA.
DAILY

JUN 29 1948

Beaschler To Attend Berkshire Music Center

Charles Beaschler, of 9065 Seventeenth Street, Arlington, will attend the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Massachusetts, a six-week summer school of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, beginning July 4, it was announced today.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 21,342)

This Clipping From
POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
NEW YORKER

JUN 28 1948

Berkshire Center Lists 40 Events

Forty musical events will be open, by invitation, to friends of the Berkshire Music center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., during the six weeks session of the school. Starting with initial exercises Sunday afternoon, July 4, they will include symphony concerts, choral and chamber music concerts on four successive Wednesday nights, gift of Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, and two by the Juilliard String Quartet.

The performances, excepting the Coolidge and Juilliard concerts, will be by students admitted to the school because of outstanding musical talent. Initiated in 1940 by Serge Koussevitzky, and founded by the Boston Symphony orchestra, the center is not a school for technical musical training, "but rather a place where provision is made for the study of music on an advanced level through experience in group performance." Dr. Koussevitzky defines the purpose as "to give our students constructive advice and a practical method which will stimulate their gifts, round out their abilities gained during their years of study and broaden their acquaintance with music."

With one or more events scheduled nearly every day, student performances will be under the direction of a faculty directed by Dr. Koussevitzky, assisted by Aaron Copland, composer. The major orchestra will be under Dr. Koussevitzky's personal direction, with Leonard Bernstein, first guest conductor at the Berkshire Festival, assisted by Eleazar deCarvalho, Brazilian conductor, and members of the Boston Symphony orchestra. An orchestra in department five will be under Frederick Fennell of the Eastman School of Music, Rochester, and in the opera department under Mr. deCarvalho.

Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist, will return after a season's leave to head the chamber music; Hugh Ross and Robert Shaw, choral conducting; Boris Goldovsky, opera; Mr. Copeland and Darius Milhaud of France, composition. Members of the Boston Orchestra will give sectional training and coaching. Miss Katharine Wolff, director of music at Shipley school, Bryn Mawr, Pa., student adviser and only woman faculty member, will teach solfege.

Friends of the center and their guests will be admitted to all performances within the limits of seating capacities. Last season more than 1,000 music lovers from all parts of the country, contributed to the school's support, attending as many performances as their time in the vicinity permitted. Many, too far away to attend the Festival, sent gifts because of their interest in the center.

Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 22,786) (S 22,833)

This Clipping From OGDEN, UTAH
STANDARD EXAMINER

JUN

Eight singers, all of them American-born and trained will appear as soloists at the Berkshire festival this summer, it is announced by Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. They are Ellabelle Davis, Ellen Faull and Frances Yeend, sopranos; Eunice Alberts and Carol Brice, contraltos; Nan Merriman, mezzo-soprano; David Lloyd, tenor, and James Pease, bass-baritone.

Other soloists will be Isaac Stern, violinist; Gregor Piatigorsky, 'celloist and Seymour Lipkin, winner of this year's Rachmaninoff piano award.

An interesting feature of the festival will be two series of chamber music concerts, one devoted to Schubert and the other to the contemporary Bela Bartok. The six Bartok quartets will be played by the Juillard string quartet on two Saturday evenings, July 10 and 17. The Schubert concerts, to be given on the four Wednesday evenings of July, are a contribution of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation.

The Philadelphia orchestra, in a summary of its 1947-48 season, reports that it played to 562,435 persons. That includes a regular 32-week season and a trans-continental tour of five weeks.

The orchestra traveled 25,820 miles by rail and appeared in cities from Toronto to Jacksonville and from San Diego to Vancouver.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 122,373) (S 123,464)

This Clipping From
DALLAS, TEX.
TIMES HERALD

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

By the Way

A new independent film-producing team is Myrna Loy and her husband, producer-writer Gene Markey. They have just organized Charter Films, Inc.... Bette Davis may be cast opposite Claude Rains in "No Common Clay," a future Warner Brothers production.

The Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Mass., opens its sixth season Sunday, July 4, with the greatest enrollment to date. This year students are coming from 42 states, Alaska and 13 foreign countries. Speakers will include Serge Koussevitzky, founder and principal sponsor of the school, and Aaron Copland, the famous American composer.

Adele Jergens, who went to Hollywood four years ago from New York, finally has decided to make California home. She is building a home in Brentwood, bringing her family west...The Damon recording of "My Happiness" with Jon and Sondra Steele, is fifth on the list of national best-selling discs, according to Variety. The Steeles had a record-breaking run at the Mural Room this spring.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 51,724)

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS

JUN 30 1948

Albany Girl To Study at Tanglewood

The Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., will begin its season Sunday with the largest student enrollment in its history, 445, 28 more than last year.

Among them will be one student from Albany, Miss Marie S. Gutta, 158 Hamilton St., a mezzo-soprano, who has been heard in Albany recitals and musical shows. She is a graduate of Philip Schuyler High School and the College of St. Rose.

The study season at Tanglewood will start with ceremonies in the Theater Concert Hall at 3:30 p. m. Sunday. Speakers will be Serge Koussevitzky, founder and director of the school and a prominent American conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra; Aaron Copland, assistant director of the schol and a prominent American composer; Dr. Lewis Perry, chairman of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center; and representative of the trustees of the Boston Orchestra.

Many improvements instituted since last year will be seen by students and visitors, including a new roof for the shed and other construction projects planned for completion by the time the concert season starts.

The first of the Berkshire Festival Bach-Mozart concerts will be July 18 in the Concert Hall and the first of the three main series of concerts will start July 20 at 8:15 p. m. in the shed. There are 39 activity dates on the calender between the ceremonial opening and the final concert in Series C at 3:30 p. m. Aug. 15.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 12,764)

This Clipping From
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
JUL 1 - 1948

Music Center to Open Sunday To Start Tanglewood Season

Enrollment of 445 in School is Largest in History—Dr. Koussevitzky, Dr. Perry, Aaron Copland to Address Gathering—Bach-Mozart Concerts Begin Sunday, July 18—Festival Concerts in Big Music Shed Start July 29—Tanglewood Visitors Will Find Many Improvements to Property.

With an enrollment of 445 students, 28 more than last year and the largest in its history, the Berkshire Music Center will begin its sixth season at exercises in the theater-concert hall at Tanglewood, Lenox, next Sunday afternoon at 3.30 o'clock.

The students this year come from 42 states, the District of Columbia, Alaska and 13 foreign countries. Of the 262 men students 111 are former GI's.

Koussevitzky Speaks

Speakers at the opening will be Serge Koussevitzky, founder and director of the school; Aaron Copland, the assistant director, and Dr. Lewis Perry, chairman of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, who also will represent the trustees of the Boston Symphony orchestra. There will be the traditional singing by the entire student body of Randall Thompson's "Alleluia," composed for the first opening exercises in 1940.

The audience at this, the first event at Tanglewood this summer, will be greeted with a number of striking improvements and additions to the beautiful 200-acre estate between Lenox and Stockbridge. The innovations are immediately apparent, beginning at the front gate where a handsome reception and exhibition room is being erected to the right of the main entrance. Entirely plate glass front and back, the room is 15 feet high and its roof spreads over the gate, bringing the offices to the left into one harmonious unit. The new building also will house the school book and music store.

Functional Design

Of highly functional design, the new building is the work of Saarinen and Saarinen and Associates Bloomfield Hills, Mich., architects of the theater-concert hall and chamber music hall at Tanglewood. Use of slender supporting columns of steel gives the new construction the same lightness which makes the music shed and other buildings at Tanglewood memorable architectural achievements.

The music shed, which accommodates 6,000 persons at the Festival concerts, is getting a new roof. The great wedge-shaped expanse covers nearly an acre and a half and the new roofing material weighs approximately four pounds per square foot.

Refreshment facilities have been considerably enlarged. Portable booths, making special bills of fare easily accessible, will be ready when the festival begins with the first of the Bach-Mozart concerts Sunday afternoon, July 18.

Festival Opens 18th

The school has a number of new studios, including three in the red cottage which the National Federation of Music clubs has rebuilt on the site and in exact reproduction of the little house where Hawthorne wrote "Tanglewood Tales" and "The House of Seven Gables." The center has also leased the adjoining estate formerly owned by the Drake family and 50 men students will be housed there.

The Berkshire festival will begin Sunday afternoon, July 18, with the first of the Bach-Mozart concerts, in the theater-concert hall. The first concert in the music shed will be Thursday evening, July 29.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 49,564)

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

Utah Girl Awarded Scholarship To Berkshire Music Center

A Utah girl, in her early twenties, formerly a member of the famous Tabernacle Choir, is announced by Mrs. Royden J. Keith of Chicago, president of the National Federation of Music Clubs, as winner of a federation sponsored scholarship in the opera department at the Berkshire Music Center for the summer of 1948. She is LaCretia Ferre, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles E. Ferre of Salt Lake City.

The scholarship won by Miss Ferre is one of three covering 1948 tuition at the Berkshire Music Center donated by the Newport (R. I.) Music Club to the national federation. One of these, a scholarship for strings, was open [illegible] Rhode Island competitors. [illegible] Robert Allen, 21, of Providence, cellist, a student at Boston University and [illegible] of Jean Bedetti, first cellist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

A second scholarship, open as to classification, but confined to Newport contestants, went to Martha Butler, 18-year-old contralto, daughter of Capt. Thomas J. Butler of the U. S. Maritime Service, and Mrs. Butler. Miss Butler is a graduate of Rogers High School in Newport, and has studied one year at the College of the Pacific in Stockton, Cal. She is a pupil of Mrs. Helen Alee of Newport.

The scholarship won by Miss Ferre was for opera voice only, and was open to competitors from the western region, comprising the states of Wyoming, Colorado, Utah, New Mexico, Idaho, Montana, California, Arizona, Nevada, Oregon and Washington. Competitors were heard by Frank St. Leger, assistant to the general manager of the Metropolitan Opera.

Miss Ferre came from a highly musical family, her four brothers and four sisters being both vocalists and instrumentalists. A graduate of a business school, she has used her earnings to finance her musical career. During her first job as supervisor of armament and cycle inventory at Fort Douglas, she was soloist with the Fort Douglas Orchestra. She is currently studying with Solon Alerti in New York and has been soloist in five New York performances of leading oratorios, among them "Elijah", "The Creation" and "The Messiah".

The presentation of the Berkshire Music Center scholarships, which include living expenses as well as tuition, was a project [illegible] by Mrs. Irma Goge[illegible], president of the Newport Music Club, who has recently been named [illegible] of the Rhode Island [illegible] Orchestra. They were [illegible] by [illegible] sale of possessions donated by [illegible]

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 49,564)

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

ACCEPTED AS STUDENT

MRS. FRANCES Z. KLEINERMAN

Mrs. Frances Zirkin Kleinerman, well-known lecture-recitalist of Longmeadow, has been accepted as a student at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood. ~~She will leave Sunday~~ for the opening exercises. She has appeared as pianist soloist at the Springfield [illegible] Museum and

---

ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 41,065) (S 42,003)

This Clipping From UTICA, N. Y.
OBSERVER DISPATCH
JUL [illegible] 1948

Utican Attends Music Center

Lenore B. Hungerford, 253 Genesee, a trumpet player, left today for the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Mass.

Recently Miss Hungerford was auditioned at Carnegie Hall in New York for a place in the orchestra to be conducted by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, for many years ~~conductor~~ of the Boston Symphony. She was accepted for a post with the orchestra.

Mr. and Mrs. Dwight T. Bone, 803 Baker, went with Miss Hungerford to Tanglewood Last week the Etude Club awarded the young instrumentalist a scholarship which made it possible for her to attend the music center.

Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 27,430)

This Clipping From
COLUMBIA, S. C.
RECORD

Eight singers, all of them American-born and trained, will appear as soloists at the Berkshire festival this summer, it is announced by Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. They are ~~Ellabelle~~ Davis, Ellen Faull and Frances Yeend, sopranos; Eunice Alberts and Carol Brice, contraltos; Nan Merriman, mezzo-soprano; David Lloyd, tenor, and James Pease, bass-baritone.

Other soloists will be Isaac Stern, violinist; Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist, and Seymour Lipkin, winner of this year's Rachmaninoff piano award.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 77,287)

This Clipping From
SAN DIEGO, CAL.
TRIBUNE SUN
JUL 2 - 1948

KOUSSEVITSKY RELEASE FROM TANGLEWOOD SUPERIOR

When word went out that Serge Koussevitzky has retired (for reasons of age) from directing the Boston Symphony winter concerts, "Turntable Talk" consoled itself with the fact that the maestro has promised to wield the baton a few times during the annual summer festival at Tanglewood. This hope now is being fulfilled and what it will mean is being demonstrated now by a Tanglewood (1947) recording of the sixth Bachs' "Brandenburg Concerto" for two solo violas and strings (RCA Victor 1211, three 12-inch disks).

It is quite evident that these summer concerts at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass., are dear to Koussevitzky's heart. Earlier recordings made at the already famous "music shed" in the New England hills have revealed this. The recorded performance of the sixth "Brandenburg Concerto" (just released) is not only one of the finest Bach readings by the Russian conductor, but altogether one of the best on disks.

All of the six concertos are things of beauty. In decorative wealth they surpass most of Handel's superb "Concerto Grosso" cycle. Perhaps the most personal, most romantic of the six Bach scores is the last one presented herewith. Although set for strings (and harpsichord) it does not employ violin, the main portion being allotted to violas (solo and grouped) surrounded by violincellos and bases.

History does not tell why Bach limited himself to the darker-colored bow instruments. It cannot have been the absence of fiddlers in the court orchestra of the Margrave of Brandenburg for whom the set of the six concertos was composed. Is it an experiment in certain varieties of shadings and tintings such as Whistler loved to execute in the realm of paintings? Was it the result of introspective moods which excluded brighter toned instruments? Very likely one will never know, nor is there music made with restricted means which is more revealing of a man's skill and soul.

COLUMBIA DEVOTES ALBUM TO MORTON GOULD BAND

Albums bearing the name of Morton Gould, New York composer, conductor and smart arranger to boot, have enjoyed wide popularity. It is not surprising to find Columbia issuing now one devoted to "Morton Gould and His Symphonic Band." (Four 12-inch disks). This is smooth, clever, brilliant stuff and selections range widely. Gould starts off with Sousa's "Washington Post March" and his own "July 4th" celebration piece. There are also his own "Home for Christmas" and "Yankee Doodle." California is represented with William Grant Still's "Work Song From the Delta." Prokofieff's rhythmic "March, Opus 99" will be liked, and finally, but not least, Gould includes two perennial favorites, Grainger's "Irish Tune from County Derry" and "Shepherd's Hey."

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 73,593) (S 124,623)

This Clipping From
SAN ANTONIO, TEX.
EXPRESS
JUL [illegible] 1948

Music School Student

Donald Willing, 124 W. Gramercy, will attend the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., which will open its Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer ~~school~~, directed by Serge Koussevitzky, July 4.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 12,764)
This Clipping From
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
JUL 1 - 1948

Music Center to Open Sunday To Start Tanglewood Season

Enrollment of 445 in School is Largest in History—Dr. Koussevitzky, Dr. Perry, Aaron Copland to Address Gathering—Bach-Mozart Concerts Begin Sunday, July 18—Festival Concerts in Big Music Shed Start July 29—Tanglewood Visitors Will Find Many Improvements to Property.

With an enrollment of 445 students, 28 more than last year and the largest in its history, the Berkshire Music Center will begin its sixth season at exercises in the theater-concert hall at Tanglewood, Lenox, next Sunday afternoon at 3.30 o'clock.

The students this year come from 42 states, the District of Columbia, Alaska and 13 foreign countries. Of the 262 men students 111 are former GI's.

Koussevitzky Speaks

Speakers at the opening will be Serge Koussevitzky, founder and director of the school; Aaron Copland, the assistant director, and Dr. Lewis Perry, chairman of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, who also will represent the trustees of the Boston Symphony orchestra. There will be the traditional singing by the entire student body of Randall Thompson's "Alleluia," composed for the first opening exercises in 1940.

The audience at this, the first event at Tanglewood this summer, will be greeted with a number of striking improvements and additions to the beautiful 200-acre estate between Lenox and Stockbridge. The innovations are immediately apparent, beginning at the front gate where a handsome reception and exhibition room is being erected to the right of the main entrance. Entirely plate glass front and back, the room is 15 feet high and its roof spreads over the gate, bringing the offices to the left into one harmonious unit. The new building also will house the school book and music store.

Functional Design

Of highly functional design, the new building is the work of Saarinen and Saarinen and Associates Bloomfield Hills, Mich., architects of the theater-concert hall and chamber music hall at Tanglewood. Use of slender supporting columns of steel gives the new construction the same lightness which makes the music shed and other buildings at Tanglewood memorable architectural achievements.

The music shed, which accommodates 6,000 persons at the Festival concerts, is getting a new roof. The great wedge-shaped expanse covers nearly an acre and a half and the new roofing material weighs approximately four pounds per square foot.

Refreshment facilities have been considerably enlarged. Portable booths, making special bills of fare easily accessible, will be ready when the festival begins with the first of the Bach-Mozart concerts Sunday afternoon, July 18.

Festival Opens 18th

The school has a number of new studios, including three in the red cottage which the National Federation of Music clubs has rebuilt on the site and in exact reproduction of the little house where Hawthorne wrote "Tanglewood Tales" and "The House of Seven Gables." The center has also leased the adjoining estate formerly owned by the Drake family and 50 men students will be housed there.

The Berkshire festival will begin Sunday afternoon, July 18, with the first of the Bach-Mozart concerts, in the theater-concert hall. The first concert in the music shed will be Thursday evening, July 29.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 49,564)
This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
[illegible]

ACCEPTED AS STUDENT

MRS. FRANCES Z. KLEINERMAN

Mrs. Frances Zirkin Kleinerman, well-known lecture-recitalist of Longmeadow, has been accepted as a student at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood. ~~She will leave Sunday~~ for the opening exercises. She has appeared as pia[illegible] soloist at the ingfield [illegible] and

---

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 77,287)
This Clipping From
SAN DIEGO, CAL.
TRIBUNE SUN
JUL 2 - 1948

KOUSSEVITSKY RELEASE FROM TANGLEWOOD SUPERIOR

When word went out that Serge Koussevitzky has retired (for reasons of age) from directing the Boston Symphony winter concerts, "Turntable Talk" consoled itself with the fact that the maestro has promised to wield the baton a few times during the annual summer festival at Tanglewood. This hope now is being fulfilled and what it will mean is being demonstrated now by a Tanglewood (1947) recording of the sixth Bachs' "Brandenburg Concerto" for two solo violas and strings (RCA Victor 1211, three 12-inch disks).

It is quite evident that these summer concerts at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass., are dear to Koussevitzky's heart. Earlier recordings made at the already famous "music shed" in the New England hills have revealed this. The recorded performance of the sixth "Brandenburg Concerto" (just released) is not only one of the finest Bach readings by the Russian conductor, but altogether one of the best on disks.

All of the six concertos are things of beauty. In decorative wealth they surpass most of Handel's superb "Concerto Grosso" cycle. Perhaps the most personal, most romantic of the six Bach scores is the last one presented herewith. Although set for strings (and harpsichord) it does not employ violin, the main portion being allotted to violas (solo and grouped) surrounded by violincellos and bases.

History does not tell why Bach limited himself to the darker-colored bow instruments. It cannot have been the absence of fiddlers in the court orchestra of the Margrave of Brandenburg for whom the set of the six concertos was composed. Is it an experiment in certain varieties of shadings and tintings such as Whistler loved to execute in the realm of paintings? Was it the result of introspective moods which excluded brighter toned instruments? Very likely one will never know, nor is there music made with restricted means which is more revealing of a man's skill and soul.

COLUMBIA DEVOTES ALBUM TO MORTON GOULD BAND

Albums bearing the name of Morton Gould, New York composer, conductor and smart arranger to boot, have enjoyed wide popularity. It is not surprising to find Columbia issuing now one devoted to "Morton Gould and His Symphonic Band." (Four 12-inch disks). This is smooth, clever, brilliant stuff and selections range widely. Gould starts off with Sousa's "Washington Post March" and his own "July 4th" celebration piece. There are also his own "Home for Christmas" and "Yankee Doodle." California is represented with William Grant Still's "Work Song From the Delta." Prokofieff's rhythmic "March, Opus 99" will be liked, and finally, but not least, Gould includes two perennial favorites, Grainger's "Irish Tune from County Derry" and "Shepherd's Hey."

ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 41,065) (S 42,003)
This Clipping From
UTICA, N. Y.
OBSERVER DISPATCH
JUL 2 - 1948

Utican Attends Music Center

Lenore B. Hungerford, 253 Genesee, a trumpet player, left today for the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Mass.

Recently Miss Hungerford was auditioned at Carnegie Hall in New York for a place in the orchestra to be conducted by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, for many years conductor of the Boston Symphony. She was accepted for a post with the orchestra.

Mr. and Mrs. Dwight T. Bone, 803 Baker, went with Miss Hungerford to Tanglewood. Last week the Etude Club awarded the young instrumentalist a scholarship which made it possible for her to attend the music center.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 49,564)
This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
JUL 1 - 1948

Utah Girl Awarded Scholarship To Berkshire Music Center

A Utah girl, in her early twenties, formerly a member of the famous Tabernacle Choir, is announced by Mrs. Royden J. Keith of Chicago, president of the National Federation of Music Clubs, as winner of a federation sponsored scholarship in te opera department at the Berkshire Music Center for the summer of 1948. She is Lucretia Ferre, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles E. Ferre of Salt Lake City.

The scholarship won by Miss Ferre is one of three covering 1948 tuition at the Berkshire Music Center donated by the Newport (R. I.) Music Club to the national federation. One of these, a scholarship for strings, was open to Rhode Island competitors. This was won by Robert Allen, 21, of Providence, cellist, a student at Brown University and currently a pupil of Jean Bedetti, first cellist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

A second scholarship, open as to classification, but confined to Newport contestants, went to Martha Butler, 18-year-old contralto, daughter of Capt. Thomas J. Butler of the U. S. Maritime Service, and Mrs. Butler. Miss Butler is a graduate of Rogers High School in Newport, and has studied one year at the College of the Pacific in Stockton, Cal. She is a pupil of Mrs. Helen Alee of Newport.

The scholarship won by Miss Ferre was for opera voice only, and was open to competitors from the western region, comprising the states of Wyoming, Colorado, Utah, New Mexico, Idaho, Monana, California, Arizona, Nevada, Oregon and Washington. Competitors were heard by Frank St. Leger, assistant to the general manager of the Metropolitan Opera.

Mss Ferre came from a highly musical family, her four brothers and four sisters being both vocalists and instrumentalists. A graduate of a business school, she has used her earnings to finance her musical career. During her first job as supervisor of armament and cycle inventory at Fort Douglas, she was soloist with the Fort Douglas Orchestra. She is currently studying with Solon Alerti in New York and has been soloist in five New York performances of leading oratorios, among them "Elijah", "The Creation" and "The Messiah".

The presentation of the Berkshire Music Center scholarships, which include living expenses as well as tuition, was a project initiated by Mrs. Irma Giegel, president of the Newport Music Club, who has recently been named vice-president of the Rhode Island Philharmonic Orchestra. They were financed by an auction sale of possessions donated by celebrities.

Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 27,430)
This Clipping From
COLUMBIA, S. C.
RECORD
JUL 1 - 1948

Eight singers, all of them American-born and trained, will appear as soloists at the Berkshire festival this summer, it is announced by Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. They are Ellabelle Davis, Ellen Faull and Frances Yeend, sopranos; Eunice Alberts and Carol Brice, contraltos; Nan Merriman, mezzo-soprano; David Lloyd, tenor, and James Pease, bass-baritone.

Other soloists will be Isaac Stern, violinist; Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist, and Seymour Lipkin, winner of this year's Rachmaninoff piano award.

[152]

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 73,593) (S 124,623)
This Clipping From
SAN ANTONIO, TEX.
EXPRESS
JUL 1 1948

Music School Student

Donald Willing, 124 W. Gramercy, will attend the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., which will open its Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school, directed by Serge Koussevitzky, July 4.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (M. & E. 82,265)
This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

JUL 2 - 1948

A Rich Summer of Music In Store for Western Mass.

Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood Heads List; Fine Programs at Cummington and New Boston

By WILLARD M. CLARK

During the next 10 weeks people from all over the world will come to Western Massachusetts to hear great music superbly performed. Primary interest will center around the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox, summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. Devotees of Chamber Music will turn to the Cummington School of Fine Arts which will have a resident trio and will give Sunday afternoon concerts open to the public without charge. Under the direction of Rosamond Chapin, informal musicales will be given for guests at the New Boston Inn and a series of three formal concerts is also planned.

Berkshire Festival

The Berkshire Festival, under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, will open with two pairs of concerts devoted to the music of Bach and Mozart. These concerts will be given in the Theater-Concert Hall at Tanglewood. The opening concert will be given Sunday afternoon at 3.30 p. m. The following Bach program will be given; "Brandenburg Concerto No. 3 in G major;" "Concerto in D minor for Three Pianos and Strings;" "Cantata No. 65, 'Sie Werden aus Saba Alla Kommen" for tenor, bass and chorus, and "Suite No. 2 in B minor, for Flute and Strings."

Tuesday evening at 8.15 p. m. the first all-Mozart program will be given. The program will include "Symphony in C major, K. 338;" "Serenade for Winds, (nacht Musique); Concerto for Piano and Orchestra in G major." with Lucas Foass as soloist, and "Symphony in E-flat major, A 543."

The Mozart program will be repeated on Sunday afternoon, July 25, and the Bach program on Tuesday evening, July 27. The programs by the full Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Shed will be as follows:—

Series A

Thursday, July 29, Serge Koussevitzky, conducting.
Bach .... Suite in D major, No. 3
Hindemith (Symphony; "Mathis der Maler"
Beethoven .... Symphony in C minor, No. 5
Saturday, July 31, Serge Koussevitzky, conducting.
Piston .... Symphony No. 3
Prokofieff .... Violin Concerto No. 1
Brahms ..... Symphony in C minor, No. 1
(Soloist: Isaac Stern)
Sunday, August 1, Leonard Bernstein, conducting.
Haydn .... Symphony No. 104
Mahler ... Symphony No. 2, "Resurrection" (with Chorus & Soloists)

Series B

Thursday, August 5, Serge Koussevitzky, conducting.
Beethoven ... Symphony No. 6, "Pastoral"
Stravinsky ... "Oedipus Rex" for Orchestra (with Male Chorus and Soloists)
Saturday, August 7, Serge Koussevitzky, conducting.
Prokofieff "Romeo and Juliet" Suite No. 2
Vaughan Williams .... Symphony No. 6
(First Performance in America)
Strauss .... "Don Quixote"
(Soloist: Gregor Piatigorsky)
Sunday, August 8, Eleazar de Carvalho, conducting.
Berlioz .... Fantastic Symphony
Villa Lobos .... Ma lona
Falla .... El Amor Brujo
Siqueira .... "Nordenina"

Extra Concert

Tuesday, August 10, Serge Koussevitzky, conducting.
Tchaikovsky Program
Symphony No. 6 "Pathetique"
Piano Concerto No. 1
Overture, "1812"
(Soloist: Seymour Lipkin)

Series C

Thursday, August 12, Leonard Bernstein, conducting.
Weber .... Overture to "Der Freischutz"
Stravinsky .... "Petrouchka" (Complete)
Shostakovitch .... Symphony No. 5
Saturday, August 14, Robert Shaw, conducting.
Debussy .... The Blessed Damozel
Brahms .... Requiem
(Chorus and Soloists)
Sunday, August 15, Serge Koussevitzky conducting.
Beethoven ..... Symphony No. 3 "Eroica"
Sibelius ... Symphony in D major, No. 2

American Singers to Star

During his many years with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Koussevitzky has given first performances of many works by American composers and introduced a large number of American-trained singers and instrumentalists. This summer no less than eight American singers will be heard. All but Nan Merriman, mezzo-soprano, have been heard before with the orchestra. These include Ellabelle Davis, Ellen Faull and Frances Yeend, sopranos; Eunice Alberts and Carol Brice, contraltos; David Lloyd, tenor, and James Pease, bass-baritone.

Concerts at Cummington

The Cummington School of the Arts will provide a series of chamber music concerts each Sunday afternoon at 4 p.m. from July 11 through August 29. The resident trio will include Marion DeRonde, cellist; Nathan Gottschalk, violin, and Prescott Barrows, pianist. A number of guest artists will also appear.

The opening program, July 11, will include trios by Mozart, Shostakovitch and Beethoven. A Beethoven sonata recital will be given by George Brown, cellist, and Bruce Simond, pianist, on July 18. Nathan Gottschalk and Barrows will play Mozart for violin and piano on July 25.

On August 1, a mixed program will be given. It will include the "Sonata a Tre," by Locatelli; the "C Minor Piano Quartet," Brahms; and the String Quartet by Malipiero. The recital August 8 will be given by Miss DeRonde and Mr. Barrows and will consist of Beethoven sonatas for cello and piano. Mozart's "G Minor String Quintet" and the Franck "Piano Quintet" will be played August 15. A guest concert is scheduled for August 22 and the season will close with a final program August 29 during which the Debussy String Quartet, Schubert's "Trio in E Flat," and the Faure Piano Trio will be heard.

New Boston Music

Rosamond Chapin writes us of a new and charming concert hall being erected across the road from the New Boston Inn. She plans at least three formal concerts during the summer as well as informal musicales for the inn's guests. The formal recitals will be given July 31, August 7 and August 14. As these dates come on Friday nights they will not conflict with Tanglewood concerts. They will be given by Marlyn Crittenden, violinist; Lloyd Stoneman, pianist and the Cummington Trio.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 122,373) (S 123,464)
This Clipping From DALLAS, TEXAS
TIMES HERALD

Another of Bach's Brandenburg Concertos has been recorded by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting. This time it's the "Concerto No. 6 in B Flat." The work is in three movements, marked "Allegro," "Andagio Ma Non Tanto" and "Allegro."

In spite of its gay subtitles, this is one of the quieter, more pensive Bach concerti. The refreshing flow of this exquisite music is given a valid, at times almost reverent, projection by the Boston orchestra.

Joseph d Pasquale and Jean M. Cauhape, violists, provide the concertino. (RCA-Victor DM 1211.)—L. D. B.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 45,035)
This Clipping From
OTTAWA, CANADA
EVENING JOURNAL

JUL 2 - 1948

ACCEPTED BY KOUSSEVITZKY, Miss Sandra Coupal, young Ottawa pianist and only daughter of Dr. and Mrs. J. L. Coupal, who has left to study at the Berkshire Music Centre under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky at Tanglewood, Massachusetts.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 40,206)
This Clipping From
OTTAWA, CANADA
CITIZEN

JUL 3 - 1948

MISS SANDRA COUPAL, talented Ottawa pianist, who was one of the eight piano students on the American continent accepted at Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, Mass., for the six weeks summer course under Serge Koussevitzky, famous conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra. Miss Coupal is the only daughter of Dr. and Mrs. J. L. Coupal.

—Photo by Karsh

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 49,564)
This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

First Festival Musical Event On Wednesday

Chamber Music Concert Will Open Special Series Theater

[illegible]

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 23,049)
This Clipping From
HOLYOKE, MASS.
NSCRIPT TELEGRAM

he Berkshire Music Center is ading out its activities so h that pretty soon the sum won't be long enough to ac modate it. It is still called Berkshire Festival, although term is usually applied just

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
CHelsea 3-8860
(51,929) (S 1,054,733)
Clipping From
HICAGO, ILL.
ALD-AMERICAN

R opportunity traveler is the son at the Berksic Center and Festival (July 4—

at Tanglewood,
s.
sevitzky is music

ORIGINAL ROMEIKE CLIPPINGS
, NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
CHelsea 3-8860
,914) (S 1,002,765)
Clipping From
YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

L 4 - 1948

OOD FETE OPENS

of Concerts Begins
ire Center Today

ire Music Center at Mass., opens his afternoon the Theatre-
Koussevitzky,
of the school;
tant director,
chairman of erkshire Mu-enrolled for bers 462, forst year and ool's history.

lled 118 are s will join in g of Randall " composed exercises in

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 8860
Cir. (D 82,2 3)
This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

948

Victor Polatschek With Quartet Sunday

first clarinet on Symphony, in a mber music at Falls Village,
m.
on Sun offer an oppor-

two famous that of Max
by Johannes Haydn Quartet, as "The heard.
will appear on Sunday, July 11

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (M. & E. 82,265)
This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
JUL 2 - 1948

A Rich Summer of Music In Store for Western Mass.

Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood Heads List; Fine Programs at Cummington and New Boston

By WILLARD M. CLARK

During the next 10 weeks people from all over the world will come to Western Massachusetts to hear great music superbly performed. Primary interest will center around the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox, summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. Devotees of Chamber Music will turn to the Cummington School of Fine Arts which will have a resident trio and will give Sunday afternoon concerts open to the public without charge. Under the direction of Rosamond Chapin, informal musicales will be given for guests at the New Boston Inn and a series of three formal concerts is also planned.

Berkshire Festival

The Berkshire Festival, under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, will open with two pairs of concerts devoted to the music of Bach and Mozart. These concerts will be given in the Theater-Concert Hall at Tanglewood. The opening concert will be given Sunday afternoon at 3.30 p. m. The following Bach program will be given; "Brandenburg Concerto No. 3 in G major;" "Concerto in D minor for Three Pianos and Strings;" "Cantata No. 65, 'Sie Werden aus Saba Alla Kommen" for tenor, bass and chorus, and "Suite No. 2 in B minor, for Flute and Strings."

Tuesday evening at 8.15 p. m. the first all-Mozart program will be given. The program will include "Symphony in C major, K. 338;" "Serenade for Winds, (nacht Musique); Concerto for Piano and Orchestra in G major," with Lucas Foass as soloist, and "Symphony in E-flat major, A 543."

The Mozart program will be repeated on Sunday afternoon, July 25, and the Bach program on Tuesday evening, July 27. The programs by the full Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Shed will be as follows:—

Series A

Thursday, July 29, Serge Koussevitzky, conducting.
Bach .... Suite in D major, No. 3
Hindemith .. Symphony, "Mathis der Maler"
Beethoven .... Symphony in C minor, No. 5
Saturday, July 31, Serge Koussevitzky, conducting.
Piston .... Symphony No. 3
Prokofieff .... Violin Concerto No. 1
Brahms ..... Symphony in C minor, No. 1
(Soloist: Isaac Stern)
Sunday, August 1, Leonard Bernstein, conducting.
Haydn .... Symphony No. 104
Mahler .... Symphony No. 2, "Resurrection"
(with Chorus & Soloists)

Series B

Thursday, August 5, Serge Koussevitzky, conducting.
Beethoven .... Symphony No. 6, "Pastoral"
Stravinsky .... "Oedipus Rex" for Orchestra
(with Male Chorus and Soloists)
Saturday, August 7, Serge Koussevitzky, conducting.
Prokofieff .. "Romeo and Juliet" Suite No. 2
Vaughan Williams .... Symphony No. 6
(First Performance in America)
Strauss .... "Don Quixote"
(Soloist: Gregor Piatigorsky)
Sunday, August 8, Eleazar de Carvalho, conducting.
Berlioz .... Fantastic Symphony
Villa Lobos .... Madona
Falla .... El Amor Brujo
Siqueira .... "Nordeстina"

Extra Concert

Tuesday, August 10, Serge Koussevitzky, conducting.
Tchaikovsky Program
Symphony No. 6, "Pathetique"
Piano Concerto No. 1
Overture, "1812"
(Soloist: Seymour Lipkin)

Series C

Thursday, August 12, Leonard Bernstein, conducting.
Weber .... Overture to "Der Freischutz"
Stravinsky ..... "Petrouchka" (Complete)
Shostakovitch .... Symphony No. 5
Saturday, August 14, Robert Shaw, conducting.
Debussy .... The Blessed Damozel
Brahms .... Requiem
(Chorus and Soloists)
Sunday, August 15, Serge Koussevitzky, conducting.
Beethoven ..... Symphony No. 3 "Eroica"
Sibelius .... Symphony in D major, No. 2

American Singers to Star

During his many years with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Koussevitzky has given first performances of many works by American composers and introduced a large number of American-trained singers and instrumentalists. This summer no less than eight American singers will be heard. All but Nan Merriman, mezzo-soprano, have been heard before with the orchestra. These include Ellabelle Davis, Ellen Faull and Frances Yeend, sopranos; Eunice Alberts and Carol Brice, contraltos; David Lloyd, tenor, and James Pease, bass-baritone.

Concerts at Cummington

The Cummington School of the Arts will provide a series of chamber music concerts each Sunday afternoon at 4 p.m. from July 11 through August 29. The resident trio will include Marion DeRonde, cellist; Nathan Gottschalk, violin, and Prescott Barrows, pianist. A number of guest artists will also appear.

The opening program, July 11, will include trios by Mozart, Shostakovitch and Beethoven. A Beethoven sonata recital will be given by George Brown, cellist, and Bruce Simond, pianist, on July 18. Nathan Gottschalk and Barrows will play Mozart for violin and piano on July 25.

On August 1, a mixed program will be given. It will include the "Sonata a Tre," by Locatelli; the "C Minor Piano Quartet," Brahms; and the String Quartet by Mapapiero. The recital August 8 will be given by Miss DeRonde and Mr. Barrows and will consist of Beethoven sonatas for cello and piano. Mozart's "G Minor String Quintet" and the Franck "Piano Quintet" will be played August 15. A guest concert is scheduled for August 22 and the season will close with a final program August 29 during which the Debussy String Quartet, Schubert's "Trio in E Flat," and the Fiure Piano Trio will be heard.

New Boston Music

Rosamond Chapin writes us of a new and charming concert hall being erected across the road from the New Boston Inn. She plans at least three formal concerts during the summer as well as informal musicales for the inn's guests. The formal recitals will be given July 31, August 7 and August 14. As these dates come on Friday nights they will not conflict with Tanglewood concerts. They will be given by Marlyn Crittenden, violinist; Lloyd Stoneman, pianist and the Cummington Trio.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 122,373) (S 123,464)
This Clipping From DALLAS, TEXAS
TIMES HERALD

Another of Bach's Brandenburg Concertos has been recorded by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge ~~Koussevitzky~~ conducting. This time it's the "Concerto No. 6 in B Flat." The work is in three movements, marked "Allegro," "Andagio Ma Non Tanto" and "Allegro."

In spite of its gay subtitles, this is one of the quieter, more pensive Bach concerti. The refreshing flow of this exquisite music is given a valid, at times almost reverent, projection by the Boston orchestra.

Joseph d Pasquale and Jean M. Cauhape, violists, provide the concertino. (RCA-Victor DM 1211.)—L. D. B.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 45,035)
This Clipping From
OTTAWA, CANADA
EVENING JOURNAL
JUL 2 - 1948

ACCEPTED BY KOUSSEVITZKY, Miss Sandra Coupal, young Ottawa pianist and only daughter of Dr. and Mrs. J. L. Coupal, who has left to study at the Berkshire Music Centre under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky at Tanglewood, Massachusetts.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 40,206)
This Clipping From
OTTAWA, CANADA
CITIZEN
JUL 3 - 1948

MISS SANDRA COUPAL, talented Ottawa pianist, who was one of the eight piano students on the American continent accepted at Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, Mass., for the six weeks summer course under Serge Koussevitzky, famous conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra. Miss Coupal is the only daughter of Dr. and Mrs. J. L. Coupal.

—Photo by Karsh

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 49,564)
This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

First Festival Musical Event On Wednesday

Chamber Music Concert Will Open Special Series in Theater

The first [illegible] the season [illegible] concert Wednes[illegible] the Theatre-Con[illegible] the first of four [illegible] music by Franz Schubert [illegible] Wednesday evenings [illegible] series is the [illegible] Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge [illegible] friends of the [illegible] Music Center.

Wednesday evening's program will offer the Quartet for [illegible] Viola and Violoncello, the Sonata for Arpeggione and [illegible] cle, "Winterreise," [illegible] Herbert. [illegible] Kahn at the piano. The [illegible] will be [illegible] ist, Suzanne Bloch [illegible] tor, violist and Sidney Edwards, [illegible] list.

In the sonata the [illegible] will be played by [illegible] viola. Long [illegible] gione had [illegible] a few years. It was invented in [illegible] and was also called guitar violoncello or guitarre d'amour. It had [illegible] strings and [illegible] but was played with a [illegible]

The guitar was a very popular instrument in Schubert's day and when called upon the little Viennese master could play it. His Cantata for his Father's Name Day [illegible] piece for [illegible] in 1813 [illegible]

The Berkshire Festival begins with the Bach-Mozart series July [illegible] 25, and 27, Serge Koussevitzky conducting. The first [illegible] Music Shed [illegible] Symphony [illegible] Koussevitzky [illegible] July 25.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 82,213)
This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
1948

Victor Polatschek With Quartet Sunday

Victor Polatschek, first clarinetist of the Boston Symphony, joins the Berkshire Quartet in a program of chamber music at Music Mountain, Falls Village, on Sunday at 4 p. m.

The event will offer an opportunity to compare two famous clarinet quintets, that of Max Reger and the other by Johannes Brahms. The Hadyn Quartet, descriptively known as "The Lark," also will be heard.

Ray Lev, pianist, will appear with the Quartet on Sunday, July 11.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 23,049)
This Clipping From
HOLYOKE, MASS.
NSCRIPT TELEGRAM
JUL 3 - 1948

he Berkshire Music Center is ading out its activities so h that pretty soon the sum won't be long enough to ac modate it. It is still called Berkshire Festival, although term is usually applied just

---

E ORIGINAL
OMEIKE
SS CLIPPINGS
St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
CHelsea 3-8860
551,929) (S 1,054,733)
Clipping From
HICAGO, ILL.
ALD-AMERICAN

R opportunity traveler is the son at the Berkic Center and Festival (July 4— t Tanglewood, s. sevitzky is music

ORIGINAL
MEIKE
S CLIPPINGS
, NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
CHelsea 3-8860
,914) (S 1,002,765)
Clipping From
YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
4 - 1948

OOD FETE OPENS

n of Concerts Begins ire Center Today ire Music Center at Mass., opens his afternoon the Theatre- Koussevitzky, of the school; tant director, chairman of erkshire Mu-enrolled for bers 462, for- st year and ool's history. lled 118 are s will join in g of Randall , composed exercises in

INFORMATION OBSCURED

THE ORIGINAL
OMEIKE
ESS CLIPPINGS
19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 49,564)
This Clipping From
PRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
JUL

t Festival Musical Event On Wednesda

ber Music Concert pen Special Series in Theater first purely musical eve ason at Tanglewood will t Wednesday, at 8.15 p.

Theatre-Concert Hall. T
rst of four concerts of ch by Franz Schubert on the esday evenings of July.
is the gift of Mrs. Eli gue Coolidge and is op s of the Berkshire Music

dnesday evening's progra
the Quartet for Flute, and Violoncello, the Son ggione and the entire so
"Winterreise," sung by rt, baritone, with Eric at the piano. The other e Carleton Sprague Smit Suzanne Bloch guitar; Pa violist; and Sidney Edwar

the sonata the arpeggion be played by Mr. Doktor Long since extinct the had a vogue which last w years. It was invented was also called guitar viol guitarre d'amour. It had s and a body like a guit was played with a bow.
he guitar was a very popul ment in Schubert's day and ed upon the little Viennese could play it. His "Canta Father's Name Day," obviou e for a family occasion com 828 contained a part for guit he Berkshire Festival begins
Bach-Mozart series July 1 and 27, Serge Koussevitzky ting. The first concert sic Shed by the full Boston ony Orchestra under Dr.
itzky will be Thursday eve y 29.

THE ORIGIN
ROMEI
PRESS CLIPPI
220 W. 19th St., NEW YO
Tel. CHelsea 3-8
Cir. (D 82,213)
This Clipping F
HARTFORD, CO
TIMES
JUL 3 -

Victor Polatsch With Quartet Su

Victor Polatschek, netist of the Boston joins the Berkshire program of chamber Music Mountain, Fa
on Sunday at 4 p. m.

The event will offer
tunity to compare t clarinet quintets, th
Reger and the other t
Brahms. The Hadyn
descriptively known
Lark," also will be he

Ray Lev, pianist, with the Quarter on S 11.

THE ORIGINAL
OMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 23,049)
This Clipping From
HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT TELEGRAM

The Berkshire Music Center is [illegible] its activities so [illegible] pretty soon the summer [illegible] enough to ac[illegible] It is still called [illegible] Berkshire Festival, although that term is usually applied just to the Boston Symphony and other special concerts. It opens Sunday with afternoon exercises. The first big music shed concert is scheduled for July 29. Don't let the summer go by without at least one trip into the hills for what is now world-famous music.

THE ORIGINAL
OMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
(D 51,929) (S 1,054,733)
This Clipping From
CHICAGO, ILL.
HERALD-AMERICAN

PIONEER opportunity the traveler is the season at the Berk-

Music Center and Festival, July 4—
at Tanglewood,
Mass.

THE ORIGINAL
OMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
(D 538,914) (S 1,002,765)
This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
JUL 4- 1948

WOOD FETE OPENS

of Concerts Begins
Center Today

Berkshire Music Center at Lenox, Mass., opens season this afternoon exercises in the Theatre-
Serge Koussevitzky,
director of the school;
assistant director;
Perry, chairman of
of the Berkshire Mu-will speak.
body enrolled for numbers 462, fo-
than last year and the school's history.
men enrolled 118 are students will join in singing of Randall
"Alleluia," composed opening exercises in

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 31,193) (S 30,658)
This Clipping From
PASADENA, CAL.
STAR-NEWS
JUL

Jacques Thibaud will be assisted at the piano by Vincent de Sola.

EIGHT SOLOISTS FOR KOUSSEVITZKY

Eight singers, all of them American-born and trained, will appear as soloists at the Berkshire festival this summer, it is announced by Serge Koussevitzky, director of Boston Symphony Orchestra. They are Ellabelle Davis, Ellen Faull and Frances Yeend, sopranos; Eunice Alberts and Carol Brice, contraltos; Nan Merriman, mezzo-soprano; David Lloyd, tenor, and James Pease, bass-baritone. Other soloists will be I[illegible] Stern, violinist; Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist, and Seymour Lipkin, winner of this year's Rachmaninoff piano award.

NAN MERRIMAN
With Koussevitzky

Miss Merriman, who made one of her first appearances here as soloist with the Bach Society and who will be remembered for her fine performance as "Mignon" in Richard Lert's and George Houston's production, continues to be one of the most sought-after singers in the country. All in one season she has sung under Toscanini, Stokowski and Koussevitzky, to name only three famous conductors. Miss Merriman, by the way, was one of the most enthusiastic applauders at Dr. Lert's performance of "Elijah" here last month.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 144,905) (S 165,598)
This Clipping From HOUSTON, TEX.
CHRONICLE

Bach, Brandenburg Concerto No. 6 in B-flat, Victor:

KOUSSEVITZKY

The Tanglewood Festival season at Lenox, Mass., is always a focal point in the musical culture of this country and thousands of people wend their way to the world-renowned Berkshire Music Center to hear the Boston Symphony under Doctor Koussevitzky's baton. The prominent conductor will retire from the podium following next summer's stint, and such recordings as the current Victor release of the Bach-Brandenburg Concerto No. 6, recorded at Tanglewood, will be of ever-increasing value.

The Tanglewood concerts often feature all-Bach programs, and the Koussevitzky reading of the last of this set of concertos is full, vital and immensely interesting. The sixth concerto is the longest of the group, and is unique in that it features a concertino for violas which are ably played here by Joseph de Pasquale, and Jean M. Cauhape. Surfaces are good.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 142,832) (S 155,093)
This Clipping From OAKLAND, CAL.
TRIBUNE

BACH BRANDENBURG CONCERTO RECORDED BY KOUSSEVITZKY

Bach's Sixth Brandenburg Concerto, featuring the concertino for two violas, comes from RCA-Victor as recorded by Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony in Tanglewood last August. This most extended of the six Brandenburgs is performed in Koussevitzky's majestic style. The orchestra achieves an excellent ensemble unity. The two violists, Joseph de Pasquale and Jean M. Cauhope, do brilliant work in the concertino.

SOLOIST AND CONDUCTOR

Leonard Bernstein appears as both soloist and conductor in Ravel's piano concerto—the one for both hands—in an RCA-Victor album. The orchestra is the Philharmonia of London, an organization distinct from the Philharmonic, and which was organized since the war, for recording purposes. The concerto, with its touches of Ravel's idea of American jazz and its musical compliments to George Gershwin, is played with admirable verve, if somewhat unevenly by the pianist and with something short of consistent integration between orchestra and solo instrument. On the sixth side, Bernstein plays two of his own piano miniatures from "Seven Anniversaries" — the one "For Paul Bowles" and the one in memory of Nathalie Koussevtizky.

Richard Strauss's "Ein Heldenleben" sounds quite heroic as performed by the Pittsburgh Symphony, conducted by Fritz Reiner, in a Columbia album. Reiner's devotion and his feeling for authenticity bring out the more noble qualities of the work.—C.S.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 156,194) (S 45,527)
This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

Two Chamber Music Series To Open This Week at Lenox

AS CURTAIN-RAISERS for the Berkshire Music Festival which gets under way officially at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass., Sunday, July 18, two series of chamber music concerts, one devoted to Franz Schubert and the other to the contemporary Bela Bartok, will open this week.

The Schubert concerts, to be given on the four Wednesday evenings of July, are a contribution of Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge. The six Bartok quartets will be played by the Julliard String Quartet on two Saturday evenings—next Saturday and July 17.

These events will be in the Theater-Concert Hall at Tanglewood and Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited to each of the concerts.

A third series of chamber music concerts will be presented by students of the school in chamber Music Hall on Sunday mornings, beginning next Sunday. They will continue through the entire period of the Festival.

The Schubert series, which opens Wednesday night, will include the following works: July 7—Quartet for Flute, Guitar, Viola and Violoncello, the Sonata in A minor for Piano and Arpeggione, and the "Winterreise" song cycle with Ralph Herbert, baritone; July 14—the Trios in B flat major and E flat major and the Sonata in A major for Violin and Piano by the Albeneri Trio; July 21—String Quartet in D minor ("Death and the Maiden"), the Quartet Movement in C minor, and the String Quintet in C major by the Boston String Quartet; July 28—String Quartet in A minor, the Quintet in A major ("Trout"), and the Octet in F major by the Boston Conservatory String Quartet and assisting artists.

The pair of Bartok programs cover the modern Hungarian master's output from 1907 to 1939 but the numbers are not played in chronological order. The first concert will offer the Third, Second and Fifth Quartets while the second will bring his fourth, First and Sixth works in this form.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 84,771) (S 123,947)
This Clipping From
DAYTON, O.
NEWS
JUL 1948

Music Center Enrolment At Al-Time High

LENOX, Mass., July 3.—The Berkshire Music Center begins its sixth season Sunday with a record enrollment of 445 students. Pupils this year come from 42 states, the District of Columbia, Alaska, and 13 foreign countries. Of the 262 men students, 111 are former GI's.

Speakers at the opening exercises will be Serge Koussevitzky, founder and director; Aaron Copland, assistant director; Dr. Lewis Perry, chairman of the Friends of the Boston Symphony.

A number of changes have been made on the 200-acre estate which makes up Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge. A new building will house a reception and exhibition room, school book and music store. Among new studios are three in the Red Cottage which the National Federation of Music Clubs has rebuilt on the site. The cottage is an exact reproduction of the little house where Hawthorne wrote "Tanglewood Tales" and "The House Of Seven Gables."

The Berkshire Festival will begin July 18 with the first of the Bach-Mozart concerts.

[154]

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 538,914) (S 1,002,765)

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
JUL 4 - 1948

THE WORLD OF MUSIC: STABILITY IN ORCHESTRAS

Larger Ensembles Following Set Ways—Little Expansion Foreseen

By ROSS PARMENTER

DETAILS of repertoire have still to be settled, but most of the nation's orchestras have already made their plans for next season. Business managers have made out their prospectuses and press agents have sent out their releases. Those that have come this way all look very much like those of the year before. The same big-name soloists are rotating from city to city. The older, more firmly established orchestras are continuing in their set ways, and the newer orchestras, for the most part, seem to have reached satisfactory seasonal schedules that they are not changing. Advance reports show that the gains of last season are being held, but there is little evidence of further expansion. And there is not nearly so widespread a reshuffling of conductors.

Last year eight orchestras passed into new hands. Cincinnati, Rochester, Salt Lake City, Duluth, Vancouver and Erie are all hanging onto their new conductors. Efrem Kurtz's move to Houston, though, has meant two other changes. Hans Schwieger is going to replace him in Kansas City and Igor Buketoff has entered the picture as the conductor of a permanent orchestra by being appointed to succeed Mr. Schwieger in Fort Wayne. The Chicago and Pittsburgh Symphonies will get along with guests. Fritz Busch, Bruno Walter, Pierre Monteux, Charles Munch, Eugene Ormandy and George Szell have been announced for the former, while Leonard Bernstein, Artur Rodzinski and the Italian conductor, Victor de Sabata, will conduct in Pittsburgh.

One change to be noted with regret in New York is that there will be no season of the New York City Symphony. The orchestra may not have passed out of existence, however, for there is a promise that, after skipping a season, it will be reorganized next year by Mr. Bernstein, who has led it for the last three autumns.

TROUBLES: Eleazar de Carvalho has just returned from Brazil with news of musical difficulties in Rio de Janeiro. Members of the Brazilian Orchestra, he said, had been unpaid for so long that they finally went on strike. The municipality stepped in with a subsidy of approximately $150,000 which made it possible for concerts to be resumed. But in the meantime a new manager was brought in and Mr. Carvalho lost his position as assistant conductor. Eugen Szenkar, though, is continuing as the musical director. There has been trouble with opera too. Last summer Burle Marx managed to get an opera season going at the Theatro Municipal at the last minute. But he has since been removed as general manager, and Mr. Carvalho says there will be no opera season there this summer.

REPEAT: The Chautauqua Symphony Orchestra, which played to an aggregate audience of 144,000 last summer, will open its new season on July 17. Franco Autori will be back as the conductor for the fifth summer and he plans twenty-four concerts in the institution's 7,000-seat amphitheatre. One of the programs will be a duplicate of the first symphonic program given at Chautauqua. That was back in July 24, 1909. It was played by the New York Symphony Orchestra, under Walter Damrosch.

IMPROVEMENTS: Students who assemble today for the opening of the Berkshire Music Center will get a preview of the architectural improvements that visitors will see later at Tanglewood when they go to the Berkshire Festival. Most conspicuous will be a building of plate glass and slender steel columns to the right of the main entrance. It will be used as a combination reception room, art gallery and book and music store. Its roof will span the entrance, connect the box office building on the other side and join the two into an architectural unit. Another improvement is a new roof for the music shed. And there will be portable booths that will enlarge the refreshment facilities.

THRICE: Kurt Weill's new one-act folk-opera, "Down in the Valley," is being performed by three organizations this summer. It will have its première July 15 at the University of Indiana in Bloomington, where it is being given as part of a double bill with Hindemith's "There and Back." Ernst Hoffman will conduct, Hans Busch will be the stage manager and the leading role will be sung by Marion Bell, who left the cast of "Brigadoon" to devote herself to a concert career. The rest of the singers will be university students. The work will be given three days later by the Washington Art Center in Washington, D. C. And students of the summer school of the University of Michigan will present it at Ann Arbor Aug. 5, 6, 7 and 9.

ESTATE: Mrs. Alice R. McLean, who founded the American Women's Voluntary Services during the war, is opening her 6,000-acre estate near Stamford, N. Y., as a cultural center this summer. There will be divisions for writers, painters and musicians. Mrs. Elizabeth Major will be in charge of the music department, which is being planned as "a tryout finishing center" for young artists ready to appear before the public. She will coach the singers and Hermann Kaplan will coach the instrumentalists.

COSTA RICA: Edvard Fendler, who organized the first national conservatory for the Dominican Republic, and who subsequently led the National Symphony of Guatemala and gave orchestral training at the national conservatory in Guatemala City, is moving to another Central American country. He has been invited to conduct the concerts of the current season of the reorganized National Symphony Orchestra in San José, Costa Rica.

RESUME: The luck of the concerts at the Lewisohn Stadium has not held. It gave all its first week's concerts intact by the good fortune of having them scheduled between downpours. But in the last week three concerts were rained out. The all-Russian program with Fritz Reiner conducting and William Kapell as the soloist, drew 10,000 on its second try. Vivian Della Chiesa, soprano, and Mac Morgan, baritone, both won plaudits at Saturday's undisturbed concert. The Gershwin concert, also postponed a night, drew more than 17,000, the record for the season so far.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 53,082) (S 44,515)

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD-TIMES
JUL 4 - 1948

1947 High School Graduate Joins Tanglewood Orchestra

CHARLES B. CATIN

Chosen by audition in Carnegie Hall, New York, last April, Charles B. Catin, son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Catin of 162 Allen Street, will be a member of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky's student orchestra at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood this Summer.

Catin, 20, a student this past year at the Juilliard School of Music in New York, left yesterday for Tanglewood. The six-week course of study, rehearsals and concerts there opens Monday. He has been studying percussion instruments and piano at Juilliard under Saul Goodman of the New York Philharmonic and will continue his work in percussion this Summer under Romanszulc of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

"I wanted to be a drummer ever since I can remember," Catin commented on his choice of instruments. "My opportunity came when I was 10, and I became a member of Post 1, American Legion, Drum and Bugle Corps.

"I took lessons for about five years and as I came to know music found that what I really liked was serious music—the classics. I hope to complete the diploma course at Juilliard and qualify for teaching and membership in a good orchestra."

Graduated last year from the commercial department of New Bedford High School, Catin will study Spanish and mathematics at Columbia University this Fall in addition to his work at Juilliard, to meet initial requirements for the diploma course.

He played in the YD Drum and Bugle Corps as well as the Legion outfit, joined the State Band at 14 and played in its Sunday afternoon concerts at Lincoln Park, assisted Alipio Bartholo teach the Padanaram Mariners Band, is a former member of the State Guard Band and the New Bedford Symphony.

One of his interesting experiences at Julliard was playing in an orchestra, directed by Morton Gould, which tried out orchestrations of new compositions for music publishing houses. Other eminent conductors under whom he has played in New York are Walter Hendl, assistant conductor of the Philharmonic, and Richard Goldman.

He will play in the main orchestra as well as the training orchestra at Tanglewood.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 17,962)

This Clipping From
TROY, N. Y.
OBSERVER & BUDGET
JUL 4 - 1948

Eight singers, all of them American-born and trained, will appear as soloists at the Berkshire festival this summer, it is announced by Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. They are Ellabelle Davis, Ellen Faull and Frances Yeend, sopranos; Eunice Alberts and Carol Brice, contraltos; Nan Merriman, mezzo-soprono; David Lloyd, tenor, and James Pease, bass-baritone.

Other soloists will be Isaac Stern, violinist; Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist, and Seymour Lipkin, winner of this year's Rachmaninoff pano award.

An interesting feature of the festival will be two series of chamber music concerts, one devoted to Schubert and the other to the contemporary Bela Bartok. The six Bartok quartets will be played by the Juillard String Quartet on two Saturday evenings July 10 and 17. The Schubert concerts, to be givn on the four Wednesday evenings of July, are a contribution of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation.

The Philadelphia Orchestra, in a summary of its 1947-48 season, reports that it played to 562,435 persons. That includes a regular 32-week season and a trans-continental tour of five weeks.

The orchestra traveled 25,820 miles by rail and appeared in cities from Toronto to Jacksonville and from San Dego to Vancouver.

The symphony orchestras of the smaller cities of the United States, which have been on the upsurge in recent seasons, continue to carry on. The Fort Wayne (Ind.) Philharmonic Orchestra announces the appointment of Igor Buketoff as its new permanent conductor. Buketoff, who is only 32, replaces Hans Schweiger, director since 1944. The Grand Rapids Symphony Orchestra has selected as its conductor Jose Echoniz of Rochester, Cuban-American pianist and conductor.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 35,207) (S 40,614)

This Clipping From
EL PASO, TEXAS
TIMES

Eight Singers To Be Soloists At Berkshire

New York, [illegible] all of [illegible] American born and trained, [illegible] the Be[illegible] it is announ[illegible] Serge Koussevitzky, [illegible] Boston Symphony Orc[illegible] They are Ellabelle Davis, Ellen Faull and Frances Yeend, sopranos; Eunice Alberts and Carol Brice, contraltos; Nan Merriman, mezzo-soprano; David Lloyd, tenor, and James Pease, bass-baritone.

Other soloists will be Isaac Stern, violinist; Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist, and Seymour Lipkin, winner of this year's Rachmaninoff piano award.

An interesting feature of the festival will be two series of chamber music concerts, one devoted to Schubert and the other to the contemporary Bela Bartok. The six Bartok quartets will be played by the Juillard String Quartet on two Saturday evenings, July 10 and 17. The Schubert concerts, to be given on the four Wednesday evenings of July, are a contribution of the

---

ORIGINAL
EIKE
IPPINGS
W YORK 11, N.Y.
3-8860
(S 123,464)
ng From TEXAS ERALD

all of them Amer trained, will appear the Berkshire festi-
r, it is announced sevitzky, director of mphony Orchestra.
belle Davis, Ellen ances Yeend, so-
Alberts and Carol
; Nan Merriman,
David Lloyd,
ames Pease, bass

will be Isaac
Gregor Piatigor-
Seymour Lipkin,
year's Rachmanin-feature of the two series of cham-rts, one devoted to the other to the Bela Bartok. The

rtets will be played String Quartet on evenings, July 10
hubert concerts, to e four Wednesday
ly, are a contribu-
Elizabeth Sprague
dation.

phia Orchestra, in its 1947-48 season, played to 562,435
includes a regular

19th St., NEW
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 606,664) (S 1,116,208)

This Clipping From PHILADELPHIA, PA.
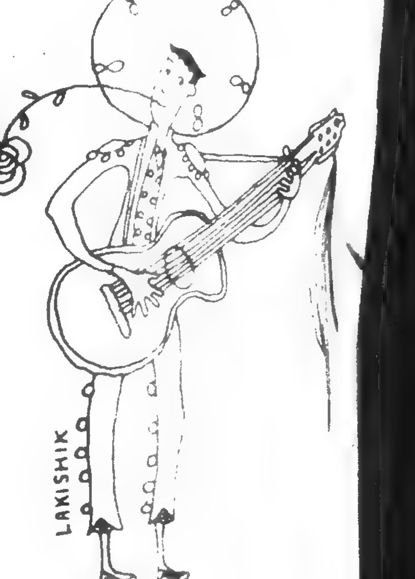
INQUIRER

RAVEL'S Rhapsodie Espagnole, as served forth in the new recording by Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony for RCA Victor, is a fine account of one of the most subtly, yet eloquently colorful scores of the late composer.

It tempts one to quote that old bromide about the best Spanish music being written by Frenchmen—a saw that happens to be particularly applicable to Ravel, who was born not far from the Spanish border and was of Basque descent.

You may have heard more exciting readings of the Rhapsodie than Dr. Koussevitzky's, but Ravel's music even in its most abandoned moments, retains a certain patrician quality that should protect it from musical storm troopers.



Koussevitzky & Co. avoid excess and come through in about the right blending of Castilian swagger and semi-Oriental languor that constitute the true Iberian flavor.

The recording on the whole is good. But the color-complexities and balances of a score like this are not easy to recapture on wax, and a few of the surfaces, in this reviewer's copy, were a bit noisy. ($3.50)

---

lewood B sevitzky

— Tanglewood belo
ld and the Berksh
"the greatest musi
e world today," Se tzky, conductor of mphony Orchestra
the Berkshire Mu yesterday at the on meeting of the T
visory committee
Curtis Hotel.

k objectively to wh belongs," Dr. Kou the 56 guests, "we m the world.' Mora
cuse me, it belongs stiny it belongs to mphony Orchestra."
p one of the calen
on from the table,
y day there is so ou will look at Salzb ther festivals, you ything like this."

eakers were Miss I rarian of the Lenox
l W. Foster, public ector of the Berks
rence; Stuart C. He the Berkshire Muse
e W. Edman, for editor of The Berks agle and now first the U.S. embass

aised

E. Judd, manager of mphony Orchestra,
paid tribute to Mr.
tribution to the ival. Mr. Edman tu liment to Dr. Ko
Many people worke d and were respon said, "but they ne ration of the rier invited student se the facilities of rary where the Mo

dent forums were er, and she called

INFORMATION OBSCURED

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
...St., NEW YORK 11,
...l. CHelsea 3-8860
(D 35,207) (S 40,614)
This Clipping From
EL PASO, TEXAS
TIMES

JUL 4 1948

...ht Singers ...Be Soloists ...Berkshire

...York. (UP)—Eight sing... ...them American born ... will appear as soloists ...rshire festival this Summ... ...nounced by Serge Kous... ...irector of the Boston ... Orchestra. They are El... ...vis, Ellen Faull and Fran... sopranos; Eunice Alber... ...rol Brice, contraltos; N... ...n, mezzo-soprano; Dav... ...nor, and James Pease, bas...

...soloists will be Isaac Ster... Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cell... Seymour Lipkin, winne... ...year's Rachmaninoff pian...

...eresting feature of the fe... ...l be two series of cham... ...c concerts, one devoted t... and the other to the con... ...y Bela Bartok. The si... ...uartets will be played b... ...ard String Quartet on tw... evenings, July 10 and 17... ...ubert concerts, to be give... ...ur Wednesday evening... ...e a contribution of ...

...St., NEW
Tel. CHelsea
(D 606,664) (S
This Clipping
PHILADELPHIA
INQUIRER

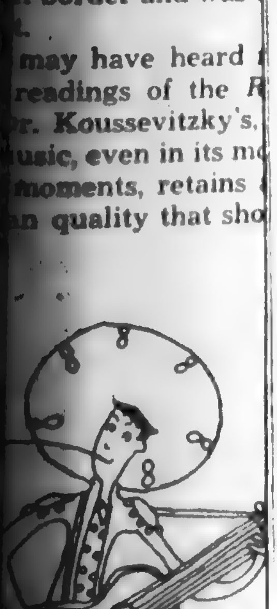
JUL

...EL'S Rhapsodie ...le, as served fo... ...cording by Ko... ...e Boston Symp... ...ictor, is a fine ...

... the most subtly ...y colorful scores ... ...er.

...mpts one to quot... ...le about the bes... being written by ... saw that happ... ...larly applicable ...as born not far ...h border and was ...

... may have heard ... readings of the R... ...r. Koussevitzky's, ...usic, even in its m... moments, retains ... ...n quality that sho...



...m musical storm troop-

...vitzy & Co. avoid excess, ... through in about the ...ling of Castilian swag- ... semi-Oriental languor ...itute the true Iberian

...cording on the whole i... ...t the color-complexities ...nces of a score like this ...asy to recapture on wax. ...y of the surfaces, in this ...s copy, were a bit noisy.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 19,699) (S 28,780)
This Clipping From
SPARTANSBURG, S. C.
HERALD

FRITZ BUSCH, musical director of the Cincinnati May Festival, has been engaged to conduct the festival again next year. It is one of the high spots in Cincinnati's musical life, which is by no means restricted to the spring or winter. The Cincinnati summer opera will open on June 27 with a performance of Strauss' "Rosenkavalier." Mary Henderson, Metropolitan

Texas composer, Don Gillis, t only in his native habitat

Opera soprano, will sing the role of Sophie.

THE BOSTON Symphony Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky's direction, will open the Berkshire Festival this summer with 2 pairs of week-end concerts devoted to the music of Bach and Mozart. The concerts will be given at the theater-concert hall at Tanglewood, the summer home of the orchestra near Lenox, Mass. The Bach program will be given July 18 and the Mozart on July 20.

32-week season and a trans-continental tour of five weeks.

The orchestra traveled 25,820 miles by rail and appeared in cities from Toronto to Jacksonville and from San Diego to Vancouver.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (S 224,080)
This Clipping From
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD-AMERICAN

JUL 4 - 1948

Note Largest Enrollment in Berkshire School History; Tanglewood Exercises

WITH AN enrollment of 445 students, 28 more than last year and the largest in its history, the Berkshire Music Center will begin its sixth season at exercises in the Theater-Concert Hall at Tanglewood this afternoon at 3:30 o'clock. The students this year come from 42 states, the District of Columbia, Alaska, and 13 foreign countries. Of the 262 men students 111 are former GIs. Speakers at the opening will be Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, founder and director of the school; Aaron Copland, assistant director; and Dr. Lewis Perry, chairman of the Friends of the Berkshire Music center, who will also represent the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. There will be the traditional singing by the entire student body of Randall Thompson's "Alleluia," composed for the first opening exercises in 1940.

Dr. Koussevitsky

THE AUDIENCE AT this, the first event at Tanglewood this summer, will be greeted with a number of striking improvements and additions to the 200-acre estate between Lenox and Stockbridge. The innovations are immediately apparent, beginning at the front gate where a handsome reception and exhibition room is being erected to the right of the main entrance. Entirely plate glass front and back, the room is 15 feet high and its roof spreads over the gate, bringing the offices to the left into one harmonious unit. The new building will also house the school book and music store.

THE MUSIC SHED, which accommodates 6,000 persons at the Festival concerts, is getting a new roof. The great wedge-shaped expanse covers nearly an acre and a half and the new roofing material weighs, approximately four pounds per square foot. Refreshment facilities have been considerably enlarged. Portable booths, making special bills of fare easily accessible, will be ready when the Festival begins with the first of the Bach-Mozart concerts Sunday afternoon, July 18. The school has a number of new studios, including three in the Red Cottage which the National Federation of Music Clubs has rebuilt on the site and in exact reproduction of the little house where Hawthorne wrote "Tanglewood Tales" and "The House of Seven Gables." The Center has also leased the adjoining estate formerly owned by the Drake family and 50 men students will be housed there. The Berkshire Festival will begin Sunday afternoon, July 18, with the first of the Bach-Mozart concerts in the Theater-Concert Hall. The first concert in the Music Shed will be Thursday

---

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (S 181,496)
This Clipping From
COLUMBUS, OHIO
DISPATCH

JUL 4 - 1948

Columbus Students Enroll For Berkshire Course

Three Columbus music students will be among the 30 from Ohio who will attend the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., for six weeks, beginning July 4.

Those who will study at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school, directed by Serge Koussevitzky, are: Miss Gertrude Kuehefuhs, 159 E. Lane Av; David Hite, 2413 Indiana Av, and Harry Schmidt, 284 Olentangy St.

[illegible] Jul 1

Tanglewood Belongs to World, Koussevitzky Tells Committee

LENOX — Tanglewood belongs to the world and the Berkshire Festival is "the greatest musical event in the world today," Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and director of the Berkshire Music Center, said yesterday at the annual luncheon meeting of the Tanglewood advisory committee and staff at the Curtis Hotel.

"If we ask objectively to whom Tanglewood belongs," Dr. Koussevitzky told the 56 guests, "we must answer, 'To the world.' Morally, you will excuse me, it belongs to me. By destiny it belongs to the Boston Symphony Orchestra."

Picking up one of the calendars of the season from the table, he said: "Every day there is something. If you will look at Salzburg and the other festivals, you will not find anything like this."

Other speakers were Miss Irene Poirier, librarian of the Lenox Library; Paul W. Foster, public relations director of the Berkshire Hills Conference; Stuart C. Henry, curator of the Berkshire Museum; and George W. Edman, former managing editor of The Berkshire Evening Eagle and now first secretary of the U.S. embassy in Athens.

Edman Praised

George E. Judd, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, presided; he paid tribute to Mr. Edman's contribution to the Berkshire Festival. Mr. Edman turned the compliment to Dr. Koussevitzky. "[illegible] people worked at Tanglewood and [illegible] responsible for it," he said, "but they needed the inspiration of the great maestro."

Miss Poirier invited students and staff to use the facilities of the Lenox Library where the Monday night student forums were held last summer, and she called attention to the outdoor reading park open this summer.

Rooms Secured for 800.

The Berkshire Hills Conference has secured housing accommodations thus far for 800 music lovers who will attend the festival this season, reported Mr. Foster. "You say you are grateful to the Conference," he said; "we are grateful to the festival."

Mr. Henry called attention to the exhibits at the Berkshire Museum, particularly that of the works of Ivan Mestrovich, scheduled for later this summer. The sculptor will teach there as a member of the summer faculty of the Boston Museum of Fine Arts.

"Actually, it is only a part of our staff we have here today," Mr. Judd said. "There isn't a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra here yet. Our students don't start coming in until registration begins tomorrow. And I don't think we should forget the public. They work for us."

Members of the Tanglewood advisory committee in addition to Mr. Edman and Mr. Judd who attended the luncheon were Alan J. Blau of Pittsfield, Henry W. Dwight of Stockbridge, Lawrence K. Miller of Pittsfield, James T. Owens of Lee, Lester Roberts of Lenox and Robert K. Wheeler of Great Barrington.

...NTS THE NEW YORK TIMES

EXPORT OF CULTURE PLEA OF CONDUCTOR

Dr. Koussevitzky at Berkshire Center Asks That Europe Get More Than Dollars

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., July 4—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky urged the United States today to supplement its material aid to Europe with evidence of its cultural achievements so that Europeans would cease feeling that this country had nothing to export but "the power and value of the dollar."

He made the plea at the hour-long exercises here opening the annual summer session of the Berkshire Music Center. His speech was heard by 462 students and more than 600 friends of the center who came to Tanglewood for the opening ceremonies, which also included tea in the grounds of the estate.

"To the morally hungry and mentally destitute peoples of Europe," the conductor said, "America is still the dollar-making country, the country of mass-production and material welfare, void of cultural foundation and interest. This misconception of America, and of American cultural life and her artistic achievements must be corrected."

Dr. Koussevitzky suggested no actual steps, but he repeated the plea he made two years ago "for the support of the Fine Arts by our Government." He also made a reference that many listeners took as criticism of Russia for its attempts to discipline Shostakovich, Prokofieff and other composers.

"We have witnessed an act of moral injustice," he said, "committed against the creative freedom and genius in our own artistic realm. Shall we remain silent when art is attacked at its very roots and when abnormal pressure is allowed to take the place of truth? Art cannot be dominated by external influences and crushed under the thumb of the mass."

The exercises were opened with "The Star Spangled Banner" and closed with the singing of Randall Thompson's "Alleluia" by the student body. The other speakers were Aaron Copland, assistant director of the center, and Dr. Lewis Perry, chairman of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

Music

By Edgar S.
Van Olinda

TED SHAWN, after a year's sabbatical of dancing in Australia, has returned to direct the Jacob's Pillow Dance festival this year. The initial step in re-establishing the University of the Dance to its former prestige was the inclusion on its teaching staff of the leading members of the Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo, seen at the Palace theatre last winter.

Among the Ballet Russe personnel who are now in residence at Jacob's Pillow are Alexandria Danilova, Frederic Franklin, Natalie Krassovska, Ruthanna Boris, Leon Daniel, Nikita Talin and choreographer Ruth Page. A series of 10 Monday night lectures will be inaugurated tomorrow night, when John Lindquist will give a pictorial history of Jacob's Pillow with projected kodakchrome slides. The following week, Walter Terry, dance critic, will be presented.

The first public performance in the rustic dance shed will take place, Friday afternoon, July 9, at 4 p. m., when Mr. Shawn will present Alexandra Danilova, Frederic Franklin, Myra Kinch and Juana, the latter a member of La Meri company in a group of Hindu dances. The same program will be repeated the following afternoon at 4 p. m. and again at 9 p. m. Reservations may be made by calling Lee 257-W-1. The studios are located about nine miles east of Lee, Mass., U. S. Route 20.

• • •

THE TRUSTEES of the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitsky, musical director, have issued invitations to its members and their friends for the opening exercises of the sixth season of the Berkshire Music Center, this afternoon in the theatre-concert hall, beginning at 3:30 p. m. Tea will be served in the garden following the exercises.

With one or more events scheduled nearly every day, student performances will be under the direction of a distinguished faculty, directed by Dr. Koussevitsky, assisted by Aaron Copland, composer. The major orchestra will be under Dr. Kroussevitsky's personal direction, with Leonard Bernstein, first guest conductor, at the Berkshire Festival, assisted by Eleazar deCarvhalo, Brazilian conductor, and members of the Boston Symphony orchestra. An orchestra in department V will be under Frederick Fennell of the Eastman School of Music, Rochester, N. Y., and in the opera department under Mr. deCarvalho.

Miss Marie S. Gutta of 158 Hamilton street, a mezzo-soprano, will attend the Music Center as an auditor in the opera department. A graduate of Philip Schuyler High school and the College of St. Rose, she has studied voice and piano, and is at present engaged in radio and concert work and as a principal in the Municipal Opera company.

ALBANY, N. Y., SUNDAY TIMES-UNION
PICTORIAL REVIEW—JULY 4, 1948 3

[156]

UNCL

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 77,465)

This Clipping From
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

JUL 4 - 1948

Summer Musical Events Offer Fine Programs

Variety Of Excellent Attractions Available At Tanglewood, Music Mountain, Fairfield —Clinton Features Metropolitan Star

By GORDON E. ARMSTRONG

While New Haven offers little of interest to music lovers during summer months, with the single exception of our "Pops," yet a variety of excellent musical diversion is available within "commuting" distance of this city.

This year we are more fortunate than ever in regard to nearby music activities. In addition to the symphonic programs at Tanglewood and the chamber music concerts at Music Mountain, two other series are available this Summer. The Connecticut Symphony Orchestra is presenting an excellent series of "Pop" concerts on the field of Fairfield University, in Fairfield, on Friday evenings of the same week as the New Haven series. Three veterans are sponsoring a fine series of concerts, opera and ballet in nearby Clinton.

In other words, music lovers may combine "pleasure with pleasure" this Summer. This paraphrase of an old expression is merely by way of saying that the usual enjoyment of an evening or Sunday afternoon ride may have its culmination in a fine musical program.

The Tanglewood concerts, not to be confused with the Berkshire Music Center events, though both are part of the same enterprise, the Berkshire Festival, are the symphonic programs by the Boston Symphony open to the general public. The first of these, some dozen altogether, will be presented on Sunday afternoon, July 18, with an all Bach program to be repeated on Tuesday evening, July 27, at 8:15.

The other events at the Music Center, comprising both chamber music by professional groups and student concerts, are open only to Friends of the Berkshire Music Center. Any music lover may become a member of the latter group by making a contribution to the work carried on by the Center. Chamber music concerts this season will be devoted to the works of two widely divergent masters, Franz Shubert and Bela Bartok. The Shubert works will be played by various chamber groups, the Bartok quartets by the String Quartet from the Juilliard School of Music.

Students at the school will also present chamber music programs in the Chamber Music Hall each Sunday morning, beginning July 11 and continuing through the last day of the Festival, August 15.

The second in the regular Festival series will provide an all Mozart program on Tuesday evening, July 20, to be repeated the following Sunday afternoon, July 25. The first concert in the Shed by the full orchestra (the third in the series) will be given Thursday evening, July 29, with a program consisting of the Bach Suite No. 3, Hindemith's "Mather der Maler", and Beethoven's 5th Symphony.

CLINTON PROGRAMS

As mentioned here last Sunday, a new ser[illegible] of programs, both musi- … are to be presented … Playhouse, Andrews … Summer. … after-

---

Boston Herald July 5

Music Center Opens Season At Tanglewood

LENOX, July 4—The Berkshire Music Center opened its sixth season in the Theatre Concert hall, at Tanglewood, today with 445 students, the largest enrollment in its history.

Speakers were Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, founder and director of the school; Aaron Copland, assistant director; and Dr. Lewis Perry, chairman of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, who also represented the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The entire student body joined in the singing of Randall Thompson's "Alleluia," composed for the center's first opening exercises, in 1940.

Students came from 42 states, Washington, D. C., Alaska, and 13 foreign countries. A total of 111 of the 262 male students are former servicemen.

Many Contribute to Fund for Esplanade Concerts

Jul 5

By MARJORIE W. SHERMAN

Boston's famous Esplanade concerts are 20 years old this year and tribute will come from the thousands who gather at the Hatch Memorial Shell at the foot of Mt. Vernon st. nightly from Tuesday on to hear Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Symphony musicians as well as from a number of public-spirited contributors.

The unusual opportunity of being able to offer the best music at no charge to a quarter of a million music lovers a year unable to leave the hot city is made possible through the generosity of individual contributors long interested in Mr. Fiedler's project.

Among those who have already made donations to the Esplanade Concerts 20th Anniversary Fund are Mrs. Frederick S. Moseley, Mrs. R. T. Needham, Otto Oldenberg, Mrs. F. H. Palmer, Mrs. C. I. Porter, Lispenard B. Phister, Charles O. Richardson, H. M. Russell, Mrs. Daniel Sargent, Miss Helen E. Wyeth, Mrs. H. B. Stearns, Mrs. Frank S. White, Miss Annie R. Townsend, Walter Tebbetts and Robert H. Montgomery.

Also among the early donors to the fund are: Miss Marion T. Abbot, Miss Hildegard Allen, Mrs. George Gray Ballard Jr., Mrs. Stanley Bolster, Charles M. Barlow, Allston Burr, Miss Nina Carter, Thomas N. Codman, Stephen P. Cabot and John Cosgriff.

Mrs. W. M. Currier, Mrs. Arthur S. Dewing, Mrs. G. Tappan Francis, Mrs. Malcolm Donald, Miss Mabel E. Emerson, Mrs. Louis H. Fitch, Miss Helen C. Gilbert, Dr. and Mrs.

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

JUL [illegible] 1948

MUSIC CENTER OPENED

Koussevitzky Proposes Support of Fine Arts by Government

Lenox, Mass., July 4.—(AP)—The 1948 season at the Berkshire Music Center was opened today by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with formal exercises in the concert hall at Tanglewood.

Dr. Koussevitzky, founder and director of the Music Center, asked in an address before 1000 persons that the government support a program of fine arts.

Dr. Koussevitzky, who has announced his retirement at the conclusion of the 1948-49 season, paid tribute to Mrs. Guy P. Gannett of Portland, Me., former president of the National Federation of Music Clubs.

Mrs. Gannett is chairman of the committee in charge of restoring Nathaniel Hawthorne's "Little Red Cottage" at Tanglewood. The building will be dedicated July 24.

This Clipping From LANSING, MICH.
STATE JOURNAL

JUL 6 1948

Local Musician Plans To Attend Music Center

John Iuele, 209 Seymour avenue, has left for Lenox, Mass., where he will attend the six weeks session of the Berkshire Music center at Tanglewood. This is the summer festival spot of the Boston Symphony orchestra and provides instruction to superior musicians.

Mr. Iuele is well-known in this community as a graduate of Michigan State college where he became a specialist in brass instruments. He was in New York for a number of years and was assistant orchestra leader to Leonard Bernstein and first cornetist in the off-stage instrumental units for the Metroplitan opera.

This Clipping From HARLINGEN, TEXAS
VALLEY STAR

JUL 5 - 1948

A Rossini work, forgotten for more than 100 years, will be this summer's operatic production at the Berkshire Festival in Massachusetts. The opera will be given in English under the title of "The Turk in Italy." The revised text is by Boris Goldovsky, head of the opera department of the music center.

The score was re-assembled from a manuscript copy found in Palermo, Italy, and from parts in the Boston public library and the Widener Library at Harvard.

THE BOSTON SUNDAY GLOBE—JULY 4, 1948

MUSICIANS

Berkshire Music Center Opens Season Today With Enrollment of 445

With an enrollment of 445 students, 28 more than last year and the largest in its history, the Berkshire Music Center will begin its sixth season at exercises in the theatre-concert hall at Tanglewood this afternoon at 3:30. The students this year come from 42 states, the District of Columbia, Alaska, and 13 foreign countries. Of the 262 men students 111 are former G.I.'s.

Speakers at the opening will be Serge Koussevitzky, founder and director of the school; Aaron Copland, the assistant director; and Dr. Lewis Perry, chairman of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, who will also represent the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. There will be the traditional singing by the entire student body of Randall Thompson's "Alleluia," composed for the first opening exercises in 1940.

The audience at this, the first event at Tanglewood this Summer, will be greeted with a number of striking improvements and additions to the beautiful 200-acre estate between Lenox and Stockbridge. The innovations are immediately apparent, beginning at the front gate where a handsome reception and exhibition room is being erected to the right of the main entrance. Entirely plate glass front and back, the room is 15 feet high and its roof spreads over the gate. The new building will also house the school book and music store.

The Music Shed, which accommodates 6000 persons, is getting a new roof. The great wedge-shaped expanse covers nearly an acre and a half.

Refreshments facilities have been considerably enlarged. Portable booths, making special bills of fare easily accessible, will be ready when the festival begins with the first of the Bach-Mozart concerts Sunday afternoon, July 18.

The school has a number of new studios, including three in the Red Cottage which the National Federation of Music Clubs has built on the site and in exact reproduction of the little house where Hawthorne wrote "Tanglewood Tales" and "The House of Seven Gables." The Center has also leased the adjoining estate formerly owned by the Drake family and 50 men students will be housed there.

The Berkshire Festival will begin Sunday afternoon, July 18, with the first of the Bach-Mozart concerts in the Theatre-Concert Hall. The first concert in the Music Shed will be Thursday evening, July 29.

Syracuse

Note Largest Enrollment in Berkshire School History; Tanglewood Exercises

Dr. Koussevitzky

WITH AN enrollment of 445 students, 28 more than last year and the largest in its history, the Berkshire Music Center will begin its sixth season at exercises in the Theater-Concert Hall at Tanglewood this afternoon at 3:30 o'clock. The students this year come from 42 states, the District of Columbia, Alaska, and 13 foreign countries. Of the 262 men students 111 are former GIs. Speakers at the opening will be Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, founder and director of the school; Aaron Copland, assistant director; and Dr. Lewis Perry, chairman of the Friends of the Berkshire Music center, who will also represent the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. There will be the traditional singing by the entire student body of Randall Thompson's "Alleluia," composed for the first opening exercises in 1940.

THE AUDIENCE AT this, the first event at Tanglewood this summer, will be greeted with a number of striking improvements and additions to the 200-acre estate between Lenox and Stockbridge. The innovations are immediately apparent, beginning at the front gate where a handsome reception and exhibition room is being erected to the right of the main entrance. Entirely plate glass front and back, the room is 15 feet high and its roof spreads over the gate, bringing the offices to the left into one harmonious unit. The new building will also house the school book and music store.

THE MUSIC SHED, which accommodates 6,000 persons at the Festival concerts, is getting a new roof. The great wedge-shaped expanse covers nearly an acre and a half and the new roofing material weighs approximately four pounds per square foot. Refreshment facilities have been considerably enlarged. Portable booths, making special bills of fare easily accessible, will be ready when the Festival begins with the first of the Bach-Mozart concerts Sunday afternoon, July 18. The school has a number of new studios, including three in the Red Cottage which the National Federation of Music Clubs has rebuilt on the site and in exact reproduction of the little house where Hawthorne wrote "Tanglewood Tales" and "The House of Seven Gables." The Center has also leased the adjoining estate formerly owned by the Drake family and 50 men students will be housed there. The Berkshire Festival will begin Sunday afternoon, July 18, with the first of the Bach-Mozart concerts in the Theater-Concert Hall. The first concert in the Music Shed will be Thursday night, July 29.

* * *

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

JUL 6 - 1948

Mrs. F. S. Murphy Renamed to Group Of Music Sponsors

Mrs. Francis S. Murphy has been renamed to a national sponsoring committee of 61 for the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., by Dr. Lewis Perry, chairman.

Also reappointed to the committee for the current season is Mrs. William Mathew Lewis of Colebrook.

Announcing the appointments, Dr. Perry reports a membership of 1,500 persons from all parts of the country, an increase of 50 per cent over the list at this date last year. Members are invited to attend not only concerts by the students of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school, headed by Serge Koussevitzky, but chamber music recitals that will be the gifts of Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge and the Juilliard School of Music. A contribution sent to the Berkshire Music Center constitutes membership in the society.

DR. KOUSSEVITZK REGRETS LEADERS LACK OF FAIT

Addresses 1200 Persons Opening of Berkshire Music Center

Lenox, July 4 — Speaking to audience of 1200 at Tanglewood th afternoon, Dr. Serge Koussevitz conductor of the Boston Sympho Orchestra, regretted the lack of fai shown by present-day leaders of h manity.

"We read of millions of dollars a signed for the vast European recov ery program, but all is to go f physical needs and none for the r lief of the spiritual vacuum and cu tural hunger of a sick mankind," said.

None Fills Spiritual Vacuum

Asserting that the Marshall Pla emphasizes the power and value the dollar, Dr. Koussevitzky add that "to the morally and mentall destitute peoples of Europe Ameri is still the dollar-making country the country of mass production a material welfare, void of cultu foundation and interest."

This was the opening for the six season of Berkshire Music Cente which now has 462 students enrolle 35 more than last year and a reco with 42 states, District of Columb Alaska and 15 foreign countries re resented. Dr. Lewis Perry, chairm of the Friends of Berkshire Mus Center, who presided, said:

"Any institution is the length a shadow of a man. Berkshire Mus Center is the vigorous child of D Koussevitzky. His name has brough you here. In enumerating Tanglewo charms we must give nature a [illegible] but nature and Dr. Koussevitzky a unbeatable.

During the theater-concert ha program the maestro praised Mr Andrew Hopewell Hepburn, Concor who died recently. She was born Tanglewood and with her aunt, th late Miss Cary Aspinwall Tappa gave the 200 acres to the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

This Clipping From
PORTLAND, ME.
PRESS HERALD

JUL 5 - 1948

Maine Men Study Music At Tanglewood

(Special Dispatch)

Lenox, Mass., July 4—With a record enrollment of 445 students the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood today began its sixth season with exercises in the Theater-Concert Hall and a list of speakers headed by Serge [redacted] founder and director.

Two Maine men are among the students who come this year from 42 states, Alaska, the District of Columbia and 13 foreign countries. They are Carleton Greeley, 503 Woodford Street, and Wilke Renwick of 23 Cromwell Street, Kittery.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

Tanglewood Season Opens.

Lenox, Mass., July 4. (AP.)—The 1948 season at the Berkshire Music Center was opened today by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with formal exercises in the concert hall at Tanglewood. Dr. Koussevitzky, founder and director of the music center, asked in an address before 1000 persons that the government support a program of fine arts. He said that art is "fortifying and necessary to complete the structure of the state."

Jul 1 Eagle

REHEARSING FOR CONCERT: The Juilliard String Quartet will give a pair of concerts of the works of Bela Bartok in the Theatre-Concert Hall at Tanglewood Saturday evening, July 10, and Saturday, evening, July 17. The two programs together will cover all six quartets of the Hungarian master, his entire output in this form. The events are open to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

This Clipping From
LAWRENCE, MASS.
EAGLE

JUL 5 - 1948

Berkshire Music Festival Opens

LENOX, July 4 (AP)—The 1948 season of the Berkshire Music Center was opened today by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, with formal exercises in the concert hall at Tanglewood.

Dr Koussevitzky, founder and director of the music center, asked in an address before 1,000 persons that the government support a program of fine arts.

He said that are is "fortifying and necessary to complete the structure of the state."

Dr. Koussevitzky, who has announced his retirement at the conclusion of the 1948-49 season, paid tribute to Mrs. Guy P. Gannett of Portland, Me., former president of the National Federation of Music Clubs.

Mrs. Gannett is chairman of the committee in charge of restoring Nathaniel Hawthorne's "Little Red Cottage" at Tanglewood. The building will be dedicated July 24.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

JUL 5 - 1948

EXPORT OF CULTURE PLEA OF CONDUCTOR

Dr. Koussevitzky at Berkshire Center Asks That Europe Get More Than Dollars

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., July 4—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky urged the United States today to supplement its material aid to Europe with evidence of its cultural achievements so that Europeans would cease feeling that this country had nothing to export but "the power and value of the dollar."

He made the plea at the hour-long exercises here opening the annual summer session of the Berkshire Music Center. His speech was heard by 462 students and more than 600 friends of the center who came to Tanglewood for the opening ceremonies, which also included tea in the grounds of the estate.

"To the morally hungry and mentally destitute peoples of Europe," the conductor said, "America is still the dollar-making country, the country of mass-production and material welfare, void of cultural foundation and interest. This misconception of America, and of American cultural life and her artistic achievements must be corrected."

Dr. Koussevitzky suggested no actual steps, but he repeated the plea he made two years ago "for the support of the Fine Arts by our Government." He also made a reference that many listeners took as criticism of Russia for its attempts to discipline Shostakovich, Prokofieff and other composers.

"We have witnessed an act of moral injustice," he said, "committed against the creative freedom and genius in our own artistic realm. Shall we remain silent when art is attacked at its very roots and when abnormal pressure is allowed to take the place of truth? Art cannot be dominated by external influences and crushed under the thumb of the mass."

The exercises were opened with "The Star Spangled Banner" and closed with the singing of Randall Thompson's "Alleluia" by the student body. The other speakers were Aaron Copland, assistant director of the center, and Dr. Lewis Perry, chairman of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

Tanglewood Season Opens

LENOX, Monday (AP) — The 1948 season at the Berkshire Music Center was opened yesterday by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with formal exercises in the concert hall at Tanglewood.

Dr. Koussevitzky, founder and director of the music center, asked in an address before 1000 persons that the government support a program of fine arts.

He said that art is "fortifying and necessary to complete the structure of the state."

Dr. Koussevitzky, who has announced his retirement at the conclusion of the 1948-49 season, paid tribute to Mrs. Guy P. Gannett of Portland, Me., former president of the National Federation of Music Clubs.

Mrs. Gannett is chairman of the committee in charge of restoring Nathaniel Hawthorne's "Little Red Cottage" at Tanglewood. The building will be dedicated July 24.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

JUL 5 - 1948

DR. KOUSSEVITZKY REGRETS LEADERS LACKING IN FAITH

Addresses 1200 Persons at Opening of Berkshire Music Center

Lenox, July 4 — Speaking to an audience of 1200 at Tanglewood this afternoon, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, regretted the [illegible] faith shown by present-day leaders of humanity.

"We read of millions of dollars assigned for the vast European recovery program, but all is to go for physical needs and none for the relief of the spiritual vacuum and cultural hunger of a sick mankind," he said.

None Fills Spiritual Vacuum

Asserting that the Marshall Plan emphasizes the power and value of the dollar, Dr. Koussevitzky added that "to the morally and mentally destitute peoples of Europe America is still the dollar-making country — the country of mass production and material welfare, void of cultural foundation and interest."

This was the opening for the sixth season of Berkshire Music Center, which now has 462 students enrolled, 35 more than last year and a record with 42 states, District of Columbia, Alaska and 15 foreign countries represented. Dr. Lewis Perry, chairman of the Friends of Berkshire Music Center, who presided, said:

"Any institution is the length and shadow of a man. Berkshire Music Center is the vigorous child of Dr. Koussevitzky. His name has brought you here. In enumerating Tanglewood charms we must give nature a break, but nature and Dr. Koussevitzky are unbeatable.

During the theater-concert hall program the maestro praised Mrs. Andrew Hopewell Hepburn, Concord, who died recently. She was born at Tanglewood and with her aunt, the late Miss Cary Aspinwall Tappan, gave the 200 acres to the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

This Clipping From
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE

JUL 6 - 1948

Music Notes

By D. E. RITZ

To an audience that is much more accustomed to watching Serge Koussevitsky conduct than listening to his speeches the opportunity of hearing him address the students at the opening exercises of the Berkshire Music Center on July 4 was a treat. Dr. Koussevitsky had a real message to offer the 462 students who are attending the center.

Delivered simply but with the same meticulous regard for detail that is evidenced in his conducting the speech emphasized the importance of ideals. In part he stated that musicians "must hold their heads in the clouds and their feet on the ground." He warned against loss of creative urge because of too much interest in material gain. He stated that Europe still thinks of America as being completely dollar conscious, as being only a land of mass production—and urged students to work to correct this fallacy.

Commenting on the change in status of musicians he reminded that the age when one hired a domestic for his ability to accompany or to play an instrument had given way to the long-haired genius era. The new era musician is the man who can take his place in the world. Albert Schweitzer was cited by Dr. Koussevitzky as the "singular example" of what the new era in musicians should be.

In concluding he urged the students to be true to themselves—clean inside and out—and stressed that artists must have a "sense of obligation."

Others speaking at the opening exercises were Dr. Lewis Perry, chairman of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center and representative of the Trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Aaron Copland, assistant director of the center. Hugh Ross conducted the singing of Randall Thompson's "Alleluia" by the student body.

This being the open season on vacations many of our musicians have started on theirs. Joseph Derrick, director of the Schenectady Conservatory of Music, is camping at Stockbridge Bowl, Lenox, Mass., and plans to remain there until early September. Anthony Stefan, Anthony Pezzano, Robert Campbell and Miss Elizabeth Naylor are at Ithaca College working for degrees. Arthur Catricala is reported to be at camp at Sacandaga. Duncan T. Gillespie is on a busman's holiday at New-York.

The Thursday Musical Club have announced the duo-piano team of Celius Dougherty and Vincent Ruzicka as the extra attraction for the Nov. 18 concert to be given at Union College Memorial Chapel.

Dougherty has become widely accepted as a composer. His works include a one-act opera, string quartet, violin and piano sonata and numerous songs as well as arrangements for two pianos.

Both young men are American born, one coming from Minnesota and the other from Illinois. Their initial appearance as a duo-team was made at Town Hall in 1939. They make a point bringing one world-premier on their programs each season and have become noted for their interpretations of modern music. They have introduced duo-piano works of Stravinsky, Hindemith and Milhaud.

TUESDAY, JULY 6, 1948

Tanglewood Concerts Starting Tomorrow

The first purely musical event of the season at Tanglewood, Lenox, Massachusetts, will be the first of four concerts of chamber music by Franz Shubert, the gift of Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, and will be given in the Theater-Concert Hall tomorrow night at 8:15 P. M. The program will include the Quartet for Flute, guitar, viola and violincello, the Sonata for Arpeggione and the entire song cycle, "Winterreise," sung by Ralph Herbert with Eric Itor Kahn at the piano. The other artists will be Carleton Sprague Smith, flutist; Suzanne Bloch, guitar; Paul Doktor, violist, and Sidney Edwards, 'cellist. In the sonata Mr. Doktor will play the arpeggione part on the viola, for the arpeggione, invented in 1823 and known as the guitarre d'amour, has long been extinct.

The Berkshire Festival begins with the Bach-Mozart series on July 18, 20, 25 and 27, with Serge Koussevitzky conducting. The first concert in the Music Shed with the full Boston Symphony Orchestra led by Mr. Kousevitzky takes place on July 29.

---

new Cecilwood Theatre,
N. Y.

July 6 Eagle

Series of Four Concerts To Open at Tanglewood

A series of four concerts of Franz Schubert's chamber music, contributed by Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, will open at 8:15 tomorrow night at the Berkshire Music Center in Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. The program includes the quartet for flute, guitar, viola and cello, the sonata in A minor for piano and arpeggione and the "Winterreise" song cycle, to be sung by Ralph Herbert, barytone. The other concerts will be given on the next three Wednesday evenings. The Albeneri Trio will play on July 14, the Boston String Quartet on July 21 and the Boston Conservatory String Quartet on July 28.

The Juilliard School of Music is contributing two concerts by the Juilliard String Quartet, playing Bela Bartok's six quartets at 8:15 on the next two Saturday evenings, July 10 and 17. Admission to both series, which take place in the center's Theater-Concert Hall, is by invitation for members of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center. Information about membership may be obtained from the center at Tanglewood.

[158]

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

JU

Tanglewood Season Opens.

Lenox, Mass., July 4.—(AP.)—The 1948 season at the Berkshire Music Center was opened today by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with formal exercises in the concert hall at Tanglewood. Dr. Koussevitzky, founder and director of the music center, asked in an address before 1000 persons that the government support a program of fine arts. He said that art is "fortifying and necessary to complete the structure of the state."

Jul/ Eagle

REHEARSING FOR CONCERT: The Juilliard String Quartet will give a pair of concerts of the works of Bela Bartok in the Theatre-Concert Hall at Tanglewood Saturday evening, July 10, and Saturday, evening, July 17. The two programs together will cover all six quartets of the Hungarian master, his entire output in this form. The events are open to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

This Clipping From
LAWRENCE, MASS.
EAGLE

JUL 5 - 1948

Berkshire Music Festival Opens

LENOX, July 4 (AP)—The 1948 season of the Berkshire Music Center was opened today by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, with formal exercises in the concert hall at Tanglewood.

Dr. Koussevitzky, founder and director of the music center, asked in an address before 1,000 persons that the government support a program of fine arts.

He said that are is "fortifying and necessary to complete the structure of the state."

Dr. Koussevitzky, who has announced his retirement at the conclusion of the 1948-49 season, paid tribute to Mrs. Guy P. Gannett of Portland, Me., former president of the National Federation of Music Clubs.

Mrs. Gannett is chairman of the committee in charge of restoring Nathaniel Hawthorne's "Little Red Cottage" at Tanglewood. The building will be dedicated July 24.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

JUL 5 - 1948

EXPORT OF CULTURE PLEA OF CONDUCTOR

Dr. Koussevitzky at Berkshire Center Asks That Europe Get More Than Dollars

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., July 4—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky urged the United States today to supplement its material aid to Europe with evidence of its cultural achievements so that Europeans would cease feeling that this country had nothing to export but "the power and value of the dollar."

He made the plea at the hour-long exercises here opening the annual summer session of the Berkshire Music Center. His speech was heard by 462 students and more than 600 friends of the center who came to Tanglewood for the opening ceremonies, which also included tea in the grounds of the estate.

"To the morally hungry and mentally destitute peoples of Europe," the conductor said, "America is still the dollar-making country, the country of mass-production and material welfare, void of cultural foundation and interest. This misconception of America, and of American cultural life and her artistic achievements must be corrected."

Dr. Koussevitzky suggested no actual steps, but he repeated the plea he made two years ago "for the support of the Fine Arts by our Government." He also made a reference that many listeners took as criticism of Russia for its attempts to discipline Shostakovich, Prokofieff and other composers.

"We have witnessed an act of moral injustice," he said, "committed against the creative freedom and genius in our own artistic realm. Shall we remain silent when art is attacked at its very roots and when abnormal pressure is allowed to take the place of truth? Art cannot be dominated by external influences and crushed under the thumb of the mass."

The exercises were opened with "The Star Spangled Banner" and closed with the singing of Randall Thompson's "Alleluia" by the student body. The other speakers were Aaron Copland, assistant director of the center, and Dr. Lewis Perry, chairman of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

JUL 5 - 1948

Tanglewood Season Opens

LENOX, Monday (AP) — The 1948 season at the Berkshire Music Center was opened yesterday by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with formal exercises in the concert hall at Tanglewood.

Dr. Koussevitzky, founder and director of the music center, asked in an address before 1000 persons that the government support a program of fine arts.

He said that art is "fortifying and necessary to complete the structure of the state."

Dr. Koussevitzky, who has announced his retirement at the conclusion of the 1948-49 season, paid tribute to Mrs. Guy P. Gannett of Portland, Me., former president of the National Federation of Music Clubs.

Mrs. Gannett is chairman of the committee in charge of restoring Nathaniel Hawthorne's "Little Red Cottage" at Tanglewood. The building will be dedicated July 24.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

JUL 5 - 1948

DR. KOUSSEVITZKY REGRETS LEADERS LACKING IN FAITH

Addresses 1200 Persons at Opening of Berkshire Music Center

Lenox, July 4 — Speaking to an audience of 1200 at Tanglewood this afternoon, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, regretted [illegible] shown by present-day leaders of humanity.

"We read of millions of dollars assigned for the vast European recovery program, but all is to go for physical needs and none for the relief of the spiritual vacuum and cultural hunger of a sick mankind," he said.

None Fills Spiritual Vacuum

Asserting that the Marshall Plan emphasizes the power and value of the dollar, Dr. Koussevitzky added that "to the morally and mentally destitute peoples of Europe America is still the dollar-making country — the country of mass production and material welfare, void of cultural foundation and interest."

This was the opening for the sixth season of Berkshire Music Center, which now has 462 students enrolled, 35 more than last year and a record with 42 states, District of Columbia, Alaska and 15 foreign countries represented. Dr. Lewis Perry, chairman of the Friends of Berkshire Music Center, who presided, said:

"Any institution is the length and shadow of a man. Berkshire Music Center is the vigorous child of Dr. Koussevitzky. His name has brought you here. In enumerating Tanglewood charms we must give nature a break, but nature and Dr. Koussevitzky are unbeatable.

During the theater-concert hall program the maestro praised Mrs. Andrew Hopewell Hepburn, Concord, who died recently. She was born at Tanglewood and with her aunt, the late Miss Cary Aspinwall Tappan, gave the 200 acres to the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

This Clipping From
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE

JUL 6 - 1948

Music Notes

By D. E. RITZ

To an audience that is much more accustomed to watching Serge Koussevitsky conduct than listening to his speeches the opportunity of hearing him address the students at the opening exercises of the Berkshire Music Center on July 4 was a treat. Dr. Koussevitzky had a real message to offer the 462 students who are attending the center.

Delivered simply but with the same meticulous regard for detail that is evidenced in his conducting the speech emphasized the importance of ideals. In part he stated that musicians "must hold their heads in the clouds and their feet on the ground." He warned against loss of creative urge because of too much interest in material gain. He stated that Europe still thinks of America as being completely dollar conscious, as being only a land of mass production—and urged students to work to correct this fallacy.

Commenting on the change in status of musicians he reminded that the age when one hired a domestic for his ability to accompany or to play an instrument had given way to the long-haired genius era. The new era musician is the man who can take his place in the world. Albert Schweitzer was cited by Dr. Koussevitzky as the "singular example" of what the new era in musicians should be.

In concluding he urged the students to be true to themselves—clean inside and out—and stressed that artists must have a "sense of obligation."

Others speaking at the opening exercises were Dr. Lewis Perry, chairman of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center and representative of the Trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Aaron Copland, assistant director of the center. Hugh Ross conducted the singing of Randall Thompson's "Alleluia" by the student body.

This being the open season on vacations many of our musicians have started on theirs. Joseph Derrick, director of the Schenectady Conservatory of Music, is camping at Stockbridge Bowl, Lenox, Mass., and plans to remain there until early September. Anthony Stefan, Anthony Pezzano, Robert Campbell and Miss Elizabeth Naylor are at Ithaca College working for degrees. Arthur Catricala is reported to be at camp at Sacandaga. Duncan T. Gillespie is on a busman's holiday at New York.

The Thursday Musical Club have announced the duo-piano team of Celius Dougherty and Vincent Ruzicka as the extra attraction for the Nov. 18 concert to be given at Union College Memorial Chapel.

Dougherty has become widely accepted as a composer. His works include a one-act opera, string quartet, violin and piano sonata and numerous songs as well as arrangements for two pianos.

Both young men are American born, one coming from Minnesota and the other from Illinois. Their initial appearance as a duo-team was made at Town Hall in 1939. They make a point bringing one world-premier on their programs each season and have become noted for their interpretations of modern music. They have introduced duo-piano works of Stravinsky, Hindemith and Milhaud.

TUESDAY, JULY 6, 1948

Herald

Tanglewood Concerts Starting Tomorrow

The first purely musical event of the season at Tanglewood, Lenox, Massachusetts, will be the first of four concerts of chamber music by Franz Shubert, the gift of Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, and will be given in the Theater-Concert Hall tomorrow night at 8:15 P. M. The program will include the Quartet for Flute, guitar, viola and violincello, the Sonata for Arpeggione and the entire song cycle, "Winterreise," sung by Ralph Herbert with Eric Itor Kahn at the piano. The other artists will be Carleton Sprague Smith, flutist; Suzanne Bloch, guitar; Paul Doktor, violist, and Sidney Edwards, 'cellist. In the sonata Mr. Doktor will play the arpeggione part on the viola, for the arpeggione, invented in 1823 and known as the guitarre d'amour, has long been extinct.

The Berkshire Festival begins with the Bach-Mozart series on July 18, 20, 25 and 27, with Serge Koussevitzky conducting. The first concert in the Music Shed with the full Boston Symphony Orchestra led by Mr. Kousevitzky takes place on July 29.

---

new Cecilwood Theatre
N. Y.

July 6 Eagle

Series of Four Concerts To Open at Tanglewood

A series of four concerts of Franz Schubert's chamber music, contributed by Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, will open at 8:15 tomorrow night at the Berkshire Music Center in Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. The program includes the quartet for flute, guitar, viola and cello, the sonata in A minor for piano and arpeggione and the "Winterreise" song cycle, to be sung by Ralph Herbert, barytone. The other concerts will be given on the next three Wednesday evenings. The Albeneri Trio will play on July 14, the Boston String Quartet on July 21 and the Boston Conservatory String Quartet on July 28.

The Juilliard School of Music is contributing two concerts by the Juilliard String Quartet, playing Bela Bartok's six quartets at 8:15 on the next two Saturday evenings, July 10 and 17. Admission to both series, which take place in the center's Theater-Concert Hall, is by invitation for members of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center. Information about membership may be obtained from the center at Tanglewood.

[158]

HARTFORD [illegible]

IMES, TUESDAY, JUI

Mrs. F. S. Murphy Renamed to Group Of Music Sponsors

Mrs. Francis S. Murphy has been renamed to a national sponsoring committee of 61 for the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., by Dr. Lewis Perry, chairman.

Also reappointed to the committee for the current season is Mrs. William Mathew Lewis of Colebrook.

Announcing the appointments, Dr. Perry reports a membership of 1,500 persons from all parts of the country, an increase of 50 per cent over the list at this date last year. Members are invited to attend not only concerts by the students of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school, headed by Serge Koussevitzky, but chamber music recitals that will be the gifts of Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge and the Juilliard School of Music. A contribution sent to the Berkshire Music Center constitutes membership in the society.

This Clipping From
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

JUL 6 - 1948

Open Music Center For Sixth Season

Dr. Koussevitzky Renews Plea for Government Support of Arts—First Concert Tomorrow.

Opening the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood for its sixth season, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky suggested Sunday afternoon that the United States export the fine arts along with the material aid it is sending to Europe, to help relieve the spiritual vacuum and cultural hunger of a sick mankind.

The conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra and director of the Music center told the audience of students and guests that this would disabuse Europeans of the belief that America has nothing but "the power and value of the dollar" to export.

Dr. Koussevitzky proposed also to the gathering of 1,200 that governments support the arts to help "release men from the grip of mental misery and blank fear."

He recalled that two years ago he had urged the need "of spiritual food to a hungry and still bleeding world," and had urged governmental support of the fine arts because of their importance in "fortifying and completing the structure of the state. The intervening months, he said, have strengthened his faith that government should increase the comfort of their people by giving support to the arts, and, he said, have singled out the place of the musician in the world.

Other speakers at the exercises, which opened the gates of Tanglewood for the 1948 activities, were Aaron Copland, noted composer and assistant director of the Music Center, and Dr. Lewis Perry, chairman of the Friends of the Music Center. Tea was served in the garden after the 462 students in the music center, representing 42 states and 15 foreign countries, had sung the traditional "Alleluia," composed by Randall Thompson for the first opening exercises in 1940.

The first purely musical event of the season at Tanglewood will be the concert tomorrow evening at 8.15 o'clock in the theater-concert hall. This is the first of four concerts of chamber music by Franz Schubert on the four Wednesday evenings of July. The series is the gift of Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge and is open to Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

The Berkshire festival begins with the Bach-Mozart series July 18, 20, 25, and 27, Serge Koussevitzky conducting. The first concert in the music shed by the full Boston Symphony orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky will be Thursday evening, July 29.

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS

JUL 6 - 1948

Tanglewood Pre-Festival Concert Set

The first of the pre-Festival events of purely musical character at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., will be the Coolidge chamber music concert at 8:15 p. m. tomorrow in the Concert Hall, the first of four Schubert chamber programs. The series is the gift of Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge and is open to Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

The program for tomorrow night will be Schubert's Quartet for Flute, Guitar, Viola and Violincello, the Sonata for Arpeggione and the entire song sycle, "Winterreise," sung by Ralph Herbert, baritone, with Erich Itor Kahon at the piano.

In the sonata, the arpeggione, now an obsolete instrument that looks like a guitar is bowed instead of plucked, will be represented by the viola played by Paul Doktor. Other artists are to be Carleton Sprague Smith, flutist, Suzanne Bloch, guitarist, and Sidney Edwards, cellist.

The regular Berkshire Festival will begin with the Bach-Mozart series, July 18, 20, 25 and 27, with Serge Koussevitzky conducting.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

JUL 7 - 1948

Two Concerts at Tanglewood To Cover Bartok Quartet Cycle

Juilliard String Quartet Will Give First in Series On Saturday; Second, the 17th

As a gift of the Juilliard School of Music, the Juilliard String Quartet will play two concerts of the works of Bela Bartok in the Theater-Concert Hall at Tanglewood Saturday evening, and Saturday evening, the 17th. The events are open to Friends of Berkshire Music Center.

Together the two concerts will include the modern Hungarian master's entire output in the string quartet form coverning 32 years from 1907 to 1939. The works, however, will be played in chronological order. The first concert will offer the Third, Second and Fifth Quartets while the second will bring Nos. 4, 1, and 6.

Organized on a noncommercial basis and appearing only under sponsorship of the school, the Juilliard String Quartet is "in residence" at the Juilliard School of Music in New York. In the words of its founders, the quartet is intended "to stimulate in America the development of chamber music in keeping with the highest ideals and the noblest traditions."

The Quartet

The four members of the quartet are on the ensemble faculty at Juilliard and each has an enviable record in his chosen field. Two of them are former students of the Berkshire Music Center. The personnel is as follows:

Robert Mann, violinist, a native of Portland, Ore., graduated from Juilliard in 1943, won the Naumburg Foundation Award in 1941. He made his formal debut at Town Hall in New York in December 1941.

Robert Koff, violinist, born in Los Angeles; graduated from Oberlin Conservatory of Music and subsequently studied at Juilliard. He has concertized extensively and appeared frequently in chamber music concerts.

Raphael Hillyer, violist, born in Ithaca, New York; attended Curtis Institute of Music in Philadelphia, was graduated from Dartmouth College in 1936, was awarded Master of Arts from Harvard in 1938, and studied at Berkshire Music Center. He was a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra until 1946 when with gracious permission of Serge Kousevitzky, he joined the Juilliard String Quartet.

Arthur Winograd, 'cellist, is a native New Yorker. He studied at the New England Conservatory of Music in Boston, at Berkshire Music Center, and at Curtis Institute. Upon graduation he became 'cellist of the Galimir Quartet and a member of the NBC Symphony Orchestra.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

JUL 6 - 1948

Series of Four Concerts To Open at Tanglewood

A series of four concerts of Franz Schubert's chamber music, contributed by Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, will open at 8:15 tomorrow night at the Berkshire Music Center in Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. The program includes the quartet for flute, guitar, viola and cello, the sonata in A minor for piano and arpeggione and the "Winterreise" song cycle, to be sung by Ralph Herbert, barytone. The other concerts will be given on the next three Wednesday evenings. The Albeneri Trio will play on July 14, the Boston String Quartet on July 21 and the Boston Conservatory String Quartet on July 28.

The Juilliard School of Music is contributing two concerts by the Juilliard String Quartet, playing Bela Bartok's six quartets at 8:15 on the next two Saturday evenings, July 10 and 17. Admission to both series, which take place in the center's Theater-Concert Hall, is by invitation for members of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center. Information about membership may be obtained from the center at Tanglewood.

This Clipping From SPRINGFIELD, OHIO
SUN

JUL 6 - 1948

Boston Symphony To Inaugurate Summer Series Tuesday Night

NEW YORK, July 5.—Continuing its summer series, the Boston symphony will stage the first broadcast of its annual Esplanade concerts on ABC Tuesday at 9:30 p. m. It will be commemorative of the 20th anniversary of the series. The Esplanade programs succeed the pops concerts and also are being conducted by Arthur Fiedler.

America's Town meeting on ABC at 8:30 p. m., stopping at Las Vegas, Nev., will ask, "What is Americanism?" And as a participant there will be Mike Kivatisky, 12-year-old New York boy who declined a two-week vacation in the country because he said it was better to stay in New York. Among other speakers will be Representative Karl E. Mundt of South Dakota.

Claude Rains will do the principal acting for the CBS Studio One at 10 p. m. He will do an adaptation of the comedy "Topaze."

For the second of its Lyman Bryson series on You and Politics at 6:15 p. m. CBS has listed Joseph D. McGoldrick, former comptroller of New York City, as guest. The annouced topic is "The Political Machine."

The weekly ABC features, formerly Let Freedom Ring at 10:30 p. m. and It's In the Family at 10:45 p. m. are continuing under the titles of It's Your Business and Labor USA. The former is under auspices of N.A.M. and the latter AFL.

A belated sponsor announcement says that Mel Torme, singer, is heading the summer replacement for Dinah Shore starting on NBC at 8 p. m.

[159]

HARTFORD TIMES

IMES, TUESDAY, JUI

Mrs. F. S. Murphy Renamed to Group Of Music Sponsors

Mrs. Francis S. Murphy has been renamed to a national sponsoring committee of 61 for the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., by Dr. Lewis Perry, chairman.

Also reappointed to the committee for the current season is Mrs. William Mathew Lewis of Colebrook.

Announcing the appointments, Dr. Perry reports a membership of 1,500 persons from all parts of the country, an increase of 50 per cent over the list at this date last year. Members are invited to attend not only concerts by the students of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school, headed by Serge Koussevitzky, but chamber music recitals that will be the gifts of Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge and the Juilliard School of Music. A contribution sent to the Berkshire Music Center constitutes membership in the society.

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
JUL 6 - 1948

Tanglewood Pre-Festival Concert Set

The first of the pre-Festival events of purely musical character at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., will be the Coolidge chamber music concert at 8:15 p. m. tomorrow in the Concert Hall, the first of four Schubert chamber programs. The series is the gift of Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge and is open to Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

The program for tomorrow night will be Schubert's Quartet for Flute, Guitar, Viola and Violincello, the Sonata for Arpeggione and the entire song sycle, "Winterreise," sung by Ralph Herbert, baritone, with Erich Itor Kahon at the piano.

In the sonata, the arpeggione, now an obsolete instrument that looks like a guitar is bowed instead of plucked, will be represented by the viola played by Paul Doktor. Other artists are to be Carleton Sprague Smith, flutist, Suzanne Bloch, guitarist, and Sidney Edwards, cellist.

The regular Berkshire Festival will begin with the Bach-Mozart series, July 18, 20, 25 and 27, with Serge Koussevitzky conducting.

This Clipping From SPRINGFIELD, OHIO
SUN
6 - 1948

Boston Symphony To Inaugurate Summer Series Tuesday Night

NEW YORK, July 5.—Continuing its summer series, the Boston symphony will stage the first broadcast of its annual Esplanade concerts on ABC Tuesday at 9:30 p. m. It will be commemorative of the 20th anniversary of the series. The Esplanade programs succeed the pops concerts and also are being conducted by Arthur Fiedler.

America's Town meeting on ABC at 8:30 p. m., stopping at Las Vegas, Nev., will ask, "What is Americanism?" And as a participant there will be Mike Kivatisky, 12-year-old New York boy who declined a two-week vacation in the country because he said it was better to stay in New York. Among other speakers will be Representative Karl E. Mundt of South Dakota.

Claude Rains will do the principal acting for the CBS Studio One at 10 p. m. He will do an adaptation of the comedy "Topaze."

For the second of its Lyman Bryson series on You and Politics at 6:15 p. m. CBS has listed Joseph D. McGoldrick, former comptroller of New York City, as guest. The annouced topic is "The Political Machine."

The weekly ABC features, formerly Let Freedom Ring at 10:30 p. m. and It's In the Family at 10:45 p. m. are continuing under the titles of It's Your Business and Labor USA. The former is under auspices of N.A.M. and the latter AFL.

A belated sponsor announcement says that Mel Torme, singer, is heading the summer replacement for Dinah Shore starting on NBC at 8 p. m.

This Clipping From
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
JUL 6 - 1948

Open Music Center For Sixth Season

Dr. Koussevitzky Renews Plea for Government Support of Arts—First Concert Tomorrow.

Opening the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood for its sixth season, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky suggested Sunday afternoon that the United States export the fine arts along with the material aid it is sending to Europe, to help relieve the spiritual vacuum and cultural hunger of a sick mankind.

The conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra and director of the Music center told the audience of students and guests that this would disabuse Europeans of the belief that America has nothing but "the power and value of the dollar" to export.

Dr. Koussevitzky proposed also to the gathering of 1,200 that governments support the arts to help "release men from the grip of mental misery and blank fear."

He recalled that two years ago he had urged the need "of spiritual food to a hungry and still bleeding world," and had urged governmental support of the fine arts because of their importance in "fortifying and completing the structure of the state. The intervening months, he said, have strengthened his faith that government should increase the comfort of their people by giving support to the arts, and, he said, have singled out the place of the musician in the world.

Other speakers at the exercises, which opened the gates of Tanglewood for the 1948 activities, were Aaron Copland, noted composer and assistant director of the Music Center, and Dr. Lewis Perry, chairman of the Friends of the Music Center. Tea was served in the garden after the 462 students in the music center, representing 42 states and 15 foreign countries, had sung the traditional "Alleluia," composed by Randall Thompson for the first opening exercises in 1940.

The first purely musical event of the season at Tanglewood will be the concert tomorrow evening at 8.15 o'clock in the theater-concert hall. This is the first of four concerts of chamber music by Franz Schubert on the four Wednesday evenings of July. The series is the gift of Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge and is open to Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

The Berkshire festival begins with the Bach-Mozart series July 18, 20, 25, and 27, Serge Koussevitzky conducting. The first concert in the music shed by the full Boston Symphony orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky will be Thursday evening, July 29.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
JUL 7 - 1948

Two Concerts at Tanglewood To Cover Bartok Quartet Cycle

Juilliard String Quartet Will Give First in Series On Saturday; Second, the 17th

As a gift of the Juilliard School of Music, the Juilliard String Quartet will play two concerts of the works of Bela Bartok in the Theater-Concert Hall at Tanglewood Saturday evening, and Saturday evening, the 17th. The events are open to Friends of Berkshire Music Center.

Together the two concerts will include the modern Hungarian master's entire output in the string quartet form coverning 32 years from 1907 to 1939. The works, however, will be played in chronological order. The first concert will offer the Third, Second and Fifth Quartets while the second will bring Nos. 4, 1, and 6.

Organized on a noncommercial basis and appearing only under sponsorship of the school, the Juilliard String Quartet is "in residence" at the Juilliard School of Music in New York. In the words of its founders, the quartet is intended "to stimulate in America the development of chamber music in keeping with the highest ideals and the noblest traditions."

The Quartet

The four members of the quartet are on the ensemble faculty at Juilliard and each has an enviable record in his chosen field. Two of them are former students of the Berkshire Music Center. The personnel is as follows:

Robert Mann, violinist, a native of Portland, Ore., graduated from Juilliard in 1943, won the Naumburg Foundation Award in 1941. He made his formal debut at Town Hall in New York in December 1941.

Robert Koff, violinist, born in Los Angeles; graduated from Oberlin Conservatory of Music and subsequently studied at Juilliard. He has concertized extensively and appeared frequently in chamber music concerts.

Raphael Hillyer, violist, born in Ithaca, New York; attended Curtis Institute of Music in Philadelphia, was graduated from Dartmouth College in 1936, was awarded Master of Arts from Harvard in 1938, and studied at Berkshire Music Center. He was a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra until [redacted] when with gracious permission of Serge Kousevitzky, he joined the Juilliard String Quartet.

Arthur Winograd, 'cellist, is a native New Yorker. He studied at the New England Conservatory of Music in Boston, at Berkshire Music Center, and at Curtis Institute. Upon graduation he became 'cellist of the Galimir Quartet and a member of the NBC Symphony Orchestra.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
JUL 6 - 1948

Series of Four Concerts To Open at Tanglewood

A series of four concerts of Franz Schubert's chamber music, contributed by Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, will open at 8:15 tomorrow night at the Berkshire Music Center in Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. The program includes the quartet for flute, guitar, viola and cello, the sonata in A minor for piano and arpeggione and the "Winterreise" song cycle, to be sung by Ralph Herbert, barytone. The other concerts will be given on the next three Wednesday evenings. The Albeneri Trio will play on July 14, the Boston String Quartet on July 21 and the Boston Conservatory String Quartet on July 28.

The Juilliard School of Music is contributing two concerts by the Juilliard String Quartet, playing Bela Bartok's six quartets at 8:15 on the next two Saturday evenings, July 10 and 17. Admission to both series, which take place in the center's Theater-Concert Hall, is by invitation for members of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center. Information about membership may be obtained from the center at Tanglewood.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

MUSIC CENTER OPENS: Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Berkshire Music Center, in white linen suit, and Mrs. Koussevitzky, right, greeted Darius Milhaud, in wheelchair, Mrs. Henriette Hirschmann, left, and Mrs. Milhaud, third from left, at the formal opening of the center at Tanglewood yesterday afternoon. Mrs. Hirschmann and Mr. Milhaud recently arrived from France to teach composition at the Music Center this summer.

Music Center At Tanglewood Opens Season

Dr. Koussevitzky Addresses 800 at Exercises in Lenox

TANGLEWOOD—Declaring that the giving of material aid to suffering people is not enough, Serge Koussevitzky welcomed to the Berkshire Music Center Sunday afternoon 462 students from 42 states and 15 foreign countries.

Dr. Koussevitzky, founder and director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school, told the audience of 800 students, their families and Friends of the Berkshire Music Center that are can release man "from the grip of mental misery and blank fear." He recalled that in 1946 at the reopening of the school, following V-E Day, he had urged the need of spiritual food to a hungry and still bleeding world, urging support of the fine arts by our government and pointing to the importance of art as fortifying and completing the structure of the state.

"The years since," Dr. Koussevitzky continued, "have strengthened the faith and singled out the significant place of the musician in our world. We are now entering a period when outer perfection does not suffice. I am speaking of music not in a limited or strictly professional sense, but in a universal aspect which is in line with the concept of our Music Center. Let the artist be on guard against the dangers of his own inner lack of moral fortitude. The student," he moral fortitude. "The student," he said, "when deciding to become a musician, should first take counsel with himself. Does he possess the true qualifications that give him the right to step upon the stage, where thousands of eyes watch him and thousands of hearts beat in anticipation of the message he is to bring? He should be clean inside and out."

Tribute was paid to Mrs. Andrew Hepburn, donor of Tanglewood to the Boston Orchestra, who died recently. Dr. Koussevitzki introduced Mrs. Guy P. Gannett, former president of the National Federation of Music Clubs and chairman of the organization's committee for the restoration of the cottage where Nathaniel Hawthorne lived in 1850 and 1851 and wrote "The House of the Seven Gables," and members of the school faculty.

Dr. Lewis Perry, trustee of the orchestra and chairman of the Friends Society, who presided, invited support of the school by contributions to the organization. After an announcement by Aaron Copland, assistant director, and the singing by the students, conducted by Hugh Ross, of "Alleluia," composed for the ope[illegible]g of the school in 1940 by [illegible]dall Thompson, a reception was held in the garden.

This Clipping From VARIETY
NEW YORK, N. Y.
JUL 7 - 1948

Milhaud Teaching

In Europe since last October, composer Darius Milhaud returned to New York last week aboard the Mauretania to teach at the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass.

While abroad he said he had written a symphony for the French government to coincide with the centennial celebration of the 1848 revolution.

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE
JUL 6 - 1948

Plan Concerts At Tanglewood

LENOX, July 6—The first purely musical event of the season at Tanglewood will be the concert tomorrow at 8.15 p. m. in the Theater-Concert Hall. This is the first of four concerts of chamber music by Franz Schubert on the four Wednesday evenings of July. The series is the gift of Mrs. Elizabeth friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

Wednesday evening's program will offer the quartet for flute, guitar, viola and violoncello, the Sonata for Arpeggione and the entire song cycle, "Winterreise," sung by Ralph Herbert, baritone, with Erich Itor Kahn at the piano. The other artists will be Carleton Sprague Smith, flutist; Suzanne Bloch, guitar; Paul Doktor, violist; and Sidney Edwards, 'cellist.

In the sonata the arpeggione part will played by Mr. Doktor on the viola. Long since extinct, the arpeggione had a vogue which lasted only a few years. It was invented in 1823 and was also called guitar violoncello or guitarre d'amour. It had six strings and a body like a guitar's but was played with a bow.

The guitar was a very popular instrument in Schubert's day and when called upon the little Viennese master could play it. His "Cantata for his Father's Name Day," obviously a piece for a family occasion, composed in 1813, contained a part for guitar.

The Berkshire Festival begins with the Bach-Mozart series July 18, 20, 25, and 27, Serge Koussevitzky conducting. The first concert in the music shed by the full Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky will be Thursday evening, July 29.

This Clipping From
LAWRENCE, MASS.
EAGLE
JUL 7 - 1948

Weather Forces Concert Indoors

BOSTON, July 6 (AP)—For the first time in the 20-year history of the outdoor Esplanade concerts, Arthur Fiedler's Boston Symphony musicians were forced to shift their opening program to Symphony Hall tonight because of threatening weather.

The switch was made three hours before concert time—only a few minutes before an electrical storm drenched the city.

Officials arranged to carry out the same program—including a 20th anniversary talk by Governor Robert F. Bradford—under cover at Symphony Hall. They were fearful of a traffic tangle, however, if the thousands who normally attend the outdoor concerts try to jam into the 2600-capacity hall.

An official said doors would be opened at 7:30 p. m., and closed when the hall is filled.

Veteran concert-goers recalled that audiences occasionally have refused to take shelter before a summer storm and have sat drenched while the orchestra played in in its acoustic shell. In a few instances the musicians have been unable to start because of rain but never previously has the program been transferred.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
JUL 6 - 1948

Concert Tomorrow To Open Events At Tanglewood

The first musical event of the season at Tanglewood will be a concert tomorrow evening at 8.15 in the theatre. The first of four concerts of chamber music by Franz Schubert on the four Wednesday evenings of July, it will be open to Friends of the Berkshire Music Center. The series is the gift of Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, who will be in the audience.

The program will offer the Quartet for Flute, Guitar, Viola and Violoncello, the Sonata for Arpeggione and the entire song cycle, "Winterreise," sung by Ralph Herbert, baritone, with Erich Itor Kahn at the piano. The quartet will be Carlton Sprague Smith, flutist; Suzanne Bloch, guitar; Paul Doktor, violist; and Sidney Edwards, cellist.

Friday evening at 8.15 in the Shed the orchestra of Department 2 will give its first concert and Saturday evening at the same hour, in the theatre, the Juilliard String Quartet will play Bartok's third, second and fifth string quartets, the first of a series of two chamber music concerts on Saturday evenings.

All events will be open to the Friends Society.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
JUL 7 - 1948

Festival Music Store Opens in Lenox

LENOX — The Festival Music Store, summer shop of the Music House in Northampton, has opened for the Tanglewood music season again this year at its mid-town location next to the Hagyard drug store.

Miss Frances L. O'Shea, who has operated the store for the past several years, will again conduct the business. She runs the Smith College campus shop of the Music House in Northampton during the winter.

The summer shop will retail records and scores, including all Boston Symphony recordings. The shop will [illegible] a Festival souvenir record album and will publish a Festival program listing all available recordings of the music to be played at Tanglewood this summer.

Miss O'Shea is a graduate of the University of Massachusetts and the Northampton School for Girls. She will live at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Walter G. Schnee, Cliffwood Terrace.

William Clifford, son of Mr. and Mrs. W. Hewitt Clifford of this town, a student at Tufts University, will assist in running the shop. Hours will be 9.30 to 5.30, and 7 to 9 in the evening.

July 10

8—The Berkshire Evening Eagle

Tanglewood

Tonight at 8.15

For the first time anywhere the six string quartets of Bela Bartok, Hungarian composer, will be heard as a cycle at Tanglewood tonight and next Saturday. The Juilliard String Quartet will play the third, second and fifth this evening and the fourth, first and sixth on July 17.

Six pupils of Francis Judd Cook of the New England Conservatory of Music, with their teacher, will come from Boston to hear the concert, returning after the performance.

Bartok, who was born in Hungary in 1881 and died in New York in 1946, spent most of his life in Budapest, coming to America during the war with nearly all of the manuscripts of folk music that he had spent his life in collecting. They are now at Columbia University. He was a pioneer student of the songs and dances of the peasants of South Central Europe, especially the Slavic countries. He wrote music for the piano, opera and voice. As a pianist he won the Rubinstein prize.

The concert at 8.15 in the theatre will be open to Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

Schedule for Next Week

Tuesday at 4.30 in the Chamber Music Hall: Department 5 small choir.

Wednesday at 4.30 in the theatre: Department 5 orchestra; 8.15 in the theatre: Second Schubert concert by Alberneri Trio, gift of Saturday at 8.15 in the Shed: Final program of Bartok string quartets by Juilliard String Quartet.

All events are open to Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

Tomorrow Morning at 10.30

Students of the Berkshire Music Center will play their first concert of chamber music in the chamber music hall under the direction of Gregor Piatigorsky, who has returned to head the department after a season's leave of absence.

The program will be:

Trio for violin, violoncello and piano in B flat .... Beethoven
String Quartet No. 2 .... Prokofieff
Wind instruments and piano in E flat, Mozart

Coached by Mr. Piatigorsky, the trio will include Gottfried Wilfinger, violin; Erling Bengtsson, cello; Noel Lee, piano.

The Prokofieff, directed by Alfred Kripps, will be played by Zoi Zeitlin and Norman Carr, violins; Beatrice Brown, viola; Carl Fasshauer, cello. The Mozart, coached by Louis Speyer, will be played by Burton Hewitt, oboe; Harry Schmidt, clarinet; William Skelton, bassoon; Andre Speyer, horn; Lillian Koller, piano. The horn player is a son of the coach. Mr. Kripps and Mr. Speyer are members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the faculty of the school.

Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge.

Friday at 8.15 in the Shed: Department 2 orchestra.

This Clipping From
OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.
TIMES

JUL 8-1948

Conductors Make Chin Music in East

Victor Alessandro, left, conductor of the Oklahoma State Symphony orchestra, and Serge Koussevitzky, the Boston symphony's conductor, met this week at the opening of the Berkshire Music center, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., which Koussevitzky founded and directs. Alessandro is in the east auditioning musicians and lining up music for next season.

This Clipping From
WALTHAM, MASS.
NEWS TRIBUNE

JUL 8 - 1948

Berkshire Festival Will Open Sunday

The 1948 Berkshire Festival gets underway next Sunday afternoon, when Serge Koussevitsky, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducts the first four Bach-Mozart concerts in the Theatre-Concert Hall at Tanglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox.

The first concert, devoted to Bach, will offer the Brandenburg Concerto No. 3 in G major for Strings; the Cantata No. 65 "Sie werden aus Saba Alle kommen" with tenor, bass, and chorus conducted by Hugh Ross; the Concertos in D minor and C major for three pianos and strings with Lukas Foss, Ralph Berkowitz, and Bernard Zighera, pianists; and the Suite No. 2 in B minor for Flute and Strings with Georges Laurent, flutist. This program will be repeated as the last of the Bach-Mozart series on Tuesday evening, July 27.

The Mozart concert on Tuesday evening, July 20, will be repeated the following Sunday afternoon, July 25, and will include: Symphony in C major K. 338; Serenade "Nacht Musique" for Winds K. 386; the Piano Concerto in G major K. 453, with Lukas Foss as soloist, and the Symphony in E-flat major K. 543.

FULL SYMPHONY

With the Bach-Mozart series Dr. Koussevitzky continues an agreeable custom which arose from necessity when he began, during the war, to perform music of these masters requiring an orchestra of only chamber proportions. This season's first concert by the full Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Music Shed will be Thursday evening, July 29, at 8:15 P. M. The program will include the Bach Suite in D major No. 3, Hindemith's "Mathis der Maler," and the Beethoven Symphony in C minor, No. 5.

The programs of this season's festival will offer 36 works wide and inclusive in scope, and coming down right to our own day with the first performance in America on August 7 of Vaughan Williams' new Sixth Symphony. Other contemporary composers, as well as the classic and early romantic composers, are well represented. Those with more than one work programmed are Bach, Mozart, Beethoven, Brahms, Tchaikovsky, Stravinsky, and Prokofieff.

Eagle July 8

Tanglewood

Leonard Bernstein To Conduct Tomorrow

Three students at the Berkshire Music Center and Leonard Bernstein will conduct the first program by the advanced orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center in the Tanglewood Shed tomorrow night at 8.15. The concert will be open to Friends of the Center.

The program follows:

Overture to Manfred .... Schumann
Conductor, Howard Shanet.
Sinfonia Concertante in E flat for violin, viola and orchestra .... Mozart Violin: Gordon Staples.
Viola: Robert Karol.
Conductor: Seymour Lipkin.
Alborada del Gracioso .... Ravel
Conductor, Irwin Hoffman.
Suite from the Ballet, The Firebird, Stravinsky
Conductor, Leonard Bernstein.

Mr. Shanet is from New York and Mr. Hoffman is a former student at the Juilliard School of Music. Mr. Lipkin, who studied conducting under Serge Koussevitzky at Tanglewood in the summer of 1947, in the past year has been assistant to George Szell, conductor of the Cleveland Symphony Orchestra and winner of the Rachmaninoff prize. Mr. Staples and Mr. Karol are from Philadelphia.

A former student of Dr. Koussevitzky, Mr. Bernstein has for the past two seasons conducted the New York City Symphony Orchestra and has been guest conductor of major orchestras abroad. He is assisting Dr. Koussevitzky in teaching conducting at Tanglewood and in directing the orchestra of Department 2.

Juilliard String Quartet Plans Two Concerts

As a gift of the Juilliard School of Music the Juilliard String Quartet will play two concerts of the works of Bela Bartok in the theatre at Tanglewood Saturday evening and July 17. The events will be open to Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

All of the composer's works in string quartet form will be played, though not in chronical order. The third, second and fifth quartets will be presented in the first concerts and the fourth, first and sixth the following Saturday.

Organized on a non-commercial basis to be sponsored only by the school, the quartet is intended "to stimulate in America the development of chamber music in keeping with the highest ideals and the noblest traditions."

Two members of the quartet, on the ensemble faculty at the Juilliard School, have studied at the Berkshire Music Center. Robert Mann, violinist, a native of Portland, Ore., graduated from Juilliard in 1943, won the Naumburg Foundation award in 1941 and made his formal debut at Town Hall, New York, in 1941. Robert Koff, violinist, born in Los Angeles, graduated from Oberlin Conservatory of Music and later studied at Juilliard. He has appeared in many concerts.

Raphael Hillyer, violist, a native of Ithaca, N.Y., attended Curtis Institute of Music, Philadelphia, graduated from Dartmouth College and received an M.A. degree from Harvard in 1938. After studying at Tanglewood he was a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra until 1946, when he joined the quartet.

Arthur Winograd, cellist, a native New Yorker, studied at the New England Conservatory of Music, Boston, at the Berkshire Music Center and at Curtis Institute. He is cellist of the Galimir Quartet and the NBC Symphony Orchestra.

Sistare To Direct Corps of Volunteers

A corps of 250 volunteers is being organized to seat the audience for the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood. They will work under the supervision of Willard M. Sistare, who has directed ushers' aides and ticket takers since the first festival in 1934, and under Miss Martha Hick, in charge of the distribution of programs.

As assignments will be made at an early date, those who worked in previous years and who wish to continue are requested to make written application to Mr. Sistare or Miss Hick, if they have not already done so.

More than 100 applications have been received from young men in 24 colleges as far away as the University of California and nearly an equal number of women desiring to give their services as ushers or program girls in return for admission to the concerts. As in the past, priority will be given to residents of Berkshire County and those who have worked in previous Festivals. Many who have applied have served since the beginning.

Ushers will be expected to work through the 10 concerts. Program girls will be assigned to one series only. The force will function on a small scale for the four Bach-Mozart programs.

This Clipping From
BINGHAMTON, N. Y.
SUN

JUL 8 - 1948

Koussevitzky Conducts Concert In Hall at Tanglewood Sunday

The 1948 Berkshire Festival gets underway Sunday afternoon when Serge Koussevitzky, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducts the first of four Bach-Mozart concerts in the Theatre-Concert Hall at Tanglewood between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass.

The first concert of the festival is devoted to the works of Bach and will offer the Brandenburg Concerto No. 3 in G major for strings; the Cantata No. 65 "Sie werden aus Saba Alle kommen" with tenor, bass, and chorus conducted by Hugh Ross; the Concertos in D minor and C major for three pianos and strings with Lukas Foss, Ralph Berkowitz, and Bernard Zighera, pianists; and the Suite No. 2 in B minor for flute and strings with Georges Laurent, flutist. The program will be repeated as the last of the Bach-Mozart series on Tuesday evening, July 27.

The Mozart concert on Tuesday evening, July 20, will be repeated the following Sunday afternoon, July 25, and will include: Symphony in C major K. 338; Serenade "Nacht Musique" for Winds K. 388, the Piano Concerto in G major K. 453 with Lukas Foss as soloist, and the Symphony in E-flat major K. 543.

* * *

Visits Home

Miss Dorothy Krantz, music instructor in Endicott schools, has returned to her home in W. Warwick, RI, for a visit.

6—The Berkshire Evening Eagle, Thursday, July 8, 1948 ★ ★

Music

Chamber Music Series Opens At Tanglewood

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

Last night's program of the chamber music of Franz Schubert in the theatre-concert hall at Tanglewood was the first of the four programs being presented by the Berkshire Music Center through the generous co-operation of Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge. It also marked the first formal concert of the season in the famous Mecca of summer music.

A program of two very rarely heard works and of the "Winter Journey" was heard. Carleton Sprague Smith, flute; Suzanne Bloch, guitar; Paul Doktor, viola; and Sidney Edwards, cello, did a recently recovered quartet for that combination of instruments. Mr. Doktor and Erich Itor Kahn played the sonata in A minor which Schubert had originally written for piano and arpeggione, a six-stringed cello-sized instrument now extinct, but which had a very short existence during Schubert's lifetime. Mr. Kahn accompanied Ralph Herbert in the "Winterreise."

Mr. Herbert gave the famous cycle of 24 songs a memorable interpretation. Ranging from stentorian robustness to mesmeric charm, he gave the sort of performance which comes from long and skillful brewing. Such a reading is not a matter of memory alone, or of voice, or this detail or that, but a combination of experience and tradition, soaked in a thoroughly musical nature. The songs are essentially sad, but the sadness of love's obstructions. Mr. Herbert, abetted with complete sympathy by Mr. Kahn, expressed the character of the individual songs but gave the whole an artistic unity quite beyond compare. The tenderness and simplicity of his expression, or, on occasion, the bursting fervor, such as in the unforgetable "Wasserfluth" (the Torrent) were impressive. Stopping only at appropriate reposeful divisions, he sang the entire cycle without leaving the stage.

Mr. Herbert, by a nobly artistic conception, used his voice as an instrument in a chamber music work. He avoided purely vocal exhibitions per se. Often, by the remarkable control of his voice, he sustained soft tones and phrases to express a power which even outbursts of vocal volume would not have achieved. He eschewed all the opportunities for glamorous feats to keep it in the spirit of profound dignity and character proper to it, and yet, when he chose, he could release his full voice with a tense majesty. Mr. Kahn's piano was always an integral part of the performance and was equally as necessary to the voice as was the voice to it.

The Arpeggione sonata was diametrically opposite Schubert—light, tuneful, graceful and superficial. Mr. Doktor played with a beautiful, if small, tone and an easy sense of natural elegance. The two artists gave the performance style and conveyed a complete graps of its operatic-type cateegory. The main interest in the opening instrumental quartet was in its novelty.

At the conclusion of the song cycle and after many recalls, Mr. Herbert and Mr. Kahn stepped to the front of the stage to take the hand of the patron of the evening's concert, and Mrs. Coolidge was obliged to stand and acknowledge the energetic applause of the audience, of which the student body of the Berkshire Music Center was a substantial segment.

Public Events

Tonight

8.30—Opening of City Observatory. Springside Park.
8.45—Berkshire Playhouse production of "Coming Thro' the Rye."

icts Concert vood Sunda

erway Sunday afternoon
Boston Symphony Orc
ncerts in the Theatre-C
nd Lenox, Mass.
oted to the works of Ba
3 in G major for string
lle kommen" with tenor
Concertos in D minor
Lukas Foss, Ralph Ber
Suite No. 2 in B min flutist. The program rt series on Tuesday e

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM

JUL 9 - 1948

RECORDS for Pleasure

By JOHN BALL.

What with all of the news breaks in the record business, we have got a little behind in our reports on new waxings. Let's catch up on some of them:

* * *

London records sent a shipment of their new sets and singles. Almost without exception, the recording of London's stuff is superlative. The album's sets included an Albert W. Ketelby collection played by Ray Robertson and the New Promenade Orchestra. These familiar light pieces are very well done, so if "In a Chinese Temple Garden," etc., makes your blood run hotter, this set is the best that there is to be had. Set LA 22.

London also offers Luigini's "Ballet-Egyptian Suite" by Stanford Robinson and the BBC Theater Orchestra. Light music capably done. Set LA 18. Ada Alsop offers a collection of "Songs You Love," including "Pale Moon," "Brown Bird Singing" and similar material. Others have charmed us more but Miss Alsop has merits, one of which is a proper respect for the pitch. LA 21. A single London offering is the "Romance" from "The Magic Bow," a neat job by Louis Levy and his orchestra. The orchestral playing on this disk is exceptional.

* * *

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's performance of the 6th Brandenburg Concerto of Bach is not too happy. Mechanically it is noisy and musically the Boston has done much better. We will stay with Mr. Busch and his chamber players, Columbia version, on this one. Victor DM 1121.

* * *

Columbia has three contrasting items. The most important set is Charles Ives' "Concord Sonata," played by pianist John Kirkpatrick. Ives was neglected until a Pulitzer prize pitchforked him into the limelight. Vastly original, Ives takes thoughtful listening. But to our ears, at least, he speaks an intoxicating language. After the first side or so, the music grows on you until it is strangely hard to leave alone. Both artist and sonata are new to records, as far as we can determine. Give it a hearing. Columbia MM 749.

Columbia's second offering is Jan Sibelius' mighty romantic "Second Symphony." Eugene Ormandy and the Philadelphia Orchestra do the honors. Our personal preference here is for Dr. Koussevitzky's performance on Victor, but the difference is not great. Besides the new set is easy of access; the Victor is not.

This music has broad sweeping strokes of melody which make easy listening even in hot weather. If you don't know this work and lean toward Tchaikovsky and the other melodists, here is a find for you. Listen and you will probably buy. Columbia MM 759.

---

shire Eagle

Music

Student Orchestra Exciting In First of Center Concerts

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

The entire front half of the Shed at Tanglewood was filled last night by an audience of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center who had come to hear the first public concert by the orchestra of Department 2, an audience considerably larger than for last year's early concerts. There was a program of four numbers, each one conducted by a different leader: Howard Shanet did the Schumann overture to "Manfred"; Seymour Lipkin, the Mozart "Symphonie Concertante" in which Gordon Staples played the violin solo and Robert Karel the viola; Irwin Hoffman did the Ravel "Alborada del Gracioso" and, to conclude, Leonard Bernstein did a section of Stravinsky's "The Firebird."

Enthusiasm ran high both in the audience and on the stage. Indeed, concerts by such groups of young and eager, and, at the same time, exceptionably capable students always result in performances which have a vitality and a vibrancy which more mature groups can have outgrown. Thus the spark of alertness on the stage is conveyed to the cordial audience and the resultant responsiveness, now working in both directions, makes for a tumultuous reception, usually without discrimination.

The members of the orchestra, for the most part, are advanced students at the principal conservatories of the country, and include some professional musicians. Thus what they achieved last night after only four rehearsals is the sequel, in many cases the goal, of their previous training. The conductors, it will be recognized, include some "arrived" men of the young generation and a representation of the more advanced aspirants.

The performances are thrilling. Errors of judgment and execution occur, as they can and do to the most experienced, but the spirit carries both the players and their leaders sometimes to heights of ecstasy, especially in those sections where the indications call for "vivace," "maestoso," "con amore" or their equivalents. In these places the contagious enthusiasm and the driving rhythms overcome the first tell-tale evidence of the immature and push down the hesitant insecurity which the slower and more sustained passages more often reveal.

High Standards

The standards at these student concerts, as at those of the professional programs on the same stage, are on a superior plane. Many enjoy them and prefer their spontaneity to the more premeditated and planned readings at the concerts by the established orchestra. They find here an exhilaration and an understandable sympathy with youth that outweighs the pleasures of the more developed performances.

If the conductor is not yet master of himself nor his men, it may well occur that he is carried along as by an overpowering current, not necessarily over craggy rapids, but through passages where the craft may be hurled by the onrush of nature rather than by a controlling rudder, to land with welcome safety in the calmer areas where the Helmsman regains the power of guidance. With such a group the more capable conductor may find his indications for the most refined effects not fully realized.

Podium manner and behavior receive undue importance. Comparisons are inevitably made, and decisions are too often arrived at by the vigor of the conductor and the incisive volume produced by the orchestra than by any other criteria. But there is nothing quite so fascinating going on in music in all of America as is taking place in these student concerts for these

---

This Clipping From STROUDSBURG, PA.
RECORD

JUL 9 - 1948

Noted Orchestra Conductor To Be Guest Here

Barrett — Frederick Fennell, American conductor with the Serge Koussevietsky's Music Center in ~~Tanglewood, Mass.,~~ is spending the weekend as the guest of Irys Vorel, author and editor, at her summer home in Canadensis.

Mr. Fennell won the 1948 citation of the Henry Hadley Memorial award for his management of the Music Festivals in Houston, Texas, and is assistant conductor of the Eastman School of Music in Rochester, N. Y., as well as guest conductor in the Tanglewood Music Center during the season. He is known as one of America's outstanding Mozartists.

Irys Vorel is planning a Sunday brunch on the terrace of her home in honor of Mr. Fennell, for a few of her intimate friends.

This Clipping From
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

JUL 9 - 1948

"LITTLE RED HOUSE" REPLICA NEARLY READY

New Tanglewood Building to be Opened July 24

A replica of the "Little Red House," where Nathaniel Hawthorne wrote "The House of Seven Gables," will become a permanent adjunct to the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, in a ceremony on the afternoon of July 24, it was announced yesterday.

Manning Hawthorne, great-grandson of the novelist, and Mrs. Royden J. Kieth of Chicago, president of the National Federation of Music clubs, which is responsible for the project, will dedicate the building as a permanent literary shrine and building containing practice rooms for the Music Center's opera and chamber music departments.

The New England district of the federation will hold an all-dav meeting on July 23, will be honored that evening by a student-orchestra concert under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky and will hear other concerts the next day.

This Clipping From
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

JUL 8 - 1948

Berkshire Festival To Open on Sunday

Koussevitzky to Conduct First of Four Bach-Mozart Concerts at Tanglewood.

The 1948 Berkshire Festival gets underway next Sunday afternoon when Serge Koussevitzky, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducts the first of four Bach-Mozart concerts in the theater-Concert hall at Tanglewood between Stockbridge and Lenox.

The first concert of the festival is devoted to the works of Bach and will offer the Brandenburg Concerto No. 3 in G major for strings; the Cantata No. 65 "Sie werden aus Saba Alle kommen" with tenor, bass, and chorus conducted by Hugh Ross; the Concertos in D minor and C major for three pianos and strings with Lukas Foss, Ralph Berkowitz, and Bernard Zighera, pianists, and the Suite No. 2 in B minor for flute and strings with Georges Laurent, flutist. This program will be repeated as the last of the Bach-Mozart series on Tuesday evening, July 27.

The Mozart concert on, Tuesday evening, July 20, will be repeated the following Sunday afternoon, July 25, and will include: Symphony in C major K. 338; Serenade "Nacht Musique" for Winds K. 388, the Piano Concerto in G major K. 453 with Lukas Foss as soloist, and the Symphony in E-flat major K. 543.

With the Bach-Mozart series Dr. Koussevitzky continues a custom which arose from necessity when he began, during the war, to perform music of these masters requiring an orchestra of only chamber proportions. This season's first concert by the full Boston symphony orchestra in the music shed will be Thursday evening, July 29, at 8:15 o'clock. The program will include the Bach Suite in D major No. 3, Hindemith's "Mathis der Maler," and the Beethoven Symphony in C minor, No. 5.

The program of this season's festival will offer 36 works wide and inclusive in scope and coming down to the present day with the first performance in America on Aug. 7 of Vaughan Williams' new Sixth symphony. Other contemporary composers as well as the classic and early romantic composers are well represented. Those with more than one work programmed are Bach, Mozart, Beethoven, Brahms, Tchaikovsky, Stravinsky and Prokofieff.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

JUL 9 - 1948

HAWTHORNE'S HOUS TO BE MUSIC SHRINE

A reconstruction of the "Little Red House," where Nathaniel Hawthorne wrote "The House of Seven Gables," will become a permanent adjunct to the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, Mass., in a ceremony on the afternoon of July 24, it was announced yesterday.

Manning Hawthorne, great-grandson of the novelist, and Mrs. Royden J. Kieth of Chicago, president of the National Federation of Music Clubs, which is responsible for the project, will dedicate the building as a permanent literary shrine and building containing practice rooms for the Music Center's Opera and Chamber Music departments.

The New England District of the Federation will hold an all-day meeting on July 23, will be honored that evening by a student-orchestra concert under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky and will hear other concerts the next day.

The Federation will also hold its fourth annual week-end at Chautauqua, N. Y., next Thursday through Sunday. Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt will be guest speaker on Friday at a meeting of the Chautauqua Woman's Club. Concerts and talks will be featured during the week-end.

This Clipping From
HANOVER, PA.
SUN

JUL 10 1948

The 1948 Berkshire Festival gets underway tomorrow when Serge Koussevitzky, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducts ~~the first~~ of four Bach-Mozart concerts in the Theatre-Concert Hall at Tanglewood between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass.

The first concert of the Festival is devoted to the works of Bach. The Mozart concert on July 20, will be repeated the following Sunday afternoon, July 25, and will include: Symphony in C major K. 338; Serenade "Nacht Musique" for Winds K. 388, the Piano Concerto in G major with Lukas Foss as soloist, and the Symphony in E-flat major.

With the Bach-Mozart series Dr. Koussevitzky continues an agreeable ucstom which arose from necessity when he began, during the war, to perform music of these masters requiring an orchestra of only chamber proportions. This season's first concert by the full Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Music Shed will be Thursday evening, July 29. The program will include the Bach Suite in D. major No. 3, Hindemith's "Mathis der Maler," and the Beethoven Symphony in C minor, No. 5.

The programs of this season's Festival will offer thirty-six works wide and inclusive in scope and coming down right to our own day with the first performance in America on August 7 of Vaughan Williams' new Sixth Symphony. Other contemporary composers as well as the classic and early romantic composers are well represented. Those with more than one work programed are Bach, Mozart, Beethoven, Brahms, Tchaikovsky, Stravinsky, and Prokofieff.

ucts Concert wood Sunda

erway Sunday afternoon
Boston Symphony Orch
ncerts in the Theatre-C
nd Lenox, Mass.
oted to the works of Bac
3 in G major for string
lle kommen" with tenor
Concertos in D minor
Lukas Foss, Ralph Ber
Suite No. 2 in B min
flutist. The program rt series on Tuesday e

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
JUL 9 - 1948

RECORDS for Pleasure

By JOHN BALL.

What with all of the news breaks in the record business, we have got a little behind in our reports on new waxings. Let's catch up on some of them:

* * *

London records sent a shipment of their new sets and singles. Almost without exception, the recording of London's stuff is superlative. The album's sets included an Albert W. Ketelby collection played by Ray Robertson and the New Promenade Orchestra. These familiar light pieces are very well done, so if "In a Chinese Temple Garden," etc., makes your blood run hotter, this set is the best that there is to be had. Set LA 22.

London also offers Luigini's "Ballet-Egyptian Suite" by Stanford Robinson and the BBC Theater Orchestra. Light music capably done. Set LA 18. Ada Alsop offers a collection of "Songs You Love," including "Pale Moon," "Brown Bird Singing" and similar material. Others have charmed us more but Miss Alsop has merits, one of which is a proper respect for the pitch. LA 21. A single London offering is the "Romance" from "The Magic Bow," a neat job by Louis Levy and his orchestra. The orchestral playing on this disk is exceptional.

* * *

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's performance of the 6th Brandenburg Concerto of Bach is not too happy. Mechanically it is noisy and musically the Boston has done much better. We will stay with Mr. Busch and his chamber players, Columbia version, on this one. Victor DM 1121.

* * *

Columbia has three contrasting items. The most important set is Charles Ives' "Concord Sonata," played by pianist John Kirkpatrick. Ives was neglected until a Pulitzer prize pitchforked him into the limelight. Vastly original, Ives takes thoughtful listening. But to our ears, at least, he speaks an intoxicating language. After the first side or so, the music grows on you until it is strangely hard to leave alone. Both artist and sonata are new to records, as far as we can determine. Give it a hearing. Columbia MM 749.

Columbia's second offering is Jan Sibelius' mighty romantic "Second Symphony." Eugene Ormandy and the Philadelphia Orchestra do the honors. Our personal preference here is for Dr. Koussevitzky's performance on Victor, but the difference is not great. Besides the new set is easy of access; the Victor is not.

This music has broad sweeping strokes of melody which make easy listening even in hot weather. If you don't know this work and lean toward Tchaikovsky and the other melodists, here is a find for you. Listen and you will probably buy. Columbia MM 759.

---

shire Eagle

Music

Student Orchestra Exciting In First of Center Concerts

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

The entire front half of the Shed at Tanglewood was filled last night by an audience of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center who had come to hear the first public concert by the orchestra of Department 2, an audience considerably larger than for last year's early concerts. There was a program of four numbers, each one conducted by a different leader: Howard Shanet did the Schumann overture to "Manfred"; Seymour Lipkin, the Mozart "Symphonie Concertante" in which Gordon Staples played the violin solo and Robert Karel the viola; Irwin Hoffman did the Ravel "Alborada del Gracioso" and, to conclude, Leonard Bernstein did a section of Stravinsky's "The Firebird."

Enthusiasm ran high both in the audience and on the stage. Indeed, concerts by such groups of young and eager, and, at the same time, exceptionably capable students always result in performances which have a vitality and a vibrancy which more mature groups can have outgrown. Thus the spark of alertness on the stage is conveyed to the cordial audience and the resultant responsiveness, now working in both directions, makes for a tumultuous reception, usually without discrimination.

The members of the orchestra, for the most part, are advanced students at the principal conservatories of the country, and include some professional musicians. Thus what they achieved last night after only four rehearsals is the sequel, in many cases the goal, of their previous training. The conductors, it will be recognized, include some "arrived" men of the young generation and a representation of the more advanced aspirants.

The performances are thrilling. Errors of judgment and execution occur, as they can and do to the most experienced, but the spirit carries both the players and their leaders sometimes to heights of ecstasy, especially in those sections where the indications call for "vivace," "maestoso," "con amore" or their equivalents. In these places the contagious enthusiasm and the driving rhythms overcome the first tell-tale evidence of the immature and push down the hesitant insecurity which the slower and more sustained passages more often reveal.

High Standards

The standards at these student concerts, as at those of the professional programs on the same stage, are on a superior plane. Many enjoy them and prefer their spontaneity to the more premeditated and planned readings at the concerts by the established orchestra. They find here an exhilaration and an understandable sympathy with youth that outweighs the pleasures of the more developed performances.

If the conductor is not yet master of himself nor his men, it may well occur that he is carried along as by an overpowering current, not necessarily over craggy rapids, but through passages where the craft may be hurled by the onrush of nature rather than by a controlling rudder, to land with welcome safety in the calmer areas where the Helmsman regains the power of guidance. With such a group the more capable conductor may find his indications for the most refined effects not fully realized.

Podium manner and behavior receive undue importance. Comparisons are inevitably made, and decisions are too often arrived at by the vigor of the conductor and the incisive volume produced by the orchestra than by any other criteria. But there is nothing quite so fascinating going on in music in all of America as is taking place in these student concerts for these next five weeks or so at Tanglewood.

This Clipping From
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
JUL 8 - 1948

Berkshire Festival To Open on Sunday

Koussevitzky to Conduct First of Four Bach-Mozart Concerts at Tanglewood.

The 1948 Berkshire Festival gets underway next Sunday afternoon when Serge Koussevitzky, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducts the first of four Bach-Mozart concerts in the theater-Concert hall at Tanglewood between Stockbridge and Lenox.

The first concert of the festival is devoted to the works of Bach and will offer the Brandenburg Concerto No. 3 in G major for strings; the Cantata No. 65 "Sie werden aus Saba Alle kommen" with tenor, bass, and chorus conducted by Hugh Ross; the Concertos in D minor and C major for three pianos and strings with Lukas Foss, Ralph Berkowitz, and Bernard Zighera, pianists, and the Suite No. 2 in B minor for flute and strings with Georges Laurent, flutist. This program will be repeated as the last of the Bach-Mozart series on Tuesday evening, July 27.

The Mozart concert on, Tuesday evening, July 20, will be repeated the following Sunday afternoon. July 25, and will include: Symphony in C major K. 338; Serenade "Nacht Musique" for Winds K. 388, the Piano Concerto in G major K. 453 with Lukas Foss as soloist, and the Symphony in E-flat major K. 543.

With the Bach-Mozart series Dr. Koussevitzky continues a custom which arose from necessity when he began, during the war, to perform music of these masters requiring an orchestra of only chamber proportions. This season's first concert by the full Boston symphony orchestra in the music shed will be Thursday evening, July 29, at 8:15 o'clock. The program will include the Bach Suite in D major No. 3, Hindemith's "Mathis der Maler," and the Beethoven Symphony in C minor, No. 5.

The program of this season's festival will offer 36 works wide and inclusive in scope and coming down to the present day with the first performance in America on Aug. 7 of Vaughan Williams' new Sixth symphony. Other contemporary composers as well as the classic and early romantic composers are well represented. Those with more than one work programmed are Bach, Mozart, Beethoven, Brahms, Tchaikovsky, Stravinsky and Prokofieff.

This Clipping From STROUDSBURG, PA.
RECORD
JUL 9 - 1948

Noted Orchestra Conductor To Be Guest Here

Barrett — Frederick Fennell, American conductor with the Serge Koussevietsky's Music Center in Tanglewood, Mass., is spending the weekend as the guest of Irys Vorel, author and editor, at her summer home in Canadensis.

Mr. Fennell won the 1948 citation of the Henry Hadley Memorial award for his management of the Music Festivals in Houston, Texas, and is assistant conductor of the Eastman School of Music in Rochester, N. Y., as well as guest conductor in the Tanglewood Music Center during the season. He is known as one of America's outstanding Mozartists.

Irys Vorel is planning a Sunday brunch on the terrace of her home in honor of Mr. Fennell, for a few of her intimate friends.

This Clipping From
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
JUL 9 - 1948

"LITTLE RED HOUSE" REPLICA NEARLY READY

New Tanglewood Building to be Opened July 24

A replica of the "Little Red House," where Nathaniel Hawthorne wrote "The House of Seven Gables," will become a permanent adjunct to the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, in a ceremony on the afternoon of July 24, it was announced yesterday.

Manning Hawthorne, great-grandson of the novelist, and Mrs. Royden J. Kieth of Chicago, president of the National Federation of Music clubs, which is responsible for the project, will dedicate the building as a permanent literary shrine and building containing practice rooms for the Music Center's opera and chamber music departments.

The New England district of the federation will hold an all-dav meeting on July 23, will be honored that evening by a student-orchestra concert under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky and will hear other concerts the next day.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
JUL 9 - 1948

HAWTHORNE'S HOUS TO BE MUSIC SHRINE

A reconstruction of the "Little Red House," where Nathaniel Hawthorne wrote "The House of Seven Gables," will become a permanent adjunct to the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, Mass., in a ceremony on the afternoon of July 24, it was announced yesterday.

Manning Hawthorne, great-grandson of the novelist, and Mrs. Royden J. Kieth of Chicago, president of the National Federation of Music Clubs, which is responsible for the project, will dedicate the building as a permanent literary shrine and building containing practice rooms for the Music Center's Opera and Chamber Music departments.

The New England District of the Federation will hold an all-day meeting on July 23, will be honored that evening by a student-orchestra concert under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky and will hear other concerts the next day.

The Federation will also hold its fourth annual week-end at Chautauqua, N. Y., next Thursday through Sunday. Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt will be guest speaker on Friday at a meeting of the Chautauqua Woman's Club. Concerts and talks will be featured during the week-end.

This Clipping From
HANOVER, PA.
SUN
JUL 10 1948

The 1948 Berkshire Festival gets underway tomorrow when Serge Koussevitzky, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducts the first of four Bach-Mozart concerts in the Theatre-Concert Hall at Tanglewood between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass.

The first concert of the Festival is devoted to the works of Bach. The Mozart concert on July 20, will be repeated the following Sunday afternoon, July 25, and will include: Symphony in C major K. 338; Serenade "Nacht Musique" for Winds K. 388, the Piano Concerto in G major with Lukas Foss as soloist, and the Symphony in E-flat major.

With the Bach-Mozart series Dr. Koussevitzky continues an agreeable ucstom which arose from necessity when he began, during the war, to perform music of these masters requiring an orchestra of only chamber proportions. This season's first concert by the full Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Music Shed will be Thursday evening, July 29. The program will include the Bach Suite in D. major No. 3, Hindemith's "Mathis der Maler," and the Beethoven Symphony in C minor, No. 5.

The programs of this season's Festival will offer thirty-six works wide and inclusive in scope and coming down right to our own day with the first performance in America on August 7 of Vaughan Williams' new Sixth Symphony. Other contemporary composers as well as the classic and early romantic composers are well represented. Those with more than one work programed are Bach, Mozart, Beethoven, Brahms, Tchaikovsky, Stravinsky, and Prokofieff.

This Clipping From
OTTAWA, CANADA
CITIZEN
JUL 10 1948

Music And Drama

Edited By Lauretta Thistle

Many Canadians will be making the pilgrimage to Lenox, Massachusetts, this month or next to attend the Berkshire Festival, the favorite project of Serge Koussevitsky and his Boston Symphony Orchestra. Special programs of Bach and Mozart music (July 18, 20, 25, 27) will precede the three regular series of concerts, which begin on July 29. The first American performance of the new Vaughan Williams symphony will be a feature of the regular programs. Among the many chamber concerts which will be interspersed among the major events are four concerts of Schubert's music, including the Winterreise song cycle and the quartet for flute, guitar, viola and cello.

Three 'Firsts' Feature Music Festival in U.S.

Three first performances will be given during the six-week Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, Massachusetts, this month and next. "First" presentations are in line with the tradition of the festival which each year is sponsored by the Boston Symphony Orchestra which also maintains the Berkshire Music Centre for advanced study in instrumental and vocal music.

The Vaughn Williams' "Symphony No. 6" will have its first performance in America August 7 when Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducts the Boston Symphony in one of 10 orchestral concerts of the summer.

Operatic production will be featured in "The Turk in Italy," a Rossini work virtually lost for a century. Its libretto has been revised to be suitable for first presentation of the opera in English. Goldovsky is responsible for the revised text. The opera had become literally distributed in parts and was found after much search. The manuscript copy was discovered in a collection of scores bought by the founder of the Boston Symphony from the Palermo Opera House and stored in the attic of Symphony Hall, in Boston. The orchestral score was found in the public library and piano scores in the Widener Library of the Harvard Musical Association. "Turk in Italy" was written three years before "Barber of Seville" and was Rossini's 13th opera. Only known performance of it on this continent was in 1826 by the Garcias.

Sonata For 'Cello

The third "first" will be presentation of a new Hindemith sonata for 'cello, to be played by Piatigorsky, 'cellist, and Berkowitz, pianist. It is scheduled for August 14 at the concert given by members of the school faculty.

The Berkshire Music Centre was established in 1940 by Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony to provide an opportunity for music study in connection with the already popular festival concerts. It is designed to give technically good students provision for study on an advanced level through experience in group performance.

Rowland Pack, of this city, is one of several Canadians attending the music centre this summer. He is concentrating on 'cello study with Piatigorsky.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN
JUL 10 1948

PRO and CON

Should We Export American Music?

TO THE EDITOR—Sir: The veteran conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the indefatigable Serge Koussevitzky, would have us export American culture as a part of our foreign aid program.

When one considers the large number of first-rate symphonic organizations our country now possesses, it seems particularly regrettable that their visits to foreign lands are such rare events. Some can still recall the acclaim that greeted the extensive spring tour of the New York Philharmonic-Symphony, under Arturo Toscanini's baton, almost a score of years ago. The Latin-American visit of the All-American Youth Orchestra, led by Leopold Stokowski, was also an eye-opening experience.

Our Congress has never been particularly noted for its sympathy with artistic endeavors. Any likelihood that monetary allotments will be forthcoming can, therefore, be dismissed. Although the fairly recent creation of American libraries in European cities is now regarded as a valid part of our effort to spread our story abroad, considerable education will be needed before our legislators condescend to contemplate musical or dramatic projects in a comparably generous light. Unless we are content to permit recitalists to be our sole artistic representatives on foreign shores, the individual patron, as heretofore, will have to gather those of like mind and foot the bill.

THOMAS G. MORGANSEN.
Jackson Heights.

TO THE EDITOR—Sir: Somebody prominent in the world of music has suggested that we send some of our symphony orchestras and other musical organizations abroad, supposedly for their psychological effect. A fine idea, if it would work. But Europe has so thoroughly impressed upon the United States over a century and a half the notion of European superiority in the arts that the effects there or here of exporting American musical proficiency would be negligible.

As a matter of fact, the flow has always been in the other direction. European musicians, whether directors or performers or what not, have always captured the American audience with ease, whereas native-born musicians have usually had to have European training, and sometimes have had to adopt European names, to get a hearing here at home.

It would be even more difficult for American-born or American-trained musicians to make themselves heard in Europe now, for artistic accomplishment is one of the commodities that Europe can profitably develop for export. One of the first European revivals should be of artistic and cultural organizations.

Money has allowed us to win the services of some fine European musicians whose talents would be recognized anywhere. But are we to send Toscanini, say, abroad as an example of American musical progress? No; the idea is not very mature or well thought out.

SECOND FIDDLE.
New York.

This Clipping From
FAIRMOUNT, W. VA.
WEST VIRGINIAN
JUL 11 1948

The Berkshire Music Center has begun its sixth season at anglewood, Mass., with a record enrollment of 445 students. The district of Columbia, Alaska and 13 foreign countries.

The Berkshire Festival will begin on July 18 at the center with the first of a group of the Bach-Mozart concerts arranged by Dr. Serge Koussevitsky.

Music E. Jul

Student Orchestra Exc In First of Center Con

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

The entire front half of the Shed at Tanglewood was filled last night by an audience of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center who had come to hear the first public concert by the orchestra of Department 2, an audience considerably larger than for last year's early concerts. There was a program of four numbers, each one conducted by a different leader: Howard Shanet did the Schumann overture to "Manfred"; Seymour Lipkin, the Mozart "Symphonie Concertante" in which Gordon Staples played the violin solo and Robert Karel the viola; Irwin Hoffman did the Ravel "Alborada del Gracioso" and, to conclude, Leonard Bernstein did a section of Stravinsky's "The Firebird."

Enthusiasm ran high both in the audience and on the stage. Indeed, concerts by such groups of young and eager, and, at the same time, exceptionably capable students always result in performances which have a vitality and a vibrancy which more mature groups can have outgrown. Thus the spark of alertness on the stage is conveyed to the cordial audience and the resultant responsiveness, now working in both directions, makes for a tumultuous reception, usually without discrimination.

The members of the orchestra, for the most part, are advanced students at the principal conservatories of the country, and include some professional musicians. Thus what they achieved last night after only four rehearsals is the sequel, in many cases the goal, of their previous training. The conductors, it will be recognized, include some "arrived" men of the young generation and a representation of the more advanced aspirants.

The performances are thrilling. Errors of judgment and execution occur, as they can and do to the most experienced, but the spirit carries both the players and their leaders sometimes to heights of ecstasy, especially in those sections where the indications call for "vivace," "maestoso," "con amore" or their equivalents. In these places the contagious enthusiasm and the driving rhythms overcome the first tell-tale evidence of the immature and push down the hesitant insecurity which the slower and more sustained passages more often reveal.

High Standards

The standards at these student concerts, as at those of the professional programs on the same stage, are on a superior plane. Many enjoy them and prefer their spontaneity to the more premeditated and planned readings at the concerts by the established orchestra. They find here an exhilaration and an understandable sympathy with youth that outweighs the pleasures of the more developed performances.

If the conductor is not yet master of himself nor his men, it may well occur that he is carried along as by an overpowering current, not necessarily over craggy rapids, but through passages where the craft may be hurled by the onrush of nature rather than by a controlling rudder, to land with welcome safety in the calmer areas where the Helmsman regains the power of guidance. With such a group the more capable conductor may find his indications for the most refined effects not fully realized.

Podium manner and behavior receive undue importance. Comparisons are inevitably made, and decisions are too often arrived at by the vigor of the conductor and the incisive volume produced by the orchestra than by any other criteria. But there is nothing quite so fascinating going on in music in all of America as is taking place in these student concerts for these next five weeks or so at Tanglewood.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
JUL 11 1948

Tanglewood's Schedule Offers Chamber Music

The Albeneri Trio will play in the second concert of the Schubert series presented by Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge next Wednesday night at 8:15 in the Theater-Concert Hall at Tanglewood, Lexon, Mass. The program includes the trios in B flat and E flat and the violin sonata in A major. The Juilliard String Quartet will give the second concert of its Bartok series next Saturday night at 8:15, playing the fourth, first and sixth quartets. Admisson is by invitation to Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

Other events announced by the Center for this week, open to the Friends, are:

Today and next Sunday, 10:30 a. m., Department II Chamber Music; Tuesday, 4:30, Department V Small Choir; Wednesday, 4:30, Department V Orchestra; Friday, 8:15, Department II Orchestra.

Serge Koussevitzky will conduct members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a Berkshire Festival Bach program next Sunday afternoon at 3:30 and a Mozart program on Tuesday night, July 20, at 8:15. These will be repeated, respectively, on Tuesday night, July 27, and Sunday afternoon, July 25.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN
JUL 11 1948

Tanglewood Has Concert Opener

The 1948 Berkshire Festival gets under way this afternoon when Serge Koussevitsky, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducts the first of four Bach-Mozart concerts in the Theatre-Concert Hall at Tanglewood, Mass.

The programs of this season's Festival will offer thirty-six works, coming to our own day with the first performance in America on Aug. 7 of Vaughan Williams' new Sixth Symphony.

Other contemporary composers as well as the classic and early romantic composers are well represented. Those with more than one work programmed are Bach, Mozart, Beethoven, Brahms, Tchaikovsky, Stravinsky, and Prokofieff.

This Clipping From
DAVENPORT, IOWA
DEMOCRAT & LEADER
JUL 11 1948

. . . . Fabien Sevitsky will conduct two performances of "Carmen" as the concluding events of the Indianapolis symphony summer season. . . .

This Clipping From TULSA, OKLA.
WORLD
JUL 11 1948

Soloists Named By Koussevitzky

Eight singers, all of them American-born and trained, will appear as soloists at the Berkshire festival this Summer, it is announced by Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Boston Symphony orchestra. They are Ellabelle Davis, Ellen Faull and Frances Yeend, sopranos; Eunice Alberts and Carol Brice, contraltos; Nan Merriman, mezzo-soprano; David Lloyd, tenor, and James Pease, bass-baritone.

Other soloists will be Isaac Stern, violinist; Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist, and Seymour Lipkin, winner of this year's Rachmaninoff piano award.

An interesting feature of the festival will be two series of chamber music concerts, one devoted to Schubert and the other to the contemporary Bela Bartok. The six Bartok quartets will be played by the Juillard String Quartet on two Saturday evenings, July 10 and 17. The Schubert concerts, to be given on the four Wednesday evenings of July, are a contribution of the Elizabeth Sprague Collidge Foundation.

This Clipping From TULSA, OKLA.
WORLD
JUL 11 1948

Forgotten Rossini Opera to Be Given

NEW YORK (U.P.)—A Rossini work, forgotten for more than 100 years, will be this Summer's operatic production at the Berkshire Festival in Massachusetts. The opera will be given in English under the title of "The Turk in Italy." The revised text is by Boris Goldovsky, head of the opera department of the music center.

The score was re-assembled from a manuscript copy found in Palermo, Italy, and from parts in the Boston public library and the Widener Library at Harvard.

[163]

This Clipping From

DAVENPORT, IOWA DEMOCRAT & LEADER

JUL 11 1948

EIGHT singers, all of the American born and trained, will appear at the Berkshire musical festival of Boston Symphony orchestra at Tanglewood, Mass., this summer, according to Sergei Koussevitsky, music director. Altho young artists make up the entire list, all but one of them has sung previously with the Boston symphony. The single newcomer to the Berkshire festival is Nan Merriman, mezzo soprano, who will be soloist on Sunday afternoon August 1st, in the Mahler Symphony No. 2, "Resurrection" with Leonard Bernstein conducting. This is of interest in Davenport for Miss Merriman will be one of the soloists with the Tri-City symphony in the coming season and being selected by Mr. Koussevitsky is a tribute to her artistic ability. Ellabelle Davis, soprano, who sang in the Mahler symphony in Boston last February will also appear at Tanglewood. The large chorus, which the work calls for, will be that of the Berkshire music center.

This Clipping From PORTLAND, ORE.
JOURNAL

JUL 11 1948

Berkshire Music Festival Starts Today in East

The 1948 Berkshire festival starts today at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., and is of particular interest to musicians and students of the entire country. As the opening eventSerge Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony in the first of four Bach-Mozart concerts in the theatre-concert hall.

* * *

A NUMBER of Portland and Oregon musicians have attended the famous festival in recent years and a young Oregon soprano, Frances Yeend, sang there last season in an operatic production.

This season's programs will offer 36 works inclusive in scope and coming down to our own day with the first American performance August 7 of Vaughan Williams' new Sixth symphony.

This Clipping From PHILADELPHIA, PA.
BULLETIN

JUL 11 1948

Recognition for Three at the Berkshire Music Center

WORD comes from Tanglewood, Mass., home of the Berkshire Music Center, that three women from suburban Philadelphia have been appointed to the national committee of 61 sponsors of the Society of Friends of the Center. They are Mrs. Clarence A. Warden, of "Faraway Farm," Haverford, hostess at the annual garden opera presented by students from the Academy of Vocal Arts, Miss Gertrude Sumner Ely and Mrs. Walter C. Janney, both of Bryn Mawr. All are active in Philadelphia's music circles.

Eight hundred invited guests and friends of Berkshire joined the students, faculty and staff at tea in the gardens, after the sixth opening of the Center. At the opening, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, founder and director, spoke of the artist who must guard against dangers of "his own inner lack of moral fortitude." He described his ideal as "the artist-man" who would "not submit to circumstances or to passing whims of society, but who would conquer circumstances and guide society, not with self-satisfaction but with self-confidence born of a full consciousness and acceptance of his mission and task."

Dr. Lewis Perry, chairman of the Friends of the Center, who represented the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Aaron Copland, assistant director of the school, were also speakers at the opening day.

This Clipping From ROANOKE, VA.
TIMES

JUL 11 1948

EIGHT SINGERS, all of them American-born and trained, will appear as soloists at the Berkshire festival this summer, it is announced by Serge Koussevitsky, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. They are Ellabelle Davis, Ellen Faull and Francis Yeend, sopranos; Eunice Alberts and Carol Brice, contraltos; Nan Merriman, mezzo-soprano; David Lloyd, tenor, and James Pease, bass baritone.

Other soloists will be Isaac Stern, violinist; Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist, and Seymour Lipkin, winner of this year's Rachmaninoff piano award.

An interesting feature of the festival will be two series of chamber music concerts, one devoted to Schubert and the other to the contemporary Bela Bartok. The six Bartok quartets will be played by the Juilliard String Quartet on two Saturday evenings, July 10 and 17. The Schubert concerts, to be given on the four Wednesday evenings of July, are a contribution of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation.

---

ing in preparation for full-time Christian occupations.

The group of 31 singers, under the direction of Rev. H. E. K. Whitney, has been honored by three Presidents of the United States. The young men have sung at two world's fairs, national conventions, and in some of the largest churches in the United States and Canada.

Dick will return to Worcester on Aug. 15 and will resume his studies as a sophomore at St. Peter's High School. His soprano voice is well-known here. He has been heard many times at civic and club functions and has made several appearances on WTAG's Happiness Unlimited program during the past four years.

This Clipping From
DAVENPORT, IOWA
DEMOCRAT & LEADER

JUL 11 1948

OTHER SOLOISTS

. . . who will appear at the Berkshire festival include Frances Yeend, Ellen Faull, sopranos, Eunice Alberts and Carol Brice, contraltos, David Lloyd, tenor and James Pease, bass baritone. Miss Brice, Mr. Lloyd and Mr. Pease will sing in Stravinsky's "Pedipus" with full orchestra and chorus and Wesley Addy, narrator on Thursday evening August 5th.

Springfield Repub.

Three Major Works Presented In First of Schubert Series

By VICTOR PRAHL

With three concerts at Tanglewood during the past week, the opening dance program at Jacob's Pillow, and the concert at the Cummington School of the Arts this afternoon, the summer concert season is again upon us.

Tanglewood has never looked more beautiful than it did in the late afternoon sunlight last Wednesday, with the lawns, gardens and hedges lush from the rain, and freshly cut. Clearing up the entrance is a spacious new modern shelter and waiting room made entirely of glass with the exception of the floor and roof, with an adjoining building housing the new music shop. So the stage is set afresh for another season.

First of Series

The opening concert on Wednesday night was the first in a series of four, devoted to the works of Franz Schubert, presented to the school under the patronage of Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge. The program consisted of three major works, and the performers were Carleton Sprague Smith, flute; Suzanne Bloch, guitar; Paul Doktor, viola; Sidney Edwards, cello; Ralph Herbert, baritone, and Erich Itor Kahn, piano.

Schubert's quartet for flute, guitar, viola and cella is a musical curiosity with a strang histoy. It was discovered, yellowed with age, in an attic 30 years ago, and was not published until 1926, nearly 100 years after the composer's death. In five movements, it is full of sweetness and charm. There is a quaint "Zingara," and the master's hand was evident in the final "Temo con Variazoni." It was a finished performance on the part of all four players, and if the balance was a little uneven it was due to the instruments rather than the performers.

The melodic content, for the most part, fell to the flute and Mr. Smith delivered it with a fine musicality and a robust tone. This was probably the debut of the lowly guitar in this dignified setting but under Miss Bloch's skillful fingers it became worthy and legitimate, the solo bits tinkling through audibly clear. But at times it was overpowered by the full healthy tone of the flute in spite of the guitar being hitched to a loud speaker. The work had its moments of enchantment and proved to be a worthwhile novelty.

More rewarding musically, however, was the sonata in A minor for piano and arpeggione played by Mr. Kahn and Mr. Doktor. A program note stated that the arpeggione was a six-stringed instrument about the size of a cello, but with a guitar-like body and played with a bow. The work seemed to lend itself perfectly to the viola, for in spite of a few arpeggiated passages it was essentially lyrical in character. Written when the composer was 27 its three movements are full of Schubertian charm, a free flowing melodic continuity, and gentle rhythmical contrast all admirably adapted to the sonata form. It was a sensitive, musicianly performance and both players were recalled enthusiastically several times.

24 Schubert Songs

Singing the 24 songs comprising Schubert's "Winterreise" song cycle is a large order for any singer, particularly an American. Ralph Herbert, baritone, brought a thorough preparation and sincerity of purpose to this task. Without the aid of a wordbook, he sang the songs in understandable German, authoritatively and convincingly. His soft covered tones were expressive in the more intimate phrases and the voice was adequately stentorian in the dramatic passages. But unfortunately there was little between these two extremes of production. There was lack of an even, steady, normal singing tone essential to songs of a sustained lyric character such as "Der Lindenbaum," "Wasserfluth" and "Auf dem Flusse." Mr. Kahn's accompaniments too, neat and efficient as they were, seemed hard and external at times, lacking the requisite warmth.

The three remaining concerts devoted to the works of Franz Schubert on successive Wednesday will be given by the Albeneri Trio, the Boston String Quartet and the Boston Conservatory String Quartet.

KEITH MEMORIAL

Jul 11

MUSICIANS

Boston Globe

Bach, Mozart Programs Begin Berkshire Festival Next Week at Tanglewood

The 1948 Berkshire Festival gets underway next Sunday afternoon, July 18, when Serge Koussevitzky, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducts the first of four Bach-Mozart concerts in the Theatre-Concert Hall at Tanglewood between Stockbridge and Lenox.

The first concert is devoted to Bach and will offer the Brandenburg Concerto No. 3 in G major; the Cantata No. 65, "Sie werden aus Saba Alle kommen" with tenor, bass, and chorus prepared by Hugh Ross; the Concertos in D minor and C major for three pianos and strings with Lukas Foss, Ralph Berkowitz, and Bernard Zighera, pianists; and the Suite No. 2 in B minor for Flute and Strings with Georges Laurent as flutist. This program will be repeated Tuesday evening, July 27.

The Mozart concert, Tuesday evening, July 20, will be repeated the following Sunday afternoon, July 25, and will include Symphony in C major (K. 338); Serenade, "Nacht Musique" for Winds (K. 388); the Piano Concerto in G major (K. 453), with Lukas Foss as soloist, and the Symphony in E-flat major (K. 543.)

This season's first concert by the full Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Music Shed will be Thursday evening, July 29, at 8:15. The program will include the Bach Suite in D major No. 3, Hindemith's "Mathis der Maler," and the Beethoven Symphony in C minor, No. 5.

The programs of this season's Festival will offer 36 works, coming down to our own day with the first performance in America, on Aug. 7, of Vaughan Williams' new Sixth Symphony. Other contemporary composers as well as the classic and early romantic composers are well represented.

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CAL.
TIMES
JUL 11 1948

Rudolf Firkusny will give the premiere of a new piano concerto by Howard Hanson with the Boston Symphony Orchestra next season.

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
JUL 11 1948

Music

TANGLEWOOD SOLOISTS NAMED

By RAYMOND MORIN

Eight singers, all of them American born and trained, will appear as soloists at the Berkshire Festival this Summer, Serge Koussevitzky, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has announced.

Although young artists make up the entire list, all but one of them has sung before with the Boston Symphony and all but two have sung in Worcester.

Newcomer to the orchestra is Nan Merriman, mezzo-soprano, who will sing Sunday afternoon, Aug. 1, in the Mahler "Symphony No. 2 ("Resurrection"), Leonard Bernstein. Miss Merriman was heard here with the Boston "Pops" Orchestra under Arthur Fiedler in a Norton Co. concert.

Addy to Narrate

Those who still have to sing to Worcester audiences are Ellen Faull, soprano, and Carol Brice, contralto. Others, listing some of their Worcester engagements, are: Ellabelle Davis, soprano (Woman's Club concert); Frances Yeend, soprano ("The Messiah"); Eunice Alberts, contralto ("The Marriage of Figaro"—Fine Arts Course); David Lloyd, tenor (Norton Co. concert); and James Pease, bass-baritone (Worcester Festival and Norton Co. concert).

Wesley Addy, who has appeared in the Shakespearean productions of Maurice Evans and with Katharine Cornell in "Antigone," will be the narrator in Stravinsky's "Oedipus" with the full orchestra, soloists and chorus on Thursday evening, Aug. 5, Dr. Koussevitzky conducting.

The singers are Miss Brice, Mr. Lloyd, and Mr. Pease. The trio and Mr. Addy made a profound impression when Dr. Koussevitzky led Stravinsky's version of the Greek tragedy at two performances in Symphony Hall, last March.

Instrumental Soloists

Instrumental soloists for the Festival are Isaac Stern, violinist; Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cellist (both have appeared in our Civic Music series); and Seymour Lipkin, pianist.

On Saturday evening, July 31, Mr. Stern will repeat, again under Koussevitzky's baton, the Prokofieff "Concerto No. 1," which he played at his first appearance with the orchestra last March. Piatigorsky, who has been soloist with the Boston Symphony on 25 previous occasions, will be heard in Richard Strauss' tone poem "Don Quixote," on Aug. 7, Koussevitzky conducting.

Seymour Lipkin's performance of the "Piano Concerto No. 1" under Koussevitzky at the all-Tchaikovsky concert Tuesday evening, Aug. 10, will be both his Boston Symphony and Tanglewood debuts. The 20-year-old Detroit pianist is this year's winner of the Rachmaninoff Fund Award.

Mrs. Chandler Bullock, 41 Sever street, has been re-ap-of 61 sponsors for the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood.

DICK BUTLER

Announcing a membership of 1500, Dr. Lewis Perry, chairman, invited others to join the Friends by contributing to the support of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Summer school. Enrollment entitles a member to attend not only concerts by the students, but the chamber music recitals that will be the gifts of Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge and the Juilliard School of Music.

A Worcester boy soprano is making good in a two-months tour of the Pacific Coast. Dick Butler, 14-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. J. George Butler, 591 Cambridge street, is appearing as soloist with the Whitney Boy Singers of California.

An article in the Los Angeles press describes the choir as having been in continuous existence for 32 years with a changing membership that has included altogether more than 20,000 boys. The two soloists are Dick Butler and Jack Crawford, trumpet soloist with the All-Southern California High School Orchestra.

The proceeds from this tour will be contributed to a Scholarship Fund to be used for worthy students who are study-

---

This Clipping From MILWAUKEE, WIS.
JOURNAL
JUL [illegible] 1948

The "Little Red House," Nathaniel Hawthorne's home at Lenox, Mass., which was destroyed by fire in 1890, has been reconstructed authentically by the National Federation of Music Clubs. It will be a practice studio for the Berkshire music center of the Boston Symphony orchestra, which holds the annual Tanglewood music festival there. The dedication will be July 24.

This Clipping From
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD-AMERICAN
JUL 11 1948

Berkshire Festival Opens July 18; First of Bach-Mozart Programs

THE 1948 BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL will get under way Sunday afternoon, July 18, when Serge Koussevitsky, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducts the first of four Bach-Mozart concerts in the Theater-Concert Hall in Tanglewood between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass. The first concert of the festival is devoted to the works of Bach and will offer the Brandenburg Concerto No. 3 in G major for Strings; the Cantata No. 65 "Sie werden aus Saba Alle knommen" with tenor, bass and chorus conducted by Hugh Ross; the Concertos in D minor and C major for three pianos and strings with Lukas Foss, Ralph Berkowitz and Bernard Zighera, pianists, and the Suite No. 2 in B minor for flute and strings with Georges Laurent, flutist. This program will be repeated as the last of the Bach-Mozart series on Tuesday night, July 27.

[164]

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
JUL 11 1948

THE WORLD OF MUSIC: REVIVA

Metropolitan Also Considering Boccanegra' for Leonard Warre

By ROSS PARMENTER

NEGOTIATIONS between the Metropolitan Opera and the unions of its employes are not yet completed, but plans are being made for next season nevertheless. One is a revival of Verdi's "Falstaff," which was last heard during the 1943-44 season in an English version conducted by Sir Thomas Beecham. The scenery is being refurbished at the opera house during the summer and it is expected that Leonard Warren will have the title role. In recent years Lawrence Tibbett has been the Metropolitan's Falstaff, for the opera was revived for him in 1938 and he sang most of the performances under Sir Thomas, though Mr. Warren did assume the role once during that season.

Another famous Tibbett part, the title role of Verdi's "Simon Boccanegra," is being considered for Mr. Warren. He has not been heard in it here, for when the opera has been given at the Metropolitan he has had the subsidiary baritone role of Paolo Albiani. This opera, composed in 1857, was not so much revived for Mr. Tibbett as dug up. It had never been performed in this country before he first appeared in it in 1932. It proved far from dead, though, and received fourteen performances in five seasons. It was last given in 1940.

SEASHORE: "Let it never be said that all good music goes to the mountains for the summer." With this flourish, Nathan Hoffman, president of the Ventnor City League, announced a series of five chamber music concerts had been arranged in August to be given 600 feet out in the ocean on the end of the Ventnor Pier on the New Jersey coast. It is Ventnor's first venture of the sort and business and professional men are sponsoring it. It gives the seashore two up in the current batch of releases about summer music, for the Musical Arts Society of La Jolla, Calif., has also sent in the programs of its seventh season. It includes a concert each by the Roth and American Art Quartets and three concerts by a chamber orchestra conducted by Nikolai Sokoloff. The sole fresh news of mountain music of the week is a series of four Asheville Summer Pop Concerts, opening tomorrow night, under the direction of James Christian Pfohl in the "mountain metropolis" of Asheville, N. C.

INDUCEMENT: As part of the deal to drum up trade for 5:30 Sunday afternoon concerts at Carnegie Hall, recitalists are being offered broadcasts of the first half hour of their programs. The plan has been worked out by Kenneth Klein, who is interested in getting customers, and the radio station, WQXR, which is interested in getting the recitals as a program feature.

The broadcast angle offers artists a chance to be heard by more than those seated in the hall. The title, Carnegie Hall Twilight Concerts, has been chosen, and there will be an effort to confine them to recitalists who have shown their quality, but have not yet climbed into the big-time.

VISIT: Ellabelle Davis, American soprano, visited Joseph Marx while she was singing in Vienna. She reports she found the 66-year-old composer still active. His apartment, she said, was crowded with musical memorabilia of a bygone day, but he has continued writing Lieder. She spent several hours with him going over songs that have not yet been heard in this country.

She also reports that the Bishop of Odense in Denmark gave permission for a concert in the cathedral there when it was found the concert hall was too small for those who wanted to hear her. He insisted on a completely religious program, though, with no applause. She sang arias by Bach and Handel, Negro spirituals and Lukas Foss's "Song of Songs," all to organ accompaniment. The audience abided by the order not to clap, but it gave the singer an ovation afterward in the square.

FIGURES: Last year's annual report of the Philadelphia Orchestra made two claims: that it had beaten all other orchestras in the sale of gramophone records with a total of 3,000,000; and that its 1945-46 season had set a record for paying customers with a total of 416,885. Then in September the Boston Symphony countered with the claim that 800,000 had attended its concerts the previous year. Now the Philadelphia Orchestra comes forward again. It hasn't passed the Boston attendance mark, but it has beaten both its own previous marks. The report claims 4,000,000 records sold and an attendance of 562,435 at 174 concerts at home and on

But this still doesn't meet expenses. The report lists a deficit of $89,000.

HOME: The Utah Symphony Orchestra has been offered a "campus home" by the University of Utah in Salt Lake City. The arrangement is expected to benefit both the college and the musicians, for the university will provide rehearsal facilities, and orchestra members, in turn, will be available to give instruction to students. It is hoped, too, that an artists-in-residence plan can be worked out. Dr. A. Ray Olpin, president of the university, said he was moved to make the offer by the success of other orchestra-university arrangements, such as the one at the University of Minnesota. Maurice Abravanel, the conductor, favors the plan and the symphony's board of directors is expected to approve it next month.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
12 1948

6—The Berkshire Evening Eagle

Music July 12

Wild Acclaim Given Quartet At Tanglewood

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

The Juilliard String Quartet played three quartets of Bela Bartok Saturday evening in the theatre-concert hall at Tanglewood through the generosity of the Juilliard School. They will play the remaining three next Saturday evening.

The four young men who comprise the quartet are Robert Mann, first violin, who, incidentally, was a student on South Mountain in the summer of 1939; Robert Koff, second violin; Raphael Hillyer, viola; and Arthur Winograd, cello. They play with a unanimity of spirit and understanding, quite apart from their precision, and a matching of tone quality which is truly exceptional.

The whole evening was remarkable. First of all, the program arrangement was of masterly astuteness. Of Bartok's six quartets, they chose the third, second and fifth, in that order. Anyone missing any part of the evening could not have enjoyed it so much as those who were present from beginning to end. Coming in late or leaving early would have deprived one of an essential part of the picture. Poor Bartok suffers, strange to say, when a single choice of his takes its place in an ordinary program chosen from all the literature. He must there seem like a musical heathen whereas, if one hears nothing but his music all evening, it takes shape, and, in such uniquely capable hands, becomes deeply absorbing.

It was extremely wise to have played the third to open the concert. This was the weirdest of all the evening. It is dated 1927. Bartok was 46 then, and had begun to write with complete disregard for anything but his own whims and inclinations. His second quartet, which followed, and which is dated a decade earlier, still shows links with the advanced musical thought of that day. There are chords, particularly, and progressions which are derivative and even orthodox, and when he broke rules, we at least recognized which

---

Tanglewood

Tomorrow at 4.30

Concert by small choir in chamber music hall.

350 at Concert

The first chamber music concert of the season by students of the Berkshire Music Center was heard yesterday morning in the chamber music hall and on the lawn surrounding it by an audience of 350.

Copland Leads Discussion

Students of composition played their own works last evening. A discussion, led by Aaron Copland, composer and assistant director of the center, followed the recital.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
STAR
JUL 11 1948

Berkshire Festival to Open With Bach-Mozart Concerts

The 1948 Berkshire Festival gets under way next Sunday afternoon, July 18, when Serge Koussevitzky, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducts the first of four Bach-Mozart concerts in the Theater-Concert Hall at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

The first concert of the Festival is devoted to the music of Bach and consists of the Brandenburg Concerto No. 3 in G major; the Cantata No. 65, Sie werden aus Saba Alle kommen, with tenor, bass and chorus conducted by Hugh Ross; the Concertos in D minor and C major for Three Pianos and Strings, with Lukas Foss, Ralph Berkowitz and Bernard Zighera, pianists; and the Suite No. 2 in B minor for Flute and Strings, with Georges Laurent, flutist. This program will be repeated as the last of the Bach-Mozart series on Tuesday evening, July 27.

The all-Mozart concert on Tuesday evening, July 20, to be repeated the following Sunday afternoon, July 25, will include the Symphony in C major, K. 338; the Serenade for Winds (Nacht Musique), K. 388; the Piano Concerto in G major, K. 453, with Lukas Foss as soloist, and the Symphony in E-flat major, K. 543.

With the Bach-Mozart series Dr. Koussevitzky continues an agreeable custom which arose from necessity when he began, during the war, to perform music of these masters requiring an orchestra of only chamber proportions.

This Summer's first concert by the full Boston Symphony in the Music Shed at Tanglewood will take place on Thursday evening, July 29, at 8:15. The program will include the Bach Suite in D major No. 3, Hindemith's Mathis der Maler and Beethoven's Fifth Symphony. The series will continue through Aug. 15, with the first performance in America of Vaughan Williams' new Sixth Symphony scheduled for Saturday evening, Aug. 7. Other contemporary composers as well as the classic and early romantic composers are well represented on the other Festival programs.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
JUL 12 1948

COTTAGE WILL BE DEDICATED AT TANGLEWOOD

Elaborate Two-Day Program To Mark Restoration of Hawthorne House

With an elaborate two-day program, including a concert by Serge Koussevitzky and the student orchestra at the Berkshire Music Center, the National Federation of Music Clubs will dedicate the Hawthorne Cottage, which it has restored at Tanglewood between Stockbridge and Lenox, Friday and Saturday, July 23 and 24.

Program Arranged

Manning Hawthorne, oldest grandson of the novelist to bear the name, and Henry Wadsworth Longfellow Dana, great-grandson of the poet, will speak at the dedication ceremonies on Saturday at 2 p. m. Mrs. Guy Patterson Gannett of Portland, Me., former president of the National Federation of Music Clubs, and chairman of the committee for restoration of the house where Nathaniel Hawthorne lived in 1850 and 1851, will formally present the cottage to the Berkshire Music Center. Dr. Koussevitzky, director of the school, will accept. Mrs. Royden J. Keith of Chicago, national president of the Federation, will speak.

Rose Hawthorne was born in the little red house as were two of the author's "brain children," "The Wonder Book" and "The House of the Seven Gables." Herman Melville was a frequent visitor as was the fabulous Fanny Kemble. The cottage now houses three studios including Dr. Koussevitzky's class in advanced orchestral conducting.

The first day's program will begin with a meeting of the New England district of the National Federation of Music Clubs, Mrs. Russell Taylor Hatch of Melrose, presiding. Robert Shaw, who heads the chorus faculty at Berkshire Music Center and will be guest conductor of the Festival concert on Aug. 14, will speak at the luncheon at Curtis Hotel, Lenox. David Laurent, baritone, first winner of the Anne M. Gannett Fund Scholarship, will sing. At a youth forum in the afternoon Gay Tapley of Portland, Me., American delegate to the International Congress of Jeunesses Musicales in Luxembourg in May, will speak.

Miss Addison To Sing

The student concert, which Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct Friday evening in the Music Shed, will have as soloist Adele Addison, soprano, of Springfield, a student at the Center for the past two summers and New England district winner of the 1947 Paul Lavalle scholarship.

Before the dedication proper there will be a picnic luncheon on the grounds and immediately following the ceremony a concert of chamber music in the Chamber Music Hall. Soloists will be LuCretia Ferre, soprano; Martha Dutler, contralto; and Robert Allen, 'cellist, winners of Federation scholarships to Tanglewood. Saturday evening at the Lenox Library Paula Lenchner, dramatic soprano, Metropolitan Opera Association, and winner of the Federation's 1945 young artist contest, will appear in recital. Joan Brainerd, lyric soprano, the 1947 winner, will be soloist Sunday morning at 10.30 at a recital in the Chamber Music Hall.

Most of the visitors for the dedication will stay for the Mozart concert, which Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct Sunday afternoon in the Theater-Concert Hall. The first concert by the full Boston Symphony in the Music Shed will be Thursday evening, July 29.

This Clipping From
CLAREMONT, N. H.
EAGLE

Gigantic Benefit Aug. 3 To Help Needy European Musicians

Cornelia Skinner, Maurice Evans in Tanglewood Event

To help needy musicians in Europe, the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center will stage a mammoth four-hour benefit, including a concert conducted by Serge Koussevitzky and appearances by Maurice Evans and Cornelia Otis Skinner. Tanglewood will be "on parade" for the first time since 1941 on Tuesday evening, Aug. 3.

Beginning at 6, there will be simultaneous performances in their various buildings by all departments of the school, including orchestra, chorus, opera and chamber music. A "manifestation," Dr. Koussevitzky's title for the assembly in which internationally known figures in the arts will take part, is scheduled for 8 in the Music Shed. Miss Skinner and Mr. Evans will appear in Shakespearean excerpts and two speakers, to be announced, will make the plea "inaugurating nation-wide assistance from the New World to the creative artists of the Old World."

The program of the grand concert at 9.15, in which Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the full Boston Symphony Orchestra, will include Beethoven's "Leonore" Overture, Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf," with Wesley Addy as narrator, and a group to show the history of the waltz — "Voices of Spring," by Johann Strauss; "Valse Triste," by Sibelius; and ending with "La Valse", of Ravel.

To carry out the "Tanglewood on Parade" idea there will be a procession of the 462 students of the Berkshire Music Center, with banners for each department. The hour from 7 to 8 will be for supper, with patrons invited to bring picnic baskets and to use the buffet and new refreshment booths on the Tanglewood grounds.

Reserved seat holders will be invited to the added attraction of a performance of Menotti's "The Telephone" and scenes from other operas at 4 in the garden.

A local committee includes Mrs. Koussevitzky; Albert Spalding, Great Barrington; Mrs. Zay Jeffries, Mrs. George W. Edman and Alan J. Blau, all of Pittsfield; Mrs. C. D. Jackson, Miss Kathleen Channing and Frederic J. DeVeau, Lenox; Mrs. James S. Deely, Stockbridge; Mrs. Bruce Crane, Dalton; Mrs. Charles E. Fox, West Stockbridge; and Mrs. Maurice Firuski, Salisbury, Conn.

Tickets for reserved seats and general admission will be on sale within a few days at Tanglewood and Wood Brothers.

Albert Spalding, Frederic J. DeVeau, Alan J. Blau, Mrs. Maurice Firuski, Mrs. James S. Deely, Miss Kathleen Channing, Mrs. Bruce Crane, Mrs. George W. Edman, Mrs. Charles E. Fox and Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky, who comprise the Berkshire committee on the Tanglewood benefit Aug. 3, talk things over at the group's first meeting.

Eagle Jul 13

FESTIVAL SOLOIST: James Pease, bass-baritone, will be appearing at the Berkshire Festival for the fourth consecutive season at the Bach concert by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Theatre-Concert Hall at Tanglewood Sunday afternoon. He will be heard in the cantata "Sie Werden aus Saba Alle kommen." The program will be repeated Tuesday evening, July 27. Mr. Pease will also be soloist in Stravinsky's "Oedipus Rex" Thursday evening, Aug. 5, and the Brahms "Requiem" Saturday evening, Aug. 14.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

JUL 12 1948

Concert to Benefit European Musicians

For the help of needy musicians n Europe, the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center will stage a mammoth our-hour benefit, including a concert by the orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky and appearances by Maurice Evans and Cornelia Otis Skinner on Tuesday evening, Aug. 3, at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

Under the general designation of "Tanglewood on Parade" there will be simultaneous performances in their various buildings by all departments of the Berkshire Music -Center—orchestral, choral, operatic and chamber music.

* * *

THE MANIFESTATION, Dr. Koussevitzky's significant title for the assembly in which internationally known figures in the arts will take part, is scheduled for 8 p. m. in the Music Shed. Miss Skinner and Mr. Evans will each appear in Shakespearean excerpts.

Two speakers yet to be announced will make the plea "inaugurating nationwide assistance from the New World to the creative artists of the Old World."

The concert in which Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct will include Beethoven's "Leonore" Overture No. 3, Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf," with Wesley Addy as narrator, and a group to show the history of the waltz—"Voices of Spring" by Johann Strauss, "Valse Trieste" by Sibelius, and ending with "La Valse" of Ravel.

* * *

FESTIVITIES WILL begin at 6 p. m. To carry out the "Tanglewood on Parade" idea there will literally be a procession of the 462 students of the Berkshire Music Center, each department carrying identifying banners. After the demonstrations by the school, the hour from 7 to 8 p. m. will be given over to supper. Patrons are invited to bring picnic baskets and to use the buffet and new refreshment booths on the grounds at Tanglewood.

Tickets admitting to all events beginning at 6 p. m. are priced at $2.50. Patrons subscribing for reserved seats at $4 and box seats at $5 will be invited to a special added attraction, a performance at 4 p. m. in the Tanglewood gardens of "The Telephone" by Gian-Carlo Menotti and scenes from other operas.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
JUL 12 1948

Benefit at Tanglewood To Aid Needy Musicians

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center have announced a four-hour benefit program to be held at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., on Tuesday, Aug. 3, for the aid of needy musicians in Europe.

The principal event, at 8 p. m. in the Tanglewood Music Shed, will include Shakespearian excerpts presented by Cornelia Otis Skinner and Maurice Evans, and a concert by the Boston Symphony under Serge Koussevitzky's direction. The program for the concert includes Beethoven's third "Leonore" overture, Serge Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" with Wesley Addy as narrator; Johann Strauss's waltz, "Voices of Spring"; Sibelius's "Valse Triste" and Ravel's "La Valse." Two speakers on the purpose of the benefit will be announced later.

The first part of the benefit, "Tanglewood on Parade," will begin at 6 p. m. with a procession of the Berkshire Music Center's 462 students; demonstrations of the activities of the center's various departments will follow. The hour between 7 and 8 o'clock will be devoted to supper; patrons may bring picnic baskets or use the buffet and refreshment booths on the grounds. There will also be a performance of Gian-Carlo Menotti's "The Telephone" and scenes from other operas at 4 o'clock in the gardens, open to the purchasers of reserved or box seats for this benefit.

Gigantic Benefit Aug. 3 To Help Needy European Musicians

Cornelia Skinner, Maurice Evans in Tanglewood Event

To help needy musicians in Europe, the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center will stage a mammoth four-hour benefit, including a concert conducted by Serge Koussevitzky and appearances by Maurice Evans and Cornelia Otis Skinner. Tanglewood will be "on parade" for the first time since 1941 on Tuesday evening, Aug. 3.

Beginning at 6, there will be simultaneous performances in their various buildings by all departments of the school, including orchestra, chorus, opera and chamber music. A "manifestation," Dr. Koussevitzky's title for the assembly in which internationally known figures in the arts will take part, is scheduled for 8 in the Music Shed. Miss Skinner and Mr. Evans will appear in Shakespearean excerpts and two speakers, to be announced, will make the plea "inaugurating nation-wide assistance from the New World to the creative artists of the Old World."

The program of the grand concert at 9.15, in which Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the full Boston Symphony Orchestra, will include Beethoven's "Leonore" Overture, Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf," with Wesley Addy as narrator, and a group to show the history of the waltz — "Voices of Spring," by Johann Strauss; "Valse Triste," by Sibelius; and ending with "La Valse", of Ravel.

To carry out the "Tanglewood on Parade" idea there will be a procession of the 462 students of the Berkshire Music Center, with banners for each department. The hour from 7 to 8 will be for supper, with patrons invited to bring picnic baskets and to use the buffet and new refreshment booths on the Tanglewood grounds.

Reserved seat holders will be invited to the added attraction of a performance of Menotti's "The Telephone" and scenes from other operas at 4 in the garden.

A local committee includes Mrs. Koussevitzky; Albert Spalding, Great Barrington; Mrs. Zay Jeffries, Mrs. George W. Edman and Alan J. Blau, all of Pittsfield; Mrs. C. D. Jackson, Miss Kathleen Channing and Frederic J. DeVeau, Lenox; Mrs. James S. Deely, Stockbridge; Mrs. Bruce Crane, Dalton; Mrs. Charles E. Fox, West Stockbridge; and Mrs. Maurice Firuski, Salisbury, Conn.

Tickets for reserved seats and general admission will be on sale within a few days at Tanglewood and Wood Brothers.

Albert Spalding, Frederic J. DeVeau, Alan J. Blau, Mrs. Maurice Firuski, Mrs. James S. Deely, Miss Kathleen Channing, Mrs. Bruce Crane, Mrs. George W. Edman, Mrs. Charles E. Fox and Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky, who comprise the Berkshire committee on the Tanglewood benefit Aug. 3, talk things over at the group's first meeting.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

JUL 13 1948

Public Events

Tonight

8.45—Berkshire Playhouse production of Booth Tarkington's comedy, "The Intimate Stranger."

Tomorrow

11 AM-5 PM—Free television of Democratic National Convention. Berkshire Museum.

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS

JUL 13 1948

Summer Means Music To 2 Mooney Children

KATHRYN LENORE MOONEY

Kathryn Lenore Mooney, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John M. Mooney, 281 Manning Blvd., is one of 15 soprano students at the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, to be chosen for the "little chorus," which is under direction of Robert Shaw.

Miss Mooney was graduated from Albany High School in 1942, the Crane School of Music, Potsdam, in 1945, and is now supervisor of music at Red Creek, Wayne County.

At Tanglewood, which Miss Mooney describes as "the music center of the nation," she is one of a class of 460 from 42 states and 15 countries. She also is studying violin with the orchestra.

"As far as the outside world goes, it might as well not exist," she says, "for we read, talk, breathe and sleep music."

She describes the opening day convocation as one of the great thrills of her life, when she met Milhaud, Copland, Bernstein, Berger, Fennell, Ross, Shaw, Piatigorsky and other famous faculty members and heard Dr. Serge Koussevitzky give an inspiring talk.

Miss Mooney is not the only member of her family engaged in intensive summer musical studies. Her brother, Robert Daniel Mooney, a junior at Albany High School, where he has created something of a stir as a drummer with the orchestra, is at the State Music Center at Otter Lake, majoring in piano but not forgetting his tympani. He has appeared in piano recital, but in another week or so he will be called up for that legendary recital that really happens, a tympani solo.

Lenore and Dan are daughter and son of the chief of the Gannett News Service and legislative correspondent of The Knickerbocker News.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

JUL 13 1948

Tanglewood Lists Schubert Program By Albeneri Trio

The Albeneri Trio will give a program of chamber music by Franz Schubert in the Theater-Concert Hall at Tanglewood Wednesday evening at 8:15.

The recital is the second in the Schubert cycle of chamber music given by Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge on the four Wednesday evenings of July.

The program will include the Trios in B-flat major and E-flat major, Op. 99 and 100, and the Sonata in A major for violin and piano, Op. 162. The artists of the Albeneri Trio are Erich Itor Kahn, pianist; Giorgio Ciompi, violinist, and Benar Heifetz, 'cellist.

The Berkshire Festival proper begins next Sunday afternoon with the first of the Bach-Mozart series conducted by Serge Koussevitzky in the Theater-Concert Hall. The first concert in the Music Shed by the full Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky will be on Thursday evening, July 29.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

JUL 12 1948

'Tanglewood On Parade' To Be Mammoth Benefit

Maurice Evans, Cornelia Otis Skinner to Appear On Widely Varied Program August 3 to Help Needy Musicians in Europe

For the help of needy musicians in Europe, the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center will stage a mamoth four-hour benefit, including a concert by the orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky and appearances by Maurice Evans and Cornelia Otis Skinner on Tuesday evening, August 3, at Tanglewood on Parade" there will be simultaneous performances in their various buildings by all departments of the Berkshire Music Center—orchestral, choral, operatic and chamber music.

The manifestation, Dr. Koussevitzky's significant title for the assembly in which internationally known figures in the arts will take part, is scheduled for 8 p.m. in the Music Shed. Miss Skinner and Mr. Evans will each appear in Shakespearean excerpts. The actress has just completed two seasons, including a nation-wide tour, in "Lady Windermere's Fan". Mr. Evans is producer and star of "Man and Superman", which ran all last season in New York, the longest run yet achieved by a Shaw play, and soon will embark on a transcontinental tour with the comedy which will continue throughout this season. Two speakers yet to be announced will make the plea "inaugurating nation-wide assistance from the New World to the creative artists of the Old World".

Musical Program

The grand concert in which Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the full Boston Symphony Orchestra will be in the gala spirit of the occasion and will have an especially attractive program. It will include Beethoven's "Leonore" Overture No. 3, Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf", with Wesley Addy as narrator, and a group to show the history of the watlz—"Voices of Spring" by Johann Strauss, "Valse Triste" by Sibelius, and ending with "La Valse" of Ravel.

Festivities will begin at 6 p.m. To carry out the "Tanglewood on Parade" idea there will literally be a procession of the 462 students of the Berkshire Music Center, each department carrying identifying banners. After the demonstrations by the school, the hour from 7 to 8 p.m. will be given over to supper. Patrons are invited to bring picnic baskets and to use the buffet and new refreshment booths on the grounds at Tanglewood.

MAURICE EVANS

Tickets admitting to all events beginning at 6 p.m. are priced at $2.50. Patrons subscribing for reserved seats at $4 and box seats at $5 will be invited to a special added attraction, a performance at 4 p.m. in the Tanglewood gardens of "The Telephone" by Gian-Carlo Menotti and scenes from other operas.

This Clipping From
HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT TELEGRAM

JUL 13 1948

Tanglewood Triumphant

If your enjoyment of music extends beyond enthusiasm for the most famous and familiar compositions, don't fail to look at the marvelous outlay of musical offerings at Tanglewood this summer. The Berkshire Festival opened last week, although the big Boston Symphony concerts in the music shed don't start until July 29. The Festival includes much more than the major concerts, and connoisseurs of music think some of the other recitals and concerts are much more interesting.

For lovers of chamber music there are a flock of concerts, some by students at the Festival school and others by well-known groups sponsored by Mrs. Coolidge. The programs offer music that is not readily available at any other time in this area, either through radio or concert stage.

There are choir concerts and productions of operatic scenes for those who enjoy good singing. These are given by students. In this case, we remind you, the word student does not mean the kind of musician you were when you took piano lessons. Berkshire Music Center students have to have better than average talent to get in, and most of them are either already professionals or on the brink of musical careers.

You can see and hear a student symphony orchestra in the big music shed, conducted by students and their noted teachers, on Friday nights. This is considered one of the biggest musical treats at Tanglewood. Another rare opportunity is that of attending a rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Saturday mornings.

Great music indeed fills the music shed when the Boston Symphony under Koussevitzky or Bernstein or some noted guest conductor plays for the crowds at the big concerts. To most of us these performances are too thrilling to be rivaled by anything else, and the more limited our musical knowledge, the more our devotion to them, because the atmosphere provides as much pleasure as the music. But if we are musical epicures, the side dishes at Tanglewood will hold particular appeal. You can hear the Boston Symphony somewhere else, and you will hear Beethoven and Brahms again and again. The other concerts offer artists and music that you may not have another chance to hear.

This Clipping From
WALTHAM, MASS.
NEWS TRIBUNE

JUL 13 1948

Chinese Pianist to Perform With Boston Symphony

Miss Tung Kwong-Kwong, 21-year-old Chinese pianist from Shanghai, who is living with her family at 50 Hyde street Newton Highlands, will be guest soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the second time on Wednesday evening in a concert on the Esplanade in Boston.

Miss Tung will play the Grieg Concerto. She played the same selection with the orchestra at the Pops on June 23. Immediately following that concert, Arthur Fiedler, the conductor, engaged her for Wednesday's performance.

The young pianist came to America in March, 1947. She is now studying piano with Artur Schnabel in the winter months, going to New York every two weeks for her lessons. She started styuding at the age of four, under the direction of her mother, Mrs. J. C. Tung, who is herself an accomplished pianist, a graduate of the New England Conservatory of Music, and head of a children's conservatory in Shanghai. Miss Tung then studied with Mario Paci, an Italian artist, and a pupil of Sgambati, who had studied under Listz.

Mrs. Tung and young Kwong-Kwong, with another sister, Ming-Ming, violinist, and two brothers, Shao-Yuen, 'cellist, and Shao-Ling, violinist, make up a musical family. The two sisters and two brothers have appeared in many concerts together around Boston and vicinity. The father, J. C. Tung, principal of the Shanghai Teachers' College plans to join his family in this country shortly.

Kwong-Kwong appeared several times with the Shanghai Philharmonic Orchestra and performed before the China National Assembly just prior to leaving the country for America.

This Clipping From
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR

JUL 13 1948

Benefit Show Planned Aug. 3 At Tanglewood

Boston Symphony To Join Berkshire Students for Program

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass., July 13—To aid needy musicians in Europe, the Boston Symphony orchestra and the Berkshire music center will stage a four-hour benefit Tuesday night, Aug. 3, at Tanglewood.

The program will include a concert by the orchestra under Serge Koussevitsky and appearances by Maurice Evans and Cornelia Otis Skinner.

Under the general designation, "Tanglewood on Parade," there will be simultaneous performances in their various buildings by the orchestra, choral, operatic and chamber music departments of the Berkshire music center. At 8 p. m. in the music shed Miss Skinner and Evans will each appear in Shakespearean excerpts. The grand concert will include a group to show the history of the waltz, Prokofiev's "Peter and the Wolf" and Beethoven's "Lenore" Overture No. 3. Festivities will start at 6 with a procession by the 462 students of the music center.

The hour from 7 to 8 will be given over to supper, and patrons have been invited to bring picnic baskets.

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS

JUL 14 1948

Tanglewood Parade Set For Aug. 3

"Tanglewood on Parade," a big four-hour benefit program through which music patrons and musicians of the New World will extend aid to the needy creative artists of the Old World, will be featured at the Berkshire Music Center Tuesday, Aug. 3.

At 4 p. m. in Tanglewood Gardens there will be a special performance of Menotti's "The Telephone" and scenes from other operas. At 6 p. m. the general "parade" program will begin and something of a four-ring musical circus it will be, for there will be simultaneous performances in various buildings by all departments, orchestral, choral, operatic and chamber music. There will be a real parade too, for 462 students of the center will be in the procession with identifying banners.

All who attend are invited by the center to bring along box or basket suppers and the hour from 7 to 8 p. m. will be given over to this purpose. The buffet and refreshment booths will be made available to the basketeers.

At 8 p. m. the "manifestation," as Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, center director, calls it, will begin in the Music Shed. Maurice Evans and Cornelia Otis Skinner will appear in Shakespearean excerpts. Internationally known figures in the world of the arts will be present, and two speakers will inaugurate the "assistance plan."

Then Dr. Koussevitsky will conduct the full Boston Symphony Orchestra in Beethoven's "Leonore" Overture No. 3, Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf," with Wesley Addy as narrator, and a group of numbers tracing the history of the waltz.

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
JUL 13 1948

Summer Means Music To 2 Mooney Children

KATHRYN LENORE MOONEY

Kathryn Lenore Mooney, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John M. Mooney, 281 Manning Blvd., is one of 15 soprano students at the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, to be chosen for the "little chorus," which is under direction of Robert Shaw.

Miss Mooney was graduated from Albany High School in 1942, the Crane School of Music, Potsdam, in 1945, and is now supervisor of music at Red Creek, Wayne County.

At Tanglewood, which Miss Mooney describes as "the music center of the nation," she is one of a class of 460 from 42 states and 15 countries. She also is studying violin with the orchestra.

"As far as the outside world goes, it might as well not exist," she says, "for we read, talk, breathe and sleep music."

She describes the opening day convocation as one of the great thrills of her life, when she met Milhaud, Copland, Bernstein, Berger, Fennell, Ross, Shaw, Piatigorsky and other famous faculty members and heard Dr. Serge Koussevitzky give an inspiring talk.

Miss Mooney is not the only member of her family engaged in intensive summer musical studies. Her brother, Robert Daniel Mooney, a junior at Albany High School, where he has created something of a stir as a drummer with the orchestra, is at the State Music Center at Otter Lake, majoring in piano but not forgetting his tympani. He has appeared in piano recital, but in another week or so he will be called up for that legendary recital that really happens, a tympani solo.

Lenore and Dan are daughter and son of the chief of the Gannett News Service and legislative correspondent of The Knickerbocker News.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
JUL 13 1948

Tanglewood Lists Schubert Program By Albeneri Trio

The Albeneri Trio will give a program of chamber music by Franz Schubert in the Theater-Concert Hall at Tanglewood Wednesday evening at 8:15.

The recital is the second in the Schubert cycle of chamber music given by Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge on the four Wednesday evenings of July.

The program will include the Trios in B-flat major and E-flat major, Op. 99 and 100, and the Sonata in A major for violin and piano, Op. 162. The artists of the Albeneri Trio are Erich Itor Kahn, pianist; Giorgio Ciompi, violinist, and Benar Heifetz, 'cellist.

The Berkshire Festival proper begins next Sunday afternoon with the first of the Bach-Mozart series conducted by Serge Koussevitzky in the Theater-Concert Hall. The first concert in the Music Shed by the full Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky will be on Thursday evening, July 29.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
JUL 12 1948

'Tanglewood On Parade' To Be Mammoth Benefit

Maurice Evans, Cornelia Otis Skinner to Appear On Widely Varied Program August 3 to Help Needy Musicians in Europe

For the help of needy musicians in Europe, the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center will stage a mamoth four-hour benefit, including a concert by the orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky and appearances by Maurice Evans and Cornelia Otis Skinner on Tuesday evening, August 3, at Tanglewood. "Tanglewood on Parade" there will be simultaneous performances in their various buildings by all departments of the Berkshire Music Center—orchestral, choral, operatic and chamber music.

The manifestation, Dr. Koussevitzky's significant title for the assembly in which internationally known figures in the arts will take part, is scheduled for 8 p.m. in the Music Shed. Miss Skinner and Mr. Evans will each appear in Shakespearean excerpts. The actress has just completed two seasons, including a nation-wide tour, in "Lady Windermere's Fan". Mr. Evans is producer and star of "Man and Superman", which ran all last season in New York, the longest run yet achieved by a Shaw play, and soon will embark on a transcontinental tour with the comedy which will continue throughout this season. Two speakers yet to be announced will make the plea "inaugurating nation-wide assistance from the New World to the creative artists of the Old World".

Musical Program

The grand concert in which Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the full Boston Symphony Orchestra will be in the gala spirit of the occasion and will have an especially attractive program. It will include Beethoven's "Leonore" Overture No. 3, Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf", with Wesley Addy as narrator, and a group to show the history of the watlz—"Voices of Spring" by Johann Strauss, "Valse Triste" by Sibelius, and ending with "La Valse" of Ravel.

Festivities will begin at 6 p.m. To carry out the "Tanglewood on Parade" idea there will literally be a procession of the 462 students of the Berkshire Music Center, each department carrying identifying banners. After the demonstrations by the school, the hour from 7 to 8 p.m. will be given over to supper. Patrons are invited to bring picnic baskets and to use the buffet and new refreshment booths on the grounds at Tanglewood.

MAURICE EVANS

Tickets admitting to all events beginning at 6 p.m. are priced at $2.50. Patrons subscribing for reserved seats at $4 and box seats at $5 will be invited to a special added attraction, a performance at 4 p.m. in the Tanglewood gardens of "The Telephone" by Gian-Carlo Menotti and scenes from other operas.

This Clipping From
HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT TELEGRAM
JUL 13 1948

Tanglewood Triumphant

If your enjoyment of music extends beyond enthusiasm for the most famous and familiar compositions, don't fail to look at the marvelous outlay of musical offerings at Tanglewood this summer. The Berkshire Festival opened last week, although the big Boston Symphony concerts in the music shed don't start until July 29. The Festival includes much more than the major concerts, and connoisseurs of music think some of the other recitals and concerts are much more interesting.

For lovers of chamber music there are a flock of concerts, some by students at the Festival school and others by well-known groups sponsored by Mrs. Coolidge. The programs offer music that is not readily available at any other time in this area, either through radio or concert stage.

There are choir concerts and productions of operatic scenes for those who enjoy good singing. These are given by students. In this case, we remind you, the word student does not mean the kind of musician you were when you took piano lessons. Berkshire Music Center students have to have better than average talent to get in, and most of them are either already professionals or on the brink of musical careers.

You can see and hear a student symphony orchestra in the big music shed, conducted by students and their noted teachers, on Friday nights. This is considered one of the biggest musical treats at Tanglewood. Another rare opportunity is that of attending a rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Saturday mornings.

Great music indeed fills the music shed when the Boston Symphony under Koussevitzky or Bernstein or some noted guest conductor plays for the crowds at the big concerts. To most of us these performances are too thrilling to be rivaled by anything else, and the more limited our musical knowledge, the more our devotion to them, because the atmosphere provides as much pleasure as the music. But if we are musical epicures, the side dishes at Tanglewood will hold particular appeal. You can hear the Boston Symphony somewhere else, and you will hear Beethoven and Brahms again and again. The other concerts offer artists and music that you may not have another chance to hear.

This Clipping From
WALTHAM, MASS.
NEWS TRIBUNE
JUL 13 1948

Chinese Pianist to Perform With Boston Symphony

Miss Tung Kwong-Kwong, 21-year-old Chinese pianist from Shanghai, who is living with her family at 50 Hyde street Newton Highlands, will be guest soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the second time on Wednesday evening in a concert on the Esplanade in Boston.

Miss Tung will play the Grieg Concerto. She played the same selection with the orchestra at the Pops on June 23. Immediately following that concert, Arthur Fiedler, the conductor, engaged her for Wednesday's performance.

The young pianist came to America in March, 1947. She is now studying piano with Artur Schnabel in the winter months, going to New York every two weeks for her lessons. She started styuding at the age of four, under the direction of her mother, Mrs. J. C. Tung, who is herself an accomplished pianist, a graduate of the New England Conservatory of Music, and head of a children's conservatory in Shanghai. Miss Tung then studied with Mario Paci, an Italian artist, and a pupil of Sgambati, who had studied under Listz.

Mrs. Tung and young Kwong-Kwong, with another sister, Ming-Ming, violinist, and two brothers, Shao-Yuen, 'cellist, and Shao-Ling, violinist, make up a musical family. The two sisters and two brothers have appeared in many concerts together around Boston and vicinity. The father, J. C. Tung, principal of the Shanghai Teachers' College plans to join his family in this country shortly.

Kwong-Kwong appeared several times with the Shanghai Philharmonic Orchestra and performed before the China National Assembly just prior to leaving the country for America.

This Clipping From
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR
JUL 13 1948

Benefit Show Planned Aug. 3 At Tanglewood

Boston Symphony To Join Berkshire Students for Program

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass., July 13—To aid needy musicians in Europe, the Boston Symphony orchestra and the Berkshire music center will stage a four-hour benefit Tuesday night, Aug. 3, at Tanglewood.

The program will include a concert by the orchestra under Serge Koussevitsky and appearances by Maurice Evans and Cornelia Otis Skinner.

Under the general designation, "Tanglewood on Parade," there will be simultaneous performances in their various buildings by the orchestra, choral, operatic and chamber music departments of the Berkshire music center. At 8 p. m. in the music shed Miss Skinner and Evans will each appear in Shakespearean excerpts. The grand concert will include a group to show the history of the waltz, Prokofiev's "Peter and the Wolf" and Beethoven's "Lenore" Overture No. 3. Festivities will start at 6 with a procession by the 462 students of the music center.

The hour from 7 to 8 will be given over to supper, and patrons have been invited to bring picnic baskets.

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
JUL 14 1948

Tanglewood Parade Set For Aug. 3

"Tanglewood on Parade," a big four-hour benefit program through which music patrons and musicians of the New World will extend aid to the needy creative artists of the Old World, will be featured at the Berkshire Music Center Tuesday, Aug. 3.

At 4 p. m. in Tanglewood Gardens there will be a special performance of Menotti's "The Telephone" and scenes from other operas. At 4 p. m. the general "parade" [illegible] will begin, and something of a four-ring musical circus it [illegible] for there will be simultaneous performances in various buildings by all departments, orchestral, choral, operatic and chamber music. There will be a real [illegible] for 462 students of the center [illegible] be in the procession with identifying banners.

All who attend are invited by the center to bring along box or basket-suppers and the hour from 7 to 8 p. m. will be given over to this purpose. The buffet and refreshment booths will be made available to the basketeers.

At 8 p. m. the "manifestation," as Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, center director, calls it, will begin in the Music Shed. Maurice Evans and Cornelia Otis Skinner will appear in Shakespearean excerpts. Internationally known figures in the world of the arts will be present, and two speakers will inaugurate the "assistance plan."

Then Dr. Koussevitsky will conduct the full Boston Symphony Orchestra in Beethoven's "Leonore" Overture No. 3, Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf," with Wesley Addy as narrator, and a group of numbers tracing the history of the waltz.

Jul. 14

Hawthorne's Cottage To Be Dedicated July 23-24

Novelist's Grandson To Attend Two-Day Program in Lenox

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, founder and director of the Berkshire Music Center, stands in the front yard of Hawthorne's Little Red House at Tanglewood to inspect the complete restoration of the author's home on the spot where it was located during Hawthorne's stay of one and one-half years in Lenox from 1850 to 1851.

TANGLEWOOD [illegible] Felton of Lenox [illegible]

Dana To Speak

Manning [illegible] oldest grandson of [illegible] Wadsworth Longfellow [illegible] grandson of the poet [illegible] dedication [illegible] at 2. Mrs. Guy [illegible] of Portland [illegible] president of the National Fed[illegible] of Music Clubs, and chairman of the committee for restoration of the house where Hawthorne lived in 1850 and 1851, will formally present the cottage to the Berkshire Music Center. Dr. Koussevitzky, director of the school, will accept. Mrs. Royden J. Keith of Chicago, national president of the federation will speak.

Rose Hawthorne was born in the Little Red House as were two of the author's "brain children," "The Wonder Book" and "The House of the Seven Gables." Herman Melville was a frequent visitor as was Fanny Kemble.

First Day's Program

The first day's program begins with a meeting of the New England District of the National Federation of Music Clubs with Mrs. Russell Taylor Hatch of Melrose, presiding. Robert Shaw, who heads the chorus faculty at Berkshire Music Center and will be guest conductor of the Festival concert on Aug. 14, will speak at the luncheon at the Curtis Hotel in Lenox. David Laurent, baritone, first winner of the Anne M. Gannett fund scholarship, will sing. At a youth forum in the afternoon Gay Tapley of Portland, Me., American delegate to the International Congress of Jeunesses Musicales in Luxembourg in May of this year, will speak.

The student concert which Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct Friday evening in the Music Shed will have as soloist Adelle Addison, soprano, a student at the center for the past two summers and New England district winner of the 1947 Paul Lavalle scholarship.

Before the dedication proper there will be a picnic luncheon on the grounds and immediately following the ceremony a concert of chamber music in the Chamber Music Hall. Soloists will be Lucretia Ferre, soprano; Martha Butler, contralto; and Robert Allen, cellist, winners of federation scholarships to Tanglewood. Saturday evening at the Lenox Library, Paula Lenchner, dramatic soprano, Metropolitan Opera Association, and winner of the federation's 1945 young artist contest, will appear in recital. Joan Brainerd, lyric soprano, the 1947 winner, will be soloist Sunday morning at 10.30 at a recital in the Chamber Music Hall.

Most of the visitors for the dedication will stay for the Mozart concert, which Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct Sunday afternoon in the Theatre-Concert Hall. The first concert by the full Boston Symphony in the Music Shed will be Thursday evening, July 29.

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS

JUL 14 1948

The Berkshire Music Festival

Just an hour away by automobile in the Berkshire Hills, at Tanglewood near Lenox, the Berkshire Music Festival will begin its eighth season on Sunday afternoon. It is one of the great musical events of the world.

Not so long ago, America was looked upon by older nations as an eager youth not yet artistically of age. Between the two World Wars and since, something has been happening to refute that belief. Painting, sculpture, architecture, music—all have been fluxing toward expression that gradually is forming an American art and the Berkshire Festival is one of its prime realizations.

Here students may come to work with one of the greatest musical organizations that ever existed, the Boston Symphony, and study under some of the gratest masters living—not for technical training alone, but for work on an advanced level through group performance. Here also, from the ends of the earth, may come music lovers to hear the acme of performance of their day.

The verve with which a culture or even a nation lives is reflected in the abundance and vitality with which it pursues its art. That nation is never decadent whose art vibrates with creative strength.

If America needs a voice to speak for its musical future, the Berkshire Music Center will be doing just that nearly every day from now until Aug. 15.

This Clipping From
WALTHAM, MASS.
NEWS TRIBUNE

JUL 13 1948

Tanglewood-on-Parade Set As Benefit for Musicians

For the help of needy musicians in Europe, the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center will stage a mammoth four-hour benefit, including a concert by the orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky and appearances by Maurice Evans and Cornelia Otis Skinner, on Tuesday evening, August 3, at Tanglewood, Lenox.

Under the general designation of "Tanglewood on Parade", there will be simultaneous performances in their various buildings by all departments of the Berkshire Music Center—orchestral, choral, operatic and chamber music.

Miss Skinner and Mr. Evans will each appear in Shakespearean excerpts. The actress has just completed two seasons in "Lady Windermere's Fan". Mr. Evans is producer and star of "Man and Superman", which ran all last season in New York, and soon will embark on a trans-continental tour with the comedy.

Two speakers yet to be announced will make the plea, "inaugurating nation-wide assistance from the New World to the creative artists of the Old World."

The grand concert in which Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the full Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be in a gala spirit of the occasion. It will include Beethoven's "Leonore" Overture No. 3, Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf," with Wesley Addy as marrator, and a group to show the history of the waltz —"Voices of Spring" Johann Strauss) "Valse Triste" (Sibelius) and "La Valse" (Ravel).

Festivities will begin at 6 P. M. To carry out the "Tanglewood on Parade" idea there will be a procession of the 462 students of the Berkshire Music Center, each department carrying identifying banners. The hour from 7 to 8 P. M. will be given over to supper. Patrons are invited to bring picnic baskets, and to use the buffet and new refreshment booths on the grounds.

Tickets admitting to all events are priced at $2.50. Patrons subscribing for reserved seats at $4.00 and box seats at $5.00 will be invited to a special added attraction, a performance at 4 P. M. in the Tanglewood gardens of "The Telephone" by Gian-Carlo Menotti, and scenes from other operas.

This Clipping From
HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT TELEGRAM

JUL 13 1948

Tanglewood Triumphant

If your enjoyment of music extends beyond enthusiasm for the most famous and familiar compositions, don't fail to look at the marvelous outlay of musical offerings at Tanglewood this summer. The Berkshire Festival opened last week, although the big Boston Symphony concerts in the music shed don't start until July 29. The Festival includes much more than the major concerts, and connoisseurs of music think some of the other recitals and concerts are much more interesting.

For lovers of chamber music there are a flock of concerts, some by students at the Festival school and others by well-known groups sponsored by Mrs. Coolidge. The programs offer music that is not readily available at any other time in this area, either through radio or concert stage.

There are choir concerts and productions of operatic scenes for those who enjoy good singing. These are given by students. In this case, we remind you, the word student does not mean the kind of musician you were when you took piano lessons. Berkshire Music Center students have to have better than average talent to get in, and most of them are either already professionals or on the brink of musical careers.

You can see and hear a student symphony orchestra in the big music shed, conducted by students and their noted teachers, on Friday nights. This is considered one of the biggest musical treats at Tanglewood. Another rare opportunity is that of attending a rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Saturday mornings.

Great music indeed fills the music shed when the Boston Symphony under Koussevitzky or Bernstein or some noted guest conductor plays for the crowds at the big concerts. To most of us these performances are too thrilling to be rivaled by anything else, and the more limited our musical knowledge, the more our devotion to them, because the atmosphere provides as much pleasure as the music. But if we are musical epicures, the side dishes at Tanglewood will hold particular appeal. You can hear the Boston Symphony somewhere else, and you will hear Beethoven and Brahms again and again. The other concerts offer artists and music that you may not have another chance to hear.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

JUL 13 1948

TANGLEWOOD LISTS 4-HOUR FESTIVAL

Benefit Program on Aug. 3 to Include Shakespearean Excerpts and Concert

"Tanglewood on Parade," a large-scale, four-hour benefit program, will be staged by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass., on Aug 3, it was announced yesterday. Maurice Evans and Cornelia Otis Skinner will appear in Shakespearean excerpts and Serge Koussevitzky will conduct.

Aimed at "inaugurating nation-wide assistance from the New World to the creative artists of the Old World," the festivities will include simultaneous performances in their various buildings by the orchestral, choral, operatic and chamber music departments of the Center. Miss Skinner and Mr. Evans will be part of the grand concert by the Boston Symphony in the Music Shed at 8 P. M.

The entire student body will parade at 6 P. M. and a picnic supper will take place from 7 to 8. Tickets admitting to all events are $2.50, reserved seats $4 and box seats $5. Purchasers of the last two are invited to attend the 4 P. M. performance of Menotti's "The Telephone" and scenes from other operas.

The orchestral program will include Beethoven's Leonore Overture No. 3, Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" with Wesley Addy narrating, and a group to show the history of the waltz — Strauss' "Voices of Spring," Sibelius' "Valse Triste" and Ravel's "La Valse." The hour from 9:30-10:30 will be broadcast by the American Broadcasting Company.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

JUL 13 1948

Albeneri Trio Will Be Heard At Tanglewood

To Give Schubert Program in Festival Series Tomorrow

The Albeneri Trio will give a program of chamber music by Franz Schubert in the Theatre-Concert Hall at Tanglewood tomorrow evening at 8.15. This recital is the second in the Schubert cycle of chamber music given by Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge on the four Wednesday evenings of July.

The program will include the Trios in B-flat major and E-flat major, Op. 99 and 100, and the Sonata in A major for violin and piano, Op. 162. The artists of the Albeneri Trio are Erich Itor Kahn, pianist; Giorgio Ciompi, violinist; and Benar Heifetz, cellist.

The trios are chamber music in the truest sense of the term. Composed in 1827, both had their first performance at houses of Schubert's friends. Robert Schumann has held the two trios up for contrast by labelling the first as "passive, feminine, and lyrical," the second as "active, masculine, dramatic."

The Berkshire Festival proper begins Sunday afternoon, with the first of the Bach-Mozart series conducted by Serge Koussevitzky in the Theater-Concert [illegible] concert in the Music Shed by the full Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky will be on Thursday evening the 29th.

5—16

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
PERKSHIRE EAGLE

JUL 14 1948

BSO License Is Approved

STOCKBRIDGE—The Board of Selectmen at their regular meeting Monday granted to the Boston Symphony Orchestra a common victualler's license at Tanglewood. They also appointed the following men as special officers for Tanglewood: Edward Wallace, Bart Barry, Robert Field and Robert Davidson, all of Lenox.

Mrs. Alfred Harper was granted a guest house license.

[168]

Jul. 14

Hawthorne's Cottage To Be Dedicated July 23-24

Novelist's Grandson To Attend Two-Day Program in Lenox

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, founder and director of the Berkshire Music Center, stands in the front yard of Hawthorne's Little Red House at Tanglewood to inspect the complete restoration of the author's home on the spot where it was located during Hawthorne's stay of one and one-half years in Lenox from 1850 to 1851.

TANGLEWOOD — An elaborate two-day program, including a concert by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Berkshire Music Center's student orchestra, is being arranged by the National Federation of Music Clubs for the dedication here of Nathaniel Hawthorne's Little Red House, on Friday and Saturday, July 23 and 24. The cottage has been restored to its original appearance and now houses three studios, including Dr. Koussevitzky's class in advanced orchestral conducting. Harold Felton of Lenox was the contractor.

Dana To Speak

Manning Hawthorne, oldest grandson of the novelist to bear the name, and Henry Wadsworth Longfellow Dana, great-grandson of the poet, will speak at the dedication ceremonies Saturday at 2. Mrs. Guy Patterson Gannett of Portland, Me., former president of the National Federation of Music Clubs, and chairman of the committee for restoration of the house where Hawthorne lived in 1850 and 1851, will formally present the cottage to the Berkshire Music Center. Dr. Koussevitzky, director of the school, will accept. Mrs. Royden J. Keith of Chicago, national president of the federation will speak.

Rose Hawthorne was born in the Little Red House as were two of the author's "brain children," "The Wonder Book" and "The House of the Seven Gables." Herman Melville was a frequent visitor as was Fanny Kemble.

First Day's Program

The first day's program begins with a meeting of the New England District of the National Federation of Music Clubs with Mrs. Russell Taylor Hatch of Melrose, presiding. Robert Shaw, who heads the chorus faculty at Berkshire Music Center and will be guest conductor of the Festival concert on Aug. 14, will speak at the luncheon at the Curtis Hotel in Lenox. David Laurent, baritone, first winner of the Anne M. Gannett fund scholarship, will sing. At a youth forum in the afternoon Gay Tapley of Portland, Me., American delegate to the International Congress of Jeunesses Musicales in Luxembourg in May of this year, will speak.

The student concert which Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct Friday evening in the Music Shed will have as soloist Adelle Addison, soprano, a student at the center for the past two summers and New England district winner of the 1947 Paul Lavalle scholarship.

Before the dedication proper there will be a picnic luncheon on the grounds and immediately following the ceremony a concert of chamber music in the Chamber Music Hall. Soloists will be Lucretia Ferre, soprano; Martha Butler, contralto; and Robert Allen, cellist, winners of federation scholarships to Tanglewood. Saturday evening at the Lenox Library, Paula Lenchner, dramatic soprano, Metropolitan Opera Association, and winner of the federation's 1945 young artist contest, will appear in recital. Joan Brainerd, lyric soprano, the 1947 winner, will be soloist Sunday morning at 10.30 at a recital in the Chamber Music Hall.

Most of the visitors for the dedication will stay for the Mozart concert, which Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct Sunday afternoon in the Theatre-Concert Hall. The first concert by the full Boston Symphony in the Music Shed will be Thursday evening, July 29.

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
JUL 14 1948

The Berkshire Music Festival

Just an hour away by automobile in the Berkshire Hills, at Tanglewood near Lenox, the Berkshire Music Festival will begin its eighth season on Sunday afternoon. It is one of the great musical events of the world.

Not so long ago, America was looked upon by older nations as an eager youth not yet artistically of age. Between the two World Wars and since, something has been happening to refute that belief. Painting, sculpture, architecture, music—all have been fluxing toward expression that gradually is forming an American art and the Berkshire Festival is one of its prime realizations.

Here students may come to work with one of the greatest musical organizations that ever existed, the Boston Symphony, and study under some of the gratest masters living—not for technical training alone, but for work on an advanced level through group performance. Here also, from the ends of the earth, may come music lovers to hear the acme of performance of their day.

The verve with which a culture or even a nation lives is reflected in the abundance and vitality with which it pursues its art. That nation is never decadent whose art vibrates with creative strength.

If America needs a voice to speak for its musical future, the Berkshire Music Center will be doing just that nearly every day from now until Aug. 15.

This Clipping From
WALTHAM, MASS.
NEWS TRIBUNE
JUL 13 1948

Tanglewood-on-Parade Set As Benefit for Musicians

For the help of needy musicians in Europe, the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center will stage a mammoth four-hour benefit, including a concert by the orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky and appearances by Maurice Evans and Cornelia Otis Skinner, on Tuesday evening, August 3, at Tanglewood, Lenox.

Under the general designation of "Tanglewood on Parade", there will be simultaneous performances in their various buildings by all departments of the Berkshire Music Center—orchestral, choral, operatic and chamber music.

Miss Skinner and Mr. Evans will each appear in Shakespearean excerpts. The actress has just completed two seasons in "Lady Windermere's Fan". Mr. Evans is producer and star of "Man and Superman", which ran all last season in New York, and soon will embark on a trans-continental tour with the comedy.

Two speakers yet to be announced will make the plea, "inaugurating nation-wide assistance from the New World to the creative artists of the Old World."

The grand concert in which Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the full Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be in a gala spirit of the occasion. It will include Beethoven's "Leonore" Overture No. 3, Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf," with Wesley Addy as marrator, and a group to show the history of the waltz —"Voices of Spring" Johann Strauss) "Valse Triste" (Sibelius) and "La Valse" (Ravel).

Festivities will begin at 6 P. M. To carry out the "Tanglewood on Parade" idea there will be a procession of the 462 students of the Berkshire Music Center, each department carrying identifying banners. The hour from 7 to 8 P. M. will be given over to supper. Patrons are invited to bring picnic baskets, and to use the buffet and new refreshment booths on the grounds.

Tickets admitting to all events are priced at $2.50. Patrons subscribing for reserved seats at $4.00 and box seats at $5.00 will be invited to a special added attraction, a performance at 4 P. M. in the Tanglewood gardens of "The Telephone" by Gian-Carlo Menotti, and scenes from other operas.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
PERKSHIRE EAGLE
JUL 14 1948

BSO License Is Approved

STOCKBRIDGE—The Board of Selectmen at their regular meeting Monday granted to the Boston Symphony Orchestra a common victualler's license at Tanglewood. They also appointed the following men as special officers for Tanglewood: Edward Wallace, Bart Barry, Robert Field and Robert Davidson, all of Lenox.

Mrs. Alfred Harper was granted a guest house license.

This Clipping From
HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT TELEGRAM
JUL 13 1948

Tanglewood Triumphant

If your enjoyment of music extends beyond enthusiasm for the most famous and familiar compositions, don't fail to look at the marvelous outlay of musical offerings at Tanglewood this summer. The Berkshire Festival opened last week, although the big Boston Symphony concerts in the music shed don't start until July 29. The Festival includes much more than the major concerts, and connoisseurs of music think some of the other recitals and concerts are much more interesting.

For lovers of chamber music there are a flock of concerts, some by students at the Festival school and others by well-known groups sponsored by Mrs. Coolidge. The programs offer music that is not readily available at any other time in this area, either through radio or concert stage.

There are choir concerts and productions of operatic scenes for those who enjoy good singing. These are given by students. In this case, we remind you, the word student does not mean the kind of musician you were when you took piano lessons. Berkshire Music Center students have to have better than average talent to get in, and most of them are either already professionals or on the brink of musical careers.

You can see and hear a student symphony orchestra in the big music shed, conducted by students and their noted teachers, on Friday nights. This is considered one of the biggest musical treats at Tanglewood. Another rare opportunity is that of attending a rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Saturday mornings.

Great music indeed fills the music shed when the Boston Symphony under Koussevitzky or Bernstein or some noted guest conductor plays for the crowds at the big concerts. To most of us these performances are too thrilling to be rivaled by anything else, and the more limited our musical knowledge, the more our devotion to them, because the atmosphere provides as much pleasure as the music. But if we are musical epicures, the side dishes at Tanglewood will hold particular appeal. You can hear the Boston Symphony somewhere else, and you will hear Beethoven and Brahms again and again. The other concerts offer artists and music that you may not have another chance to hear.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
JUL 13 1948

TANGLEWOOD LISTS 4-HOUR FESTIVAL

Benefit Program on Aug. 3 to Include Shakespearean Excerpts and Concert

"Tanglewood on Parade," a large-scale, four-hour benefit program, will be staged by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass., on Aug 3, it was announced yesterday. Maurice Evans and Cornelia Otis Skinner will appear in Shakespearean excerpts and Serge Koussevitzky will conduct.

Aimed at "inaugurating nation-wide assistance from the New World to the creative artists of the Old World," the festivities will include simultaneous performances in their various buildings by the orchestral, choral, operatic and chamber music departments of the Center. Miss Skinner and Mr. Evans will be part of the grand concert by the Boston Symphony in the Music Shed at 8 P. M.

The entire student body will parade at 6 P. M. and a picnic supper will take place from 7 to 8. Tickets admitting to all events are $2.50. reserved seats $4 and box seats $5. Purchasers of the last two are invited to attend the 4 P. M. performance of Menotti's "The Telephone" and scenes from other operas.

The orchestral program will include Beethoven's Leonore Overture No. 3, Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" with Wesley Addy narrating, and a group to show the history of the waltz — Strauss' "Voices of Spring," Sibelius' "Valse Triste" and Ravel's "La Valse." The hour from 9:30-10:30 will be broadcast by the American Broadcasting Company.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
JUL 13 1948

Albeneri Trio Will Be Heard At Tanglewood

To Give Schubert Program in Festival Series Tomorrow

The Albeneri Trio will give a program of chamber music by Franz Schubert in the Theater-Concert Hall at Tanglewood tomorrow evening, at 8.15. Tthe recital is the second in the Schubert cycle of chamber music given by Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge on the four Wednesday evenings of July.

The program will include the Trios in B-flat major and E-flat major, Op. 99 and 100, and the Sonata in A major for violin and piano, Op. 162. The artists of the Albeneri Trio are Erich Itor Kahn, pianist; Giorgio Ciompi, violinist; and Benar Heifetz, 'cellist.

The trios are chamber music in the truest sense of the term. Composed in 1827, both had their first performance at houses of Schubert's friends. Robert Schumann has held the two trios up for contrast by labelling the first as "passive, feminie, and lyrical," the second as "active, masculine, dramatic."

The Berkshire Festival proper begins Sunday afternoon, with the first of the Bach-Mozart series conducted by Serge Koussevitzky in the Theater-C[illegible] concert in the Music Shed by the full Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky will be on Thursday evening the 29th.

15-16

[168]

4—The Berkshire Evening Eagle, Thursday, July 15, 1948

Music

Albeneri Trio Brings Climax To Tanglewood Chamber Series

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

The second concert in the Schubert series being given at the Berkshire Music Center through the generosity of Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge was the sonata for violin and piano, Opus 162, and the two trios, played by the Albeneri Trio, of which Giorgi Ciompi is violinist, Benar Heifetz, cellist, and Erich Itor Kahn, pianist.

The trios, numbers 99 and 100, date from the year preceding Schubert's last. Schumann's comments on them have generally been accepted as the most easily distinguishing. He described the B flat as "feminine and lyrical" and the E flat as "masculine and dramatic." This is rather an over-simplification, for neither one is always in character. However, it serves to portray their general style.

The Albeneris have been granted a reputation for authority in their particular niche in the field of chamber music, and the reason for it was easily evident last night in their performance, even though there was a new occupant of the violin chair. Mr. Ciompi, a recent arrival in this country from Italy, has replaced Alexander Schneider, who was a member of the trio when it played here last summer.

It would be difficult to conceive of a program where wider opportunities were on tap for making beautiful sounds on the respective instruments. The realization of them made for many moments of exquisite tonal beauty. The lovely tenderness of Schubert found expression in the graceful contour given many of the most notable phrases. In the decorative figures with which the developments abound, the brilliant technical abilities of the artists were used with smooth refinement.

Beneath these surface manifestitations, however, lies the reason for the trio's reputation. An artistic stability, maintained last night for the most part, gave authority to their utterances, and a consciousness of tonal balance, which, again with few deviations, was a source of great and deep gratification to the large and enthusiastic audience. The individual artists have submerged their personal bids for attention for the greater glory of the ensemble. Mr. Giorgi rightly allowed his brilliance to be heard in the early sentences of the sonata, but otherwise it was blended to the mature grace of the dominant style of the evening.

The sonata in A is not quite on the level of the trios in musical substance. It dates from Schubert's 20th year, but the trios are unsurpassed in pure and lovely melodic originality. The dynamic adjustments necessary for playing Schubert trios are of a peculiar nature, and it would be unfair to pass over the pianist's great intuition for string tone. Mr. Kahn gave his piano a texture of extraordinary softness, molding it to the beauty of the strings.

The trio graciously included Mrs. Coolidge, who had been seated in the front row, in acknowledging the acclaim they were accorded.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
PERKSHIRE EAGLE
JUL 16 1948

anglewood

Tonight at 8.15

Symphony concert in the Shed by advanced student orchestra, three students and Richard Burgin conducting.

Tomorrow Night at 8.15

The Juilliard String Quartet will play Bartok's fourth, first and sixth string quartets in the theatre-concert hall.

Music Center Faculty Now Numbers 45

The addition of six new members makes the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center here the largest in the school's history, increasing it to 45. Gregory Piatigorsky, cellist, who was on leave of absence last season, has returned to again head the chamber music department.

Darius Milhaud, eminent French composer, whose second symphony will be played during the Festival, has recently returned from France to teach composition. On the faculty of Mills College and the Paris Conservatory, with Mme. Milhaud, a noted diseuse, he is staying at the Downs Cottage in Lenox.

Frederick Fennell, former conducting student of Serge Koussevitzky, returns this summer to conduct the orchestra of Department 5. He came from Texas, where he conducted the Houston Symphony Orchestra in the Texas Creative Arts Festival. Mrs. Fennell, also a pupil at the center in 1942, will join him Aug. 1 with their year-old daughter. In the winter season he is conductor at the Eastman School of Music, Rochester, N.Y.

Mrs. Barbara Lawthers of Stoneham is in charge of scenic design in the opera department. Her husband will arrive later to be technical director for the Rossini opera, "The Turk in Italy," to be produced by the school Aug. 9 and 11. Mrs. Lawthers is on the staff of the New England Opera Theatre.

Nassan Abishalroun, who arrived 18 months ago from Cairo, Egypt, is in charge of stage design for the opera.

Miss Sara Caldwell, a student of the center last season, of the staff of the New England Opera Theatre and the Longy School, Cambridge, is assisting Boris Goldovsky with stage direction.

Jan Meyerowitz, a teacher and composer of New York City, is an assistant to Mr. Goldovsky. He has conducted in Europe and the United States, and has written an opera entitled, "Mulatto."

With Mr. Piatigorsky is his wife, daughter of the international financier, Baron Rothschild, and their two children, [illegible] occupy the Carter house [illegible]. In addition to his performances as a concert cellist, he is head of the cello department of the Curtis Institute of Music, Philadelphia.

Tanglewood

Music Students Elect Council

Elections have been held by the students of the Berkshire Music Center for their council. For the first time the Monday evening forums in Sedgwick Hall, Lenox, will be conducted by students, instead of by the faculty as in the past. Aaron Copland, assistant director of the school, will be adviser.

Members of the council from the conducting department are Irwin Hoffman and Howard Shanet of New York City, elected at large; Miss Lillian Kallir of New York and Robert Karol of Philadelphia, from the orchestra of Department 2; Robert Nagel of Pittsburgh from the composers; Mrs. Philip Curtin of Cambridge and Herbert Grossman of New York from the opera department; and Miss Cynthia Sweeney of New Bedford and Gerson [illegible] of Roxbury from the chorus and orchestra of Department 2.

This Clipping From
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
NEWS
JUL 16 1948

IT'S ALWAYS A HIT

Sibelius Symphony Is Handled Deftly

By HERBERT P. KENNEY, Jr., The News Staff Writer

Few works in the symphonic repertoire may lay claim to such year-in and year-out favor with concert audiences as the Symphony No. 2 in D Major of Sibelius. Composed in 1902 during a vacation trip to Italy and introduced in America two years later, the symphony's popularity has, if anything, increased rather than abated during the years.

This fact was again brought to light in the experience of the Philadelphia Orchestra on this year's spring tour, during which it was found that the Sibelius symphony was the work most often requested by audiences. And hence it is not exactly a surprise that the Philadelphia players, conducted by Eugene Ormandy, present the symphony in a new recording released by Columbia.

The reasons for the work's perennial popularity are not hard to explain. The simple, attractive melodies of the opening movement and the "rich romantic fruitiness" of the finale practically guarantee it a "sure-fire" classification. The last movement, in fact, with its triumphant measures, is a ringing paean that carries all before it.

It is precisely in this section that the playing of the orchestra is most typical, for Mr. Ormandy obviously has striven for, and obtained, a richness of tonal effect that may not be entirely to the liking of those who know the older recorded interpretation of the same work by the Boston Symphony and ~~Serge Koussevitzky~~. There is a brilliance to the new recording which shows off, in dazzling fashion, the opulence of tone possessed by the Philadelphia Orchestra. The famous string section, for instance, plays with such sheer beauty of tone in some passages that the listener may want to play them over again immediately. That, of course, is one of the definite advantages of the phonograph.

The five-disk recording is technically well done, save for a lapse on the fourth side, and this could be due to a faulty copy received by this interviewer. The surface noise is quite low.

There are, in addition, two singles from Columbia. On a 10-inch disk Carol Brice, a contralto with a rather high range, sings two spirituals, "On My Journey" (Boatner) and "My Good Lord Done Been Here" (Johnson). The accompaniments are played by her brother, Jonathan Brice, pianist.

Music of a slighter sort is contained on a 12-inch disk. On one side Charles Williams and his Concert Orchestra play the "Skyscraper Fantasy" of Donald Phillips, an English composer. It sounds like most movie music. The other side of the record, by the same orchestra, features a spirited version of "March of the Bowmen," from Frederic Curzon's "Robin Hood Suite."

Those who have already invested in the album and those who have yet to do so, will be interested to know that the Victor album of Tchaikovsky's "The Sleeping Beauty," superbly recorded by Leopold Stokowski and his symphony orchestra, has been selected by a special panel of retail record dealers as the classical album award winner for June. The award cited the recording's "highly accomplished and dramatic performance . . . and for presenting the music in a clear, high fidelity production."

A Victor album in which Lotte Lehmann, erstwhere opera star and more lately a concert artist, sings such a disparate program as "Lullaby" (Brahms), "Traumerei" (Schumann); "The Kerry Dance" (Malloy), and—hold on to your hats, little ones—"God Bless America" (Berlin), could only have originated in one place in all the world.

The songs Mme. Lehmann sings are, of course, the ones she sings in a movie titled "Big City," also the title of the album of two 10-inch records. She sings them as the artist she is dictates they should be sung.

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
JUL 15 1948

Replica of Hawthorne's House To Be Dedicated at Tanglewood

The "Little Red House," a replica of the house in which Hawthorne lived a century ago at Tanglewood, will be dedicated July 23 to 25 as a gift of the National Federation of Music Clubs to the Berkshire Music Center.

Mrs. Warren Knox, Albany, president of the New York State Federation of Music Clubs, accompanied by her daughter, Miss Elinor Knox, will be at the dedication as official representative of the state organization.

The "Little Red House" contains practice studios for music center students and was designed to provide surroundings conducive to good work.

In a letter to Mrs. Knox Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Berkshire Music Center, spoke of the house as a "shrine" and thanked the Albany woman for her "generous cooperation" in carrying the project to completion. He said the "arts are always responsive to their environment" and the "Little Red House" would not only help to solve a very real physical problem of housing, but would "furnish an inspiring place in which to work."

Hartford Courant 1948

Studerts to Conduct at Tanglewood

Programs have been announced for the concerts to be given this week-end at the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

At 8:15 Friday evening, in the shed, the three pupils in conducting of Serge Koussevitzky, with Richard Burgin, associate conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will lead the advanced school orchestra in the following program:

Handel, Concerto Grosso No. 10 in D minor, Howard Shanet conducting; Beethoven, Piano Concerto in C-major, Irwin Hoffman conducting; William Schuman, second part of Symphony No. 3, Seymour Lipkin conducting, and Gustav Mahler, last two movements of Symphony No. 3, Richard Burgin, conducting.

Saturday evennig the Juliard String Quartet will play the Second, Third and Fifth String Quartets of Bela Bartok.

Sunday morning at 10:30, students of chamber music will play the Suite for brass septet by Berezowsky, Suite after Corrette for oboe, clarinet and bassoon by Darius Milhaud, and a string quartet by Lucas Foss, who will be piano soloist three times in the Bach-Mozart series which will start off the Berkshire Festival Sunday afternoon with Serge Koussevitzky conducting.

The chamber orchestra concert scheduled for Monday afternoon will be postponed to Friday.

No seats remain for Sunday's Bach concert, but general admission will be sold for the lawn.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
JUL 15 1948

Students to Conduct at Tanglewood

Programs have been announced for the concerts to be given this week-end at the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

At 8:15 Friday evening, in the shed, the three pupils in conducting of Serge ~~Koussevitzky~~, with Richard ~~Burgin~~, associate conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will lead the advanced school orchestra in the following program:

Handel, Concerto Grosso No. 10 in D minor, Howard Shanet conducting; Beethoven, Piano Concerto in C-major, Irwin Hoffman conducting; William Schuman, second part of Symphony No. 3, Seymour Lipkin conducting, and Gustav Mahler, last two movements of Symphony No. 3, Richard Burgin, conducting.

Saturday evennig the Juliard String Quartet will play the Second, Third and Fifth String Quartets of Bela Bartok.

Sunday morning at 10:30, students of chamber music will play the Suite for brass septet by Berezowsky, Suite after Corrette for oboe, clarinet and bassoon by Darius Milhaud, and a string quartet by Lucas Foss, who will be piano soloist three times in the Bach-Mozart series which will start off the Berkshire Festival Sunday afternoon with Serge Koussevitzky conducting.

The chamber orchestra concert scheduled for Monday afternoon will be postponed to Friday.

No seats remain for Sunday's Bach concert, but general admission will be sold for the lawn.

Leading Student Conductors To Direct Orchestra Tomorrow

Howard Shanet

TANGLEWOOD — Dr. Serge Koussevitzky's three student conductors at the Berkshire Music Center will conduct the orchestra of Department 2 in its second concert of the season in the Music Shed tomorrow night at 8.15. They are Howard Shanet, Irwin Hoffman and Seymour Lipkin.

Mr. Shanet will direct the orchestra in Handel's concerto grosso No. 10 in D minor. Manfred Clynes will appear as soloist with the orchestra with Mr. Hoffman conducting Beethoven's piano concerto in C major. Mr. Lipkin will direct the orchestra in the second part of William Schuman's symphony No. 3.

Richard Burgin, associate conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will conduct the orchestra in the last two movements of Gustav Mahler's Symphony No. 4, in the closing part of the program.

Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited.

This Clipping From LAKE WALES, FLA.
DAILY

JUL 1 6

Mrs. Gannett To Take Part In Dedication Of Hawthorne's Home

Mrs. Guy Patterson Gennett of Mountain Lake will participate in the dedication ceremonies of the building where Nathaniel Hawthorne wrote the "House of Seven Gables" which is being dedicated as a permanent shrine to American culture.

Mrs. Gannett, immediate past president of the National Federation of Music Clubs, started this project in the early days of her administration.

She will make the formal presentation of this shrine to the Berkshire Music Center on July 24 with Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, accepting. Guest speakers include Manning Hawthorne, oldest living great grandson of Nathaniel Hawthorne, and Henry Wadsworth Longfellow Dana.

The Berkshire Music Center will use this shrine to house practice studios for the Opera and Chamber Music Departments of its famous summer school. In one of these studios, Dr. Koussevitsky will himself conduct classes.

This Clipping From
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

JUL 1 6 1948

Weather And Economy Reflected In Slump In Field Of Entertainment

July 27 Pop Concert In Bowl Designated As New Haven Night--Program At Tanglewood

By GORDON E. ARMSTRONG

Attendance at the three "Pop" concerts has been extremely disappointing to its sponsors, the New Haven Junior Chamber of Commerce. According to reports emanating from the offices of the local organization, attendance this Summer is approximately 50 per cent under that of past years.

While Chamber of Commerce officials are inclined to blame "old man weather" for the unfortunate situation, in the opinion of the writer this is only a partial explanation.

The entertainment business in general is in a slump. This was evident in the noticeable falling off in attendance at the last few concerts in the regular New Haven Symphony series in Woolsey Hall a few months ago. Even the last (extra) concert in the Woolsey Hall series, when the Boston Symphony made its final appearance, did not have a full house. This orchestra usually fills the house, as those who tried to secure tickets for the two previous concerts of Koussevitzky's musicians are well aware

The local picture is but a reflection of a general situation which is widespread and which has effected the demise of many places of entertainment in New York and other large cities. The unfortunate part of it all is that there isn't much that can be done about it "Old man weather," and Mr. H.C.L. are a tough combination to buck.

JAMES Pease, bass-baritone, will be appearing at the Berkshire Festival for the fourth consecutive season at the Bach concert by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Theatre-Concert Hall at Tanglewood this afternoon. He will be heard in the Cantata "Sie werden aus Saba Alle kommen." The program will be repeated Tuesday evening, July 27. Mr. Pease will also be soloist in Stravinsky's "Oedipus Rex" on Thursday evening, August 5, and the Brahms "Requiem" Saturday evening, August 14.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

JUL 1 5 1948

Hawthorne's 'Little Red House' To Be Dedicated at Tanglewood

With Manning Hawthorne of West Torrington, Conn., oldest living great-grandson of Nathaniel Hawthorne to bear the Hawthorne name, as one of the speakers, and with Mrs. Royden J. Keith of Chicago, president of the National Federation of Music Clubs, as guest of honor, the federation will, on the 24th, dedicate the "Little Red House" at Tanglewood, where Hawthorne wrote "The House of Seven Gables" as a permanent literary shrine to one of the greatest of American novelists. Also the building erected on the site of the house where Hawthorne lived and wrote this famous novel and "The Wonder Book" will, on that date, become a permanent adjunct to the Berkshire Music Center, housing practice studios for the opera and chamber music departments of the famous summer school. In one of these studios Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and moving spirit of the Berkshire Music Center, will himself conduct classes.

Completion of the building, a project which was started in 1941, redounds to the credit of Mrs. Guy Patterson Gannett, immediate past president of the National Federation of Music Clubs, who started it in the very early days of her administration. Shortage of building materials during the war and the impossibility of securing a federal building permit delayed the construction until midsummer of 1947. By that time Mrs. Gannett had relinquished the gavel to Mrs. Keith, but the latter immediately appointed Mrs. Gannett chairman in charge of the "Little Red House" project, and, under her intimate supervision, the building has been completed.

Erected on the foundations of the former Hawthorne home, which was occupied by the novelist and his family in 1850 and 1851, the house is, in so far as the exterior is concerned, an exact replica of the "Little Red House" when the Hawthornes lived there. Within it houses the two practice studios seating 35 each, a powder room and men's room, a fully-equipped kitchenette and a lobby and reception room, in the latter of which the Victorian motif has been very successfully carried out. Also the old pump from which the Hawthorne family drew its drinking water has been re-installed, and later the garden as it existed in Hawthorne's day will be replanted.

Exercises of appropriate dignity will mark the dedication of the "Little Red House." The actual ceremonies are scheduled for Saturday afternoon, the 24th, at 2, but there will be an all-day meeting of the New England District of the National Federation of Music Club on Friday, the 23d. Mrs. Russell Taylor Hatch of [illegible] is arranging the program, which includes a meeting and forum at the "Little Red House" at 10.30 a.m., a luncheon at Hotel Curtis, Lenox, at which Robert Shaw, director of the Collegiate Chorale and member of the Berkshire Music Center faculty, will be speaker, and David Laurent, baritone, of Providence, winner of the first of the Anne M. Gannett scholarships given by the Federation to veterans, will be soloist. A youth session at 2 is also scheduled. At the latter, Gay Tapley of Portland, Me., recently returned from the second International Congress of the Jeunesses Musicales in Luxembourg, which she attended as a delegate from the student division of the National Federation of Music Clubs, will speak.

On the night of the 23d, Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct a concert given by the Advanced Student Orchestra and dedicated to the National Federation of Music Clubs, and to this Adele Addison of Springfield, soprano, who was the 1947 New England District winner of the Paul Lavalle Scholarship of the National Federation of Music Clubs, will be soloist.

On Satu[illegible] tion gu[illegible] attend [illegible] Cente choral [illegible] noon [illegible] on th[illegible] cation [illegible] place. These will [illegible] from Mrs. Kei[illegible] who will be or[illegible] tion office[illegible] Mrs. Gannett will [illegible] presentatio[illegible] Center, wi[illegible] accepting, and [illegible] Manning Hawthorn[illegible] Wadsworth Longfellow [illegible] orating with him [illegible] Hawthorne, will follow.

Federation students who have been or are at Tanglewood will be featured in the remaining events. Lucretia Ferre of Salt Lake City, soprano, winner of the 1948 opera scholarship presented to the National Federation of Music Clubs by the Newport Music Club, Robert Allen, 'cellist, winner of the scholarship for strings presented to the Rhode Island Federation by the same club, Martha Butler, contralto, winner of the Newport Music Club's own scholarship, [illegible] Brainerd, lyric soprano and 1947 young artist winner will be soloists in chamber music concerts. Paula Lenchner, dramatic soprano, who had an important role in the center's production of "Idomeneo" last year, will be heard in recital at Sedgwick Hall, Lenox Library, under federation auspices. She is the National Federation of Music Clubs' 1945 voice winner and is now a member of the Metropolitan Opera Co.

On Sunday afternoon, the 25th, the group will attend the Bach-Mozart Festival.

This Clipping From
COLUMBIA, S. C.
STATE

JUL 1 6 1948

BACH: BRANDENBURG CONCERTO NO. 6 IN B FLAT, BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY CONDUCTING. CONCERTINO: JOSEPH DE PASQUALE AND JEAN M. CAUHOPE, VIOLISTS (RCA-Victor DM-1211, six sides).

Written during Bach's second period, as musical historians put it, while he was capellmeister to the Prince of Anhalt-Cothein, this, the last of the six famous Brandenburg concerti, has received an excellent interpretation at the hands of Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony and Messrs. Pasquale and Cauhope. This is, incidentally, the fifth of the concerti to be recorded by Koussevitzky.

As the longest of the concerti, the sixth is unique in its featuring of the two violas as a concertino. Following the general pattern established by Corelli of contrasting alternation between the tutti and the ensemble, Bach improved this relatively simple form into a highly complex and brilliantly designed polyphonic tapestry for instruments. The polyphony in this last concerto is extremely complex and intriguing and the color weird and mysterious. This is probably due to the untrue tone color of the viola de gamba. The three movements are in the classical concerto pattern. They are: Allegro, Adagio ma non tanto and Allegro.

Bach's original inventory valued these concerti at 10 cents each or a total of 60 cents for the six. This same evaluation might be placed on the thin and echoey sound of this recording, especially in the second movement. The thinness and echo is probably due to the Tanglewood shed recording. The performance is beyond criticism.

Leading Student Conductors To Direct Orchestra Tomorrow

Howard Shanet

TANGLEWOOD — Dr. Serge Koussevitzky's three student conductors at the Berkshire Music Center will conduct the orchestra of Department 2 in its second concert of the season in the Music Shed tomorrow night at 8.15. They are Howard Shanet, Irwin Hoffman and Seymour Lipkin.

Mr. Shanet will direct the orchestra in Handel's concerto grosso No. 10 in D minor. Manfred Clynes will appear as soloist with the orchestra with Mr. Hoffman conducting Beethoven's piano concerto in C major. Mr. Lipkin will direct the orchestra in the second part of William Schuman's symphony No. 3.

Richard Burgin, associate conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will conduct the orchestra in the last two movements of Gustav Mahler's Symphony No. 4, in the closing part of the program.

Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited.

This Clipping From
LAKE WALES, FLA.
DAILY
JUL 1 6 1948

Mrs. Gannett To Take Part In Dedication Of Hawthorne's Home

Mrs. Guy Patterson Gennett of Mountain Lake will participate in the dedication ceremonies of the building where Nathaniel Hawthorne wrote the "House of Seven Gables" which is being dedicated as a permanent shrine to American culture.

Mrs. Gannett, immediate past president of the National Federation of Music Clubs, started this project in the early days of her administration.

She will make the formal presentation of this shrine to the Berkshire Music Center on July 24 with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, accepting. Guest speakers include Manning Hawthorne, oldest living great grandson of Nathaniel Hawthorne, and Henry Wadsworth Longfellow Dana.

The Berkshire Music Center will use this shrine to house practice studios for the Opera and Chamber Music Departments of its famous summer school. In one of these studios, Dr. Koussevitzky will himself conduct classes.

This Clipping From
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER
JUL 1 6 1948

Weather And Economy Reflected In Slump In Field Of Entertainment

July 27 Pop Concert In Bowl Designated As New Haven Night--Program At Tanglewood

By GORDON E. ARMSTRONG

Attendance at the three "Pop" concerts has been extremely disappointing to its sponsors, the New Haven Junior Chamber of Commerce. According to reports emanating from the offices of the local organization, attendance this Summer is approximately 50 per cent under that of past years.

While Chamber of Commerce officials are inclined to blame "old man weather" for the unfortunate situation, in the opinion of the writer this is only a partial explanation.

The entertainment business in general is in a slump. This was evident in the noticeable falling off in attendance at the last few concerts in the regular New Haven Symphony series in Woolsey Hall a few months ago. Even the last (extra) concert in the Woolsey Hall series, when the Boston Symphony made its final appearance, did not have a full house. This orchestra usually fills the house, as those who tried to secure tickets for the two previous concerts of Koussevitzky's musicians are well aware.

The local picture is but a reflection of a general situation which is widespread and which has effected the demise of many places of entertainment in New York and other large cities. The unfortunate part of it all is that there isn't much that can be done about it "Old man weather," and Mr. H.C.L. are a tough combination to buck.

JAMES Pease, bass-baritone, will be appearing at the Berkshire Festival for the fourth consecutive season at the Bach concert by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Theatre-Concert Hall at Tanglewood this afternoon. He will be heard in the Cantata "Sie werden aus Saba Alle kommen." The program will be repeated Tuesday evening, July 27. Mr. Pease will also be soloist in Stravinsky's "Oedipus Rex" on Thursday evening, August 5, and the Brahms "Requiem" Saturday evening, August 14.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
JUL 1 5 1948

Hawthorne's 'Little Red House' To Be Dedicated at Tanglewood

With Manning Hawthorne of West Torrington, Conn., oldest living great-grandson of Nathaniel Hawthorne to bear the Hawthorne name, as one of the speakers, and with Mrs. Royden J. Keith of Chicago, president of the National Federation of Music Clubs, as guest of honor, the federation will, on the 24th, dedicate the "Little Red House" at Tanglewood, where Hawthorne wrote "The House of Seven Gables," as a permanent literary shrine to one of the greatest of American novelists. Also the building erected on the site of the house where Hawthorne lived and wrote the famous novel and "The Wonder Book" will, on that date, become a permanent adjunct to the Berkshire Music Center, housing practice studios for the opera and chamber music departments of the famous summer school. In one of these studios Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and moving spirit of the Berkshire Music Center, will himself conduct classes.

Completion of the building, a project which was started in 1941, redounds to the credit of Mrs. Guy Patterson Gannett, immediate past president of the National Federation of Music Clubs, who started it in the very early days of her administration. Shortage of building materials during the war and the impossibility of securing a federal building permit delayed the construction until midsummer of 1947. By that time Mrs. Gannett had relinquished the gavel to Mrs. Keith, but the latter immediately appointed Mrs. Gannett chairman in charge of the "Little Red House" project, and under her intimate supervision, the building has been completed.

Erected on the foundations of the former Hawthorne home, which was occupied by the novelist and his family in 1850 and 1851, the house is, in so far as the exterior is concerned, an exact replica of the "Little Red House" when the Hawthornes lived there. Within it houses the two practice studios, seating 35 each, a powder room and men's room, a fully-equipped kitchenette and a lobby and reception room, in the latter of which the Victorian motif has been very successfully carried out. Also the old pump from which the Hawthorne family drew its drinking water has been re-installed, and later the garden as it existed in Hawthorne's day will be replanted.

Exercises of appropriate dignity will mark the dedication of the "Little Red House." The actual ceremonies are scheduled for Saturday afternoon, the 24th, at 2, but there will be an all-day meeting of the New England District of the National Federation of Music Club on Friday, the 23d. Mrs. Russell Taylor Hatch of Melrose is arranging the program, which includes a meeting and forum at the "Little Red House" at 10.30 a.m., a luncheon at Hotel Curtis, Lenox, at which Robert Shaw, director of the Collegiate Chorale and member of the Berkshire Music Center faculty, will be speaker, and David Laurent, baritone, of Providence, winner of the first of the Anne M. Gannett scholarships given by the Federation to veterans, will be soloist. A youth session at 2 is also scheduled. At the latter, Gay Tapley of Portland, Me., recently returned from the second International Congress of the Jeunesses Musicales in Luxembourg, which she attended as a delegate from the student division of the National Federation of Music Clubs, will speak.

On the night of the 23d, Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct a concert given by the Advanced Student Orchestra and dedicated to the National Federation of Music Clubs, and for this Adele Addison of Springfield, soprano, who was the 1947 New England District winner of the Paul Lavalle Scholarship of the National Federation of Music Clubs, will be soloist.

On Saturday morning at 10 Federation guests from many states will attend the Berkshire Music Center choral rehearsal. At 12.30 noon a picnic luncheon will be served on the Tanglewood grounds. At 2 the dedication ceremonies will take place. These will open with greetings from Mrs. Keith, national president, who will be one of many national federation officers in attendance. Mrs. Gannett will then make the formal presentation to the Berkshire Music Center, with Dr. Koussevitzky accepting, and addresses by Manning Hawthorne and Henry Wadsworth Longfellow Dana, who is collaborating with him in a book on Hawthorne, will follow.

Federation students who have been or are at Tanglewood will be featured in the remaining events. Lucretia Ferre of Salt Lake City, soprano, winner of the 1948 opera scholarship presented to the National Federation of Music Clubs by the Newport Music Club, Robert Allen, 'cellist, winner of the scholarship for strings presented to the Rhode Island Federation by the same club, Martha Butler, contralto, winner of the Newport Music Club's own scholarship, and Joan Brainerd, lyric soprano and 1947 young artist winner will be soloists in chamber music concerts. Paula Lenchner, dramatic soprano, who had an important role in the center's production of "Idomeneo" last year, will be heard in recital at Sedgwick Hall, Lenox Library, under federation auspices. She is the National Federation of Music Clubs' 1945 voice winner and is now a member of the Metropolitan Opera Co.

On Sunday afternoon, the 25th, the group will attend the Bach-Mozart Festival.

This Clipping From
COLUMBIA, S. C.
STATE
JUL 1 6 1948

BACH: BRANDENBURG CONCERTO NO. 6 IN B FLAT, BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY CONDUCTING. CONCERTINO: JOSEPH DE PASQUALE AND JEAN M. CAUHOPE, VIOLISTS (RCA-Victor DM-1211, six sides).

Written during Bach's second period, as musical historians put it, while he was capellmeister to the Prince of Anhalt-Cothein, this, the last of the six famous Brandenburg concerti, has received an excellent interpretation in the hands of Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony and Messrs. Pasquale and Cauhope. This is, incidentally, the fifth of the concerti to be recorded by Koussevitzky.

As the longest of the concerti, the sixth is unique in its featuring of the two violas as a concertino. Following the general pattern established by Corelli of contrasting alternation between the tutti and the ensemble, Bach improved this relatively simple form into a highly complex and brilliantly designed polyphonic tapestry for instruments. The polyphony in this last concerto is extremely complex and intriguing and the color weird and mysterious. This is probably due to the untrue tone color of the viola de gamba. The three movements are in the classical concerto pattern. They are: Allegro, Adagio ma non tanto and Allegro.

Bach's original inventory valued these concerti at 10 cents each or a total of 60 cents for the six. This same evaluation might be placed on the thin and echoey sound of this recording, especially in the second movement. The thinness and echo is probably due to the Tanglewood shed recording. The performance is beyond criticism.

Paula Lenchner To Give Recital At Sedgwick Hall

Jul 17 Eagle

Miss Paula Lenchner

LENOX — Miss Paula Lenchner, dramatic soprano of the Metropolitan Opera Company, will give a recital at Sedgwick Hall in the Lenox Library building next Saturday evening, July 24, under the auspices of the National Federation of Music Clubs.

Miss Lenchner, who was the federation's 1945 young artist voice winner, and who last year was a student in the opera department at Tanglewood, will be presented by the Federation in connection with the week-end program marking the dedication of the "Little Red House," Nathaniel Hawthorne's former house at Tanglewood. The house has been rebuilt by the federation as practice studios for the Berkshire Music School. Last year Miss Lenchner appeared in the opera, "Idomeneo."

12—The Berkshire Evening Eagle, Friday, July 16, 1948

Tanglewood Times Comes Out Today

A large inset bust of Serge Koussevitzky overlooking the Music Shed is the photographic composition by Luigi Bearzi which dominates the front page of the first issue of this season's Tanglewood Times distributed in the Berkshires today. Raymond Librizzi of this city is the editor and publisher.

The Times includes articles on the Metropolitan Opera by Margaret Carson; on the Indianapolis Symphony by Fabien Sevitzky, it's conductor; on Ferruccio Tagliavini by Harriet Clark; on the Berkshire Community Symphony by H. O. Barschdorf; on bike racing by an amateur bike champion; and an interview with Brooks Atkinson by Mr. Librizzi. The eight-page paper lists information on music, the theatre and recreation.

The paper is being published for the third summer.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
JUL 17 1948

WEEK-END CONCERTS AT MUSIC FESTIVAL

The week-end programs for the concerts to be given at the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, are as follows:—

This evening the Juilliard String Quartet will play the Second, Third and Fifth String Quartets of Bela Bartok.

Tomorrow morning at 10.30 students of chamber music will play the Suite for Brass Septet by Berezowsky, Suite after Çorrette for Oboe, Clarinet and Bassoon by Darius Milhaud, who came from France to teach composition at the school, and a string quartet by Lucas Foss, composer, conductor and pianist, who will be piano soloist three times in the Bach-Mozart series that will start off the Berkshire Festival Sunday afternoon, Serge Koussevitzky conducting.

Two foreign students will play in the Foss quartet. The first violinist will be Zvi Zeitlin of Palestine. The second violin part will be played by Ma Si Hon of Shanghai, China.

The chamber orchestra concert scheduled for Monday afternoon will be postponed to Friday.

Although no seats remain for tomorrow's Bach concert, it will be heard from the lawn surrounding the theatre-concert hall by those buying general admission. The program will be repeated Tuesday evening. Admission tickets will be on sale from noon for Sunday's concert. Student events and the Juilliard concert will be open to Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
JUL 18 1948

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL
TANGLEWOOD
Lenox, Mass.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Conductor, Serge Koussevitzky

Today, 3:30 P. M., Bach program. Soloists: Lukas Foss, Ralph Berkowitz, Bernard Zighera, pianists; Georges Laurent, flute. Program to be repeated Tuesday, July 27.

Brandenburg Concerto No. 3 in G; Cantata No. 65, Sie werden aus Saba alle kommen (conducted by Hugh Ross); Concerto in D minor, for three pianos; Suite No. 2, in B minor, for flute and strings; Concerto in C, for three pianos.

Tuesday, 8:15 P. M., Mozart program, Soloist, Lukas Foss, piano. Program to be repeated Sunday, July 25.

Symphony in C (K. 338); Serenade for wind instruments in C minor (K. 388); Concerto for piano in G (K. 453); Symphony in E flat (K. 543).

Every Saturday

Despite Tanglewood Hawthorne Was Not Wild About Berkshire

By Richard V. Happel

DEDICATION of Hawthorne's cottage will, no doubt, be a nostalgic bit of mummery next Friday and Saturday at Tanglewood. Overlooked, and properly so, will be the number of contradictions which might enter the picture.

Hawthorne and the Berkshire Hills Conference never would have gotten on at all. The immortal writer came here because he had lost his political job in Salem, and was hard up. That would cloud anyone's appreciation of our beautiful hills. The house was much too small for the Hawthorne family, and in 1850 and '51 the Berkshires were not a fashionable stamping ground. There were many literary greats here, however, but Hawthorne seemed ill at ease among his own kind.

There is a further irony in the situation. The replica of the Little Red House will contain three studios for the music school at Tanglewood; but Hawthorne was notoriously unmusical, and wrote friends that he couldn't even hum "Yankee Doodle," in the right key. If he were to return, the writer undoubtedly would give the Berkshires a wider berth than ever. Besides the bitter cold winters to which Hawthorne was allergic, there would be summers filled with music which he couldn't understand or enjoy.

Rebuilding the cottage, which burned to the ground in 1890, was a major sleuthing and contracting job for Lenox contractor, Harold Fenton. Plans of the original don't exist. Two faded pictures at the Lenox Library showed the front elevation and one side, which helped. Hawthorne's letters gave other clues, and luckily, the original foundation walls were found nearly intact in the filled-up cellar hole.

The original hearthstone was found in the debris, and a pair of fire tongs, both of which have been replaced in the house. Garden planting has been duplicated, from information contained in Mrs. Hawthorne's letters to her mother. The Berkshire Museum, which has the original pump in its historical collection, presented a replica to Tanglewood, and it is in place over the old well, which yields pure, cold water. Even the rail fence and lilac trees are in their 1850 positions. Dr. Anson Phelps Stokes, a neighbor, who remembers the house but of course not the Hawthornes, says it's a faithful duplication.

Next week's dedication will be a moving event, but it's just as well that Hawthorne won't be there. He wouldn't have liked it.

* * * *

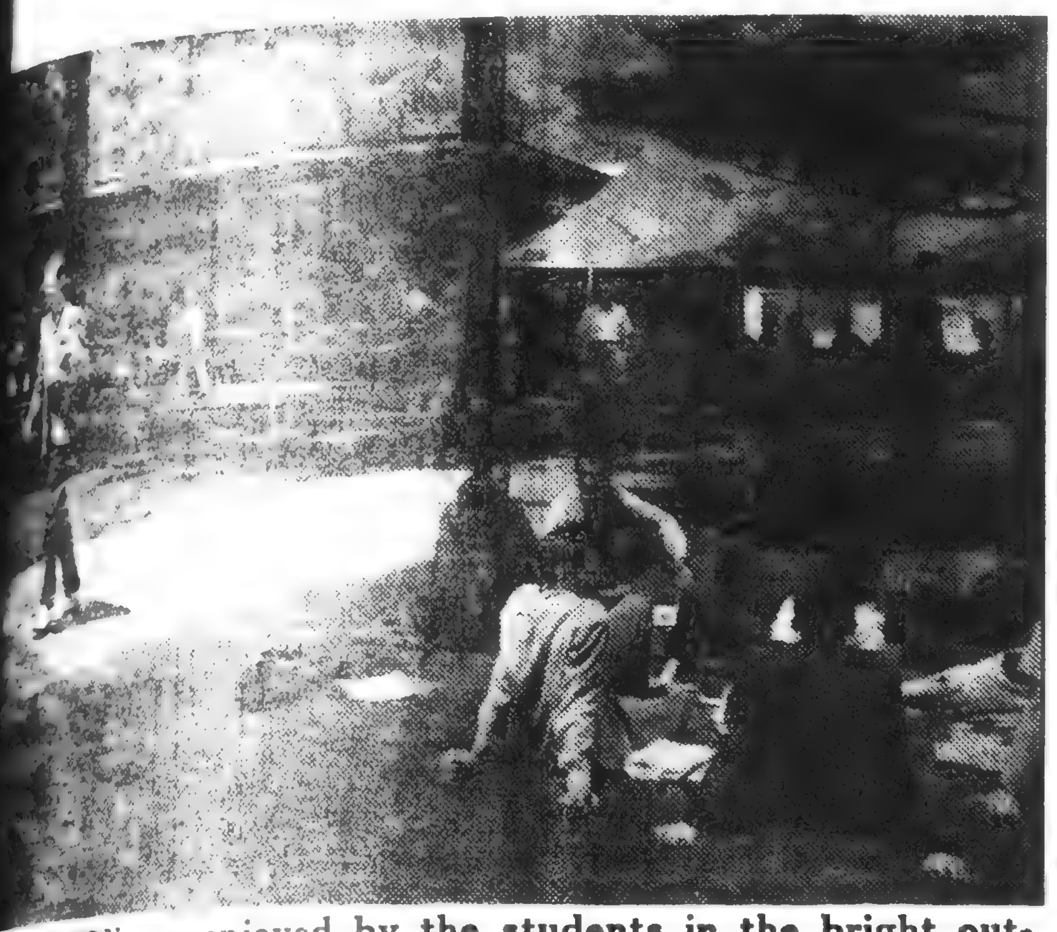
MODERN DESIGN AT TANGLEWOOD: The new reception room at Tanglewood was opened this week to the public. It is to be used as a waiting room and for information. The structure is 37 feet long, 19 feet wide and 14 feet high. There are 35 sections of one-quarter inch plate glass set in steel framing on either side of the building in order to retain the view across the lawn. It was built by Carroll, Verge & Whipple Inc., of Pittsfield, from plans by Saarinen, Saarinen, & Associates of Bloomfield Hills, Mich. The elder Saarinen was architect for the Shed, the theatre, and the chamber music hall. The decorating was done by the RCA Victor Company whose Berkshire radio and phonograph, is demonstrated daily between 10 AM and concert time. The sale of the machine is for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center scholarship fund. The combination machine also contains television but due to a mountain directly west of Tanglewood which prevents reception from Schenectady, it cannot be used.

Jul 17 Eagle

INFORMATION OBSCURED

sic Pours From Every House, Shed, Window and Door at Tanglewood

"I Barged in and Offered My Services to Three Boston Symphony Men," Groans One Too Ambitious Student



ELAXATION are enjoyed by the students in the bright out- respite from their studies at Tanglewood.

UNDER THE WATCHFUL EYE of the instructor, student takes over at conducting, during a morning session in the Chandler Music Hall, Tanglewood.

ETTY CONNOLLY and WEN McLAUGHLIN

s music there is contentment and this l of Tanglewood. Tanglewood, which was once the meeting place of Emerson, Holmes and Melville is now the meeting place of musicians who come from almost every state in our nation and from coutries throughout the world. It is the United Nations of music.

Music is everywhere. It comes from the shed, from every window of the Main House, the Chamber Music Hall, the Theatre Concert Hall, the red Cottage, the Barn. As we approached, the Main House sounded like a music box gone mad. The spacious porch was filled with students reading the many notices on the bulletin boards or chatting on the benches at the far end of the porch.

"Did you hear 'The Death and the Maidens" string quartet being played with three strings?" questioned a very red-faced student. "I did and I barged in and offered my services to three Boston Symphony men! Why doesn't someone lock me up!" he groaned.

We wandered down the steps of the Main House across the shaded lawn to the Chamber Music Hall where a choral group was singing a choral work by Palestrina under the direction of Alfred Patterson from Christ Church in Cambridge.

"Softer, softer, softer," he was urging them as we approached the back of the hall which was opened to the outside but then he clapped his hands.

"No! No! You are not doing it," he said impatiently. After a few directions they began again but he cautioned them with: "Please sing pianissimo. The only time you'll get piano is when you are out of kilter."

Time at a Minimum

We sat upon a little rock bench and listened to them and noted that all ages were represented. There were young students, middle aged men and women (directors in their own schools) and even the owner of a foundry in Erie, Penn. This group is not limited as to the number of times a student may return. All the other groups do not favor this since it lessens the chances for giving new students an opportunity to study at Tanglewood.

We could still hear the choral group as we strolled down the paths of the formal gardens, deserted except for a note book and school bag left by some student on a curving marble bench, a memorial to the Tappan family, the original owners. These gardens have been used on occasions to present scenes from operas on a raised platform placed at one end of the gardens and the audience at the other.

The solitude of Ann McMillan, from Wisconsin and a graduate of Bennington, was broken when we came upon her seated on a stone bench at the end of the grape arbor. She was practicing on her French horn with such diligence that she didn't hear us approach. She used nothing but superlatives to describe Tanglewood and its "hardworking atmosphere."

"If I ever get through my practicing today I'll take a quick dip in the lake. Time is at a minimum here," she told us.

Time Out for Lunch

Drawn by the persistent bang of hammers we found ourselves outside the Scenic Workshop and in back of the Theatre-Concert Hall. Inside the workshop scenes for "The Turk in Italy" were being discussed and constructed amidst the din of hammering and sawing. Outside underneath the shade of towering oak trees scenes were being repainted by dungaree-clad fellows and girls and then set up against the tree trunks to dry, scenery which last year had been used in opera department's production of "Figaro." Shop talk was rapidly being replaced by lunch talk and the fare for the day.

"Two loaves enough and how about a new jar of mayonnaise?" bellowed a hungry member of the stage crew from inside the workshop.

"Ye gods man! I could eat a whole loaf myself," countered a fellow worker.

"You'd better get four today we ware all starving by 3 yesterday," advised Dante De Fazio from Pittsfield, a drama student at B. C. and a carpenter at Tanglewood. He told us that some students form groups, luncheon clubs, and pool their money rather than buy their lunch separately at the cafeteria.

Picnic Groups

"I couldn't wait today, though," said Dorothy Rozzi, an Emerson student from Providence, R. I. "I was starved. This air sure does things to my appetite." She was perched upon a picnic table tailor fashion remaking a gown used previously in a production of "Tosca" for the leading lady in "The Turk in Italy."

"Food's here!" shouted a ravenous scene painter, refering to the return of the luncheon foragers from Lenox. A table underneath the trees was quickly cleared of a half-painted scene and the luncheon fare was spread and the sandwich making begun. We left for the cafeteria when someone bellowed, "Who wants a baloney?"

After we had gotten our lunch we were hailed by Joan Moynagh of Worcester and an opera student to join their group which was busily making and eating sandwiches. This gay group was seated on an Indian blanket in the center of which was crowded sliced baloney and cheese, a jar of peanut butter and one of jelly, sliced cucumbers and tomatoes, a bottle of grape juice and a quart of milk propped against each other for support and a large chocolate cake was awaiting dessert.

"I hope you saved some for me, you hungry hounds," said Adele Addison of Springfield and the leading lady of Tanglewood's operatic production "The Turk in Italy," as she plopped down on the edge of the blanket.

"Here—and I made it myself just for you. You don't give your fellow workers enough credit," and with that Francis Barnum (Barney) of Boise, Idaho, produced a true Dagwood special. It was then that we noticed Pia Sebastian, who had arrived only the night before from Paris, pointing to a large black ant which was crawling rapidly to the rim of the jelly jar. Then followed a hilarious explanation of ant and aunt. Pia finally in self defense laughingly said, "I understand."

It was time for seconds and David Pollari from Pennsylvania and more recently from the cast of "Allegro" in New York asked Pia if she would like a peanut butter sandwich.

"I—I don't understand," said a very puzzled Pia.

"Anyone know the French or Spanish for peanut butter?" asked David in desperation. Joan stopped the language charades by giving Pia a taste of her sandwich.

"Yes, yes, I will have one," she laughed, "and I have had it before."

Quietly we slipped into the Theatre-Concert Hall to find the first few rows filled by boys and girls lounging leisurely but all intent on a discussion of a scene from "Figaro" led by Sarah Caldwell, an assistant to Mr. Goldovsky, the head of the Opera department. It is the only department that holds class on Saturday afternoon.

After the discussion and question period a scene from "Figaro" was then enacted by two students in which the action and the timing were perfected before a note was sung. Criticisms and suggestions came from the students as well as the director making the class lively and interesting. It was at this time that we learned that the worst condemnation an opera student at Tanglewood may receive is, "You look like an opera singer."

The afternoon was very warm so we sauntered leisurely down the narrow dirt road past the recently restored, Red Cottage where Hawthorne imagined his "Tanglewood Tales", past The Barn, past a field laden with Daisies and Black Eyed Susans to the lake.

We collapsed on a bench under the towering pine trees and bemoaned the fact that we didn't have our bathing suits. The little beach was crowded as well as the pier and the floats with what seemed to be all the students at Tanglewood.

● If you enjoy today's Boston Sunday Globe, you will also enjoy the Morning and Evening Globe weekdays. Order your Morning or Evening Boston Globe from your local newsdealer today.

[172]

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

JUL 18 1948

Koussevitzky Begins Series In Berkshires

Boston Symphony Plays Works of Bach Today, Mozart List Tuesday

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., opens today and next Tuesday night with Bach and Mozart programs under Serge Koussevitzky's direction: The dates and programs are:

Bach program, today at 3:30; Tuesday, July 27, at 8:15. Brandenburg Concerto No. 3; Cantata No. 65, Sie werden aus Saba alle kommen; Concerto in D minor for 3 pianos and strings (Lukas Foss, Bernard Zighera, Ralph Berkowitz); Suite No. 2 (flute solo, Georges Laurent); Concerto in C major for three pianos and strings.

Mozart program, Tuesday, July 20, 8:15, and Sunday, July 25, 3:30. Symphony in C (K. 338); Serenade for winds (K. 388); Piano Concerto in G major (K. 543) (Lukas Foss); Symphony in E Flat (K. 543).

The third program of the Coolidge Schubert chamber music series will be given by the Boston String Quartet on Wednesday night at 8:15, including the "Death and the Maiden" quartet, the quartet movement in C minor and the string quintet in C major. Other events scheduled by the Berkshire Music Center for this week are:

Today, 10:30 a. m., Department II chamber music; Monday, 4:30, Department II chamber orchestra; Wednesday, 4:30, song recital; Thursday, 8:15, Opera scenes, Department V; Friday, 8:15, Department II orchestra; Koussevitzky conducting; Sunday, July 25, 10:30, Joan Brainerd, soprano.

On Saturday afternoon at 2 o'clock the National Federation of Music Clubs will present the Hawthorne Cottage, which it has reconstructed at Tanglewood, to the Berkshire Music Center. Manning Hawthorne, grandson of Nathaniel Hawthorne; Henry Wadsworth Longfellow Dana, great-grandson of Henry Wadsworth Longfellow; Mrs. Royden J. Keith, president of the federation, and Dr. Koussevitzky will speak. Mrs. Guy Patterson Gannett, chairman of the restoration committee, will make the presentation.

A four-hour benefit program for needy musicians in Europe will be held at Tanglewood on Tuesday, Aug. 3. The activities of the Berkshire Music Center's departments will be demonstrated at 6 o'clock and Cornelia Otis Skinner, Maurice Evans and the Boston Symphony under Dr. Koussevitzky will take part in the evening program at 8 o'clock.

This Clipping From NORFOLK, VA.
VIRGINIAN-PILOT

8 1948

Hawthorne's 'Red House' To Be Shrine

Music Clubs to Dedicate Replica of Home as Permanent Center

The rebuilt "Little Red House" will be dedicated as a permanent literary shrine to Nathaniel Hawthorne, one of the greatest American novelists, Saturday at 2 p. m. with Manning Hawthorne, of West Torrington, Conn., eldest living great-grandson of the author to bear his name, as a speaker. Upon its dedication it will become a permanent adjunct to the Berkshire Music Center.

Erected on the site of the house where Hawthorne wrote "The House of Seven Gables" and "The Wonder Book," by the National Federation of Music Clubs, the project was started by Mrs. Guy Patterson Gannett, immediate past president, in 1941. Mrs. Gannett will make the formal presentation to the Berkshire Music Center.

The house, built on the foundation of the old, is an exact replica of "The Little Red House," where Hawthorne lived with his family and worked in 1850 and 1851. Within it houses two practice studios, each seating 35; a powder room and men's room, a fully equipped witchenette, and a lobby and reception room. The Victorian motif has been carried out in the interior. The old pump from which the Hawthorne family drew its drinking water has been restored, and later the garden, as it existed in Hawthorne's day, will be replanted.

Dr. ~~Serge~~ Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony and moving spirit of the Berkshire Music Center, will conduct classes in one of the studios. He will conduct a concert by the advanced student orchestra and dedicated to the National Federation of Music Clubs Friday.

Norfolk clubs belonging to the national federation, the Scherzo and the Keynote Music clubs, have contributed to the project. Mrs. Julia Fuqua Ober, a member of the national board, immediately preceded Mrs. Gannett as president.

Boston Globe July 18

Bach Program Today Will Open Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood

Serge Koussevitzky will open the 1948 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood this afternoon with a program of music by Bach for small orchestra and soloists. This will be followed on Tuesday by a Mozart program; each of these will be repeated next week. The programs will be given in the Theatre-Concert Hall and will be as follows:

JAMES PEASE, bass-baritone, will be soloist in several works during the weeks of the Berkshire Festival, including a Bach Cantata to be performed today by members of the Boston Symphony under Serge Koussevitzky.

Today at 3:30 and Tuesday, July 27, at 8:15. Bach: Third Brandenburg Concerto; Cantata No. 65, "Sie werden aus Saba Alle kommen"; Concerto in D minor for Three Pianos and Strings (soloists: Lukas Foss, Ralph Berkowitz and Bernard Zighera); Suite No. 2, in B minor (Georges Laurent, flute soloist); Concerto in C major for Three Pianos and Strings (soloists as above).

Tuesday at 8:15 and Sunday, July 25, at 3:30. Mozart: Symphony in C major (K. 338); Serenade, "Nacht Musique," for Winds (K. 388); Piano Concerto in G major (K. 453; Lukas Foss, soloist); Symphony in E-flat (K. 543).

The first series of Festival concerts by the full numbers of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will begin in the Music Shed Thursday evening, July 29. The programs for that week-end:

Thursday, July 29, at 8:15. Bach: Suite in D major No. 3; Hindemith: Symphony, "Mathis de Maler"; Beethoven: Fifth Symphony.

Saturday, July 31, at 8:15. Piston: Third Symphony; Prokofieff: First Violin Concerto (Isaac Stern, soloist); Brahms: First Symphony.

Sunday, Aug. 1, at 3:30, Leonard Bernstein conducting. Haydn: Symphony in D major, No. 104; Mahler: Symphony No. 2, "Resurrection" (soloists: Ellabelle Davis, soprano, and Nan Merriman, contralto; Berkshire Music Center Chorus)

This Clipping From DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS

JUL 1 8 1948

TANGLEWOOD, Mass.: Two days of music by the Berkshire Music Center will celebrate the dedication of the Hawthorne Cottage, restored at Tanglewood by the National Federation of Music Clubs. Home of Nathaniel Hawthorne, the cottage will be presented to the music center, Saturday. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct a student concert, Friday, with Adele Addison, soprano, a student at the center, as soloist. Following the dedication ceremony, Saturday, a concert of chamber music will be given, with soloists including LuCretia Ferre, soprano; Martha Butler, contralto, and Robert Allen, cellist, Federation scholarship students. Paula Lenchner, Metropolitan Opera dramatic soprano and winner of the federation's 1945 Young Artist contest, will appear in recital, Saturday evening.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN

JUL 18 1948

LENOX, Mass.—A month of musical events opens here today with the first concert of the Berkshire Music Festival, when music by Bach, Mozart, Tchaikovsky and others will be heard. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, Leonard Bernstein and Arthur Fiedler, will perform for thousands of music lovers.

This Clipping From
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD-AMERICAN

JUL 1 8 1948

MUSIC

Needy European Artists To Be Aided by Benefit In Berkshire Center

By E. V. W.

TO HELP needy musicians in Europe, the Boston symphony orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center will stage a four-hour benefit, including a concert by the orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and appearances by Maurice Evans and Cornelia Otis Skinner on Tuesday night, Aug. 3, in Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. Under the general designation of "Tanglewood on Parade" there will be simultaneous performances in their various buildings by all departments of the Berkshire Music Center—orchestral, choral, operatic and chamber music.

The manifestation, Dr. Koussevitzky's significant title for the assembly in which internationally known figures in the arts will take part, is scheduled for 8 P.M. in the Music Shed. Miss Skinner and Mr. Evans will each appear in Shakespearean excerpts.

'Tanglewood on Parade' With Students And Demonstrations; Grand Concert

THE GRAND CONCERT in which Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the full Boston symphony orchestra will have an especially attractive program. It will include Beethoven's "Leonore" Overture No. 3, Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf," with Wesley Addy as narrator, and a group to show the history of the waltz—"Voices of Spring" by Johann Strauss, "Valse Triste" by Sibelius and with "La Valse" of Ravel. Festivities will begin at 6 P.M. To carry out the "Tanglewood on Parade" idea there will be a procession of the 462 students of the Berkshire Music Center, each department carrying identifying banners. After the demonstrations by the school, from 7 to 8 P.M. will be given over to supper. Patrons are invited to bring picnic baskets and to use the buffet and new refreshment booths on the grounds at Tanglewood. Patrons subscribing for reserved seats will be invited to a special added attraction, a performance at 4 P.M. in the Tanglewood gardens of "The Telephone" by Gian-Carlo Menotti and scenes from other operas.

This Clipping From
DAYTON, O.
NEWS

JUL 1 8 1948

Hawthorne Cottage To Be Dedicated

LENOX, Mass., July 17.—With an elaborate two-day program, including a concert by Serge Koussevitzky and the student orchestra at the Berkshire Music Center, the National Federation of Music club will dedicate the Hawthorne cottage which it has restored at Tanglewood between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass., Friday and Saturday.

Manning Hawthorne, oldest grandson of the novelist to bear the name, and Henry Wadsworth Longfellow Dana, great grandson of the poet, will speak at the dedication ceremonies on Saturday afternoon. Mrs. Guy Patterson Gannett of Portland, Me., former president of the National Federation of Music Clubs, and chairman of the committee for restoration of the house where Nathaniel Hawthorne lived in 1850 and 1851, will formally present the cottage to the Berkshire Music Center. Dr. Koussevitzky, director of the school, will accept. Mrs. Royden J. Keith of Chicago, national president of the federation will speak.

Rose Hawthorne was born in the little red house as were two of the author's "brain children," "The Wonder Book" and "The House of the Seven Gables." Herman Melville was a frequent visitor as was the fabulous Fanny Kemble. The cottage now houses three studios.

This Clipping From
NEWARK, N. J.
NEWS

JUL 1 8 1948

Berkshire Music

Berkshire Music Festival at Lenox, Mass., opening its 10th season today, and the traditional Boston Esplanade Concerts, observing their 20th anniversary, are now at their pinnacle of popularity.

According to the Massachusetts Development and Industrial Commission, these concert series enchance vacation opportunities found in the Bay State. They present top performers from the Boston Symphony Orchestra and such talented conductors as Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, Arthur Fiedler and Leonard Bernstein.

It is not uncommon for audiences of 20,000 to line the banks of Boston's Charles River around Hatch Memorial Shell to hear the free Esplanade Concerts presented nightly, Mondays excepted, during three weeks of July.

RESORTS

This Clipping From
PORTLAND, ME.
SUNDAY TELEGRAM

JUL 18 1948

The Little Red House To Be Dedicated Saturday By NFMC

Two-Day Program Will Also Include Annual Session Of N. E. District

Lenox, Mass., July 17—Dedication of The Little Red House, former Nathaniel Hawthorne home at Tanglewood next Saturday by the National Federation of Music Clubs is creating nation-wide interest and will be attended by world-renowned figures in the music world.

The house, rebuilt on its original foundations and now containing studies, powder rooms and kitchenette for the use of Berkshire Music Center students, will be presented to the Center by Mrs. Guy Patterson Gannett of Portland, Me., immediate past president of the National Federation of Music Clubs, under whose administration the rebuilding of the house became a national project.

Acceptance of the house will be by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, and speakers will include Manning Hawthorne of North Woodstock, Conn., oldest living great-grandson of the author to bear his name, and Henry Wadsworth Longfellow, the poet, were clasmates at Bowdoin College.

Mrs. Royden J. Keith of Chicago, president of the National Federation, will extend greetings.

The dedication ceremony scheduled for 2 p. m. Saturday, is part of a two-day program which will include the annual meeting of the New England District of the Federation on Friday.

Walter G. Davis of Portland, Me., has accepted the sponsorship of the Little Red House from Maine, according to Mrs. Gannett, who is chairman of the project.

Much Maine interest is shown in the dedication as there are many Maine contributors to the fund which made the restoration of the house possible. Door latches for the house were contributed by the Maine Federation and mirrors and fixtures for the powder rooms by the Portland Rossini Club.

Inscribed in a red morocco-bound book are the names of nearly 1,000 contributors to the fund, with every state represented. This book will serve as a permanent record and will remain in the Little Red House.

Maine Federation members to be here for the dedication are Mrs. Gannett, Miss Nellie L. McCann, Gorham, president of the State Federation; Miss Louise H. Armstrong, immediate past president; Miss Marcia Merrill, president of the Portland Rossini Club; Miss Julia Edwards Noyes, past state president; Mrs. Arolyn W. Johnson, Mrs. Elsie M. Files, Miss Greta Kerr, all of Portland; Miss Madeleine Perazzi and Mrs. L. James Levisee of South Portland; Mrs. R. F. Bodwell of Augusta and Connecticut, and Mrs. Fred R. Stevens of Presque Isle.

Other Maine interest centers in the talk by Miss Gay Tapley of Portland, Me., student at the Eastman School of Music, University of Rochester, Friday afternoon at the district meeting.

Miss Tapley recently returned from the Second International Congress of the Jeunesses Musicales in Luxembourg, which she attended as a delegate from the student division of the National Federation. Plans are being made to have some of the foreign students enrolled in the Berkshire Music School excused from classes that afternoon to hear Miss Tapley. They will also hold an informal discussion on strengthening the bond between young musicians of their countries and the United States.

Dedication exercises will open Friday evening with a concert in the Shed by the Berkshire Music Center Department of Orchestra, Dr. Koussevitzky conducting. It will be dedicated to the National Federation. Soloist will be Adele Addison, soprano, New England District winner 1947 Paul Lavalle Scholarship.

Saturday at 10 a. m. delegates will attend the Berkshire Music Center Chorall rehearsal. A picnic has been [illegible] on Tanglewood grounds [illegible] 12.30 p. m. with the dedication ceremonies at 2 p. m.

Immediately following the dedication, a chamber music concert will be given in Chamber Music Hall [illegible] soloists and their numbers [illegible] Cretia Ferre, soprano, winner of the NFMC Opera Scholarship, Tanglewood, 1948, who will sing [illegible] Die Ihr De[illegible] Schopfer [illegible] Mozart [illegible] dans le [illegible] Debussy, and [illegible] tares of Mandolines, [illegible] Allen, cellist, winner of the NFMC Scholarship for strings, 1948 [illegible] Toccata by Frescobaldi and [illegible] Faure. Martha Butler [illegible] NFMC winner Opera [illegible] 1948, will sing [illegible] son [illegible] Quilter [illegible] spirituals Sometimes I [illegible] Motherless Child and [illegible] Lord. The Misses [illegible] will sing Brahms [illegible] Die Meere and [illegible]

Paula Lenchner, [illegible] 1945 Young Artist [illegible] and a member of the [illegible] Opera Company, will [illegible] in Sedgwick Hall [illegible] in the evening.

Delegates may [illegible] music concert [illegible] Hall at 10.30 a. m. [illegible] Brainerd, lyric [illegible] Artist Winner, NFMC.

Many of the [illegible] remain for the [illegible] Concert Sunday [illegible] Boston Symphony [illegible] Koussevitzky [illegible] a Mozart program [illegible] numbers: Symphony [illegible] Serenade for Wind [illegible] Minor; Concerto for [illegible] with Lukas Foss [illegible] phony in E-Flat.

At the New England [illegible] ing Friday, at which [illegible] Taylor Hatch of [illegible] preside, the business [illegible] forum will be at [illegible] Little Red House [illegible] Curtis will [illegible] Shaw of the Berkshire [illegible] faculty and as [illegible] of Providence [illegible] more, Me. [illegible]

Boston Globe July 18

Bach Program Today Will Open Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood

Serge Koussevitzky will open the 1948 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood this afternoon with a program of music by Bach for small orchestra and soloists. This will be followed on Tuesday by a Mozart program; each of these will be repeated next week. The programs will be given in the Theatre-Concert Hall and will be as follows:

JAMES PEASE, bass-baritone, will be soloist in several works during the weeks of the Berkshire Festival, including a Bach Cantata to be performed today by members of the Boston Symphony under Serge Koussevitzky.

Today at 3:30 and Tuesday, July 27, at 8:15. Bach: Third Brandenburg Concerto; Cantata No. 65, "Sie werden aus Saba Alle kommen"; Concerto in D minor for Three Pianos and Strings (soloists: Lukas Foss, Ralph Berkowitz and Bernard Zighera); Suite No. 2, in B minor (Georges Laurent, flute soloist); Concerto in C major for Three Pianos and Strings (soloists as above).

Tuesday at 8:15 and Sunday, July 25, at 3:30. Mozart: Symphony in C major (K. 338); Serenade, "Nacht Musique," for Winds (K. 388); Piano Concerto in G major (K. 453; Lukas Foss, soloist); Symphony in E-flat (K. 543).

The first series of Festival concerts by the full numbers of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will begin in the Music Shed Thursday evening, July 29. The programs for that week-end:

Thursday, July 29, at 8:15, Bach: Suite in D major No. 3; Hindemith: Symphony, "Mathis de Maler"; Beethoven: Fifth Symphony.

Saturday, July 31, at 8:15, Piston: Third Symphony; Prokofieff: First Violin Concerto (Isaac Stern, soloist); Brahms: First Symphony.

Sunday, Aug. 1, at 3:30, Leonard Bernstein conducting, Haydn: Symphony in D major, No. 104; Mahler: Symphony No. 2, "Resurrection" (soloists: Ellabelle Davis, soprano, and Nan Merriman, contralto; Berkshire Music Center Chorus)

This Clipping From DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS
JUL 18 1948

TANGLEWOOD, Mass.: Two days of music by the Berkshire Music Center will celebrate the dedication of the Hawthorne Cottage, restored at Tanglewood by the National Federation of Music Clubs. Home of Nathaniel Hawthorne, the cottage will be presented to the music center, Saturday. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct a student concert, Friday, with Adele Addison, soprano, a student at the center, as soloist. Following the dedication ceremony, Saturday, a concert of chamber music will be given, with soloists including LuCretia Ferre, soprano; Martha Butler, contralto, and Robert Allen, cellist, Federation scholarship students. Paula Lenchner, Metropolitan Opera dramatic soprano and winner of the federation's 1945 Young Artist contest, will appear in recital, Saturday evening.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN
JUL 18 1948

LENOX, Mass.—A month of musical events opens here today with the first concert of the Berkshire Music Festival, when music by Bach, Mozart, Tchaikovsky and others will be heard. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, Leonard Bernstein and Arthur Fiedler, will perform for thousands of music lovers.

This Clipping From
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD-AMERICAN
JUL 18 1948

MUSIC

Needy European Artists To Be Aided by Benefit In Berkshire Center

By E. V. W.

TO HELP needy musicians in Europe, the Boston symphony orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center will stage a four-hour benefit, including a concert by the orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and appearances by Maurice Evans and Cornelia Otis Skinner on Tuesday night, Aug. 3, in Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. Under the general designation of "Tanglewood on Parade" there will be simultaneous performances in their various buildings by all departments of the Berkshire Music Center—orchestral, choral, operatic and chamber music.

The manifestation, Dr. Koussevitzky's significant title for the assembly in which inter[illegible] figures in the arts will take part, is scheduled for 8 P.M. in the Music Shed. Miss Skinner and Mr. Evans will each appear in Shakespearean excerpts.

'Tanglewood on Parade' With Students And Demonstrations; Grand Concert

THE GRAND CONCERT in which Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the full Boston symphony orchestra will have an especially attractive program. It will include Beethoven's "Leonore" Overture No. 3, Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf," with Wesley Addy as narrator, and a group to show the history of the waltz—"Voices of Spring" by Johann Strauss, "Valse Triste" by Sibelius and with "La Valse" of Ravel. Festivities will begin at 6 P.M. To carry out the "Tanglewood on Parade" idea there will be a procession of the 462 students of the Berkshire Music Center, each department carrying identifying banners. After the demonstrations by the school, from 7 to 8 P.M. will be given over to supper. Patrons are invited to bring picnic baskets and to use the buffet and new refreshment booths on the grounds at Tanglewood. Patrons subscribing for reserved seats will be invited to a special added attraction, a performance at 4 P.M. in the Tanglewood gardens of "The Telephone" by Gian-Carlo Menotti and scenes from other operas.

This Clipping From
DAYTON, O.
NEWS
JUL 18 1948

Hawthorne Cottage To Be Dedicated

LENOX, Mass., July 17.—With an elaborate two-day program, including a concert by Serge Koussevitzky and the student orchestra at the Berkshire Music Center, the Nati[illegible]ation of Music club will dedicate the Hawthorne cottage which it has restored at Tanglewood between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass., Friday and Saturday.

Manning Hawthorne, oldest grandson of the novelist to bear the name, and Henry Wadsworth Longfellow Dana, great grandson of the poet, will speak at the dedication ceremonies on Saturday afternoon. Mrs. Guy Patterson Gannett of Portland, Me., former president of the National Federation of Music Clubs, and chairman of the committee for restoration of the house where Nathaniel Hawthorne lived in 1850 and 1851, will formally present the cottage to the Berkshire Music Center. Dr. Koussevitzky, director of the school, will accept. Mrs. Royden J. Keith of Chicago, national president of the federation will speak.

Rose Hawthorne was born in the little red house as were two of the author's "brain children," "The Wonder Book" and "The House of the Seven Gables." Herman Melville was a frequent visitor as was the fabulous Fanny Kemble. The cottage now houses three studios.

This Clipping From
NEWARK, N. J.
NEWS
JUL 18 1948

Berkshire Music

Berkshire Music Festival at Lenox, Mass., opening its 10th season today, and the traditional Boston Esplanade Concerts, observing their 20th anniversary, are now at their pinnacle of popularity.

According to the Massachusetts Development and Industrial Commission, these concert series enchance vacation opportunities found in the Bay State. They present top performers from the Boston Symphony Orchestra and such talented conductors as Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, Arthur Fiedler and Leonard Bernstein.

It is not uncommon for audiences of 20,000 to line the banks of Boston's Charles River around Hatch Memorial Shell to hear the free Esplanade Concerts presented nightly, Mondays excepted, during three weeks of July.

RESORTS

This Clipping From
PORTLAND, ME.
SUNDAY TELEGRAM
JUL 18 1948

The Little Red House To Be Dedicated Saturday By NFMC

Two-Day Program Will Also Include Annual Session Of N. E. District

Lenox, Mass., July 17—Dedication of The Little Red House, former Nathaniel Hawthorne home at Tanglewood next Saturday by the National Federation of Music Clubs is creating nation-wide interest and will be attended by world-renowned figures in the music world.

The house, rebuilt on its original foundations and now containing studies, powder rooms and kitchenette for the use of Berkshire Music Center students, will be presented to the Center by Mrs. Guy Patterson Gannett of Portland, Me., immediate past president of the National Federation of Music Clubs, under whose administration the rebuilding of the house became a national project.

Acceptance of the house will be by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, and speakers will inclu[illegible]ing Hawthorne of North Woodstock, Conn., oldest living great-grandson of the author to bear his name, and Henry Wadsworth Longfellow, the poet, were clasmates at Bowdoin College.

Mrs. Royden J. Keith of Chicago, president of the National Federation, will extend greetings.

The dedication ceremony scheduled for 2 p. m. Saturday, is part of a two-day program which will include the annual meeting of the New England District of the Federation on Friday.

Walter G. Davis of Portland, Me., has accepted the sponsorship of the Little Red House from Maine, according to Mrs. Gannett, who is chairman of the project.

Much Maine interest is shown in the dedication as there are many Maine contributors to the fund which made the restoration of the house possible. Door latches for the house were contributed by the Maine Federation and mirrors and fixtures for the powder rooms by the Portland Rossini Club.

Inscribed in a red morocco-bound book are the names of nearly 1,000 contributors to the fund, with every state represented. This book will serve as a permanent record and will remain in the Little Red House.

Maine Federation members to be here for the dedication are Mrs. Gannett, Miss Nellie L. McCann, Gorham, president of the State Federation; Miss Louise H. Armstrong, immediate past president; Miss Marcia Merrill, president of the Portland Rossini Club; Miss Julia Edwards Noyes, past state president; Mrs. Arolyn W. Johnson, Mrs. Elsie M. Files, Miss Greta Kerr, all of Portland; Miss Madeleine Perazzi and Mrs. L. James Levisee of South Portland; Mrs. R. F. Bodwell of Augusta and Connecticut, and Mrs. Fred R. Stevens of Presque Isle.

Other Maine interest centers in the talk by Miss Gay Tapley of Portland, Me., student at the Eastman School of Music, University of Rochester, Friday afternoon at the district meeting.

Miss Tapley recently returned from the Second International Congress of the Jeunesses Musicales in Luxembourg, which she attended as a delegate from the student division of the National Federation. Plans are being made to have some of the foreign students enrolled in the Berkshire Music School excused from classes that afternoon to hear Miss Tapley. They will also hold an informal discussion on strengthening the bond between young musicians of their countries and the United States.

Dedication exercises will begin Friday evening with a concert in the Shed by the Berkshire Music Center Department 11 Orchestra, Dr. Koussevitzky conducting. It will be dedicated to the National Federation. Soloist will be Adele Addison, soprano New England District winner, 1947 Paul Lavalle Scholarship.

Saturday at 10 a. m. delegates will attend the Berkshire Music Center Chorall rehearsal. A picnic luncheon on Tanglewood grounds will be at 12.30 p. m., with the dedication ceremonies at 2 p. m.

Immediately following the dedication, a chamber music concert will be given in Chamber Music Hall. The soloists and their numbers include LuCretia Ferre, soprano, winner of the NFMC Opera Scholarship, Tanglewood, 1948, who will sing Cantata Die Ihr Des unermesslichen Weltalls Schopfer ehrt by Mozart; Calme dans le demiiour, Debussy, and Guitares et Mandolines, Grovlez. Robert Allen, cellist, winner of the NFMC Scholarship for strings, 1948, will play Toccata by Frescobaldi and Elegie by Faure. Martha Butler, contralto NFMC winner Open Scholarship 1948, wil sing Now Sleeps The Crimson Petal, Quilter, and two Negro spirituals, Sometimes I Feel Like A Motherless Child and Wash Me O Lord. The Misses Ferre and B[illegible] will sing Brahms' Two Duets Op. [illegible] Die Meere and Wie der Liebe.

Paula Lenchner, dramatic soprano 1945 Young Artist Winner of NFMC and a member of the Metropolitan Opera Company, will give a [illegible] in Sedgwick Hall, the Lenox [illegible] in the evening.

Delegates may attend a [illegible] music concert in Chamber [illegible] Hall at 10.30 a. m. Sunday, when [illegible] Brainerd, lyric soprano 1947 [illegible] Artist Winner, NFMC, will be [illegible]

Many of the Maine delegates [illegible] remain for the Berkshire Festival Concert Sunday afternoon when the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Koussevitzky conducting, will present a Mozart program with the following numbers: Symphony in C-Major; Serenade for Wind Instruments in C-Minor; Concerto for Piano in G-Major with Lukas Foss as soloist; and Symphony in E-Flat.

At the New England Dis[illegible] meeting Friday, at which Mrs. [illegible] Taylor Hatch of Melrose, [illegible] preside, the business [illegible] forum will be at 10.30 a. [illegible] the Little Red House. Luncheon at [illegible] Curtis will have as [illegible] Shaw of the Berksshire [illegible] faculty, and as soloist D[illegible] of Providence, R. I., form[illegible] more, Me., first winner of an Artis[illegible]

MUSIC IN THE BERKSHIRES

by Leonard Burkat

Near the western border of the state of Massachusetts, more than 100 miles from the sea, stand the Berkshire Hills, remnants of an ancient and imposing range of mountains. The countryside is dotted with small one-industry cities, with prosperous farms, with relics of iron mining and the heavy industry of 125 years ago, and with the country estates of the wealthy from Boston and New York. In the heart of the Berkshires, about 140 miles from those two great cities of the North-east, lies the town of Lenox, a near-perfect example of what Americans across all our 3,000 miles like to think of as a typical New England community—wide streets, unbroken expanses of green lawn, an old white and gracefully steepled Congregational Church on the highest hill near the centre of the town. For forty-six weeks in the year the population of Lenox is under 3,000 persons, but on a sunny Sunday afternoon early in August it may hold five times as many within its borders. Lenox is the home of the Berkshire Music Centre and the Berkshire Festival.

In the summer of 1934 a group of prominent citizens in neighbouring Stockbridge engaged sixty-five members of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra for a week of three concerts that attracted a total audience of about 5,000. With the engagement of Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra two years later attendance tripled. In 1937 the 210 acre estate called Tanglewood was presented to the Boston Orchestra for the festival. Here Herman Melville had visited his friend Nathaniel Hawthorne who, during his two year stay in a little red cottage on the road that runs through the centre of the estate, had planned Tanglewood Tales, written The Wonder Book and assembled the materials for The House of the Seven Gables.

The Berkshire Festival was gradually extended, the scope of activity enlarged, the " plant " increased. This year there were fifteen concerts (including two repetitions), the school called the Berkshire Music Centre had almost 450 students (it started in 1940 with about 300), the largest auditorium seats 6,000 (where once stood a circus tent).

A Beethoven program this season brought an audience of almost 15,000—6,000 in the shed and 9,000 on the lawn. Who are these people? They are a cross section of the musical audience of all the United States: those who have long wanted to hear a " live " performance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra but can travel long distances to it only in the summer vacation season*; children from nearby summer camps; large estate holders; the local citizenry from town mayor, minister and physician to shop keepers and mill hands. There are young people and old, famous musicians and lowliest laymen come to their first concerts. And they come not only to the Festival concerts but also to the many demonstrations of the Berkshire Music Centre.

---

* I should mention here that in the course of its regular season the Orchestra's twenty-four weeks of concerts in Boston are interrupted by weeks of touring that take it to eighteen other cities in eleven states.

But I shall never forget the first rehearsal with Walter—the deadly fear which I endured. I confessed to him that I had never sung the rôle. If he didn't like the idea at least he didn't show it, and started to work with me. The rôle grew with each rehearsal until I really lived it and fitted into the frame of this wonderful performance without disturbing it, which is saying a great deal. Ochs was Richard Mayr, Octavian the enchanting Delia Reinhard—very convincing, slender, graceful and refined to her fingertips—the born "young gentleman of a noble family"; Sophie was the incomparable Elisabeth Schumann. Those were unforgettable performances and unforgettable times.

Since then I have remained faithful to the rôle of the Marschallin. Ever again, on the rare occasions when I sing it, I am filled with joy in feeling the words and music flowing from me as if I myself were creating them, so completely have I become one with this rôle. And each time when, leaving Octavian and Sophie alone together in the third act, I close the door behind me it is as if with a smiling farewell I were closing the door upon an experience of my own.

And isn't this really so? Isn't each time a farewell, now that I so rarely return to the opera? I am now only a guest. I no longer feel that I belong to the colourful world of the stage. Waiting in the wings for my late entrance in the third act I feel as a stranger to whom this fantastic world is something new. Then I realize again with a kind of melancholy that this was once my whole life—the theatre and all that went with it. And the Vienna Opera rises before me in all its old splendour.

The absorbing business of making up was spiced with the latest opera gossip—piquant scandals of which there was never any lack. From every dressing-room came the sound of singing—vocalizes or short fragments of rôles. In the midst of it all would sound the bell of the stage manager. Colleagues would stick their heads in at the door: "Good luck . . ." Each member of my family came or sent messages wishing me success. At the last minute Otto, my good husband, would appear, always elegant in his evening dress, wishing me "Good luck." He always knew just where he must keep his fingers crossed for me—where I was nervous, where I was sure, when I enjoyed singing, when I was afraid. He was thoroughly musical and enjoyed my singing and the whole colorful life of the opera as if he belonged to it with every fibre of his being. My brother Fritz, looking worried: "Are you nervous?" A question which I always answered with a false lightness: "Heavens no—not at all," although I was actually trembling with stage fright. But it would have made me miserable to know that any one so close to me was nervous on my account, just as it distressed him to feel that I might be suffering with stage fright. So we reassured one another with complete nonchalance. My father, who lived through the first nine years of my growing career in Vienna, filled with pride and touchingly biased. There existed but one singer for him—his daughter; all others were in his eyes only mediocre. He followed with jealous attention the criticisms of my "rivals," and was annoyed at each success if it did not contain the name of Lotte Lehmann. My mother, who liked best to hear me in touching rôles like Manon, Marguerite or Elsa, and would cry bitter tears if she had to see me die on the stage. It was quite impossible for her to listen to Desdemona, much as she loved the music, for seeing me strangled was more than she could bear. . . .

It is one of the curiosities of the history of music in the last century or two that few great musicians, creative or executant, have had much skill or even interest in teaching. There are obvious exceptions of course in the cases of Mendelssohn and the Leipzig Conservatory and of Liszt and perhaps a few others. Yet at Tanglewood Koussevitzky is not only orchestra conductor but also director and able, active administrator of a flourishing educational institution. In addition he teaches conducting—gives private lessons and stands in the orchestra to watch his pupils in action; Aaron Copland, Arthur Honegger and Samuel Barber teach composition; Gregor Piatigorsky and William Primrose prepare student chamber ensembles; and the first desk players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra coach sectional rehearsals of the student orchestras and chamber music classes.

The Berkshire Music Centre is an extraordinary school of music that can attract students to a six-week session in the eastern United States from California, from Chile, from Norway and Czechoslovakia, and even from Syria and Palestine. What brings them can be nothing but a desire to participate in the most intensive and best guided music-making now possible anywhere on this earth. There are rehearsals and classes from 8.45 a.m. to 5.30 p.m., at least one concert every day and sometimes three. The aim of the Centre as put forth by Dr. Koussevitzky is found in creation, production and ensemble performance. Young conservatoire-trained virtuosi who can play a dozen concertos, sit in the orchestra in the morning and play quartets all afternoon. There are no certificates, diplomas or degrees—only music.

The Centre is organized in departments for work in orchestral and choral conducting, composition, orchestral playing, opera, and choral singing and ensemble performance of instrumental music. The Opera Department does not include singers alone. It offers young people a rare opportunity to study the work of the opera repetiteur, the problems of conducting opera, stage design and stage direction for opera, and the problems of opera production in general. Even in the department devoted to the serious amateur and the less experienced musician the orchestra repertoire ran to Rimsky-Korsakoff, Milhaud, and the First Symphony of Mahler. This department, too, supplied the choruses that sang all kinds of music from Jannequin chanson and a Dowland air to Britten's Ceremony of Carols Copland's In the Beginning and Stravinsky's Symphony of Psalms. Is not Dr. Koussevitzky right in speaking of musical "seeds sown in the fertile soil of Tanglewood . . . to live and bear rich harvest!"

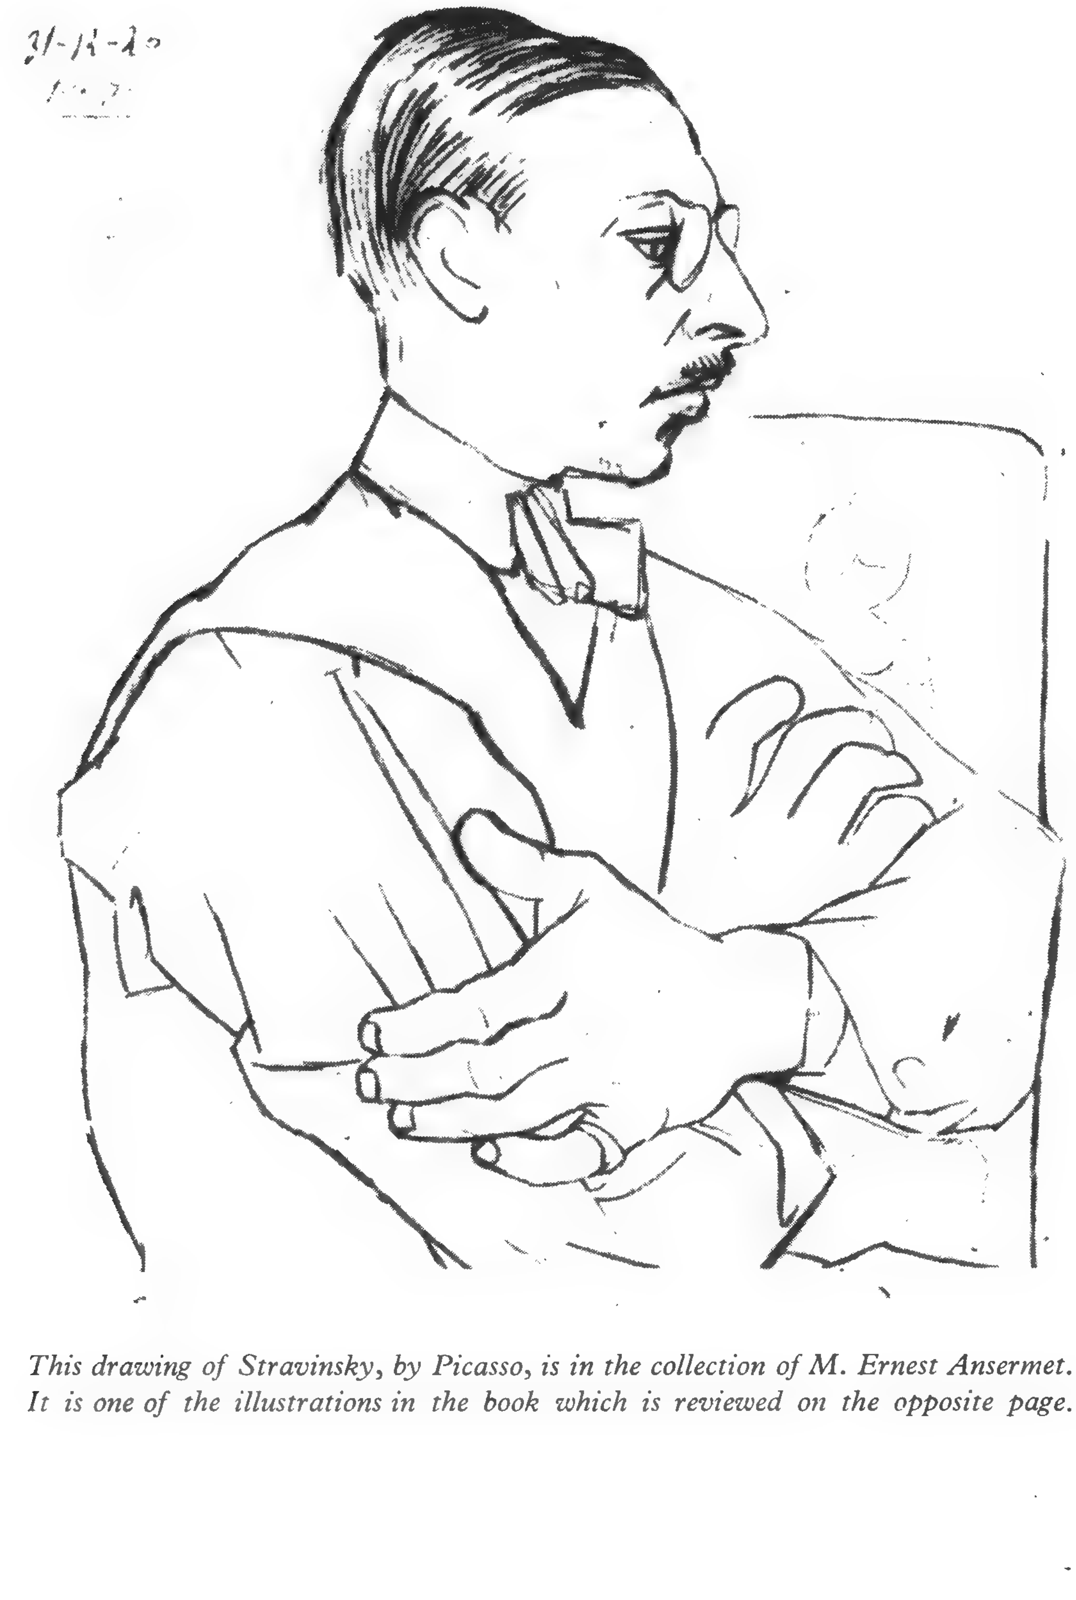
It may be wondered what kind of music the 450 students occupy themselves with. Of course they must be given an opportunity to gain experience in the performance of the standard repertory but they must also keep abreast the music of their own time. Even the Opera Department, which in 1946 presented the American première of Peter Grimes, must leave its beloved Mozart and Rossini and Verdi and Wagner for a scene from Berg's Wozzek. In the series of student chamber music concerts there was a complete performance of Bach's Musikalisches Opfer and a Hindemith-Poulenc-Vaughan Williams program. A student orchestra played Bach and Tchaikovsky under Dr. Koussevitzky in one week, Copland's Appalachian Spring under Leonard Bernstein the next, and Stravinsky's Symphony in Three Movements (with a student conductor !) the week after.

In addition to actual music making there are informal courses in harmonic analysis (in which Piston's First Quartet, Copland's Violin Sonata and Stravinsky's Scènes de Ballet were studied), in the analysis of form, and in solfège, and a series of lecture-recitals by Aaron Copland, Leonard Bernstein and Irving Fine (a young Assistant Professor of Music at Harvard who teaches harmonic analysis at Tanglewood and was one of the three conducting students this year) surveying the history of our music. Here was a rare opportunity to hear every kind of American music from the folk song of the Indian and the crude works of the Colonial composers to compositions of Bloch, Piston, Harris and Copland and even such a group—not averaging thirty years of age—as Harold Shapero (a twenty-five year old of whose great gifts we shall soon hear more), Alexei Haieff, Lukas Foss, William Bergsma and John Cage. There was even a series of open forum meetings under the direction of Aaron Copland on such subjects as " What is the Future of Experimental Music ? " and " What is the Place of the Musician in Society ? "

Sixteen composers are carefully selected from many applicants for study with Aaron Copland, who is assistant Director of the school, and a guest composer. Hindemith and Martinů have each had two years at Tanglewood. This year Honegger came from France and was replaced by the American, Samuel Barber, when he fell ill. The student composers come from all parts of the world, from all kinds of musical environments. They speak in every dialect, as it were, of the musical language of today. There are a neo-classicist from Prague, a late impressionist from Uruguay, followers of Schoebnerg and of Stravinsky, tonalists and atonalists of all kinds. But the strongest single influence is clearly that of Stravinsky, whose clarity and conciseness of expression are greatly admired. The texture and the harmonic style of his latest works are the features most admired and most frequently emulated by the young composers. It is certainly significant of the high place that he holds in the mind of the musical public today that the Festival concerts and a special program played by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra offered five of Stravinsky's works: The Rite of Spring, Histoire du Soldat, the Octet, the Symphony of Psalms and the Duo Concertant for violin and piano.

TANGLEWOOD, MASS.

The home of the Berkshire Music Centre and the annual festival which is described in Mr. Burkat's article on the opposite page. Koussevitzky is the guiding spirit of this remarkable enterprise.



This drawing of Stravinsky, by Picasso, is in the collection of M. Ernest Ansermet.
It is one of the illustrations in the book which is reviewed on the opposite page.

July 18

JAMES PEASE SINGS AT TANGLEWOOD TODAY

JAMES PEASE

James Pease, bass-baritone, will be appearing at the Berkshire Festival for the fourth consecutive season at the Bach concert by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Theatre-Concert Hall at Tanglewood this afternoon at 3.30. He will be heard in the cantata "Sie werden aus Saba Alle kommen." The program will be repeated Tuesday evening, July 27. Mr. Pease will also be soloist in Stavinsky's "Oedipus Rex" on Thursday evening, August 5, and the Brahms "Requiem" Saturday evening, August 14.

Hugh Ross will conduct the cantata. The program also includes the concerto for three pianos in D minor with Lukas Foss, Ralph Berkowitz and Bernard Zighera soloists the suite in B minor with Georges Laurent, flutist, closing with the concerto for three pianos in C major.

This Clipping From
BOSTON, MASS.
MORNING GLOBE
[illegible] 1948

Elegy for Pershing on Esplanade Tonight

In tribute to General John J. Pershing, the Boston Symphony players will substitute in their program for tonight on the Esplanade, one member in the nature of an elegy for the two listed to follow the national anthem at the beginning of the second half of the program:

They will play the slow movement of the Beethoven Symphony No. 7, which has been played on other occasions in honor of national figures who have passed away.

The 85 musicians, many of whom are veterans of World Wars I and II, will be led by the guest conductor, G. Wallace Woodworth, during the temporary absence of Arthur Fiedler.

M. Gannett Fund Scholarship. Miss Tapley will speak at the Youth Session in the afternoon in the Little Red House.

The National Little Red House committee includes Mrs. Gannett, Miss Ruth M. Ferry of New Haven, Conn., Mrs. Hatch, and Mrs. Ada Holding Miller of Providence, R. I.

Mrs. Koussevitzky is heading a dedication day committee and has serving with her Mr. and Mrs. John McChesney, Lakeville, Conn.; Mrs. Philip Weston, Mr. and Mrs. Stuart C. Henry, Lawrence K. Miller and Col. William H. Eaton, all of Pittsfield; Mr. and Mrs. Lambert Heyniger, New Lebanon, N. Y.; Mr. and Mrs. Adolf A. Berle, jr., and Albert Spalding, Great Barrington; Mrs. Albert Sterner, Richmond; Mrs. William N. Bullard, Mrs. Bruce Sanborn, Lenox; Mrs. Bruce Crane, Dalton; Mrs. Edward Thaw, Boston; Bernard Hoffman, Stockbridge; Mrs. William Felton Barrett, Egremont; and Genia Nemenoff, New York City.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
JUL 18 1948

MUSIC ON THE RADIO

By B. H. HAGGIN

THE Boston Symphony broadcast from Tanglewood on Tuesday evening will give the radio audience (wherever A. B. C.'s affiliated stations are willing) a chance to hear one of the shamefully infrequent performances of Mozart's Piano Concerto K. 453, an outstanding specimen in the marvelous series of works that Mozart produced in this form. The academic blue-noses who talk disdainfully of opera as "impure" music and cite Mozart's string quartets as the height of "purity" in music disregard the evidence in his letters that he wanted nothing so passionately as the opportunity to write an opera, and the evidence in his music that he wrote nothing which exhibits his powers more wonderfully than "The Marriage of Figaro" and the other operas, and that his works in all forms, as Dent points out in his superb book, are an emanation of the operas.

This is most strikingly true of the piano concertos, most of which were in fact written for the occasions when Mozart presented himself to the public as the greatest pianist of his time exhibiting his powers in works created expressly for the purpose by the greatest composer, and which should be listened to as musical equivalents of the play written by an actor for himself to act in. There are, first the orchestra's preliminaries, creating anticipation and building up suspense for the entrance of the piano, which proceeds to hold attention with its lovely melodies, dazzling passagework, lively dialogue with the orchestra, and eventually whirls off the stage to permit the orchestra to prepare for the piano's next entrance, and so on throughout the movement, with a pause near the end for Mozart to exhibit his powers of improvisation in the cadenza, after which the orchestra brings the curtain down on the first movement. After this liveliness a slow movement, with further interplay of orchestra and piano, presenting Mozart as composer and performer of profoundly moving melody in sustained vocal style. And then a high-spirited finale in which the interplay enables him to indulge his love of fun.

K. 453 was written for some one else to play; but this doesn't affect its character, procedure or substance. The orchestra's opening statement is one of Mozart's most remarkable themes in the way it combines every quality of feeling and style we think of as Mozartean: the grace and elegance with which the violins begin, the poignancy with which they continue in an exquisite melodic curve, the humor of the punctuating flutter of the woodwinds. The movements is, as Tovey says, "in the most intellectual vein of high comedy"; and this opening statement, with its characteristic mingling of poignancy and humor, is only one of the details which illustrate Tovey's observation that the language of comedy is often the only dignified expression for the deepest feelings. One humorous stroke occurs soon after the opening: the orchestra's first forceful outburst ends in pompous flourishes; and the orchestra stops while the bassoon goes chortling on.

Next one of the most affecting of Mozart's slow movements, and one of the most unusual in form: a poignantly meditative statement ending in drastic silence is heard several times, each time as the point of departure of a sequence of ideas, with relations of key and substance in these sequences that are too subtle to describe. And then the finale: a theme and variations, the last of which leads to a pause; after which comes a coda in the style of an opera finale. There are bustle, uproar, a crescendo, a climax which subsides into a reference by the piano to the theme of the movement; then again the uproar, crescendo, climax—and surprise: no reference to the theme this time, but only another crescendo, which seems to be bringing the movement to a close when—with startling unexpectedness—there is the piano's reference to the theme, with an equally startling and hilarious extension of the reference by woodwinds and horns; and it is with this comic stroke that the movement ends.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
JUL 18 1948

CONCERTOS

Two new concertos likely to arouse considerable interest have been completed. Howard Hanson has finished the piano one he was commissioned to write in 1945 by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation. Rudolf Firkusny will play it at the first performance next December with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky. And fulfilling a promise made fifteen years ago, Eugene Goossens has completed a violin concerto for Jascha Heifetz. The English composer-conductor is now in Australia as musical director of the Sydney Symphony Orchestra. He began the work two years ago in his last season with the Cincinnati Symphony.

SUNDAY REPUBLICAN, SPRINGFIELD, MASS., JULY 18, 1948

To Dedicate Hawthorne House

Lenox, July 17—The Little Red House of Nathaniel Hawthorne, restored on the property of Tanglewood by the National Federation of Music Clubs, will be dedicated during an elaborate two-day program Friday and Saturday. Restored to its original appearance, the dwelling now houses three studios, including that of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

The cottage in which Hawthorne lived during 1850 and 1851, and in which Rose Hawthorne was born, will be formally presented to the Berkshire Music Center by Mrs. Guy Patterson Gannett of Portland, Me., former president of the National Federation of Music Clubs. It was also in this house that Hawthorne wrote "The Wonder Book" and "The House of Seven Gables."

Mrs. Royden J. Keith of Chicago, president of the national federation will also speak, as will Manning Hawthorne, oldest grandson of the novelist, and Henry Wadsworth Longfellow Dana, great-grandson of the poet.

Bach-Mozart Series Opens at Tanglewood

The 1948 Berkshire Festival gets underway this afternoon when Serge Koussevitzky, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducts the first of four Bach-Mozart concerts in the Theatre-Concert Hall at Tanglewood between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass.

The first concert of the Festival is devoted to the works of Bach and will offer the Brandenberg Concerto No. 3 in G major for Strings; the Cantata No. 65 'Sie werden aus Saba Alle kommen" with tenor, bass, and chorus conducted by Hug Ross; the Concertos in D minor and C major for three pianos and strings with Lukas Foss, Ralph Berkowitz, and Bernard Zikhera, pianists; and the Suite No. 2 in B minor for Flute and Strings with Georges Laurent, flutist. This program will be repeated as the last of the Bach-Mozart series on Tuesday evening, July 27.

The Mozart concert on Tuesday evening, July 20, will be repeated the following Sunday afternoon, July 25, and will include: Symphony in C major K. 338; Serenade "Nacht Musique" for Winds K. 388, the Piano Concerto in G major K. 453 with Lukas Foss as soloist and the Symphony in E-flat major K. 543.

Jul 18

JAMES PEASE SINGS AT TANGLEWOOD TODAY

JAMES PEASE

James Pease, bass-baritone, will be appearing at the Berkshire Festival for the fourth consecutive season at the Bach concert by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Theater-Concert Hall at Tanglewood this afternoon at 3.30. He will be heard in the cantata "Sie werden aus Saba Alle kommen." The program will be repeated Tuesday evening, July 27. Mr. Pease will also be soloist in Stavinsky's "Oedipus Rex" on Thursday evening, August 5, and the Brahms "Requiem" Saturday evening, August 14.

Hugh Ross will conduct the cantata. The program also includes the concerto for three pianos in D minor with Lukas Foss, Ralph Berkowitz and Bernard Zighera soloists the suite in B minor with Georges Laurent, flutist, closing with the concerto for three pianos in C major.

This Clipping From
BOSTON, MASS.
MORNING GLOBE
JUL 18 1948

Elegy for Pershing on Esplanade Tonight

In tribute to General John J. Pershing, the ~~Boston Symphony~~ players will substitute, in their program for tonight on the Esplanade, one member in the nature of an elegy for the two listed to follow the national anthem at the beginning of the second half of the program:

They will play the slow movement of the Beethoven Symphony No. 7, which has been played on other occasions in honor of national figures who have passed away.

The 85 musicians, many of whom are veterans of World Wars I and II, will be led by the guest conductor, G. Wallace Woodworth, during the temporary absence of Arthur Fiedler.

M. Gannett Fund Scholarship. Miss Tapley will speak at the Youth Session in the afternoon in the Little Red House.

The National Little Red House committee includes Mrs. Gannett, Miss Ruth M. Ferry of New Haven, Conn., Mrs. Hatch, and Mrs. Ada Holding Miller of Providence, R. I.

Mrs. Koussevitzky is heading a dedication day committee and has serving with her Mr. and Mrs. John McChesney, Lakeville, Conn.; Mrs. Philip Weston, Mr. and Mrs. Stuart C. Henry, Lawrence K. Miller and Col. William H. Eaton, all of Pittsfield; Mr. and Mrs. Lambert Heyniger, New Lebanon, N. Y.; Mr. and Mrs. Adolf A. Berle, jr., and Albert Spalding, Great Barrington; Mrs. Albert Sterner, Richmond; Mrs. William N. Bullard, Mrs. Bruce Sanborn, Lenox; Mrs. Bruce Crane, Dalton; Mrs. Edward Thaw, Boston; Bernard Hoffman, Stockbridge; Mrs. William Felton Barrett, Egremont; and Genia Nemenoff, New York City.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
JUL 18 1948

MUSIC ON THE RADIO

By B. H. HAGGIN

THE Boston Symphony broadcast from Tanglewood on Tuesday evening will give the radio audience (wherever A. B. C.'s affiliated stations are willing) a chance to hear one of the shamefully infrequent performances of Mozart's Piano Concerto K. 453, an outstanding specimen in the marvelous series of works that Mozart produced in this form. The academic blue-noses who talk disdainfully of opera as "impure" music and cite Mozart's string quartets as the height of "purity" in music disregard the evidence in his letters that he wanted nothing so passionately as the opportunity to write an opera, and the evidence in his music that he wrote nothing which exhibits his powers more wonderfully than "The Marriage of Figaro" and the other operas, and that his works in all forms, as Dent points out in his superb book, are an emanation of the operas.

This is most strikingly true of the piano concertos, most of which were in fact written for the occasions when Mozart presented himself to the public as the greatest pianist of his time exhibiting his powers in works created expressly for the purpose by the greatest composer, and which should be listened to as musical equivalents of the play written by an actor for himself to act in. There are, first the orchestra's preliminaries, creating anticipation and building up suspense for the entrance of the piano, which proceeds to hold attention with its lovely melodies, dazzling passagework, lively dialogue with the orchestra, and eventually whirls off the stage to permit the orchestra to prepare for the piano's next entrance, and so on throughout the movement, with a pause near the end for Mozart to exhibit his powers of improvisation in the cadenza, after which the orchestra brings the curtain down on the first movement. After this liveliness a slow movement, with further interplay of orchestra and piano, presenting Mozart as composer and performer of profoundly moving melody in sustained vocal style. And then a high-spirited finale in which the interplay enables him to indulge his love of fun.

K. 453 was written for some one else to play; but this doesn't affect its character, procedure or substance. The orchestra's opening statement is one of Mozart's most remarkable themes in the way it combines every quality of feeling and style we think of as Mozartean: the grace and elegance with which the violins begin, the poignancy with which they continue in an exquisite melodic curve, the humor of the punctuating flutter of the woodwinds. The movements is, as Tovey says, "in the most intellectual vein of high comedy"; and this opening statement, with its characteristic mingling of poignancy and humor, is only one of the details which illustrate Tovey's observation that the language of comedy is often the only dignified expression for the deepest feelings. One humorous stroke occurs soon after the opening: the orchestra's first forceful outburst ends in pompous flourishes; and the orchestra stops while the bassoon goes chortling on.

Next one of the most affecting of Mozart's slow movements, and one of the most unusual in form: a poignantly meditative statement ending in drastic silence is heard several times, each time as the point of departure of a sequence of ideas, with relations of key and substance in these sequences that are too subtle to describe. And then the finale: a theme and variations, the last of which leads to a pause; after which comes a coda in the style of an opera finale. There are bustle, uproar, a crescendo, a climax which subsides into a reference by the piano to the theme of the movement; then again the uproar, crescendo, climax—and surprise: no reference to the theme this time, but only another crescendo, which seems to be bringing the movement to a close when—with startling unexpectedness—there is the piano's reference to the theme, with an equally startling and hilarious extension of the reference by woodwinds and horns; and it is with this comic stroke that the movement ends.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
JUL 18 1948

CONCERTOS

Two new concertos likely to arouse considerable interest have been completed. Howard Hanson has finished the piano one he was commissioned to write in 1945 by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation. Rudolf Firkusny will play it at the first performance next December with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky. And fulfilling a promise made fifteen years ago, Eugene Goossens has completed a violin concerto for Jascha Heifetz. The English composer-conductor is now in Australia as musical director of the Sydney Symphony Orchestra. He began the work two years ago in his last season with the Cincinnati Symphony.

SUNDAY REPUBLICAN, SPRINGFIELD, MASS., JULY 18, 1948

To Dedicate Hawthorne House

Lenox, July 17—The Little Red House of Nathaniel Hawthorne, restored on the property of Tanglewood by the National Federation of Music Clubs, will be dedicated during an elaborate two-day program Friday and Saturday. Restored to its original appearance, the dwelling now houses three studios, including that of Dr. Serge Koussevitsky.

The cottage in which Hawthorne lived during 1850 and 1851, and in which Rose Hawthorne was born, will be formally presented to the Berkshire Music Center by Mrs. Guy Patterson Gannett of Portland, Me., former president of the National Federation of Music Clubs. It was also in this house that Hawthorne wrote "The Wonder Book" and "The House of Seven Gables."

Mrs. Royden J. Keith of Chicago, president of the national federation will also speak, as will Manning Hawthorne, oldest grandson of the novelist, and Henry Wadsworth Longfellow Dana, great-grandson of the poet.

Bach-Mozart Series Opens at Tanglewood

The 1948 Berkshire Festival gets underway this afternoon when Serge Koussevitzky, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducts the first of four Bach-Mozart concerts in the Theatre-Concert Hall at Tanglewood between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass.

The first concert of the Festival is devoted to the works of Bach and will offer the Brandenberg Concerto No. 3 in G major for Strings; the Cantata No. 65 'Sie werden aus Saba Alle kommen" with tenor, bass, and chorus conducted by Hug Ross; the Concertos in D minor and C major for three pianos and strings with Lukas Foss, Ralph Berkowitz, and Bernard Zikhera, pianists; and the Suite No. 2 in B minor for Flute and Strings with Georges Laurent, flutist. This program will be repeated as the last of the Bach-Mozart series on Tuesday evening, July 27.

The Mozart concert on Tuesday evening, July [illegible]0, will be repeated the following Sunday afternoon, July 25, and will include: Symphony in C major K. 33[illegible]; Serenade "Nacht Musique" for Winds K. 388, the Piano Concerto in G major K. 453 with Lukas Foss as soloist and the Symphony [illegible] E-flat major K. 543.

Jul 18
Berk Herald

Syra. Herald Jul 18

MUSIC

Needy European Artists To Be Aided by Benefit In Berkshire Center

By E. V. W.

TO HELP needy musicians in Europe, the Boston symphony orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center will stage a four-hour benefit, including a concert by the orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and appearances by Maurice Evans and Cornelia Otis Skinner on Tuesday night, Aug. 3, in Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. Under the general designation of "Tanglewood on Parade" there will be simultaneous performances in their various buildings by all departments of the Berkshire Music Center—orchestral, choral, operatic and chamber music.

The manifestation, Dr. Koussevitzky's significant title for the assembly in which internationally known figures in the arts will take part, is scheduled for 8 P.M. in the Music Shed. Miss Skinner and Mr. Evans will each appear in Shakespearean excerpts.

'Tanglewood on Parade' With Students And Demonstrations; Grand Concert

THE GRAND CONCERT in which Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the full Boston symphony orchestra will have an especially attractive program. It will include Beethoven's "Leonore" Overture No. 3, Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf," with Wesley Addy as narrator, and a group to show the history of the waltz—"Voices of Spring" by Johann Strauss, "Valse Triste" by Sibelius and with "La Valse" of Ravel. Festivities will begin at 6 P.M. To carry out the "Tanglewood on Parade" idea there will be a procession of the 462 students of the Berkshire Music Center, each department carrying identifying banners. After the demonstrations by the school, from 7 to 8 P.M. will be given over to supper. Patrons are invited to bring picnic baskets and to use the buffet and new refreshment booths on the grounds at Tanglewood. Patrons subscribing for reserved seats will be invited to a special added attraction, a performance at 4 P.M. in the Tanglewood gardens of "The Telephone" by Gian-Carlo Menotti and scenes from other operas.

'Loves of Charles II' to Be Presented by Cornelia Otis Skinner on Jan. 14 Next

MRS. S. B. EVERTS, president of the Syracuse Civic Music Association, announces as an extra attraction under Civic management, the appearance of Cornelia Otis Skinner in "The Loves of Charles II" in Central High School auditorium the night of Jan 14. While Mrs. Everts is on a week's holiday with her family in a cottage at Point Vivian on the St. Lawrence, Miss Alice Shields will be in charge of the Civic office. Although the appearance of the First Piano Quartet, booked by the Civic Music Association, is several weeks distant, requests for the program are being received by the office. Among them: the Rachmaninoff C Sharp Minor Prelude.

Helen Kwalwasser Plays Cello, Violin In Northern New York Programs

MISS HELEN KWALWASSER, Syracuse concert violinist, now in the Upper Adirondacks for study, teaching and practice, plays first violin in a string quartet in programs at the Galamanian Farm, near Elizabethtown, and cello in a string ensemble there. During a spring visit with her parents, Dr. and Mrs. Jacob Kwalwasser here, Helen brought both her violin and cello, devoting considerable time to playing the latter. Her mother, Mrs. Kwalwasser, known as a teacher of piano, plays the bass fiddle. Some years ago Mrs. Kwalwasser played both piano and bass in an orchestra in Pittsburgh.

Baltimore Contralto Wins Scholarship Of National Music Clubs Federation

ANNOUNCEMENT THAT Saralee Liss, 23, contralto, 3019 Mondawmin av., Baltimore, Md., has won the $1,000 musical scholarship offered by Paul Lavalle, orchestra conductor, is made by Mrs. Royden J. Keith of Chicago, president of the National Federation of Music Clubs. The scholarship, given to the Federation by Mr. Lavalle in recognition of the assistance he received during the beginning days of his musical career through a scholarship in Juilliard School of Music, covers two years tuition at $500 a year at a school or with a teacher of the recipient's choice.

This year's winner, voice pupil of Elsa Baklor of Baltimore, intended to become a lawyer and followed up her graduation from Western High School in the Maryland city with two years' law study in the University of Baltimore. To finance her education she worked during the daytime as a legal secretary, and as an avocation sang with local choruses. It was while she was singing Christmas carols that she was discovered to have a voice of unusual promise, and was urged to abandon the law for a musical career.

Globe Jul 18

Berkshire, Esplanade Music Draws Throngs

The Berkshire Music Festival at Lenox, opening its 10th season today, and the traditional Boston Esplanade Concerts, observing their 20th anniversary, are now at their pinnacle of popularity.

According to the Massachusetts Development and Industrial Commission, these concert series enhance vacation opportunities found in the Bay State. They present top performers from the Boston Symphony Orchestra and such talented conductors as Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, Arthur Fiedler and Leonard Bernstein.

It is not uncommon for audiences of 20,000 to line the banks of Boston's Charles River around Hatch Memorial Shell to hear the free Espanade Concerts presented nightly, Monday excepted, during three weeks of July. Nor it is unusual for audiences to overflow the Tanglewood Music Shed for Berkshire Festival performances. The shed's 6000 capacity is augmented by spacious grounds where additional thousands relax on the greensward to hear the music.

Locales of these outstanding music attractions are easily accessible to seashore and inland Summer resorts of Massachusetts, accounting for much of their popularity with vacationists. The festival's four-week calendar, beginning today, includes the classics of Bach, Mozart and Tchaikovsky, while the Esplanade Concerts feature a lighter touch in music. Both types are popular with large segments of Summer visitors.

On July 24, members of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center will gather at Tanglewood to dedicate the newly-restored "Little Red House." This Hawthorne Cottage, where the sage of a century ago wrote "The House of Seven Gables" and conceived his "Tanglewood Tales," will house the studios of some of today's great musicians at the world famous teaching center.

To the 400 talented young artists now studying at the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood represents the privilege of working for six weeks with some of the world's leading conductors, composers and performers.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

JUL 19 1948

Tanglewood Bach Program First Pre-Festival Event

By CARL E. LINDSTROM

WITH EACH passing year it becomes more apparent that the important music making at Tanglewood does not begin with the opening of the big shed for the nine concerts devoted to the established popular classics. What happens in the two smaller halls during the pre-festival weeks is of far greater significance.

The first of the symphony concerts will be given on Thursday, July 29, but Sunday afternoon in the Theater-Concert Hall occurred the most glistening performance of Bach's third Brandenburg Concerto that the most fastidious heart could wish for. With it were heard the two triple concertos, in D minor and C major with Lukas Foss, Bernard Zighera and Ralph Berkowitz at the pianos, second Suite in D minor for strings and flute (Georges Laurent) and the Cantata No. 65, Sie werden asu Saba alle kommen.

Dr. Koussevitsky, looking as fit and dapper ~~as ever,~~ was in obvious good spirits, prideful and content. He called up a performance that was prevailingly brilliant and drawn with bold strokes. Even the slow movement was big. It was a disciplined performance, the kind of music-making in which the Boston players excel and, besides, it makes good Bach.

For the cantata, Hugh Ross took the podium. The festival chorus was nicely balanced and obviously, well prepared. There was complete rapport and musicianly voice management throughout.

It was the soloists, James Pease, bass, and David Lloyd, tenors, who made this cantata the eloquent thing that it was, Both produced a perectly modelled vocal line even in the rapid passages. Their German diction was superb, but most important of all, they sang meaningfully. I wish that all vocalists who fancy themselves oratorio singers could have heard this interpretation and have profited by it.

Mr. Ross did not pay too much attention to his instrumentalists during these solos; for the accompaniment was allowed to crowd them, particularly Mr. Lloyd who was given little opportunity to breathe but managed a thoroughly artistic performance nevertheless.

Three Contemporary Composers Heard

Sunday morning in the small hall there was a foregathering in the name of chamber music for only an hour's time which allowed for the playing of Berezowsky's Septet for pairs of trumpets, horns, trombones and a tuba; Milhaud's miniature Suite after Corrette, for oboe, clarinet and bassoon; and a new Lukas Foss string quartet.

The latter is a one-movement affair taking the form of free variations. The voices are busy and independent but there is backing a veriety of moods. The piece is quite showy, objective, its content lying well on the surface. One can admire it without being moved by it.

The Milhaud vignettes preserved the antique flavor in spite of touches of modern counterpoint and a rather persistenty chromatic bass. Le coucou and Tambourin amused the audience and, in fact, so did all these singularly deft and stylish bits.

Berezowsky had excellent material for his brass septet in the fanfare and gallop and in the concluding rondo. He made the most of it, producing smart, slick-surfaced music. The pseudo-graces of the Valse did not suit the timbres he employed and the thing turned out more like an etude. To a less degree, that was true of the lullaby, but here there were some exotic tints and a modicum of sentiment.

The performers were: Brass, William Babcock, Peter LaBella, Wilke Renwick, Ralph Pottle, David Jett, Herbert Owens and James McAllister; the woodwinds, Duane Voth, Paul Schaller and Gunter Jacobius; the strings, Zvi Zeitlin, Beatrice Brown, Rowland Pack and Ma Si Hon.

HAWTHORNE'S HOUSE TO BE MUSIC SHRINE

NY

A reconstruction of the "Little Red House," where Nathaniel Hawthorne wrote "The House of Seven Gables," will become a permanent adjunct to the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, Mass., in a ceremony on the afternoon of July 24, it was announced yesterday.

Manning Hawthorne, great-grandson of the novelist, and Mrs. Royden J. Kieth of Chicago, president of the National Federation of Music Clubs, which is responsible for the project, will dedicate the building as a permanent literary shrine and building containing practice rooms for the Music Center's Opera and Chamber Music departments.

The New England District of the Federation will hold an all-day meeting on July 23, will be honored that evening by a student-orchestra concert under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky and will hear other concerts the next day.

The Federation will also hold its fourth annual week-end at Chautauqua, N. Y., next Thursday through Sunday. Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt will be guest speaker on Friday at a meeting of the Chautauqua Woman's Club. Concerts and talks will be featured during the week-end.

Syracuse Herald Jul 18

MUSIC

Needy European Artists To Be Aided by Benefit In Berkshire Center

By E. V. W.

TO HELP needy musicians in Europe, the Boston symphony orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center will stage a four-hour benefit, including a concert by the orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and appearances by Maurice Evans and Cornelia Otis Skinner on Tuesday night, Aug. 3, in Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. Under the general designation of "Tanglewood on Parade" there will be simultaneous performances in their various buildings by all departments of the Berkshire Music Center—orchestral, choral, operatic and chamber music.

The manifestation, Dr. Koussevitzky's significant title for the assembly in which internationally known figures in the arts will take part, is scheduled for 8 P.M. in the Music Shed. Miss Skinner and Mr. Evans will each appear in Shakespearean excerpts.

'Tanglewood on Parade' With Students And Demonstrations; Grand Concert

THE GRAND CONCERT in which Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the full Boston symphony orchestra will have an especially attractive program. It will include Beethoven's "Leonore" Overture No. 3, Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf," with Wesley Addy as narrator, and a group to show the history of the waltz—"Voices of Spring" by Johann Strauss, "Valse Triste" by Sibelius and with "La Valse" of Ravel. Festivities will begin at 6 P.M. To carry out the "Tanglewood on Parade" idea there will be a procession of the 462 students of the Berkshire Music Center, each department carrying identifying banners. After the demonstrations by the school, from 7 to 8 P.M. will be given over to supper. Patrons are invited to bring picnic baskets and to use the buffet and new refreshment booths on the grounds at Tanglewood. Patrons subscribing for reserved seats will be invited to a special added attraction, a performance at 4 P.M. in the Tanglewood gardens of "The Telephone" by Gian-Carlo Menotti and scenes from other operas.

'Loves of Charles II' to Be Presented by Cornelia Otis Skinner on Jan. 14 Next

MRS. S. B. EVERTS, president of the Syracuse Civic Music Association, announces as an extra attraction under Civic management, the appearance of Cornelia Otis Skinner in "The Loves of Charles II" in Central High School auditorium the night of Jan 14. While Mrs. Everts is on a week's holiday with her family in a cottage at Point Vivian on the St. Lawrence, Miss Alice Shields will be in charge of the Civic office. Although the appearance of the First Piano Quartet, booked by the Civic Music Association, is several weeks distant, requests for the program are being received by the office. Among them: the Rachmaninoff C Sharp Minor Prelude.

Helen Kwalwasser Plays Cello, Violin In Northern New York Programs

MISS HELEN KWALWASSER, Syracuse concert violinist, now in the Upper Adirondacks for study, teaching and practice, plays first violin in a string quartet in programs at the Galamanian Farm, near Elizabethtown, and cello in a string ensemble there. During a spring visit with her parents, Dr. and Mrs. Jacob Kwalwasser here, Helen brought both her violin and cello, devoting considerable time to playing the latter. Her mother, Mrs. Kwalwasser, known as a teacher of piano, plays the bass fiddle. Some years ago Mrs. Kwalwasser played both piano and bass in an orchestra in Pittsburgh.

Baltimore Contralto Wins Scholarship Of National Music Clubs Federation

ANNOUNCEMENT THAT Saralee Liss, 23, contralto, 3019 Mondawmin av., Baltimore, Md., has won the $1,000 musical scholarship offered by Paul Lavalle, orchestra conductor, is made by Mrs. Royden J. Keith of Chicago, president of the National Federation of Music Clubs. The scholarship, given to the Federation by Mr. Lavalle in recognition of the assistance he received during the beginning days of his musical career through a scholarship in Juilliard School of Music, covers two years tuition at $500 a year at a school or with a teacher of the recipient's choice.

This year's winner, voice pupil of Elsa Baklor of Baltimore, intended to become a lawyer and followed up her graduation from Western High School in the Maryland city with two years' law study in the University of Baltimore. To finance her education she worked during the daytime as a legal secretary, and as an avocation sang with local choruses. It was while she was singing Christmas carols that she was discovered to have a voice of unusual promise, and was urged to abandon the law for a musical career.

Globe Jul 18

Berkshire, Esplanade Music Draws Throngs

The Berkshire Music Festival at Lenox, opening its 10th season today, and the traditional Boston Esplanade Concerts, observing their 20th anniversary, are now at their pinnacle of popularity.

According to the Massachusetts Development and Industrial Commission, these concert series enhance vacation opportunities found in the Bay State. They present top performers from the Boston Symphony Orchestra and such talented conductors as Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, Arthur Fiedler and Leonard Bernstein.

It is not uncommon for audiences of 20,000 to line the banks of Boston's Charles River around Hatch Memorial Shell to hear the free Espanade Concerts presented nightly, Monday excepted, during three weeks of July. Nor it is unusual for audiences to overflow the Tanglewood Music Shed for Berkshire Festival performances. The shed's 6000 capacity is augmented by spacious grounds where additional thousands relax on the greensward to hear the music.

Locales of these outstanding music attractions are easily accessible to seashore and inland Summer resorts of Massachusetts, accounting for much of their popularity with vacationists. The festival's four-week calendar, beginning today, includes the classics of Bach, Mozart and Tchaikovsky, while the Esplanade Concerts feature a lighter touch in music. Both types are popular with large segments of Summer visitors.

On July 24, members of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center will gather at Tanglewood to dedicate the newly-restored "Little Red House." This Hawthorne Cottage, where the sage of a century ago wrote "The House of Seven Gables" and conceived his "Tanglewood Tales," will house the studios of some of today's great musicians at the world famous teaching center.

To the 400 talented young artists now studying at the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood represents the privilege of working for six weeks with some of the world's leading conductors, composers and performers.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

JUL 19 1948

Tanglewood Bach Program First Pre-Festival Event

By CARL E. LINDSTROM

WITH EACH passing year it becomes more apparent that the important music making at Tanglewood does not begin with the opening of the big shed for the nine concerts devoted to the established popular classics. What happens in the two smaller halls during the pre-festival weeks is of far greater significance.

The first of the symphony concerts will be given on Thursday, July 29, but Sunday afternoon in the Theater-Concert Hall occurred the most glistening performance of Bach's third Brandenburg Concerto that the most fastidious heart could wish for. With it were heard the two triple concertos, in D minor and C major with Lukas Foss, Bernard Zighera and Ralph Berkowitz at the pianos, second Suite in D minor for strings and flute (Georges Laurent) and the Cantata No. 65, Sie werden asu Saba alle kommen.

Dr. Koussevitsky, looking as fit and ~~dapper as ever,~~ was in obvious good spirits, prideful and content. He called up a performance that was prevailingly brilliant and drawn with bold strokes. Even the slow movement was big. It was a disciplined perormance, the kind of music-making in which the Boston players excel and, besides, it makes good Bach.

For the cantata, Hugh Ross took the podium. The festival chorus was nicely balanced and obviously, well prepared. There was complete rapport and musicianly voice management throughout.

It was the soloists, James Pease, bass, and David Lloyd, tenors, who made this cantata the eloquent thing that it was. Both produced a perectly modelled vocal line even in the rapid passages. Their German diction was superb, but most important of all, they sang meaningfully. I wish that all vocalists who fancy themselves oratorio singers could have heard this interpretation and have profited by it.

Mr. Ross did not pay too much attention to his instrumentalists during these solos; for the accompaniment was allowed to crowd them, particularly Mr. Lloyd who was given little opportunity to breathe but managed a thoroughly artistic performance nevertheless.

Three Contemporary Composers Heard

Sunday morning in the small hall there was a foregathering in the name of chamber music for only an hour's time which allowed for the playing of Berezowsky's Septet for pairs of trumpets, horns, trombones and a tuba; Milhaud's miniature Suite after Corrette, for oboe, clarinet and bassoon; and a new Lukas Foss string quartet.

The latter is a one-movement affair taking the form of free variations. The voices are busy and independent but there is backing a veriety of moods. The piece is quite showy, objective, its content lying well on the surface. One can admire it without being moved by it.

The Milhaud vignettes preserved the antique flavor in spite of touches of modern counterpoint and a rather persistenty chromatic bass. Le coucou and Tambourin amused the audience and, in fact, so did all these singularly deft and stylish bits.

Berezowsky had excellent material for his brass septet in the fanfare and gallop and in the concluding rondo. He made the most of it, producing smart, slick-surfaced music. The pseudo-graces of the Valse did not suit the timbres he employed and the thing turned out more like an etude. To a less degree, that was true of the lullaby, but here there were some exotic tints and a modicum of sentiment.

The performers were: Brass, William Babcock, Peter LaBella, Wilke Renwick, Ralph Pottle, David Jett, Herbert Owens and James McAllister; the woodwinds, Duane Voth, Paul Schaller and Gunter Jacobius; the strings, Zvi Zeitlin, Beatrice Brown, Rowland Pack and Ma Si Hon.

HAWTHORNE'S HOUSE TO BE MUSIC SHRINE

NY Times Jul 11

A reconstruction of the "Little Red House," where Nathaniel Hawthorne wrote "The House of Seven Gables," will become a permanent adjunct to the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, Mass., in a ceremony on the afternoon of July 24, it was announced yesterday.

Manning Hawthorne, great-grandson of the novelist, and Mrs. Royden J. Kieth of Chicago, president of the National Federation of Music Clubs, which is responsible for the project, will dedicate the building as a permanent literary shrine and building containing practice rooms for the Music Center's Opera and Chamber Music departments.

The New England District of the Federation will hold an all-day meeting on July 23, will be honored that evening by a student-orchestra concert under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky and will hear other concerts the next day.

The Federation will also hold its fourth annual week-end at Chautauqua, N. Y., next Thursday through Sunday. Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt will be guest speaker on Friday at a meeting of the Chautauqua Woman's Club. Concerts and talks will be featured during the week-end.

[175]

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
JUL 18 1948

Hawthorne's House at Lenox, Restored, Will Open This Week

Home Where Writer Lived Century Ago Is Rebuilt Along Its Original Lines

Special to the Herald Tribune

LENOX, Mass., July 17.—One of the [illegible] sleuthing jobs in the history of the Berkshires will come to a successful climax July 23 and 24 when a reproduction of the "Little Red House" in which Nathaniel Hawthorne lived a hundred years ago is dedicated. The original burned on June 22, 1890, and only a bronze marker has shown the spot where the modest building once stood.

Work on the reproduction was started early last summer following a year of careful study of Hawthorne letters describing the house, and two badly faded photographs owned by the Lenox library. The house is now complete, even to the old pump, rail fence and garden planting.

The Little Red House, as Hawthorne called it, was where he wrote "The House of the Seven Gables" and "The Wonder Book," in 1850 and 1851. His "Tanglewood Tales" was also conceived while living there, and the book was published in 1853, two years after he had left the Berkshires.

Reconstruction of the house was a project of the National Federation of Music Clubs. The building stands on the grounds of Tanglewood, summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and the interior of the restored building will house two studios and a reception room—a floor plan far different from the one Hawthorne knew. One of the studios will be used by Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Boston Symphony, for his classes in advanced orchestra conducting.

The foundation and the garden will be about the same as in Hawthorne's time, however. Reconstructing the ground plan was easy. After fire razed the empty house, the debris was shoveled into the cellar hole, and so the stone foundation walls were preserved. This made it possible to re-set the foundation stones in the same spot where they originally were. Among the cellar debris was the hearthstone, which was put back in place, and the fire tongs, which were cleaned and now rest on the old hearth.

Garden planting has been duplicated from information found in letters Mrs. Hawthorne wrote her mother. Lilac trees predominate. And the Berkshire Museum in Pittsfield, which has the original pump in its historical collection, had a faithful copy made which now rests over the well. The original pump is far too old and fragile to be set out in the open again.

Hawthorne left the Berkshire because the climate was too rugged for his health. He was poor and struggling when he occupied the little house, which probably cost only a few hundred dollars when new. The reproduction cost $15,000—probably more than the author ever saw at one time in his life.

The Little Red House in which Nathaniel Hawthorne lived at Lenox, Mass., in 1850-'51. The original house burned in 1890. This carefully planned duplicate has been constructed as part of the Tanglewood property, summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra

---

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT
JUL 18 1948

Tanglewood Lists Music For Festival

Three Main Concerts, Bach-Mozart Series, All-Tschaikowsky Bill

The following major concerts have been scheduled for the Berkshire Musical Festival, with Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.:

Today at 3:30—First concert of Bach-Mozart Series: Back, Brandenburg Concerto No. 3; Cantata, "Sie Werden aus Saba Alle kommen" (Hugh Ross, conductor); Concerto for Three Pianos in D Minor (Lukas Foss, Ralph Berkowitz, Bernard Zighera); Suite No. 2 in B minor (Georges Laurent); Concerto for Three Pianos in C Major.

Tuesday at 8:15—Bach Mozart Series: Mozart, Symphony in C Major; K. 338 Serenade for Wind Instruments in C Minor K. 388; Concerto for Piano in G Major, K.453 (Lukas Foss); Symphony in E Flat, K.543.

Sunday, July 25, 3:30—repetition of Mozart program.

Tuesday, July 27, 8:15—repetition of Bach program.

Thursday, July 29, 8:15—Bach, Suite No. 3 in D Major; Hindemith, "Mathis Der Maler"; Beethoven, Symphony No. 5.

Saturday, July 31, 8:15—Piston, Third Symphony; Prokofieff, First Violin Concerto (Isaac Stern); Brahms, First Symphony.

Sunday, August 1, 3:30—Haydn, Symphony 104; Mahler, "Resurrection" Symphony (Ellabelle Davis—soprano, Nan Merriman, contralto, and chorus). Leonard Bernstein conducting.

Thursday, August 5, 8:15—Beethoven, Sixth Symphony; Stravinsky, "Oedipus Rex" (Carol Brice, mezzo soprano, David Lloyd tenor, James Pease baritone, Wesley Addy speaker, and male chorus).

Saturday, August 7, 8:15—Prokofieff, Second Suite, "Romeo and Juliet"; first performance in America, Vaughan Williams Sixth Symphony; Strauss, "Don Quixote" (Gregor Piatigorsky).

Sunday, August 8, 3:30—Berlioz, "Fantastic" Symphony; Villa-Lobos, "Madona"; Falla, "El Amor Brujo" (Carol Brice, mezzo soprano); Siqueira, "Nordestina." Suite No. 1; Eleazar de Carvalho conducting.

Tuesday, August 10, 8:15—All-Tschaikowsky concert: "Pathetique" Symphony; First Piano Concerto (Seymour Lipkin); "1812" Overture.

Thursday, August 12, 8:15—Weber, "Freischuetz" Overture; Stravinsky, "Petrouchka" (complete); Shostakovitch, Fifth Symphony; Leonard Bernstein conducting.

Saturday, August 14, 8-15—Debussy, "La Damoiselle Elue (Ellen Faull soprano, Eunice Alberts contralto, and women's chorus) Brahms, Requiem Frances Yeend soprano, James Pease baritone and chorus); Robert Shaw conducting.

Sunday, August 15, 3:30—Beethoven, Third Symphony; Sibelius Second Symphony.

---

public appearances.

MUSIC ON THE RADIO

N.Y. Post

By B. H. HAGGIN July 18

THE Boston Symphony broadcast from Tanglewood on Tuesday evening will give the radio audience (wherever A. B. C.'s affiliated stations are willing) a chance to hear one of the shamefully infrequent performances of Mozart's Piano Concerto K. 453, an outstanding specimen in the marvelous series of works that Mozart produced in this form. The academic blue-noses who talk disdainfully of opera as "impure" music and cite Mozart's string quartets as the height of "purity" in music disregard the evidence in his letters that he wanted nothing so passionately as the opportunity to write an opera, and the evidence in his music that he wrote nothing which exhibits his powers more wonderfully than "The Marriage of Figaro" and the other operas, and that his works in all forms, as Dent points out in his superb book, are an emanation of the operas.

This is most strikingly true of the piano concertos, most of which were in fact written for the occasions when Mozart presented himself to the public as the greatest pianist of his time exhibiting his powers in works created expressly for the purpose by the greatest composer, and which should be listened to as musical equivalents of the play written by an actor for himself to act in. There are, first the orchestra's preliminaries, creating anticipation and building up suspense for the entrance of the piano, which proceeds to hold attention with its lovely melodies, dazzling passagework, lively dialogue with the orchestra, and eventually whirls off the stage to permit the orchestra to prepare for the piano's next entrance, and so on throughout the movement, with a pause near the end for Mozart to exhibit his powers of improvisation in the cadenza, after which the orchestra brings the curtain down on the first movement. After this liveliness a slow movement, with further interplay of orchestra and piano, presenting Mozart as composer and performer of profoundly moving melody in sustained vocal style. And then a high-spirited finale in which the interplay enables him to indulge his love of fun.

K. 453 was written for some one else to play; but this doesn't affect its character, procedure or substance. The orchestra's opening statement is one of Mozart's most remarkable themes in the way it combines every quality of feeling and style we think of as Mozartean: the grace and elegance with which the violins begin, the poignancy with which they continue in an exquisite melodic curve, the humor of the punctuating flutter of the woodwinds. The movements is, as Tovey says, "in the most intellectual vein of high comedy"; and this opening statement, with its characteristic mingling of poignancy and humor, is only one of the details which illustrate Tovey's observation that the language of comedy is often the only dignified expression for the deepest feelings. One humorous stroke occurs soon after the opening: the orchestra's first forceful outburst ends in pompous flourishes; and the orchestra stops while the bassoon goes chortling on.

Next one of the most affecting of Mozart's slow movements, and one of the most unusual in form: a poignantly meditative statement ending in drastic silence is heard several times, each time as the point of departure of a sequence of ideas, with relations of key and substance in these sequences that are too subtle to describe. And then the finale: a theme and variations, the last of which leads to a pause; after which comes a coda in the style of an opera finale. There are bustle, uproar, a crescendo, a climax which subsides into a reference by the piano to the theme of the movement; then again the uproar, crescendo, climax—and surprise: no reference to the theme this time, but only another crescendo, which seems to be bringing the movement to a close when—with startling unexpectedness—there is the piano's reference to the theme, with an equally startling and hilarious extension of the reference by woodwinds and horns; and it is with this comic stroke that the movement ends.

11th Festival Will Open This Evening

Thousands Pour Into County for First Series

TANGLEWOOD — Thousands of music lovers from all parts of the country started to pour into the Berkshires today for the opening tonight at 8.15 in the Music Shed of the 1948 Berkshire Festival. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducting, will present compositions by Bach, Hindemith and Beethoven.

Tonight's concert will be the first in Series A for the initial week-end programs. Other concerts are scheduled for Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon.

The Music Shed, which seats 6000, is expected to be filled for the opening program and more than 2000 are expected to listen to the concert from the spacious lawns surrounding the huge Shed.

Officials of the U.S. Weather Bureau at the Pittsfield Airport promised "perfect weather" for tonight with clear skies. The temperature is expected to be about 60 degrees Fahrenheit.

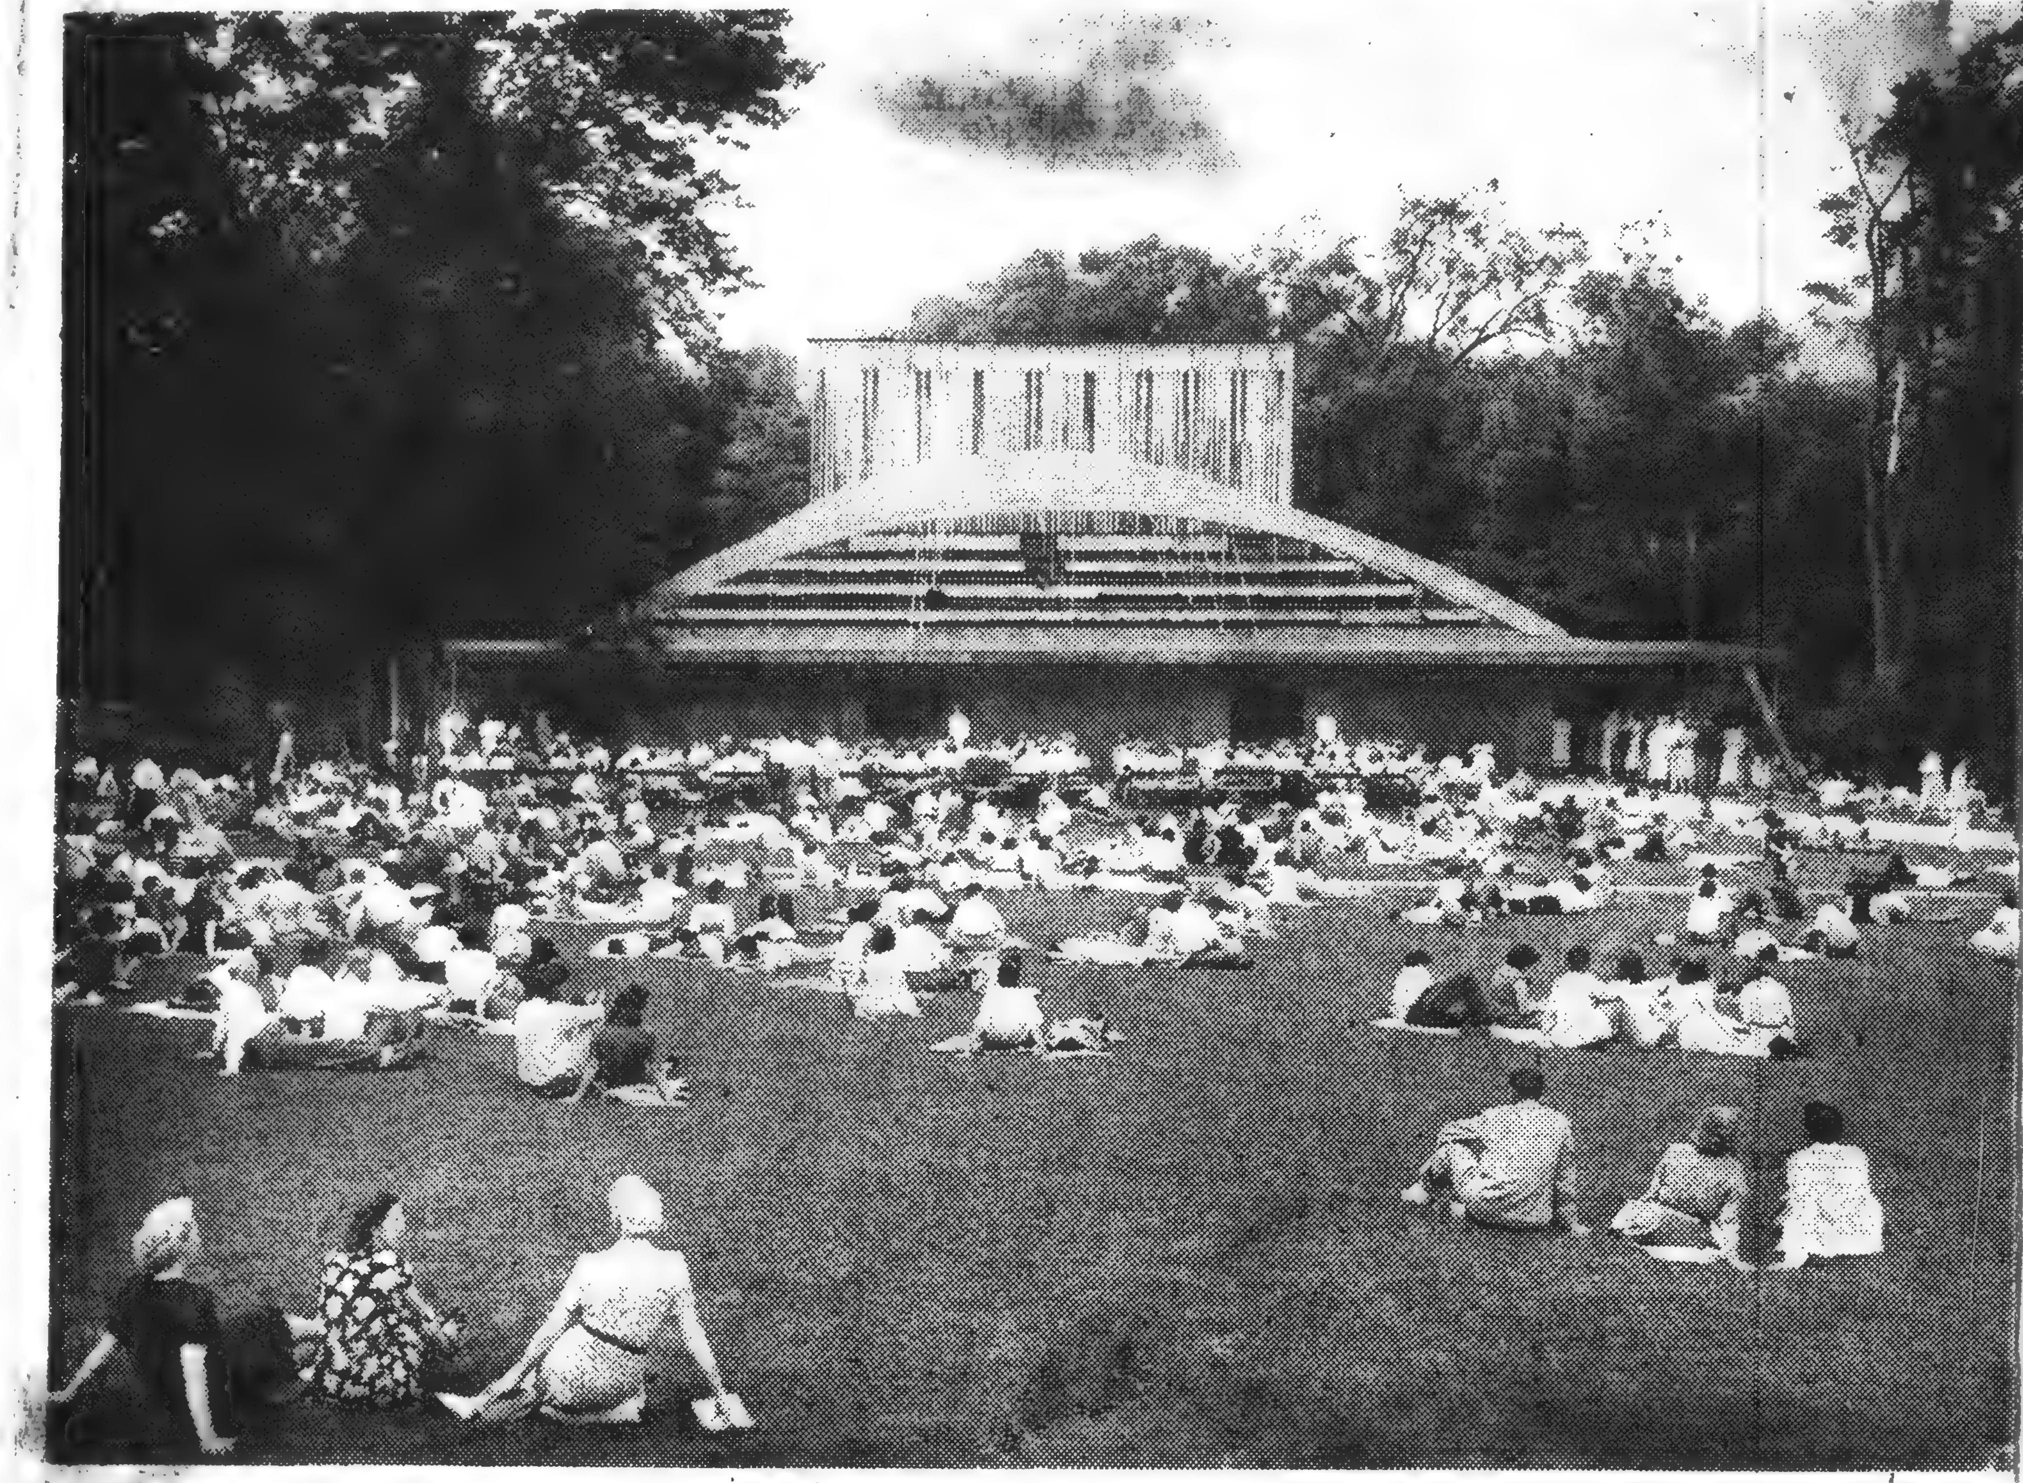
From now until Aug. 15 when the final concert of the 11th season will be given, 11 concerts will be given at Tanglewood, including the benefit feature Tuesday, Aug. 3, and the extra Tchaikovsky program on Aug. 10. Other special events will be given by the students of the Berkshire Music Center.

Egone

EVERYTHING'S READY: Manager George E. Judd of the Boston Symphony Orchestra tells Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, the conductor, that Tanglewood is ready for the huge crowds expected to turn out the next three week ends for the Berkshire Festival which opens its 11th season tonight in the Music Shed.

[176]

If You Like Our Berkshire Weather...

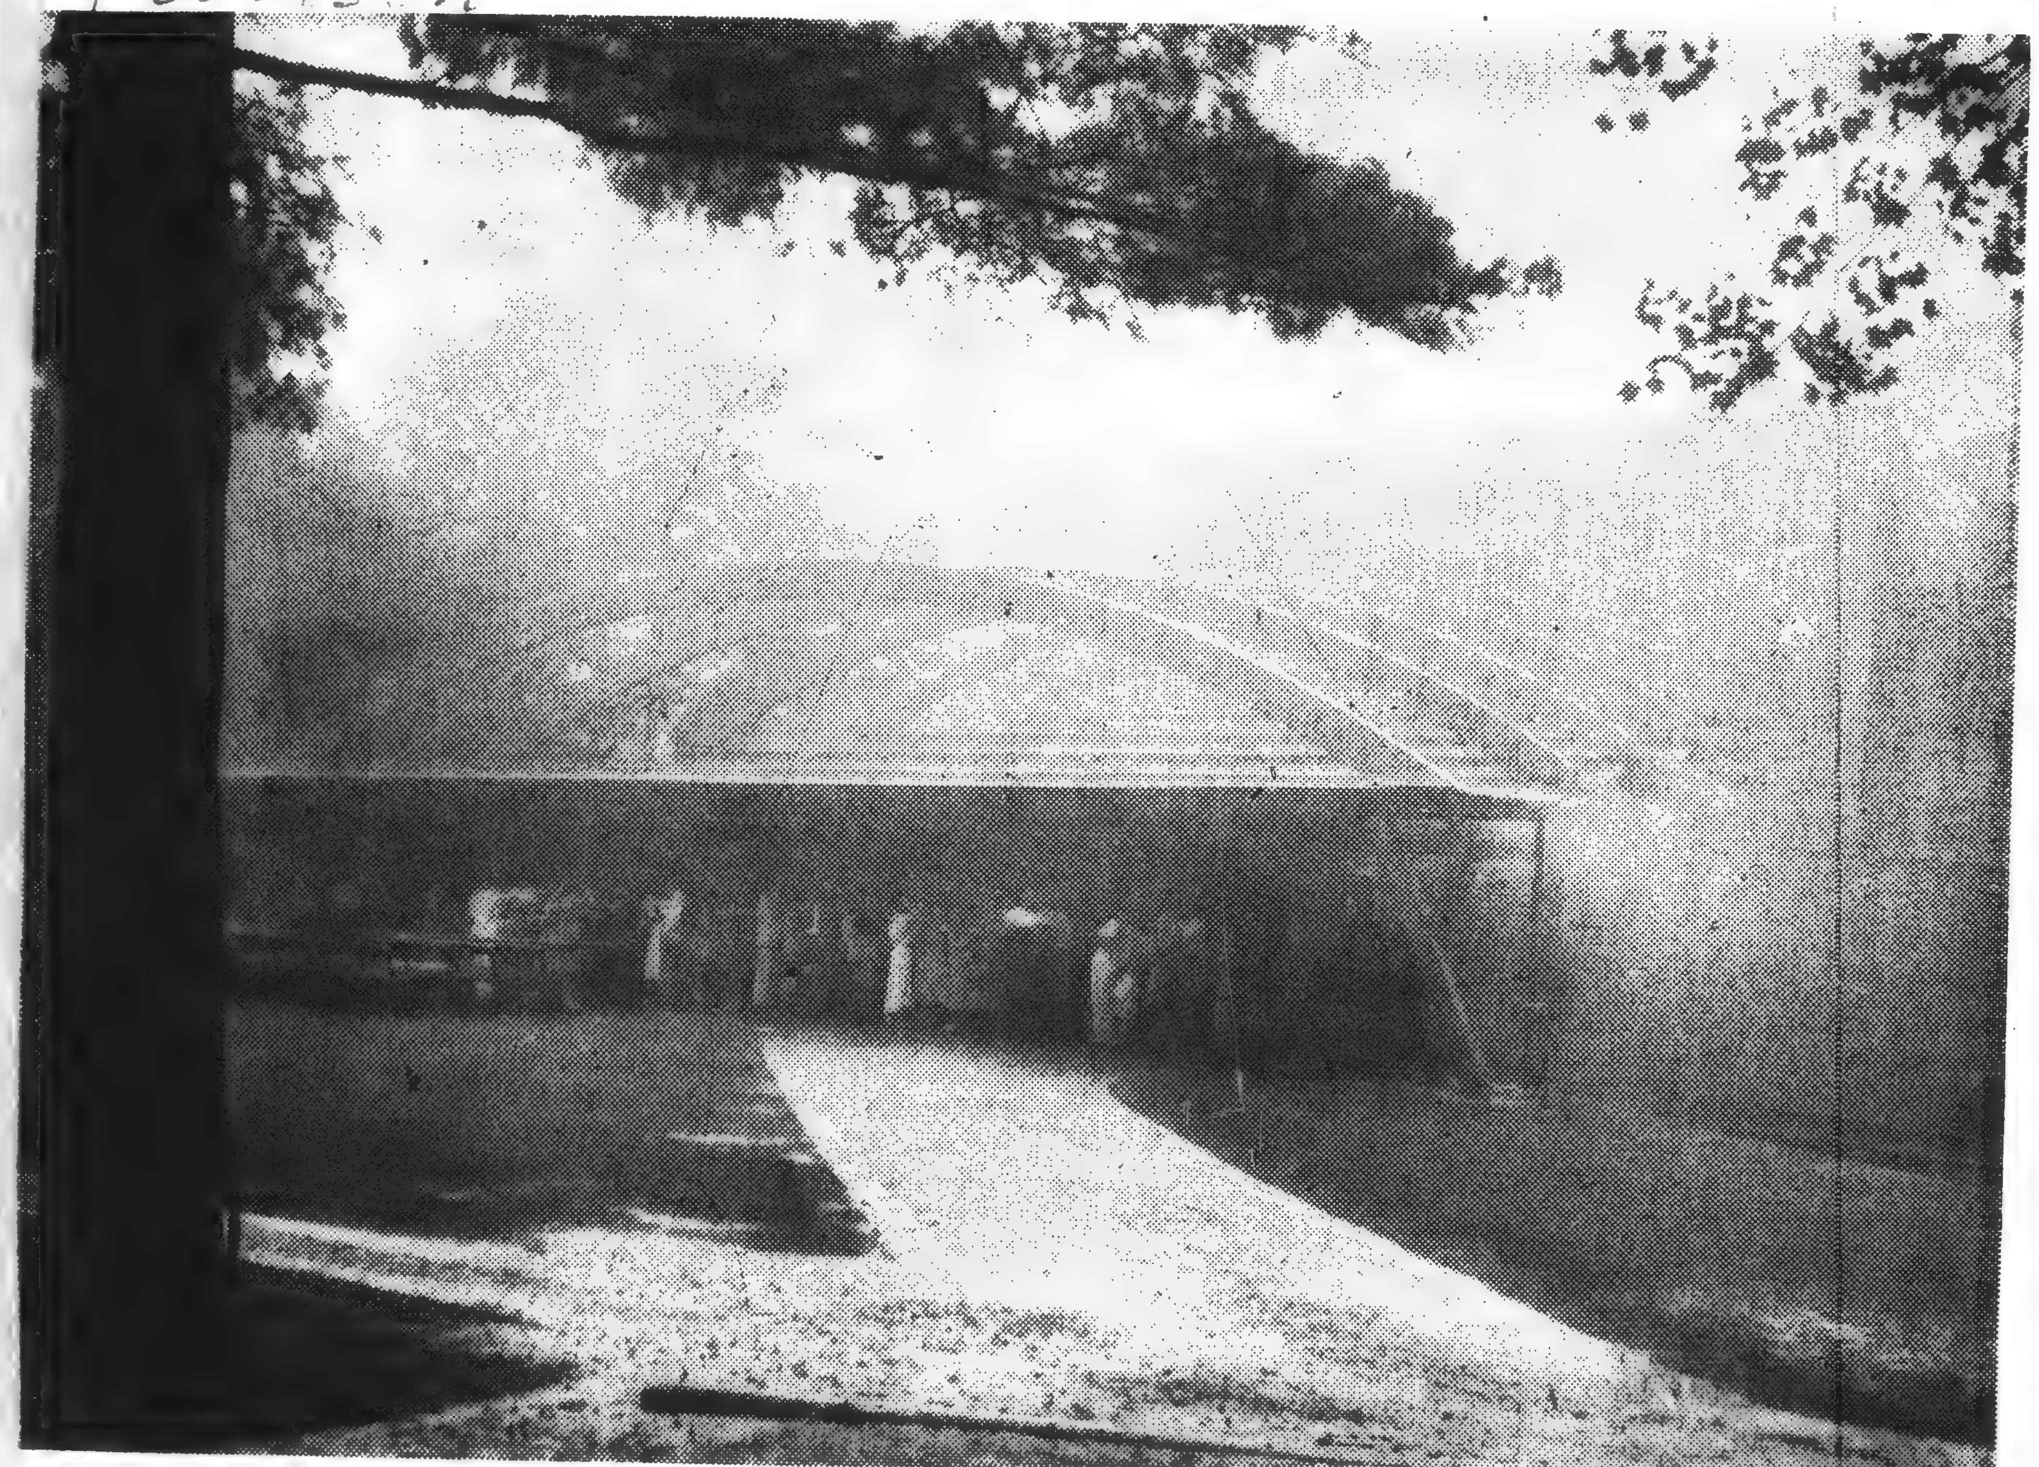


Howard S. Babbit

MUSIC UNDER THE SUN: A record crowd for the official opening of the Berkshire Festival trooped into Tanglewood yester afternoon for the first of the annual Bach-Mozart series in the theatre-concert hall. Of the total attendance of 2440, some 1260 liste from the benches and the lawn. This picture was taken a few minutes before the 4.30 intermission.

Robinson

...Wait a Minute or So



Howard S. Babbitt Jr.

INTERMISSION UNDER THE ROOF: Just at intermission, one of Berkshire's characteristic summer thunderstorms descended upon Tanglewood, complete with percussion section, and the outdoor audience fled for shelter under the overhanging roof, inside the hall and beneath the canvas over the tables beside the refreshment stand. The program was resumed at storm's end.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
JUL 1 9

The Tanglewood season opened formally yesterday afternoon when Serge Koussevitzky led some 40 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the first of the Bach-Mozart concerts. It was the second week-end concert, the Juilliard String Quartet having played Saturday night in the theatre-concert hall where yesterday's program also was presented.

The entire Sunday program was from Bach and will be repeated a week from tomorrow evening. The Mozart program will be played tomorrow night and be repeated Sunday afternoon.

A record audience for an opening concert overflowed the theatre-concert hall and gave the venerated Boston leader an extremely cordial welcome when he made his first appearance of the afternoon to lead the string players in the third Brandenburg concerto. These concerts are a continuation of the series begun during the war when transportation was such a major problem and only limited audiences could be assembled. Their success, however, has made their continuance imperative, and the size and enthusiasm of the audience showed the measure of their appreciation.

Storm Prolongs Intermission

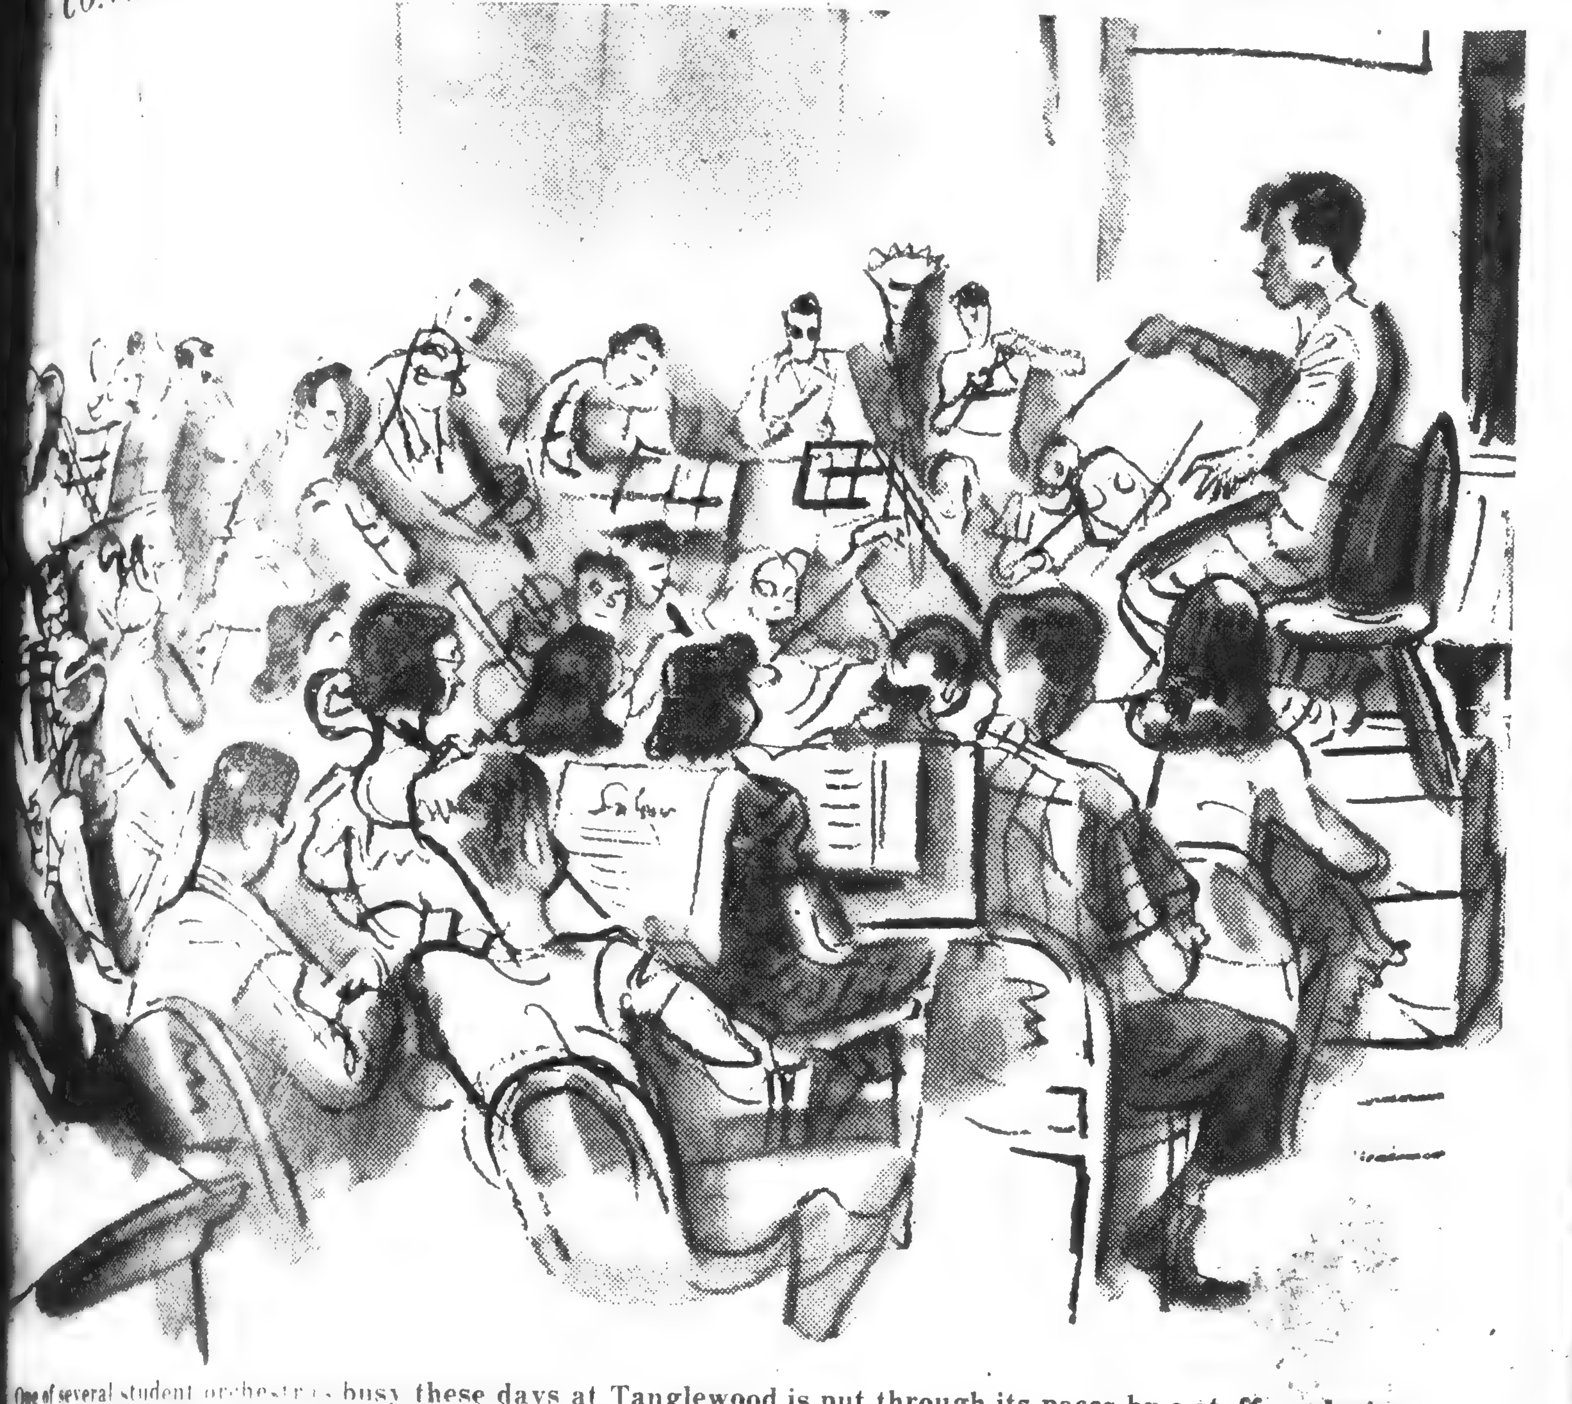
The weather was warm and sunny when the concert started, but as it progressed it was evident that clouds were obscurring the heavens and by intermission time a storm broke which made it necessary to prolong the recess. Dr. Kuossevitzky has played this Brandenburg here before, once in the theatre and once in the big Shed. He again used poignant adagio from the cantata "Christ lag im Todesbanden" between the two movements of the concerto in place of the printed two-chord connecting bridge. One of the most enjoyable parts of the afternoon was the D minor suite for flute and strings, in which Georges Laurent, flutist, was the soloist. Using only a portion of his forces of the afternoon the distinguished leader gave the pert and tasteful rhythms a piquancy and distinction which revealed the hidden beauties of Bach. The Cantata No. 65 "Sie werden aus Saba alle kommen" was led by Hugh Ross. The soloists were David Lloyd, tenor, and James Pease, bass. Mr. Lloyd took especial advantage of the opportunities his recitative and aria provided, singing with fervor and a sense of pace. The chorus was well balanced and responded to Mr. Ross with alacrity.

The two three-piano concertos had Lukas Foss, Bernard Zighera, and Ralph Berkowitz as soloists. For this the orchestra used as background was again a diminished one. The soloists sat facing the audience so that the music racks hid them from view. The performances were of a routine nature.

[177]

INFORMATION OBSCURED

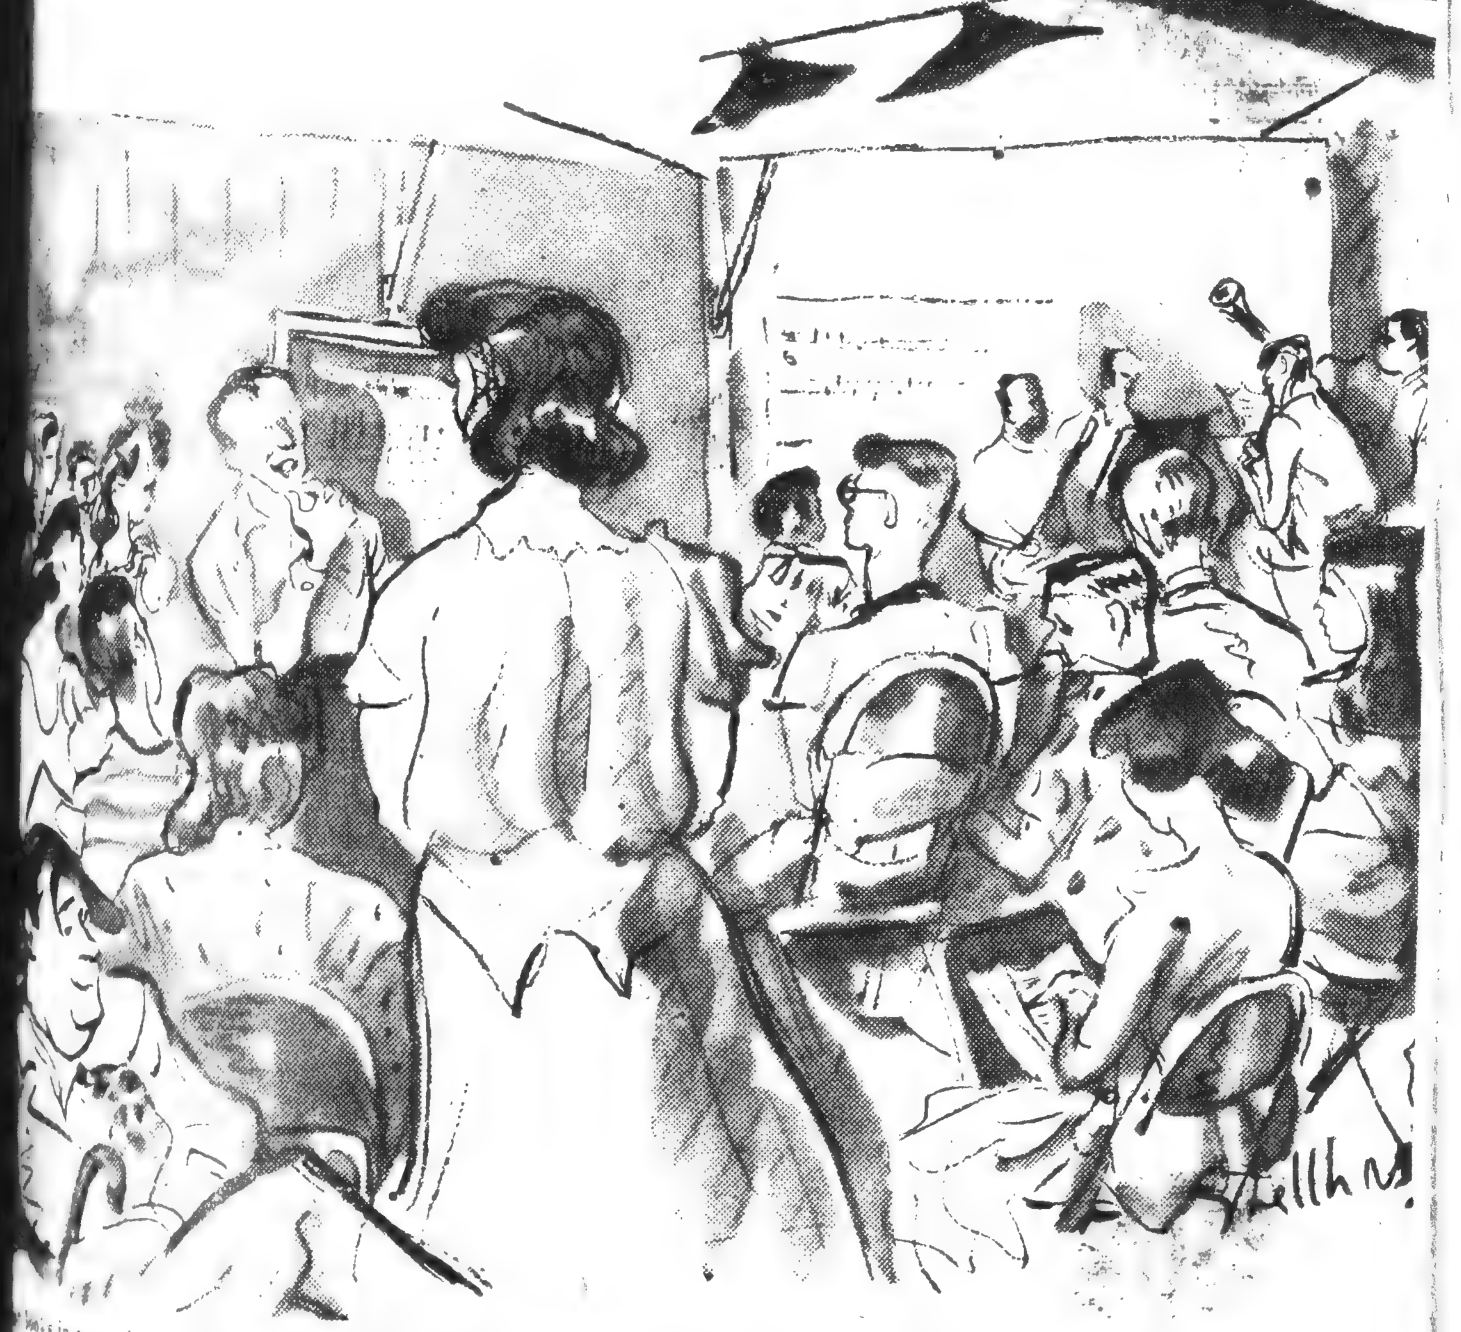
CONCERT FOR PUBLIC IS PRESENTED TODAY



One of several student orchestras busy these days at Tanglewood is put through its paces by a staff conductor.

THE NEW YORK TIMES, SUNDAY,

BERKSHIRE MUSIC CENTER ACTIVITIES GO ON AS



looks in on a class: Aaron Copland (rear) lectures as Darius Milhaud (seated in forefront) listens.

GIFT-HO[illegible]

Members of the National Federation of Music Clubs will assemble in large numbers at Tanglewood next week-end. The replica of the little red house where Hawthorne wrote "The House of the Seven Gables" is ready and the federation, which put up the funds for its building, will present it to the Berkshire Music Center with appropriate ceremonies. The three-day celebration will begin on Friday. The New England District of the federation will meet that day and Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the student orchestra in a special concert in the evening. On Saturday, after a picnic luncheon on the grounds, the cottage will be dedicated.

CONCERTOS

Two new concertos likely to arouse considerable interest have been completed. Howard Hanson has finished the piano one he was commissioned to write in 1945 by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation. Rudolf Firkusny will play it at the first performance next December with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky. And fulfilling a promise made fifteen years ago, Eugene Goossens has completed a violin concerto for Jascha Heifetz. The English composer-conductor is now in Australia as musical director of the Sydney Symphony Orchestra. He began the work two years ago in his last season with the Cincinnati Symphony.

Tanglewood

The second program in the Bach-Mozart series of the Berkshire Festival will be given at Tanglewood tomorrow night at 8.15. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the following music by Mozart: Symphony in C major, serenade for wind instruments in C minor, concerto for piano in G major and symphony in E flat.

Lukas Foss, soloist in the concerto, is pianist for the orchestra. One of three soloists in the two Bach concertos for yesterday's concert, he is a composer of note. He studied at the Berkshire Music Center under Dr. Koussevitzky and Aaron Copland.

Tickets are on sale for the concert, which will be repeated Sunday afternoon. General admission will be sold three hours before the concert.

The second part will be broadcast tomorrow night at 9.30 over WBEC.

Bus Service Starts Tomorrow

For the principal concerts at Tanglewood bus service will be available from Lee, Lenox, Stockbridge and Pittsfield, leaving these points one hour before concert times on Thursday evenings, July 29, Aug. 5, 12; Saturday evenings, July 31, Aug. 7, 14; Sunday afternoons, Aug. 1, 8, 15. Similar service will be operated Tuesday evening, Aug. 3, for "Tanglewood on Parade" program on a schedule to be announced later.

In addition there will be a trip operated from Pittsfield and Lenox for the Bach-Mozart concerts—leaving Park Square Tuesday evenings, July 20 and 27 at 7.15, and Sunday afternoon, July 25 at 2.30.

Return trips from Tanglewood leave directly after the concerts.

Cole Porter at Concert

In the audience at yesterday's concert were Cole Porter, noted writer of music for Broadway musical comedies, and Mainbocher, dress designer.

Music July 19 Eagle

Overflow Audience Attends Bach-Mozart Series Opening

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

The Tanglewood season opened formally yesterday afternoon when Serge Koussevitzky led some 40 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the first of the Bach-Mozart concerts. It was the second week-end concert, the Juilliard String Quartet having played Saturday night in the theatre-concert hall where yesterday's program also was presented.

The entire Sunday program was from Bach and will be repeated a week from tomorrow evening. The Mozart program will be played tomorrow night and be repeated Sunday afternoon.

A record audience for an opening concert overflowed the theatre-concert hall and gave the venerated Boston leader an extremely cordial welcome when he made his first appearance of the afternoon to lead the string players in the third Brandenburg concerto. These concerts are a continuation of the series begun during the war when transportation was such a major problem and only limited audiences could be assembled. Their success, however, has made their continuance imperative, and the size and enthusiasm of the audience showed the measure of their appreciation.

Storm Prolongs Intermission

The weather was warm and sunny when the concert started, but as it progressed it was evident that clouds were obscurring the heavens and by intermission time a storm broke which made it necessary to prolong the recess. Dr. Kuossevitzky has played this Brandenburg here before, once in the theatre and once in the big Shed. He again used poignant adagio from the cantata "Christ lag im Todesbanden" between the two movements of the concerto in place of the printed two-chord connecting bridge. One of the most enjoyable parts of the afternoon was the D minor suite for flute and strings, in which Georges Laurent, flutist, was the soloist. Using only a portion of his forces of the afternoon the distinguished leader gave the pert and tasteful rhythms a piquancy and distinction which revealed the hidden beauties of Bach. The Cantata No. 65 "Sie werden aus Saba alle kommen" was led by Hugh Ross. The soloists were David Lloyd, tenor, and James Pease, bass. Mr. Lloyd took especial advantage of the opportunities his recitative and aria provided, singing with fervor and a sense of pace. The chorus was well balanced and responded to Mr. Ross with alacrity.

The two three-piano concertos had Lukas Foss, Bernard Zighera, and Ralph Berkowitz as soloists. For this the orchestra used as background was again a diminished one. The soloists sat facing the audience so that the music racks hid them from view. The performances were of a routine nature.

Saturday Night Concert

The Juilliard String Quartet, through the co-operation of the Juilliard School in New York, Saturday night played the final three of the six Bela Bartok quartets, the fourth, the first and the last one. The members of the quartet are Robert Mann and Robert Koff, violins, Raphael Hillyer, viola, and Arthur Winograd, cello.

Again it was their impassioned intensity and remarkable ensemble that carried them to heights of enthusiasm. They gave contour and fine, dramatic meaning and spacing to the music, so that this second hearing was convincing that it was their playing that evoked the cordial response of the large audience, more than the substance of the music.

In the order that the quartets were played, these were examples of Bartok's work when he was respectively 47, 26 and 58. He was by no means equally successful at all times, and didn't realize his ideas with consistent happiness. The fourth quartet, with which the program started, is the strangest of all, and yet, paradoxically, it also contains some mood pictures which are most striking in their ethereal texture.

When listening to his first quartet, which was second on Saturday's program, it should be borne in mind that the first decade of this century was busy pondering and accepting the new quartets of Debussy and Ravel, the sextet of Schoenberg, etc., so that Bartok was not such an innovator at that period of his career as we now consider him.

If the program had not been so diligently prepared, and so fabulously executed, Bartok would not have made the impression solely on his own work. It would be our guess that such tricks as recurring slides and other unmusical devices, in less capable hands would be offensive. If the word "beauty" has any part in one's definition of music, it is not so easy to place Bartok, for he certainly begs for credulity most of the time.

By the time he has left his first efforts and advanced through his days of storm and stress, his final essay (1939) is on a continual note of lofty sadness. There is a short prelude to each of the first three movements in which a searching nostalgia, expressed in a long tenuous line on a solo instrument, precedes the general tenor of the movement proper, and finally ends on a fourth movement entirely in a melancholy vein.

Bartok's style undergoes many changes through the years of his quartet-writing. These two really exceptional concerts provided a memorable march-past of the whole exhibit. The choice of their sequence was made with profound wisdom, indeed, with more than a little regard for the psychological effect their playing was sure to make. We would hazard the statement that we don't believe that Bartok, at least in his quartets, will be familiar to the general musical public of a generation or more hence. He was a man of courage, intelligence and imagination, and even of inspiration, at times. Curiosity and conviction were considerable parts of his make-up. The Juilliard quartet gave him a tremendously colorful presentation, and the short series was an invaluable part of the current gala season at Tanglewood.

Motherly Doris Clinch, "Ma" to the boys, cooks and keeps house for this and other choir camps. The house is a mile from Foote's Bay, a mile-and-a-quarter across the lake from Mactier on Lake Stewart.

Swimming, canoeing, hiking, archery, and general camp-lore fill the program under the aegis of Mr. Eric S. Lewis, choirmaster. His song-fests, heard of an evening, drifting out across the still lake, are worth travelling that whole distance to hear. Trophies, medals and crests are the rewards at the time camp breaks. St. Simon's choir camp is financed in part by the parents, in part by proceeds from the Christmas pageant.

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

JUL 19 1948

1200 Hear Concert At Tanglewood

By RAYMOND MORIN

LENOX, Monday — Serge Koussevitzky, 30 strings and wood winds from the Boston Symphony, a mixed chorus of 60 voices, six soloists—~~all applying~~ themselves to the music of Bach—set the Berkshire Music Festival into motion yesterday afternoon in the theater-concert hall at Tanglewood.

The auditorium, second in size only to the shed, bulged to its 1200 capacity, and as many more listened through open doors from the surrounding grounds.

Traditional Shower

Thunderstorms have become traditional at Tanglewood premiers and yesterday was no exception. As the performance of the "Cantata No. 65" came to a close, a heavy downpour joined in. Throughout an extended intermission the less fortunate outsiders frantically sought shelter wherever they could. As if to apologize, the storm cleared for the rest of the concert.

It is difficult to write about Bach without placing deserved emphasis upon the philosophy that motivated his objectives. Yesterday's interpretations by Koussevitzky did not concentrate solely upon the intellectual approach. While the "Brandenburg Concerto No. 3, in G major, for Strings" kept in meticulous account the salient requirements of truthful Bach, one sensed at times an almost romantic approach.

This was notably true of the interjected Second Movement ("Sinfonia" from the cantata "Christ Lag in Todesbanden"). Here the conductor implored rather than directed for tonal richness.

Controlled Counterpoint

The opening and closing movements, both rapid, depicted brilliantly controlled counterpoint. The sturdy, bold strokes that are widely distributed between instruments, were like unbroken links in long chains.

The "Cantata, No. 65" was in many ways disappointing. It was conducted by Hugh Ross who prepared the chorus for this performance. Soloists were James Pease, bass, and David Lloyd tenor.

Mr. Ross devoted his interest mainly to the choral score, creating an effect of minimum participation by the orchestra. The choral defects were slight, chiefly over balance in the sopranos. There was, nevertheless, a feeling of security in rhythm and diction was excellent.

Curiously enough, both recitatives by the soloists were clearly measured to their demands, while the succeeding arias were unsteadily synchronized, perhaps less so in Mr. Lloyd's.

Sound Musicianship

Mr. Pease's long and difficult roullades were obviously taxing because of an impetuous baton. Tonally, Mr. Pease was highly satisfying and while Mr. Lloyd's lyric tenor is more sympathetic to music other than Bach, his performance was marked by sound musicianship.

The word "delightful" seems singularly misplaced in a Bach review, but Georges Laurents playing of the solo score in the "Suite No. 2, in D minor, for flute and strings" compels its use.

Apart from Mr. Laurents' tone, which had an almost ethereal kind of sweetness, he created an illusion of virtuosity without effort. The "Rondo" and Polonaise" movements were played without deviation from rhythm or faltering tone—a challenging accomplishment.

Dr. Koussevitzky showed painstaking concern for the soloist, even complying to the most psychologically-timed ritards. No less worthy of comment were the beautifully contrasted tempos between movements.

Three Pianos

Lukas Foss, Bernard Zighera, and Ralph Berkowitz joined the strings in performing the Concerti in D Minor and C Major, for three pianos. The instruments being placed as they were with their keyboards hidden to the audience, it was not always possible to detect the origins of sound.

This, in a sense, served to emphasize the remarkably close coordination between keyboards. Even the Concerto in D Minor, serious by comparison, was appealingly frolicksome in concept. Both works were flawlessly played from a digital standpoint, and Dr. Koussevitzky balanced the materials without curbing the soloists' purposes.

Future Concerts

Tomorrow evening this preliminary series of extra concerts will continue with an all Mozart program. Mr. Foss will be soloist in the "Pianoforte Concerto in G Major (K. 453)."

Sunday afternoon, July 25, the Mozart program will be repeated, and the Bach on the following Tuesday night. The main series will begin Thursday evening, July 29.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

JUL 19 1948

~~ALL-BACH PROGRAM OFFERED AT LENOX~~

Koussevitzky Conducts Boston Symphony in First Public Concert of Music Series

By HOWARD TAUBMAN
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., July 18—The main Berkshire festival of 1948—the three long week-ends of concert by the full Boston Symphony Orchestra—will not start for eleven days, but the first public concert of the Tanglewood season took place in the theatre-concert hall this afternoon.

The program was all-Bach, and the bulk of it was directed by Serge Koussevitzky, guiding spirit of all that takes place at Tanglewood. Mr. Koussevitzky conducted a chamber orchestra of players from the Boston Symphony, and Hugh Ross, on the conducting staff here, directed a cantata with soloists and chorus drawn from the young men and women enrolled in the Berkshire music center.

It was clear from the size and disposition of the audience that the public does not wish to wait until the regular festival to get its music at Tanglewood. The 1,200 seats in the charming theatre were sold out days in advance, and an additional 100 seats were deployed on the stage behind Mr. Koussevitzky and his performers.

Rain Extends Intermission

Moreover, the doors at the sides and front of the theatre were open, and more than 1100 who had paid their way to sit on benches outdoors or on the lawn listened to the music from the outside. There was a bit of rain just at intermission time, and Mr. Koussevitzky extended the pause. When the second half began the rain had stopped, and most of the crowd outside remained.

Today's Bach program, in make-up and execution, was appealing evidence of the spirit of Tanglewood. Here was Bach, composer of as many moods and aspirations as man is heir to, revealed in his more intimate vein. This was not the apocalyptic Bach of the great choral works, but the man who could swing sweetly and tenderly and jocosely of mundane as well as sacred things.

Mr. Koussevitzky geared his performances in the intimate style of chamber music. For the Concerto in D Minor for Three Pianos, for the Concerto in C for Three Pianos and for the Suite No. 2 in B Minor, he kept his string ensemble modest in size. There was just two stands of first and second violins each, and one stand each of violas, 'cellos and contrabasses. The texture of the music was as transparent as a clear lake here in the Berkshires. And the impact of the performances was as tonic.

Pianists Effective in Solos

There was effective solo work in the two concertos by three of the pianists on the Tanglewood staff—Lukas Foss, Ralph Berkowitz and Bernard Zighera. In the suite, Georges Laurent played the solo flute passages with elegance of style.

Mr. Koussevitzky began the program with Brandenburg Concerto No. 3, in G. Here he marshaled somewhat larger forces. The work was played with clarity of design, with precision and beauty of ensemble tone and with a classic grasp of style that highlighted the emotion of the music more movingly than striving for effect would have done.

The cantata No. 65, "Sie Werden aus Saba Kommen," had David Lloyd, tenor, and James Pease, bass-baritone, as soloists. They sang with intelligence and feeling, and the young chorus approached its task with commendable enthusism. Mr. Ross gave the work steady, business-like, direction.

For Mr. Koussevitzky the Bach program, like the Mozart program, that he presents in advance of the main festival is a labor of affection. These special concerts stem from the war years, when he could not put together a major festival and, in his eagerness to keep activity at Tanglewood alive, compromised handsomely for Bach and Mozart programs. Now the public wants the extras as well as the festival. Today's Bach concert will be repeated on July 27; the Mozart program will be done next Tuesday evening and Sunday afternoon.

This Clipping From TORONTO, CANADA
SATURDAY NIGHT
JUN 1 1948

MUSIC

A Canadian Tanglewood?

By JOHN H. YOCOM

THE idea is not new but every year at this time, when lengthy reports of the forthcoming Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood arrive, it comes up again. And when Canadians go to Lenox, Mass., for all or part of the fourteen concerts from July 18 until August 15, as they have in other years, they will be asking the question: Why doesn't Canada have a comparable festival somewhere in the great Dominion beside green lakes and under pine trees? For a starter suggestion, why not run a three-week affair at Lake Couchiching? With the help of provincial authorities and Canadian musical organizations it could be made into a potent tourist attraction as well as a stimulus for further native appreciation.

Of course, Tanglewood is a unique enterprise. The handsome 210-acre estate in the Berkshire hills was presented to the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1936 by Mrs. Andrew Hepburn and Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan. In 1938 the permanent shed-like structure was completed; before that they had used a circus tent. Now the huge, wedge-shaped building with open sides can accommodate 6,000, while thousands of others sprawl on surrounding lawns, drinking in man's best music and nature's handiwork.

The concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra are only a part of the program. Some five hundred music students will attend the six weeks of professional courses in ensemble performance at the Berkshire Music Centre, commencing July 5. A favorite idea of the B.S.O.'s conductor, Serge Koussevitsky, who retires from the orchestra at the end of the 1948-49 season, this training feature was established in 1940. To its great success hundreds of young musicians in all parts of the continent can testify. Dozens of Canadians have attended the Centre in the past and many more will go again this year. Dr. Koussevitzky, supervising the conducting classes, will be assisted by a distinguished faculty of his own orchestra's principals with departments in orchestral playing, chamber music, composition, opera and choral singing. The school activities will include a large number of concert and operatic performances.

The Festival will open with two concerts conducted by Dr. Koussevitzky and devoted to the music of Bach and Mozart, to be played on Sunday afternoon and Tuesday evening, July 18 and 20, in the intimate Theatre-Concert Hall, each program to be repeated on Sunday afternoon and Tuesday evening in the following week. Three series of concerts (A, B and C) in the Shed will be given in the third, fourth and fifth weeks (July 29-August 15) with a Thursday evening, Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon concert for each series. After series B, an extra all-Tschaikowsky program will be performed on Tuesday, August 10. The three guest-conductors will be Leonard Bernstein, Eleazar de Carvalho and Robert Shaw.

A Rossini work, virtually lost for more than a hundred years, will be this summer's operatic production at the Berkshire Music Centre, Boris Goldovsky, head of the opera department of the school, has announced. "The Turk in Italy", in English for the first time on record and with a newly revised libretto, will be presented in the Theatre-Concert Hall on the evenings of August 9 and 11 during the final week of the Festival. "The Turk in Italy" will be performed for Friends of the Berkshire Music Centre only.

Prom Stars

A tall, personable, young Danish baritone, Frank Wennerholm collaborated with Dr. Frieder Weissmann, Prom guest conductor again last week, to give the audience one of the best shows so far this season. A certain huskiness and imperfect intonation on louder passages frequently marred the singer's offerings in the first half (a "Rigoletto" aria, Rachmaninoff's "In the Silence of the Night", and Strauss's "Zueigning"). But in the second half, Wennerholm's songs (Berlioz's "Mefistofeles' Serenade", Massenet's "Vision Fugitive", etc.) revealed him as a vocalist of massive power possibilities, able also to produce well-rounded soft notes, all the while maintaining firm audience rapport.

Good and all as the Dane was after intermission, Dr. Weissmann and the orchestra were even better. In Tschaikowsky's spooky "Francesca da Riminini" and Ravel's sensuous and appealing "Daphnis and Chloe, Suite No. 1", they ran interpretative and technical gamuts and came out winners. Although Dr. Weissmann, as in the week before, gave a far more sensitive and knowing lead than the orchestra was able to handle completely, the end results were fairly satisfactory.

On June 24 Paul Scherman of the T.S.O. will be guest conductor and Carroll Glenn, the beauteous and talented U.S. violinist, the guest artist.

Faculty members of the Summer School of Church Music, June 21, 22 and 23 at the Royal Conservatory of Music are (l. to r.) Muriel Gidley, organist of Toronto's Park Road Baptist Church, Michael Head, famous English composer and singer, Maurice Garabrant, U.S. organist and choirmaster, E. S. Lewis, organist-choir director at St. Simon's Church, Toronto, and John Cozens, Tallis Choir director and organizer of church music school.

•

Music teachers from all of Canada, from Newfoundland, and from the U.S., are preparing to spend July in Toronto, judging from early registrations for the Summer School at the Royal Conservatory of Music of Toronto. In addition to the courses given by experienced members of the Conservatory faculty, a special "Master Course" by an outstanding musician is included each year, and this season the internationally known accompanist, Gerald Moore, gives a course on "Art of Accompanying".

•

All during the year while the boys of St. Simon's choir, Toronto, have been winning laurels at music festivals, while they have been helping to make the service at St. Simon's one of Toronto's loveliest, they have been dreaming, planning and talking. Only a few weeks more and fifty-odd exuberant boys board the C.N.R. train which stops at a special flag-station so that they can swarm off within a few yards of Buckeye Boys' Camp.

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
JUL 19 1948

Tanglewood Opens Season With Bach (and Downpour)

BY CLIF BRADT

The 1948 Berkshire Music Festival opened in auspicious fashion yesterday at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., with a superbly played group of composition by Johann Sebastian Bach, punctuated by an intermission downpour that dampened everything but the ardor of the audience, which overflowed the Concert Hall.

The practice of opening the festival with a Bach-Mozart series was a most fortunate heritage of the war, when it was necessary to plan programs for small orchestra. Serge Koussevitzky, the director, has continued the plan until it is now tradition.

The notable Brandenburg Concerto No. 3 in G Major for Strings, with Sinfonia from the Cantata "Christ lag in Todesbanden," was performed in most authentic manner with an unlabored intensity of musicianship that could in no way be mistaken for emotional liberties with the polyphonic purity of the work.

The Cantata No. 65, "Sie werden aus Alle Kommen," with orchestra and chorus, featured David Lloyd, tenor, and James Pease, bass, under the baton of Hugh Ross, who prepared and conducted the presentation.

Chorus and instrumental balance was exceptionally well calculated and the soloists imparted some highly acceptable work. The tenor demonstrated there is room in this work for a bit of lyrical tone not far removed from Celtic origin.

When the crowd assembled once more as the intermission approached its close, a heavy storm broke, drenching the lawn crowd and driving all to cover. The rat-a-tat on the roof threatened for a few moments to add an unusual pedal point to the proceedings, but ceased before Dr. Koussevitsky returned to the podium.

Although this reviewer is not overfond of the piano when used as a multiple instrument in concert, preferring the more responsible single instrument, with or without orchestra, Lukas Foss, Bernard Zighera and Ralph Berkowitz performed two concerti for three pianos and strings that were revelations in this field of music. The works were those in D Minor and C Major and, with such musicians, one is moved to reconstruct the impressions left by various duos, trios, quartets and what not.

An especially fine offering was Suite No. 2 in D Minor for Flute and Strings, with Georges Laurent as the flute soloist. Not only was Mr. Laurent in top form, but the strings brought out a product of blend and contrast those who heard will not soon forget.

The Mozart end of this Bach-Mozart festival opener will come at 8:15 p. m. tomorrow, when the program will include the "Nacht Musique" Serenade for Two Oboes, Two Clarinets, Two Horns and Two Bassoons, K. 338; Symphony in E-Flat Major, K. 543 (39); Piano Concerto in G Major, K. 453, with Lukas Foss, and the Symphony in C Major, K. 338 (34). In reverse order, these programs will be repeated, the Mozart at 3:30 p. m. July 25 and the Bach at 8:15 p. m. July 27.

Tanglewood Bach Program First Pre-Festival Event

By CARL E. LINDSTROM

WITH EACH passing year it becomes more apparent that the important music making at Tanglewood does not begin with the opening of the big shed for the nine concerts devoted to the established popular classics. What happens in the two smaller halls during the pre-festival weeks is of far greater significance.

The first of the symphony concerts will be given on Thursday, July 29, but Sunday afternoon in the Theater-Concert Hall occurred the most glistening performance of Bach's third Brandenburg Concerto that the most fastidious heart could wish for. With it were heard the two triple concertos, in D minor and C major with Lukas Foss, Bernard Zighera and Ralph Berkowitz at the pianos, second Suite in D minor for strings and flute (Georges Laurent) and the Cantata No. 65, Sie werden asu Saba alle kommen.

Dr. Koussevitsky, looking as fit and dapper as ever, was in obvious good spirits, prideful and content. He called up a performance that was prevailingly brilliant and drawn with bold strokes. Even the slow movement was big. It was a disciplined perormance, the kind of music-making in which the Boston players excel and, besides, it makes good Bach.

For the cantata, Hugh Ross took the podium. The festival chorus was nicely balanced and obviously well prepared. There was complete rapport and musicianly voice management throughout.

It was the soloists, James Pease, bass, and David Lloyd, tenors, who made this cantata the eloquent thing that it was, Both produced a perectly modelled vocal line even in the rapid passages. Their German diction was superb, but most important of all, they sang meaningfully. I wish that all vocalists who fancy themselves oratorio singers could have heard this interpretation and have profited by it.

Mr. Ross did not pay too much attention to his instrumentalists during these solos; for the accompaniment was allowed to crowd them, particularly Mr. Lloyd who was given little opportunity to breathe but managed a thoroughly artistic performance nevertheless.

Three Contemporary Composers Heard

Sunday morning in the small hall there was a foregathering in the name of chamber music for only an hour's time which allowed for the playing of Berezowsky's Septet for pairs of trumpets, horns, trombones and a tuba; Milhaud's miniature Suite after Corrette, for oboe, clarinet and bassoon; and a new Lukas Foss string quartet.

The latter is a one-movement affair taking the form of free variations. The voices are busy and independent but there is backing a veriety of moods. The piece is quite showy, objective, its content lying well on the surface. One can admire it without being moved by it.

The Milhaud vignettes preserved the antique flavor in spite of touches of modern counterpoint and a rather persistently chromatic bass. Le coucou and Tambourin amused the audience and, in fact, so did all these singularly deft and stylish bits.

Berezowsky had excellent material for his brass septet in the fanfare and gallop and in the concluding rondo. He made the most of it, producing smart, slick-surfaced music. The pseudo-graces of the Valse did not suit the timbres he employed and the thing turned out more like an etude. To a less degree, that was true of the lullaby, but here there were some exotic tints and a modicum of sentiment.

The performers were: Brass, William Babcock, Peter LaBella, Wilke Renwick, Ralph Pottle, David Jett, Herbert Owens and James McAllister; the woodwinds, Duane Voth, Paul Schaller and Gunter Jacobius; the strings, Zvi Zeitlin, Beatrice Brown, Rowland Pack and Ma Si Hon.

Quartets of Bartok Offered in 2 Concerts

When well over a thousand Bartok people get together and applaud to the echo an all-Bartok string quartet program you know you are at Tanglewood. It couldn't happen anywhere else. Of course, many of them were Music Center students but the theater-concert hall was well-populated with friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and other musically elect who do not insist upon Brahms cake with Tschaikowsky icing.

All six of the Bartok quartets were done by the Juilliard players, the Fourth, First and Sixth on Saturday night and the other three just a week previously. The group comprises Robert Mann, first violin; Robert Koff, second; Raphael Hillyer, viola, and Arthur Winograd, cello.

Here was the first and last of Bartok in this medium, spanning the period from 1907 to 1939. True, there was a change of style but it was the voice of the same man—oftenest a still, small voice, detached, self-communing — but whether you listened to the atmospheric, somewhat sensuous suggestions of his graying days, there perman or the simpler philosophies of his graying days there persisted a poet's integrity and consistency.

His technique from first to last was masterly. This craftsman made use of dissonance as he used the diatonic harmonies, always as a medium and nothing more. None of these quartets is academic music and certainly not salon stuff. There is too much ozone in them for that. It is difficult to pin down specific references or employment of folk material but so indefatigable a lorist as Bartok could not but infuse that spirit into his art concepts.

The most "modern" of these quartets is the Fourth. It has a cetrain ferocity deriving from its extreme use of syncopation, parallel seconds and other harmonic acids, glissandi and pitchless pizzicati and especially by reason of its short, biting phrases which harass the ear, but its muted second movement, prestissimo, is so fetching that there was a spontaneous outburst of applause at its conclusion.

This Clipping From
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

JUL 19 1948

Ovation Given Koussevitzky As '48 Music Festival Opens

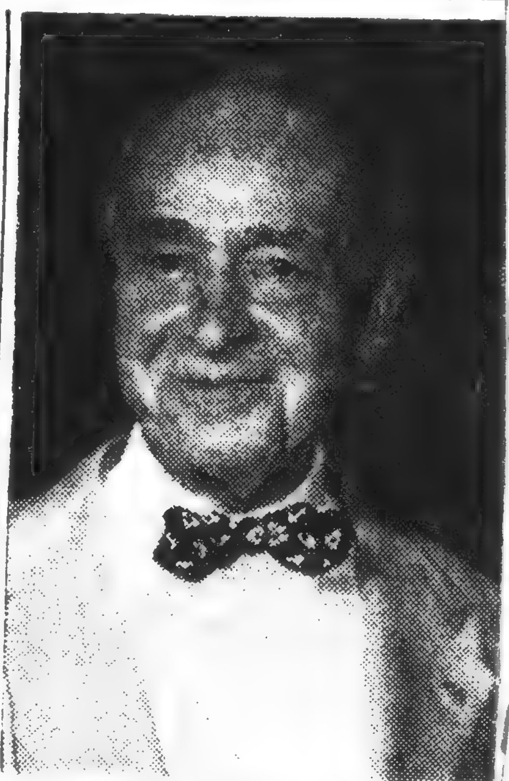
Bach Concert at Tanglewood Draws Crowd of 2,440 to Theater-Music Hall Which Has Capacity of Only 1,200—Cloudburst Scatters Out-of-Doors Audience—Program Marks Opening of 15-Concert Season—First of Major Concerts in Big Music Shed on July 29—Guests Find New Features at Tanglewood.

The biggest crowd that has ever flocked to Tanglewood for a program in the theater-concert hall gave Dr. Serge Koussevitzky a stirring ovation yesterday as he opened the 1948 Berkshire symphonic festival.

Storm Scatters Crowd

Although the theater-concert hall seats only 1,200, there were 2,440 paid admissions at the gate. The fact that a cloudburst, just at the intermission, scattered the crowd that had been listening outside the building, did not diminish the enthusiasm of the reception given the program of Bach's works.

The intermission was prolonged until the 20-minute shower had ended and the out of door audience, which had taken shelter at the main Tanglewood house and under the spreading roof of the big music shed, across the lawn, reassembled on the benches outside the concert hall for the second half of the program. Its members probably experienced less inconvenience than a half dozen whose seats inside the building happened to be under a weak spot in the roof.



SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

The concert was one of the four, devoted to Bach and Mozart compositions, which are a hold-over from war time when only the intimate concerts in the theater-concert hall were attempted because of gasoline rationing which put Tanglewood beyond the reach of many of its regular patrons. Dr. Koussevitzky has continued them as part of the regular festival offerings for the past two seasons, bringing the total of festival concerts to 15. These include the four Bach Mozart series, the nine regular "festival series" concerts in the music shed by the full Boston symphony orchestra, and the two extra music shed concerts, one of which this year will be an all-Tschaikowsky program while the other, called "Tanglewood on Parade," will exhibit the full scope of activities at Tanglewood where the Berkshire Music Center has been conducting its 1948 school session for three weeks.

Concert Program

Yesterday's program opened with the Third Brandenberg concerto, in G major, for strings, into which the sinfonia from the cantata "Christ lag in Todesbanden" was interpolated as a second movement. This was followed by the cantata, "Sie werden aus Saba Alle Kommen," for orchestra and chorus, bass and tenor. Dr. Koussevitzky yielded the podium for this number to Hugh Ross of the Music center's choral department faculty who had trained the excellent chorus of 60 voices which, with the string and reed sections of the Boston orchestra, supported the soloists, James Pease, bass-baritone, and David Lloyd, tenor.

Principal offerings on the post-intermission part of the program were Bach's two concertos for three pianos and strings. Lukas Foss, Bernard Zighera and Ralph Berkowitz were the piano soloists in the two works which Bach, according to the German legend, wrote for performance by himself and his two sons. Also played was the Suite No. 2 in D minor for flute and strings, with Georges Laurent as soloist.

New Features

Visitors to Tanglewood yesterday found two new features, the replica of the "Little Red House" where Nathaniel Hawthorne wrote Tanglewood tales, and a new reception room building at the gate. Also noticeable was an expansion of the buffet which evidently was well patronized yesterday by picnic parties before the concert.

Yesterday's program will be repeated a week from tomorrow evening. The second concert in the Bach-Mozart series, this one devoted entirely to Mozart's works, will be given tomorrow evening at 8.15 o'clock and repeated next Sunday. The first of the major festival concerts by the full orchestra in the music shed will be given on Thursday evening, July 29. The others will follow on successive Saturday and Thursday evenings and Sunday afternoons, with the extra concerts on Tuesday evenings Aug. 3 and Aug. 10.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

JUL 6 - 1948

CHAMBER MUSIC CONCERT SLATED AT TANGLEWOOD

Coolidge Series Program To Friends of Berkshire Music Center

The first purely musical event of the season at Tanglewood will be the concert tomorrow evening at 8.15 p. m. in the Theater-Concert Hall. This is the first of four concerts of chamber music by Franz Schubert on the four Wednesday evenings of July. The series is the gift of Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge and is open to friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

The Program

Wednesday evening's program will offer the quartet for ute, guitar, viola and violoncello, the Sonata for Arpeggione and the entire song cycle, "Winterreise," sung by Ralph Herbert, baritone, with Erich Itor Kahn at the piano. The other artists will be Carleton Sprague Smith, flutist; Suzanne Bloch, guitar; Paul Doktor, violist; and Sidney Edwards, 'cellist.

In the sonata the arpeggione part will be played by Mr. Doktor on the viola. Long since extinct, the arpeggione had a vogue which lasted only a few years. It was invented in 1823 and was also called guitar violoncello or guitarre d'amour. It had six strings and a body like a guitar's but was played with a bow.

The guitar was a very popular instrument in Schubert's day and when called upon the little Viennese master could play it. His "Cantata for his Father's Name Day," obviously a piece for a family occasion, composed in 1813, contained a part for guitar.

The Berkshire Festival begins with the Bach-Mozart series July 18, 20, 25, and 27, Serge Koussevitzky conducting. The ~~first concert~~ in the music shed by the full Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky will be Thursday evening, July 29.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

JUL 20 1948

LITTLE RED COTTAGE at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., where Nathaniel Hawthorne wrote "House of Seven Gables" and "Wonder Book", has been restored by National Federation of Music Clubs and will be dedicated Saturday for use of Berkshire Music Center. Serge Kossevitsky, director, stands in yard. He and 'cellist Gregor Piatigorsky have studios in house.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
JUL 20 1948

Tanglewood

Tonight at 8.15

The second concert in the Bach-Mozart series of the Berkshire Festival will be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting. The program will be Mozart's Serenade ("Nacht Musique") for winds, symphony in E flat major, piano concerto in G major and symphony in C major. Reserved seats and admission to grounds are on sale at the box office.

Tomorrow Afternoon

A song recital will be given at 4.30 in the chamber music hall, with the following program:

Das Marienleben .... Hindemith
Phyllis Curtin, soprano.
Eloise Matthies, piano.

Vier Ernste Gesange .... Brahms
Roger Fee, baritone.
Nell Thurman, piano.

Chansons d'Eve .... Faure
Phyllis Curtin, soprano.
Eloise Matthies, piano.

Bachianas Brasilieras No. 6....Villa-Lobos
(Suite for voice and violin)
Edith Gordon, soprano.
Zvi Zeitlin, violin.
(For voices and cellos)
Edith Gordon, soprano.

Carl Fasshauer
Ruth Krug
Robert Jamieson
Robert Allen

Erling Bergtsson
Daniel Stern
Kermit Moore
Francois Zighera

Robert Cornman, conductor.

Tomorrow Night

The Boston String Quartet will play some of the most popular chamber music of Franz Schubert. Open to Friends of the Berkshire Music Center and guests of Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, the donor, the program will be the third of four Wednesday evening concerts. It will include the string quartet in D minor, the quartet movement in C minor and the string quintet in C major. The artists will be Alfred Krips, violin; Sheldon Rothenberg, violin; Joseph dePasquale, viola; and Alfred Zighera, cello, assisted by Mischa Nieland, cello.

The string quartet ("Death and the Maiden") contains variations on one of the composer's most popular songs. The second number is really an unfinished quartet, in the same position as the famous "Unfinished Symphony," and also highly admired. On his death, Schubert had written one movement and a fragment of a second.

The Quintet is considered by many to be the composer's greatest chamber work. It was written in the last four months of his life and never performed before his death.

Music Club Officials Arrive for Dedication

Three members of the National Federation of Music Clubs arrived last evening at the Curtis Hotel to make final arrangements for the dedication exercises of the Hawthorne cottage this week end. They are Mrs. Russell Taylor Hatch of Melrose, president of the federation's New England district; Mrs. Guy P. Gannett of Portland, Me., past president of the federation and chairman of the committee, on the restoration, and Miss Helen Havener of New York, publicity director.

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

JUL 21 1948

TANGLEWOOD HEARS MOZART PROGRAMS

By RAYMOND MORIN

LENOX, Wednesday—The second Berkshire festival concert by the ~~Boston Symphony~~ under Serge Koussevitzky last night coupled the famous "Symphony in E-Flat Major, K. 543" with the little known "Syhphony in C Major K. 338," in an all-Mozart program.

The 2200 capacity theater concert hall and stand-by audience also heard the "Serenade" ("Nacht Musique") for winds (K. 388) and Lukas Foss as piano soloist in the "Concerto in G Major (.453)."

Designed for Intelligentsia

The balance of this festival is composed of musical fare for the average concert audience, but last night's program and the all-Bach Sunday afternoon were designed for the intelligentsia, or should I say for the seasoned listener.

In some ways, last night's program was the more exacting. Bach interpretation is largely governed by rule; that of Mozart molds itself more freely to individual method. In our Bach review, we spoke with qualification of Dr. Koussevitzky's romantic leanings in the slow movements of the Bach works.

This same tendency served him well in his Mozart conceptions. To be specific on this point is to list out certain factors in his technical approach. First of all, the chosen tempos in the two symphonies (rotating as is the custom between rapid and slow, with an introductory adagio and minuet added to the one in E-flat) were given an exact and logical pulse.

Accents Sharply Marked

There were no discrepancies in dynamic boundaries, accents were sharply marked without undue penetration. The multiple fine points, pizzicatos, transitory changes of speed, balance between themes and backgrounds were lucid enough for dictation purposes.

I mention all these because in spite of these accomplishments, which are no guarantee against dull performance, Dr. Koussevitzky imbued this music with a spontaniety that made its craftsmenship seemingly incidental.

The "Nacht Musique" was the most exacting test of the evening. Quite apart from the fact that it isn't easy to keep oboes, clarinets, horns and bassoons in tune, the sounds they create must be completely euphonious and the ensemble must be balanced.

Finely Skilled

The eight players were finely skilled technically. In fact nothing was amiss tonally except for one or two unimportant discrepencies in the horns.

The men permitted the conductor to direct a striking conception of the work. The opening allegro was given an ominous quality, dispelled by a slow movement of rich tonal hues. The real skill appeared in the minuet (in the style of a canon) with its transiently active themes, and in the variations of the finale.

As you may know, Mr. Foss is the official pianist of the Boston Symphony, having succeeded Jesus Maria Sanroma in that post. Mr. Foss is not the Sanroma type of pianist. He hasn't the temperament, strength or technic of the sometimes bombastic Puerto Rican.

Good Mozart Interpreter

But Mr. Foss is an admirable Mozart interpreter. And he has the special technic for playing Mozart (marred only by certain distracting mannerisms) which requires a special kind of virtuosity. The concerto Mr. Foss chose is one of the less known of the twenty-five. The themes and analytical plan of these works differ somewhat, but the approach remains essentially the same.

Mr. Foss performed the work as an interpreter rather than technician. We are reminded that Alexander Brailowsky did the opposite here three seasons ago in the "Concerto in A Major."

After a long orchestral introduction, the statement and acknowledgement of the opening movements lively themes were gently but effectively projected. The cadenza was handled with digital skill and refinement. The slow movement was tonal enchantment, and the gay, light-hearted finale romped along pleasantly in close repartee between soloist and orchestra. The pianist received an ovation for his efforts.

Vividly Depicted

The two sympohnies were a delight and not only to the scholar. The one in C Major is more or less experimental Mozart, in spots not unlike the style of early Italian operatic overtures. The one in E Flat is from a group of three mature works that represent Mozart at his best. The sharply contrasted moods were vididly depicted, and as I have said earlier, the music had a buoyancy that almost defied concentration upon its method.

The next important event at Tanglewood will be the dedication on Saturday afternoon of the Hawthorne cottage. This is an exact replica of the author's Summer home at Tanglewood and is being given by the National Federation of Music Clubs for teaching and working studios of Berkshire Music Center students.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
STAR
JUL 20 1948

TICAL and AMUSEMENTS

Music

The Roof Leaks, But The Music Goes On

By Robert A. Hague

Hague

LENOX, Mass.

A sudden thundershower inconvenienced some of the audience Sunday afternoon at the opening concert of the 1948 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, but failed to ruffle in the least the even tenor of conductor Serge Koussevitzky's and the Boston Symphony's way with the music of Johann Sebastian Bach.

Preceded by several substantial claps of thunder, the deluge arrived in the middle of the intermission, forcing the overflow crowd that had been listening to the music on the lawn outside the Theater-Concert Hall to take temporary shelter, and wetting rather thoroughly those of the 1200 inside the hall who happened to be sitting directly beneath the leaky ventilators in the roof or in the vicinity of a small freshet which cascaded under one of the side doors. Otherwise, it was a very considerate and well-behaved shower, cooling off the heavy atmosphere and retreating with alacrity as soon as Dr. Koussevitzky had had time to change his trousers (from cream-colored to dark tan) and was ready to begin the second half of the program.

* * *

The concert, which was devoted to works by Bach for voices and for orchestral ensembles of chamber proportions with various combinations of solo instruments, served as an ingratiating demonstration of the protean diversity of Bach's genius. Whatever its form or manner of expression, none of this music was less than first rate or lacking in direct appeal and interest.

The Star Reviews

BACH PROGRAM, presented by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, in the Theatre-Concert Hall, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., Sunday afternoon. Soloists: David Lloyd, tenor; James Pease, bass; Georges Laurent, flutist; Lukas Foss, Bernard Zighere and Ralph Berkowitz, pianists; choral conductor, Hugh Ross.

Brandenburg Concerto No. 3, in G major, for Strings (with Sinfonia from the Cantata, Christ lag in Todesbanden).

Cantata No. 65, Sie werde naus Saba Alle Kommen (Orchestra and chorus, with tenor and bass soloist).

Concerto in D minor, for Three Pianos and Strings.

Suite No. 2, in D minor, for Flute and Strings.

Concerto in C major, for Three Pianos and Strings.

And the performances measured up in nearly every respect to the first rate-ness of the music. Dr. Koussevitzky conducted the instrumental items con amore, Hugh Ross did likewise when he took over the podium for the 65th Cantata, and the playing of the picked groups of Boston musicians was flawless from a technical standpoint and notably apposite in style and spirit. The special acoustical properties of the wooden-walled-and-ceilinged hall, too, added to the listeners' enjoyment, making the always superb tone of the Bostonian strings and woodwinds even richer and more resonant in quality.

* * *

Walking under the Hawthorne pines in the late afternoon sunshine after the concert, one recalled most clearly the flowing melodies of the central Alla Siciliana movement of the D-minor Concerto for Three Pianos, so sensitively set forth by the Messrs. Foss, Zighera and Berkowitz; George Laurent's virtuoso flute playing in the lovely Polonaise and Double section of the Suite No. 2—his tone was as silvery as his instrument—and, for that matter, the entire Suite, so winningly was it performed under Dr. Koussevitzky's baton. Gratefully remembered, too, were the ordered briskness of the two Allegros and the depth of feeling achieved in the interpolated Sinfonia in the Third Brandenburg Concerto; the freshness and purity of the singing of the Festival Chorus in the 65th Church Cantata, and the accurate and expressive solo voicing in the same work by Mr. Pease and Mr. Lloyd.

Serge Koussevitzky, who conducted members of the Boston Symphony at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

* * *

Dr. Koussevitzky's first entrance on the stage Sunday brought an ovation from his hearers, who rose to their feet in honor of the leader who has done so much to establish and maintain the Berkshire Festivals' remarkably high musical standards. Mr. Ross and the several soloists, too, were warmly applauded by the audiences, whose members come each Summer from all parts of the country to attend these concerts.

The series continues in the Theater-Concert Hall Tuesday evening with an all-Mozart program, to be repeated next Sunday afternoon. The Bach program will be given again on Tuesday evening, July 27. The concerts by the full Boston Symphony Orchestra in the huge Music Shed begin on Thursday evening, July 29, and continue through Sunday afternoon, Aug. 15.

This Clipping From
WALTHAM, MASS.
NEWS TRIBUNE
JUL 20 1948

The Stroller

The Berkshire Music Festival at Lenox opening its 10th season, and the traditional Boston Esplanade Concerts, observing their 20th anniversary, are now at their pinnacle of popularity.

According to the Massachusetts Development and Industrial Commission, these concert series enchance vacation opportunities found in the Bay State. They present top performers from the Boston Symphony Orchestra and such talented conductors as Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, Arthur Fiedler and Leonard Bernstein.

It is not uncommon for audiences of 20,000 to line the banks of Boston's Charles River around Hatch Memorial Shell to hear the free Esplanade Concerts presented nightly. Monday excepted. during three weeks of July. Nor is it unusual for audiences to overflow the Tanglewood Music Shed for Berkshire Festival performances. The shed's 6000 capacity is augmented by spacious grounds, where additional thousands relax to hear the music.

Locales of these outstanding music attractions are easily accessible to seashore and inland summer resorts of Massachusetts, accounting for much of their popularity with vacationists. The festival's four-week calendar includes the classics of Bach, Mozart and Tchaikovsky, while the Esplanade Concerts feature a lighter touch in music. Both types are popular with summer visitors.

On July 24, members of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center will gather at Tanglewood to dedicate the newly-restored "Little Red House." This Hawthorne Cottage, where the sage of a century ago wrote "The House of Seven Gables" and conceived his "Tanglewood Tales," will house the studies of some of today's great musicians at the world-famous teaching center.

To the 400 talented young artists now studying at the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood represents the privilege of working for six weeks with some of the world's leading conductors, composers and performers.

The popularity of "music for everyone" in Massachusetts is attended to by the Development Commission, which receives thousands of inquiries annually from all over the country for information about the Berkshire Musical Festival and Esplan Concerts.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
JUL 20 1948

Soloist

Adele Addison, soprano, pupil at the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, will be soloist with the student orchestra at a concert in the Music Shed Friday evening in connection with the dedication of the Hawthorne cottage. As a complement to the National Federation of Music Clubs, which restored the house where the novelist lived and worked in 1850-51, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and director of the Center, will conduct the concert.

This Clipping From
NEWPORT NEWS, VA.
TIMES-HERALD
JUL 20 1948

NEW SERIES TONIGHT: ABC 9:30 first of four weekly broadcasts from the Berkshire Music Festival at Lenox, Mass., with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducting the chamber music ensemble of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in an All-Mozart Programs.

Young Artists To Be Featured At Dedication

Three-Day Program To Mark Opening of Hawthorne Cottage

Six young artists, winners of awards offered by the National Federation of Music Clubs, will take part in the three-day dedication ceremonies that will officially open the Hawthorne cottage at Tanglewood this coming week end. Exercises on the grounds Saturday afternoon, a recital in the chamber music hall following, and the recital in Sedgwick Hall in the evening will be open to the public.

Three students of the Berkshire Music Center who will be featured soloists at the recital are LuCretia Ferre, soprano of Salt Lake City, Utah; Robert Allen, cellist of Providence; and Martha Butler, contralto, of Newport, R. I. They are studying under scholarships provided for the federation by the Newport Music Club.

Miss Ferre has been studying for a professional career in New York City for the past three years. Mr. Allen is a student of Jean Bedetti, first cellist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Paula Lenchner of New York, who was recognized for her dramatic soprano voice by the Metropolitan Opera Company in 1945, two years after she was the federation's "young artist" winner, will be the soloist for the recital Saturday evening.

Joan Brainerd, lyric soprano of New York and Hamden, Conn., 1947 young artist winner, will sing at the chamber music concert of the school at 10.30 Sunday. David Laurent of Springfield will appear in a short program following the luncheon that the New England district of the National Federation of Music Clubs will hold at the Curtis Hotel Friday noon.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
JUL 21 1948

Etchings, Instruments, Letters Included in 1948 BSO Exhibit

A score of Daumier etchings, the Casadesus collection of old musical instruments, and Boaz Piller's framed letters and photographs of musicians both past and present constitute this summer's Berkshire Museum exhibition loaned by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The current show, opening this afternoon for the third consecutive year, is far more inclusive than that of 1946 or 1947.

Honore Daumier, the 19th Century French artist who died completely blind, has been called the Michelangelo of caricature. He began his career producing plates for music publishers, and as might be expected, his etchings at the museum deal with musicians and their audiences.

There is an accordion player, for instance, and underneath the caption reads: "One does not yet have the right to kill those who play this instrument, but it is to be hoped that this eventuality will come about."

Another lithograph depicts a lady singer with her mouth wide open. Altogether too near her to be yawning and talking among themselves are several men and women. The drawing is entitled: "A Victim of Politeness." The victim is the lady.

Horns, Flutes and Fifes

Three separate show cases on the floor of the upstairs salon are filled with the Casadesus collection. Robert Casadesus is a French [illegible] not long ago conducted [illegible] in Great Barrington, [illegible] played Bach's Bradenburg concerto three years ago at Tanglewood. Not long afterward, he gave the ancient instruments to the Boston Symphony.

Among the more interesting pieces on display is a combination flute and walking stick that Voltaire gave Frederick the Great of Prussia. There is an English horn made by Kuss of Vienna, with an inscription that commemorates the first performance of "Tristan and Isolde," at which time the horn was used. Next to it is a pocket viol, signed by Andre Vinatte in the year 1612.

Composers and Letters

Boaz Piller's interesting group of letters from famous composers, almost invariably framed with their photographs, and often embellished with musical phrases written for the occasion, round out this year's show. Bald-headed Jean J. Sibelius stares out from the wall right next to Wanda Landowska, the tiny Polish pianist. Igor F. Stravinsky included a portrait of him drawn by Picasso. George Gershwin wrote asking someone to change a box from Monday until Tuesday night (month and year unknown)because Serge Koussevitsky could not make it Monday night.

Mr. Piller, who has been with the Boston Symphony Orchestra since 1916, is playing the contrabassoon this summer at Tanglewood. He has not restricted himself to musicians he has personally known. There are letters and photographs of immortal composers including Hector Berlioz, Felix Mendelssohn and Rossini. A particularly interesting picture is that of Cesar Franck at the organ. In his letter, Franck is making an engagement, preferably for Tuesday, with a lady of his acquaintance.

Cost of Good Music

One of the distinguishing features of culture as it is to be found in Boston is the series of Esplanade Concerts by the Charles River Basin, now in its 20th season. The Hatch Memorial Shell from which the music of high excellence is radiated to many thousands of listeners is a notable feature of Boston landscape.

The only trouble with this series is the fact that so few of the listeners feel disposed to put their hands into their pockets to help with the expense. Now, in the closing days of the 1948 series, the anniversary committee finds that there will probably be a $5000 deficit when the concerts close next Saturday night.

This should not be. Comparison of the thousands in attendance and the donations sent to the Merchants National Bank makes it clear that proper support is not being given. More help should come in.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
JUL 21 1948

Tanglewood to Hear Schubert Concert

Special to The Hartford Times

Lenox—Some of the most popular chamber music of Franz Schubert will be played this evening at Tanglewood by the Boston String Quartet. The third of four Wednesday evening concerts contributed by Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, the program will be open to Friends of the Berkshire Music Center and guests of the donor.

The program will include the String Quartet in D minor, the Quartet Movement in C minor and the String Quintet in C major. The artists will be Alfred Krips, violin; Sheldon Rothenberg, violin; Joseph dePasquale, viola; and Alfred Zighera and Mischa Nieland, cellos, the latter assisting the quartet.

BLIMP HELPS CONCERT FUND

Post
Jul 21

Flashes Message to the Crowd on Esplanade

The Goodyear Blimp, flying over Boston and Greater Boston last night, with Boston Post news flashes, came to the aid of the Esplanade Concert Fund. With 30,000 people gathered in the Charles River basin to hear the magic music of the Esplanade Symphony players in the Hatch Shell, the blimp flashed the message, "Back the Esplanade Concerts." The concerts which conclude for the season this coming Sunday night have been running in the red. They depend mainly on contributions from people who attend the concert. After the Goodyear Blimp's message, the response of donors of currency and coin was the best of the season.

This Clipping From
WEST WARWICK, R. I.
PAWTUXET VALLEY TIMES
JUL 21 1948

MUSIC

Little Red House Will Be Opened

Dedication of Music Center in Lenox on Saturday

The dedication of the Little Red House at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., by the National Federation of Music Clubs will be held on Saturday and Sunday, July 24 and 25. Mrs. Guy Patterson Gannett, national president, will preside. Mrs. Anne M. Francis as president, will represent the Rhode Island Federation.

From the Pawtuxet Valley Patrons of Music, Miss Yvonne L. Auger, past president, and Mrs. Cecile Richard, will attend, together with Miss Mildred Knight of Greenwood.

The New England District meeting will be held on one of the three days, Friday through Sunday. Registration will be on Friday. New state presidents will be introduced.

Robert Shaw of New York will speak on Friday. He is a member of the Berkshire Festival School faculty. David Laurent of Rhode Island, first winner of the Anne M. Gannett Foundation award, will give baritone solos. Among guests will be Mrs. Gannett, Mrs. Royden James Keith, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Boston Symphony orchestra and Geo. Judd.

Miss Gay Tapley, American delegate to the Luxembourg Musical Youth Conference will speak. There will be an advanced student orchestra, conducted by Dr. Koussevitzky. The soloist will be Adele Addison.

This Clipping From
NEWPORT, R. I.
NEWS
JUL 21 1948

ORCHESTRA ADDS TO STRING ENSEMBLE

Boston Symphony Violinist, Wife To Take Part In Program At Casino

Julius Theodorowicz, for 48 years violinist in the Boston Symphony Orchestra and former assistant concertmaster, will join the Newport Smyphony Orchestra for the second summer concert at the Casino Sunday evening, acting as its concertmaster. His wife, Hazel L'African Theodorowicz, cellist and daughter of a former solo trumpet player with the Boston Symphony, will also be in the ensemble, as will Anna Golden who has been solo viola player with the San Antonio Orchestra, Texas, for five years. There will be several other additions to the string section of the orchestra Sunday, under the baton of Hazen Carr, director.

To overcome certain difficulties in the projection of tone in the outdoor ampitheatre a sounding board 24 by eight feet has been erected at the center of the horseshoe where the orchestra is to be seated. Many new chairs have been received to increase the seating capacity of the Casino.

Soloist for this week's concert will be Miss Emma Beldan of Newport, former Philadelphia Opera Company soprano, who will be heard in the aria "Voi lo sapete" from Mascagni's "Cavalleria Rusticana," and "O Mistress Mine," by Mary Howe, wife of Walter Bruce Howe and a member of the Newport colony.

Orchestral selections on the program are "Air for G String," by Bach-Wilhelmj; "Hungarian Lutspiel Overture" by Keler-Bela; "Sleeping Beauty Waltz" by Tschaikowsky; "Themes from the Piano Concerto" of Tschaikowsky; "The Beautiful Galatea" overture by Suppe; a selection from "Sweethearts," by Victor Herbert; "Wierner Blut" waltz of Strauss; and the march, "Semper Fidelis," of John Philip Sousa.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
JUL 21 1948

Music

Brilliant Mozart Concert Given by Boston Orchestra

By JAY ROSENFELD

The Mozart program in the theatre-concert hall at Tanglewood last night was one of the most brilliantly played concerts ever given at these Berkshire Festivals. Serge Koussevitzky, using a small orchestra of about 40 of the Boston Symphony men, played two of the symphonies with a zest and verve, a grace and taste, which he has rarely surpassed in the memorable years he has honored these concerts.

The E flat symphony (K543), and the less familiar C major (K-338), the Serenade, "Nacht Musique" and the G major piano concerto, with Lukas Foss as soloist, was the program. The serenade is written for eight wind instruments, two each of oboes, clarinets, bassoons and French horns. The lovely sonorities produced and consummate refinement of the playing raised this performance to exemplary heights. An audience which filled the hall, the rear of the stage, and extended to every available spot outside the hall caught the spirit of the evening and gave the artists compensating the grand manner. As intimate as some of the phrases of Mozart may be, still the whole approach to the music was in the loftiest spheres of music-making. The men of the orchestra were in the vein. They responded to the slightest indication of their masterly leader with mirror-like reflection. The delicately-spaced notes which end the short sentences of the slow movement of the E flat symphony were played as by an artist, working on a portrait, and adding final brush strokes. After the stately introduction of the opening movement, the tempo of the allegro was taken at a remarkably comforting pace. "No need to hurry here, let's linger on every note" the conductor might as well have said. "There will be moments when a fleeting sweep will fit in better," and so it was all the evening. Exactly the right sense of the spirit of the music played with the expert assurance and confidence which the leader's personality inspires. This allows the orchestra to play with an abandon and relaxation which ı not fail to be conveyed to the ꞉eners. It was virtuoso orchestral playing. The final dance movement of the happy C major symphony just rollicked along. This is Mozart of his operatic moments. No one would have been surprised if "Don Giovanai" or "Figaro," in costume, had appeared at the front of the stage to take part. The whole evening had a scintillating exhilration which culminated in this marvelously gay experience.

Lukas Foss did a musicianly job in the concerto, blending his tone and the embellishing figures to that of the orchestra with care and musical insight. Indeed, he treated it as a chamber music work more often than as a solo with its consequent recession into the background more than might have been warranted.

Very few of us in this vicinity need to be persuaded any more of the capabilities of the Boston Orchestra, and of the seemingly infinite capacity of Dr. Koussevitzky. An evening like last night's program, however, reaffirms one's convictions. Those Mozart symphonies are not simply the result of experts applying themselves diligently. Rather they are the result of years of study and repetition, of continually distilling and refining, until the end product is free of all impurities and contains only the essence of what the years and great native intuition prompt.

Syracuse Herald Jul 21

TALKING IT OVER

Hawthorne Cottage Restored With Dedicatory Program July 23-24

By EMMA VAN WORMER

THE NATIONAL FEDERATION OF MUSIC CLUBS will dedicate Hawthorne Cottage, which it has restored, in Tanglewood, Mass., Friday and Saturday with a program including a concert by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the student orchestra of Berkshire Music Cen

NATHANIEL HAWTHORNE, famous American novelist, lived in the cottage in 1850 and 1851. Rose Hawthorne was born there, as were two of the author's "brain children," "The Wonder Book" and "The House of Seven Gables."

* * *

Great Grandson of Poet, Grandson of Novelist, Speaker

AT THE dedication ceremonies Saturday afternoon Manning Hawthorne, oldest grandson of the novelist to bear the name, and Henry Wadsworth Longfellow Dana, great-grandson of the poet, will speak. Mrs. Guy Patterson Gannett of Portland, Me., former National Music Federation president, will formally present the cottage to Berkshire Music Center. Dr. Koussevitzky, school director, will accept. Mrs. Royden J. Keith of Chicago, Federation president, will speak.

THE COTTAGE, where those famous in the flowering of New England were guests, now houses three studios, including Dr. Koussevitzky's class in orchestral conducting. On Friday, there will be a meeting of the New England district, National Federation of Music Clubs, a Youth Forum, and a student concert.

At the Youth Forum, Gay Tapley of Portland, Me., American delegate to the International Congress of Jeunesses Musicales in Luxembourg last May, will spe

* * *

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION
JUL 22 1948

MRS. GUY P. GANNETT

Immediate past president of the National Federation of Music Clubs and chairman of the organization's Little Red House project, will make the presentation of the Little Red House (the former Nathaniel Hawthorne home) to the Berkshire Music Center at dedicatory exercises [illegible] on the Tanglewood grounds.

This Clipping From
TUCSON, ARIZ.
ARIZONA STAR
JUL [illegible]

Young Artist Problem Told

Serge Koussevitzky Address Stresses Helping Gifted, Youthful Musicians

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, retiring conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and winner in the competition for conductors who have "done the most in the past year for young American artists," spoke to members of the contest sponsoring National Music League at the tenth annual dinner held recently in Town Hall Club in New York.

Also winner in the radio program phase of the contest were the "Metropolitan Opera Auditions of the Air."

Dr. Koussevitzky's address, in substance included the following:

"I am very grateful for this wonderful award and I am certainly very happy to see a society which works for young artists. I think that the National Music League does not even realize what a wonderful thing they are doing for young artists. It is just what the music world and the young artist needs.

"A brilliant young man can very easily find a place in the musical world, but a very deep, if modest, sometimes shy young man, who is more gifted than this brilliant artist, must wait years until he will have the opportunity to play or to conduct or to sing.

"And that is just what you are doing. You give the young artist who cannot have a brilliant career immediately the possibility to have the experience from the first concert to the second, from the second to the third. And that is just what the artist is looking for from society.

"Certainly I don't understand why the government is doing nothing for the artist—in general, it is doing nothing for art. This is something that I could never understand all my life, and particularly in democratic countries. Don't think that I'm a retrograd—not at all. You know from all my work that I'm not a retrograd—just the opposite—but I notice the whole democratic world is doing nothing for art. Take for instance, France. What is she doing for musical art? Nothing. Absolutely nothing. Take England—only in the last four year has she begun to help the artist. And not the artist, only the bigger organizations — the orchestras. Whereas in olden times—look at the kings, or even our czars in Russia. We hated them all, but we have to recognize the opera and all the conservatories — 72 great conservatories in cities were supported by the Czar.

Hard to Choose

"There is one great difficulty. That is to find the really right way to choose the gifted people. Because a brilliant young boy or girl is very easy to judge, but to find the deep, the profound artist and enable him to have a career, that is a most difficult thing.

"I can give you some examples. There was established, in memory of the great Anton Rubinstein, a competition for the most gifted artists in the world. The [illegible] tition was about 1895, and the whole world sent the most gifted artists. Busoni was also in this competition, but he didn't receive this award. Somebody else received it. Ten years later no one knew the man who received the award, but Busoni was known the world over as the greatest pianist.

"Another example is Aurtur Rubenstein. In 1920 the Rubenstein competition was held in St. Petersburg—today it is Leningrad—why Leningrad, nobody knows. It was founded by Peter the Great. Artur Rubinstein entered this competition, but he didn't receive the award. Somebody else won. Who is this somebody else? Nobody knows. And Artur Rubenstein is today one of the greatest pianists.

"This is, therefore, the most difficult problem—to find the way to choose the right person. Let us hope our instinct will never make mistakes."

Hawthorne Street To Be Completed Before Saturday

Jul 22 Eagle

STOCKBRIDGE — Road repair work on Hawthorne Street is expected to be completed before Saturday when the dedication ceremonies are scheduled to be held at Nathaniel Hawthorne's Little Red House at Tanglewood. That was the statement made today by Robert T. Moore, an engineer in the state Department of Public Works, who is in charge of Chapters 81 and 90 work in the county.

Nat Beacco & Sons, Stockbridge contractors, are making a special effort to complete the work so the road will be open to traffic for the week end. The $19,000 project is being financed by the town, county and state. The tar-gravel surface will measure about 2200 feet. It will connect with the hard surfaced road already constructed through the section in the town of Lenox by the state, county and town of Lenox.

Hawthorne Street runs through both Lenox and Stockbridge. Traffic over this route is especially heavy during the Berkshire Festival.

[183]

This Clipping From
WEST WARWICK, R. I.
PAWTUXET VALLEY TIMES
JUL 21 1948

MUSIC

Little Red House Will Be Opened

Dedication of Music Center in Lenox on Saturday

The dedication of the Little Red House at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., by the National Federation of Music Clubs will be held on Saturday and Sunday, July 24 and 25. Mrs. Guy Patterson Gannett, national president, will preside. Mrs. Anne M. Francis as president, will represent the Rhode Island Federation.

From the Pawtuxet Valley Patrons of Music, Miss Yvonne L. Auger, past president, and Mrs. Cecile Richard, will attend, together with Miss Mildred Knight of Greenwood.

The New England District meeting will be held on one of the three days, Friday through Sunday. Registration will be on Friday. New state presidents will be introduced.

Robert Shaw of New York will speak on Friday. He is a member of the Berkshire Festival School faculty. David Laurent of Rhode Island, first winner of the Anne M. Gannett Foundation award, will give baritone solos. Among guests will be Mrs. Gannett, Mrs. Royden James Keith, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Boston Symphony orchestra and Geo. Judd.

Miss Gay Tapley, American delegate to the Luxembourg Musical Youth Conference will speak. There will be an advanced student orchestra, conducted by Dr. Koussevitzky. The soloist will be Adele Addison.

This Clipping From
NEWPORT, R. I.
NEWS
JUL 21 1948

ORCHESTRA ADDS TO STRING ENSEMBLE

Boston Symphony Violinist, Wife To Take Part In Program At Casino

Julius Theodorowicz, for 48 years violinist in the Boston Symphony Orchestra and former assistant concertmaster, will join the Newport Smyphony Orchestra for the second summer concert at the Casino Sunday evening, acting as its concertmaster. His wife, Hazel L'African Theodorowicz, cellist and daughter of a former solo trumpet player with the Boston Symphony, will also be in the ensemble, as will Anna Golden who has been solo viola player with the San Antonio Orchestra, Texas, for five years. There will be several other additions to the string section of the orchestra Sunday, under the baton of Hazen Carr, director.

To overcome certain difficulties in the projection of tone in the outdoor ampitheatre a sounding board 24 by eight feet has been erected at the center of the horseshoe where the orchestra is to be seated. Many new chairs have been received to increase the seating capacity of the Casino.

Soloist for this week's concert will be Miss Emma Beldan of Newport, former Philadelphia Opera Company soprano, who will be heard in the aria "Voi lo sapete" from Mascagni's "Cavalleria Rusticana," and "O Mistress Mine," by Mary Howe, wife of Walter Bruce Howe and a member of the Newport colony.

Orchestral selections on the program are "Air for G String," by Bach-Wilhelmj; "Hungarian Lutspiel Overture" by Keler-Bela; "Sleeping Beauty Waltz" by Tschaikowsky; "Themes from the Piano Concerto" of Tschaikowsky; "The Beautiful Galatea" overture by Suppe; a selection from "Sweethearts," by Victor Herbert; "Wierner Blut" waltz of Strauss; and the march, "Semper Fidelis," of John Philip Sousa.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
JUL 21 1948

Music

Brilliant Mozart Concert Given by Boston Orchestra

By JAY ROSENFELD

The Mozart program in the theatre-concert hall at Tanglewood last night was one of the most brilliantly played concerts ever given at these Berkshire Festivals. Serge Koussevitzky, using a small orchestra of about 40 of the Boston Symphony men, played two of the symphonies with a zest and verve, a grace and taste, which he has rarely surpassed in the memorable years he has honored these concerts.

The E flat symphony (K543), and the less familiar C major (K-338), the Serenade, "Nacht Musique" and the G major piano concerto, with Lukas Foss as soloist, was the program. The serenade is written for eight wind instruments, two each of oboes, clarinets, bassoons and French horns. The lovely sonorities produced and consummate refinement of the playing raised this performance to exemplary heights. An audience which filled the hall, the rear of the stage, and extended to every available spot outside the hall caught the spirit of the evening and gave the artists compensating the grand manner. As intimate as some of the phrases of Mozart may be, still the whole approach to the music was in the loftiest spheres of music-making. The men of the orchestra were in the vein. They responded to the slightest indication of their masterly leader with mirror-like reflection. The delicately-spaced notes which end the short sentences of the slow movement of the E flat symphony were played as by an artist, working on a portrait, and adding final brush strokes. After the stately introduction of the opening movement, the tempo of the allegro was taken at a remarkably comforting pace. "No need to hurry here, let's linger on every note" the conductor might as well have said. "There will be moments when a fleeting sweep will fit in better," and so it was all the evening. Exactly the right sense of the spirit of the music played with the expert assurance and confidence which the leader's personality inspires. This allows the orchestra to play with an abandon and relaxation which n not fail to be conveyed to the eners. It was virtuoso orchestral playing. The final dance movement of the happy C major symphony just rollicked along. This is Mozart of his operatic moments. No one would have been surprised if "Don Giovanai" or "Figaro," in costume, had appeared at the front of the stage to take part. The whole evening had a scintillating exhilration which culminated in this marvelously gay experience.

Lukas Foss did a musicianly job in the concerto, blending his tone and the embellishing figures to that of the orchestra with care and musical insight. Indeed, he treated it as a chamber music work more often than as a solo with its consequent recession into the background more than might have been warranted.

Very few of us in this vicinity need to be persuaded any more of the capabilities of the Boston Orchestra, and of the seemingly infinite capacity of Dr. Koussevitzky. An evening like last night's program, however, reaffirms one's convictions. Those Mozart symphonies are not simply the result of experts applying themselves diligently. Rather they are the result of years of study and repetition, of continually distilling and refining, until the end product is free of all impurities and contains only the essence of what the years and great native intuition prompt.

This Clipping From
TUCSON, ARIZ.
ARIZONA STAR
JUL 21 1948

Young Artist Problem Told

Serge Koussevitsky Address Stresses Helping Gifted, Youthful Musicians

Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, retiring conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and winner in the competition for conductors who have "done the most in the past year for young American artists," spoke to members of the contest sponsoring National Music League at the tenth annual dinner held recently in Town Hall Club in New York.

Also winner in the radio program phase of the contest were the "Metropolitan Opera Auditions of the Air."

Dr. Koussevitsky's address, in substance included the following:

"I am very grateful for this wonderful award and I am certainly very happy to see a society which works for young artists. I think that the National Music League does not even realize what a wonderful thing they are doing for young artists. It is just what the music world and the young artist needs.

"A brilliant young man can very easily find a place in the musical world, but a very deep, if modest, sometimes shy young man, who is more gifted than this brilliant artist, must wait years until he will have the opportunity to play or to conduct or to sing.

"And that is just what you are doing. You give the young artist who cannot have a brilliant career immediately the possibility to have the experience from the first concert to the second, from the second to the third. And that is just what the artist is looking for from society.

"Certainly I don't understand why the government is doing nothing for the artist—in general, it is doing nothing for art. This is something that I could never understand all my life, and particularly in democratic countries. Don't think that I'm a retrograd—not at all. You know from all my work that I'm not a retrograd—just the opposite—but I notice the whole, democratic world is doing nothing for art. Take for instance, France. What is she doing for musical art? Nothing. Absolutely nothing. Take England—only in the last four year has she begun to help the artist. And not the artist, only the bigger organizations — the orchestras. Whereas in olden times—look at the kings, or even our czars in Russia. We hated them all, but we have to recognize the opera and all the conservatories — 72 great conservatories in cities were supported by the Czar.

Hard to Choose

"There is one great difficulty. That is to find the really right way to choose the gifted people. Because a brilliant young boy or girl is very easy to judge, but to find the deep, the profound artist and enable him to have a career, that is a most difficult thing.

"I can give you some examples. There was established, in memory of the great Anton Rubinstein, a competition for the most gifted artists in the world. The tition was about 1895, and the whole world sent the most gifted artists. Busoni was also in this competition, but he didn't receive this award. Somebody else received it. Ten years later no one knew the man who received the award, but Busoni was known the world over as the greatest pianist.

"Another example is Aurtur Rubenstein. In 1920 the Rubenstein competition was held in St. Petersburg—today it is Leningrad—why Leningrad, nobody knows. It was founded by Peter the Great. Artur Rubinstein entered this competition, but he didn't receive the award. Somebody else won. Who is this somebody else? Nobody knows. And Artur Rubenstein is today one of the greatest pianists.

"This is, therefore, the most difficult problem—to find the way to choose the right person. Let us hope our instinct will never make mistakes."

Hawthorne Street To Be Completed Before Saturday

Jul 22 Eagle

STOCKBRIDGE — Road repair work on Hawthorne Street is expected to be completed before Saturday when the dedication ceremonies are scheduled to be held at Nathaniel Hawthorne's Little Red House at Tanglewood. That was the statement made today by Robert T. Moore, an engineer in the state Department of Public Works, who is in charge of Chapters 81 and 90 work in the county.

Nat Beacco & Sons, Stockbridge contractors, are making a special effort to complete the work so the road will be open to traffic for the week end. The $19,000 project is being financed by the town, county and state. The tar-gravel surface will measure about 2200 feet. It will connect with the hard surfaced road already constructed through the section in the town of Lenox by the state, county and town of Lenox.

Hawthorne Street runs through both Lenox and Stockbridge. Traffic over this route is especially heavy during the Berkshire Festival.

Syracuse Herald Jul 21

TALKING IT OVER

Hawthorne Cottage Restored With Dedicatory Program July 23-24

By EMMA VAN WORMER

THE NATIONAL FEDERATION OF MUSIC CLUBS will dedicate Hawthorne Cottage, which it has restored, in Tanglewood, Mass., Friday and Saturday with a program including a concert by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the student orchestra of Berkshire Music Cent

NATHANIEL HAWTHORNE, famous American novelist, lived in the cottage in 1850 and 1851. Rose Hawthorne was born there, as were two of the author's "brain children," "The Wonder Book" and "The House of Seven Gables."

* * *

Great Grandson of Poet, Grandson of Novelist, Speaker

AT THE dedication ceremonies Saturday afternoon Manning Hawthorne, oldest grandson of the novelist to bear the name, and Henry Wadsworth Longfellow Dana, great-grandson of the poet, will speak. Mrs. Guy Patterson Gannett of Portland, Me., former National Music Federation president, will formally present the cottage to Berkshire Music Center. Dr. Koussevitzky, school director, will accept. Mrs. Royden J. Keith of Chicago, Federation president, will speak.

THE COTTAGE, where those famous in the flowering of New England were guests, now houses three studios, including Dr. Koussevitzky's class in orchestral conducting. On Friday, there will be a meeting of the New England district, National Federation of Music Clubs, a Youth Forum, and a student concert.

At the Youth Forum, Gay Tapley of Portland, Me., American delegate to the International Congress of Jeunesses Musicales in Luxembourg last May, will spe

essentia
Beecher
No m arose fr ful and Jeremy

Music
By In Nickel

ACCOI
Love of chairman

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION
JUL 22 1948

MRS. GUY P. GANNETT

Immediate past president of the National Federation of Music Clubs and chairman of the organization's Little Red House project, will make the presentation of the Little Red House (the former Nathaniel Hawthorne home) to the Berkshire Music [illegible] exercises [illegible] the Tanglewood [illegible]

[183]

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

JUL 22 194

Seven Operatic Scenes Slated At Tanglewood

Week-End Program Will Also Feature deCalvalho as Guest Conductor

Students at the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, Lenox, will present scenes from seven operas this evening, at 8.15 and will play a symphony concert in the shed tomorrow evening, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky and his pupils. Tomorrow afternoon Eleazar deCarvalho will conduct the opera [illegible]

The opera scenes, performed under Boris Goldovsky, will be: Livietta and Tracollo (Pergolesi), Prologue to Faust (Gounod), Orfeo ed Buridice Act 3, scene 1 (Gluck), Eugen Onegin (act 1, scene [illegible] (Tchaikovsky), Cavalleria Rusticana — exerpt (Mascagni) The Bertered Bride, act 3, aria and duet (Smetana), La Traviata, act (Verdi).

Tomorrow afternoon's concert will have for its program Haydn's Symphony No. 99, Ravel's "Introduction and Allegro" and Prokofieff's "Overture on Hebrew Themes." Mr. deCarvalho, a Brazilian, is assistant to Dr. Koussevitzky in teaching conducting and a guest conductor for the Berkshire Festival. He conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Symphony Hall, Boston, last winter.

The program by the advanced orchestra of the school Friday night will include Beethoven's "Coriolanus" Overture, two Mozart Arias, with Adele Addison as soloist, and Three Dances from "Fancy Free" by Bernstein. Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the Brahms' Symphony No. 1.

The public is invited to the exercises Saturday afternoon when the National Federation of Music Clubs will present the Hawthorne cottage restored by them for the school, and Dr. Koussevitzky will accept it. Also open to the public will be the chamber music concert following the ceremony and the recital at 8.15 in Sedgwick Hall, Lenox, by winners of federation awards. Six winners of federation prizes will participate in the week-end events.

Eagle July 22

Lenox Ready For Dedication Of Red House

15 States To Be Represented at Hawthorne Event

TANGLEWOOD—Nearly 100 officers and members of the National Federation of Music Clubs will arrive in Lenox tomorrow for the three-day dedication of the restored Hawthorne cottage that they are presenting to the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood. With the exception of meetings that will be held in the cottage, all events will be open to the public.

Headed by the national Little Red House committee, Mrs. Guy Patterson Gannett of Portland, Me., chairman, Mrs. Russell Taylor Hatch of Melrose, New England district president; Mrs. Ada Holding Miller of Providence, national vice-president; Miss Ruth M. Ferry of New Haven, former national treasurer; and the federation president, Mrs. Royden J. Keith of Chicago, the delegates will include members from 15 states. They will come from Arizona, Texas, Maine, Illinois, Rhode Island, Indiana, Ohio, New York, West Virginia, New Jersey, New Hampshire, Connecticut, Pennsylvania, Delaware, the District of Columbia and Massachusetts.

Also arriving today, for preliminary work, are Mrs. Charles H. Pascoe of Tucson, Ariz., chairman of the state and district presidents' council, and Mrs. C. Arthur Bullock of Canton, Pa., national recording secretary. Mrs. John Monty of Gatineau Mills, Quebec, president of the newly organized Canadian Federation of Music Clubs, will make her initial public appearance since her election.

10 Present Set of Works

Twenty-three members of the Hawthorne Club of Canaan, Conn., will present a complete set of the novelist's works, autographed by the original owner, as a permanent donation.

Among the guests will be Mrs. Charles Evans of New Haven, who is more than 90 years old, formerly of Cincinnati, mother of the late Miss Atelka Evans, one of the four members of the original Little Red House committee, and for many years an officer of the federation. Miss Evans, whose family summered in Stockbridge for many years, made the first gift to the house, a charred ember from the ruins of the original house that burned in 1890, presenting it at a luncheon of the Providence club board meeting in 1942, when the project was launched.

Tomorrow's sessions will open with registration at 9, a meeting of the New England district of the federation at 9.30 and a forum at 10.30, with a youth session at 2.15, addressed by Gay Tapley of Portland, American delegate to the International Congress of the Jeunesses Musicales in Luxembourg in May. Following luncheon at 12.30 at the Curtis Hotel, Robert Shaw of the Berkshire Music Center faculty will speak. David Laurent, baritone, first winner of an Anne M. Gannett Fund scholarship, will sing in the hotel parlors. Meetings and forum will be at the cottage.

---

Little Red House

Continued From First Page

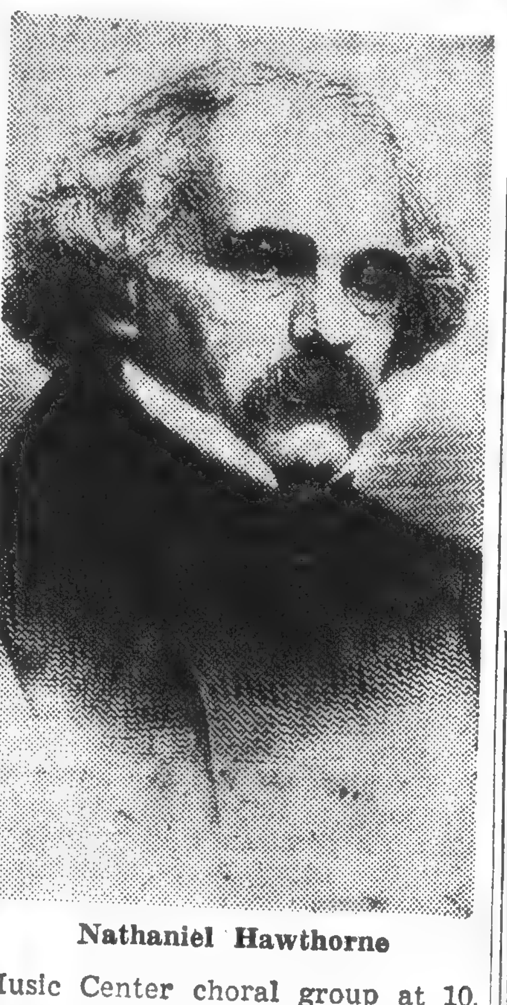
On Saturday delegates will attend a rehearsal of the Berkshire Music Center choral group at 10, have luncheon on the Tanglewood grounds at 12.30 and at 2 dedicate formally the house in a ceremony at which the president, Mrs. Gannett and Dr. Koussevitzky will speak, followed by Manning Hawthorne, oldest grandson of the novelist, and Henry Wadsworth Longfellow Dana, great-grandson of the poet.



Nathaniel Hawthorne

The exercises will be followed by a chamber music concert by winners of 1948 scholarships to Tanglewood given by the federation. Soloists will be LuCretia Ferre, soprano; Robert Allen, cellist; and Martha Butler, contralto.

A recital will be given Saturday night at Sedgwick Hall, Lenox, by Paula Lenchner, dramatic soprano of the Metropolitan Opera Company, winner of the 1945 "Young Artist" award of the federation, to which the public is invited.

Delegates will attend the Berkshire Music Center chamber music concert at 10.30 Sunday and the Mozart concert of the Berkshire Festival Sunday afternoon at 3.30.

Jul 22

String Quartet Plays Schubert At Museum

Mrs. Coolidge Sponsors Chamber Music of Boston Musicians

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

The third concert in the Schubert cycle being given at the concert hall at Tanglewood through the generosity of Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge was a program by the Boston String quartet, of which Alfred Krips is first violin, Sheldon Rothenburg, second violin, Joseph de Pasquale, viola, and Alfred Zighera, cellits. The program consisted of the D minor quartet (Death and the Maiden), the quartet movement in C minor and the famous two-cello quintet, in which Mischa Nieland was the assisting artist.

Such a program is at the same time a challenge and an unfair advantage. In less capable hands the two major works would still be wonderful music, but when artists of last night's calibre set to it, they are bound to enhance whatever they touch. And so they gave these two mountain peaks in the chamber music literature a stature proper to their eminence. They played with a deep devotion and apparent love of their subject matter. There would be difficulty in not joining in the general acclaim their execution evoked and earned.

They played with a correct but rigid adherence to the score, varied but rarely by a flexible rubato. There would be firmer ground to dispute the initial statement of the dactylic phrase in the slow movement of the quartet. It was played with exquisite tone and pure precision, but there was not agreement among the instruments, for when it was allotted to one and another, it was changed in value and stress. This variation happened in several other instances during the program. It did not detract in any degree from the thorough enjoyment of the evening, but because the audience was composed in a substantial share of the students of the Berkshire Musical center, it seems right that these classroom picayune details should be pointed out, not to diminish the glory due the artists, but to keep the perspective clear and straight. The matter of accents is always a controversial issue. A distinction should be established between weight and strength.

The quintet won its goal on two counts, the achievement of a glorious tone quality, particularly in the exquisite slow movement, and in the character given the individual movements. The technical equipment of the members of the ensemble was of such an order that it may have led them to slight excesses in the matter of tempo. We have personal whims in some of these movements. In the first movements of both the quartet and the quintet, specifically we like a little less haste. It's all right to let her go in the finale of the quartet and to give it the rein in the spirited last movement of the quintet, but we are not convinced that anything is gained by rushing. We recall the leisurely and comfortable pace taken in some of the Mozart movements by the orchestra on the previous evening, and, whereas the character of the music is not the same, nevertheless the same treatment would have allowed certain details to emerge and flourish which in a more driving rhythm must be sacrificed. Mrs. Coolidge was again graciously invited to share in the loud and long applause accorded the artists.

Eagle July 22

Lenox Ready For Dedication Of Red House

15 States To Be Represented at Hawthorne Event

TANGLEWOOD—Nearly 100 officers and members of the National Federation of Music Clubs will arrive in Lenox tomorrow for the three-day dedication of the restored Hawthorne cottage that they are presenting to the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood. With the exception of meetings that will be held in the cottage, all events will be open to the public.

Headed by the national Little Red House committee, Mrs. Guy Patterson Gannett of Portland, Me., chairman, Mrs. Russell Taylor Hatch of Melrose, New England district president; Mrs. Ada Holding Miller of Providence, national vice-president; Miss Ruth M. Ferry of New Haven, former national treasurer; and the federation president, Mrs. Royden J. Keith of Chicago, the delegates will include members from 15 states. They will come from Arizona, Texas, Maine, Illinois, Rhode Island, Indiana, Ohio, New York, West Virginia, New Jersey, New Hampshire, Connecticut, Pennsylvania, Delaware, the District of Columbia and Massachusetts.

Also arriving today, for preliminary work, are Mrs. Charles H. Pascoe of Tucson, Ariz., chairman of the state and district presidents' council, and Mrs. C. Arthur Bullock of Canton, Pa., national recording secretary. Mrs. John Monty of Gatineau Mills, Quebec, president of the newly organized Canadian Federation of Music Clubs, will make her initial public appearance since her election.

10 Present Set of Works

Twenty-three members of the Hawthorne Club of Canaan, Conn., will present a complete set of the novelist's works, autographed by the original owner, as a permanent donation.

Among the guests will be Mrs. Charles Evans of New Haven, who is more than 90 years old, formerly of Cincinnati, mother of the late Miss Atelka Evans, one of the four members of the original Little Red House committee, and for many years an officer of the federation. Miss Evans, whose family summered in Stockbridge for many years, made the first gift to the house, a charred ember from the ruins of the original house that burned in 1890, presenting it at a luncheon of the Providence club board meeting in 1942, when the project was launched.

Tomorrow's sessions will open with registration at 9, a meeting of the New England district of the federation at 9.30 and a forum at 10.30, with a youth session at 2.1 addressed by Gay Tapley of Portland, American delegate to the International Congress of the Jeunesses Musicales in Luxembourg May. Following luncheon at 12.3 at the Curtis Hotel, Robert Shaw of the Berkshire Music Center facult

---

HARTFORD T

Tanglewood to Hear Schubert Concert

Special to The Hartford Times

Lenox—Some of the most popular chamber music of Franz Schubert will be played this evening at Tanglewood by the Boston String Quartet. The third of four Wednesday evening concerts contributed by Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, the program will be open to Friends of the Berkshire Music Center and guests of the donor.

The program will include the String Quartet in D minor, the Quartet Movement in C minor and the String Quintet in C major. The artists will be Alfred Krips, violin; Sheldon Rothenberg, violin; Joseph dePasquale, viola; and Alfred Zighera and Mischa Nieland, cellos, the latter assisting the quartet.

This Clipping From LYNN, MASS.
ITEM

JUL 23 1948

Hawthorne's Home Turned Into Studio

LENOX, July 23, (AP)—The one time cottage home of unmusical Nathaniel Hawthorne today was turned over to the Berkshire musical center as a practice studio for students.

For the next two days musicians from 15 States and Canada will honor the novelist who once said he couldn't tell "Yankee Doodle" from "Hail Columbia." Hawthorne lived in the cottage in 1850 and 1851.

Taking part in the celebration is famed Boston Symphony Conductor Serge Koussevitzky who founded the musical center here.

The National Federation of Music Clubs started nearly 10 years ago to restore the little red house.

Mrs. Guy Patterson Gannett of Portland, Me., then federation president, has worked since then to restore the cottage, which was fireswept in 1890.

At the formal dedication tomorrow she will present the cottage to the Berkshire Music Center.

Among the 100 officers and members of the National Federation of Music Clubs attending are Mrs. Royden J. Keith of Chicago the president, and Mrs. John Monty of Mills, Que., head of the Canadian federation.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

JUL 21 1948

A Lapse of Memory

Some years ago while working as a reporter for "The Pittsburgh Press" I had occasion to interview Serge Koussevitzky. I found him an enchanting individual, easy to listen to, and what was to have been a routine question-and-answer affair soon developed into a stimulating dessertation on modern music, Prokofieff, James Joyce and Braque's Yellow Cloth, which that year had Pittsburgh by the ear. It was with reluctance that I dragged myself away and in high spirits that I sat down at the typewriter when I got back to the office. Yet, had I blacked out completely, I could have found myself in no more of a quandary. Suddenly I realized that I didn't even know what he liked for breakfast. Notes were non-existent. I had come from a most delightful interview and proceeded to write what must be the worst on record anywhere.

It is in somewhat the same predicament that I find myself today after having taken two young ladies to dinner at the Maisonette, 151 East Forty-ninth Street. We had a pleasant meal in the tent-topped backroom called the jardin d'ete, but I paid very little attention and made no notes afterwards. I didn't even remember to ask George, the proprietor, if I could take a menu along. I do know that the snow-capped mountain murals seemed considerably cooler than the room itself, that the check for three came to about $15 and that I enjoyed my dinner.

It was a Saturday night and to say that business was light is something of an understatement. While putting the martinis to the test at the silly little bar just beyond the entrance, we commiserated with George on the rigors of running a restaurant in New York on a sultry Saturday in July. George, who comes to work at nine in the morning and remains on the job until an hour or two after midnight, depending upon how late the customers stay, was inclined to be resigned about the whole thing. His wife, Marie, was of a different mind. And, I must say that I think George is going to take a vacation this summer whether he likes it or not. They're going back to France.

Personally, I'm going back to the Maisonette. Perhaps next time I'll come away with more data. The martinis? They were very good.

This Clipping From
LAWRENCE, MASS.
TRIBUNE

JUL 23 1948

Plays At Tanglewood Music Center

Miss Jean Stillman, talented violinist, is spending six weeks at the Tanglewood Music Center in the Berkshires. She has had the privilege of playing in the student orchestra there under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

MISS JEAN STILLMAN

The young musician, who is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Howell M. Stillman, 39 Morton street, Andover, is a graduate of the N. E. Conservatory of Music and she has studied privately with outstanding teachers.

She is well known in Greater Lawrence as well as in Boston as she has appeared as a solo violinist on concert programs and has played with ensembles and orchestras.

Hawthorne's Little Red House Holds Spotlight at Tanglewood

The New England district of the National Federation of Music Clubs opened the reconstructed Little Red House of Nathaniel Hawthorne this morning with a meeting of 60 of the delegates to the ceremonies that will have their climax tomorrow in a picnic luncheoen, formal dedication exercises, a chamber music concert and a recital.

Before the meeting, the members inspected the cottage, which includes two studios, a parlor furnished and decorated in the Victorian manner of Nathaniel Hawthorne's time, and a kitchenette. The furnishings have been given to the National Federation of Music Clubs for the house that it is presenting to the Berkshire Music Center. The gifts include eight paintings in water color, gifts to Tanglewood by the late Mrs. Andrew Hepburn who presented her family's summer home to the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Painted by her grandmother, Ellen Sturgis Tappan, at the age of 17, they are views of the Little Red House, her own home, now the main school building, the Lenox railroad station, the family in the living room, and the countryside. Six are hung in the cottage parlor.

The 23 volumes of the novelist's complete works given by the Hawthorne Club of Canaan, Conn., are from the library of the late Mrs. William S. Smart (Caroline Parker), a native of Pittsfield, daughter of John Churchill and Lydia Goodrich Parker, a graduate of the New England Conservatory of Music, Boston.

Eaton Gives Painting

A small painting of the cottage hanging in the hall is the gift of Col. William H. Eaton of Pittsfield. A living room table with a marble top was given by Miss Louise H. Armstrong of Portland, Me., fittings for two lavatories by the Rossini Club of Portland; an electrified oil table lamp by the Rubenstein Club of Providence, a fireplace set exactly matching fire tongs found in the cellar hole of the cottage by Mrs. Ada Holding Miller of Providence, who also has given the restoration of an iron kettle, also in the ruins of the burned house, insulation for both studios by Miss Irene Mulick of Cranston, R.I., a copper fern rack with musical motif by the Arizona Federation of Music Clubs, and a 150-year-old secretary, a rocking chair, flat silver and a silver tea set by Mr. and Mrs. Russell Taylor Hatch of Melrose. Mrs. Hatch is New England district president.

—Mrs. Earle Stevenson of Newton has contributed an early Empire love seat and chair and the Desert Club of Ajo, Ariz., copper book ends of native Arizona copper.

The following telegram was read from Margaret Chase Smith, Republican senatorial nominee for Maine: "Congratulations on your admirable contribution to the field of music. The Little Red House represents a most worthy achievement."

The delegates will attend tonight's concert, the Berkshire Music Center choral rehearsal tomorrow morning and the chamber music concert and Berkshire Festival Mozart concert Sunday.

Guests at tomorrow's luncheon will include Dr. and Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky, Mrs. William Felton Barrett, Mrs. William N. Bullard, Mr. and Mrs. Bernard Hoffmann, Col. Eaton, Mrs. Bruce Crane, Mrs. Albert Sterner, Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Percaval, Mrs. Bruce Sanborn, Mr. and Mrs. C. Lambert Heyniger, Mr. and Mrs. Stuart C. Henry, Dr. and Mrs. James Phinney Baxter and Mr. and Mrs. John McChesney.

This Clipping From
CONCORD, N. H.
MONITOR & N. H. PATRIOT
JUL 23 1948

Hawthorne to Be Honored

Home Becomes Studio For Berkshire Musical Center

LENOX, Mass., July 23 (AP)—The one-time cottage home of un-musical Nathaniel Hawthorne today was turned over to the Berkshire Musical center as a practice studio for students.

[illegible] next two days musicians from 15 states and Canada will honor the novelist who once said he couldn't tell "Yankee Doodle" from "Hail Columbia." Hawthorne lived in the cottage in 1850 and 1851.

Taking part in the celebration is famed Boston Symphony Conductor Serge Koussevitzky who founded the musical center here.

The National Federation of Music club started nearly 10 years ago to restore the little red house.

Mfs. Guy Patterson Gannett of Portland, Me., then federation president, has worked since then to restore the cottage, which was fireswept in 1890.

At the formal dedication tomorrow she will present the cottage to the Berkshire Music center.

Among the 100 officers and members of the National Federation of Music clubs attending are Mrs. John Monty of Mills, Que., head of the Canadian federation.

Cir. (D 3,448)

This Clipping From
LAWRENCE, MASS.
EAGLE
JUL 24 1948

Andover

Wins Award At Radcliffe

Miss Genevieve Murray, 29 Bartlet street, is on the dean's list at Radcliffe college for the final term. Miss Murray, a chemistry student, received the highest mark in the final examination in that subject and was also awarded $200 for the furtherance of her college work for next year.

Miss Murray has been an active member of the Catholic club, Premedical and Choral societies. In connection with the latter, she had the experience of singing under the direction of Leonard Bernstein of New York and Serge Koussevitsky with the Boston Symphony orchestra at Symphony hall. She was one of those selected to sing at Amherst and Princeton with the Amherst and Princeton glee clubs. Miss Murray is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James J. Murray. She plans to make medicine her life's work.

R. Alberti; and Great Barrington District Court Judge

Jul 23 Eagle

Hawthorne's Little Red House Holds Spotlight at Tanglewood

The New England district of the National Federation of Music Clubs opened the reconstructed Little Red House of Nathaniel Hawthorne this morning with a meeting of 60 of the delegates to the ceremonies that will have their climax tomorrow in a picnic luncheoen, formal dedication exercises, a chamber music concert and a recital.

Before the meeting, the members inspected the cottage, which includes two studios, a parlor furnished and decorated in the Victorian manner of Nathaniel Hawthorne's time, and a kitchenette. The furnishings have been given to the National Federation of Music Clubs for the house that it is presenting to the Berkshire Music Center. The gifts include eight paintings in water color, gifts to Tanglewood by the late Mrs. Andrew Hepburn who presented her family's summer home to the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Painted by her grandmother, Ellen Sturgis Tappan, at the age of 17, they are views of the Little Red House, her own home, now the main school building, the Lenox railroad station, the family in the living room, and the countryside. Six are hung in the cottage parlor.

The 23 volumes of the novelist's complete works given by the Hawthorne Club of Canaan, Conn., are from the library of the late Mrs. William S. Smart (Caroline Parker), a native of Pittsfield, daughter of John Churchill and Lydia Goodrich Parker, a graduate of the New England Conservatory of Music, Boston.

Eaton Gives Painting

A small painting of the cottage hanging in the hall is the gift of Col. William H. Eaton of Pittsfield. A living room table with a marble top was given by Miss Louise H. Armstrong of Portland, Me., fittings for two lavatories by the Rossini Club of Portland; an electrified oil table lamp by the Rubenstein Club of Providence, a fireplace set exactly matching fire tongs found in the cellar hole of the cottage by Mrs. Ada Holding Miller of Providence, who also has given the restoration of an iron kettle, also in the ruins of the burned house, insulation for both studios by Miss Irene Mulick of Cranston, R.I., a copper fern rack with musical motif by the Arizona Federation of Music Clubs, and a 150-year-old secretary, a rocking chair, flat silver and a silver tea set by Mr. and Mrs. Russell Taylor Hatch of Melrose. Mrs. Hatch is New England district president.

—Mrs. Earle Stevenson of Newton has contributed an early Empire love seat and chair and the Desert Club of Ajo, Ariz., copper book ends of native Arizona copper.

The following telegram was read from Margaret Chase Smith, Republican senatorial nominee for Maine: "Congratulations on your admirable contribution to the field of music. The Little Red House represents a most worthy achievement."

The delegates will attend tonight's concert, the Berkshire Music Center choral rehearsal tomorrow morning and the chamber music concert and Berkshire Festival Mozart concert Sunday.

Guests at tomorrow's luncheon will include Dr. and Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky, Mrs. William Felton Barrett, Mrs. William N. Bullard, Mr. and Mrs. Bernard Hoffmann, Col. Eaton, Mrs. Bruce Crane, Mrs. Albert Sterner, Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Percaval, Mrs. Bruce Sanborn, Mr. and Mrs. C. Lambert Heyniger, Mr. and Mrs. Stuart C. Henry, Dr. and Mrs. James Phinney Baxter and Mr. and Mrs. John McChesney.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
STAR
JUL 23 1948

Festival Adds Milhaud Work

As a special tribute to Darius Milhaud, guest composer at the Berkshire Music Center this Summer, the Berkshire Festival program for Sunday afternoon, Aug. 1, has been altered to include a performance by the Boston Symphony of his Symphony No. 2. The composer himself wil' conduct.

The remainder of the Aug. 1 program will be given over to Mahler's Symphony No. 2 in D, the Resurrection, to be conducted by Leonard Bernstein, with the Festival Chorus of 250 voices and with Ellabelle Davis, soprano, and Nan Merriman, mezzo-soprano, as soloists.

Commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation, the Milhaud Symphony No. 2 was given its first performance anywhere by the Boston Symphony in Boston in 1946, also under the baton of the composer.

This Clipping From
LAWRENCE, MASS.
TRIBUNE
JUL 23 1948

Hawthorne Home New Music Center

LENOX, July 23. (AP)—The one time cottage home of un-musical Nathaniel Hawthorne today was turned over to the Berkshire Musical Center as a practice studio for students.

For the next two days musicians from 15 states and Canada will honor the novelist who once said he couldn't tell "Yankee Doodle" from "Hail Columbia." Hawthorne lived in the cottage in 1850 and 1851.

Taking part in the celebration is famed Boston Symphony Conductor Serge Koussevitzky who founded the musical center here.

The National Federation of Music Clubs started nearly 10 years ago to restore the little red house.

Mrs. Guy Patterson Gannett of Portland, Me., then federation president, has worked since then to restore the cottage, which was fireswept in 1890.

At the formal dedication tomorrow she will present the cottage to the Berkshire Music Center.

Among the 100 officers and members of the National Federation of Music Clubs attending are Mrs. Royden J. Keith of Chicago, the president, and Mrs. John Monty of Mills, Que., head of the Canadian federation.

This Clipping From
FITCHBURG, MASS.
SENTINEL
JUL 23 1948

Former Hawthorne Home Given Musical Center

LENOX, July 23 (AP)—The one time cottage home of un-musical Nathaniel Hawthorne today was turned over to the Berkshire Musical Center as a practice studio for students.

For the next two days musicians from 15 states and Canada will honor the novelist who once said he couldn't tell "Yankee Doodle" from "Hail Columbia." Hawthorne lived in the cottage in 1850 and 1851.

Taking part in the celebration is famed Boston Symphony Conductor Serge Koussevitzky who founded the musical center here.

The National Federation of Music Clubs started nearly 10 years ago to restore the little red house.

Mrs. Guy Patterson Gannett of Portland, Me., then federation president, has worked since then to restore the cottage which was fireswept in 1890.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
JUL 23 1948

Tanglewood to Dedicate HawthorneCottageToday

The reproduction of the cottage occupied by Nathaniel Hawthorne at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., in 1850 and 1851, built under the auspices of the National Federation of Music Clubs, will be dedicated at Tanglewood tomorrow afternoon at 2 o'clock. Manning Hawthorne, grandson of Nathaniel Hawthorne, and Henry Wadsworth Longfellow Dana, great-grandson of Henry Wadsworth Longfellow, will speak. Mrs. Guy Patterson Gannett, of Portland, Me., former president of the federation and chairman of the committee for the building of the cottage, will present the cottage to the Berkshire Music Center. Serge Koussevitsky, director of the center, will make the acceptance speech.

A chamber music concert will follow the dedication ceremony, with Lucretia Ferre, soprano; Martha Butler, contralto; and Robert Allen, cellist, winner of federation scholarships at the center, as soloists. Paula Lenchner, Metropolitan Opera soprano who won in the federation's 1945 Young Artist Contest, will give a recital in the Lenox Library tonight.

Robert Shaw, choral director at the Berkshire Music Center, will speak at a luncheon for the New England District of the National Federation today at the Curtis Hotel in Lenox, and David Laurent, barytone, the first winner of the Anne M. Gannett Fund Scholarship, will sing. Dr. Koussevitsky will conduct a student orchestra at Tanglewood this evening with Adele Addison, soprano, as the soloist.

JULY 23, 1948

NY HERALD

Tanglewood to Dedicate HawthorneCottageToday

The reproduction of the cottage occupied by Nathaniel Hawthorne at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., in 1850 and 1851, built under the auspices of the National Federation of Music Clubs, will be dedicated at Tanglewood tomorrow afternoon at 2 o'clock. Manning Hawthorne, grandson of Nathaniel Hawthorne, and Henry Wadsworth Longfellow Dana, great-grandson of Henry Wadsworth Longfellow, will speak. Mrs. Guy Patterson Gannett, of Portland, Me., former president of the federation and chairman of the committee for the building of the cottage, will present the cottage to the Berkshire Music Center. Serge Koussevitsky, director of the center, will make the acceptance speech.

A chamber music concert will follow the dedication ceremony, with Lucretia Ferre, soprano; Martha Butler, contralto; and Robert Allen, cellist, winner of federation scholarships at the center, as soloists. Paula Lenchner, Metropolitan Opera soprano who won in the federation's 1945 Young Artist Contest, will give a recital in the Lenox Library tonight.

Robert Shaw, choral director at the Berkshire Music Center, will speak at a luncheon for the New England District of the National Federation today at the Curtis Hotel in Lenox, and David Laurent, barytone, the first winner of the Anne M. Gannett Fund Scholarship, will sing. Dr. Koussevitsky will conduct a student orchestra at Tanglewood this evening with Adele Addison, soprano, as the soloist.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

JUL 23 1948

Soloist Tonight at Festival

GIVEN TON SYMPHON

Adele Addison, young Springfield soprano, now in her second season at the Berkshire Music Festival in Tanglewood, will be soloist this evening with the student orchestra at a concert in the Music Shed, in connection with the dedication of the Hawthorne cottage. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will conduct tonight's concert.

23, 1948 HARTFORD-TIMES

Connecticut at Tanglewood

AT BERKSHIRE MUSIC CENTER, Catherine Ameer of Norwalk demonstrates horn to fellow students. Left to right: Richard Chute, Falls Village; Alexander Ogilby, 45 Woodside Cir., Hartford; Ramona Dahlberg, New Haven; Raymond Montoni, Bridgeport; Phyllis Bellin, Ansonia; Bennet Klamkin, Waterbury; Margaret Travis, Torrington; William Skelton, Hamden. In front sits Joan Brainerd of Hamden, soprano, who will sing Sunday morning at dedicatory exercises for Little Red Cottage of Hawthorne when it is given to music center by National Federation of Music Clubs. Miss Brainerd will sing with New Haven Pops Tuesday evening at 8:15.

This Clipping From
HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT TELEGRAM

JUL 23 1948

How To Be A Great Conductor

To the layman the art of conducting a symphony orchestra is utterly intangible. He knows it is much more than marking time and seeing that each instrument plays every note at the right moment, much more than the mechanical coordination of many parts. Volume, shading, phrasing, tempo, must all be controlled.

But how does the conductor decide what the volume and tempo, for instance, are to be? Musical notation, with which the composer writes his instructions for the performer, is only the roughest kind of guide and many composers make very light use of it. Conductors will present the same composition in entirely different ways. Which is the way the composer intended? Which is artistically right?

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky throws some light on this mystery in a lofty article in the current Atlantic. He is too lofty, perhaps, for the uninitiated, but at the same time most instructive. Conducting only became more than beating time when Wagner and Mendelssohn came on the scene and for the first time turned their backs to the audience instead of to the musicians. Wagner's conducting was romantic. Mendelssohn's "constructive" and conducting has since undulated between these two trends. Koussevitzky says conducting today is returning to the classical Mendelssohn line from a wide swing into romantic decadence that marked the early years of this century.

But he slides over fashions in conducting and makes the point that the performer is entitled to, and indeed can not help, putting himself into the composition, whether he be conductor of violinist. The work must be presented as he sees and feels it, and his artistic genius lies in his ability to understand both composer and composition, to catch what Koussevitzky calls the "central line" of the individual and his work. In a way this is saying that a musical composition is not completed until it is performed and that its final outlines are not constant, varying with the interpretation of every performer.

Still a work may be presented with mechanical perfection, the individuality of the performer being submerged. Koussevitzky calls this a reflection of the composition, acceptable because it keeps faith with the composer, and perfect in its own way. But organic perfection is his goal, interpretation that grasps the life force of the composition and merges with it. "Like a mystic experience," he writes, "the organic interpretation puts the listener in direct touch with the absolute reality hidden in the great work."

Here he soars beyond us. It is impossible to communicate in words how the soul of music is found in mathematically arranged markings on a piece of paper. Still Dr. Koussevitzky has made a valuable effort, even though he can only really tell us from the podium, with baton in hand and orchestra before him.

Tanglewood

Eagle 7/23

Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the advanced student orchestra in the Brahms fourth symphony in the Shed. Miss Adele Addison, soprano, of Springfield, winner of the New England district prize of the National Federation of Music Clubs and the Pierre Lavalle scholarship for 1947, will sing two arias of Mozart. Open to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, the concert will be attended by the members of the federation as a part of their festivities in the dedication of the Hawthorne cottage.

The program will include also Beethoven's "Coriolanus" overture and three dances from "Fancy Free" by Leonard Bernstein.

Tomorrow Afternoon at 2

Dedication of Hawthorne's restored Little Red House by National Federation of Music Clubs, with acceptance for the Berkshire Music Center by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, and remarks by Mrs. Royden J. Keither, federation president, Mrs. Guy Patterson Gannett, restoration committee chairman, Manning Hawthorne and Henry Wadsworth Longfellow Dana. The public is invited.

At 3 in chamber music hall the following recital by federation prize winners will begin:

Die Ihr des Unermesslichen Waltalls Schoffer Ehrt, cantata for soprano and piano .... Mozart
Le Moulin .... Pierne
Calmes dans le Demi-Jour ...... Debussy
Guitares et Mandolines .... Grovlez
Soloist: LuCretia Ferre, soprano, winner of the opera scholarship.

Toccata .... Frescobaldi
Elegie .... Faure
Soloist: Robert Allen, cello, winner of the string schoarship.
Now Sleeps the Crimson Petal ... Quilter
Two Spirituals—
Sometimes I Feel Like a Motherless Child.
Wash Me, O Lord.
Soloist: Martha Butler, contralto, winner of open scholarship.
Two Duets for Soprano and Contralto, Brahms
Die Meere.
Wie der Liebe.
Soloists: LuCretia Ferre and Martha Butler.
Nell Thurman and Solon Alberti, accompanists.

Tomorrow Night

The federation will present Miss Paula Lenchner, dramatic soprano of the Metropolitan Opera Company, winner of its 1945 Young Artist Award, in a recital at Sedgwick Hall, Lenox. The public is invited.

The program follows:

Gott in Fruhling.
Gretchen am Spinnrad.
Haiden Roslein.
Jungling an der Quelle.
Schubert

Nell .... Faure
Ici-Bas .... Faure
Hotel Poulenc.
Voyage a Paris.
Depuis le jour (aria from Louise). Charpentier
By a Lonely Forest Pathway .... Griffes
In the Woods .... Paul Bowles
Letter to Freddy (words by Gertrude Stein) .... Paul Bowles
I Hate Music .... Bernstein
Love Went a-Riding .... Bridge
Rheinlegendchen .... Mahler
Ich Atmet einen Linden Duft .... Mahler
Das Schlechte Wetter .... R. Strauss
All Mein Gedanken .... R. Strauss
Cacillie .... R. Strauss

This Clipping From
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

JUL 24 1948

MUSICAL CENTER GETS HAWTHORNE HOUSE FOR STUDIO

Lenox, Mass., July 24—(AP)—The one-time cottage home of un-musical Nathaniel Hawthorne today was turned over to the Berkshire Musical Center as a practice studio for students.

For the next two days musicians from 15 states and Canada will honor the novelist who once said he couldn't tell "Yankee Doodle" from "Hail Columbia." Hawthorne lived in the cottage in 1850 and 1851.

Taking part in the celebration is famed Boston Symphony conductor Serge Koussevitzky who founded the musical center here.

The National Federation of Music Clubs started nearly 10 years ago to restore the little red house.

Mrs. Guy Patterson Gannett of Portland, Me., then federation president, has worked since then to restore the cottage, which was fireswept in 1890.

At the formal dedication tomorrow she will present the cottage to the Berkshire Music Center.

Among the 100 officers and members of the National Federation of Music Clubs attending are Mrs. Royden J. Keith of Chicago, the president, and Mrs. John Monty of Mills, Que., head of the Canadian federation.

---

ton Globe

HAWTHORNE'S HORSE OF THE NIGHT

The hardhack of one century may be a monument in the next. Today at Tanglewood is a picturesque event. A restoration of Hawthorne's "little red house" at Lenox where he wrote his "Tanglewood Tales" and part of "The House of the Seven Gables" is being formally presented to the Berkshire Music Center. Mr. Manning Hawthorne, eldest grandson of the novelist to bear that name, will speak, and with him Mr. Henry Wadsworth Longfellow Dana, great grandson of Hawthorne's lifelong friend and fellow-collegian at Bowdoin. It was Longfellow who wrote for Hawthorne his best review of "Twice Told Tales" and years later, when the habit of silence and solitude had so grown on the novelist that he had withdrawn to stand in a window embrasure during a party at Craigie House and look out at the darkness—it was again Longfellow who said, like the poet he was,

"How well Hawthorne rides his horse of the night!"

He had ridden it pretty much all his life. When he was a little boy in Salem, his father, a sea captain of course, had died in a far foreign port, his mother had retired into widowed seclusion, and the household was virtually isolated; at Bowdoin he had two notable friends, Longfellow, a Portland boy, and Franklin Pierce of Hillsborough, N. H., whose campaign biography as candidate for the President of the United States the novelist was later to write as pot-boiler. Then came another dark-horse chapter: back in Salem after Bowdoin, Hawthorne sat him down in his mother's house for ten years and taught himself to write. He himself says that hardly a dozen people in Salem were aware of his existence, that saplings grew into trees while he sat there learning, and finally, years later, he wrote, a line of blank verse.

"In this lonely chamber fame was won."

Indomitable ambition; intense fortitude. Imagine being the first American to emerge as a novelist. In his preface to "The Scarlet Letter" he amuses himself by picturing the scorn his Puritan ancestors would have had of him, "Why, the degenerate fellow might as well have been a fiddler!" And now, ninety-eight years later, fiddlers have moved in on Tanglewood, rebuilt his red cottage, which will be used for music studios, and they honor his memory as a great fellow-artist. Time moves in a mysterious way its wonders to perform.

So did Hawthorne. Least gregarious of mortals, he joined the communistic experiment at Brook Farm in West Roxbury, made himself, as he says, "a chambermaid to the cows," but extracted from it his "Blithedale Romance." That time for sure Brook Farm did pay its way. There is far more to tell about his solitary decade in Salem than has yet been told; but he was finally exhumed from it by Miss Elizabeth Peabody, whose sister, Sophia, up to that time a professional invalid, after one look at him (he was an extraordinarily handsome young man) promptly rose from her sofa and married him with despatch.

They went to live in the Old Manse, at Concord (Massachusetts), but art and income did not long connect, and before they left the Manse, he and his wife were dining on oatmeal and apples. Yet imagine, too, publishing a novel in New England a hundred years ago wherein the hero-villain, poor fellow, is a clergyman secretly guilty of adultery, and forced to preach publicly at his partner in guilt, adjuring her to reveal what he himself dare not tell. As for sin, Hawthorne was "agin it," so the clergy, although some of them made a fuss, had not much of a case against him.

Never a voluminous reader, Hawthorne's material came mainly from the secret places of the heart, beginning with his own. This is dangerous, for it is likely to use up a man fast, unless he can refuel from other human beings, and it had used up Hawthorne by the time he came to "Grimshawe" and "Septimius Felton." Neither of them came off, and neither was finally finished. Solitariness grew on him and, as his neighbor, Emerson, wrote of him on the day after his funeral, "he died of it."

UNCL

Hawthorne's House Is Musicians' Shrine

National Federation of Music Clubs Formally Presents Novelist's Restored Home to Berkshire Music Center

Jul 24

TANGLEWOOD—Presenting an illuminated testimonial to Mrs. Guy Patterson Gannett, chairman of the Little Red House Committee, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky accepted this afternoon for the Berkshire Music Center the restored Hawthorne cottage presented by the National Federation of Music Clubs.

HAWTHORNE HOME BECOMES A SHRINE

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., July 24—A reconstruction of Nathaniel Hawthorne's little red house was dedicated at Tanglewood this afternoon and presented by the National Federation of Music Clubs to the Boston Symphony Orchestra to be used as a studio. Music, literature and art were represented in the assembly that gathered around the site of Hawthorne's home for eighteen months from the spring of 1850, during which he wrote there "The House of Seven Gables" and "Tanglewood Tales."

Menning Hawthorne of North Woodstock, Conn., a great-grandson of the author, said in a brief address he felt it was irony of fate that this replica of the home of his great-grandfather, who cared nothing for music, should be dedicated a musical shrine.

"I feel, however," he added "that music has a driving force that brings together people of many backgrounds, tastes and racial origins into a friendship which when duplicated would expand to world proportions."

Mr. Hawthorne was accompanied by Richard Manning of Gambier, Ohio, a cousin of the author, and by Henry Wadsworth Longfellow Dana of Craigie House, Cambridge, a grandson of the poet. He read excerpts from diaries kept by Mrs. Longfellow and Mrs .Hawthorne showing the close family friendship.

Mrs. Royden J. Keith of Chicago, president of the federation, gave credit to her predecessor, Mrs. Guy Patterson Gannett of Portland, Me., for "translating a vision into reality." Mrs. Gannett pointed out the 98-year-old rosebush, still flourishing, described by Mrs. Hawthorne in a letter.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, referred to the cottage as a temple from which "radiated a center of music aflame with creative spirit."

Mrs. Gannett was presented with a plaque signed by Henry B. Cabot, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Inc., Dr. Koussevitzky and Lewis Perry, chairman of the Berkshire Music Center Friends.

The four-room, single-story, red-painted house of wood construction with white trim rests on the exact foundation of the original cottage that was burned June 22, 1890.

It is partly surrounded by a heavy old-fashioned rail fence and has a delphinium and phlox border. Close by is a 30-foot, native stone-lined well. Cellarless, heatless, except for fireplaces, the rooms open to rafters and are sheathed in knotted pine. In the cellar ruins were found a brass kettle and pair of fireplace tongs, which have been added to period furnishings.

---

sevitzky will conduct the Brahms' Symphony No. 1.

The public has been invited to the exercises Saturday afternoon when the National Federation of Music clubs will present the restored Hawthorne Cottage to the school and Dr. Koussevitzky will accept it. Also open to the public will be the chamber music concert following the ceremony and the recital at 8:15 in Sedgwick Hall, Lenox, by winners of federation awards. Six winners of federation prizes will participate in the week-end events.

This Clipping From
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

JUL 24 1948

KOUSSEVITZKY TO BE 76 YEARS OLD MONDAY

To be Honored by Faculty, Student Body at Tanglewood

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the [redacted] and director of the Berkshire Music festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, will be the guest of 600 members of the faculty and student body of the center and friends on Monday at a tea in celebration of his 76th birthday. The affair will take place in the beautiful Tanglewood gardens.

Dr. Koussevitzky, who is this year completing 25 years as director of the Boston orchestra, will relinquish that post next year but will continue as director of the Berkshire Music center and has indicated that he will desire to appear occasionally as guest conductor with the orchestra.

This Clipping From
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

JUL 22 1948

Scenes From Seven Operas on Program

Music Center Students at Tanglewood Play Tonight — Koussevitzky's Pupils in Concert Tomorrow.

The Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood in Lenox will present scenes from seven operas this evening at 8:15 o'clock and will play a symphony concert in the shed Friday evening, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky and his pupils. [redacted] Eleazar deCarvalho will conduct the opera orchestra.

The opera scenes, performed under Boris Coldovsky, will include Liviette and Tracollo, Prologue to Faust, Orfeo ed Euridice, Eugen Onegin, Cavalleria Rusticana, The Bartered Bride and duet, La Traviata.

The Friday afternoon concert will have for its program Haydn's Symphony No. 99, Ravel's "Introduction and Allegro" and Prokofieff's "Overture on Hebrew Themes." DeCarvalho, a Brazilian, is assistant to Dr. Koussevitzky in teaching conducting and a guest conductor for the Berkshire Festival. He conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Symphony Hall, Boston, last winter.

The program by the advanced orchestra of the school Friday night will include Beethoven's "Coriolanus" Overture, two Mozart Arias, with Adele Addison as soloist, and Three Dances from "Fancy Free" by Leonard Bernstein. Dr. Kous-

---

2—The Berkshire Evening Eagle, Saturday, July 24, 1948

APPRECIATION: Dr. Serge Koussevitzky expresses gratitude to Mrs. Guy Patterson Gannett of Portland, Me., chairman of the Little Red House Committee, for the gift of the novelist's restored home by the National Federation of Music Clubs to the Berkshire Music Center. At left is Mrs. Koussevitzky and next to the Boston Symphony Orchestra's conductor are Mrs. Russell Taylor Hatch of Melrose, president of New England District of the Federation, and Mrs. Royden J. Keith, Chicago, national president.

Hawthorne, Longfellow Kin Cite Literary Coincidence Of Their Visit to Tanglewood

Historical and literary coincidence seem to be the order of the day at Tanglewood, where the reconstructed Little Red House of Nathaniel Hawthorne was dedicated this afternoon.

According to Henry Wadsworth Longfellow Dana, grandson of the poet, and Manning Hawthorne, great-grandson of the novelist, it was just 100 years ago today that Longfellow paid his first visit to Tanglewood, then owned by Samuel Grey Ward. And the purpose of that visit was to enjoy an evening of music.

Mr. Dana and Mr. Longfellow, who arrived here yesterday to participate in the dedication ceremonies, explained that the Longfellow visit took place two years before Nathaniel Hawthorne—an eminently unmusical man—moved in at Tanglewood. But in 1850, when Hawthorne decided to move to the Berkshires, it was Longfellow who recommended the Lenox site.

The evidence to support all this comes from the largely unpublished journals of Longfellow, which will be incorporated in a book about the poet's friendship with Hawthorne. The co-authors, by more than coincidence, are Mr. Dana and Mr. Hawthorne. A chapter from the book, which has already been some 10 years in progress, will deal with the Tanglewood episode.

Longfellow's Comment

Here—and for the first time in print—is Longfellows' comment on his Tanglewood visit of July 24, 1848:

"The evening we passed at Samuel Ward's. Rakemann played Chopin and Mendelssohn and Schubert on a piano somewhat out of tune."

Mrs. Longfellow was more charitable. In her own journal, she said that "Rakemann played deliciously," and let it go at that.

Perhaps the most remarkable of the Dana-Hawthorne documents relating to Tanglewood, however, is a letter which Mrs. Longfellow received in 1850 from the actress Fanny Kemble, who lived in Lenox at the time.

"Good Heavens!" she wrote. "Do you know the man who wrote that dreadful 'Scarlet, Letter'? He speaks of Longfellow as his acquaintance. He—Mr. Hawthorne—is coming up to Lenox to live, I understand. I sincerely hope he doesn't bring his alphabet with him."

There was one thing Fanny Kemble neglected to mention. At t time she wrote that letter she w being sued for divorce—charg by her husband with the same fense that won Hester Prynne big red "A."

300 Attend Ceremonies

With Mrs. Royden J. Keith, federation president, presiding, the presentation was made at a ceremony on the grounds of the cottage by Mrs. Gannett in the presence of 300 federation members and guests.

Declaring the structure and its presentation for practice studios a monument to the vision of one woman, Mrs. Keith said, "It is a convincing demonstration that we walk by faith and not by light." Expressing appreciation of Tanglewood and all that it stands for, she said, "we are strongly placing the accent on youth. The Berkshire Music Center represents to me one of the great opportunities to influence the youth of America and through them the youth of the world. The cultural impetus, the creative stimulus that they receive here can hardly be over-estimated in its impact on the civilization of today and the future. It is a matter of great gratification to me that through the Little Red House the National Federation of Music Clubs has a permanent association with it."

Reviews History of Project

Mrs. Gannett, reviewing the history of the project, said, "For me the Little Red House symbolizes the dream that Dr. Koussevitzky revealed to me six years ago and which he has brought to rich realization through giving the young people of this and many countries the finest musical education obtainable, and with this education the lofty idealism which can come only through the things of the spirit."

Crediting George E. Judd, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with the original inspiration to rebuild the structure as practice studios, Mrs. Gannett told of the wartime delays in building. She stated that every effort was made to reproduce the house in exact replica of the original, and told of the uncovering of the old well, the installation of an exact reproduction of the old pump and of the old rosebush referred to in one of Mrs. Hawthorne's letters to her mother. The bush is still growing over a boulder near the house.

Mrs. Gannett concluded, "In turning this house over to the Berkshire Music Center, it is with the hope that the organization which had the supreme interest in making it possible will always be given the right of supervision in so far as it is able to be helpful—that it will always be a living interest of our organization."

Little Red House

Continued From First Page

Lewis Perry, chairman of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center. It reads:

To Mrs. Guy Patterson, with gratitude from the Trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, and the Friends and faculty of the Berkshire Music Center. She had the vision and the courage to make the Little Red House, the home of Nathaniel Hawthorne, in reality what it was called in 1850, "The Temple of Art and the Muses." Here Hawthorne wrote "The House of the Seven Gables." Through Mrs. Gannett and the National Federation of Music Clubs music is now joined with literature to create in the words of Serge Koussevitzky, "A temple of rare beauty, a living hope, a beacon in the night." To Mrs. Gannett we owe not only the hope for the union of music and literature, but that larger hope which would have been shared by Nathaniel Hawthorne for the union of art and democracy.

The ceremony was preceded b a picnic luncheon on the Tangle wood grounds and followed by song recital in the chamber mus hall by federation prize winners

Free Public Recital

Tonight the dedication will clo with a concert by Paula Lenchne Metropolitan Opera Company s prano, winner of the 1945 you artists award by the federatic at Sedgwick Hall, Lenox. Op free to the public, the recital w be the federation's gift to the co munity. The delegates from states will attend the concerts Tanglewood tomorrow.

LAWRENCE, MASS.
EAGLE

JUL 24 1948

Playing Violin At Tanglewood

Miss Jean Stillman, talented violinist, is spending six weeks at the Tanglewood Music Center in the Berkshires. She has had the privilege of playing in the student orchestra there under the direction of [redacted]

The young musician, who is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Howell M. Stillman, 39 Morton street, Andover, is a graduate of the N. E. Conservatory of Music and she has studied privately with outstanding teachers.

She is well known in Greater Lawrence as well as in Boston as she has appeared as a solo violinist on concert programs and has played with ensembles and orchestras.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
L 24 1948

Shaw Urges Participation To Aid Growth of Music

LENOX — Following a luncheon of the New England district of the National Federation of Music Clubs yesterday at the Curtis Hotel, Robert Shaw, 31-year-old member of the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center addressed the group at a rn session.

The boyish-looking choral conductor, who is also a member of the faculty of the Juilliard School of Music in New York, called for active participation in music to aid its growth in America.

"Music is much safer in the hands of people who make it and not just those who appreciate it," declared Shaw as he emphasized to the group that there is "a great deal of dislocation of music on the American scene today."

He added that the performers are making money today while the composers are starving, describing this as "a sad situation." He credited Dr. Koussevitzky, and the Berkshire Music Center, with doing more than anyone else to see that "composers get a break," adding that Tanglewood is healthy because students at the Berkshire Music Center have an opportunity to make music. The problem, as Shaw sees it, is building situations where everyone can participate. A great deal of dislocation would disappear, he feels, if music were made universal.

Mr. Shaw stated "it is too bad that in a country as large as the United States," that the Metropolitan Opera Association should be "the one central opera source that dictates to the rest of the country." At the same time he praised William Schumann, head of the Juilliard School for Music, because "he has the effrontry to assume that young artists should know more of their world." Shaw asserted that Schumann still dares to insist that graduates perform music as well as know its theory.

Mr. Shaw told a few of the problems which confronted him in New York where he also serves as conductor of the Collegiate Choral and explained that one chorus was made up of employees "from the department of sanitation to the legal department, with few from the latter." The chorus, made up of stenographers, clerks and other city employees had difficulty in starting rehearsals, Mr. Shaw said, "We had Jews, Catholics and Negroes in the chorus rehearsing in a Protestant church hall," he explains, "but after being ordered from the hall we found a more liberal Protestant group in New York who permitted us to use their hall for rehearsals and the concert was finally given at Carnegie Hall."

Mrs. Russell Taylor Hatch of Melrose, president of the New England District Federation of Music Clubs, presided at the luncheon meeting. Dr. Koussevitzky expressed his gratitude to the Federation for its gift to the Berkshire Music Center of the Little Red House, predicting that great things for art will be produced in the house.

David Laurent, first winner of the Anne M. Gannett fund scholarship, gave a short recital, singing a set of "Gambling Songs," by Niles.

Mrs Koussevitzky and George E Judd, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, spoke briefly.

Koussevitzky's Address

Dr. Koussevitzky spoke as follows:—

This is a red letter day not only in the life of Tanglewood and its community, but also the country at large. We are present at the dedication ceremony of a house—new in frame and old of fame—historically known as Hawthorne's cottage, and humbly named "The Little Red House." Today we designate it as a shrine, for it is restored to life by the congregate effort of many—so is an altar sanctified by countless offerings of prayers.

The curious and intangible association of Hawthorne's name with a place where he spent but one short year of his life, yet chose to name and to immortalize, remains an open "Book of Wonder."

Whether his fiery spirit animates Tanglewood today as of old, or the muses still favor these grounds, though their temple "turned to smoke," the fact remains that Tanglewood became a place of pilgrimage, a radiating center of music, aflame with creative spirit. The temple itself is now restored to serve music and the arts.

Is not this a tangible sign of the flame of inspiration that lighted the heart of a great American woman, who set the spark to a group large enough to spread over the nation? It is to the initial thought of Mrs. Gannett, her relentless and active efforts, her loving care and the co-operation of the federation of which she was president that we owe the beautiful replica of Hawthorne's cottage, adapted for the use of the Berkshire Music Center—truly a shrine to the patron saint of Tanglewood.

On this memorable dedication day we gratefully acknowledge the gift of the Little Red House by the National Federation of Music Clubs. To Mrs. Gannett goes our tribute — to her we express our admiration and gratitude in words engraved on this address, as they are engraved in our hearts.

Testimonial to Mrs. Gannett

The address to which Dr. Koussevitzky referred is a framed testimonial, signed by Henry B. Cabot, Boston Symphony Orchestra president, Dr. Koussevitzky as director of the Berkshire Music Center and

---

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
JUL 24 1948

Tanglewood

Tonight at 8.15

The National Federation of Women's Clubs will present Paula Lenchner, winner of its 1945 young artist prize, member of the Metropolitan Opera Company, in a recital at Sedgwick Hall, Lenox. The public is invited.

Tomorrow Morning

Chamber music concert at 10.30. The program will be:

Hindemith
Little chamber music for wind instruments
Coached by Raymond Allard
Couperin .... Motet
Adolescentulus Sum for two flutes, two violins and organ
Schubert .... Der Hirt auf dem Felsen
For clarinet, piano and soprano
Coached by Ralph Berkowitz
Robert Schumann
Quintet in E flat for piano and strings
Coached by Gregor Piatigorsky
Soloist: John Brainerd, lyric soprano, 1947 Young artist prize winner of the National Federation of Women's Clubs

Tomorrow Afternoon at 3.30

The second performance of the Mozart concert in the Bach-Mozart series of the Berkshire Festival.

NEXT WEEK

Monday Afternoon

The symphony concert scheduled for 4.30 postponed to Friday at the same hour.

The school will meet on the lawn in front of the main house to discuss plans for Aug. 3. when Tanglewood will be "on parade" for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center and musicians abroad. The school picture will be taken.

Tuesday Afternoon

The small choir of Department 5 will give a concert in the theatre at 4.30.

Tuesday Evening

The second performance of the Bach program by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, will conclude the Bach-Mozart series of the Festival.

Wednesday Evening

The last of four chamber music concerts in a Schubert cycle contributed to the Berkshire Music Center by Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge.

Thursday Evening

Opening of Berkshire Festival concerts in the Shed.

Friday Afternoon

Concert by Department 5 small choir.

Friday Evening

Symphony concert by advanced student orchestra in the Shed.

Saturday Morning

Public rehearsal of Boston Symphony Orchestra for the benefit of the pension fund at 10 in the Shed.

Saturday Evening

Second Berkshire Festival concert in Shed by Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting.

All events excepting Festival concerts and rehearsal are open to Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
JUL 24 1948

Mozart Music At Tanglewood Tomorrow

Large Crowd Expected for Theatre Hall Concert

TANGLEWOOD—An even larger audience than heard the Bach concert last Sunday is expected for the Mozart program that will be given for the second time tomorrow afternoon at 3.30 at Tanglewood by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Serge Koussevitzky. Late ticket buyers will again listen from the stage, the lawn and benches surrounding the theatre-concert hall.

The program follows:

Symphony in C major.
Piano concerto in G major.
Lukas Foss, soloist.
Serenade (Nacht Musique) for 2 oboes, 2 clarinets, 2 horns and 2 bassoons.
Symphony in E flat major.

General admission will be on sale at noon at the box office.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
JUL 24 1948

SHAW DECLARES PARTICIPANT HAS POWER IN MUSIC

Composer Addresses Music Club Leaders; Adele Addison Sings in Concert

By WILLARD M. CLARK

Lenox, July 23—Preliminary to the opening of "The Little Red House," better known as the Hawthorne House a luncheon was given today at the Curtis Hotel at which Robert Shaw, probably the most distinguished of American choral conductors, was on hand to tell an equally distinguished audience of members of the National Federation of Music Clubs that the salvation choral music, in fact, any music, rests with those who are participants. In fact, declared Mr. Shaw the participant wields twice the power of the "lover of music."

Notes Dislocations

Mr. Shaw, an extremely boyish appearing young man, was earnest in his avowal that those who take part in music will eventually be the founders of ensemble music in this country. Mr. Shaw noted distinct dislocations in the world of music. The composer's lot is not a happy one. Today the performer, not the composer, is in the ascendancy. The composer remains the prophet, the performer, the "God." He noted that Dr. Koussevitzky had done more than any other conductor to make the works of American composers known.

Dr. Koussevitzky was on hand to speak very briefly to express his thanks to the Federation for its part in making "Hawthorne House" a permanent part of Tanglewood.

Mr. Shaw finds too many conservatories of music making music everything but the performance of music. He notes that studies in the psychology, history and philosophy of music are all very fine, but that the same students who study the course may have no idea as to what music really is, for they neither perform or sing it.

He is a bit disturbed that the Metropolitan Opera Association remains the "dictator" of music in this country. He had words of praise for Composer William Schumann, president of the Juilliard School of Music, who still dares to insist that graduates perform music as well as know its theory.

Mrs. Keith Presides

Mrs. Roydan J. Keith well known as a fine American contralto, and now president of the National Federation of Music Clubs, presided at the meeting. She introduced Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky, who added to her husbands thanks for "Hawthorne House" she invited George Judd, manager of the Boston Symphony orchestra, to speak.

Mr. Judd, always the diplomat, had pleasant things to say about the Federation and even about radio.

He noted that radio was doing a fine job in providing good music when one considered the number of hours available for such broadcasts and the number of listeners for such types of music.

The meeting ended with a short recital by David Laurent, first winner of the Anne M. Gannett Scholarships given by the Federation to veteran soloists. It will be remembered that the Pioneer Valley Music Club of Springfield presented Mr. Laurent in a recital a few weeks ago. He sang a set of "Gambling Song," by Niles, and was rewarded with wholehearted applause from this very distinguished audience.

Adele Addison Sings

Tonight we attended a concert by the senior student orchestra. Of particular interest to Springfield was the fact that Adele Addison was heard in arias from the "Marriage of Figaro" and the "Magic Flute" by Mozart, under the baton of Seymour Lipkin, who will be heard as pianist in the Tschaikowsky "Piano Concerto No. 1" later in the concerts. Miss Addison sang these taxing arias with a beauty of tone, excellence of phrasing and clarity of diction which one has learned to expect from this extremely gifted soprano.

The program opened with a fine performance of Beethoven's "Cariolanus Overture" conducted by Irwin Hoffman. Excerpts from Leonard Bernstein's "Fancy Free" were conducted by Howard Shanet. Dr. Koussevitzky conducted the orchestra in a really brilliant performance of the fourth symphony by Brahms.

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
JUL 24 1948

RHODE ISLANDERS AT MUSIC CENTER

Play Important Part in 3-Day Meeting of N.E. District at Lenox, Mass.

By RUTH TRIPP
Journal-Bulletin Music Critic

Stockbridge, Mass., July 23.—Rhode Islanders are playing an important part in the three-day meeting of the New England district of the National Federation of Music Clubs which marks the dedication of "The Little Red House" at the Berkshire Music Center in Tanglewood.

Today's sessions began with a business meeting and forum held at the recently completed building which is a replica of Nathaniel Hawthorne's home. The original building was destroyed by fire several years ago.

Members of the federation from all parts of the United States have contributed to the fund which has made possible the structure which will now be used by the chamber music and opera departments of the Berkshire Music Center. A luncheon at the Curtis Hotel was well attended. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky brought greetings to the group and commended their interest in the progress of music study.

The afternoon session was presided over by Mrs. Russell T. Hatch, district president. Robert Shaw, a member of the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center and director of the Collegiate Chorale, addressed the group. His topic, "Youth in the Field of Music," was useful for purposes of the program. What he really talked about was the many dislocations in the American scene as they relate to the world of music.

He spoke of the overbalanced emphasis on performance as against creative work and its result in terms of the composer. He also touched lightly on the preponderance of history, philosophy and psychology of music presented to students and made a strong plea for more group participation in music. With engaging candor he stated the case of prize awards as a stimulating influence in the creative field versus the establishment of locations where music can be made by students under such ideal conditions as those which prevail at Tanglewood.

David Laurent, baritone, of Providence sang a group of songs, accompanied by Louise Winsor Moore. His selection of the "Gambling Songs," arranged by John Jacob Niles was a fortunate one. His ability to project the varied moods of this set of American folk songs was never better displayed. His work attained a high level of artistry and he was obliged to sing an encore. Mrs. Moore played well matched accompaniments.

Gay Tapley of Portland, Me., reported on her recent visit as American delegate to the International Congress of the Jeunesse Musicales in Luxembourg. This evening's concert at the shed in Tanglewood was presented by the orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center with Adele Addison, soprano, as soloist. Two Rhode Islanders, Robert Allen, cellist, and Martha Butler, contralto, winners of two of the three scholarships presented to the center by the Newport Music Club will participate in the afternoon program of tomorrow. The third winner of the scholarships Lucretia Fabre of Idaho, will also sing.

This Clipping From WATERVILLE, ME.
SENTINEL

JUL 24 1948

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN

JUL 25 1948

Honor Composer at Tanglewood

In special recognition of Darius Milhaud, guest composer this Summer at the Berkshire Music Center, at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., the Berkshire Festival program of next Sunday afternoon has been altered to include a performance by the Boston Symphony Orchestra of his Symphony No. 2. The composer himself will conduct.

The Milhaud work comes in the first week of concerts by the full orchestra. The first of the big series is Thursday evening, when the program will include the Bach Suite in D major, No. 3, Hindemith's "Mathis der Maler," and the Fifth Symphony of Beethoven, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducting.

The remainder of the program next Sunday will be given to Mahler's Symphony No. 2 in D-major, the "Resurrection," with the Festival chorus of 250 voices with Ellabelle Davis, soprano, and Nan Merriman, mezzo-soprano, as soloists, Leonard Bernstein conducting.

The Milhaud Symphony No. 2 was performed for the first time anywhere by the orchestra in Boston in 1946 also under the baton of the composer.

DEDICATE HAWTHORNE FORMER HOME AT MUSIC CENTER— Left, a crowd of more than 200 heard Mrs. Royden J. Keith, Chicago, president of the National Federation of Music Clubs, speak Saturday at the formal presentation of the former home of novelist Nathaniel Hawthorne to the Berkshire Music Center as a practice house on the grounds at Tanglewood, Mass.

Right, Mrs. Guy Patterson Gannett, of Cape Elizabeth, left, receives a hand-illuminated citation signed by well-known leaders in music from Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and director of the Berkshire Music Center, as part of the ceremonies. Mrs. Gannett is a past president of the NFMC and chairman of the "Little Red House" project which was started eight years ago and was interrupted by the war. (Howard S. Babbitt, jr., Photos)

This Clipping From HOUSTON, TEX.
POST

JUL 25 1948

Milhaud to Conduct Own Symphony At Berkshire Festival

BOSTON, July 24.—(Sp)—In special recognition of Darius Milhaud, guest composer and conductor, the Berkshire Festival program of Sunday, ~~Aug. 1, has~~ been altered to include a performance by the Boston Symphony orchestra of his Symphony No. 2, which he will conduct.

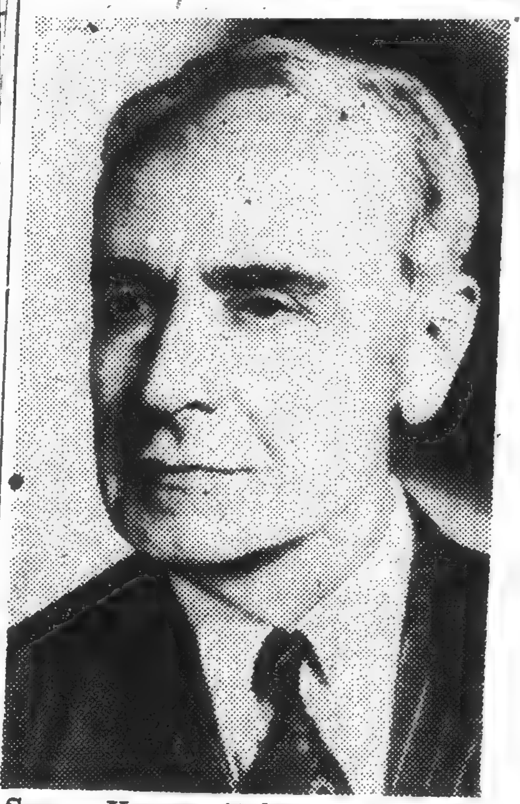
The Milhaud work comes in the first week of concerts in the Tanglewood Music Shed by the full orchestra. The first of the big series will be Thursday evening, when the program will include the Bach Suite in D Major, Hindesmith's "Mathis der Maler," and the Fifth Symphony of Beethoven, Dr. Koussevitzky conducting.

The remainder of the program on Aug. 1 will be given to Mahler's Symphony No. 2 in D Major, the "Resurrection," with the Festival chorus of 250 voices with Ellabelle Davis, soprano, and Nan Merriman, mezzo-soprano, as soloists, Leonard Bernstein conducting.

[189]

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

JUL 25 1948



Serge Koussevitzky, who opens Berkshire Festival Thursday.

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

TANGLEWOOD
Lenox, Mass.

Boston Symphony Orchestra
Conductor, Serge Koussevitzky

Today, 3:30 P. M., Mozart program. Soloist, Lukas Foss, piano.
Symphony in C (K. 338); Serenade for wind instruments in C minor (K. 388); Concerto for piano in G (K. 453); Symphony in E flat (K. 543).

Tuesday, 8:15 P. M., Bach program. Soloists: Lukas Foss, Ralph Berkowitz, Bernard Zighera, pianists; Georges Laurent, flute.
Brandenburg Concerto No. 3 in G; Cantata No. 65, Sie werden aus Saba alle kommen (conducted by Hugh Ross); Concerto in D minor, for three pianos; Suite No. 2, in B minor, for flute and strings; Concerto in C, for three pianos.

Thursday, 8:15 P. M.
Bach's Suite No. 3, in D; Hindemith's Symphony, Mathis der Maler; Beethoven's Symphony No. 5.

Saturday, 8:15 P. M. Soloist, Isaac Stern, violin.
Piston's Symphony No. 3; Prokofieff's Violin Concerto No. 1; Brahms' Symphony No. 1.

Next Sunday, Aug. 1, 3:30 P. M. Conductors, Darius Milhaud and Leonard Bernstein; Ellabelle Davis, soprano; Nan Merriman, contralto.
Milhaud's Symphony No. 2, in D; Mahler's Symphony No. 2, Resurrection.

This Clipping From
SPARTANBURG, S. C.
JOURNAL

JUL 25 1948

orld of Music

Benefit Planned to Aid Needy Europe Artists

NEW YORK, (UP)—A 4-hour benefit to help the needy musicians of Europe will be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass., on Aug. 3.

The main event will be a concert by the orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky. Maurice Evans and Cornelia Otis Skinner will appear in Shakespearean excerpts. Under the title of "Tanglewood on Parade," there will be simultaneous performances in their various buildings by all departments of the Berkshire Music Center— orchestra, choral, operatic and chamber music.

At an assembly preceding the orchestral concert, speakers will urge "nationwide assistance from the New World to the creative artists of the Old World."

WHILE IT IS early to forecast the plans of the Metropolitan Opera for the coming season, it is reported that General Manager Edward Johnson plans a revival of Verdi's "Falstaff," with Leonard Warren, baritone, in the title role. The opera, in an English version, was last heard at the Metropolitan in the 1943-44 season.

It is possible that Verdi's "Simon Boccanegra" likewise will be revived, also with Warren. It was last presented in 1940, when Lawrence Tibbett sang the title role.

One of the new singers expected to be engaged by the Metropolitan next season is Italo Tajo, Italian bass-baritone, who already has attracted favorable attention in this country through recordings and appearances in 1946 with the Chicago Opera and last year with the San Francisco Opera.

CLAUDIO ARRAU, pianist, has been transfered from his post as cultural attache to the Chilean embassy in Washington to the embassy in Mexico City.

Arrau has postponed a scheduled tour of South Africe until next summer and will go instead to Mexico the middle of August for a 6 weeks' rest. Arrau returned recently from his 16th tour of South America.

A NEW VIOLIN concerto has been composed in Australia by Eugene Goossens, internationally-known [illegible] dedicated to [illegible] be- [illegible] years ago [illegible] He said [illegible] ing only [illegible] but ing his [illegible] dur-

---

Cir. (S 53,909)

This Clipping From
PORTLAND, ME.
SUNDAY TELEGRAM

JUL 25 1948

Spotlight On The Berkshires

Although the formal opening of the Berkshire Music Festival in the big Shed does not come until midweek this week, the trek has begun Tanglewoodward for music-minded New Yorkers. New York license plates were thick on the streets of Lenox last Sunday and on Tuesday, when the first two of the Bach Mozart concerts were in progress, and there is promise of an equally large attendance today, when Tuesday evening's all-Mozart program will be repeated. This will include the Symphony in C Major, the Serenade for Winds, and the Piano Concerto in G Major, with Lukas Foss as soloist. An orchestra of Chamber Music proportions only is used for these concerts and a generous proportion of the audience is seated on the stage.

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

JUL 25 194

'LITTLE RED COTTAGE'

Replica of Hawthorne Home Is Dedicated

By RAYMOND MORIN

LENOX, Sunday—A replica of the "Little Red Cottage" in which Nathaniel Hawthorne enjoyed his most fruitful year as an author, was dedicated yesterday afternoon at Tanglewood. The presentation was made by Mrs. Guy Patterson Gannett, former president of the National Federation of Music Clubs, and accepted by Serge Koussevitzky conductor of the Boston Symphony.

Mrs. Gannett was introduced by Mrs. Royden J. Keith, president of the federation. In part Mrs. Keith said—"In our organization we are strongly placing the accent on youth. The Berkshire Music Center represents to me one of the great opportunities to influence the youth of America and through them the impetus of the world."

Outlines Origin

Mrs. Gannett outlined the origin of the project, attributing its actual beginning to a suggestion made to her six years ago by Dr. Koussevitzky and George E. Judd, manager of the Boston Symphony, that the Hawthorne cottage be restored for sorely needed teaching and practice studios for the Berkshire Music Center students.

The attractive cottage houses two large studios which will be shared by Dr. Koussevitzky and Gregor Piatigorsky for their classes in conducting and cello. It also is fully equipped with kitchen facilities and will be used for many of the students social functions.

Accepts Gift

In accepting the gift Dr. Koussevitzky said:

"This is a red letter day not only in the life of Tanglewood and its community, but also the country at large. We are at present at the dedication ceremony of a house new in frame and old of fame—historically known as Hawthorne's cottage, and humbly named "The Little Red House." Today we designate it as a shrine, for it is restored to life by the congregate effort of many—so it is an altar sanctified by countless offerings of prayers.

"The curious and intangible association of Hawthorne's name with a place where he spent but one short year of his life (1850-51) yet chose to name and immortalize, remains an "open book of wonder."

"Whether this fiery spirit animates Tanglewood today as of old, or the Muses still favor these grounds, though their temple turned to smoke, the fact remains that Tanglewood became a place of pilgrimage, a radiating center of music aflame with creative spirit. The temple itself is now restored to serve music and the arts.

Lauds Mrs. Gannett

"Is not this a tangible sign of flame of inspiration that lighted the heart of a great American woman, who set the spark to a group large enough to spread over the nation. It is to the initial thought of Mrs. Gannett, her relentless and active efforts, her loving care and the cooperation of the federation of which she was president that we owe the beautiful replica of Hawthorne's cottage, adapted for the use of the Berkshire Music Center—truly a shrine to the patron saint of Tanglewood.

"On this memorable dedication day we gratefully acknowledge the gift of the "Little Red House" by the National Federation of Music Clubs. To Mrs. Gannett goes our tribute — to her we express or admiration and gratitude."

An unexpected appearance was made by Judge Raymond Wilkins, representing the trustees of the Boston Symphony. In accepting the gift for the trustees, Judge Wilkins declared "Music is now joined with literature."

Up to this point the 300 members of the National Federation who attended with their guests had heard speech-making of the gravest solemnity, but when called upon to speak, Henry Wadsworth Dana put a stop to that.

Grandson of the poet, Mr. Dana informally told reminiscences and anecdotes about his grandfather Nathaniel Hawthorne, also Herman Melville and the fabulous Fanny Kemble from his grandparents diaries.

It was exactly one hundred years ago yesterday that the Longfellows came to the Berkshires to live. Mr. Dana recalled the famous meeting under the cliffs of Monument Mountain between Hawthorne, Melville, and Oliver Wendell Holmes. He told of the queer assortment of furnishings Mrs. Hawthorne had introduced into the cottage, even to "a statue of Apollo whose head she had tied on."

Amusing Letter

One of the most amusing of the Dana-Hawthorne memoirs was a letter written by Fanny Kemble (then Mrs. Butler) to Mrs. Longfellow in 1850—"Good Heavens" she wrote "Do you know the man who wrote that dreadful "Scarlet Letter." He speaks of Longfellow as his acquaintance. He — Mr. Hawthorne — is coming up to Lenox to live, I understand. I sincerely hope he doesn't bring his alphabet with him."

"There was one thing Fanny Kemble neglected to mention" Mr. Dana added. "She was at the moment being sued for divorce and half of Stockbridge was prepared to brand her with the same letter."

Richard Manning of Gambrier, Ohio, a cousin of Hawthorne's was introduced but did not speak. Manning Hawthorne of North Woodstock, Conn., great grandson of the novelist, represented the family as speaker.

He expressed a mild irony in the fact that a former home of Nathaniel Hawthorne, who had no ear whatever for music, should be dedicated as a musical shrine. "However," he added, "I am sure my great grandfather would have rejoiced in this use being made of the Little Red Honse."

Recital Follows

Following the dedication ceremonies, a recital was given in the Chamber Music Hall by winners of National Federation of Music Clubs scholarships at Tanglewood. The participants were Lucretia Ferre, soprano; Robert Allen, cellist and Martha Butler, contralto.

Dedication events were brought to a close last night with a concert by Paula Lenchner, Met soprano, winner of the 1945 young artists award by the federation. It took place in Sedgwick Hall, Lenox.

This Clipping From
DAVENPORT, IOWA
DEMOCRAT & LEADER

IN RECOGNITION

. . . of Darius Milhaud, guest composer at the Berkshire Music Center this summer, the Berkshire festival program on Sunday afternoon August 1, has been changed to include a performance by the Boston symphony orchestra of his symphony No. 2. The composer himself will conduct the work which will be presented in the first week of concerts by the full orchestra. The remainder of the August 1st program will be given to Mahler's symphony No. 2 in D Major, the "Resurrection" with the festival chorus of 250 voices and Ellabelle Davis and Nan Merriman as soloists and Leonard Bernstein conducting. The Milhaud Second symphony was commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and dedicated to the memory of Madame Natalie Koussevitzky.

This Clipping From ODESSA, TEXAS
AMERICAN

JUL 25

The Odessa (Tex.) American, Sunday, July 25, 1948 19

Four-hour Benefit At Tanglewood Will Aid Needy European Musicians

NEW YORK. (UP) — A four-hour benefit to help the needy musicians of Europe will be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass., on August 3.

The main event will be a concert by the orcherstra under Serge Koussevitzky. Maurice Evans will appear in Shakespearean excerpts. Under the title of "Tanglewood on Parade," there will be simultaneous performances in their various buildings by all departments of the Berkshire Music Center — orchestra, choral, operatic and chamber music. 9

At an assembly preeding the orchestral concert, speakers will urge "nation-wide assistance from the New World to the creative artists of the Old World."

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

JUL 25 1948

HAWTHORNE HOUSE ACCEPTED AS GIFT

Berkshire Music Center Gets Present From Federation of Music Clubs

By RUTH TRIPP
Journal-Bulletin Music Critic

Stockbridge, Mass., July 24.—The stage is now set for the present-day sequel to "The Wonder Book," Hawthorne's "Little Red House," has been formally accepted by the Berkshire Music Center as a gift from the National Federation of Music Clubs. The garden of the rebuilt structure was the setting for the formal exercises today at which Mrs. Guy Patterson Gannett, past president of the federation presided.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky in his speech of acceptance described the building which houses two soundproof studios and a pleasant drawing room as "a shrine restored to life new in fame but old in faith." His co-operation and that of George Judd were an important factor in the completion of the project. The bright Berkshire sun shone on the large gathering and a rare treat was afforded those who were there.

As if Cousin Eustace himself had revisited the scene to relate a story we all had the privilege of hearing from the lips of Henry Longfellow Dana, a grandson of the famous poet, excerpts from his grandmother's diary which made the famous "golden age" of the Berkshires come to life.

Cousin Eustace would have said "sit down, then, every soul of you, and be all still as so many mice. At the slightest interruption.—I shall bite the story short off between my teeth, and swallow the untold part." Mr. Dana's listeners were not always "as still as mice" because his delightfully humorous manner of recounting intimate bits of the story of the Longfellows house-hunting for the Hawthornes.

The "Little Red House" suited Mrs. Hawthorne very well. Mr. Hawthorne found it small and the drawing room "stuffy". One of the most delightful bits of the "untold part" of the story we heard was the comment of the actress Fanny Kemble, when she heard of the arrival of the author of the then current sensation "The Scarlet Letter." Said Fanny: "I sincerely hope he will not bring his alphabet with him."

Also present were Richard Manning, a cousin of the Hawthorne family, and Manning Hawthorne, a great-grandson of the author, who spoke briefly of his family's pleasure at the restoration of the "Little Red House".

Rhode Island's contribution of a portion of the funds was acknowledged as were two gifts. The insulation and soundproofing of the two studios were made possible by a gift from Irene L. Mulick of Cranston, a past president of the Rhode Island Federation of Music Clubs, and fire irons were given by Mrs. Ada Holding Miller, national vice president of the organization.

At a concert following the dedicatory exercises Robert Allen, 'cellist of Providence, played "Toccata" by Fresccbaldi and "Elegie" by Faure. His tone quality was warm and appealing and his interpretations reflected an understanding of style. The Faure number was the outstanding performance of the program. Nell Thurman assisted ably at the piano.

Martha Butler, contralto, of Newport has a naturally rich voice which will improve with study. She was hampered by a slight cold. Her group included a song by Quilter and two spirituals.

Lucretia Ferre, soprano, sang a song from a Mozart cantata and three others. Of these Debussy's "Calme dans le Demi-Jour" was most enjoy-

---

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

JUL 25 1948

Hawthorne Home Made Shrine.

Lenox, Mass., July 24.—(AP.)—The onetime Berkshire Hills home of Nathaniel Hawthorne, famed novelist of the nineteenth century, today was presented to the Berkshire Music Center of Tanglewood. The presentation was made to Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director of the center and conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He called the little red house a shrine to service music and the arts.

This Clipping From SAN JOSE, CAL.
MERCURY HERALD

Boston Symphony Will Assist Benefit for European Artists

NEW YORK, July 24. (UP)—A four-hour benefit to help the needy musicians of Europe will be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass., on Aug. 3.

The main event will be a concert by the orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky. Maurice Evans and Cornelia Otis Skinner will appear in Shakespearean excerpts. Under the title of "Tanglewood on Parade," there will be simultaneous performances in their various buildings by all departments of the Berkshire Music Center—orchestra, choral, operatic and chamber music.

At an assembly preceding the orchestral concert, speakers will urge "nation-wide assistance from the New World to the creative artists of the Old World."

* * *

While it is early to forecast the plans of the Metropolitan Opera for the coming season, it is reported that General Manager Edward Johnson plans a revival of Verdi's "Falstaff," with Leonard Warren, baritone, in the title role. The opera, in an English version, was last heard at the Metropolitan in the 1943-44 season.

It is possible that Verdi's "Simon Boccanegra" likewise will be revived, also with Warren. It was last presented in 1940, when Lawrence Tibbett sang the title role.

One of the new singers expected to be engaged by the Metropolitan next season is Italo Tajo, Italian bass-baritone, who already has attracted favorable attention in this country through recordings and appearances in 1946 with the Chicago Opera and last year with the San Francisco Opera.

* * *

Claudio Arrau, pianist, has been transferred from his post as cultural attache to the Chilean embassy in Washington to the embassy in Mexico City.

Arrau has postponed a scheduled tour of South Africa until next Summer and will go instead to Mexico the middle of August for a six weeks' rest. Arrau returned recently from his 16th tour of South America.

* * *

A new violin concerto has been composed in Australia by Eugene Goossens, internationally-known conductor. It is dedicated to Jascha Heifetz. Goossens began the work in Melbourne two years ago and has just completed it. He said he had been promising Heifetz a concerto for 15 years but only really got to work on it during his stay in Australia.

George Szell will take a leave of absence from the Cleveland orchestra next December to accept an invitation of Holland's Concertgebouw Orchestra to conduct 15 concerts of its winter season in Amsterdam. Next October Szell begins his third season as musical director of the Cleveland Orchestra.

* * *

Alexander [illegible] will play excerpts from a new two-hour piano work by Messiaen, "Vingt Regards sur l'Enfant Jesus," at a recital in Carnegie Hall next November.

This Clipping From OMAHA, NEBR.
MORNING WORLD-HERALD

25 1948

Hawthorne Home Presented

Lenox, Mass. (AP)—The one-time Berkshire Hills home of Nathaniel Hawthorne, famed novelist of the nineteenth century, Saturday was presented to the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood.

3200 Hear Program at Tanglewood

LENOX, July 25 (AP)—An over- ow crowd of 3200 turned out a anglewood today for a Moz program by the Boston Symphon Orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

Eleven hundred filled the concert hall while the remaining 2100 heard the concert from the terrace.

Lukas Foss, 24-year-old Berlin-born pianist and composer, was recalled to the platform five times after he played 'Piano Concerto in G Major."

The orchestra opened today's program with "Symphony in C Major" and also performed the serenade "Nacht Musique" an 'Symphony in E-Flat Major."

The final concert of the Bach-Mozart series will be given at Tanglewood Tuesday night when the Boston Symphony Orchestra will render an all-Bach program.

Poet Archibald MacLeish wi serve as chairman of "Tanglewoo n Parade," the benefit which th oston Symphony Orchestra a he Berkshire Music Center w erform Tuesday, Aug. 3, for t reative musicians of Europe.

Dr. Koussevitzky will be honore n his 74th birthday tomorrow tudents and faculty member the Berkshire Music Center.

Although he has announce resignation as conductor o Boston Symphony Orchestra the 1948-49 season, he will con as director of the music center

Springfield Repub Jul 25

Latest Tanglewood Facility, Hawthorne House, Dedicated

Replica of Author's Berkshire Residence Is Gift of Music Club Federation to Music Center

By VICTOR PRAHL

Nathaniel Hawthorne has come into his own again at Tanglewood. The "little red house" he occupied for a year and a half nearly 100 years ago has been restored through the generousity of the National Federation of Music Clubs and was formally dedicated yesterday afternoon when Mrs. Guy Patterson Gannett, former president of the federation made the presentation and it was accepted by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Berkshire Music Center. Mrs. Gannett, for whom the restoration of the Hawthorne cottage has been a pet project, recalled the bleak October day she visited the site of the former cottage for the first time with Dr. Koussevitzky and George E. Judd, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Exact Replica

She credited Mr. Judd with the original idea of rebuilding the house for practice studios. She referred to the efforts in reproducing an exact replica of the original cottage, of uncovering the old well, finding an exact reproduction of the yard pump, and voiced her delight in discovering an old rose-bush climbing over a boulder that Mrs. Hawthorne had described in a letter. In conclusion she said, "Dr. Koussevitzky and trustees of the Berkshire Music Center, the Little Red House is yours,—or may I perhaps say it is ours together, a tangible evidence of our mutual determination to give expression to our loftiest principles through the mighty medium of music."

Dr. Koussevitzky in his acceptance stated that this was a red-letter day in the history of Tanglewood and called it the dedication of a house "new in frame but old in fame." In thanking Mrs. Gannett for restoring "The Temple of Art and the Muses" he presented her with an illuminated manuscript from himself, the trustees and friends of the center, which concluded, "To Mrs. Gannett we owe not only the hope for the union of music and literature, but that larger hope which would have been shared by Nathaniel Hawthorne for the union of art and democracy."

Fills a Need

The cottage itself, a charming example of New England architecture of the simpler type, is situated between the large house and the lake, on the lower road. On the utilitarian side it provides practice space for the students at the music center and a reception room for visitors, while as a memorial it clarifies the famous author's assocation with this beautiful spot. A look of dsappointment usually comes over the average visitor at Tanglewood when he discovers that the large house in the center of the grounds is not the former home of Hawthorne and that the ungainly edifice is not "The House of Seven Gables." Now that the visitor may see an authentic reproduction of the real Hawthorne house this situation will be cleared.

The original cottage was destroyed by fire in 1890 since which the spot has been marked merely with a bronze tablet. The new structure is built on the foundation of the original house. Here Hawthorne came early in the summer of 1850, seeking a change of scene and fresh inspiration, having just finished "The Scarlet Letter." His reaction to the Berkshires recorded in his journal and letters to friends, ranges from phrases of enthusiasm to those of intense dislike. However, it proved a profitable year and a half for it was here he wrote "The House of Seven Gables," "A Wonder Book" and planned "The Blithedale Romance." It must have been a worthwhile sojourn just to meet the out-going, dynamic Herman Melville. At the time Melville was writing "Moby Dick," and when finished, dedicated it to Hawthorne. Other temporary neighbors and visitors were Oliver Wendell Holmes, summering in Pittsfield, and Fanny Kemble, the actress, not to mention that flamboyant and prolific romance of Stockbridge, G. P. R. James.

Other Festivities

There were further speeches and more music at the session on Friday afternoon which opened the three day celebration. Robert Shaw, choral director, stressed the importance of making music rather than merely studying it, and said that the little red house was significant in that it housed actual music makers instead of a pile of bones. Mr. Judd, manager of the orchestra, in speaking of a shift in trend, said that the cultured mother in Hawthorne's day hoped that her son would become an author while today she prefers him to be a composer. Of course, living exclusively in the atmosphere of Symphony Hall and Tanglewood, Mr. Judd might understandably be prejudiced. David Laurent delighted the audience with his vocal warmth in five "Gambling Songs" by John Jacob Niles, the same as he sang in his fine recital here last year.

Later in the day there was a concert by chamber orchestra prepared under the direction of Eleazar de Carvalho devoted to works by Prokofieff, Ravel, and Haydn. This gifted conductor and his apprentices all achieved remarkable musical results with a minimum of effort and display. Exceptional talent and even fine artistry is the rule of the day at Tanglewood and while it seems unjust to be casual about such achievement, to mention each gifted individual performer, would read like a directory.

Miss Addison Sings

Of the seven winners of federation contests who appeared during the three days it is only natural that local interest should have centered in the appearance of Adele Addison, soprano, of Springfield, who appeared as soloist with the student orchestra in the big shed on Friday evening. She sang two arias by Mozart, Pamina's air, "Ach ich fuhl's," from the "Magic Flute," and "Dove Sono" from "Don Giovanni." Marking another milepost in the career of this gifted singer, a true Mozart style was in evidence as an addition to her musical assets. In excellent vocal state, one was impressed anew with the rich fullness and mature quality of her voice in the more dramatic passages. She received an ovation and several times brought back to the stage her conductor, Seymour Lipkin, who gave her fine support in both airs. Mr. Lipkin is this year's winner of the Rachmaninoff piano prize and is scheduled to play the Tchaikowsky concerto with the orchestra on August 10th. In the second half of the program Dr. Koussevitzky accomplished marvels with the orchestra in Brahms' "Fourth."

Several such days at Tanglewood add up to a musical revelation. Driving from Lenox to the center I gave a lift to a boy and his cello. He was a member of the orchestra and informed me that he would be soloist in a Haydn concerto next week. He is from Denmark. This reenforces the idea that during these weeks Tanglewood is not only the music center of American but the world.

GUIOMAR NOVAES TO PLAY AT WORCESTER

Worcester, July 24—Guiomar Novaes, internationally famous Brazilian pianist, will be heard with the Philadelphia' Orchestra at the first subscription concert of the 89th Worcester Music Festival, Oct. 26, at Memorial Auditorium. Eugene Ormandy will conduct the orchestra in a toccata and fugue in D minor, Bach; and "Scheherazade" (symphonic suite) by Rimsky-Korsakoff. The festival chorus, Walter Howe conductiong, will sing "Magnificat," by Bach.

Madame Novaes is a native of Sao Paulo, Brazil. She was educated in Paris and New York with high musical honors. At 16 she made her debut as an artist. Engaged by the leading orchestras of Europe and this country, Mme. Novaes is rated as one of the finest of woman pianists today.

MILHAUD TO CONDUCT HIS OWN SYMPHONY

In special recognition of Darius Milhaud, guest composer at the Berkshire Music Center this summer, the Berkshire Festival program of Sunday afternoon, August 1, has been altered to include a performance by the Boston Symphony Orchestra of his Symphony No. 2. The composer himself will conduct, according to Serge Koussevitzky, music director of the orchestra and director of the school. The remainder of the program on August 1 will be given to Mahler's Symphony No. 2 in D major, the "Resurrection," with the Festival chorus of 250 voices and Ellabelle Davis, soprano, and Nan Merriman, mezzo-soprano, as soloists, Leonard Bernstein conducting.

Commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and dedicated to the memory of Madame Natalie Koussevitzky, the Milhaud Symphony No. 2 was performed for the first time anywhere by the orchestra in Boston in 1946 also under the baton of the composer.

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

AT TANGLEWOOD

Between Lenox and Stockbridge — Massachusetts

Boston Symphony Orchestra

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY, Music Director

CONCERTS IN THE SHED

July 31, Aug. 1, 5, 7, 8, 12, 14, 15

Reserved Seat Sale at $2.50

EXTRA TCHAIKOVSKY CONCERT

Tuesday, Aug. 10

Pathetic Symphony, Piano Concerto No. 1 (Seymour Lipkin, Soloist), "1812" Overture

Reserved Seats at $5, $4, $2.50

General Admission to All Above Concerts $2 — Box Seats $6

Public Boston Symphony Rehearsal Saturday, 10 AM—$1.00

(Benefit Pension Fund)

TONIGHT—5:50-11 PM

"TANGLEWOOD ON PARADE"

POPULAR Program by the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY conducting, preceded by a MANIFESTATION in the Shed, inaugurating a campaign for nation-wide assistance to the Creative Artists of Europe in present need. Dr. Koussevitzky will introduce ARCHIBALD MacLEISH as Chairman; Guest Artists and Speakers will include CORNELIA OTIS SKINNER.

THE BERKSHIRE MUSIC CENTER will present—SYMPHONY CONCERT — OPERA SCENES — DEMONSTRATION CHORAL REHEARSAL—"100 YEARS OF CHAMBER MUSIC"

Picnic Supper Door Prize* Waltzing on the Lawn

Fireworks

* (RCA Victor Berkshire Radio-Phonograph

Fireworks

Tickets admitting to all events $2.50—Reserved seats $4.00—Box seats $6.00 (tax incl.). On sale at Tanglewood, England Brothers and Wood Bros., in Pittsfield; Blue Bird Sport Shop, Stockbridge.

This Clipping From

PASADENA, CAL.

STAR-NEWS

JUL 25 1948

Words About Music

By CHARLES D. PERLEE

What Serge Koussevitzky Has to Say About Young Artists in the Music World

Some weeks ago Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony, was honored by the National Music League for assistance to young musicians. Upon that occasion he made a speech and some of the things he said should prove of intense interest to "Words About Music" readers. Here are excerpts:

"A brilliant young man can very easily find a place in the musical world, but a very deep, if modest, sometimes shy young man, who is more gifted than this brilliant artist, must wait years until he will have the opportunity to play or to conduct or to sing. And that is just what you (the National Music League) are doing. You give the young artist who cannot have a brilliant career immediately the possibility to have the experience from the first concert to the second, from the second to the third. And that is just what the artist is looking for from society.

"Certainly, I don't understand why the government is doing nothing for the artists; in general, it is doing nothing for art. This is something I could never understand all my life, and particularly in democratic countries. Don't think that I'm a retrograd—just the opposite. But I notice the whole democratic world is doing nothing for art. Take for instance, France. What is she doing for musical art? Nothing. Absolutely nothing. Take England—only in the last four years has she begun to help the artist. And not the artist, only the bigger organizations—the orchestras. Whereas in olden times—look at the kings, or even our czars in Russia. We hated them all, but have to recognize the opera and all the conservatories—72 great conservatories in cities were supported by the czar.

"Thank goodness we have such people as Mama and others who can help the young artist.

"There is one great difficulty. That is to find the really right way to choose the gifted people. Because a brilliant young boy or girl is very easy to judge, but to find the deep, the profound artist and enable him to have a career, that is a most difficult thing. I can give you some examples. There was established in memory of the great Anton Rubinstein a competition for the most gifted artists in the world. The first competition was about 1895, and the whole world sent the most gifted artists. Busoni was also in this competition, but he didn't receive this award. Somebody else received it. Ten years later no one knew the man who received the award, but Busoni was known the world over as the greatest pianist.

"Another example is Artur Rubinstein. In 1910 the Rubinstein competition was held in St. Petersburg. Artur Rubinstein entered this competition, but he didn't receive the award. Somebody else won. Who is this somebody else? Nobody knows. And Artur Rubinstein is today one of the greatest pianists. That is, therefore, the most difficult problem—to find the way to choose the right person. Let us hope our instinct will never make mistakes."

JOHN RAITT
And Now "Magdalena"

ALBANY, N. Y., SUNDAY TIMES-UNION
PICTORIAL REVIEW—JULY 25, 1948 2

This Clipping From

NEW YORK, N. Y.

HERALD TRIBUNE

JUL 25 1948

Festival List For the Week In Berkshires

Series A to Open Next Thursday Night; Work by Milhaud on Sunday

The opening Mozart and Bach programs of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., will be repeated this afternoon and Tuesday evening by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky's direction, as follows:

Mozart, today at 3:30: Symphony in C (K.338); Serenade for winds; Piano Concerto in G (K.453) (Soloist Lukas Foss); Symphony in E flat (K.543).

Bach, Tuesday at 8:15: Brandenburg Concerto No. 3; Cantata No 65, "Sie werden aus Saba alle kommen"; Concerto in D minor for three pianos and strings; Suite No. 2, for flute and strings; Concerto in C for three pianos and strings.

The Festival's Series A, with the full Boston Symphony, begins in the Music Shed next Thursday night. The programs are:

Thursday, 8:15, Dr. Koussevitzky conducting. Suite No. 3, in D major, Bach; Symphony, Mathis der Maler Hindemith; Symphony No. 5, Beethoven.

Saturday, 8:15, Dr. Koussevitzky conducting: Symphony No. 3, Piston; Violin Concerto No. 1; Prokofieff (soloist, Isaac Stern); Symphony No. 1, Brahms.

Sunday, Aug. 1, 3:30, Milhaud, Symphony No. 2, Darius Milhaud conducting; Mahler, Symphony No. 2, with chorus, Ellabelle Davis, soprano, and Nan Merriman, mezzo-soprano; Leonard Bernstein conducting

The Milhaud symphony has been substituted for an originally scheduled Haydn symphony in next Sunday's program in recognition of the composer's presence at the Berkshire Music Center as guest composer.

The Boston Symphony will hold a public rehearsal next Saturday morning at 10 o'clock for the benefit of its pension fund. The following events will be held by the Berkshire Music Center:

Today, 10:30 a. m. Joan Brainerd, soprano; Tuesday, 4:30 Department V Small Choir; Wednesday, 4:30, Department V Orchestra; 8:15, Boston Conservatory Quartet, Schubert's quartet in A, "Trout" Quintet and Octet in F Friday, 8:15 Department II Orchestra.

As already announced, there will be an extensive benefit program on Tuesday evening, Aug. 3, for needy musicians in Europe, including demonstrations of the Center's activities at 6 o'clock and a concert by the Boston Symphony under Dr. Koussevitzky at 8 o'clock.

Information about tickets for the festival concerts and the benefit of Aug. 3 is obtainable from the Boston Symphony at Tanglewood. Information about other events is obtainable from the Berkshire Music Center.

Most volatile piece of programming was the C Major Symphony with which the concert opened. It was an energetic composition, handled to bring out sharp contrast between the overture theme and the delicacy of the andante for strings and bassoons in the second movement, closing with a repeating triplet melody.

The interesting orchestration of the Nacht Musique Serenade featuring two oboes, two clarinets, two horns and two bassoons, caused a buzz of comment through the concert hall audience. The arrangement, perhaps, was the best example of Mozart's own conception of private music by a small group, and offered almost modern syncopation by the wind instruments.

The E-flat Symphony, a familiar concert piece, showed Mozart at his peak as a creator of absolute music. The orchestra yesterday gave an especially pleasant reading of the waltz-like allegro, with its country-dance fiddle air above a heavy bass.

The Music Festival will continue tomorow night with an all-Bach program. All departments of the Berkshire Music Center will participate in a four-hour "Tanglewood On Parade" performance Aug. 3.

FZ

[191]

Full-Scale Berkshire Festival Opens Thursday at Tanglewood

By CYRUS DURGIN July 25

Another Berkshire Festival will begin next Thursday evening in the big, fan-shaped Music Shed at Tanglewood. This is another way of saying that Summer musical activity in the Eastern United States will then reach its peak, for there is no other concert series in this part of the country to compare with the Berkshire Festivals.

Over a period of years—interrupted by wartime suspension—~~Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra have developed~~ the Festivals into ~~a yearly artistic venture of the~~ greatest box office success and the highest artistic ~~importance.~~

That's a pretty speech, but it is true. There are the Lewisohn Stadium concerts in New York, with conductors coming and going and much trotting out of the familiar steeds of the symphonic stables. There are, too, the Robin Hood Dell concerts in Philadelphia, and the Watergate programs on the Potomac River in Washington, D. C. But only the Berkshire Festivals have the unity of style and the large-scale proportions which indicate a cultural activity of the first rank.

This season there will be more varied interest than ever before. That is well, because a few years back there were those who thought that the Berkshire concerts had become enmeshed in a policy of presenting only the familiar symphonic masterpieces. Then, thanks to Mr. Koussevitzky, Boris Goldovsky and the opera department of the allied Berkshire Music Center, ame Britten's opera "Peter Grimes." A year later followed the American premiere of Mozart's "Idomeneo," and the recognition that new paths lay ahead for the Festivals.

More Novelty This Year

This year there will be even more novelty, what with performances Vaughan Williams' Sixth Symphony new to this country, and of Rossini's forgotten opera "The Turk in Italy." We shall have, also, Milhaud's Second Symphony, with the composer conducting, Mahler's "Resurrection" Symphony, Prokofieff's First Violin Concerto, with the dexterous Isaac Stern as soloist, and the comparatively new and prize-winning Third Symphony by Walter Piston.

There will be other scores, too, well out of the pasturage of the old, familiar steeds, among them Prokofieff's Second Suite from "Romeo and Juliet" and Stravinsky's "Oedipus Rex." You may quote as you will the cynical (if partly true) aphorism that people know what they like and like only what they know. The fact remains, nevertheless, that no first-rate artistic enterprise ever survived solely—or much less progressed—on the standard items of musical merchandise.

This Summer Mr. Koussevitzky is sharing the heavy burden of preparation and performance with three of his conducting proteges: Leonard Bernstein, Robert Shaw and Eleazar de Carvalho. Here in Boston we long since knew the calibre of the gifted Mr. Bernstein's work. We have been introduced to the talents of Mr. de Carvalho. Mostly on records and by reason of news from elsewhere have we come to know the abilities of Robert Shaw, who has done such electrifying work with the Collegiate and RCA-Victor Chorales and at the Berkshire Music Centre.

Wise Course Followed

In relinquishing part of his Summer burden, Mr. Koussevitzky has followed the very wise course of gradually bringing forward the young men in whom he has faith and whom he has helped so generously and abundantly. The policy will bring us all future artistic returns.

This is the last Summer in which Mr. Koussevitzky will have full charge of the festival, although it is understood he will figure in guest appearances after the advent of Charles Munch as his successor at the helm of the Boston Symphony. It is to be hoped that the policy of bringing forward the younger conductors will be followed, all of course within the practical limits of the unified style of the festivals.

This article announced that the festival begins Thursday. Actually, according to the custom of the past few years, there have been programs by small orchestra, of the music of Bach and Mozart. But in the popular mind, the Berkshire Festivals really begin when the full numbers of the Boston Symphony assemble in the Music Shed. This afternoon and Tuesday evening the Mozart and Bach programs, respectively, will be repeated. The complete full-scale programs are as follows:

SERIES A

Thursday at 8:15—Bach: Suite in D major, No. 3; Hindemith: Symphony, "Mathis der Maler"; Beethoven: Fifth Symphony.

Saturday at 8:15—Piston: Third Symphony; Proflofieff: First Violin Concerto (Isaac Stern, soloist); Brahms: First Symphony.

Sunday, Aug. 1 at 3:30—Milhaud: Second Symphony (the composer conducting); Mahler: Symphony No. 2, "Resurrection" (Leonard Bernstein conducting; Ellabelle Davis, soprano, and Nan Merriman contralto soloists; the Berkshire Music Center Chorus).

SERIES B

Thursday, Aug. 5, at 8:15, Beethoven: "Pastoral" Symphony; Stravinsky: "Oedipus Rex" (Carol Brice, contralto; David Lloyd, tenor; James Pease, bass soloists; male chorus from the Berkshire Music Center); Wesley Addy, narrator).

Saturday, Aug. 7, at 8:15—Prokofieff: "Romeo and Juliet" Suite No. 2; Vaughan Williams; Sixth Symphony (first performance in America); Strauss: "Don Quixote" (Gregor Piatigorsky, soloist).

Sunday, Aug. 8, at 3:30.—Eleazar de Carvalho conducting; Berlioz: "Fantastic Symphony Villa-Lobos: "Madona; Falla: "El Amor Brujo" (Carol Brice, contralto, soloist); Siqueira: "Nordestina" Suite No. 1.

EXTRA CONCERT

Tuesday, Aug. 10, at 8:15. Tchaikovsky: "Pathetique" Symphony; First Piano Concerto (Seymour Lipkin, soloist); "1812 Overture."

SERIES C

Thursday, Aug. 12, at 8:15 Leonard Bernstein conducting. Weber: "Der Freischuetz" Overture; Stravinsky "Petrouchka" (complete); Shostakovich: Fifth Symphony.

Saturday, Aug. 14, at 8:15, Robert Shaw conducting. Debussy: "The Blessed Damozel" (Ellen Faull, soprano, a Eunice Alberts, contralto, soloists; fem chorus from the Berkshire Music Cen Brahms: "A German Requiem" (F Yeend, soprano, and Jam soloists; chorus Center)

HAWTHORNE HOUSE GIVEN TO BERKSHIRE MUSIC CENTER

The red cottage at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., where Nathaniel Hawthorne wrote "The House of Seven Gables." It has been restored by the National Federation of Music Clubs.

Mrs. Guy P. Gannett of Portland, Me., former president of the Federation, making the presentation to Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Center, at ceremonies Saturday.

3,200 AT TANGLEWOOD FOR MOZART CONCERT

LENOX, Mass., July 25 (AP)—An overflow throng of 3,200 turned out at Tanglewood today for a Mozart program by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Serge Konsevitzky. Filling the concert hall were 1,100 persons, while the remaining 2,100 heard the concert fro mthe terrace.

Lukas Foss, 24-year-old Berlin-born pianist and composer, was recalled to the platform five times after he played piano concerto in G major.

The orchestra opened today's program with Symphony in C Major and also performed the Serenade, "Eine Kleine Nacht Musick," and Symphony in E-flat Major.

The final concert of the Bach-Mozart series will be given Tuesday night when the Boston Symphony Orchestra will perform an all-Bach program.

Archibald MacLeish, the poet, will serve as chairman of "Tanglewood on Parade," the benefit which the Boston Symphony and the Berkshire Music Center will give on Tuesday, August 3, to aid the creative musicians of Europe.

Dr. Koussevitzky will be honored on his seventy-fourth birthday tomorrow by students and faculty members of the music center.

All-Mozart Program At Tanglewood

July 25

The intimate music of Mozart received sensitive treatment yesterday afternoon from the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in an all-Mozart program at Tanglewood.

An audience of 1,100 persons heard the program in the small concert hall, while 2,100 others listened through the open portals from their less formal seats on the grassy terrace outside the building.

Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, celebrating his 74th birthday today, seems to take new vigor with each summer season of festival concerts. His fine and unobtrusive conducting yesterday brought out a full richness from the small orchestra used for the Mozart compositions.

Yesterday's program consisted of the seldom-heard Symphony in C Major, the Salsburg Symphony; the piano concerto in G Major; an eight-instrument serenade for wind instruments from Eine Kleine Nacht Musique; and the E-flat Major Symphony.

Pianist Recalled Five Times

Lukas Foss, young Berlin-born pianist who was soloist for the G Major Concerto, was recalled five times after his exuberant performance. He and Dr. Koussevitsky appeared equally at ease with the lively concerto, in which orchestra and soloist treated listeners to charming counterplay.

Music -:-

By Edgar S. Van Olinda

AN ALL Mozart program will be given this afternoon at the Tanglewood Music Center at 3:30 o'clock in the theatre-concert hall. The smaller orchestra will be conducted by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the program will include the C-major symphony; Serenade for wind instruments; Concerto for piano with Lukas Foss, soloist, and Symphony in E-flat.

The first concert by the full Boston symphony in the great music shed will take place. Thursday night, July 29, conducted by Dr. Koussevitzky. The program consists of the Bach suite in D-major; The Hindemith symphony, "Mathis der Maler" and the Beethoven Symphony, No. 5 in C-minor.

* * *

The red cottage at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., where Nathaniel Hawthorne wrote his "Wonder Book" and "The House of the Seven Gables" has been restored by the National Federation of Music clubs and was dedicated yesterday at the Berkshire Music Center. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and director of the center, is shown in the little yard. Dr. Koussevitzky and Gregor Piatigorsky, the celebrated 'cellist, also a member of the faculty of the center, have their studios in the little red house which a young painter of Hawthorne's time called the "temple of art and the muses."

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
JUL 26 1948

MacLeish To Be Chairman For Tanglewood Benefit

Archibald MacLeish will be chairman for the "Tanglewood on Parade" benefit to be offered by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center on Tuesday evening, Aug. 3, for the assistance of creative musicians in Europe.

As already announced, the program begins at 6 o'clock with a parade of the center's 462 students, who will then demonstrate the various activities of the school. After an hour for a picnic supper, the second part of the program, titled the "Manifestation," will begin at 8 o'clock. Cornelia Otis Skinner will read Michael Drayton's "The Parting" and Shakespeare's twenty-ninth sonnet, "When in Disgrace." Maurice Evans, originally announced for this part of the benefit, will be unable to attend.

At 9:15, Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony in Johann Strauss's "Voices of Spring," Sibelius's "Valse Triste," Ravel's "La Valse," Beethoven's third "Leonore" overture and Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf," with Wesley Addy as narrator. Tickets for the demonstration, manifestation and concert are priced at $2.50. Those subscribing for reserved and box seats, at $4 and $5, will also be entitled to attend a performance of Menotti's "The Telephone" and scenes from other operas in the gardens at 4 o'clock.

Mr. MacLeish will introduce Miss Skinner, Aaron Copland, assistant director of the Berkshire Music Center, and the other speakers in the manifestation. This benefit marks the opening of a national campaign for the assistance of musicians in Europe. The national committee in charge will ask other orchestras to give benefits during the coming regular season.

This Clipping From
PORTLAND, ME.
SUNDAY TELEGRAM
JUL 25 1948

Home Of Hawthorne Becomes Music Shrine

National Music Clubs Present Little Red House To Berkshire Group

By Greta Kerr
(Staff Correspondent)

Lenox, Mass., July 24.—The National Federation of Music Clubs today formally presented the restored Nathaniel Hawthorne Little Red House to the Berkshire Music Center, the realization of a project envisioned eight years ago.

Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, director of the center, accepted the gift at the simple ceremonies. He designated it a shrine, "for it is restored by the congregate effort of many. So an altar is sanctified by countless offerings of prayers."

Speaking for the National Federation of Music Clubs, of which she is a past president, Mrs. Guy Patterson Gannett, Portland, Me., dedicated the house to "our aspirations for American youth."

"The Little Red House is yours—or rather ours," she told Dr. Koussevitsky and trustees of the Music Center. "It is ours together, a tangible evidence of our mutual determination to give expression to our loftiest principles through the medium of music."

The house will be used as studios for advance music students at the festival school. Its restoration, first planned in 1942, was interrupted by World War II.

Referring to the part Mrs. Gannett had played in restoration of the building, Dr. Koussevitsky said:

"Is not this a tangible sign of the flame of inspiration that lighted the heart of a great American woman, who set the spark to a group large enough to spread over the nation? It is to this initial thought of Mrs. Gannett, her relentless and active efforts, her loving care and the cooperation of the federation of which she was president that we owe the beautiful replica of Hawthorne's cottage, adapted for the use of the Berkshire Music Center—truly a shrine to the patron saint of Tanglewood.

Commends Mrs. Gannett

"On this memorable day, we gratefully acknowledge the gift of the Little Red House by the National Federation of Music Clubs.

"To Mrs. Gannett goes our tribute to her we express our admiration and gratitude in words engraved on this address, as they are engraved in our hearts," Dr. Koussevitzky concluded as he read a tribute from the Berkshire group.

That commendation, signed by Dr. Koussevitsky, Henry B. Cabot, president, Boston Symphony Orchestra, Inc., Lewis Perry, chairman. Berkshire Music Center, and friends of the group, was as follows:

"To Mrs. Guy Patterson Gannett, with gratitude from the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, and the friends and faculty of the Berkshire Music Center. She had the vision and the courage to make the Little Red House, the home of Nathaniel Hawthorne, in reality what it was called in 1850, the Temple of the Art and the Muses.

"Here Hawthorne wrote the House Of The Seven Gables. Through Mrs. Gannett and the National Federation of Music Clubs, music is now joined with literature to create in the words of Serge Koussevitzky, a temple of rare beauty, a living hope, a beacon in the night. To Mrs. Gannett we owe not only the hope for the union of music and literature, but that larger hope which would have been shared by Nathaniel Hawthorne for the union of art and democracy."

Another tribute received by Mrs. Gannett was in the form of a telegram from Mrs. Margaret Chase Smith, Republican nominee from Maine for the U. S. Senate. Her message said: "Congratulations on your admirable contribution to the field of music. The Little Red House represents a most worthy achievement."

The ceremony was held on the grounds of the house which has been rebuilt on its original foundations and was occupied by Hawthorne in 1851 The spirit of the author was recalled when his only living great-grandson to bear the family name, Manning Hawthorne of North Woodstock, Conn., spoke briefly of his pleasure that the former home of his illustrious great-grandfather will again serve the youth of the country. Making the bond between the past and the present even stronger was the presence of Henry Wadsworth Longfellow Dana of Cambridge, Mass., who told of the lifelong friendship of his great-grandfather and Hawthorne, which began when both were members of the same class at Bowdoin College in Brunswick, Me.

Another nationally known figure in the musical world to have a part in the program was Mrs. Royden J. Keith of Chicago, president of the National Federation of Music Clubs, who at the beginning of her administration named Mrs. Gannett national chairman of the committee on the Little Red House.

Every State Shared

Every State has had a part in the raising of the $15,000 necessary to restore the house which had been leveled by fire in 1890. Nearly 1.000 contributors are listed in the red leather bound book which contains the permanent record. Innumerable gifts have been received for its furnishings. To the generosity of the public in support of this project Mrs. Gannett payed glowing tribute as she recalled the difficulties of continuing it through the war years. "The obstacles have been overcome and the Little Red House is here, just as red as it was when Nathaniel Hawthorne lived in it, wrote his Wonder Book, and fussed about the awful New England climate," she recounted.

The exterior of the house is an exact replica of the original building. Two old prints still in existence were followed in detail and reference to letters written by the Hawthornes in which they described the house and gardens provided many of the details. Even the rail fence has been replaced, the old well uncovered after years of disuse, and the new pump is an exact reproduction of the old one. The old rose bush still climbs over the boulder which contains the original marker of the house. Ultimately the grounds will be replanted exactly as they were described by Mrs. Hawthorne in letters to her mother which Julian Hawthorne published in his book on the family's Tanglewood [illegible].

Mrs. Gannett enumerated several gifts made to the house by admirers of Hawthorne because in a sense it will be a literary shrine.

The Hawthorne Club of Canaan, Conn., has sent a complete set of Hawthorne's works; Bowdoin College alumni have made contributions; the Rossini Club of Portland, Me., has given the fittings for the two laboratories; Mrs. Ada Holding Miller of Providence, R. I., contributed the antique fire set; Mr. and Mrs. Russell Taylor Hatch of Melrose, have presented antique chairs, a secretary for the reception room, the silver service, and several pieces of flat silver. Among other gifts listed by Mrs. Gannett in her talk were the small painting of the original Little Red House and the complete insulation of the new house.

"It is because of these gifts, because of the loyalty and enthusiasm of our membership," Mrs. Gannett continued, "that I have today the great pleasure and supreme honor of turning over to the Berkshire Music Center trustees this Little Red House, which represents the fruition of six years of hopes and dreams. I do so with a fervent wish that it may, for long years to come, furnish a haven for faculty and students alike, and that it may become so integrated into your program that it will play an important part in the life of the school.

"The Little Red House is a symbol of our aspirations for the American youth and our desire to help realize those aspirations — the aspirations which Dr. Koussevitzky revealed to me six years ago, and which he has brought to rich realization through giving the young people of this and many other countries the finest musical education obtainable — and with this education, the lofty idealism which can come only from things of the spirit."

The dedication ceremony was but a part of the program which began Friday evening with a concert by the advanced student orchestra with Dr. Koussevitzky conducting and Adele Addison as soloist.

Immediately following the ceremony a musical program was held in the Chamber Music Hall, with LuCretia Ferre, soprano, Robert Allen cellist, and Martha Butler, contralto, as soloists, and with duets by the Misses Ferre and Butler. All three young persons are winners of the National Federation of Music Clubs Scholarships for Tanglewood, 1948.

The remainder of the day's program included a recital tonight in Sedgwick Hall by Paula Lenchner, dramatic soprano, 1945 Young Artist winner of the National Federation of Music Clubs and a member of the Metropolitan Opera Company.

Other Honor Guests

Other honor guests at the ceremony were Mrs. Edgar Stillman Kelly of New York, a past National president, Mrs. John Monty of Gatineau Mills, Quebec, formerly of Maine, who was here in her first official capacity as president of the new Canadian Federation of Music Clubs, and 90 year old Mrs. Charles Evans of New Haven, Conn. Mrs. Evans made a special pilgrimage to the dedication in memory of her daughter Etelka Evans, who when the rebuilding of the little red house was first suggested by Mrs. Gannett at a board meeting in Providence, R. I., made the first gift, an ember from the original house after the fire.

More than 130 guests attended the picnic luncheon at Tanglewood preceding the dedication.

The interior of the house as restored bears not the least semblance to the original house as occupied by the Hawthornes nearly a century ago. The entrance remains the same. The door opens into a tiny hall which connects the ell, probably the original kitchen but now the parlor, with the main house, in which are located the two soundproof studios. These are used by Dr. Koussevitzky and Igor Piataigorsky, cellist, for their advanced students. The rooms each seat 35. Both are pinepaneled to the tops of the first story windows, the studios extending the full story and a half. Stone fireplaces are in each room, and in one are the original firetongs found in the debris of the old cellar. These were duplicated in a new fireplace set and presented to the house by Mrs. Ada Holding Miller of Providence, R. I. One wall of each studio has open shelves for music and manuscripts and the only furnishings are the grand pianos.

The connecting hallway contains a small antique chest and mirror as its only furnishings. Braided and hooked rugs cover the floor of the parlor which contains several of the special gifts, among which are the secretary with the Hawthorne books; a marble-topped table, the gift of Miss Louise Armstrong of Portland, Me., a love seat and chair of the early empire period, gifts of Mrs. Earl Stevenson of Newton, Mass., the silver tea service, and pastel watercolors, done by the grandmother of the late Mrs. Arthur Hepburn, donor of much of the music center property. Her grandmother was Mrs. Richard C. Dixey who as the 17-year old Ellen Sturgis Tappan, did the paintings of the little red house, the

Lenox station, the pond in Wi and various Tanglewood scenes.
A modern kitchenette and pow room occupy the remaining space
On Sunday the week end progr of dedication will be concluded wh the guests attend a chamber mu concert in the morning, with Jo Brainerd, 1947 young artist winn of the National Federation as so ist, and the Berkshire Festival C cert by the Boston Symphony C chestra, Dr. Koussevitzky conductin in the afternoon.

3200 Throng

Continued from Page 1

wood Tuesday night when the Boston Symphony Orchestra will render all-Bach program.

MacLeish Chairman

Poet Archibald MacLeish will serve as chairman of "Tanglewood on Parade," the benefit which the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center will perform Tuesday, Aug. 3, for the creative musicians of Europe.

Dr. Koussevitzky will be honored on his 74th birthday tomorrow by students and faculty members of the Berkshire Music Center.

Although he has announced his resignation as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra after the 1948-49 season, he will continue as director of the music center.

This Clipping From ELMIRA, N. Y.
TELEGRAM
JUL 25 1948

World of Music

Benefit Listed For European Musicians

United Press

New York—(UP)—A four-hour benefit to help the needy musicians of Europe will be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass., on Aug. 3.

The main event will be a concert by the orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky. Maurice Evans and Cornelia Otis Skinner will appear in Shakespearean excerpts. Under the title of "Tanglewood on Parade," there will be simultaneous performances in their various buildings by all departments of the Berkshire Music Center—orchestra, choral, operative and chamber music.

* * *

While it is early to forecast the plans of the Metropolitan Opera for the coming season, it is reported that General Manager Edward Johnson plans a revival of Verdi's "Falstaff," with Leonard Warren, baritone, in the title role. The opera, in an English version, was last heard at the Metropolitan in the 1943-44 season.

* * *

3200 Throng Tanglewood To Hear Mozart Program

Jul 26 Springfield Repub

Boston Symphony Orchestra Directed by Dr. Koussevitzky; Lucas Foss Recalled Five Times

Lenox, July 25 (AP)—An overflow crowd of 3200 turned out at Tanglewood today for a Mozart program by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

Eleven hundred filled the concert hall while the remaining 2100 heard the concert from the terrace.

Foss Recalled Five Times

Lukas Foss, 24-year-old Berlin-born pianist and composer, was recalled to the platform five times after he played "Piano Concerto in G Major."

The orchestra opened today's program with "Symphony in C Major" and also performed the serenade "Nacht Musique" and "Symphony in E-Flat Major."

The final concert of the Bach-Mozart series will be given at Tangle-

Continued on Page 7

INFORMATION OBSCURED

ation, the pond in Winter us Tanglewood scenes.
rn kitchenette and powder
py the remaining space.
day the week end program will be concluded when attend a chamber music
the morning, with Joan 1947 young artist winner ional Federation as solo-e Berkshire Festival Cone Boston Symphony Or-
. Koussevitzky conducting,
ernoon.

SIC SHRINE—Scenes as the former home of Nathorne at Tanglewood was presented as a music shrine ire Music Center by the National Federation of Music left, the first meeting in the Little Red House, that England District of the National Federation of Music at front, left to right, are Mrs. Russell Taylor Hatch
New England District president, Mrs. Royden J. Keith National president, and Mrs. Guy Patterson Gannett immediate Past President. The studio is customarily Grego Piatigorsky and his students in strings. At up-interior, the living room with its fine old mahogany Lower left, Mrs. Royden J. Keith of Chicago, President Federation steps through the door on her initial Little Red House. Lower right, exterior view of the with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky in the yard.

TYPICAL AFTERNOON SCENE
— LEFT —

Seated in the immense music shed or lounging on the spacious lawns, music lovers from all over the world come to Tanglewood for the ever-popular music series.

ALSO FROM SPRINGFIELD of Stearns Terrace, violinist, and Frances Kleinerman of Meadowbrook dow, a member of the chorus, are taking the summer course at the Berk-Center.

[194]

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD-TIMES
JUL 26 1948

Musician Observes Birthday

LENOX, July 26 (UP)—Serge Koussevitzky, retiring conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, celebrated his 74th birthday today at Tanglewood, famed Berkshire music center where he yesterday directed his orchestra in a Mozart program before a capacity audience of 3,200.

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE
JUL 26 1948

Program Near End At Tanglewood

LENOX, July 26—With the dedication of Hawthorne's "Little Red Cottage," on Saturday afternoon, and the repeat performances of the Mozart and Bach programs yesterday afternoon and tomorrow evening, the preliminary events at Tanglewood will draw to a close.

LEONARD BERNSTEIN
In Tanglewood concerts

The first of three series of concerts by the full Boston Symphony under Serge Koussevitzky and Leonard Bernstein will begin on Thursday evening.

The opening concert (Koussevitzky conducting) will be Bach's "Suite in D major, No. 3," Symphony, "Mathis der Maler" by Hindemith, are Beethoven's "Symphony No. 5, in C minor."

Isaac Stern will appear Saturday night as violin soloist in Prokofieff's "Concerto No. 1." Dr. Koussevitzky will also conduct Piston's "Symphony No. 3," and Brahms' "Symphony No. 1 in C minor.

The concluding concert of the first series will be conducted by Bernstein. The main work will be Mahler's "Symphony No. 2 (Resurrection)" for orchestra and chorus. Soloists will be Ellabelle Davis, Soprano, and Nan Merriman, contralto. This Sunday afternoon concert and the preceding two will take place in the Shed.

Attended by 300

The dedication of the Hawthorne cottage was attended by 300 members of the National Federation of Music Clubs which contributed the building for much- needed teaching and practice studios.

Mrs. Guy Patterson Gannett, former president of the federation made the presentation. In accepting the restored building where Nathaniel Hawthorne wrote "The Wonder Book" and "The House of the Seven Gables," Dr. Koussevitzky referred to it as "an altar sanctified by countless offerings of prayers."

Mrs. Gannett, who is personally responsible for the project, was paid the following tribute jointly by Henry B. Cabot, president of the Boston Symphony, Dr. Koussevitzky and Lewis Perry, chairman, Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

"She had the vision and the courage to make the Little Red House, the home of Nathaniel Hawthorne, in reality what it was called, 'The Temple of Art and the Muses.' Through Mrs. Gannett and the National Federation of Music Clubs, music is now joined with literature to create in the words of Serge Koussevitzky, 'A temple of rare beauty, a living hope, a beacon in the night.' To Mrs. Gannett we owe not only the hope for the union of music and literature, but that larger hope which would have been shared by Nathaniel Hawthorne for the union of art and democracy."

Representing Worcester at these ceremonies was Mrs. Phyllis Lations Hanson, editor of the official publication, junior division of the federation, also C. Arthur Hanson, special member.

Will Be Honored

This afternoon, Dr. Koussevitzky will be honored at a 76th birthday celebration. Approximately 600 members of the faculty, students, and friends of the Berkshire Music Center will attend the affair, which will be held in the beautiful Tanglewood gardens.

Soon to be displayed in Tanglewood's new reception building at the main entrance will be a valuable collection of original manuscripts by famous composers. Special cases are being constructed and they will be kept under constant guard.

Walter Schatzki provided the items which are headed by a portfolio of Mozart manuscripts. They include two serenades, one piece for two violins and orchestra, and the famous "Haffner Serenade"—value $27,500.

The Boston Symphony is currently showing composers' autographs and old musical instruments from the Casadesus and Boaz Piller collections, at the Berkshire Museum in Pittsfield.

In this display are such choice items as a combined flute and walking stick presented by Voltaire to Frederick the Great of Prussia, original manuscripts by Gluck, Sibelius, Cesar Franck, Mendelssohn, Tschaikowsky, and many others.

Many Worcester residents are registered among the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center among them Mrs. Chandler Bul-

---

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
JUL 26 1948

Tanglewood

Overflow Audience
Hears Paula Lenchner

An overflow audience heard the recital by Paula Lenchner, Metropolitan Opera Company soprano, at Sedgwick Hall, Lenox, Saturday evening. The National Federation of Music Clubs, whose 1945 young artist award Miss Lenchner won, presented her concert to the public as a part of their dedication of the Hawthorne cottage.

Miss Lenchner sang to an enthusiastic audience a group of Schubert songs, one of French, one of American and one of modern German. Her accompanist was Felix Wolfes of the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center.

This Clipping From
DANBURY, CONN.
NEWS-TIMES
JUL 24 1948

BECOMES MUSIC STUDIO

Lenox, Mass., July 24 (AP)—The one time cottage home of unmusical Nathaniel Hawthorne yesterday was turned over to the Berkshire musical center as a practice studio for students.

For the next two days musicians from 15 states and Canada will honor the novelist who once said he couldn't tell "Yankee Doodle" from "Hail Columbia." Hawthorne lived in the cottage in 1850 and 1851.

Taking part in the celebration is famed Boston symphony conductor Serge Koussevitzky who founded the musical center here.

The National Federation of Music Clubs started nearly 10 years ago to restore the little red house.

Mrs. Guy Patterson Gannett of Portland, Me., then federation president, has worked since then to restore the cottage, which was fireswept in 1890.

At the formal dedication today she will present the cottage to the Berkshire music center.

Among the 100 officers and members of the National Federation of Music Clubs attending are Mrs. Royden J. Keith of Chicago, the president, and Mrs. John Monty of Mills, Que., head of the Canadian federation.

This Clipping From
NEW ROCHELLE, N. Y.
STANDARD STAR
JUL 26 1948

Heimlichs In Berkshires For Music Festival

Mr. and Mrs. Milton Heimlich of 26 Myrtle Boulevard, Larchmont, have left to attend the Berkshire Music Festival at Lenox, Mass. They will be present at a rehearsal for the Bach-Mozart Chamber Music Festival preceding the main festival, and will visit the music analysis classes of Aaron Copeland.

Mr. and Mrs. Heimlich will visit choral reherasals by Robert Shaw and Hugh Ross, under whom Mrs. Heimlich studied conducting in 1944 and 1945, and will attend symphonic rehearsals by Leonard Bernstein and Serge Koussevitsky. They will also hear Ella Belle Davis of New Rochelle sing the Mahler Symphony, and will visit her following the performance.

From the Berkshires, Mr. and Mrs. Heimlich will spend two weeks mountain climbing in Keene Valley, N. Y., and will stay for three weeks at Fire Island before returning home after Labor Day.

Mrs. Heimlich is music supervisor at the Windward School in White Plains. Mr. Heimlich is a member of the Board of Directors of the Council for Unity of New Rochelle.

CLUB LISTS EVENT

This Clipping From
ROCHESTER, N. Y.
DEMOCRAT-CHRONICLE
JUL 26 1948

3,200 Applaud Concert

LENOX, MASS.—(AP)—An overflow crowd of 3,200 turned out at Tanglewood yesterday for a Mozart program by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Eleven hundred filled the concert hall while the remaining 2,100 heard the concert from the terrace.

Lukas Foss, 24-year-old Berlin-born pianist and composer, was recalled to the platform five times after he played "Piano Concerto in G Major."

The orchestra opened yesterday's program with "Symphony in C Major" and also performed the serenade "Eine Kleine Nacht Musick" and "Symphony in E-Flat Major."

The final concert of the Bach-Mozart series will be given at Tanglewood tomorrow night when the Boston Symphony Orchestra will play an all-Bach program.

Poet Archibald MacLeish will serve as chairman of "Tanglewood on Parade," the benefit which the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center will perform Tuesday, Aug. 3, for the creative musicians of Europe.

Dr. Koussevitzky will be honored on his 74th birthday today by students and faculty members of the Berkshire music center.

Although he has announced his resignation as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra after the 1948-49 season, he will continue as director of the Music Center.

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
AMERICAN
JUL 26 1948

All-Mozart Program At Tanglewood

The intimate music of Mozart received sensitive treatment yesterday afternoon from the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in an all-Mozart program at Tanglewood.

An audience of 1,100 persons heard the program in the small concert hall, while 2,100 others listened through the open portals from their less formal seats on the grassy terrace outside the building.

Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, celebrating his 74th birthday today, seems to take new vigor with each summer season of festival concerts. His fine and unobtrusive conducting yesterday brought out a full richness from the small orchestra used for the Mozart compositions.

Yesterday's program consisted of the seldom-heard Symphony in C Major, the Salsburg Symphony; the piano concerto in G Major; an eight-instrument serenade for wind instruments from Eine Kleine Nacht Musique; and the E-flat Major Symphony.

Pianist Recalled
Five Times

Lukas Foss, young Berlin-born pianist who was soloist for the G Major Concerto, was recalled five times after his exuberant performance. He and Dr. Koussevitsky appeared equally at ease with the lively concerto, in which orchestra and soloist treated listeners to charming counterplay.

Most volatile piece of programming was the C Major Symphony with which the concert opened. It was an energetic composition, handled to bring out sharp contrast between the overture theme and the delicacy of the andante for strings and bassoons in the second movement, closing with a repeating triplet melody.

The interesting orchestration of the Nacht Musique Serenade featuring two oboes, two clarinets, two horns and two bassoons, caused a buzz of comment through the concert hall audience. The arrangement, perhaps, was the best example of Mozart's own conception of private music by a small group, and offered almost modern syncopation by the wind instruments.

The E-flat Symphony, a familiar concert piece, showed Mozart at his peak as a creator of absolute music. The orchestra yesterday gave an especially pleasant reading of the waltz-like allegro, with its country-dance fiddle air above a heavy bass.

The Music Festival will continue tomorow night with an all-Bach program. All departments of the Berkshire Music Center will participate in a four-hour "Tanglewood On Parade" performance Aug. 3.

FZ

This Clipping From BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
TELEGRAM
JUL 26 1948

MOZART PROGRAM FILLS TANGLEWOOD

LENOX, Mass., July 25—(AP) An overflow crowd of 3,200 turned out at Tanglewood today for a Mozart program by the Boston Symphony orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

Eleven hundred filled the concert hall while the remaining 2,100 heard the concert from the terrace.

Lukas Foss, 24-year-old Berlin-born pianist and composer, was recalled to the platform five times after he played "Piano Concerto in G Major."

The orchestra opened today's program with "Symphony in C Major" and also performed the serenade "Nacht Musique" and "Symphony in E-Flat Major."

The final concert of the Bach-Mozart series will be given at Tanglewood Tuesday night when the Boston Symphony orchestra will render all-Bach program.

Poet Archibald MacLeish will serve as chairman of "Tanglewood on Parade," the benefit which the Boston Symphony orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center will perform Aug. 3, for the creative musicians of Europe.

Dr. Koussevitzky will be honored on his 74th birthday tomorrow by students and faculty members of the Berkshire Music Center.

Although he has announced his resignation as conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra after the 1948-49 season, he will continue as director of the Music Center.

DAYTONA BEACH, FLA.
JOURNAL
JUL 26 1948

Hawthorne Home To Music Center

LENOX, Mass.—(AP)—The onetime Berkshire Hills home of Nathaniel Hawthorne, famed novelist of the 19th century, yesterday was presented to the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood.

The presentation was made to Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, director of the Center and conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He called the little red house a shrine to service music and the arts.

Mrs. Guy Patterson Gannett of Portland, Me., former president of the National Federation of Music Clubs, made the presentation on behalf of the Federation. She said she conceived the idea of restoring Hawthorne's home in 1942 while she was Federation president.

Springfield
July 25

STUDY HOUR

— LEFT —

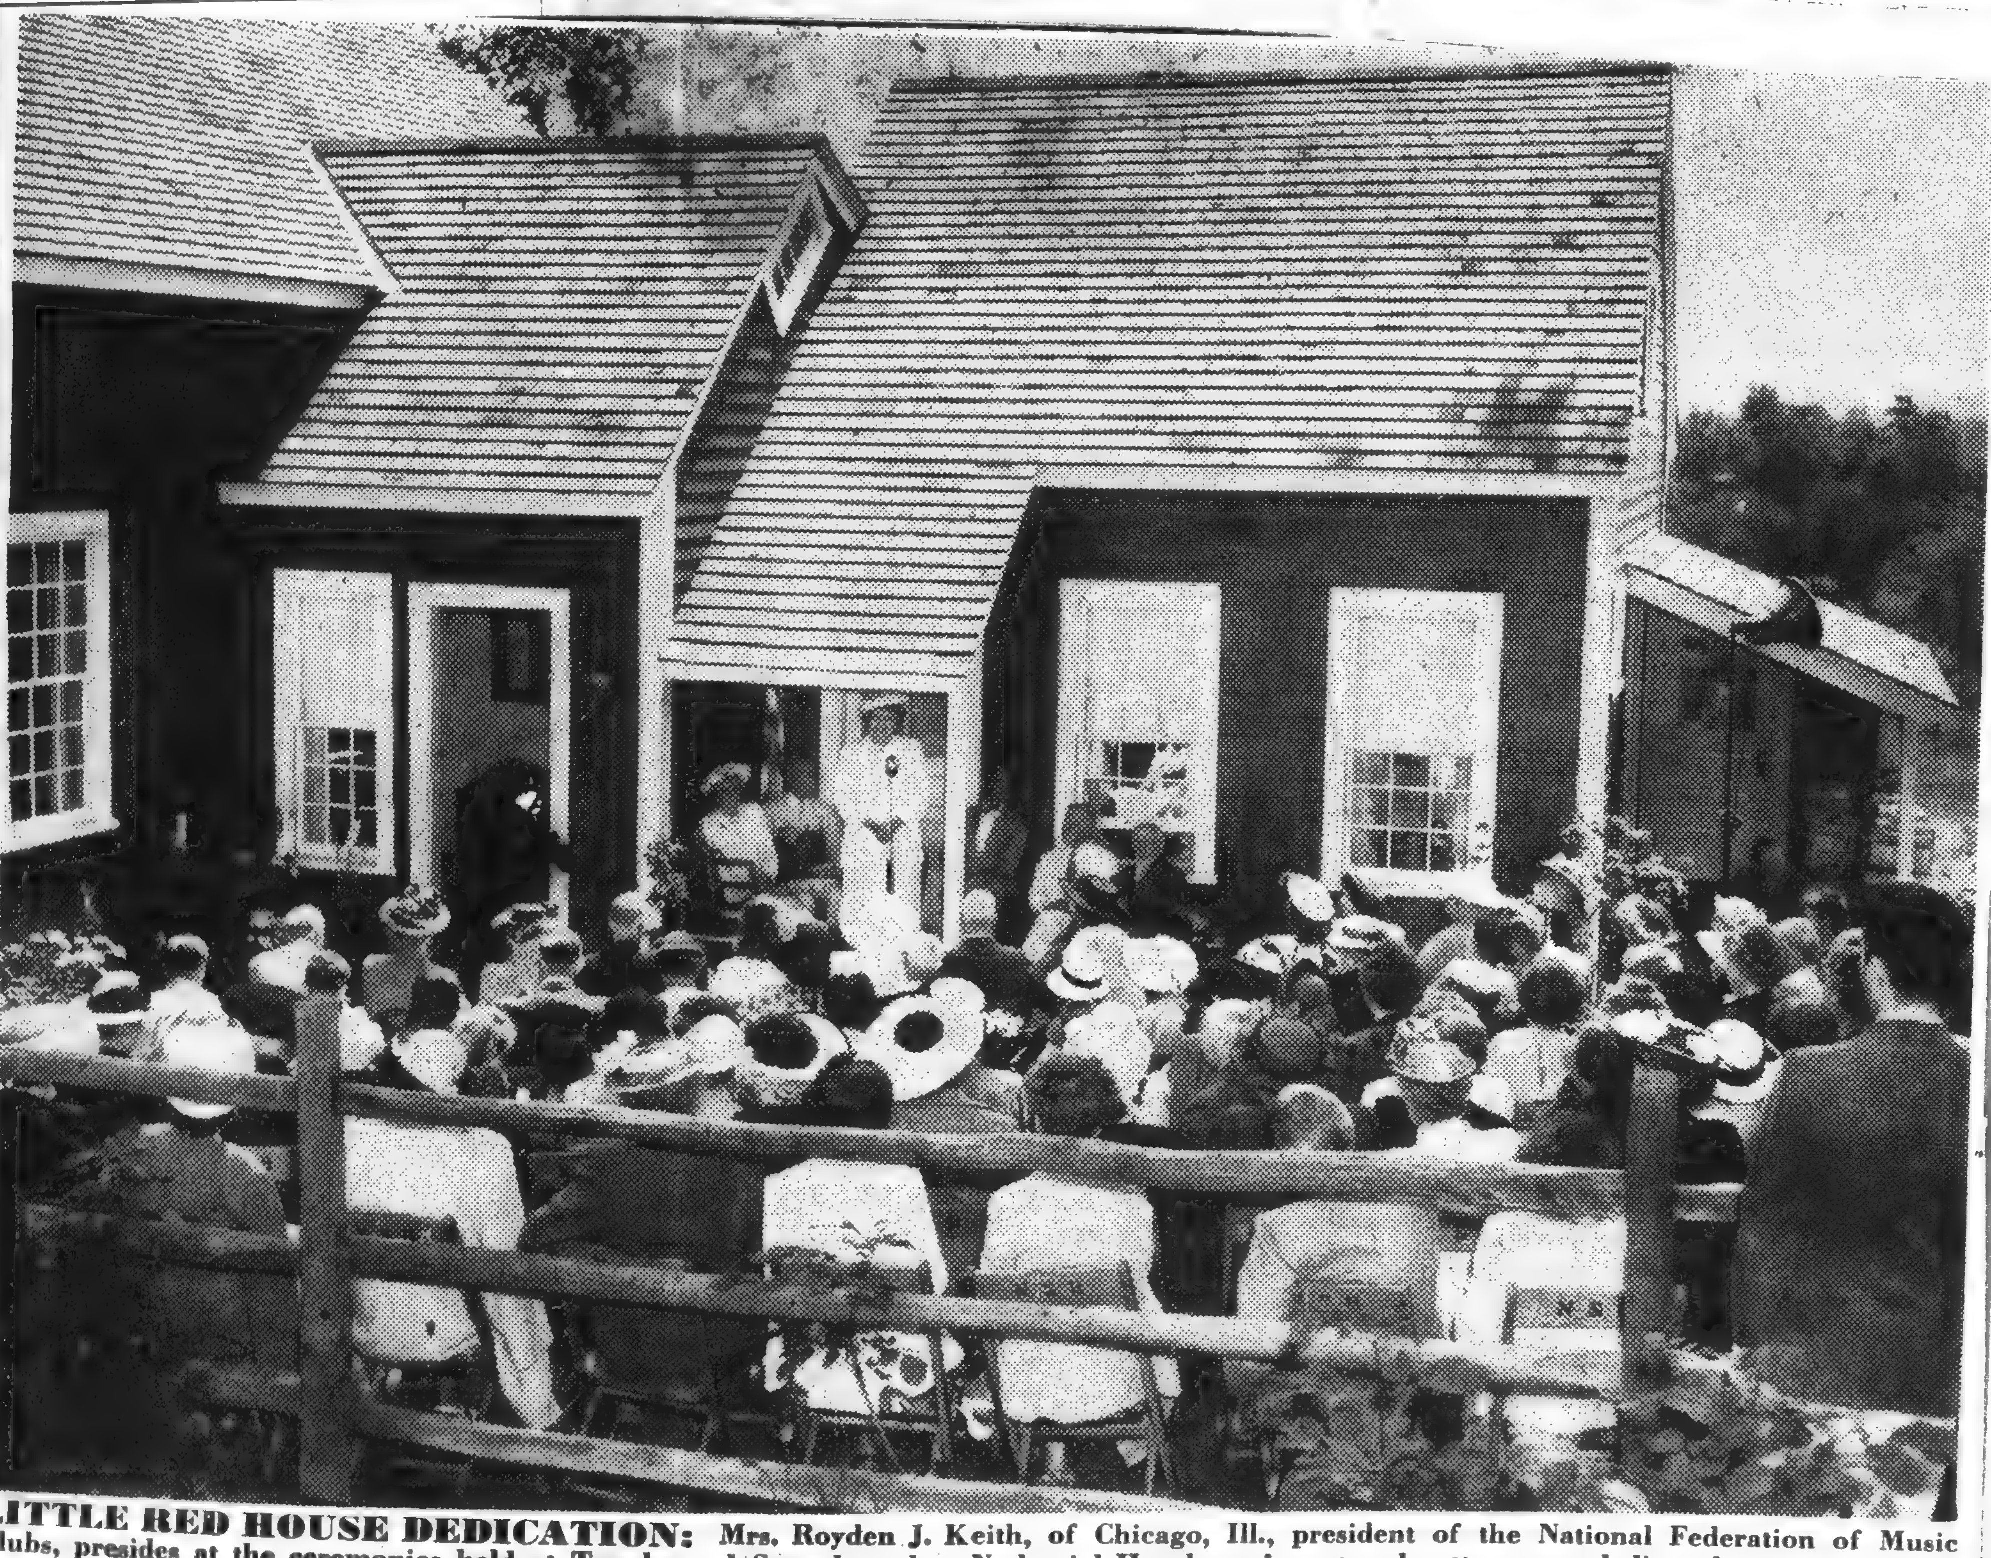
Adele Addison, soprano, a pupil at the Berkshire Music Center, was soloist with the Student Orchestra at the Hawthorne dedication ceremonies. Miss Addison was the New England district winner of the 1947 Paul LaValle Scholarship and has been a student at the Center for the past two seasons.

INFORMAL POSE

— RIGHT —

Dr. and Mrs. Serge Koussevitsky were snapped by the cameraman at a reception held a few weeks ago at the Center. Although Dr. Koussevitsky announced his retirement as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the conclusion of the 1948-49 season, he will continue to play the all-important part of director at the Music Center.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
JUL 26 19



LITTLE RED HOUSE DEDICATION: Mrs. Royden J. Keith, of Chicago, Ill., president of the National Federation of Music Clubs, presides at the ceremonies held at Tanglewood Saturday when Nathaniel Hawthorne's restored cottage was dedicated as a "temple to serve music and the arts." Delegates from music clubs in 15 states were in the audience for the exercises. Seated near Mrs. Keith are, left to right, Mrs. Guy Patterson Gannett of Portland, Me., former federation president and chairman of the Little Red House committee, who presented the restored cottage to the Berkshire Music Center; Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, who acknowledged the gift and presented Mrs. Gannett a framed testimonial for her work in restoring the house; Manning Hawthorne, great-grandson of the novelist; Henry Wadsworth Longfellow Dana, grandson of the poet, and Richard Manning, a cousin of Hawthorne.

This Clipping From
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
JUL 26 1948

Koussevitzky Feted On 74th Birthday

Leads Boston Symphony Orchestra in All Mozart Program Before 3,200 at Tanglewood — Given Tea.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, who yesterday led the Boston Symphony orchestra in an all-Mozart program heard by an overflow audience of 3,200 at Tanglewood, observed his 74th birthday at the famed music center.

Dr. Koussevitzky was guest of honor at a party given by the faculty and students of the Berkshire Music center at Lenox, where he will continue as director following his resignation as conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra after the 1948-49 season.

The throng which filled the concert hall and overflowed on the terrace yesterday was especially appreciative of the work of Lukas Foss, 24-year old Berlin-born pianist and conductor. He was recalled to the platform five times after his presentation of the "Piano Concerto in G Major."

Also heard on the Mozart program yesterday were "Symphony in C Major," "Nacht Musique," and "Symphony in E Flat Major." The final concert in the Bach-Mozart series will be given tomorrow night, when the Boston Symphony orchestra will present an all-Bach program.

The orchestra also will present a program, "Tanglewood on Parade," on Tuesday, Aug. 3, for the benefit of the creative musicians of Europe. Archibald MacLeish, noted poet and former librarian of Congress, will be chairman of the program.

BLUFFTON, IND.
NEWS-BANNER
JUL 26 1948

HAPPY BIRTHDAY

Happy birthday to George Bernard Shaw, Irish playwright and wit; to Aldous Huxley, author, and Serge Koussevitsky, orchestra conductor.

Tanglewood Tales, Or Youth Makes Music

In the Berkshires, young talent and great teachers constitute both festival and school.

By HOWARD TAUBMAN

THE scene is Tanglewood, a gracious 400-acre estate between Lenox and Stockbridge in Massachusetts looking down on Lake Makheenac, which is cupped tranquilly by the rolling Berkshire Hills. Here Nathaniel Hawthorne lived a long time ago and wrote "The House of the Seven Gables" and imagined "Tanglewood Tales." Here the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky, its conductor, have been taking part in the Berkshire Festival for almost a decade, a festival that has become a national institution and achieved international fame.

The time is morning, any morning in recent weeks. This is not festival time; the main phase of the festival—the concerts by the Boston Symphony—will begin next Thursday evening. Then audiences of 8,000 and more for each concert will sit under the graceful Music Shed with its sides open to grass, trees, heavens and breezes and will spill over onto surrounding lawns under canopy of sky and stars, listening to great music by composers of days gone by and of today.

But this is an ordinary morning between July 5 and Aug. 15. There is no buzz and turmoil of a festival throng. The business in hand is largely that of the Berkshire Music Center, which, like the festival, is concerned with music. The accent, however, is not on polishing performances for a knowing, exigent audience but on enlarging the musical horizons of 462 young men and women who will help to lead the nation musically in years to come. The Center is Mr. Koussevitzky's brain-child, pet and constant concern; it is his proudest creation in more than a half century of toil and creative leadership in the world of music.

BEFORE you begin to wander around Tanglewood on this ordinary morning of the Center's six-week session and get the feel of its far-flung activities, it might be well to find out what the Center is. It is not, in the exact sense, a school, though Tanglewood on a fine morning looks like a college campus. The Center has no charter, license or certification, and it awards no degrees, diplomas, credits or certificates of merit. A unique institution, it has no parallel in this country or in Europe. If it resembles anything, it is like a seminar and laboratory of music rolled into one.

On this ordinary morning, if you wander into the Music Shed, you will find an orchestra of about one hundred young men and women on the stage. The men may outnumber the women by a shade, but you will notice that the girls are in every section of the ensemble; they play fiddles and 'cellos and bullfiddles and they blow on woodwinds and brasses. In the first violin section there is a Chinese boy. One of the first-desk 'cellists is a Negro lad. The concertmaster is a visitor from Palestine. The orchestra is a sound cross-section of the Center's enrollment, which is drawn this year from forty-two states, the District of Columbia, Alaska and fifteen foreign countries on four continents. Like the Center itself, it represents the democracy of the "One World" concept.

ONE of the three student conductors, specially chosen by Mr. Koussevitzky himself from 150 applicants for study directly with him, takes his place on the podium. He has studied the score he will rehearse—by himself and in a private session with Mr. Koussevitzky. Now he will try to convey his ideas to an orchestra of his peers. On the stage are various members of the Boston Symphony who are acting as teachers and who watch the work of their charges. Mr. Koussevitzky sits behind the conductor, and with him are Leonard Bernstein and Eleazar de Carvalho, two of the most gifted products of the Center of other years, who are now acting as Mr. Koussevitzky's aides.

Players and teachers are dressed informally but not sloppily. Slacks, shorts or halters for the girls are out; they must wear dresses. The men must have on shirts and trousers; bare chests and shorts are forbidden. It is Mr. Koussevitzky's conviction that a musician must look neat as well as play neatly and cleanly. A young violinist appeared one morning some seasons ago to rehearse a concerto with his shirt-tails flying in the breeze, and he was informed firmly that this was not Tanglewood style.

On this morning of our visit Mr. Koussevitzky himself is the very mirror of smart, informal attire. He has on a light brown tweed jacket, darker brown slacks, light brown bow tie, a white cap, white gloves and a white scarf, and a light brown topcoat is thrown over his shoulders. At no point during the session does he remove his cap, gloves or scarf, though he throws the coat off when he becomes very active.

The young conductor gives the cue to the orchestra. He stops and corrects it. He resumes playing. Then Mr. Koussevitzky makes a suggestion. The playing goes on. Mr. Bernstein puts in a word to the conductor. Mr. de Carvalho stands behind the bullfiddles to watch orchestra and student conductor. As the ensemble plays Mr. Koussevitzky stands beside the violins or sits down among the 'cellos. He tells the string players that he does not wish to curb their natural enthusiasm "but use your bows economically and you'll get more out of this passage."

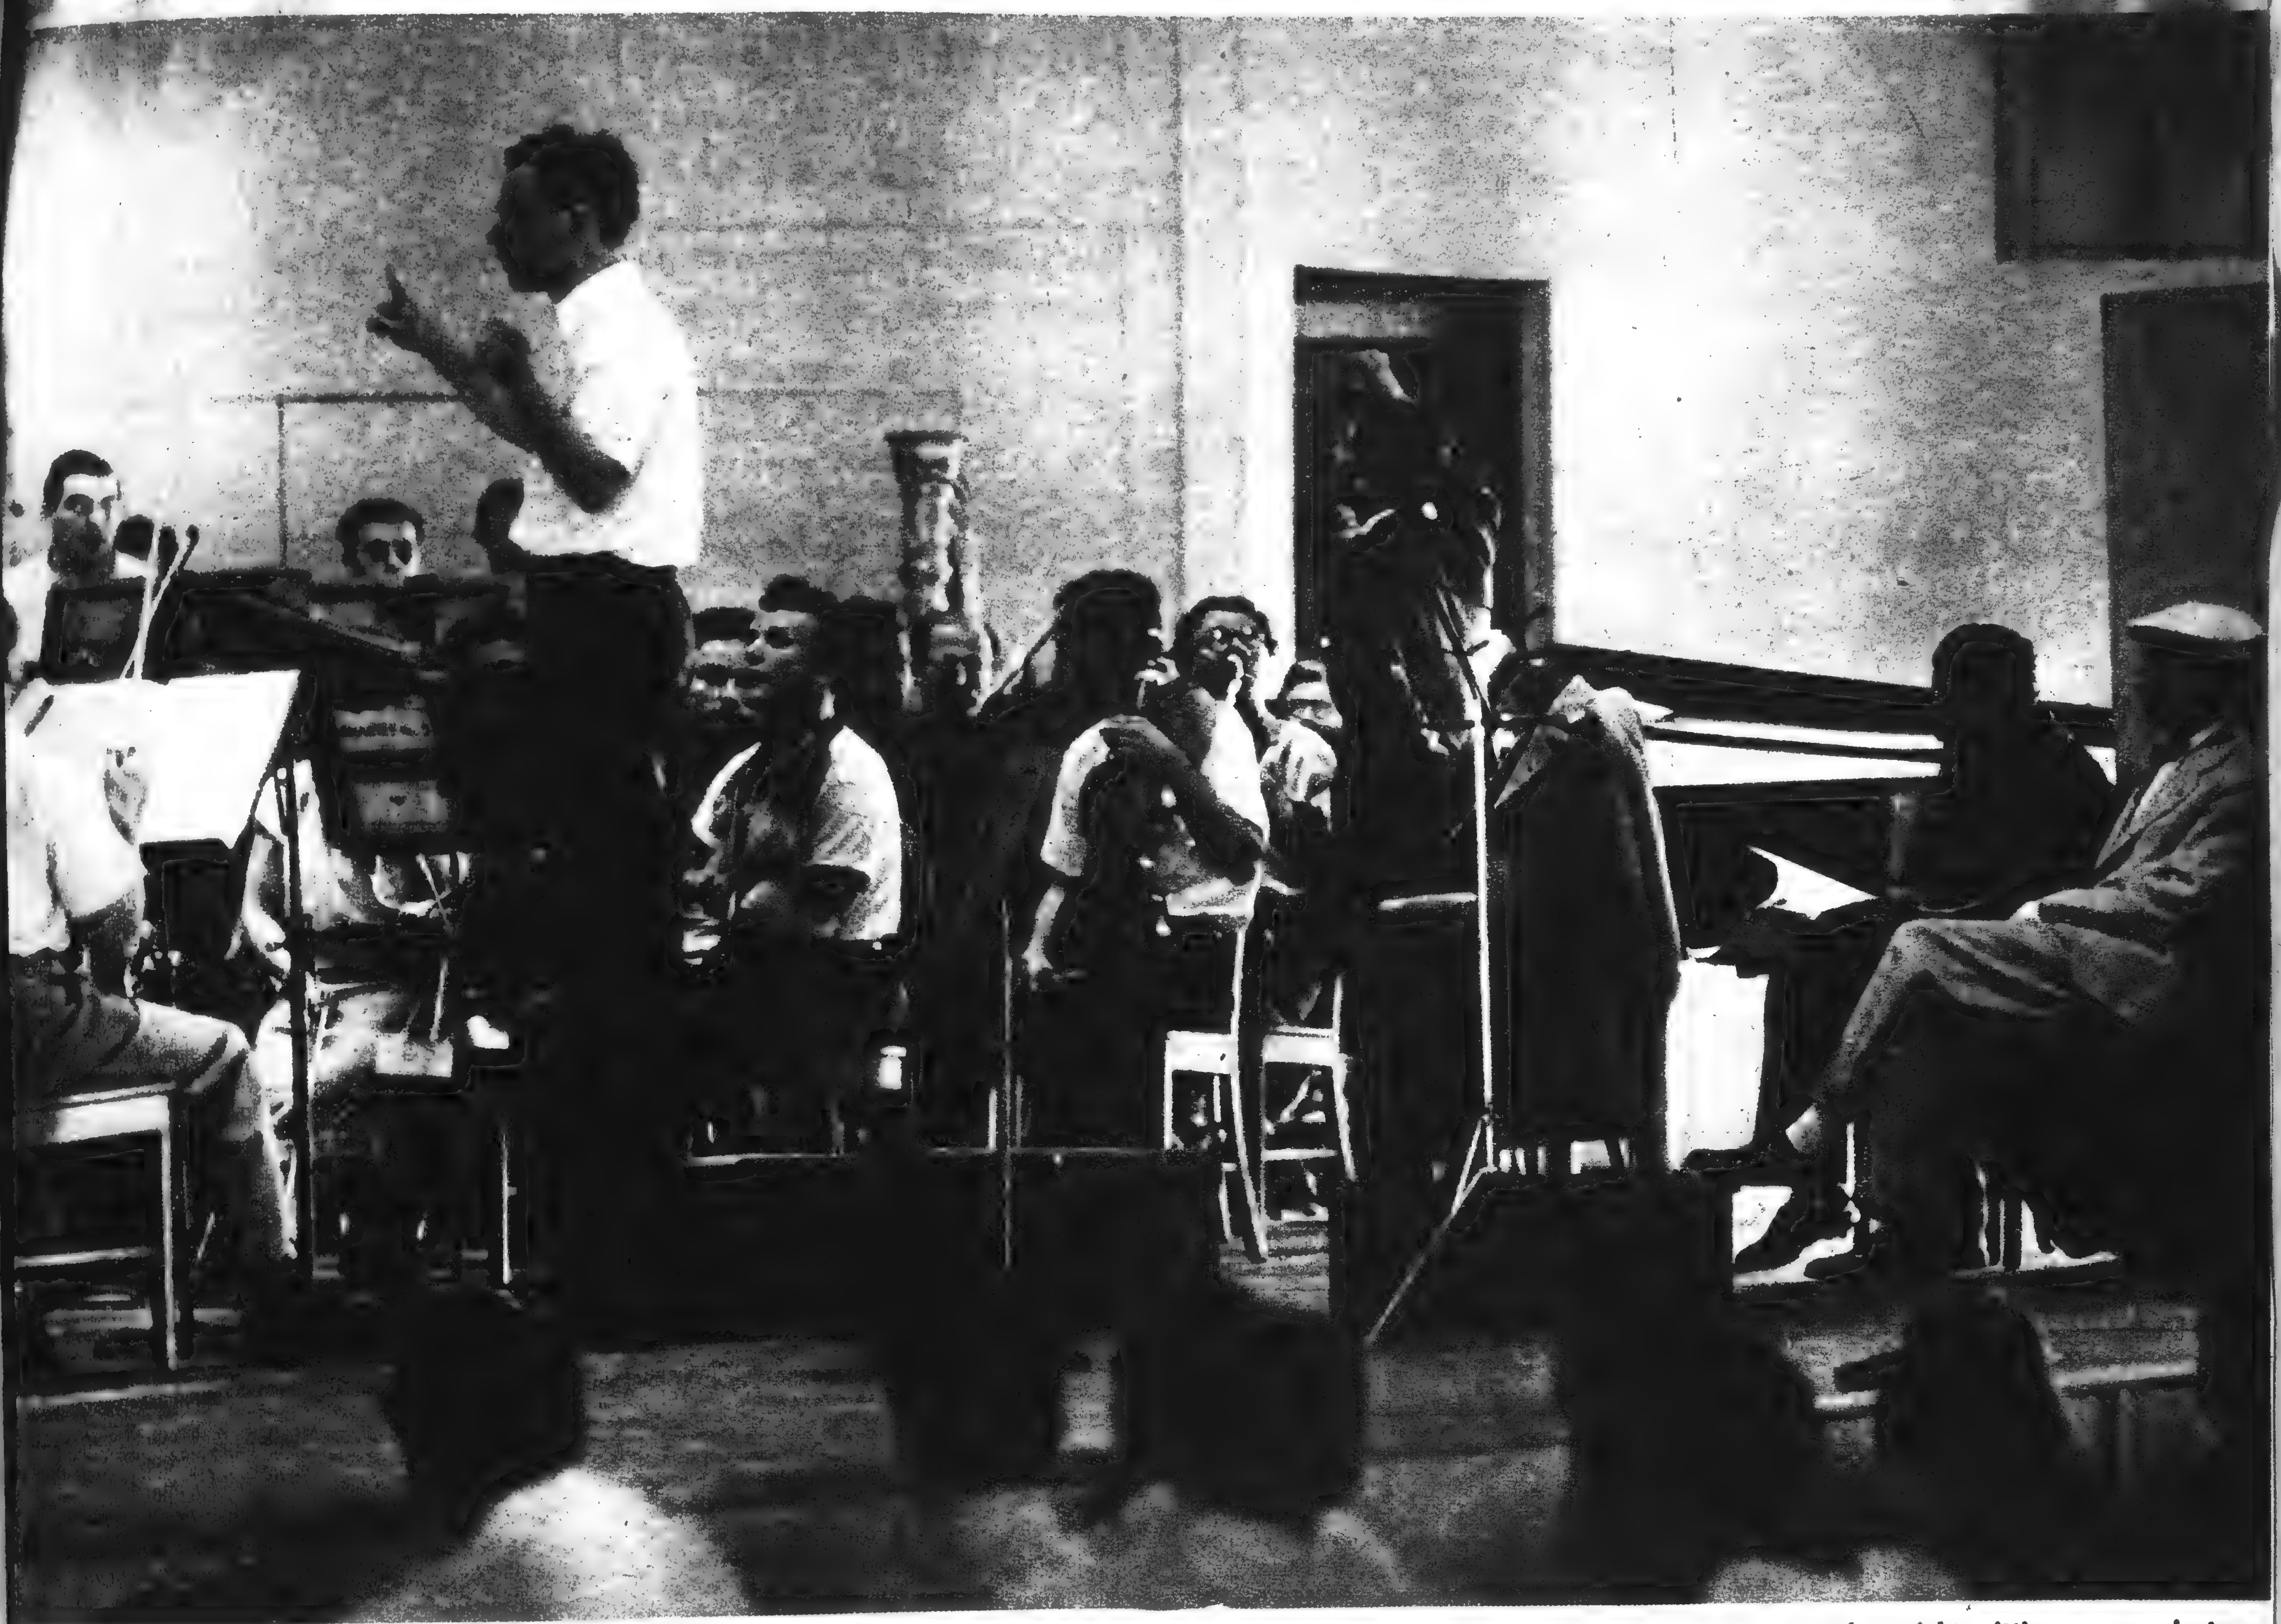
LET us leave the orchestra session, where Mr. Koussevitzky and his young charges will keep at it until lunch time. There are other things afoot at Tanglewood. Over in the Chamber Music Hall, Robert Shaw, talented American choral conductor, is putting a newly assembled chorus through its paces. The members of this chorus have musical training, but most of them are not planning careers as performers. They are teachers in high schools and col- (Continued on Page 28)

HOWARD TAUBMAN, music editor of The Times, was present at the opening of the Berkshire Music Center in 1940, and recently spent several days there preparing this article.

COMPOSERS Aaron Copland (left) and Darius Milhaud of France teach composition at Tanglewood's Music Center. Copland, leading American composer, is assistant director of the school.

BOY MEETS GIRL at Tanglewood to study the score of Brahms "Requiem" or argue some fine point of rehearsal. In the background is the theatre where the Center's operas are staged.

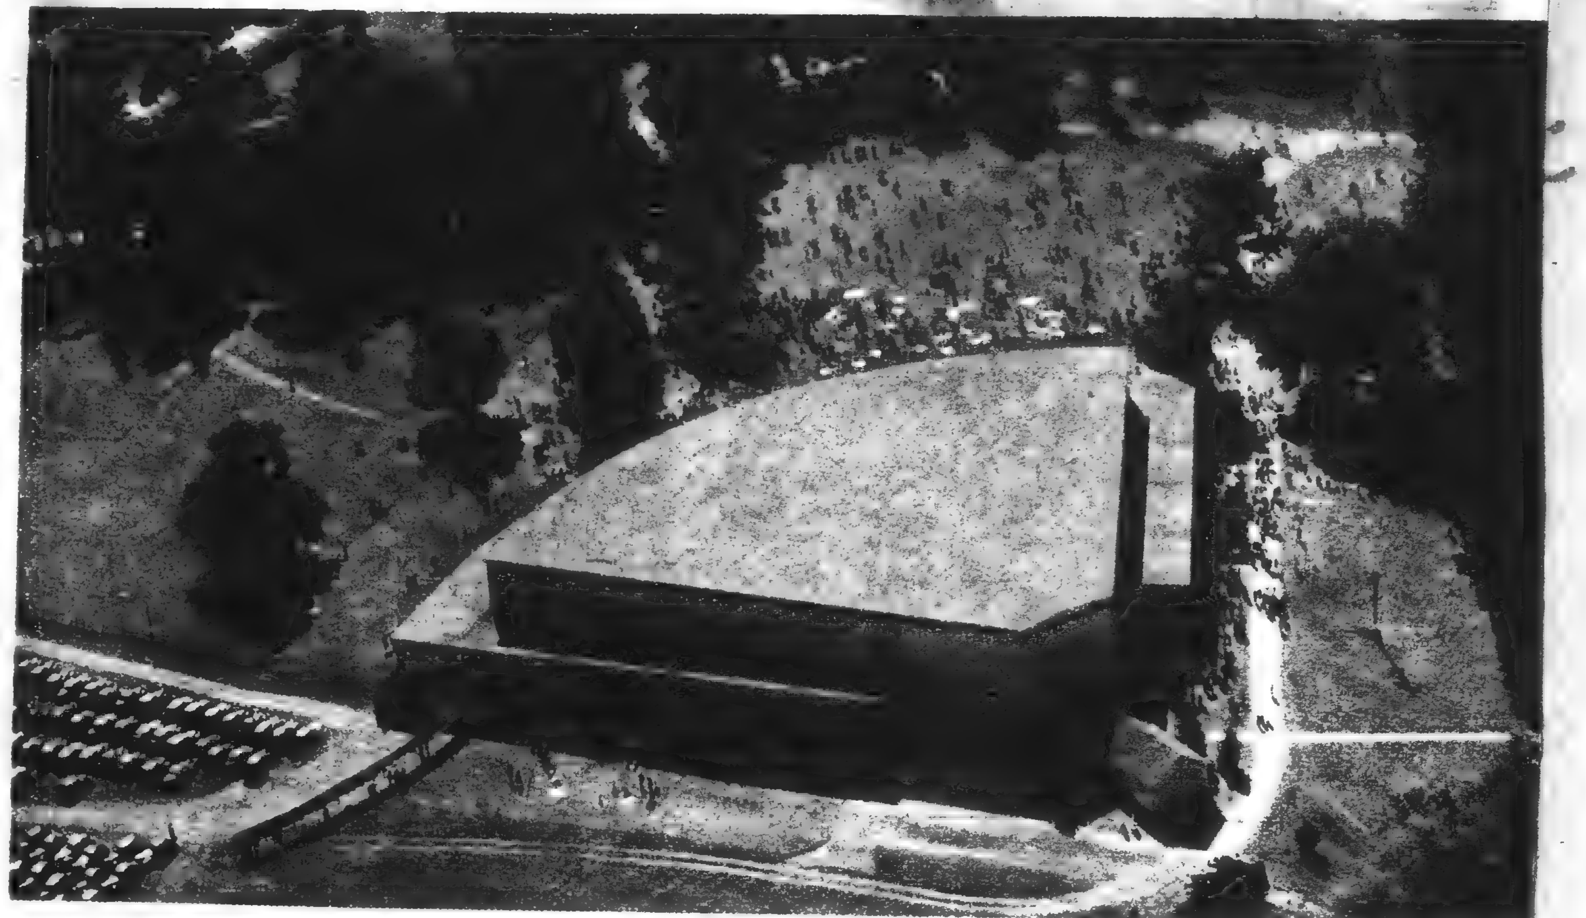
JAM SESSION in the lounge of the men's dormitory after dinner is a frequent occurrence and provides relaxation from arduous "long-hair" studies. Center has 462 students this year.



SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY, founder and headmaster of the Center and conductor of the Boston Symphony, watches at far right (in cap) as one of the three conducting pupils he instructs personally works with the student orchestra. In center and at right, sitting, are conductors Leonard Bernstein and Eleazar de Carvalho of Brazil, alumni and aides to Dr. Koussevitzky.

FESTIVAL TIME, when students and guest artists, including the Boston Symphony, perform for the public, may draw as many as 10,000 music lovers to Tanglewood. Because the Center's Music Shed seats only 6,000, many bring their own chairs or blankets and enjoy the concerts from the lawn. The festival's main phase begins July 29, ends Aug. 15 when the Center closes.

[198]



Audiences of 8,000 and more gather for concerts in the graceful Tanglewood Music Shed.

Tanglewood Tales, or Youth Makes Music

(Continued from Page 12)

leges, amateurs, college students. They are spending the summer living and working in music. If the average age of the Center's enrollment is 26, the average age here is somewhat higher. Mr. Shaw, a remarkable technician, teaches this group to sustain and mold a tone, and in an amazingly short interval you note that he has a rich, well-blended tone. When this chorus sings the Brahms Requiem later on during the festival you will think it has been working together for years.

DRIFT over to the rehearsal stage in the orchard. Here the Opera Department's orchestra is going through its paces in an excerpt from Verdi's "Traviata," with a couple of singers doing the arias.

In the theatre beyond the formal garden Boris Goldovsky, in charge of the Opera Department, is working with singers on stage business and scenes from the operas. In the barn down the road other members of the Opera Department are learning stage business of other operas. In the scenic workshop behind the theatre youngsters are building sets and working on lighting plans and on costumes.

In the Administration Building the rooms upstairs are used for study of chamber music and song repertory. The Little Red House, rebuilt to look exactly like the cottage Hawthorne lived in, is across a road. It has been turned into studios. Here Mr. Koussevitzky has his private sessions with his conducting protégés. In another wing Gregor Piatigorsky, the distinguished solo 'cellist, who is in charge of chamber music, conducts his groups. Tucked away in the woods are other studios. The composition class under the direction of Aaron Copland, leading American composer, [illegible] may be going on in a corner somewhere.

Shortly after lunch, which is served on the grounds and eaten on the lawn, activity picks up again. The orchestra made up of the teachers and amateurs takes over in the Music Shed under the direction of another Center graduate, Frederick Fennell. This ensemble is called "The Incorrigibles." But don't let the name fool you. By the end of the season they'll be doing a tough symphonic program.

Music goes on almost constantly at Tanglewood during the six weeks of the Center's sessions. These young people talk music when they are not playing and singing. A boy and girl alone at the far end of the lawn may be making small talk, but a copy of Brahms' Requiem is open before them. Time may be taken off for a swim in Lake Makheenac, but after dinner there is more music and talk about music. You see lads coming home from dates at the girls' dormitory with musical instruments and scores under their arms. Impromptu chamber music and even orchestral groups form as readily as boys on a sand-lot divide up into ball teams.

THERE are only two strictures against music-making. One is a curfew on musical instruments in the three dormitories from 10 P. M. to 8 A. M. That was put into effect some seasons ago when it was discovered that some zealous characters didn't know enough to quit at bedtime. The other restriction is against practicing where it would bother Tanglewood's neighbors. This one arose because a young trombone player a year or two ago picked himself a secluded spot on the fringe of Tanglewood and had himself a fine time blasting away on the trombone. The lady of a neighboring house did not mind the sound of the trombone, but her cook did. In fact, the cook was so irritated she gave her employer notice. Center officials heard of this delicate situation in time to tell the trombonist to go and blow somewhere else, which induced the all-important cook to withdraw her notice.

THIS, then, is a hint of what goes on at Tanglewood in addition to the Berkshire Festival. This is the Berkshire Music Center, Mr. Koussevitzky's dream come true. It came into being in 1940 as a product of his memories of his own struggles as a youth when, poor, unknown and from the provinces of Russia, he had to fight his way into schooling and a career in Moscow. Recalling his own battle to orient himself as a musician, he decided that here he would found a center that would help bridge the gap between conservatory and concert life by bringing young artists together with those who had arrived and by making them work together for mutual advantage.

Mr. Koussevitzky keeps an eye on everything that goes on at Tanglewood. He watches the progress of his Center's alumni, goes to hear their performances when he can, reads their scores and premières them and is particularly proud when an amateur chorus in Florida or Wisconsin has improved because its conductor has spent a summer at Tanglewood.

"The Center," he says simply, "is my child, and I shall take care of it as long as I live."

This means that after the 1948-49 season, which will be Mr. Koussevitzky's twenty-fifth and last with the Boston Symphony, he will devote himself entirely to the Berkshire Music Center. He accepts no payment for his work as director and teacher there. In fact, he gives bountifully of

THE NEW YORK TI

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
JUL 26 1948

OVERFLOW CROWD AT TANGLEWOOD

LENOX, Monday (AP)—An overflow crowd of 3200 turned out at Tanglewood yesterday for a Mozart program by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

~~Eleven hundred filled~~ the concert hall while the remaining 2100 heard the concert from the terrace.

Lukas Foss, 24-year-old Berlin-born pianist and composed, was recalled to the platform five times after he played "Piano Concerto in G Major."

The orchestra opened yesterday's program with "Symphony in C Major" and also performed the serenade "Nacht Musique" and "Symphony in E-Flat Major."

The final concert of the Bach-Mozart series will be given at Tanglewood tomorrow night when the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give all-Bach program.

Poet Archibald MacLeish will serve as chairman of "Tanglewood on Parade," the benefit which the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center will perform Tuesday, Aug. 3, for the creative musicians of Europe.

Dr. Koussevitzky will be honored on his 74th birthday today by students and faculty members of the Berkshire Music Center.

Although he has announced his resignation as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra after the 1948-49 season, he will continue as director of the music center.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
JUL 26 1948

MACLEISH WILL BE CHAIRMAN

Tanglewood to Offer Benefit for European Musicians

Archibald MacLeish will serve as chairman of "Tanglewood on Parade," the benefit, which the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center will stage Tuesday, Aug. 3, for the creative musicians of Europe. The distinguished American poet will introduce Cornelia Otis Skinner, Aaron Copland and other important figures in letters and the arts. Serge Koussevitzky will speak as well as conduct the full orchestra in a concert in the Music Shed between Lenox and Stockbridge.

"A musical CARE package" is the way one participant describes the four-hour event, which will inaugurate a nation-wide campaign for assistance to the fellow artists of the old world. The national committee will request other orchestras throughout the country to give benefits during the forthcoming season.

Just returned from a coast-to-coast tour in "Lady Windermere's Fan," which ran the entire season before in New York, Miss Skinner will read two Elizabethan sonnets at the "manifestation" beginning at 8 p. m. Her selections will be Michael Drayton's "The Parting" and the Sonnet No. 29 of Shakespeare, "When in Disgrace." Almost as well known as an author as actress, Miss Skinner will have her sixth book published this autumn, reminscences of her celebrated father and mother entitled "Family Circle." She is a frequent contributor to The New Yorker and has a humorous sketch in the current issue of that magazine. This season she returns to the monologue stage where she won her first fame.

Maurice Evans had also accepted to appear in a Shakesperean excerpt but has sent word he will be unable to attend.

In the gala spirit of the occasion, Dr. Koussevitzky has programmed a group showing the development of the waltz for the grand concert at 9.15 p. m. The lively finale will include "Voices of Spring" by Strauss, "Valse Triste" by Sibelius, and "La Valse" of Ravel. The other numbers will be Beethoven's "Lenore" Overture No. 3 and Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" with Wesley Addy as narrator.

Festivities will begin at 6 p. m. with an actual parade of the 462 students of the Berkshire Music Center. They will proceed to their various departments for demonstrations of all activities of the school—orchestra, opera, chorus, and chamber music. The hour from 7 to 8 p. m. will be given over to picnic supper on the grounds.

Tickets admitting to all events beginning at 6 p. m. are priced at $2.50. Patrons subscribing for reserved seats at $4 and box seats at $5 will be invited to a special added attraction, a performance at 4 p. m. in the Tanglewood gardens of "The Telephone" by Gian-Carlo Menotti and scenes from other operas. A $2200 custom-built RCA Victor Berkshire model radio-phonograph will be given away.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
JUL 26 1948

3200 Throng Tanglewood To Hear Mozart Program

Boston Symphony Orchestra Directed by Dr. Koussevitzky; Lucas Foss Recalled Five Times

Lenox, July 25 (AP)—An overflow crowd of 3200 turned out at Tanglewood today for a Mozart program by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

Eleven hundred filled the concert hall while the remaining 2100 heard the concert from the terrace.

Foss Recalled Five Times

Lukas Foss, 24-year-old Berlin-born pianist and composer, was recalled to the platform five times after he played "Piano Concerto in G Major."

The orchestra opened today's program with "Symphony in C Major" and also performed the serenade "Nacht Musique" and "Symphony in E-Flat Major."

The final concert of the Bach-Mozart series will be given at Tanglewood Tuesday night when the Boston Symphony Orchestra will render all-Bach program.

MacLeish Chairman

Poet Archibald MacLeish will serve as chairman of "Tanglewood on Parade," the benefit which the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center will perform Tuesday, Aug. 3, for the creative musicians of Europe.

Dr. Koussevitzky will be honored on his 74th birthday tomorrow by students and faculty members of the Berkshire Music Center.

Although he has announced his resignation as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra after the 1948-49 season, he will continue as director of the music center.

[199]

Boston Herald July 25

BERKSHIRE MUSIC CENTER

The activities at the center at Tanglewood, Lenox, which opened July 4 and closes Aug. 15, will again in 1948 be the Mecca for music lovers and students from all parts of the country. Here are glimpses of the center and those connected with it.

RELAXING SETTING of music center in heart of the Berkshires, gives inspiration to all musicians.

AT OPENING OF CENTER'S SEASON this year were, left to right—Mrs. Henriette Hirschmann, Darius Milhaud, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, music director; Mme. Milhaud and Mrs. Koussevitzky.

DEDICATED YESTERDAY, this red house where Nathaniel Hawthorne lived and worked will house the studios of Dr. Koussevitzky and Gregor Piatigorsky celebrated 'cellist. The building was restored by the National Federation of Music Clubs.

WOOING THE MUSE, this student of the base viol practices in a shady spot on the center's spacious 200 acres at Tanglewood.

Mozart's Music Played At Tanglewood

The intimate music of Mozart received sensitive treatment Sunday afternoon from the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in an all-Mozart program at Tanglewood.

An audience of 1,100 persons heard the program in the small concert hall, while 2,100 others listened through the open portals from their less formal seats on the grassy terrace outside the building.

Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, celebrating his 74th birthday yesterday seems to take new vigor with each summer season of festival concerts. His fine and unobtrusive conducting Sunday brought out a full richness from the small orchestra used for the Mozart compositions.

Sunday's program consisted of the seldom-heard Symphony in C Major, the Salsburg Symphony; the piano concerto in G Major; an eight-instrument serenade for wind instruments from Eine Kleine Nacht Musique; and the E-flat Major Symphony.

Pianist Recalled Five Times

Lukas Foss, young Berlin-born pianist who was soloist for the G Major Concerto, was recalled five times after his exuberant performance. He and Dr. Koussevitsky appeared equally at ease with the lively concerto, in which orchestra and soloist treated listeners to charming counterplay.

Most volatile piece of programming was the C Major Symphony with which the concert opened It was an energetic composition, handled to bring out sharp contrast between the overture theme and the delicacy of the andante for strings and bassoons in the second movement, closing with a repeating triplet melody.

The interesting orchestration of the Nacht Musique Serenade featuring two oboes, two clarinets, two horns and two bassoons, caused a buzz of comment through the concert hall audience. The arrangement, perhaps, was the best example of Mozart's own conception of private music by a small group, and offered almost modern syncopation by the wind instruments.

The E-flat Symphony, a familiar concert piece, showed Mozart at his peak as a creator of absolute music. The orchestra Sunday gave an especially pleasant reading of the waltz-like allegro, with its country-dance fiddle air above a heavy bass.

The Music Festival will continue tonight with an all Bach program. All departments of the Berkshire Music Center will participate in a four-hour "Tanglewood On Parade" performance Aug. 3.

This Clipping From
WALTHAM, MASS.
NEWS TRIBUNE

JUL 27 1948

Poet MacLeish Will Preside At Tanglewood

Archibald MacLeish will serve as chairman of "Tanglewood on Parade," the benefit which the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center will stage Tuesday, Aug. 3, for the creative musicians of Europe.

The distinguished American poet will introduce Carnelia Otis Skinner, Aaron Copland and other important figures in letters and the arts to be announced. Serge Koussevitzky will speak, as well as conduct the full orchestra. at a concert in the Music Shed, between Lenox and Stockbridge.

"A musical CARE package" is the way one participant describes the four-hour event, which will inaugurate a nationwide campaign for assistance to the fellow artists of the Old World. The national committee will request other orchestras throughout the country to give benefits during the forthcoming season.

Just returned from a coast-to-coast tour in "Lady Windermere's Fan," which ran the entire season before in New York, Miss Skinner will read two Elizabethan sonnets.

CHAMBER MUSIC CONCERT SLATED AT TANGLEWOOD

Coolidge Series Program To Friends of Berkshire Music Center

[illegible] event of [illegible] Tanglewood will [illegible] evening at 8.15 [illegible] Concert Hall. [illegible] concerts of [illegible] Franz Schubert on [illegible] of July. [illegible] of Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge [illegible] to open [illegible] Berkshire Music Center.

The Program

[illegible]

[illegible] Music [illegible] July [illegible] 27, Serge Koussevitzky [illegible]. The first concert in the [illegible] by the full Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky will be Thursday evening, [illegible] 29.

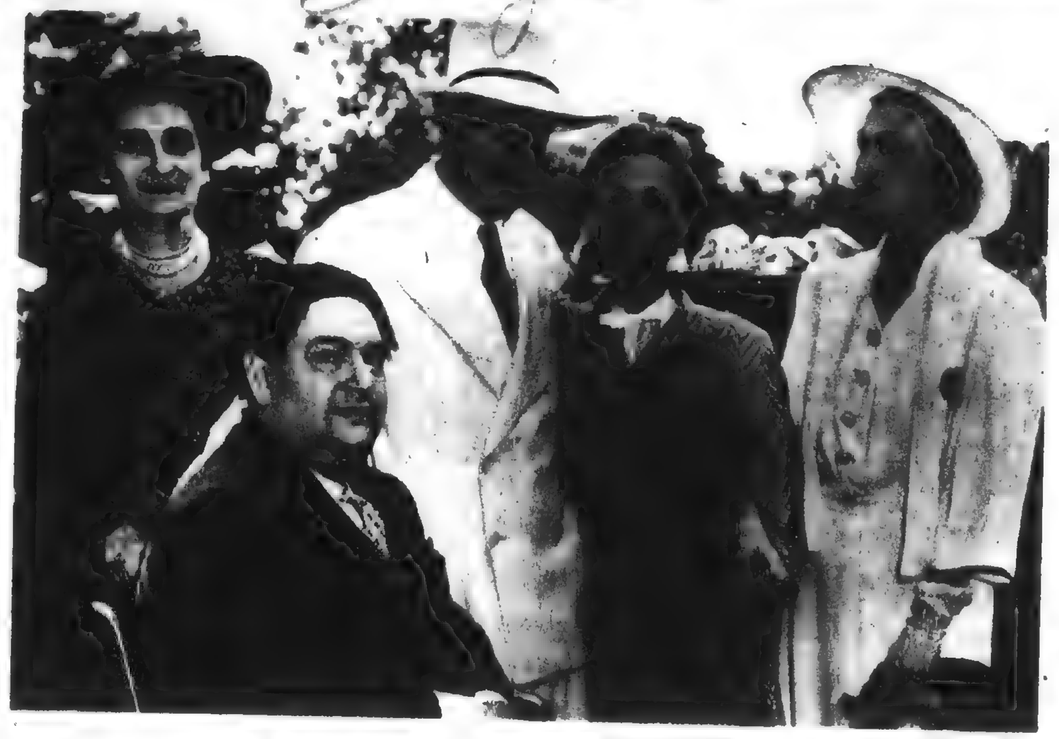
[206]

Boston Herald July 25

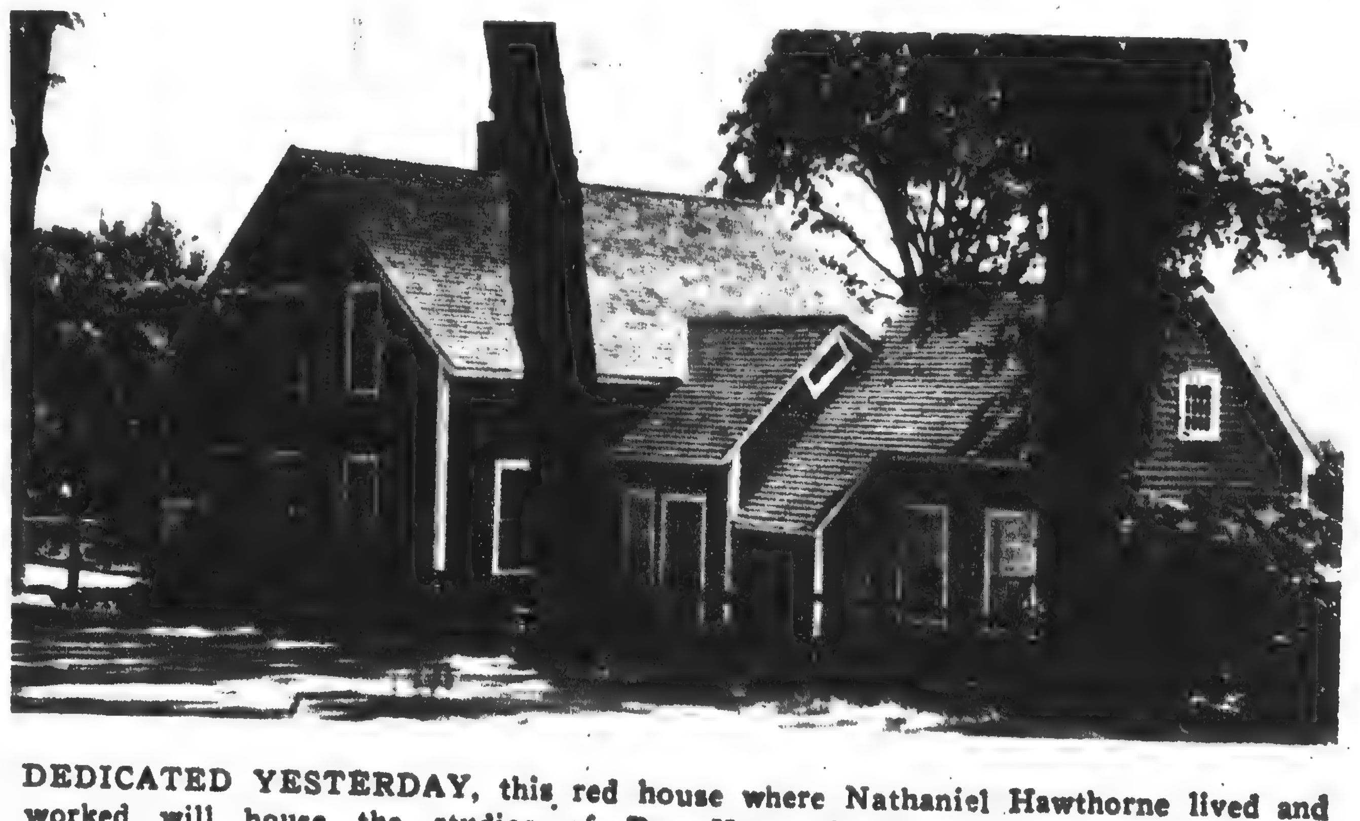
BERKSHIRE MUSIC CENTER

The activities at the center at Tanglewood, Lenox, which opened July 4 and closes Aug. 15, will again in 1948 be the Mecca for music lovers and students from all parts of the country. Here are glimpses of the center and those connected with it.

RELAXING SETTING of music center in heart of the Berkshires, gives inspiration to all musicians.



AT OPENING OF CENTER'S SEASON this year were, left to right—Mrs. Henriette Hirschmann, Darius Milhaud, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, music director; Mme. Milhaud and Mrs. Koussevitzky.



DEDICATED YESTERDAY, this red house where Nathaniel Hawthorne lived and worked will house the studios of Dr. Koussevitzky and Gregor Piatigorsky celebrated 'cellist. The building was restored by the National Federation of Music Clubs.

WOOING THE MUSE, this student of the base viol practices in a shady spot on the center's spacious 200 acres at Tanglewood.

Mozart's Music Played At Tanglewood

The intimate music of Mozart received sensitive treatment Sunday afternoon from the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in an all-Mozart program at Tanglewood.

An audience of 1,100 persons heard the program in the small concert hall, while 2,100 others listened through the open portals from their less formal seats on the grassy terrace outside the building.

Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, celebrating his 74th birthday yesterday seems to take new vigor with each summer season of festival concerts. His fine and unobtrusive conducting Sunday brought out a full richness from the small orchestra used for the Mozart compositions.

Sunday's program consisted of the seldom-heard Symphony in C Major, the Salsburg Symphony; the piano concerto in G Major; an eight-instrument serenade for wind instruments from Eine Kleine Nacht Musique; and the E-flat Major Symphony.

Pianist Recalled Five Times

Lukas Foss, young Berlin-born pianist who was soloist for the G Major Concerto, was recalled five times after his exuberant performance. He and Dr. Koussevitsky appeared equally at ease with the lively concerto, in which orchestra and soloist treated listeners to charming counterplay.

Most volatile piece of programming was the C Major Symphony with which the concert opened. It was an energetic composition, handled to bring out sharp contrast between the overture theme and the delicacy of the andante for strings and bassoons in the second movement, closing with a repeating triplet melody.

The interesting orchestration of the Nacht Musique Serenade featuring two oboes, two clarinets, two horns and two bassoons, caused a buzz of comment through the concert hall audience. The arrangement, perhaps, was the best example of Mozart's own conception of private music by a small group, and offered almost modern syncopation by the wind instruments.

The E-flat Symphony, a familiar concert piece, showed Mozart at his peak as a creator of absolute music. The orchestra Sunday gave an especially pleasant reading of the waltz-like allegro, with its country-dance fiddle air above a heavy bass.

The Music Festival will continue tonight with an all Bach program. All departments of the Berkshire Music Center will participate in a four-hour "Tanglewood On Parade" performance Aug. 3.

This Clipping From
WALTHAM, MASS.
NEWS TRIBUNE

JUL 27 1948

Poet MacLeish Will Preside At Tanglewood

Archibald MacLeish will serve as chairman of "Tanglewood on Parade," the benefit which the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center will stage Tuesday, Aug. 3, for the creative musicians of Europe.

The distinguished American poet will introduce Carnelia Otis Skinner, Aaron Copland and other important figures in letters and the arts to be announced. Serge Koussevitzky will speak, as well as conduct the full orchestra, at a concert in the Music Shed, between Lenox and Stockbridge.

"A musical CARE package" is the way one participant describes the four-hour event, which will inaugurate a nation-wide campaign for assistance to the fellow artists of the Old World. The national committee will request other orchestras throughout the country to give benefits during the forthcoming season.

Just returned from a coast-to-coast tour in "Lady Windermere's Fan," which ran the entire season before in New York, Miss Skinner will read two Elizabethan sonnets.

---

vestry.

CHAMBER MUSIC CONCERT SLATED AT TANGLEWOOD

Coolidge Series Program To Friends of Berkshire Music Center

The first purely musical event of the season at Tanglewood will be the concert tomorrow evening at 8.15 p. m. in the Theater-Concert Hall. This is the first of four concerts of chamber music by Franz Schubert on the four Wednesday evenings of July. The series is the gift of Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge and is open to friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

The Program

Wednesday evening's program will offer the quartet for ute, guitar, viola and violoncello, the Sonata for Arpeggione and the entire song cycle, "Winterreise," sung by Ralph Herbert, baritone, with Erich Itor Kahn at the piano. The other artists will be Carleton Sprague Smith, flutist; Suzanne Bloch, guitar; Paul Doktor, violist; and Sidney Edwards, 'cellist.

In the sonata the arpeggione part will be played by Mr. Doktor on the viola. Long since extinct, the arpeggione had a vogue which lasted only a few years. It was invented in 1823 and was also called guitar violoncello or guitare d'amour. It had six strings and a body like a guitar's but was played with a bow.

The guitar was a very popular instrument in Schubert's day and when called upon the little Viennese master could play it. His "Cantata for his Father's Name Day," obviously a piece for a family occasion, composed in 1815, contained a part for guitar.

The Berkshire Festival begins with the Bach-Mozart series July 18, 20, 25 and 27, Serge Koussevitzky conducting. The first concert in the music shed by the full Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky will be Thursday evening, July 29.

The Berkshires Dedicate a House to Music In Memory of Hawthorne, Who Disliked Both

Eagle — July 26

Famed Author's Disgruntled Musings Feature Formal Opening of His Restored Retreat

TANGLEWOOD—A choice collection of salty anecdotes about Lenox and Stockbridge—some of them less than complimentary—today appeared headed for a place of distinction in Hawthorne's Little Red House here.

The pithy sayings highlighted the address of Henry Wadsworth Longfellow Dana at Saturday's dedication of the restored cottage of the novelist, who besides not enjoying his stay in the Berkshires, is recorded as having disliked music too.

Officials of the National Federation of Music Clubs, who turned the restored cottage over to the Berkshire Music Center, indicated today that Dr. Dana's address will be made into a bound volume and will become a permanent part of the local historical record of the Little Red House.

The Hawthorne Club of Canaan, Conn., presented a set of the complete works of the novelist to the Federation for the restored cottage and it is planned to add Dr. Dana's address to the cottage library.

Warned About 'Sedgwick Tribe'

Drawn largely from the unpublished journals of his grandfather, Henry Wadsworth Longfellow, Mr. Dana's address revealed a number of new aspects of Southern Berkshire life. On the subject of the well-known literary Sedgwick family, for example, Mr. Dana remarked:

"My grandfather had recorded in his journal how Mr. Devereux Barker, Mrs. Samuel Gray Ward's brother, had said that everything seemed to be Sedgwick in this region: The very grasshoppers in the field chirped 'Sedgwick, Sedgwick!'

"There was a story that in the Stockbridge Graveyard the tombstones of the Sedgwicks were arranged in a circle facing inward, so that when the last trumpet was blown on the Day of Judgment and they arose from their tombs, they might be confronted by no one who was not a Sedgwick.

"The Concord poet, Ellery Channing, tried to warn Hawthorne against the Sedgwick tribe in Stockbridge and Lenox. 'That devilish institution of Spitzbergen!' he wrote. 'That ice-plant of Sedgwicks! Good God! to live permanently in Iceland!'"

The Little Red House itself, Mr. Dana also indicated, didn't hold too high a place in Hawthorne's affections:

"Except for the ground floor, it consisted chiefly of a large pointed roof making the end of the house, which was painted a bright red, look something like a colossal red A. Mrs. Hawthorne wrote on June 23, 1850, that 'Mr. Hawthorne says it looks like the Scarlet Letter.'

"Mr. Hawthorne described it as 'the very ugliest little bit of an old red farmhouse you ever saw' and 'the most inconvenient and wretched home I ever put my head into,' and used to refer to it as the 'Red Shanty.'"

Hawthorne Meets Melville

Possibly the most remarkable literary event in Berkshire history, as Dr. Dana described it, was the picnic on top of Monument Mountain Aug. 5, 1850, when Herman Melville, the author of "Moby Dick," met Hawthorne for the first time.

Dr. Dana's remarks follow in part:

At the summit of the mountain the various men seemed to have assumed characteristic attitudes. Melville bestrode a peaked rock, which ran out like a bowsprit and pulled and hawled imaginary ropes for our delectation. Hawthorne looked mildly about for the great Carbuncle." Little Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes "peeked about the cliffs and protested it affected him like ipecac" and then "cut three branches for an umbrella and uncorked the champagne which was drunk from a silver mug." Longfellow was not present on this occasion, but they all drank his health in champagne.

It was on the way down the mountain that Hawthorne and Melville "were compelled by a thundershower to take shelter in the rocks of Monument Mountain. There the two hours of enforced conversation between these two rather shy men, hitherto unacquainted with each other, brought about that momentous meeting of minds which is one of the high-water marks in the history of American literature.

Hawthorne and his children frequented the same beautiful valleys and brooks and lakes that the Longfellows and their children had frequented. Longfellow's friends at Pittsfield and

Hawthorne
Continued on Second Page

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
JUL 27 1948

Hawthorne

Continued From First Pg.

Lenox and Stockbridge became Hawthorne's friends.

The tangled woods of the neighborhood suggested to Hawthorne the enchanting name of "Tanglewood" and the homestead of "High-Wood" was transfigured by Hawthorne into "Tanglewood."

Named 'Shadow Brook'

Similarly he gave to the brook shadowed by thick trees the delightful name of "Shadow Brook." Here the children are told the story of King Midas and "The Golden Touch" and as an appropriate introduction to the tale Hawthorne tells us how in the woods beside the shadowy brook "the touch of autumn had transmuted every one of its green leaves into what resembled the purest gold."

Finally, for the last story of the "Wonder Book," the children and their narrator climb to the peak of "Bald Summit" from which they can look down upon Tanglewood and the whole valley below them. There, on the mountain top, they listened to the story of Bellerophon and winged horse Pegasus

---

116 Vets Are Studying Music At Tanglewood Under GI Bill

TANGLEWOOD — Under the GI Bill of Rights 116 young musicians are studying at the Berkshire Music Center. In addition, two are under Public Law 16 for disabled veterans. Representing a little less than half the male student body, the number is slightly below last year's enrollment of 125 veterans. They receive from the government their tuition, subsistance allowance and $20 for books and equipment.

Many veterans have returned to continue their training, begun in previous years. While the Veterans' Administration does not permit repetition of a course, due to the special nature of the musical training offered at the school, they may continue their training for three years if they are in the opera, orchestra or composition departments.

Of the 36 married veterans, 9 have children. It is not unusual to see a young mother leave her lecture to look into a baby carriage parked in the shade outside the classroom. In the cases of five couples, both husband and wife are students.

DAVID LLOYD
Soloist Tonight

David Lloyd of Minneapolis, Minn., who served in the Naval Air Corps during the war, is a tenor in the opera department. He will appear as one of the soloists tonight in the Bach cantata No. 65, "Sie Werden aud Saba Alle Kommen," with the ~~Boston Symphony Orchestra. Last summer~~ he gave a performance with the orchestra in the Beethoven ninth symphony and Mozart's "Requiem." He will sing the title role in Stravinsky's "Oedipus Rex," Thursday evening, Aug. 5. His wife is a violinist.

Edward Roncone of Sewickley, Pa., who is an auditor in the conducting department, was the leader of the 28th Division Band and was taken prisoner by the Germans in the Battle of the Bulge. Clay Williams of St. Louis, also an auditor in the orchestral conducting class, spent 17 days on a life raft in the Pacific when his ship was sunk by the Japanese. Many others have outstanding war records.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
JUL 27 1948

Festival to Hear Milhaud Symphony

HARTFORD-TIMES

In special recognition of Darius Milhaud, guest composer at the Berkshire Music Center this summer, the Berkshire Festival program of Sunday afternoon has been altered to include a performance by the Boston Symphony Orchestra of his Symphony No. 2. The composer himself will conduct, according to Serge Koussevitzky, music director of the orchestra and director of the school.

The Milhaud work comes in the first week of concerts in the Music Shed by the full orchestra. The first of the big series is Thursday evening when the program will include Bach Suite in D major No. 3, Hindemith's "Mathis der Maler," and the Fifth Symphony of Beethoven, Dr. Koussevitzky conducting.

* * *

THE REMAINDER of the program on Aug. 1 will be given to Mahler's Symphony No. 2 in D major, the "Resurrection," with the festival chorus of 250 voices with Ellabelle Davis, soprano, and Nan Merriman, mezzo-soprano, as soloists, Leonard Bernstein conducting.

Commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and dedicated to the memory of Mme. Natalie Koussevitzky, the Milhaud Symphony No. 2 was performed for the first time anywhere by the orchestra in Boston in 1946 also under the baton of the composer.

* * *

MESSRS. MILHAUD and Honegger, who was guest composer at Tanglewood last summer, are generally acknowledged as the most prominent of the celebrated "groupe des six," the six young French composers who were strongly influenced by Satie and Cocteau after the first World War. Before thta Mr. Milhaud spent two years in Brazil and his music felt the exotic dance rhythms of that country. He also made use of American jazz. During the years 1941-46 he taught at Mills College in Oakland, Calif.

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
JUL 27 1948

TANGLEWOOD CONCERT SERIES OPEN THURSDAY

The first of three main series of concerts at Tanglewood will begin Thursday evening with the performance of Bach's "Suite in D major, No. 3," Hindemith's Symphony, "Mathis der Maler," and Beethoven's "Symphony No. 5."

This concert and that of the following Saturday evening will be conducted by Serge Kousseviszky. The second concert ~~will have~~ Isaac Stern as violinist, performing Prokofieff's "Concerto No. 1" with the Boston Symphony. The balance of the program will be Piston's "Symphony No. 3" and Brahms' "Symphony No. 1, in C minor."

[illegible] Works on Program

The concluding concert of the first series will be given on Sunday afternoon, Leonard Bernstein conducting. The program comprises but two works—Haydn's "Symphony in D major, No. 104," and Mahler's "Symphony No. 2 (Resurrection)" for orchestra, chorus, and soloists. Ellabelle Davis, soprano, and Nan Merriman, contralto, will sing the solo scores.

The two remaining series, beginning the weekends of Aug. 5 and 12 will follow similar schedules.

Monday evening, Aug. 2, the first American performance of Rossini's forgotten opera, "The Turk in Italy" will be given by students of the Berkshire Music Center under Boris Goldovsky's direction. The following night will mark a secial event called "Tanglewood on Parade."

At this time, four hours of music will be performed simultaneously in Tanglewood's three main auditoriums — the Shed, Theater-Concert Hall, and Chamber Music Hall.

Seymour Lipkin, winner of the Rachmanioff Award, will perform Tschaikowsky's "Concerto in B-flat." Other works to be performed by the Boston Symphony under Dr. Koussevitzky in the Shed are Beethoven's "Leonore Overture," Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf," with Wesley Addy as narrator, and "La Valse" by Ravel.

A special feature in the Theater-Concert Hall will be the appearance of Cornelia Otis Skinner in Shakespearean excerpts.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
JUL 27 1948

Bach Program At Festival

Final Concert Of Series at Tanglewood Tonight

TANGLEWOOD—The Bach program of the Bach-Mozart series of the Berkshire Festival will be played tonight at 8.15 by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge ~~Koussevitzky, conducting.~~ With the same program as the opening concert July 18, the second half will be broadcast at 9.30 over WBEC.

The program follows:

Brandenburg concerto No. 3 for strings (with sinfonia from the cantata, Christ lag in Todesbanden).

Cantata No. 65, Sie werden aus Saba Alle Kommen (orchestra and chorus, with tenor and bass).

Festival chorus prepared and conducted by Hugh Ross.

David Lloyd, tenor.
James Pease, bass.

Concerto in D minor for three pianos and strings.

Soloists: Lukas Foss, Bernard Zighera, Ralph Berkowitz.

Suite No. 2 in D minor for flute and strings.

Soloist: Georges Laurent.

Concerto in C major for three pianos and strings.

Tickets are on sale at the box office. General admission will be available three hours before the concert.

This Clipping From
FITCHBURG, MASS.
SENTINEL
JUL 27 1948

Musician Dies At 53

PITTSFIELD, July 27 (AP)—Victor Polatschek, 53, first clarinetist with the Boston Symphony orchestra, died suddenly today at his summer home on Lake Mahkeenac.

He was stricken apparently with a heart ailment a few hours before scheduled to play the Bach-Mozart series of concerts at the Berkshire festival at Tanglewood.

Polatschek was an outstanding soloist in Europe before coming to the United States in 1930 to join the Boston Symphony at the request of Dr. Serge ~~Koussevitsky.~~

Born in Czechoslovakia, Polatschek served with the Austrian army in World War I. He studied at the Vienna academy of music and later played with the state opera in Vienna and the Vienna Philharmonic.

He leaves his widow, the former Fredericke Loeffler of Boston, and a sister in Vienna.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
JUL 27 1948

Tanglewood

Tonight at 8.15

The final concert of the Bach-Mozart series by members of the ~~Boston~~ Symphony Orchestra, Serge ~~Koussevitzky conducting.~~

Tomorrow Night

The last of four chamber music concerts in a Schubert cycle contributed by Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge will be played by the Boston Conservatory String Quartet, with the following program, open to Friends of the Berkshire Music Center and guests of Mrs. Coolidge:

String quartet in A minor.
Quintet in A major ("Die Forelle").

The quartet, whose members are Gaston Elcus, violin; Harry Dickson, violin; Albert Bernard, viola; Jacobus Langendoen, violoncello, will be assisted by Raymond Allard, bassoon; William Valkenier, French horn; Henry Girard, double bass, and Lucie Elcus, piano.

The quartet is based on the theme that Shubert used also in the "Rosamunde" music. The quintet consists of variations on his famous song, "The Trout."

[201]

ued From First Page

Stockbridge became ne's friends.

ngled woods of the hood suggested to Haw-
e enchanting name of ood" and the home-
"High-Wood" was trans-y Hawthorne into "Tan-

Shadow Brook'

ly he gave to the brook by thick trees the de-name of "Shadow
Here the children are tory of King Midas and den Touch" and as an e introduction to the thorne tells us how in beside the shadowy touch of autumn had every one of its ves into what resempurest gold."

for the last story of r Book," the children narrator climb to the "Bald Summit" from can look down upon and the whole valthem. There, on the top, they listened to of Bellerophon and orse Pegasus

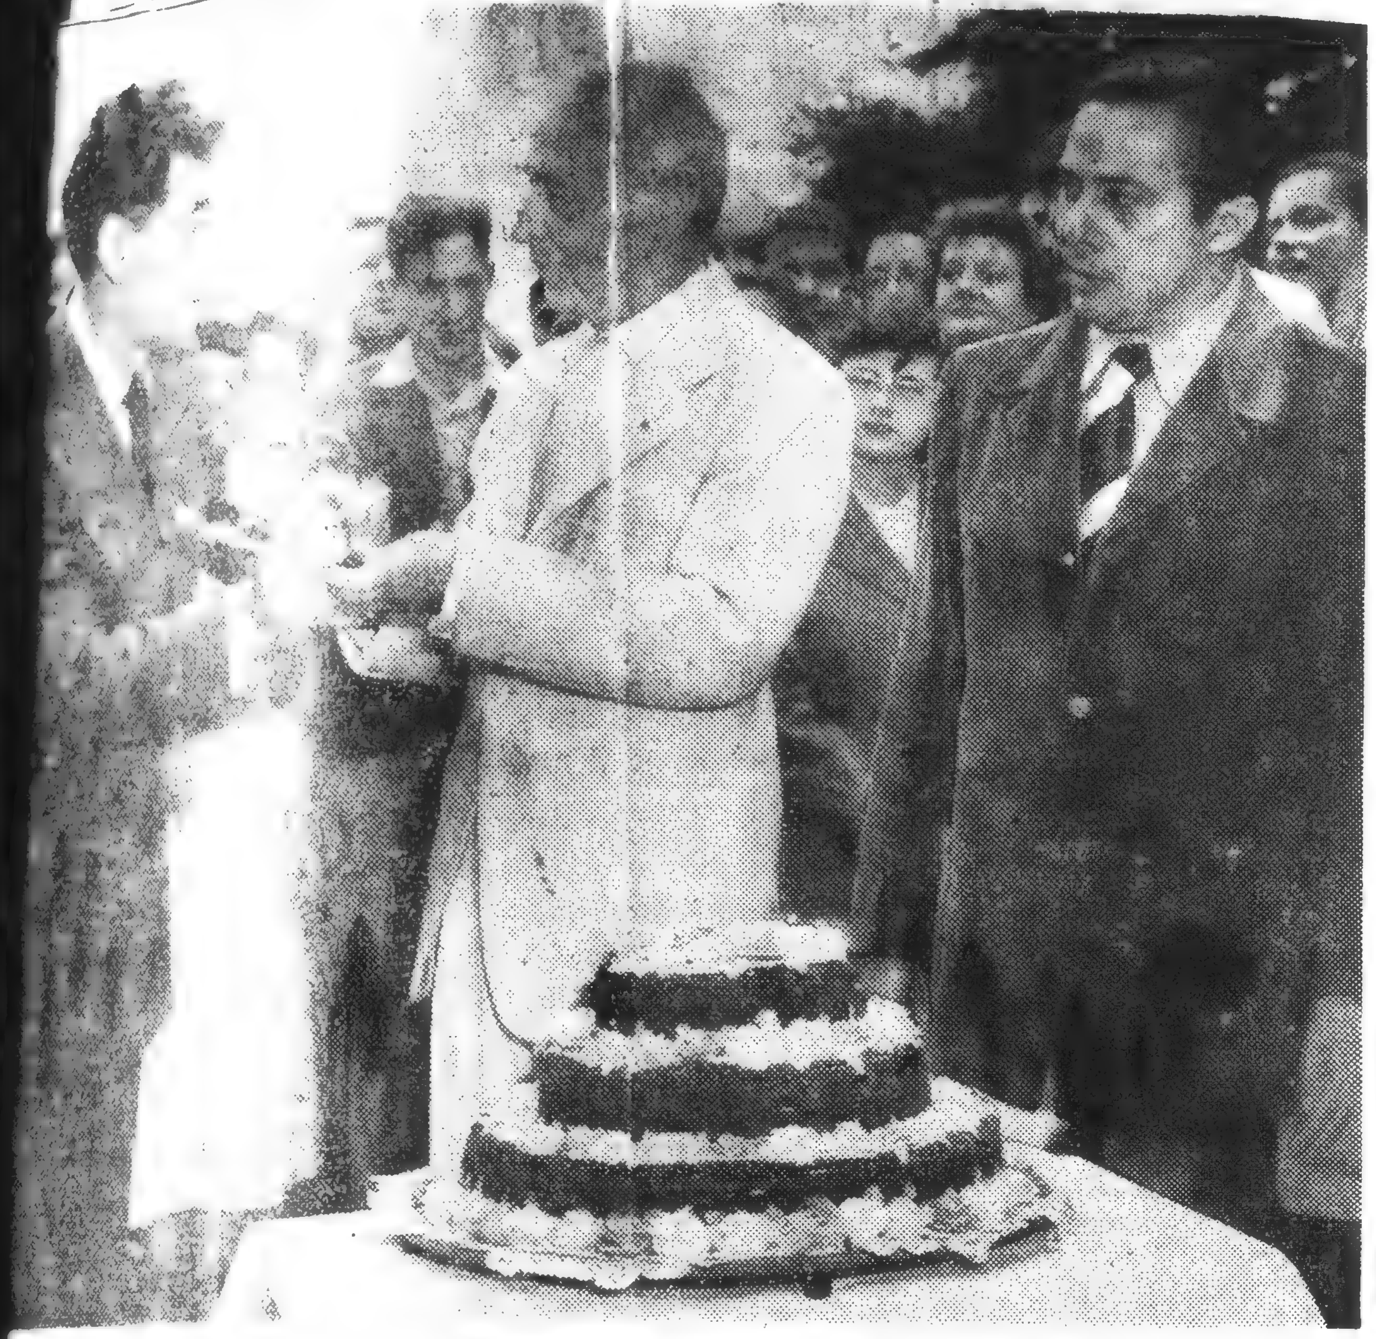
This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE



PPY BIRTHDAY: Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Berkshire Music Center, was in a l mood yesterday afternoon at Tanglewood when he was given a surprise party on his 74th birthday 00 students and guests of the center. Here he passes a piece of his birthday cake to Leonard Bern-, while Eleazear de Carvalho of the conducting staff looks on. A chorus made up of students sang ppy Birthday to Koussevitzky," composed in 1941 by Lucas Foss, followed by the high light of the noon when a trio of student conductors, Seymour Lipkin, pianist, Irwin Hoffman, violinist, and Howard Shanet, cellist, played the "Koussevitzky Blues," written and narrated by Bernstein.

This Clipping From LEWISTON, ME.
JOURNAL

JUL 27 1948

Victor Polatschek, Boston Symphony Clarinetist, Dies

PITTSFIELD, Mass.- AP -Victor Polatschek, 53, first clarinetist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, died suddenly today at his summer home on Lake Mahkeenac.

He was stricken apparently with a heart ailment a few hours before scheduled to play the Bach-Mozart series of concerts at the Berkshire festival at Tanglewood.

Polatschek was an outstanding soloist in Europe before coming to the United States in 1930 to join the Boston Symphony at the request of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

Born in Czechoslovakia, Polatschek served with the Austrian army in World War I. He studied at the Vienna Academy of Music and later played with the State Opera in Vienna and the Vienna philharmonic.

He leaves his widow, the former Fredericke Loeffler of Boston, and a sister in Vienna.

This Clipping From
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

JUL 27 1948

BERKSHIRE MUSEUM PLANS ANNUAL EXHIBIT

Summer Members' Night to Feature Mestrovic Exhibit Aug. 6

The grand opening of the Ivan Mestrovic exhibition of sculpture and drawings will be featured Friday evening, Aug. 6, at the annual Summer Members' night of the Berkshire museum in Pittsfield.

The program will begin at 8.30 o'clock with a series of color motion pictures on "Places You Would Like to Visit." A short film entitled "Secrets of Sculpture," based on the methods of the exhibitor, also will be shown.

Open house, beginning at 9.30 o'clock, will feature the grand opening, and also included in the exhibits will be one organized by the Boston Symphony orchestra comprising composer's autographs, and also musical instruments from the Casadesus collection of old musical instruments.

Music during the evening will be furnished by the Kingman-Bullock trio. Refreshments will be served.

This Clipping From LEWISTON, ME.
SUN

JUL 27 1948

Berkshire Festival Highlight To Be Guest Composer's Music

In special recognition of Darius Milhaud, guest composer at the Berkshire Music Center this summer, the Berkshire Festival program of Sunday afternoon, Aug. 1, has been altered to include a performance by the Boston Symphony Orchestra of his Symphony No. 2. The composer himself will conduct, according to Serge Koussevitzky, music director of the orchestra and director of the school.

The Milhaud work comes in the first week of concerts in the Music Shed by the full orchestra. The first of the big series is Thursday evening, July 29, when the program will include the Bach Suite in D major, No. 3, Hindemith's "Mathis der Maler," and the Fifth Symphony of Beethoven, Dr. Koussevitzky conducting.

The remainder of the program on Aug. 1 will be given to Mahler's Symphony No. 2 in D major, the "Resurrection," with the Festival chorus of 250 voices with Ellabelle Davis, soprano, and Nan Merriman, mezzo-soprano, as soloists, Leonard Bernstein conducting.

Commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and dedicated to the memory of Madame Natalie Koussevitzky, the Milhaud Symphony No. 2 was performed for the first time anywhere by the orchestra in Boston in 1946 also under the baton of the composer.

Milhaud and Honegger, who wa guest composer at Tanglewood las summer, are generally acknowledged as the most prominent of the celebrated "Groupe des Six," the six young French composers who were strongly influenced by Satie and Cocteau after the First World War Before that Milhaud spent two years in Brazil and his music fel the exotic dance rhythms of that country. He also made use of American Jazz. During the years 1941-46 he taught at Mills College in Oakland, Calif.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

JUL 27

Victor Polatschek, BSO Clarinetist, Dies Suddenly

Victor Polatschek

STOCKBRIDGE — Victor Polatschek, 59, first clarinetist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, died suddenly at 7 this morning at his summer home on the eastern shore of Lake Mahkeenac. A member of the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center, he was playing in the Bach-Mozart series of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, and was to have played tonight. He attended Dr. Serge Koussevitzky's 74th birthday party at Tanglewood yesterday afternoon.

Born in Czechoslovakia, Mr. Polatschek lived in Vienna until he came to the United States in 1930 at the request of Dr. Koussevitzky to join the Boston orchestra. He studied at the Vienna Academy of Music, later becoming soloist and teacher there. He played with the State Opera and the Vienna Philharmonic Orchestras.

Although he served in the Austrian Army in World War I, he became an American citizen as soon as possible after arriving in this country. He assisted members of his family when Austria was devastated by World War II, making it possible for some of them to come to the United States. He was one of the first members of the Boston Orchestra to buy a summer home in the Berkshires. He is survived by his widow, the former Fredericko Loeffler, and a sister in Vienna.

The funeral will be held this afternoon at 4:30 at the Kelly Funeral Home in Lee. The body will be taken to Boston tomorrow for burial.

This Clipping From
YOUNGSTOWN, OHIO
VINDICATOR

JUL 27 1948

Bach Concertos Feature Berkshire Program at 9:30

"America's Town Meeting" discussion of international law, "We, The People" interview with a celebrated Philippino leper heroine. "The Berkshire Festival" salute to the music of Bach and the "Hit the Jackpot" program with over $15,000 in prizes at stake highlight the air shows tonight.

Clarence Streit, president of Federal Union, Inc., an executive officer of the United World Federalists, a former official of the British Broadcasting Corporation, and a woman judge will participate on the ABC broadcast of "America's Town Meeting" from Eugene, Oregon tonight at 8:30 over WFMJ. They will discuss the topic: "How Should the United Nations Progressively Establish International Law?"

Senator Wayne Morse (R. Ore.), member of the Senate Armed Services Committee and the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, will preside as moderator of the broadcast. George V. Denny, Jr., president of Town Hall and originator of the ABC series, is on vacation.

Boris Karloff

Rostrum speakers during the broadcast are: Streit, editor of Freedom and Union, and author of "Union Now with Britain," Allan Cranston, member of the national executive board and chairman of the North California branch of the United World Federalists; Stephen Fry, a naturalized American, formerly program director of the BBC and member of the Colonial Office in Palestine, and Judge Reba Beck Bosone of Salt Lake City, first woman judge in Utah and member of the Utah State Board of the American Association of the United Nations.

PHILLIPINO LEPER HEROINE. Mrs. Josefina Guerroro will be one of three persons interviewed from the National Leprosarium at Carville, La., on "We, the People," at 9 tonight over WKBN. Mrs. Guerroro has just come to this country for treatment at Carville. During the war, "Joey," joined the underground in Manilla and aided internees and U. S. prisoners of war by bringing them food, clothes, medicine and messages. Since the Japs had a great dread of lepers, she was left pretty much alone, and was therefore, able to spy on Japanese activities for the U. S. forces. When the war was over, Mrs. Guerroro's American friends persuaded Attorney General Tom Clark to waive immigration restrictions and permit her to enter the National Leprosarium for treatment.

Also on this unusual broadcast from the Leprosarium will be Major and Mrs. Hans Hornbostel, who were heard on the "We, the People" some months ago. Major Hornbostel entered the leprosarium to be with his wife who is under treatment there.

News from WFMJ

(By Associated Press, United Press, ABC and The Vindicator)

Tuesday night—4:30, 6:30, 7*, 11, 12, 12:30 and 12:55.

Wednesday day—6, 6:30, 7, 7:45, 8*, 8:55, noon, 1*, 2 and 4:30 p. m.

Bulletins and special broadcasts will be given whenever events warrant.

*American Networks newscasts.

Back in New York, Dwight Weist will interview movie horror man, Boris Karloff; Metropolitan Opera Star James Melton, who will introduce his protege, soprano Lillian Murphy of Kansas City and Miss Jane Bowman, veteran woman banker of Akron.

DR. SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY will open the second "Berkshire Festival" over WFMJ at 9:30 p. m. with Bach's "Concerto in D Minor" for three pianos and strings. Soloists will be Lukas Foss, Bernard Zighera and Ralph Berkowitz, pianists. The final number, also a Bach score, will find the three pianists participating in the "Concerto in C Major." for the same combination.

Bach is said to have written these two triple piano concertos for performances by himself and his sons, Philip Emanuel and Wilhelm Friedmann Bach. A few string players would be called in to provide background accompaniment. At times the three keyboards act as one, at other times, the themes are bandied back and forth or dovetailed into a distinct pattern.

Between the two concertos, the "Suite No. 2" will be presented with Georges Laurent, flutist, as soloist.

OVER $15,000 WORTH OF PRIZES will be dangled tantalizingly before contestants on CBS' "Hit the Jackpot" over WKBN at 9:30 tonight. All the contestant has to do is to try and guess the correct solution of a "secret sentence." The "secret sentence" is conveyed to listeners by sound effects and dramatic vignettes giving clues to the key words.

Other Programs Tonight

6:45-WKBN—John Kieran, editor of the "Information Please Almanac," takes over the news while Lowell Thomas goes on a one-week vacation.

8:30-WRRN—A chilling story of a group of criminals who tried to pad the votes in an election, until the election turned into an electrocution, will be heard on Mutual's "Official Detective" program.

8:30-WKBN—The Cleveland Indians-Philadelphia Athletics baseball game over FM. The game will be re-broadcast at 10 p. m. over regular AM frequencies.

10:30-WTAM—"An Evening with Romberg" presents vocal selections by Brunetta Mazzolini, soprano, and John Howard, baritone, with the concert orchestra under the direction of composer-director, Sigmund Romberg.

11:30-WFMJ—"Orchestra Hall" presents the second and third movements of Paderewski's "Piano Concerto in A Minor," played by Jesus Maria Sanroma; a duet from "Rigoletto" sung by Schymberg and Bjoerling; and the "Magic Fire Music" from Wagner's "Die Walkyrie" played by the Philadelphia Orchestra.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

JUL 27 1948

Festival to Hear Milhaud Symphony

In special recognition of Darius Milhaud, guest composer at the Berkshire Music Center this summer, the Berkshire Festival program of Sunday afternoon has been altered to include a performance by the Boston Symphony Orchestra of his Symphony No. 2. The composer himself will conduct, according to Serge Koussevitzky, music director of the orchestra and director of the school.

The Milhaud work comes in the first week of concerts in the Music Shed by the full orchestra. The first of the big series is Thursday evening when the program will include Bach Suite in D major No. 3, Hindemith's "Mathis der Maler," and the Fifth Symphony of Beethoven, Dr. Koussevitzky conducting.

* * *

THE REMAINDER of the program on Aug. 1 will be given to Mahler's Symphony No. 2 in D major, the "Resurrection," with the festival chorus of 250 voices with Ellabelle Davis, soprano, and Nan Merriman, mezzo-soprano, as soloists, Leonard Bernstein conducting.

Commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and dedicated to the memory of Mme. Natalie Koussevitzky, the Milhaud Symphony No. 2 was performed for the first time anywhere by the orchestra in Boston in 1946 also under the baton of the composer.

* * *

MESSRS. MILHAUD and Honegger, who was guest composer Tanglewood last summer, are generally acknowledged as the most prominent of the celebrated "groupe des six," the six young French composers who were strongly influenced by Satie and Cocteau after the first World War. Before thta Mr. Milhaud spent two years in Brazil and his music felt the exotic dance rhythms of that country. He also made use of American jazz. During the years 1941-46 he taught at Mills College in Oakland, Calif.

This Clipping From
SAN DIEGO, CAL.
TRIBUNE SUN

DEL MAR BROADCAST OMITTED FROM ALL LOCAL SCHEDULES

By DOROTHY MAHONEY

None of the local stations will carry live, or recreated broadcasts of Del Mar horse races, opening today. The network outlets, of course, don't have available time. Of the independents, KUSN has scheduled commercial shows that can't be canceled, KYOR doesn't feel it can go to the expense of carrying the races without a sponsor, and KSON is in a state of indecision: "We just don't know."

* * *

"Scotty" Doggett, 16, won't be here this fall to tootle the call to colors at San Diego High School, as he did last year, but he's doing pretty well with his trumpet in San Francisco. Scotty won $250 on the Horace Heidt program Sunday when he defeated a 7-time winner by playing both trumpet and banjo in his first appearance. He will return Sunday to compete with other contestants on the broadcast at 7:30 p.m. on KFSD.

Scotty Doggett

Scotty, who was born and reared in San Diego, moved to the northern city in October with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Reginald Doggett. He was a member of the Youth Symphony here.

* * *

Newscaster Lowell Thomas will leave New York today for California on his second vacation in 18 years. John Kieran will substitute for Thomas on his programs Monday through Friday on KNX at 8 p.m.

* * *

Bob Carroll, singing star of "California Melodies," heard on KGB, 6:30 p.m., Monday, left yesterday for Honolulu with Andy Russell and the Pied Pipers, to aid in the Hawaiian Rice Relief program.

* * *

Don't feel badly if you don't know as much about television as you think you should. Australia has decided to take television seriously. The Dominion government plans to spend an initial $1,200,000 setitng up experimental stations in six cities. Spurring the action, it is said, is new awareness of television's defense value in event of war.

Even further behind are the commercial industries. They won't be able to produce television sets for 2 more years!

* * *

SPORTS BROADCASTS—Padres play the Solons at Lane Field, KUSN, 8:15 p.m. . . . George May, sponsor of the annual Tam O'Shanter golf tournament is interviewed, KFMB, 10:15 p.m.

PROGRAM HIGHLIGHTS—"Ein Heldenleben," by Richard Strauss, is played on "Summer Symphony," KUSN, 6 p.m. . . . Merchandise worth $15.000 is at stake on "Hit the Jackpot," KSDJ, 6:30 p.m. . . . Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducts program of Bach music on Berkshire Festival broadcast, KFMB, 6:30 p.m. . . . "An Evening With Romberg," KFSD, 7:30 p.m. . . . "Count of Monte Cristo" accompanies a pirate captain to find a hidden treasure, KGB, 8 p.m. . . .

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

Tanglewood

Tonight at 8.15

First Berkshire Festival concert in the Music Shed, by Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting: Bach Suite in D major, Hindemith's "Mathis der Maler" Symphony, Beethoven's fifth symphony.

Tomorrow Afternoon

The orchestra of Department 6, directed by Frederick Fennell, will play the following program at 4.30:

Overture to The Magic Flute ..... Mozart
Symphony No. 2 in C major
Robert Schumann
Adagio esprressivo
Allegro molto vivace
Symphonic variations for piano and orchestra .... Franck
Irene Rosenberg, Pianist
Suite-Francaise .... Milhaud
Normandie
Bretagne
Ile de France
Alsace-Lorraine
Provence

Tomorrow Night

The orchestra of Department 2 will play in the Shed:

Reformation Symphony ..... Mendelssohn
Howard Shanet, conductor
Concerto for two violins .... Bach
Soloist: Zvi Zeitlin, Josef Bernstein
Conductor: Seymour Lipkin
Symphony for classical orchestra
Harold Shapero
Also Sprach Zarathustra ...... R. Strauss
Eleazar deCarvalho, conductor

The soloists for the concerts are from Palestine. The classical symphony was commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and given its world premiere last January by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Leonard Bernstein. The composer studied composition and conducting at the Berkshire Music Center.

All student events are open to Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

Robinson Writes Article For 'The American Girl'

Francis Robinson, well-known press agent for Katharine Cornell, who is assisting in the publicity department of the Berkshire Music Center again this season, is the author of an article on Tanglewood appearing in the August issue of the American Girl magazine. His article on the life of a typical student at the Music Center is illustrated with several photographs of students in rehearsal at Tanglewood as well as photographs of the Music Shed and the theatre concert hall.

This Clipping From
BALTIMORE, MD.
MORNING SUN

Boston Symphony's 1st Clarinetist Dies

Pittsfield, Mass., July 27 (AP)—Victor Polatschek, 53, first clarinetist with the Boston Symphony Ocrhestra died suddenly today at his summer home on Lake Mahkeenac.

He was stricken apparently with a heart ailment a few hours before scheduled to play the Bach-Mozart series of concerts at the Berkshire festival at Tanglewood.

Polatschek was a noted soloist in Europe before coming to the United States in 1930 to join the Boston Symphony at the request of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. Born in Czechoslovakia, Polatschek served with the Austrian Army in World War I.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

JUL 28 1948

Victor Polatschek, 53; With Boston Symphony

PITTSFIELD, Mass., July 27 (AP).—Victor Polatschek, fifty-three, first clarinetist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, died unexpectedly today at his summer home on Lake Mahkeenac. He was stricken apparently with a heart ailment a few hours before he was scheduled to play the Bach-Mozart series of concerts at the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood.

Mr. Polatschek was an outstanding soloist in Europe before coming to the United States in 1930 to join the Boston Symphony at the invitation of Dr. Serge Koussevitsky. He was born in Czechoslovakia, and served with the Austrian Army in World War I. He studied at the Vienna Academy of Music and later played with the State Opera in Vienna and the Vienna Philharmonic.

Surviving are his wife, the former Fredericke Loeffler, of Boston, and a sister in Vienna.

Adviser to Marks Corporation

Last December Mr. Polatschek was appointed adviser in woodwind music to the Edward B. Marks Music Corporation, of New York.

This Clipping From VARIETY
NEW YORK, N. Y.

JUL 28 1948

Berskshire Music Festivals Do Big

By HAROLD M. BONE

Lee, Mass., July 27.

While other portions of the amusement field are laying in a fresh supply of crying towels, this particular segment of the entertainment world hasn't even sounded its A for a chorus of the Berkshire Blues.

As a matter of fact, despite a marked falling off in tourist travel as compared to a year ago, with previously jammed inns operating considerably below capacity, this mountain-top diversion triangle bounded by Lee, Lenox and Stockbridge reports activities on the upbeat over former seasons. Projects involved are the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood; the Berkshire Playhouse, Stockbridge; the Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival, Lee.

Contrary to reports emanating from similar music centers, the Festival at Tanglewood is off to a banner season. First two concerts (July 18 and 20) on the schedule of 14 were complete sellouts. These were held in the Theatre-Concert Hall, capacity of which is 1,200. Exterior bench and lawn facilities brought total attendance to 2,440 and 1,900, respectively. General admission to grounds is $2, with a reserved seat top of $4.

Concerts in the Music Shed, with its 6,000 capacity, will be given intermittently from July 29 to Aug. 15. Lawn facilities here make attendance possibilities total more than double interior capacity. Top scale for these concerts is $6 for box seats, and advance sales have already taken on a healthy hue. Noteworthy is the fact that high-priced tickets are the first to go.

Set for Aug. 3 is a special benefit, "Tanglewood On Parade," to aid creative artists of the Old World. A price range of $2.50 to $5 has brought substantial early reservations. The above program, plus the teaching of a student body exceeding 400 members, stamps this as one of Tanglewood's most active seasons to date.

Stockbridge Biz Okay

At Stockbridge, William Miles has approached the halfway mark of the Berkshire Playhouse's 17th season with figures on the right side of the ledger at the end of the fifth week. Schedule to date has included "Skin of Our Teeth," "John Loves Mary," "The Intimate Strangers," "I Like It Here" and the tryout of "Coming Thro' The Rye," musical. Reaction to the break-in angle has been favorable enough to prompt presentation of a second new play, "The Happiest Years," set for Aug. 16. Total schedule is 11 weeks.

Playhouse, a former casino originally designed by Stanford White, has a capacity of 426 and is scaled at $2.94 top. Being the only strawhat within a radius of some 60 miles, spot has things pretty much to itself within a wide area.

Number three in the Berkshire entertainment triumvirate is Ted Shawn's Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival. It's a combination of dance instruction and public presentation which is meeting with success amid wilderness surroundings. Although the enterprise is a non-profit venture which stresses the fact that it is motivated purely by its educational aspects "and does not intend or attempt to purvey entertainment to the public as in a commercial theatre," nevertheless it is apparent that a fair portion of its audience attends primarily for the purpose of seeking—and incidentally finding—such entertainment.

Despite the fact that income from tuition and theatre admissions does not cover the cost of operating this project, thus necessitating patron assistance, it is significant that commercial success has been attained to the extent of sellouts for practically all performances of the first three programs. Capacity is 500, with a scale of matinees $1.80 and nights $2.40.

Highlight of the current season is listed for Aug. 27-28 when Ted Shawn will world premiere his newest group choreography, with music by Richard Mallaby.

19519619

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

JUL 28 1948

Actor Wesley Addy To Be Narrator for 'Peter and the Wolf'

Wesley Addy

TANGLEWOOD — Actor Wesley Addy, who made his last appearance in the county at the Berkshire Playhouse in 1940 when he appeared in Samuel Raphaelson's play, "In My Opinion," will return to the Berkshires next week. He will be the narrator in Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf," with the Boston Symphony Orchestra ~~at Tanglewood Tuesday night in~~ the four-hour benefit, "Tanglewood on Parade," for needy musicians in Europe. Festivities will begin at 6 PM with a procession of students of the Berkshire Music Center to be followed by simultaneous performances in all departments of the school.

This Clipping From PORTLAND, ORE.
OREGONIAN

Berkshire Festival

Three pianists and a flutist will be heard as soloists with the string section of the Boston Symphony orchestra when the second broadcast of the current Berkshire Festival is aired on KEX at 6:30.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will open the broadcast with Bach's "Concerto in D Minor" for three pianos and strings. Soloists will be Lukas Foss, Bernard Zighera and Ralph Berkowitz, pianist. The final number, also a Bach score, will find the three pianists participating in the "Concerto in C Major," for the same combination.

Between the two concertos, the "Suite No. 2" will be presented with Georges Laurent, flutist, as soloist.

Truman—From Behind

"During President Truman's acceptance speech in Philadelphia, it was fully as interesting to watch the chief executive's footwork, as to hear what he had to say," according to Leslie Nichols of MBS.

"Perhaps this is old stuff to people who've sat behind Mr. Truman during a major address," he continued "but I never realized the extent to which he rolls and dances like a trained boxer. It's not that he jumps around, or anything quite as spectacular as that. But he shifts his weight constantly from one leg to the other, and all the time he appears to be carrying his weight on the balls of his feet.

Delivering Punch Point

"And then, just as he drives home a punch point, one or the other foot rises ever so slightly from the floor. You can't be sure which foot is going to come up because it depends on which hand the president is using for a gesture. For example, if the gesture is with the right hand, then all his weight will go to the right foot . . . and the left foot will come up.

"This is not to suggest that Mr. Truman is involved in a capering act behind the speaker's stand. Actually he carries himself erect . . . in fact, he has excellent posture. But during a speech of any length, he apparently has acquired the knack of balancing himself with perfect ease and grace . . . and you can't really appreciate how it's done until you observe him from behind."

[203]

This Clipping From
SAN DIEGO, CAL.
TRIBUNE SUN
JUL 2 [illegible] 1948

DEL MAR BROADCAST OMITTED FROM ALL LOCAL SCHEDULES

By DOROTHY MAHONEY

None of the local stations will carry live, or recreated broadcasts of Del Mar horse races, opening today. The network outlets, of course, don't have available time. Of the independents, KUSN has scheduled commercial shows that can't be canceled, KYOR doesn't feel it can go to the expense of carrying the races without a sponsor, and KSON is in a state of indecision: "We just don't know."

* * *

"Scotty" Doggett, 16, won't be here this fall to tootle the call to colors at San Diego High School, as he did last year, but he's doing pretty well with his trumpet in San Francisco. Scotty won $250 on the Horace Heidt program Sunday when he defeated a 7-time winner by playing both trumpet and banjo in his first appearance. He will return Sunday to compete with other contestants on the broadcast at 7:30 p.m. on KFSD.

Scotty Doggett

Scotty, who was born and reared in San Diego, moved to the northern city in October with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Reginald Doggett. He was a member of the Youth Symphony here.

* * *

Newscaster Lowell Thomas will leave New York today for California on his second vacation in 18 years. John Kieran will substitute for Thomas on his programs Monday through Friday on KNX at 8 p.m.

* * *

Bob Carroll, singing star of "California Melodies," heard on KGB, 6:30 p.m., Monday, left yesterday for Honolulu with Andy Russell and the Pied Pipers, to aid in the Hawaiian Rice Relief program.

* * *

Don't feel badly if you don't know as much about television as you think you should. Australia has decided to take television seriously. The Dominion government plans to spend an initial $1,200,000 setitng up experimental stations in six cities. Spurring the action, it is said, is new awareness of television's defense value in event of war.

Even further behind are the commercial industries. They won't be able to produce television sets for 2 more years!

* * *

SPORTS BROADCASTS—Padres play the Solons at Lane Field, KUSN, 8:15 p.m. . . . George May, sponsor of the annual Tam O'Shanter golf tournament is interviewed, KFMB, 10:15 p.m.

PROGRAM HIGHLIGHTS—"Ein Heldenleben," by Richard Strauss, is played on "Summer Symphony," KUSN, 6 p.m. . . . Merchandise worth $15,000 is at stake on "Hit the Jackpot," KSDJ, 6:30 p.m. . . . Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducts program of Bach music on Berkshire Festival broadcast, KFMB, 6:30 p.m. . . . "An Evening With Romberg," KFSD, 7:30 p.m. . . . "Count of Monte Cristo" accompanies a pirate captain to find a hidden treasure, KGB, 8 p.m. . . .

This Clipping From
BALTIMORE, MD.
MORNING SUN
JUL 28 1948

Boston Symphony's 1st Clarinetist Dies

Pittsfield, Mass., July 27 (AP)—Victor Polatschek, 53, first clarinetist with the Boston Symphony Ocrhestra, died suddenly today at his summer home on Lake Mahkeenac.

He was stricken apparently with a heart ailment a few hours before scheduled to play the Bach-Mozart series of concerts at the Berkshire festival at Tanglewood.

Polatschek was a noted soloist in Europe before coming to the United States in 1930 to join the Boston Symphony at the request of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. Born in Czechoslovakia, Polatschek served with the Austrian Army in World War I.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
JUL 29 1948

Tanglewood

Tonight at 8.15

First Berkshire Festival concert in the Music Shed, by Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting. Bach Suite in D major, Hindemith's "Mathis der Maler" Symphony, Beethoven's fifth symphony.

Tomorrow Afternoon

The orchestra of Department 6, directed by Frederick Fennell, will play the following program at 4.30:

Overture to The Magic Flute ..... Mozart
Symphony No. 2 in C major
Robert Schumann
Adagio esprressivo
Allegro molto vivace
Symphonic variations for piano and orchestra .... Franck
Irene Rosenberg, Pianist
Suite Francaise .... Milhaud
Normandie
Bretagne
Ile de France
Alsace-Lorraine
Provence

Tomorrow Night

The orchestra of Department 2 will play in the Shed:

Reformation Symphony ..... Mendelssohn
Howard Shanet, conductor
Concerto for two violins .... Bach
Soloist: Zvi Zeitlin, Josef Bernstein
Conductor: Seymour Lipkin
Symphony for classical orchestra
Harold Shapero
Also Sprach Zarathustra ...... R. Strauss
Eleazar deCarvalho, conductor

The soloists for the concerts are from Palestine. The classical symphony was commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and given its world premiere last January by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Leonard Bernstein. The composer studied composition and conducting at the Berkshire Music Center.

All student events are open to Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

Robinson Writes Article For 'The American Girl'

Francis Robinson, well-known press agent for Katharine Cornell, who is assisting in the publicity department of the Berkshire Music Center again this season, is the author of an article on Tanglewood appearing in the August issue of the American Girl magazine. His article on the life of a typical student at the Music Center is illustrated with several photographs of students in rehearsal at Tanglewood as well as photographs of the Music Shed and the theatre concert hall.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
JUL 28 1948

Victor Polatschek, 53; With Boston Symphony

PITTSFIELD, Mass., July 27 (AP).—Victor Polatschek, fifty-three, first clarinetist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, died unexpectedly today at his summer home on Lake Mahkeenac. He was stricken apparently with a heart ailment a few hours before he was scheduled to play the Bach-Mozart series of concerts at the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood.

Mr. Polatschek was an outstanding soloist in Europe before coming to the United States in 1930 to join the Boston Symphony at the invitation of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. He was born in Czechoslovakia, and served with the Austrian Army in World War I. He studied at the Vienna Academy of Music and later played with the State Opera in Vienna and the Vienna Philharmonic.

Surviving are his wife, the former Fredericke Loeffler, of Boston, and a sister in Vienna.

Adviser to Marks Corporation

Last December Mr. Polatschek was appointed adviser in woodwind music to the Edward B. Marks Music Corporation, of New York.

This Clipping From VARIETY
NEW YORK, N. Y.
JUL 28 1948

Berskshire Music Festivals Do Big

By HAROLD M. BONE

Lee, Mass., July 27.

While other portions of the amusement field are laying in a fresh supply of crying towels, this particular segment of the entertainment world hasn't even sounded its A for a chorus of the Berkshire Blues.

As a matter of fact, despite a marked falling off in tourist travel as compared to a year ago, with previously jammed inns operating considerably below capacity, this mountain-top diversion triangle bounded by Lee, Lenox and Stockbridge reports activities on the upbeat over former seasons. Projects involved are the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood; the Berkshire Playhouse, Stockbridge; the Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival, Lee.

Contrary to reports emanating from similar music centers, the Festival at Tanglewood is off to a banner season. First two concerts (July 18 and 20) on the schedule of 14 were complete sellouts. These were held in the Theatre-Concert Hall, capacity of which is 1,200. Exterior bench and lawn facilities brought total attendance to 2,440 and 1,900, respectively. General admission to grounds is $2, with a reserved seat top of $4.

Concerts in the Music Shed, with its 6,000 capacity, will be given intermittently from July 29 to Aug. 15. Lawn facilities here make attendance possibilities total more than double interior capacity. Top scale for these concerts is $6 for box seats, and advance sales have already taken on a healthy hue. Noteworthy is the fact that high-priced tickets are the first to go.

Set for Aug. 3 is a special benefit, "Tanglewood On Parade," to aid creative artists of the Old World. A price range of $2.50 to $5 has brought substantial early reservations. The above program, plus the teaching of a student body exceeding 400 members, stamps this as one of Tanglewood's most active seasons to date.

Stockbridge Biz Okay

At Stockbridge, William Miles has approached the halfway mark of the Berkshire Playhouse's 17th season with figures on the right side of the ledger at the end of the fifth week. Schedule to date has included "Skin of Our Teeth," "John Loves Mary," "The Intimate Strangers," "I Like It Here" and the tryout of "Coming Thro' The Rye," musical. Reaction to the break-in angle has been favorable enough to prompt presentation of a second new play, "The Happiest Years," set for Aug. 16. Total schedule is 11 weeks.

Playhouse, a former casino originally designed by Stanford White, has a capacity of 426 and is scaled at $2.94 top. Being the only strawhat within a radius of some 60 miles, spot has things pretty much to itself within a wide area.

Number three in the Berkshire entertainment triumvirate is Ted Shawn's Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival. It's a combination of dance instruction and public presentation which is meeting with success amid wilderness surroundings. Although the enterprise is a non-profit venture which stresses the fact that it is motivated purely by its educational aspects "and does not intend or attempt to purvey entertainment to the public as in a commercial heatre," nevertheless it is apparent that a fair portion of its audience attends primarily for the purpose of seeking—and incidentally finding—such entertainment.

Despite the fact that income from tuition and theatre admissions does not cover the cost of operating this project, thus necessitating patron assistance, it is significant that commercial success has been attained to the extent of sellouts for practically all performances of the first three programs. Capacity is 500, with a scale of matinees $1.80 and nights $2.40.

Highlight of the current season is listed for Aug. 27-28 when Ted Shawn will world premiere his newest group choreography, with music by Richard Mallaby.

195 19 619

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
JUL 28 1948

Actor Wesley Addy To Be Narrator for 'Peter and the Wolf'

Wesley Addy

TANGLEWOOD — Actor Wesley Addy, who made his last appearance in the county at the Berkshire Playhouse in 1940 when he appeared in Samuel Raphaelson's play, "In My Opinion," will return to the Berkshires next week. He will be the narrator in Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf," with the Boston Symphony Orchestra ~~at Tanglewood~~ [illegible] the four-hour benefit, "Tanglewood on Parade," for needy musicians in Europe. Festivities will begin at 6 PM with a procession of students of the Berkshire Music Center to be followed by simultaneous performances in all departments of the school.

This Clipping From PORTLAND, ORE.
OREGONIAN
JUL 27 1948

Berkshire Festival

Three pianists and a flutist will be heard as soloists with the string section of the Boston Symphony orchestra when the second broadcast of the current Berkshire Festival is aired on KEX at 6:30.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will open the broadcast with Bach's "Concerto in D Minor" for three pianos and strings. Soloists will be Lukas Foss, Bernard Zighera and Ralph Berkowitz, pianist. The final number, also a Bach score, will find the three pianists participating in the "Concerto in C Major," for the same combination.

Between the two concertos, the "Suite No. 2" will be presented with Georges Laurent, flutist, as soloist.

Truman—From Behind

"During President Truman's acceptance speech in Philadelphia, it was fully as interesting to watch the chief executive's footwork, as to hear what he had to say," according to Leslie Nichols of MBS.

"Perhaps this is old stuff to people who've sat behind Mr. Truman during a major address," he continued "but I never realized the extent to which he rolls and dances like a trained boxer. It's not that he jumps around, or anything quite as spectacular as that. But he shifts his weight constantly from one leg to the other, and all the time he appears to be carrying his weight on the balls of his feet.

Delivering Punch Point

"And then, just as he drives home a punch point, one or the other foot rises ever so slightly from the floor. You can't be sure which foot is going to come up because it depends on which hand the president is using for a gesture. For example, if the gesture is with the right hand, then all his weight will go to the right foot . . . and the left foot will come up.

"This is not to suggest that Mr. Truman is involved in a capering act behind the speaker's stand. Actually he carries himself erect . . . in fact, he has excellent posture. But during a speech of any length, he apparently has acquired the knack of balancing himself with perfect ease and grace . . . and you can't really appreciate how it's done until you observe him from behind."

LIFE-LONG PURPOSE

TIMES

Koussevitzky's Aid to Our Composers Highlights His Career Here

By OLIN DOWNES

THE announcements of the the forthcoming Berkshire Music Festival and of the opening of Dr. Koussevitzky's Berkshire Music Center, which is scheduled for next Wednesday, have a particular significance at this stage in the conductor's career.

The announcement of his retirement as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was news in the spring. News implicit in the announcement, to which no particular attention was given, was the fact that the leader gave no indication, express or implied, of his intention to retire from the direction of the Music Centre. And indeed Dr. Koussevitzky has no such intention. The Centre is the apple of his eye. It is no accident of his career, nor is it a recent conception with him.

He has developed this school in late years, not as an incidental offshoot of other activities which have long been a dominant obligation but actually as the fulfillment of a life-long purpose which has become more than a dream. It is the school which will receive the major part of Koussevitzky's time and effort, as he plans it, in the years before him—years which, at present numbering seventy-four, will be just as active and filled with projects vividly imagined and practically executed in the past of a man whose energy feeds on activity and with whom to live is to work and plan.

Planned School

The school was in fact Koussevitzky's fundamental motivation when he accepted the invitation of Gertrude Robinson Smith, then representing the Berkshire Festival Association, to come with the Boston Symphony to Stockbridge for an annual symphonic festival. He then stated his interest in the project, which, however, he would entertain not merely as the occasion for some crack orchestral performances under conditions that would ensure the highest artistic standards, but as the place at which he would be able to establish a music school which he had envisioned far back in his Russian days, and before circumstances made such an undertaking possible. With him the idea of the school has been entertained as an integral part of his life's plan.

GUEST ARTIST

Halman

Jan Peerce, tenor, appears at Stadium Thursday.

This is not a statement advanced to give journalistic color to a newspaper article. It is cited as something which throws a light upon the quality of one of the leading musicians of this epoch, and the singular breadth of his purpose which distinguishes Koussevitzky from all his colleagues, however gifted or pre-eminent.

Contrary to the general assumption of those who only know and hear one of the most famous of the virtuoso conductors of his period when he functions on the podium, Koussevitzky has never been a one-man show. He has had the normal ambitions and the human share of delight in success and acclaim which have accrued to one of the brilliant figures in a highly competitive field. This does not in the least modify the fact that it was the grand perspective of music seen in its broadest and most humanitarian aspects that has characterized his activity in every step of his development. No musician of this century has conducted such a broadly planned offensive on all the fronts of a distinguished interpreter's career.

Own Experience

Psychoanalysts—or sentimentalists—might talk lengthily of the effect upon Koussevitzky's thinking of his own experience as a young boy; when he left, against his father's bidding, the little Russian town of Vyshny Volochek in the province of Tver, arriving with nothing much even to keep him alive, to obtain the education he knew he had to have to fulfil his ideas. He will ever remember the shock of discovering that both the leading conservatories of Moscow had completed registration for the season, and that his chances of gaining adequate instruction had largely gone glimmering. He remembers how he surprised himself by his fury on breaking into the director's room of the Music School of the Philharmonic and interrupting that gentleman's complacent performance on the piano by stamping and shouting "I came to study at this conservatory." That was his start, at the conservatory which gave him the scholarship for the instrument that the orchestra was short of—the double-bass.

Thus the need of opportunities for the musical education of the young was early impressed upon Koussevitzky. That has happened to plenty of men of genius in circumstances similar to his. The distinction remains. One of the three most famous double-bass players that the world has known, in a position where he had all the fame and fortune that a feted virtuoso might need, he threw that in the wastebasket for a conductor's career. Again not an unnatural proceeding, or one lacking in self-interest. But the conductor of the first permanently organized symphony orchestra in Russia was not in the least content to give show performances for the dilettantes and fashionables of Moscow and St. Petersburg, as it then was called.

Concerts at 10 cents a ticket were given. Young composers, young virtuosos, were given opportunities to be heard with the orchestra. Russian musicians, now famous, made first appearances there. Then came the famous tour down the Volga, the concerts given at bridgeheads, to audiences which in most cases had never heard an orchestra before.

Friend of New

The conductor established a music publishing house. The conductor-publisher became the passionate protagonist of composers with new ideas—the composer from whom all music must flow.

Precisely the same policies and attitude, if not circumstance, have characterized Koussevitzky's course from the moment he arrived in America, in 1924, as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. And this has been of immense importance to American music.

Koussevitzky began immediately an investigation of contemporaneous American music. He did this in a way which has made history, greatly advancing the position of the native composer, inaugurating the most active and fruitful period of symphonic composition that the nation has known.

He played the music of young Americans. He gave them critical counsel when he rejected a piece. We recall his invitation privately issued to a certain composer, prominent today, to conduct at a rehearsal a score that was impracticably written, and profit by the experience. He once suggested to the writer that he listen carefully to certain measures in an overture which otherwise was commonplace. "But there are seventeen measures there," he said, "which show the real talent, and where there are seventeen good measures, there is more to come."

Gave Them Courage

One need not praise unstintedly all the new American or other music Koussevitzky has presented the public. But he gave the composers the opportunity and courage to proceed. They went to work with a new energy and faith in themselves. In the twenty-four years of his symphonic regime the native sons have produced scores unprecedented in number and of sufficient quality to indicate the beginnings of a national school. When he arrived here in 1924, it would hardly have been believed that twenty years later he could devote the two New York programs of the Boston Symphony Orchestra exclusively to American works composed since he came to our shores.

It is a whole period of American musical culture which he and his work represent. Young composers and conductors, teachers and students of ensemble, gather again this year at Tanglewood to participate in the activities of the Berkshire Music Centre, and in a number of instances to take part in the ensuing symphonic festival. Meanwhile, Dr. Koussevitzky drinks a health "to the next ten years" of the continuation of his service to the future of music in America.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
JUL 28 1948

Tanglewood Pays Tribute To Polatschek

Program Tonight Changed—Last Rites Held in Lee

In tribute to Victor Polatschek irst clarinetist of the Boston Symhony Orchestra, who died suddeny yesterday at his summer home t Lake Mahkeenac, the program f the chamber music concert at anglewood tonight will be hanged. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, onductor of the orchestra and Iusic Center director, described Ir. Polatschek as "one of the pilars of our organization," in his ribute to the well-known musician.

Tonight the slow movement of ie Mozart clarinet quintet will be ibstituted for the octet in F major or strings and winds in which Mr. olatschek was to have played the larinet part last night. Samuel C. alerio, a member of the orchesa, will assist the Boston Conservtory string quartet.

The string quartet in A minor nd the quintet in A major ("Die Forelle"), will be played as announced. The concert will be the last of four in the Schubert cycle contributed by Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge.

Dr. Koussevitzky's tribute to Mr. Polatschek follows:

The passing of Victor Polatschek is an inestimable loss to the Boston Symphony. During the 18 years of his association with the orchestra, he not only won the affectionate admiration and respect of his colleagues, but he also became one of the pillars of our organization. A strict disciplinarian, an uncompromising artist and a loyal member of the orchestra, he gave unreservedly of his devotion, enthusiasm and remarkable qualities,—for he was indeed an incomparable artist,—to serve music and maintain the highest standard of performance.

Death claimed Polatschek untimely, at the summit of his artistic attainment. Fate timed it so as to have not only his fellow-members of the orchestra but also his many pupils, among the students of the Berkshire Music Center, to mourn the esteemed artist and loved teacher.

To me personally it is a great shock—I profoundly share the feeling of grief and express my heartfelt sympathy to Mrs. Polatschek in her irreparable loss.

Funeral services for Mr. Polatchek were held yesterday afteroon at the Kelly Funeral Home in Le. Before the service a quintet, ade up of his colleagues with the oston Symphony Orchestra, played Iozart's "Legato." Members of the quintet were Gaston Elcus and Harry Dickson, violins; Albert Bernard, viola; Jacobus Langendoen, cello, and Manuel Valerio, clarinet.

Remarks were offered by Willem A. Balnekier, a colleague, who has played the horn with the orchestra since 1923, and a short eulogy was given by Rev. J. Herbert Owen, pastor of the Congregational Church in Lee.

The body was removed by motor to Boston today for burial.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN
JUL 29 1948

Paintings Going To Tanglewood

Part of a collection of flower paintings by Molly Guion, which have been on exhibition at the Kennedy Galleries, 785 Fifth avenue, were being sent today to Lenox, Mass., where they will go on display in connection with the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, a concert series featuring the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Miss Guion's paintings, viewed in a one-artist showing at the Kennedy Galleries from May 25 to July 15, will be seen in Lenox from August 9 through August 16.

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES-UNION
JUL 28 1948

Clarinetist In Symphony Dies in Lenox

LENOX, Mass., July 27 (INS)—Victor Polatschek, 59, first clarinet of the Boston Symphony orchestra, died today in Lenox.

Polatschek, also a member of the Berkshire Music Center summer school operated by Serge Koussevitsky, had a summer home in Lenox. His winter home was in Brookline.

He was known among musicians for the power, quality and facility of his playing and as one of the "voices" by which the Boston orchestra was identified.

Polatschek was born in Vienna. He was educated in the Austrian city and was first clarinet of the Vienna Philharmonic as well as a member of the State Opera of Vienna.

He served in the Austrian army in World War I. Polatschek is survived by his widow. Funeral plans will be announced later.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
JUL 29 1948

TANGLEWOOD SEASON WILL OPEN TONIGHT

Boston Symphony to Start Three Series of Summer Concerts

Dr. Serge Koussevitsky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra open the 1948 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood tonight. Three series of concerts will be given. These concerts will be given each Thursday and Saturday nights and Sunday afternoons.

For the opening program, Dr. Kousevitzky has chosen the following program: Bach-Suite No. 3 in D major; Hindemith-Symphony Mathias der Maler; Beethoven—"Symphony No. 5 in C Minor.

Saturday night the concert will open with Piston's "Symphony No. 3." Isac Stern, violinist, will be heard in the first violin concerto by Prokofieff and the concert will conclude with Brahms' "Symphony No. 1.

With the distinguished composer, Darius Milhaud, conducting, the Sunday concert will open with his First Symphony. Then Leonard Bernstein, young protege of Dr. Koussevitzky, and one of this country's most brilliant conductors, will take over and conduct a performance of the rarely heard "Symphony No. 2, the Ressurection" by Gustav Mahler. Ellabelle Davis and Nan Merriman will be the soloists.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
JUL 28 1948

Stockbridge

MRS. JOHN HEATHER
Tel. 429-W

Board of Selectmen Approve Licenses

STOCKBRIDGE—The following licenses were granted by the Board of Selectmen at their meeting, Monday evening: Boston Symphony Orchestra, a one-day beer license for Aug. 3, at Tanglewood; Richard Moody, an innholder's license for the Maples; the Stockbridge Golf Club, a one-day beer license for July 30; and to Mrs. Grace Richardson, a guest house license.

The Selectmen also appointed John A. McDonnell a special officer at Tanglewood.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
JUL 29 1948

FESTIVAL SOLOISTS: Ellabelle Davis, soprano, left, and Nan Merriman, mezzo-soprano, right, will be soloists with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood Sunday afternoon in the Mahler second ("Resurrection") symphony, with Leonard Bernstein conducting. Miss Davis and Mr. Bernstein scored a great success in this work in Boston last February. Miss Merriman will be making her first appearance with the Boston Symphony Orchestra Sunday.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
JUL 29 1948

Tribute Is Paid Dead Clarinetist

Lenox, July 28 (AP)—The program of the chamber music concert by the Boston Conservatory String Quartet at Tanglewood tonight was changed in tribute to Victor Polatschek, first clarinetist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who died yesterday.

The Octet in F Major for Strings and Winds in which Mr. Polatschek was to play the clarinet was replaced with the slow movement of Mozart's Clarinet Quintet.

The concert was the last in the Schubert cycle contributed by Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, prominent music lover and one of the Tanglewood sponsors.

Tomorrow night Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will present the first of the feature concerts of the Berkshire Music Festival.

The program will consist of Bach's Overture in D Major, Hindemuth's Symphony "Matthias the Painter" and Beethoven's Fifth Symphony.

This Clipping From
POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
NEW YORKER
JUL 29 1948

The second series of the Berkshire Festival will open in the shed Thursday, Aug. 5, Dr. Koussevitzky conducting a program including Stravinsky's "Oedipus Rex" with Carol Brice, mezzo soprano; David Lloyd, tenor; James Pease, baritone; Wesley Addy, speaker, and a male chorus. chorus.

The week will close with a symphony concert by students Friday night, Aug. 6 and a Festival program Saturday, including Prokofieff's "Romeo and Juliet," the first American performance of Vaughan Williams' Symphony No. 6, and Strauss "Don Quixote," Gregor Piatigorsky, soloist.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
JUL 28 1948

Tanglewood

Tonight at 8.15

Chamber music concert by the Boston Conservatory String Quartet, the gift of Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge.

Tomorrow Night at 8.15

First Berkshire Festival concert in the Shed. Serge Koussevitzky conducting.

Student Parties At Little Red House

Two parties will be held by students of the Berkshire Music Center in the Hawthorne Red House Friday and Saturday afternoons.

Friday at 3.30 students in the composition department will gather in honor of Walter Piston, who will be at Tanglewood to attend the performance of his third symphony by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, in the Shed Saturday night.

Members of Sigma Alpha Iota, national music fraternity, will meet Nan Merriman, contralto soloist in Gustav Mahler's "Resurrection" symphony No. 2. Mrs. DeGraffenried Ford of West Stockbridge will be hostess.

The parties will inaugurate the use of the restored cottage as a place for student festivities, one of the purposes for which it was presented to the Berkshire Music Center by the National Federation of Music Clubs.

Koussevitzky Article

Dr. Koussevitzky is the author of an article "Interpreting Music" in the August issue of the Atlantic Monthly now on sale in the Berkshires. In a foreward to the article the editors of the Atlantic write: "This autumn Serge Koussevitzky begins his 25th year as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra—in time and in performance an incomparable record. To his genius as an interpreter of music, he has added the gifts of a great teacher. When he came to this country from Europe, he brought with him the hope of founding an American center of music, a place where young musicians could foregather for stimulus and instruction, and where music lovers could listen in the relaxation of their holidays. The Berkshire Festival, where he is at present conducting the Boston Symphony, is this dream come Pittsfield, Massachusetts. Wednesday, July 28, 1948.

Tanglewood Pays Tribute To Polatschek

Program Tonight Changed—Last Rites Held in Lee

In tribute to Victor Polatschek, first clarinetist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who died suddenly yesterday at his summer home at Lake Mahkeenac, the program of the chamber music concert at Tanglewood tonight will be changed. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the orchestra and Music Center director, described Mr. Polatschek as "one of the pillars of our organization," in his tribute to the well-known musician.

Tonight the slow movement of the Mozart clarinet quintet will be substituted for the octet in F major for strings and winds in which Mr. Polatschek was to have played the clarinet part last night. Samuel C. Valerio, a member of the orchestra, will assist the Boston Conservatory string quartet.

The string quartet in A minor and the quintet in A major ("Die Forelle"), will be played as announced. The concert will be the last of four in the Schubert cycle contributed by Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge.

Dr. Koussevitzky's tribute to Mr. Polatschek follows:

The passing of Victor Polatschek is an inestimable loss to the Boston Symphony. During the 18 years of his association with the orchestra, he not only won the affectionate admiration and respect of his colleagues, but he also became one of the pillars of our organization. A strict disciplinarian, an uncompromising artist and a loyal member of the orchestra, he gave unreservedly of his devotion, enthusiasm and remarkable qualities,—for he was indeed an incomparable artist,—to serve music and maintain the highest standard of performance.

Death claimed Polatschek untimely, at the summit of his artistic attainment. Fate timed it so as to have not only his fellow-members of the orchestra but also his many pupils, among the students of the Berkshire Music Center, to mourn the esteemed artist and loved teacher.

To me personally it is a great shock—I profoundly share the feeling of grief and express my heartfelt sympathy to Mrs. Polatschek in her irreparable loss.

Funeral services for Mr. Polatschek were held yesterday afternoon at the Kelly Funeral Home in Lee. Before the service a quintet, made up of his colleagues with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, played Mozart's "Legato." Members of the quintet were Gaston Elcus and Harry Dickson, violins; Albert Bernard, viola; Jacobus Langendoen, cello, and Manuel Valerio, clarinet.

Remarks were offered by Willem A. Balnekier, a colleague, who has played the horn with the orchestra since 1923, and a short eulogy was given by Rev. J. Herbert Owen, pastor of the Congregational Church in Lee.

The body was removed by motor to Boston today for burial.

Babbitt

NO BABY SITTER PROBLEM HERE: Mr. and Mrs. Thaddeus Cylkowski, students at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, take their baby right to the Tanglewood grounds while they study. Here Mr. Cylkowski, a navigator in the AAF during the war and a GI student at the Music Center, studies his music while Mrs. Cylkowski entertains David.

This Clipping From
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
JUL 29 1948

Tanglewood Honors Late Clarinetist

Boston Conservatory String Quartet Alters Program in Memory of Victor Polatschek.

The Boston Conservatory string quartet, which presented a concert of Chamber music last night at Tanglewood, altered its program in order to honor Victor Polatschek, first clarinetist of the Boston Symphony orchestra, who died suddenly Tuesday at Lenox.

The "Octet in F Major for Strings and Winds," for which Mr. Polatschek was to have played the clarinet, was replaced by the slow movement of Mozart's "Clarinet Quintet."

Last night's concert was the last of the Schubert cycle contributed by Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, a Tanglewood sponsor.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
NEW YORKER
L 29 1948

Tuesday, Aug. 3 from 6 to 10:30 o'clock Tanglewood will be "On Parade" for the benefits of the creative musicians of Europe, and the Berkshire Music Center. Beginning with a parade of the students and ending with fireworks, the program will include simultaneous performance of opera, symphony orchestras, chorus and chamber music; a "manifestation" with guest artists and speakers, including Cornelia Otis Skinner, and Archibald MacLeish; a concert by the full Boston Symphony orchestra, conducted by Dr. Kousevitzky. There will be time out for a picnic supper on the lawn.

A special choral concert with Robert Shaw conducting Bach's "The Passion of Our Lord According to St. John" will be given in the theater Wednesday night and a song recital Thursday afternoon.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
JUL 29 1948

Many Society Leaders Support Benefit Concert at Tanglewood

Event Tuesday Will Assist European Musicians; State Department Praises Plan

The campaign for assistance to European musicians in present need, which will be inaugurated at a great benefit by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood Tuesday, has the endorsement of the State Department as one of "great significance," it was revealed in a letter made public today from Assistant Secretary George V. Allen to Carleton Sprague Smith, a member of the national committee.

"The American Section of the International Society for Contemporary Music with Dr. Se[illegible]vitzky at its head, is working in a field of great significance," Mr. Allen's letter to Dr. Smith reads in part. "Its project for promoting benefit concerts to aid the creative side of music in Europe deserves widespread support, and I believe that Europeans will look upon this effort as further evidence of the sincere interest on the part of the American people in the welfare and progress of European intellectual life."

"It is our desire to give, wherever possible, encouragement and support to private undertakings, such as yours, which are designed to promote mutual understanding and cooperation," the assistant secretary's letter concluded.

The central committee for the benefit includes: Mrs. Koussevitzky, Dr. Lewis Perry, Boston; Albert Spalding, Great Barrington; Mrs. James S. Deeley, Stockbridge; Mrs. Bruce Crane, Dalton; Mrs. Zay Jeffries, Alan J. Blau, and Mrs. George W. Edman, Pittsfield; Mrs. Charles Fox, Miss Kathleen Channing, and Mrs. C. D. Jackson, New York; Mrs. Maurice Firuski, Salisbury; and Frederic J. DeVeau, Groton.

Those who have accepted to serve on the national committee are: Dr. Carleton Sprague Smith, Frederick W. Beinecke, Mr. and Mrs. Pierre Luboshutz, William Schuman, John S. Williams, Mrs. Arthur Reis, Mrs. C. Reinhold Noyes, W. Penrose Hallowell, Mr. and Mrs. Richard Leach, Mr. and Mrs. Giovanni Cardelli, and Mrs. W. Murray Crane, all of New York. From New York state are: Miss Annabelle Terrell, Chatham; Mrs. E. Gerry Chadwick, Syosset, L. I.; Mrs. Charles Mitchell, Oyster Bay, L. I.; Howard Hanson, Rochester; Mrs. Byron E. VanRaalte, Cedarhurst, L. I.; Mr. and Mrs. W. Gordon Cox, Old Chatham.

Representing Massachusetts on the committee are: Judge and Mrs. Jacob J. Kaplan, James S. Plaut, Konrad Bose, Boston; Mrs. A. Kingsley Porter, Cambridge; Justice Felix Frankfurter, Washington; Mrs. Hayden Channing, Mr. and Mrs. Bruce Sanborn, Mr. and Mrs. Lester Roberts, Mrs. William N. Bullard, Lenox; Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Percival and Mrs. William Penn Cresson, Stockbridge; George Sokolsky, Otis; Rev. and Mrs. Richard Mortimer-Maddox, Mr. and Mrs. Robert K. Wheeler, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Blodgett, and Stephen Crane, Great Barrington; Mrs. Lawrence K. Miller, Mrs. Donald F. McPherson, Mr, and Mrs. Milton B. Warner, Pittsfield; Mrs. Shaun Kelly, Richmond; Dr. James Phinney Baxter, Philip Marshall Brown, Robert G. Barrow, Miss Ellen Safford, and Robert M. Derby, Williamstown; Winthrop M. Crane, 3d, Dalton; Mrs. Alan Limburg, Windsor; Judge Anthony Hanlon, Adams; Mrs. M. Graeme Haughton, Prides Crossing; Mrs. John Alden Carpenter and Mrs. Alexander Steinert, Beverly; Mr. and Mrs. Allen Forbes, Westwood; Mrs. D. W. Pickman, Hamilton.

From Connecticut are: Mrs. William M. Walcott, Judge Charles Garside, Norfolk; Miss Edith Scoville, Mrs. Donald J. Warner, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph R. Swan, Robert C. Osborn, Mrs. Arnold Whitridge, Mrs. William Lescaze, Mrs. Philip Warner, and Mrs. Charles S. Wunder, Salisbury; Mrs. Henry Sloan Coffin, Mrs. Joseph Parsons, John McChesney, and Frank Briscoe, Lakeville; Mrs. Harold Hatch, Mrs. Edwin C. Jameson, Sharon; Moshe Paranov, Hartford; and Mrs. Marshall Best, Lime Rock.

New Hampshire members of the committee are: Mr. and Mrs. William James, Chocorua; Mr. and Mrs. Dean Wilder, Peterboro; Mr. and Mrs. Wallace Goodrich, Manchester; Mrs. Ernest B. Dane, Centre Harbor, and Mrs. Edward Thaw, Dublin. From other states are: Fabien Sevitzky, Indianapolis; Mr. and Mrs. Robert W. Bliss, Santa Barbara; Mr. and Mrs. Philip Wyman, Mr. and Mrs. Lucien Wulsin, Cincinnati; Mr. and Mrs. Guy P. Gannett, Portland, Maine; and Mrs. Clarence Warden, Haverford, Pennsylvania; Mrs. Lea Luboshutz, Philadelphia; Eliel Saarinen and Eero Saarinen, Bloomfield Hills, Michigan; Dr. Hamilton Holt, president of Rollins College, Winter Park, Fla.; Thomas L. Sidlo, president of the board of the Cleveland Orchestra; and Saul Caston, conductor of the Denver Symphony Orchestra.

John Garfield's Ghost-Fiddler Soloist at Festival Tomorrow

July 30th

Isaac Stern

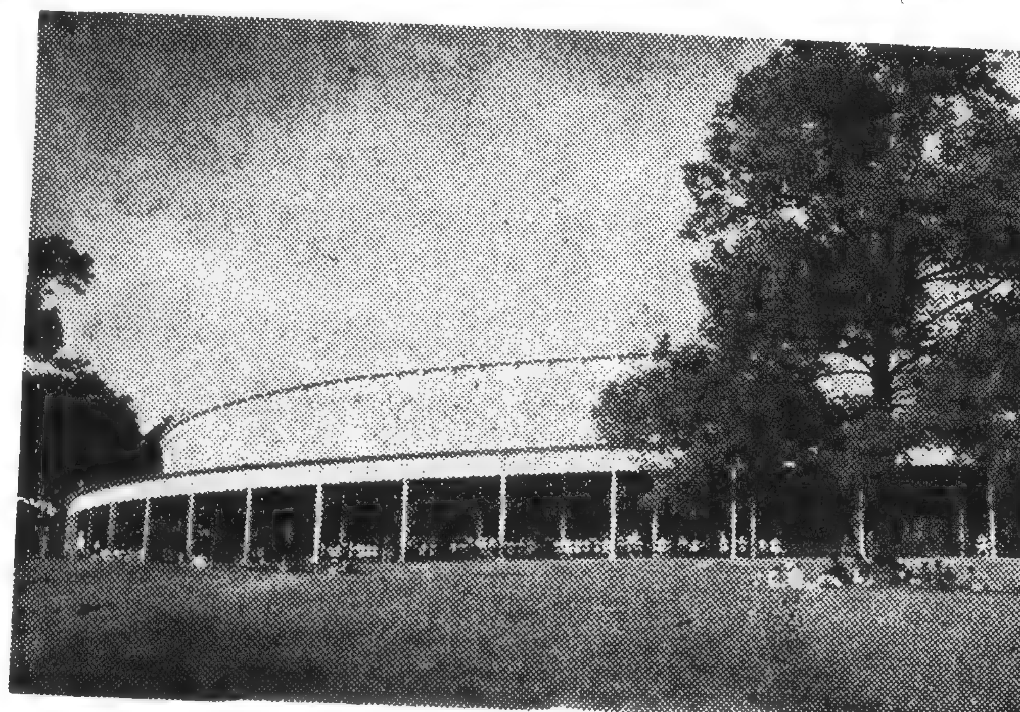
TANGLEWOOD — Twenty-seven-year-old Isaac Stern, violinist, who was the ghost-fiddler for John Garfield in the film, "Humoresque," will play the solo part of Prokofieff's first violin concerto in the Music Shed here tomorrow night at 8.15 with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conducting.

Festival officials today said Mr. Stern is the only top-flight violinist trained exclusively in the United States. He recently returned from a tour of Australia where he made 35 appearances in a dozen cities.

A resident of San Francisco, since the age of one year, he started when he was six to study piano. Two years later he switched to violin, and played first in public at the age of 11. He studied in New York with Louis Persinger, who spent several summers in Pittsfield as a member of the South Mountain Quartet and music colony.

Appearing with almost every major orchestra in the country, he played with the New York Philharmonic Symphony in the Stadium series last summer and with the Boston Orchestra in the past season.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY, Director



TANGLEWOOD MUSIC SHED

ELD, MASS., FRIDAY, JULY 30, 1948

Berkshire Music Center Programs This Week End

Two musical programs, not announced in the printed schedule, will be performed this week end at wood, Lenox, by students of the Berkshire mMusic Center.

Friday afternoon at 4.30 under the direction of Frederick Fennell the orchestra of department 5 will play the following concert:

Mozart.....Overture to "The Magic Flute"
Robert Schumann....
.........Symphony No. 2 in C major
Franck.... .Symphonic Variations for Piano
.......................and Orchestra
Irene Rosenberg, pianist
Milhaud.. ....Suite Francaise

Saturday afternoon at 2.30 the opera department will give scenes from famous operas.

Friday evening at 8.15 the advanced student orchestra will play:

Mendelssohn....... "Reformation Symphony
Howard Shanet, conductor
Bach. ....Concerto for Two Violins
Soloists:.... ...Zvi Zeitlin, Josef Bernstein
Both of Palestine
Seymour Lipkin, conductor
Harold Shapero...
....Symphony for Classical Orchestra

The composer studied both composition and conducting at the Berkshire Music Center. The symphony was commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and given its world premiere performance by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Leonard Bernstein in January 1948.

R. Strauss......"Also Sprach Zarathustra"
Conductor, Eleazar deCarvalho

Also open to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center will be an organ recital of Bach by E. Power Biggs, Boston Symphony Orchestra organist, at 10 Sunday morning in the Music Shed, with the program: Toccata in F major, Three Chorale Preludes, Three Contrapuncti from "The Art of Fugue" and Passacaglia and Fugue in C minor.

A chamber music concert will be given at 11 by advanced students.

Cir. (D 22,016)

This Clipping From
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
JOURNAL-COURIER

JUL 30 1948.

Dr. Koussevitzky Opens Festival

Lenox, Mass., July 29—(AP)—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra opened the 11th Berkshire festival season at Tanglewood tonight with 7,500 persons in the music shed and 1,500 more scattered over the lawns.

The weather was ideal with clear skies and the temperature about 65 degrees.

Dr. Koussevitzky was recalled four times after Paul Hindemith's Symphony, "Matthias The Painter."

The orchestra opened the program with Bach's Overture (Wuite) No. 3 in D Major, performed at Tanglewood originally in 1945 at the Bach Mozart Festival.

The concert ended with Beethoven's Symphony No. 5 in C Minor.

The second concert in the first series of three week-end programs will be given at Tanglewood Saturday night when the orchestra will perform Walter Piston's Symphony No. 3.

This Clipping From
POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
NEW YORKER

Tanglewood Schedules Full Week of Music

There will be a full week of music after the opening of the Berkshire Festival tonight in the shed at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. Seats are available for many of the festival concerts. Student events are open to Friends of the Berkshire Music Center who have contributed to the support of the school.

Tomorrow afternoon an orchestral concert, postponed from Monday, will be given at 4:30 o'clock and another at 8:15 in the shed. Saturday morning at 10 o'clock the Boston Symphony Orchestra rehearsal will be open to the public for the benefit of the pension fund, as will those on the next Saturdays. The second Festival concert in the shed will be held Saturday night conducted by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, with Isaac Stern as soloist in the program that will include Prokofieff's Violin Concerto No. 1, Brahm's Symphony No. 1 and Piston's Symphony No. 3, for which the composer will be present.

July 30th

7500 Hear Boston Symphony in Berkshire Festival Concert

By CYRUS DURGIN

TANGLEWOOD, July 29—The annual Berkshire Festival surged into full course here tonight with the first concert by the complete Boston Symphony Orchestra. Serge Kousevitzky conducted in the music shed a program that began with Bach's Suite No. 3; the "Symphony" from Hindemith's opera "Mathis der Maler," and the Fifth Symphony of Beethoven.

The audience numbered 7500, which meant that the fan shaped music shed was filled, and some people sat on the lawns outside. These festival audiences always are rather out-giving in their enthusiasm than a conventional Winter audience, and tonight's was no exception. They listened attentively and applauded rapturously, some adding cheers to handclapping at the conclusion of Hindemith's rousing chorale, and the triumphant code of Beethoven's Fifth.

Out here in the Berkshires, where the hills are high and the clouds sometimes low, the weather is frequently a gamble and always an important factor. Tonight the weather man was behaving nicely. He brought a warm but not an insufferable humid day, with light clouds and bright sun. The evening was reasonably cool and definitely dry; a vivid contrast to some of the assorted disturbances which have been experienced in the past.

Apart from a somewhat jumbled beginning and ending of the bourree in Bach's suite, the first half of the program found the Boston Symphony in its accustomed brilliant form. As always, their tone was between heavenly and unbelievable, which is about as close as you can get to describing it in less than a couple of columns.

That so-called "Air On The G String," which forms the second movement, sang beautifully. The high trumpets came through the tonal texture clearly without exaggeration in the overture, and the gavottes and gigue danced along exuberantly.

That wonderful brass section, which is as characteristically Boston Symphony as the crystalline strings gave a noble account of itself in the splendors of "Mathis der Maler."

Even after nearly 10 Summers of listening, the sharp acoustics of the music shed are a marvel. Music out of doors always upsets the customary balance of an orchestra, and you might think that the same would prevail in the music shed which, though roofed over, is open at the sides except at the stage end. Nevertheless, apart from an inner voice occasionally popping out a little too loud, this is a hall of excellent acoustic quality.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is saddened by the sudden death of its first clarinetist, Victor Polatschek, who was widely recognized as a master of his instrument and a first rank artist.

The festival will continue tomorrow night with alter Piston's third (and twice prize-winning) Symphony; Prokofieff's First Violin Concerto, with Isaac Stern as soloist, and the First Symphony of Brahms. On Sunday afternoon there will be two guest conductors:: Darius Milhaud, who will present his own Second Symphony, and Leonard Bernstein, who will conduct again the great Second, or "Resurrection" Symphony by Gustav Mahler, which Bernstein revived in Boston last February.

TANGLEWOOD OPENS ANNUAL MUSIC FETE

Koussevitzky Conducts Boston Symphony in First Program of 14th Yearly Festival

By HOWARD TAUBMAN

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., July 29—The fourteenth annual Berkshire Festival began here at Tanglewood tonight under the most felicitious auspices—a huge crowd, a moonlit, starlit night and, of course, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky.

The opening program in the graceful, capacious music shed tonight provided a foretaste of what Mr. Koussevitzky has planned for the three long week-ends of the festival. There was one contemporary work, "Mathis Der Maler," by Paul Hindemith, who was the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center some seasons ago, with two classic scores—Bach's Suite in D, No. 3, and Beethoven's ever popular and lustrous Fifth Symphony.

A clear sunny day, preceding a perfect evening, set people in New England and New York to thinking about Tanglewood, and a steady stream of cars headed for this incomparable music center. They poured into the parking grounds late in the afternoon and all evening, many bringing picnic suppers.

All of the 6,000 seats in the shed were sold out in advance of concert time. As usual thousands of men and women sat and reclined on the lawn and, thanks to the splendid accoustics of the shed, heard a good account of the performance.

Interest in this year's festival seems to be at a peak. There was proof of this in the record-breaking crowds that turned out in the last fortnight for the two Bach and two Mozart programs that preceded the main part of the festival. The advance sale and a slight increase in ticket prices assures record receipts.

Audiences tonight saw a few changes that add to the beauty and comfort of Tanglewood. A strikingly handsome reception and exhibition room has been erected at the Main Gate. Entirely of plate glass, front and back, it is jointed harmoniously to the offices at the left of the gate. There is a series of slender supporting columns of steel that match happily with the lean, graceful columns that support the Music Shed.

Those who had time to wander around the grounds tonight could see and patronize refreshment facilities. There were also a number of new studios on the grounds, but these were not so easy to find, for they were scattered in the deeper recesses of the grounds.

The little red house, in which Nathaniel Hawthorne lived here more than a century ago and wrote "The House of Seven Gables," has been restored by the National Federation of Music Clubs, and sightseers who had time for a longer walk could examine its charming, old American lines.

There was one change in the orchestra, brought about by tragic circumstances. Victor Polatschek, first clarinetist, died here unexpectedly Tuesday morning, and his place was taken by Manuel Valerio.

The programs for the festival include, besides the usual assortment of standard works, several modern scores. Works by Prokofieff and Piston are scheduled for Saturday night, and a symphony by Milhaud, who is on the teaching staff of the Berkshire Music Center, will be on Sunday's program as well as Mahler's "Resurrection" Symphony.

In later weeks music by Stravinsky, Prokofieff, Vaughan Williams (American première on his new Sixth Symphony), Villa Lobos, Siqueira and Shostakovich will be played.

Granting the beauty of the setting and the holiday spirit of the crowd, it was the playing of the Boston Symphony under Mr. Koussevitzky's incandescent leadership that made the biggest impression tonight.

Jul 30

TANGLEWOOD OPENS ANNUAL MUSIC FETE

Koussevitzky Conducts Boston Symphony in First Program of 14th Yearly Festival

By HOWARD TAUBMAN

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., July 29—The fourteenth annual Berkshire Festival began here at Tanglewood tonight under the most felicitious auspices—a huge crowd, a moonlit, starlit night and, of course, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky.

The opening program in the graceful, capacious music shed tonight provided a foretaste of what Mr. Koussevitzky has planned for the three long week-ends of the festival. There was one contemporary work, "Mathis Der Maler," by Paul Hindemith, who was the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center some seasons ago, with two classic scores—Bach's Suite in D, No. 3, and Beethoven's ever popular and lustrous Fifth Symphony.

A clear sunny day, preceding a perfect evening, set people in New England and New York to thinking about Tanglewood, and a steady stream of cars headed for this incomparable music center. They poured into the parking grounds late in the afternoon and all evening, many bringing picnic suppers.

All of the 6,000 seats in the shed were sold out in advance of concert time. As usual thousands of men and women sat and reclined on the lawn and, thanks to the splendid accoustics of the shed, heard a good account of the performance.

Interest in this year's festival seems to be at a peak. There was proof of this in the record-breaking crowds that turned out in the last fortnight for the two Bach and two Mozart programs that preceded the main part of the festival. The advance sale and a slight increase in ticket prices assures record receipts.

Audiences tonight saw a few changes that add to the beauty and comfort of Tanglewood. A strikingly handsome reception and exhibition room has been erected at the Main Gate. Entirely of plate glass, front and back, it is jointed harmoniously to the offices at the left of the gate. There is a series of slender supporting columns of steel that match happily with the lean, graceful columns that support the Music Shed.

Those who had time to wander around the grounds tonight could see and patronize refreshment facilities. There were also a number of new studios on the grounds, but these were not so easy to find, for they were scattered in the deeper recesses of the grounds.

The little red house, in which Nathaniel Hawthorne lived here more than a century ago and wrote "The House of Seven Gables," has been restored by the National Federation of Music Clubs, and sightseers who had time for a longer walk could examine its charming, old American lines.

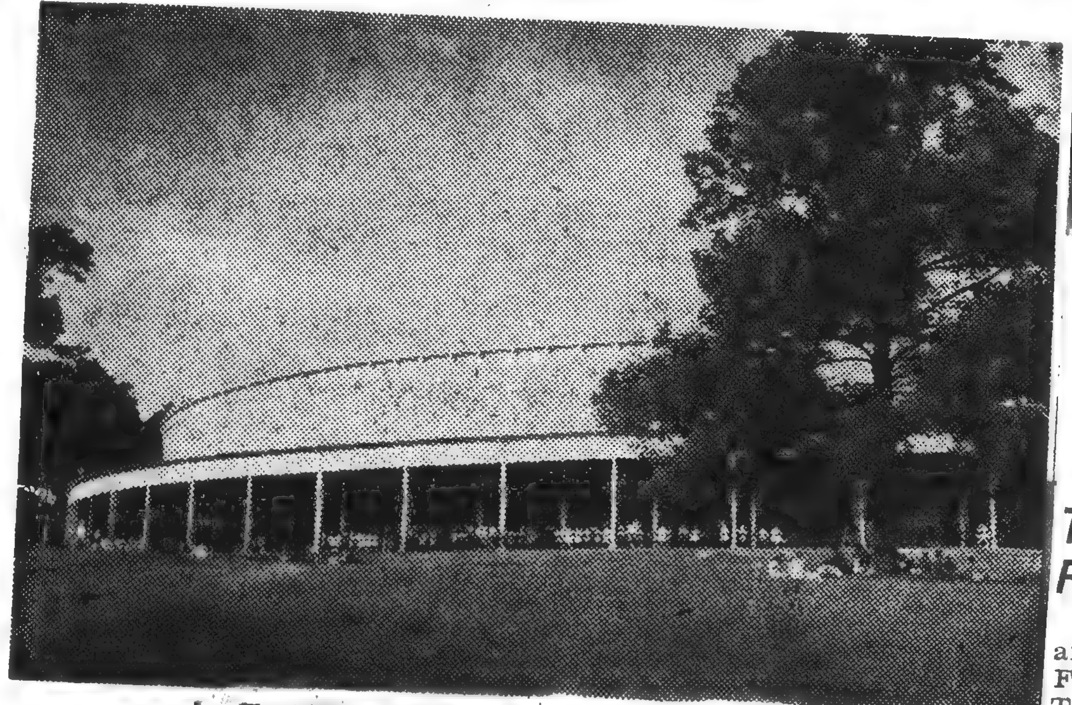
There was one change in the orchestra, brought about by tragic circumstances. Victor Polatschek, first clarinetist, died here unexpectedly Tuesday morning, and his place was taken by Manuel Valerio.

The programs for the festival include, besides the usual assortment of standard works, several modern scores. Works by Prokofieff and Piston are scheduled for Saturday night, and a symphony by Milhaud, who is on the teaching staff of the Berkshire Music Center, will be on Sunday's program as well as Mahler's "Resurrection" Symphony.

In later weeks music by Stravinsky, Prokofieff, Vaughan Williams (American première on his new Sixth Symphony), Villa Lobos, Siqueira and Shostakovich will be played.

Granting the beauty of the setting and the holiday spirit of the crowd, it was the playing of the Boston Symphony under Mr. Koussevitzky's incandescent leadership that made the biggest impression tonight.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY, Director



TANGLEWOOD MUSIC SHED

MASS., FRIDAY, JULY 30, 1948

Berkshire Music Center Programs This Week End

Two musical programs, not announced in the printed schedule, will be performed this week end at wood, Lenox, by students of the Berkshire mMusic Center.

Friday afternoon at 4.30 under the direction of Frederick Fennell the orchestra of department 5 will play the following concert:

Mozart.....Overture to "The Magic Flute"
Robert Schumann....
..........Symphony No. 2 in C major
Franck.....Symphonic Variations for Piano
........................and Orchestra
Irene Rosenberg, pianist
Milhaud.. ....Suite Francaise

Saturday afternoon at 2.30 the opera department will give scenes from famous operas.

Friday evening at 8.15 the advanced student orchestra will play:

Mendelssohn....... "Reformation Symphony
Howard Shanet, conductor
Bach............Concerto for Two Violins
Soloists:.......Zvi Zeitlin, Josef Bernstein
Both of Palestine
Seymour Lipkin, conductor
Harold Shapero....
....Symphony for Classical Orchestra

The composer studied both composition and conducting at the Berkshire Music Center. The symphony was commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and given its world premiere performance by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Leonard Bernstein in January 1948.

R. Strauss......"Also Sprach Zarathustra"
Conductor, Eleazar deCarvalho

Also open to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center will be an organ recital of Bach by E. Power Biggs, Boston Symphony Orchestra organist, at 10 Sunday morning in the Music Shed, with the program: Toccata in F major, Three Chorale Preludes, Three Contrapuncti from "The Art of Fugue" and Passacaglia and Fugue in C minor.

A chamber music concert will be given at 11 by advanced students.

This Clipping From
POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
NEW YORKER

JUL 29 1948

Tanglewood Schedules Full Week of Music

There will be a full week of music after the opening of the Berkshire Festival tonight in the shed at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. Seats are available for many of the festival concerts. Student events are open to Friends of the Berkshire Music Center who have contributed to the support of the school.

Tomorrow afternoon an orchestral concert, postponed from Monday, will be given at 4:30 o'clock and another at 8:15 in the shed. Saturday morning at 10 o'clock the Boston Symphony Orchestra rehearsal will be open to the public for the benefit of the pension fund, as will those on the next Saturdays. The second Festival concert in the shed will be held Saturday night conducted by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, with Isaac Stern as soloist in the program that will include Prokofieff's Violin Concerto No. 1, Brahm's Symphony No. 1 and Piston's Symphony No. 3, for which the composer will be present.

Cir. (D 22,016)
This Clipping From
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
JOURNAL-COURIER

JUL 30 1948.

Dr. Koussevitzky Opens Festival

Lenox, Mass., July 29—(AP)—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra opened the 11th Berkshire festival season at Tanglewood tonight with 7,500 persons in the music shed and 1,500 more scattered over the lawns.

The weather was ideal with clear skies and the temperature about 65 degrees.

Dr. Koussevitzky was recalled four times after Paul Hindemith's Symphony, "Matthias The Painter."

The orchestra opened the program with Bach's Overture (Wuite) No. 3 in D Major, performed at Tanglewood originally in 1945 at the Bach Mozart Festival.

The concert ended with Beethoven's Symphony No. 5 in C Minor.

The second concert in the first series of three week-end programs will be given at Tanglewood Saturday night when the orchestra will perform Walter Piston's Symphony No. 3.

July 30th

7500 Hear Boston Symphony in Berkshire Festival Concert

By CYRUS DURGIN

TANGLEWOOD, July 29—The annual Berkshire Festival surged into full course here tonight with the first concert by the complete Boston Symphony Orchestra. Serge Kousevitzky conducted in the music shed a program that began with Bach's Suite No. 3; the "Symphony" from Hindemith's opera "Mathis der Maler," and the Fifth Symphony of Beethoven.

The audience numbered 7500, which meant that the fan shaped music shed was filled, and some people sat on the lawns outside. These festival audiences always are rather out-giving in their enthusiasm than a conventional Winter audience, and tonight's was no exception. They listened attentively and applauded rapturously, some adding cheers to handclapping at the conclusion of Hindemith's rousing chorale, and the triumphant code of Beethoven's Fifth.

Out here in the Berkshires, where the hills are high and the clouds sometimes low, the weather is frequently a gamble and always an important factor. Tonight the weather man was behaving nicely. He brought a warm but not an insufferable humid day, with light clouds and bright sun. The evening was reasonably cool and definitely dry; a vivid contrast to some of the assorted disturbances which have been experienced in the past.

Apart from a somewhat jumbled beginning and ending of the bourree in Bach's suite, the first half of the program found the Boston Symphony in its accustomed brilliant form. As always, their tone was between heavenly and unbelievable, which is about as close as you can get to describing it in less than a couple of columns.

That so-called "Air On The G String," which forms the second movement, sang beautifully. The high trumpets came through the tonal texture clearly without exaggeration in the overture, and the gavottes and gigue danced along exuberantly.

That wonderful brass section, which is as characteristically Boston Symphony as the crystalline strings gave a noble account of itself in the splendors of "Mathis der Maler."

Even after nearly 10 Summers of listening, the sharp acoustics of the music shed are a marvel. Music out of doors always upsets the customary balance of an orchestra, and you might think that the same would prevail in the music shed which, though roofed over, is open at the sides except at the stage end. Nevertheless, apart from an inner voice occasionally popping out a little too loud, this is a hall of excellent acoustic quality.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is saddened by the sudden death of its first clarinetist, Victor Polatschek, who was widely recognized as a master of his instrument and a first rank artist.

The festival will continue tomorrow night with alter Piston's third (and twice prize-winning) Symphony; Prokofieff's First Violin Concerto, with Isaac Stern as soloist, and the First Symphony of Brahms. On Sunday afternoon there will be two guest conductors:: Darius Milhaud, who will present his own Second Symphony, and Leonard Bernstein, who will conduct again the great Second, or "Resurrection" Symphony by Gustav Mahler, which Bernstein revived in Boston last February.

TANGLEWOOD OPENS ANNUAL MUSIC FETE

Koussevitzky Conducts Boston Symphony in First Program of 14th Yearly Festival

By HOWARD TAUBMAN
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., July 29—The fourteenth annual Berkshire Festival began here at Tanglewood tonight under the most felicitious auspices—a huge crowd, a moonlit, starlit night and, of course, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky.

The opening program in the graceful, capacious music shed tonight provided a foretaste of what Mr. Koussevitzky has planned for the three long week-ends of the festival. There was one contemporary work, "Mathis Der Maler," by Paul Hindemith, who was the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center some seasons ago, with two classic scores—Bach's Suite in D, No. 3, and Beethoven's ever popular and lustrous Fifth Symphony.

A clear sunny day, preceding a perfect evening, set people in New England and New York to thinking about Tanglewood, and a steady stream of cars headed for this incomparable music center. They poured into the parking grounds late in the afternoon and all evening, many bringing picnic suppers.

All of the 6,000 seats in the shed were sold out in advance of concert time. As usual thousands of men and women sat and reclined on the lawn and, thanks to the splendid accoustics of the shed, heard a good account of the performance.

Interest in this year's festival seems to be at a peak. There was proof of this in the record-breaking crowds that turned out in the last fortnight for the two Bach and two Mozart programs that preceded the main part of the festival. The advance sale and a slight increase in ticket prices assures record receipts.

Audiences tonight saw a few changes that add to the beauty and comfort of Tanglewood. A strikingly handsome reception and exhibition room has been erected at the Main Gate. Entirely of plate glass, front and back, it is jointed harmoniously to the offices at the left of the gate. There is a series of slender supporting columns of steel that match happily with the lean, graceful columns that support the Music Shed.

Those who had time to wander around the grounds tonight could see and patronize refreshment facilities. There were also a number of new studios on the grounds, but these were not so easy to find, for they were scattered in the deeper recesses of the grounds.

The little red house, in which Nathaniel Hawthorne lived here more than a century ago and wrote "The House of Seven Gables," has been restored by the National Federation of Music Clubs, and sightseers who had time for a longer walk could examine its charming, old American lines.

There was one change in the orchestra, brought about by tragic circumstances. Victor Polatschek, first clarinetist, died here unexpectedly Tuesday morning, and his place was taken by Manuel Valerio.

The programs for the festival include, besides the usual assortment of standard works, several modern scores. Works by Prokofieff and Piston are scheduled for Saturday night, and a symphony by Milhaud, who is on the teaching staff of the Berkshire Music Center, will be on Sunday's program as well as Mahler's "Resurrection" Symphony.

In later weeks music by Stravinsky, Prokofieff, Vaughan Williams (American première on his new Sixth Symphony), Villa Lobos, Siqueira and Shostakovich will be played.

Granting the beauty of the setting and the holiday spirit of the crowd, it was the playing of the Boston Symphony under Mr. Koussevitzky's incandescent leadership that made the biggest impression tonight.

Jul 30

TANGLEWOOD OPENS ANNUAL MUSIC FETE

Koussevitzky Conducts Boston Symphony in First Program of 14th Yearly Festival

By HOWARD TAUBMAN
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., July 29—The fourteenth annual Berkshire Festival began here at Tanglewood tonight under the most felicitious auspices—a huge crowd, a moonlit, starlit night and, of course, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky.

The opening program in the graceful, capacious music shed tonight provided a foretaste of what Mr. Koussevitzky has planned for the three long week-ends of the festival. There was one contemporary work, "Mathis Der Maler," by Paul Hindemith, who was the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center some seasons ago, with two classic scores—Bach's Suite in D, No. 3, and Beethoven's ever popular and lustrous Fifth Symphony.

A clear sunny day, preceding a perfect evening, set people in New England and New York to thinking about Tanglewood, and a steady stream of cars headed for this incomparable music center. They poured into the parking grounds late in the afternoon and all evening, many bringing picnic suppers.

All of the 6,000 seats in the shed were sold out in advance of concert time. As usual thousands of men and women sat and reclined on the lawn and, thanks to the splendid accoustics of the shed, heard a good account of the performance.

Interest in this year's festival seems to be at a peak. There was proof of this in the record-breaking crowds that turned out in the last fortnight for the two Bach and two Mozart programs that preceded the main part of the festival. The advance sale and a slight increase in ticket prices assures record receipts.

Audiences tonight saw a few changes that add to the beauty and comfort of Tanglewood. A strikingly handsome reception and exhibition room has been erected at the Main Gate. Entirely of plate glass, front and back, it is jointed harmoniously to the offices at the left of the gate. There is a series of slender supporting columns of steel that match happily with the lean, graceful columns that support the Music Shed.

Those who had time to wander around the grounds tonight could see and patronize refreshment facilities. There were also a number of new studios on the grounds, but these were not so easy to find, for they were scattered in the deeper recesses of the grounds.

The little red house, in which Nathaniel Hawthorne lived here more than a century ago and wrote "The House of Seven Gables," has been restored by the National Federation of Music Clubs, and sightseers who had time for a longer walk could examine its charming, old American lines.

There was one change in the orchestra, brought about by tragic circumstances. Victor Polatschek, first clarinetist, died here unexpectedly Tuesday morning, and his place was taken by Manuel Valerio.

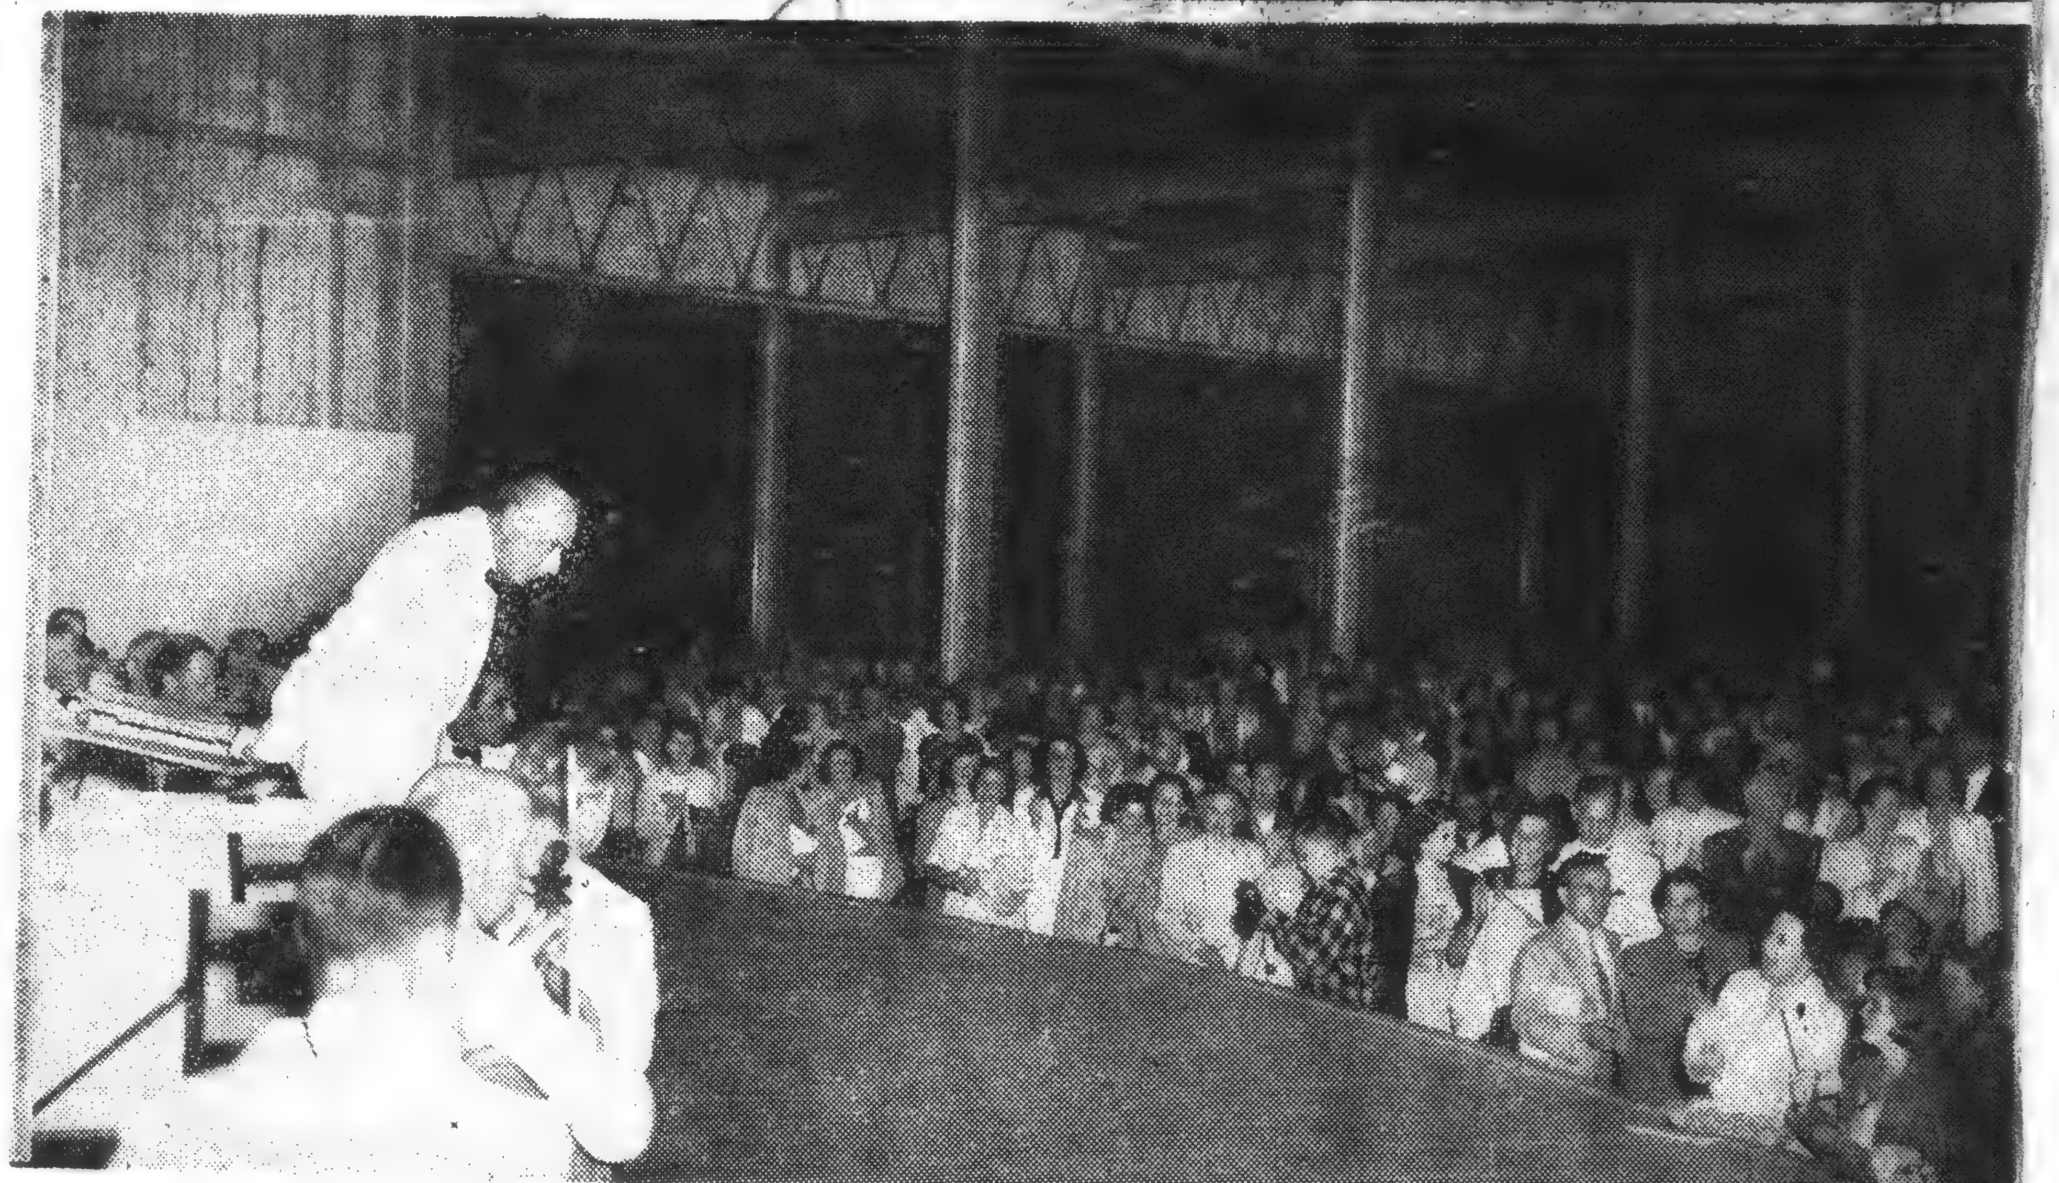
The programs for the festival include, besides the usual assortment of standard works, several modern scores. Works by Prokofieff and Piston are scheduled for Saturday night, and a symphony by Milhaud, who is on the teaching staff of the Berkshire Music Center, will be on Sunday's program as well as Mahler's "Resurrection" Symphony.

In later weeks music by Stravinsky, Prokofieff, Vaughan Williams (American première on his new Sixth Symphony), Villa Lobos, Siqueira and Shostakovich will be played.

Granting the beauty of the setting and the holiday spirit of the crowd, it was the playing of the Boston Symphony under Mr. Koussevitzky's incandescent leadership that made the biggest impression tonight.

Volume 57—No. 62 Pittsfield, Massachusetts.

Jul 30



Babbit

KOUSSEVITZKY TAKES A CURTAIN CALL: As the first concert of the 11th season of the Berkshire Festival ended at Tanglewood last night, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky was called to the stage many times to share in the thunderous ovation given to him and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Here Dr. Koussevitzky acknowledges the applause as the audience starts to move closer for a better glimpse of the famed conductor and his orchestra. Amateur photographers also crowd into the front section to catch candid poses of the musicians.

Music Shed Overflows For Opening Concert

Weather Is Ideal as Crowd of 8000 Gives Thunderous Ovation to Koussevitzky and BSO at Festival

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

TANGLEWOOD—The 1948 Berkshire Festival made a gala debut last night in the Music Shed here when Serge Koussevitzky led the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a program of Bach, Hindemith and Beethoven with nearly 8000 in attendance. There had been two previous Bach-Mozart concerts already in this 11th season, but they had been played by only a small orchestra and in the theatre-concert hall. This third program of the season was favored by the most ideal weather Berkshire can produce, making for the thorough comfort of the huge audience and putting an edge on the performance that has never been keener.

Crowds Arrive Early

The gay, colorful crowds started arriving early in the evening to enjoy the wide lawns, the broad paths and the purlieu of the vast Shed. They were reluctant to take their seats as the warning gongs sounded, seeming to want to prolong the pleasure of the unique glamour which attends Tanglewood occasions.

The tonal glory of the Boston orchestra was never more splendid. The sonorities in the string sections were extremely rich in the inaugural Bach suite, in D major. The solid and fundamental chords of Bach were sustained with full and even fluidity, apparent at the outset in the pontifical overture of the suite.

In the succeeding movements Dr. Koussevitzky continued to choose the exact tempi, making evident his complete grasp of the nature of the music, tempering it with completely satisfying spaciousness and poise. The wind sections, too, produced tone of remarkable balance and soft impact to blend with that of their colleagues.

Exciting Performance

The orchestra was especially responsive to Koussevitzky's slightest desires in the Hindemith symphony, "Matthew the Painter." It was marked by a fervent intensity, rising often to dramatic heights. The music and the title are derived from the composer's own opera, and the three movements are designated "Angelic concert," "Entombment" and "Temptation of St. Anthony." Its first Tanglewood performance took place eight years ago while the composer was a member of the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center. Its power was expressed with steady graphic pressure and became increasingly moving as it progressed. There are exceedingly great demands on the instruments. In the original opera he treats the voices in the same manner, without any quarter whatsoever. The instruments, however, fare better as they neither tire nor are they quite so fallible as the voice. The performance became cumulatively more exciting by the use of remarkable dynamic nuances and contrasts, prompted by the most sensitive musical intelligence, bringing it to consummate expressiveness.

The Beethoven fifth symphony

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
JUL 30 1948

Unwelcome Visitor Causes Minor Panic At Opening Concert

An unwelcome visitor [illegible] upset the opening program of the Berkshire Festival in the Music Shed at Tanglewood last night.

While Dr. Serge Koussevitzky was leading his Boston Symphony Orchestra through Beethoven's symphony No. 5 in C minor, there was much unrest among many of the concert-goers in the front section, near the left side of the Shed. A field mouse made an unexpected appearance, running up and down the area between the stage and the front row. The rodent soon disappeared and the music lovers settled back once again, with their feet on the ground, to enjoy the remainder of the concert.

Cir. (D 66,264)

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
JUL 30 1948

7,500 Attend Opening Concert at Tanglewood

Special to The Hartford Times

Lenox, Mass—The first concert of the season in the big shed at Tanglewood drew a crowd of 7,500 which, if not a record, was considered very good for a Thursday night. While other summer musical attractions are falling off or even languishing, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire season flourishes phenomenally in spite of a more crowded schedule of events than ever before.

It was a typical opening night crowd, punctilious, sophisticated, contained. Rather a bit too much contained in the beginning—only some of the audience arose with the orchestra to greet the entrance of the master of the festival, Serge Koussevitsky, who has announced his forthcoming retirement, at least from his Boston activities. But reserve was soon laid aside.

While the great body of festival goers, young and old, seemed to be holding the fire of its enthusiasm for that household familiar, Beethoven's Fifth, it took the tensions of such modernism as Hindemith's "Matthew the Painter" to trip off a really excited ovation like the rebel yells of Dixie Democrats. Even those who declare against Hindemith cannot resist his pressure upon the nerves.

Koussevitsky was in a sensitive mood. He traced the well-worn contours of the air in Bach's D major Suite as though discovering its loveliness for the first time. The opening motto of the Fifth Symphony he delivered like a cannon shot and from then on kept his Jovian eminence.

* * *

THE BOSTON ORCHESTRA continues to be the richest wellspring of beautiful sound with which modern man is acquainted. When released upon a score like the Hindemith tryptich its compulsions are indescribable. Its quivering harmonics, its gorgeous brass, the collisions of its counterpoint, its sheer voluptuous noise assail the senses in such a way as to leave scars of aesthetic experience.

How well Koussevitzky manages his program material! He has up his well-tailored sleeve many things which are not considered manna for the masses — Walter Piston's Third Symphony night and Milhaud on Sunday — but thus to sandwich Hindemith between the bread of Bach and Beethoven—and pulling them out of their seats with it—shows that he knows a thing or two about musical metabolism and your average man.

* * *

IT WAS A PERFECT night, starry and cool. Improved facilities for refreshment and smoothly handled traffic arrangements continue to enhance the Tanglewood concerts as pleasantest sort of artistic diversions.

The week-end programs are: Saturday night at 8:15, Piston's Third Symphony, Prokofieff's Violin Concerto with Isaac Stern soloist and Brahms' First Symphony. Sunday afternoon at 3:30, Leonard Bernstein conducting Mahler's Second Symphony and Milhaud's Second Symphony with the composer conducting.

C. E. L.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION
JUL 30 1948

Aug. 7 Concert to Benefit Musicians

Tanglewood Event Supported by Socialites

The campaign for assistance to European musicians in present need, which will be inaugurated at a great benefit by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood Tuesday, has the endorsement of the State Department as one of "great significance," it was revealed in a letter made public today from Assistant Secretary George V. Allen to Carleton Sprague Smith, a member of the national committee.

"The American Section of the International Society for Contemporary Music with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky at its head, is working in a field of great significance," Mr. Allen's letter to Dr. Smith reads in part. "Its project for promoting benefit concerts to aid the creative side of music in Europe deserves widespread support, and I believe that Europeans will look upon this effort as further evidence of the sincere interest on the part of the American people in the welfare and progress of European intellectual life."

"It is our desire to give, wherever possible, encouragement and support to private undertakings, such as yours, which are designed to promote mutual understanding and cooperation," the assistant secretary's letter concluded.

The central committee for the benefit includes: Mrs. Koussevitzky, Dr. Lewis Perry, Boston; Albert Spalding, Great Barrington; Mrs. James S. Deeley, Stockbridge; Mrs. Bruce Crane, Dalton; Mrs. Zay Jeffries, Alan J. Blau, and Mrs. George W. Edman, Pittsfield; Mrs. Charles Fox, Miss Kathleen Channing, and Mrs. C. D. Jackson, New York; Mrs. Maurice Firuski, Salisbury; and Frederic J. DeVeau, Groton.

Those who have accepted to serve on the national committee are: Dr. Carleton Sprague Smith, Frederick W. Beinecke, Mr. and Mrs. Pierre Luboshutz, William Schuman, John S. Williams, Mrs. Arthur Reis, Mrs. C. Reinhold Noyes, W. Penrose Hallowell, Mr. and Mrs. Richard Leach, Mr. and Mrs. Giovanni Cardelli, and Mrs. W. Murray Crane, all of New York. From New York state are: Miss Annabelle Terrell, Chatham; Mrs. E. Gerry Chadwick, Syosset, L. I.; Mrs. Charles Mitchell, Oyster Bay, L. I.; Howard Hanson, Rochester; Mrs. Byron E. VanRaalte, Cedarhurst, L. I.; Mr. and Mrs. W. Gordon Cox, Old Chatham.

Representing Massachusetts on the committee are: Judge and Mrs. Jacob J. Kaplan, James S. Plaut, Konrad Bose, Boston; Mrs. A. Kingsley Porter, Cambridge; Justice Felix Frankfurter, Washington; Mrs. Hayden Channing, Mr and Mrs. Bruce Sanborn, Mr. and Mrs. Lester Roberts, Mrs. William N. Bullard, Lenox; Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Percival and Mrs. William Penn Cresson, Stockbridge; George Sokolsky, [illegible] and Mrs. Richard Mortimer-Maddox, Mr. and Mrs. Robert K. Wheeler, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Blodgett, and Stephen Crane, Great Barrington; Mrs. Lawrence K. Miller, Mrs. Donald F. McPherson, Mr. and Mrs. Milton B. Warner, Pittsfield; Mrs. Shaun Kelly, Richmond; Dr. James Phinney Baxter, Philip Marshall Brown, Robert G. Barrow, Miss Ellen Safford, and Robert M. Derby, Williamstown; Winthrop M. Crane, 3d, Dalton; Mrs. Alan Limburg, Windsor; Judge Anthony Hanlon, Adams; Mrs. M. Graeme Haughton, Prides Crossing; Mrs. John Alden Carpenter and Mrs. Alexander Steinert, Beverly; Mr. and Mrs. Allen Forbes, Westwood; Mrs. D. W. Pickman, Hamilton.

[207]

Volume 57—No. 62 Jul 30 Pittsfield, Massachusetts.

Babbit

KOUSSEVITZKY TAKES A CURTAIN CALL: As the first concert of the 11th season of the Berkshire Festival ended at Tanglewood last night, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky was called to the stage many times to share in the thunderous ovation given to him and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Here Dr. Koussevitzky acknowledges the applause as the audience starts to move closer for a better glimpse of the famed conductor and his orchestra. Amateur photographers also crowd into the front section to catch candid poses of the musicians.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
JUL 30 1948

Music Shed Overflows For Opening Concert

Weather Is Ideal as Crowd of 8000 Gives Thunderous Ovation to Koussevitzky and BSO at Festival

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

TANGLEWOOD—The 1948 Berkshire Festival made a gala debut last night in the Music Shed here when Serge Koussevitzky led the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a program of Bach, Hindemith and Beethoven with nearly 8000 in attendance. There had been two previous Bach-Mozart concerts already in this 11th season, but they had been played by only a small orchestra and in the theatre-concert hall. This third program of the season was favored by the most ideal weather Berkshire can produce, making for the thorough comfort of the huge audience and putting an edge on the performance that has never been keener.

Crowds Arrive Early

The gay, colorful crowds started arriving early in the evening to enjoy the wide lawns, the broad paths and the purlieu of the vast Shed. They were reluctant to take their seats as the warning gongs sounded, seeming to want to prolong the pleasure of the unique glamour which attends Tanglewood occasions.

The tonal glory of the Boston orchestra was never more splendid. The sonorities in the string sections were extremely rich in the inaugural Bach suite, in D major. The solid and fundamental chords of Bach were sustained with full and even fluidity, apparent at the outset in the pontifical overture of the suite.

In the succeeding movements Dr. Koussevitzky continued to choose the exact tempi, making evident his complete grasp of the nature of the music, tempering it with completely satisfying spaciousness and poise. The wind sections, too, produced tone of remarkable balance and soft impact to blend with that of their colleagues.

Exciting Performance

The orchestra was especially responsive to Koussevitzky's slightest desires in the Hindemith symphony, "Matthew the Painter." It was marked by a fervent intensity, rising often to dramatic heights. The music and the title are derived from the composer's own opera, and the three movements are designated "Angelic concert," "Entombment" and "Temptation of St. Anthony." Its first Tanglewood performance took place eight years ago while the composer was a member of the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center. Its power was expressed with steady graphic pressure and became increasingly moving as it progressed. There are exceedingly great demands on the instruments. In the original opera he treats the voices in the same manner, without any quarter whatsoever. The instruments, however, fare better as they neither tire nor are they quite so fallible as the voice. The performance became cumulatively more exciting by the use of remarkable dynamic nuances and contrasts, prompted by the most sensitive musical intelligence, bringing it to consummate expressiveness.

The Beethoven fifth symphony

Unwelcome Visitor Causes Minor Panic At Opening Concert

An unwelcome visitor nearly upset the opening program of the Berkshire Festival in the Music Shed at Tanglewood last night.

While Dr. Serge Koussevitzky was leading his Boston Symphony Orchestra through Beethoven's symphony No. 5 in C minor, there was much unrest among many of the concert-goers in the front section, near the left side of the Shed. A field mouse made an unexpected appearance, running up and down the area between the stage and the front row. The rodent soon disappeared and the music lovers settled back once again, with their feet on the ground, to enjoy the remainder of the concert.

Cir. (D 85,264)

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
JUL 30 1948

7,500 Attend Opening Concert at Tanglewood

Special to The Hartford Times

Lenox, Mass—The first concert of the season in the big shed at Tanglewood drew a crowd of 7,500 which, if not a record, was considered very good for a Thursday night. While other summer musical attractions are falling off or even languishing, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire season flourishes phenomenally in spite of a more crowded schedule of events than ever before.

It was a typical opening night crowd, punctilious, sophisticated, contained. Rather a bit too much contained in the beginning—only some of the audience arose with the orchestra to greet the entrance of the master of the festival, Serge Koussevitsky, who has announced his forthcoming retirement, at least from his Boston activities. But reserve was soon laid aside.

While the great body of festival goers, young and old, seemed to be holding the fire of its enthusiasm for that household familiar, Beethoven's Fifth, it took the tensions of such modernism as Hindemith's "Matthew the Painter" to trip off a really excited ovation like the rebel yells of Dixie Democrats. Even those who declare against Hindemith cannot resist his pressure upon the nerves.

Koussevitsky was in a sensitive mood. He traced the well-worn contours of the air in Bach's D major Suite as though discovering its loveliness for the first time. The opening motto of the Fifth Symphony he delivered like a cannon shot and from then on kept his Jovian eminence.

* * *

THE BOSTON ORCHESTRA continues to be the richest wellspring of beautiful sound with which modern man is acquainted. When released upon a score like the Hindemith tryptich its compulsions are indescribable. Its quivering harmonics, its gorgeous brass, the collisions of its counterpoint, its sheer voluptuous noise assail the senses in such a way as to leave scars of aesthetic experience.

How well Koussevitzky manages his program material! He has up his well-tailored sleeve many things which are not considered manna for the masses — Walter Piston's Third Symphony night and Milhaud on Sunday — but thus to sandwich Hindemith between the bread of Bach and Beethoven—and pulling them out of their seats with it—shows that he knows a thing or two about musical metabolism and your average man.

* * *

IT WAS A PERFECT night, starry and cool. Improved facilities for refreshment and smoothly handled traffic arrangements continue to enhance the Tanglewood concerts as pleasantest sort of artistic diversions.

The week-end programs are: Saturday night at 8:15, Piston's Third Symphony, Prokofieff's Violin Concerto with Isaac Stern soloist and Brahms' First Symphony. Sunday afternoon at 3:30, Leonard Bernstein conducting Mahler's Second Symphony and Milhaud's Second Symphony with the composer conducting.

C. E. L.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION
JUL 30 1948

Aug. 7 Concert to Benefit Musicians

Tanglewood Event Supported by Socialites

The campaign for assistance to European musicians in present need, which will be inaugurated at a great benefit by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood Tuesday, has the endorsement of the State Department as one of "great significance," it was revealed in a letter made public today from Assistant Secretary George V. Allen to Carleton Sprague Smith, a member of the national committee.

"The American Section of the International Society for Contemporary Music with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky at its head, is working in a field of great significance," Mr. Allen's letter to Dr. Smith reads in part. "Its project for promoting benefit concerts to aid the creative side of music in Europe deserves widespread support, and I believe that Europeans will look upon this effort as further evidence of the sincere interest on the part of the American people in the welfare and progress of European intellectual life."

"It is our desire to give, wherever possible, encouragement and support to private undertakings, such as yours, which are designed to promote mutual understanding and cooperation," the assistant secretary's letter concluded.

The central committee for the benefit includes: Mrs. Koussevitzky, Dr. Lewis Perry, Boston; Albert Spalding, Great Barrington; Mrs. James S. Deeley, Stockbridge; Mrs. Bruce Crane, Dalton; Mrs. Zay Jeffries, Alan J. Blau, and Mrs. George W. Edman, Pittsfield; Mrs. Charles Fox, Miss Kathleen Channing, and Mrs. C. D. Jackson, New York; Mrs. Maurice Firuski, Salisbury; and Frederic J. DeVeau, Groton.

Those who have accepted to serve on the national committee are: Dr. Carleton Sprague Smith, Frederick W. Beinecke, Mr. and Mrs. Pierre Luboshutz, William Schuman, John S. Williams, Mrs. Arthur Reis, Mrs. C. Reinhold Noyes, W. Penrose Hallowell, Mr. and Mrs. Richard Leach, Mr. and Mrs. Giovanni Cardelli, and Mrs. W. Murray Crane, all of New York. From New York state are: Miss Annabelle Terrell, Chatham; Mrs. E. Gerry Chadwick, Syosset, L. I.; Mrs. Charles Mitchell, Oyster Bay, L. I.; Howard Hanson, Rochester; Mrs. Byron E. VanRaalte, Cedarhurst, L. I.; Mr. and Mrs. W. Gordon Cox, Old Chatham.

Representing Massachusetts on the committee are: Judge and Mrs. Jacob J. Kaplan, James S. Plaut, Konrad Bose, Boston; Mrs. A. Kingsley Porter, Cambridge; Justice Felix Frankfurter, Washington; Mrs. Hayden Channing, Mr and Mrs. Bruce Sanborn, Mr. and Mrs. Lester Roberts, Mrs. William N. Bullard, Lenox; Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Percival and Mrs. William Penn Gresson, Stockbridge; George Sokolsky, [illegible] and Mrs. Richard Mortimer Maddox, Mr. and Mrs. Robert K. Wheeler, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Blodgett, and Stephen Crane, Great Barrington; Mrs. Lawrence K. Miller, Mrs. Donald F. McPherson, Mr. and Mrs. Milton B. Warner, Pittsfield; Mrs. Shaun Kelly, Richmond; Dr. James Phinney Baxter, Philip Marshall Brown, Robert G. Barrow, Miss Ellen Safford, and Robert M. Derby, Williamstown; Winthrop M. Crane, 3d, Dalton; Mrs. Alan Limburg, Windsor; Judge Anthony Hanlon, Adams; Mrs. M. Graeme Haughton, Prides Crossing; Mrs. John Alden Carpenter and Mrs. Alexander Steinert, Beverly; Mr. and Mrs. Allen Forbes, Westwood; Mrs. D. W. Pickman, Hamilton.

[207]

Jul 30

Babbitt

MUSICIANS ALL: Seated in the box section at the opening concert of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood last night were these members of the Tung family of Shanghai, China. They are guests for the first series of concerts of Mrs. Joseph Jones of Richmond who was a classmate of Mrs. Tung at Wellesley College. All of the Tungs are musicians. Two boys, Shew-Yuen, and Shew-Ling, will further their studies in music in the fall at the Curtis Institute of Music in Philadelphia.

Tanglewood

Carvalho To Conduct Tonight at 8.15

Symphony concert in the Shed, with advanced student orchestra, conducted by Eleazar deCarvalho and three student conductors: Mendelssohn's "Reformation" Symphony; Bach, concerto for two violins; Harold Shapero's, symphony for classical orchestra; Strauss, "Also Sprach Zarathustra."

Tomorrow Morning

Public rehearsal of Boston Symphony Orchestra for benefit of the orchestra's pension fund at 10 in the Shed.

Tomorrow Afternoon

Scenes by the opera department at 2.30:

The Marriage of Figaro .... Mozart
(Excerpt from Act 1.)
James Pease, Adele Addison, Edwin Hirschl, Conchita Caston, Eleanor Davis.
The Fair of Sorotchinek (Aria from Act 3), Moussorgsky
Louise Edson.
Aida (Duet from Act 3) .... Verdi
Juanita Brumfiel, Herman Miller.
Queen of Spades (Scene from Act 2), Tchaikovsky
Biruta Ramoska, David Lloyd, Ilona Strasser.
Il Travatore (final scene) .... Verdi
David Garen, Conchita Caston, Ellen Faull, Benjamin deLoache.
I Pagliacci (excerpt) .... Leoncavallo
Sonia Stolin, John Bankhurst, Marshall Heinbaugh.
Carmen (excerpt from Act 4) .... Bizet
Conchita Caston, David Poleri.

Tomorrow Night

Second concert in the Shed of the Berkshire Festival by Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting: Piston's symphony No. 3, Prokofieff's violin concerto No. 1, with Isaac Stern, soloist, Brahms' first symphony.

Kwong-Kwong Tung Appeared As Soloist With Boston Pops

Kwong-Kwong Tung, who attended the opening concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood last night, is a pianist who has appeared with the Boston Pops and at the Esplanada concerts as a soloist playing the Grieg piano concerto. Her sister, Ming-Ming Tung, is a violinist. A brother, Shew-Yuen, a violinist will study under Efram Zimbalist at the Curtis Institute of Music in Philadelphia, in the fall, while another brother, Shew-Ling, a cellist, will study at Curtis Institute under Gregor Piatigorsky.

The Tungs came to this country from Shanghai 1½ years ago and in the fall they will move to Philadelphia. Last night they were guests of Mrs. Charles Proctor of Swampscott in her box at the Festival. Their father, head of a normal school in Shanghai, is expected to arrive soon in this country.

Bernstein To Write Concerto For Woody Herman

Leonard Bernstein has agreed to write a concerto for Woody Herman, clarinetist and dance band leader. The concerto is to be played next spring at Carnegie Hall, with Mr. Bernstein conducting the Herman band, according to an item in Jean and Robert Boardman's column in the New York Herald Tribune.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

JUL 30 1948

Tanglewood Gala Festival To Aid European Talent

THE fountain scene from "Pelleas and Melisande", an excerpt from "Don Giovanni" and Menotti's "The Telephone", will be heard in the gardens at Tanglewood on Tuesday. The special outdoor performance at 4 p. m. is for boxholders and reserved seat patrons to "Tanglewood on Parade", the Boston Symphony Orchestra and ~~Berkshire~~ Music Center's benefit for assistance to musicians in Europe. The event inaugurates a nation-wide campaign to help unblock creative talent abroad.

For the opera department's contribution to the simultaneous demonstration of all departments of the Berkshire Music Center beginning at 6 p. m. and open to all ticket-holders for the benefit, Boris Goldovsky has selected Acts I and IV of "La Boheme" and Act II of "The Marriage of Figaro."

* * *

Supper on the lawn at 7 p. m. will follow the hour-long demonstrations. The manifestation at 8 p. m. in the Music Shed will bring appearances by Cornelia Otis Skinner, Archibald MacLeish, Aaron Copland, and other important figures in letters and the arts. Serge Koussevitzky will lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a concert beginning at 9:15 which will conclude with a group of waltzes. The three - quarter rhythm will be picked up and carried on after the concert by a student orchestra under the direction of Frederick Fennell of the conducting faculty for dancing on the lawn.

* * *

REMINISCENT of the great last act of "Die Meistersinger" will be the parade of the students which immediately precedes the demonstrations. Like the guilds in Wagner's great music drama, the 462 boys and girls from 42 states and 15 foreign countries will march by departments carrying banners and led by a band. There will be performances of orchestra, choral and chamber music as well as opera. It would require no less than four visits to Tanglewood to see and hear what will be going on there Tuesday within the period of an hour.

In the Music Shed the student orchestra under student conductors will play Beethoven's "Coriolanus" Overture, the Chorale and Toccata from William Schuman's Symphony No. 3, the first movement of Rachmaninoff's Second Concerto and three dances from Leonard Bernstein's ballet "Fancy Free."

Cir. (M. & E. 82,265)

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

JUL 30 1948

Berkshire Music Center Programs This Week End

Two musical programs, not announced in the printed schedule, will be performed this week end at wood, Lenox, by students of the Berkshire mMusic Center.

Friday afternoon at 4.30 under the direction of Frederick Fennell the orchestra of department 5 will play the following concert:

Mozart.....Overture to "The Magic Flute"
Robert Schumann....
..........Symphony No. 2 in C major
Franck.....Symphonic Variations for Piano
..........................and Orchestra
Irene Rosenberg, pianist
Milhaud.. ....Suite Francaise

Saturday afternoon at 2.30 the opera department will give scenes from famous operas.

Friday evening at 8.15 the advanced student orchestra will play:

Mendelssohn....... "Reformation" Symphony
Howard Shanet, conductor
Bach............Concerto for Two Violins
Soloists:.......Zvi Zeitlin, Josef Bernstein
Both of Palestine
Seymour Lipkin, conductor
Harold Shapero....
.......Symphony for Classical Orchestra

The composer studied both composition and conducting at the Berkshire Music Center. The symphony was commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and given its world premiere performance by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Leonard Bernstein in January 1948.

~~R. Strauss, "Also~~ Sprach Zarathustra"
Conductor, Eleazar deCarvalho

Also open to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center will be an organ recital of Bach by E. Power Biggs, Boston Symphony Orchestra organist, at 10 Sunday morning in the Music Shed, with the program: Toccata in F major, Three Chorale Preludes,

---

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

JUL 30 1948

7500 LAUD STYLE OF KOUSSEVITZKY

By RAYMOND MORIN

LENOX, Friday — Seventy-five hundred ardent Tanglewoodites poured into the huge shed and onto the neighboring grounds last night for the initial program in the first of three series of three concerts each in the Berkshire Music Festival.

Serge Koussevitzky, a still vibrant podium figure in spite of his seventy-fourth birthday last Monday, was welcomed by an audience that applauded him with a relish. Immaculately groomed, as was the rest of the orchestra in white coat and dark trousers, he accepted the tribute with great dignity.

Interprets 3 Styles

Dr. Koussevitzky assigned himself the scholarly task of interpreting three widely divergent styles, Bach's "Overture (suite) No. 3, in D Major," the symphony "Matthias the Painter," by Hindemith, and Beethoven's powerful "Symphony No. 5, in C Minor."

Here was adventure in contrasts and concepts. The ecclesiastically pure Bach score, the romantic colors of the Hindemith tonal tapestries, and the eruptive declarations of the Beethoven symphony were like three great acts in many scenes of separate dramas. To say that the Boston Symphony played very well would be to repeat a timeworn remark. If one were to select one of last night's scores for interpretive dissection, the Bach would probably be the most revealing proving ground, this in spite of the fact that the Hindemith music contained some of the most gripping climaxes heard on these grounds.

Movements Clearly Traced

The construction of the Bach movements were clearly traced with no neglect of expressive qualities. The confident motives of the overture were sharply outspoken with masterly revelation of the complex interchange of materials between desks. The solemn opening and closing sections were smoothly integrated into the main body of the movement.

We fondly recall the lusciously rich tones of the famous second movement, "air," as performed in Tanglewood's theater concert hall in strings sounding as they do, we felt that we can, with cause, assume that last night's playing of this movement is once again a high water mark for a Berkshire festival. The three dance movements that followed gavotte (with a second interjected gavotte in the style of a trio), bourree, and gigue, lacked some of the rhythmic stability of the overture. Other flaws were perfunctory endings and slight insecurity in the high trumpet.

Welcomed Outlet

For those who seek new music the Hindemith score was a welcomed outlet. If you take into account contemporary composers productive pens, "Matthias the Painter" is no longer new, for it was first performed in 1934.

The symphony is composed of three extracts from the composer's opera of the same name. They are titled, "Angelic Concert," "Entombment," and "Temptation of St. Anthony."

It is not possible to write of this music without giving a brief summation of its background. The three movements are compared to three famous paintings of the Isenheim altar piece in the museum at Colmar, Alsace. They are the handiwork of the sixteenth century German painter Matthias Grunewald, who is the central figure of the opera. As you might expect, the music is steeped in Hindemith-ism. This is not necessarily a foregone conclusion for composers frequently deviate from their adopted mediums.

Complement Each Other

The remarkable characteristic of these excerpts is the effectiveness with which they complement each other. This integration of ideas is to be expected of the opening movement which is actually the overture of the opera.

Throughout the work, there are evidences of fragmentary structure within movements, abrupt climaxes. both thunderous and gentle. The "entombment" is the intermezzo in the final scene, and the "temptation" section lies intact in the opera's sixth scene. In other words, this work is not a free lance potpourri.

Music Symbolical

The music is essentially symbolical. For example, the second movement represents the withdrawal of the central figure from the world of strife, and the temptation scene is in reality the personal experience of the painter himself.

Being told the narrative that inspired the final movement, it is possible to read this idea in the fiery statements of the strings at the beginning of the final movement but it would leave an equally vivid impression without knowledge of the libretto. As in most of his music, Hindemith is here again a master contrapuntalist. His is not the heavy handed, sometimes blowed German school of counterpoint, but a light penned, craftsman like style, free in spirit.

There is freshness of melodic idea. It doesn't follow the religious paths of Schubert nor does it persistenly wander from home base, however basically atonal it may be.

Saturday Program

The Beethoven symphony played into our deadline. This monumental work having been played many times at Tanglewood we assume there were no marked changes in the Koussevitzky interpretation, except (we understand) for an increase in the deliberate tempo at which he usually takes the "fate motive."

The festival will be resumed Saturday night. The works are Piston's Symphony No. 3, Brahms Symphony No. 1 in C Minor, and Prokofieff's violin Concerto No. 1 with Isaac Stern as soloist.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

JUL 30 1948

Changes Made In Programs At Tanglewood

Two Events Not Scheduled Slated This Evening, Tomorrow

Two musical programs, not announced in the printed schedule, will be performed this week-end at Tanglewood, Lenox, by students of the Berkshire Music Center.

This afternoon at 4.00 under the direction of Frederick Fennell the orchestra of department 5 gave the following concert: Mozart, Overture to "The Magic Flute"; Robert Schumann, Symphony No. 2 in C major; Franck, Symphonic Variations for Piano and Orchestra; Irene Rosenberg, pianist; Milhaud, Suite Francaise.

Tomorrow afternoon at 2.30 the opera department will give scenes from famous operas.

This evening at 8.15 the advanced student orchestra will play: Mendelssohn, "Reformation" Symphony; Howard Shanet, conductor; Bach, Concerto for Two Violins; soloists: Zvi Zeitlin, Josef Bernstein, both of Palestine; Seymour Lipkin, conductor; Harold Shapero, Symphony for Classical Orchestra.

The composer studied both composition and conducting at the Berkshire Music Center. The symphony was commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and given its world premiere performance by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Leonard Bernstein in January 1948.

R. Strauss, "Also Sprach Zarathustra", conductor, Eleazar deCarvalho.

Also open to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center will be an organ recital of Bach by E. Power Biggs, Boston Symphony Orchestra organist, at 10 Sunday morning in the Music Shed, with the program: Toccata in F major, Three Chorale Preludes, Three Contrapuncti from "The Art of Fugue" and Passacaglia and Fugue in C minor.

A chamber music concert will be given at 11 by advanced students.

This Clipping From
HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT-TELEGRAM

JUL 30 1948

TANGLEWOOD PUPILS LIST EXTRA CONCERTS

To be Presented at Music Center Over Week-End

Two concerts, not originally scheduled, will be presented by students of the Berkshire Music center at Tanglewood ~~this week-end~~, it was announced today.

Students in Department 5 will present a concert this afternoon at 4:30 o'clock, while the advanced student orchestra will give a Mendelssohn and Bach concert tonight at 8:15 o'clock. On Saturday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock, the opera department will present scenes from famous operas.

Circ. (D 5,789)

This Clipping From GREENSBURG, PA.
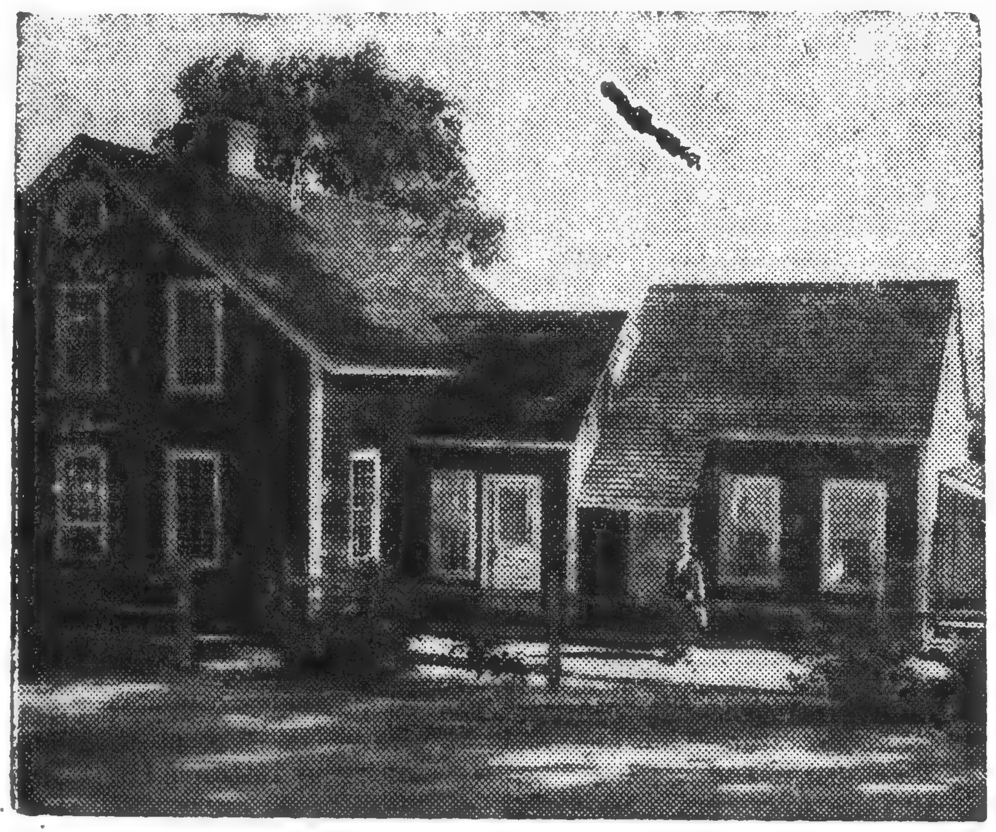
REVIEW

JUL 30 1948

Hawthorne Cottage Restored In Berkshires

MAESTRO and students at work in a famous studio—Serge Koussevitzky, left, directs Seymour Lipkin at the piano, as Howard Shanet of Hunter College, New York, watches.



HAWTHORNE'S red house, which has been restored by the National Federation of Music Clubs for the studios of Serge Koussevitzky and Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist.

AP Newsfeatures

Lennox, Mass.—The Hawthorne cottage at Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., has been restored and now houses three studios, including Serge Koussevitzky's class in advanced orchestral conducting.

Mrs. Guy Patterson Gannett of Portland, Me., former president of the National Federation of Music Clubs and chairman of the committee for restoration, has presented the house where Nathaniel Hawthorne lived in 1850-1851 to the Berkshire Music Center.

There the novelist wrote "The House of Seven Gables."

A two-day music festival was arranged for the dedication.

Manning Hawthorne, the oldest grandson of the novelist, and Henry Wadsworth Longfellow Dana, great grandson of the poet, were among scheduled speakers, as was Mrs. Royden J. Keith of Chicago, national president of the federation, and Gay Tapley of Portland, Me.

This Clipping From
HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT TELEGRAM

0 1948

Berkshire Music Festival Opening Attracts 7500

A crowd of 7500 music lovers filled the huge shed at Tanglewood last night and spilled over on to the lawns to hear the Boston symphony orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky in the opening of the Berkshire Music Festival.

The program for the first concert by the complete orchestra included Bach's Suite No. 3; the "Symphony" from Hindemith's opera, "Mathias de Maler," and Beethoven's 5th Symphony in C Minor.

The festival will continue tonight with Piston's Third Symphony; Prokofieff's First Violin Concerto and Brahm's First Symphony. Darius Milhaud and Leonard Bernstein will be guest conductors at the Sunday afternoon performance.

Additions to Tanglewood this year include a new glass exhibition hall where the famous "Berkshire" radio-phonograph-television combination is displayed; a new music store, and an outdoor cafeteria.

This Clipping From
LAWRENCE, MASS.
TRIBUNE

JUL 30 1948

Berkshire Music Festival Opens

LENOX, July 29 (AP)—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony orchestra opened the 11th Berkshire Festival season at Tanglewood tonight with 7,500 persons in the music shed and 1,500 more scattered over the lawns.

The weather was ideal with clear skies and the temperature about 65 degrees.

Dr. Koussevitzky was recalled four times after Paul Hindemith's symphony, "Matthias the Painter."

The orchestra opened the program with Bach's overture (suite) No. 3 in D major, performed at Tanglewood originally in 1945 at the Bach Mozart festival. The concert ended with Beethoven's Symphony No. 5 in C minor.

The second concert in the first series of three week end programs will be given at Tanglewood Saturday night when the orchestra will perform Walter Piston's Symphony No. 3.

Piston, a native of Rockland, Me., completed this composition in the summer of 1947 at South Woodstock, Vt. He dedicated the score "to the memory of Natalie Koussevitzky," the conductor's first wife. Also on the program will be Prokofieff's "Concerto for Violin and Orchestra No. 1," with Isaac Stern, 27-year-old violinist, as soloist.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

JUL 30 1948

Berkshire Festival

Boston Symphony Opens First of Four-Day Week Ends

By Arthur V. Berger

LENOX, Mass., July 29.—The fourteenth season of the Berkshire Festival entered its major phase tonight under the huge shed on the Tanglewood estate near here.

Following the concerts earlier this month, devoted to Mozart and presented appropriately by reduced orchestra, the full Boston Symphony Orchestra opened the first of its three consecutive four-day week ends under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky with two guest conductors, Leonard Bernstein and Darius Milhaud.

Initiating the series tonight, Mr. Koussevitzky occupied the podium. He will also conduct Saturday's concert in its entirety. Critical comment on tonight's event will be reserved until Saturday's edition of the Herald Tribune.

Viewed in regard to its external manifestations, the festive occasion assumed much the same aspect that it had during the previous ten seasons during which the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Mr. Koussevitzky have been the mainstay of the Berkshire Festivals. Autos were thickly parked. Throngs settled themselves on the lawns. Many reclined on blankets. There were 6,000 reserved seats under the fan-shaped shed.

The program of this opening concert followed the usual pattern for openings. As one might expect during a regular opening of the Boston Symphony's home series, familiar classics appeared on the list. In this case, Beethoven's Fifth Symphony comprised the second half of the program. Bach's suite in D major, No. 3, opened the evening. The composition placed between these was a work by Paul Hindemith, but even it has become something of a classic in modern literature.

The earliest Berkshire Festival concerts were not given on the Tanglewood estate, and operated on a considerably smaller scale. In 1934, the festival was held on the Dan Hanna estate in the township of Stockbridge. Henry Hadley and the New York Philharmonic Symphony Society were engaged for the occasion. During the following year, the fesetival took place on the same grounds, but with the aid of a tent to shelter the audience. Mr. Hadley and the New York Philharmonic-Symphony again participated.

In 1936, the concerts took place on the estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson at Holmwood in Stockbridge. In 1937, the Tanglewood estate was presented to the Boston Symphony by Mrs. Gorham Brooks (later Mrs. Andrew Hepburn) and her aunt, Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan. The next summer the shed was inaugurated Aug. 4, 1938. The total attendance for the series jumped from 5,000 in 1934 to 38,000 for the 1938 series.

This Clipping From
HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT TELEGRAM

JUL 30 1948

Tanglewood to Aid Musicians Abroad

Concert for Needy Musicians in Europe Next Tuesday Endorsed by U. S. State Department.

The U. S. state department has endorsed "Tanglewood on Parade," the concert which the Boston Symphony orchestra and the Berkshire Music center will present Tuesday, Aug. 10, at Tanglewood for the benefit of needy musicians in Europe.

"The American section of the International Society for Contemporary Music, with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky at its head, is working in a field of great significance," wrote George V. Allen, assistant secretary of State, to Carleton Sprague Smith, a member of the committee planning the event.

"Its project for promoting benefit concerts to aid the creative side of music in Europe deserves widespread support, and I believe that Europeans will look upon this effort as further evidence of the sincere interest on the part of the American people in the welfare and progress of European intellectual life.

"It is our desire to give, wherever possible, encouragement and support to private undertakings, such as yours, which are designed to promote mutual understanding and co-operation."

Among those on the committee are Dr. Lewis N. Perry of Boston, formerly of Williamstown and headmaster emeritus of Exeter academy, John S. Williams, formerly of this city, Dr. James Phinney Baxter, 3rd, president of Williams college, Philip Marshall Brown, Robert G. Barrow, Miss Ellen Safford, and Robert M. Derby, all of Williamstown, Judge Anthony Hanlon of Adams, and Mrs. Alan Limburg of Windsor.

The program to be presented Tuesday evening, Aug. 10, at 8:15 o'clock, will be devoted to the music of Tchaikovsky, and will include his "Symphony No. 6, Pathetique," Piano Concerto No. 1," with Seymour Lipkin as soloist, and "Ouverture Solennelle, 1812."

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM

JUL 30 1948

Music

Koussevitzky Opens Berkshire Festival

By ROBERT BAGAR.

TANGLEWOOD, LENOX, Mass., July 30.—The Berkshire Symphonic Festival opened its 11th season last night in the Tanglewood Music Shed before an audience of well over 7000. There had been two previous concerts by a smaller orchestra devoted to Bach and Mozart, respectively, on the Sunday and Tuesday preceding, both held in the Theater Concert Hall. With audiences present at those the total attendance has now reached something like 13,000.

Last night Serge Koussevitzky offered a program of music consisting of the Bach Overture No. 3, in D major; the Hindemith Symphony, "Mathis der Mahler" ("Matthias the Painter"), and the Beethoven Fifth Symphony.

As the conductor's trim figure appeared through the little door at the right of the stage, the audience launched into a torrent of applause, which he received modestly. Mr. Koussevitzky, who has recently completed his 74th years, is as active as he has ever been on the podium. He gesticulates with energy that must be endless, shrugging his shoulders for special effects, bouncing from foot to foot. He is absolutely never still, except, perhaps, in slow passages, when he permits only his features and his slowly waving hands to do the kinetic act.

This Boston Symphony Orchestra, as it played last night, is one grand and glorious organization. The musicians are so completely en rapport with their conductor that it is fascinating to watch them, let alone hear them, too.

In the republic of musical performance there can be only one government—benevolent dictatorship. No other kind would be workable. Can you imagine what it would be like to hear well over a hundred individualists doing—under some statute of rights for musicians — exactly what they pleased?

The highlight of the concert last evening was the orchestra's performance of the Hindemith Symphony—more properly a sort of spiritual tone-picture of the three famous paintings in the Cologne Cathedral. "Mathis der Mahler" is the title of the work from which these three symphonic sections stem. It is an opera which lay gathering dust for some years, until it was given its first hearing in 1938.

Its movements entitled "Angelic Concert," "Entombment," and "Temptation of St. Anthony." The work is one of Hindemith's most expressive and, to use a word, powerful compositions. The initial movement teems with curious figures that seem to take little nips at the main part of the music, which in itself is always interesting, always provocative.

There is excellent feeling in this, and especially in the middle section, there is serenity and resignation in its slow measures. All in all, I think that the Bostonians outdid themselves in delivering this work. And it was somewhat surprising—and pleasantly so—to this reviewer that the audience applauded clamorously. We are not accustomed to listeners taking a modern work, though familiar, to their hearts as enthusiastically as the Tanglewood throng did last night.

The Bach, with a beautiful air that is known to just about everybody, was generally well played.

The Beethoven began at rather a fast clip. Mr. Koussevitzky wasn't sparing the musicians in its "V for Victory" opening movement. At any rate the pace soon came to normality, and all was well with the performance, your reporter and, we may as well add, Beethoven.

This Clipping From WATERVILLE, ME.
SENTINEL
JUL 30 1948

Koussevitzky Is Conductor At Berkshire Festival

LENOX, Mass., July 29—(AP)—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra opened the 11th Berkshire festival season at Tanglewood tonight with 7,500 persons in the music shed and 1,500 more scattered over the lawns.

The weather was ideal with clear skies and the temperature about 65 degrees.

Dr. Koussevitzky was recalled four times after Paul Hindemith's symphony, "Matthias the Painter."

The orchestra opened the program with Bach's Overture (suite) No. 3 in D Major, performed at Tanglewood originally in 1945 at the Bach-Mozart festival.

The concert ended with Beethoven's Symphony No. 5 in C Minor.

The second concert in the first eries of three weekend programs vill be given at Tanglewood Saturlay night when the orchestra will erform Walter Piston's Symphony No. 3.

Piston, a native of Rockland, Me., ompleted this composition in the ummer of 1947 at South Woodtock, Vt. He dedicated the score To the memory of Natalie Kousseitzky," the conductor's first wife. lso on the program will be Proofieff's "Concerto for Violin and rchestra No. 1," with Isaac Stern, 7 year old violinist, as soloist.

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN
JUL 30 1948

9,000 Hear Boston Symphony

Lenox, Mass., July 29—(AP)—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra opened the 11th Berkshire Festival season at Tanglewood tonight with 7,500 persons in the music shed and 1,500 more scattered over the lawns.

The weather was ideal with clear skies and the temperature about 65 degrees.

Dr. Koussevitzky was recalled four times after Paul Hindemith's symphony, "Matthias the Painter."

The orchestra opened the program with Bach's Overture (Suite) No. 3 in D major, performed at Tanglewood originally in 1945 at the Bach Mozart festival. The concert ended with Beethoven's symphony No. 5 in C minor.

This Clipping From LEWISTON, ME.
SUN
JUL 30 1948

Berkshire Music Center Benefit Program Varied

Archibald MacLeish will serve as chairman of "Tanglewood on Parade", the benefit which the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center will stage Tuesday, Aug. 3, for the creative musicians of Europe. The distinguished American poet will introduce Cornelia Otis Skinner, Aaron Copland and other important figures in letters and the arts to be announced. Serge Koussevitzky will speak as well as conduct the full orchestra in a concert in the Music Shed between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass.

"A musical CARE package" is the way one participant describes the four-hour event which will inaugurate a nation-wide campaign for assistance to the fellow-artists of the Old World. The national committee will request other orchestras throughout the country to give benefits during the forthcoming season.

Just returned from a coast-to-coast tour in "Lady Windermere's Fan," which ran the entire season before in New York, Miss Skinner will read two Elizabethan sonnets at the "manifestation" beginning at 8 P.M. Her selections are Michael Drayton's "The Parting" and the Sonnet No. 29 of Shakespeare, "When in Disgrace." Almost as well known as an author as actress, Miss Skinner will have her sixth book published this Autumn, reminiscences of her celebrated father and mother entitled "Family Circle." She is a frequent contributor to The New Yorker and has a humorous sketch in the current issue of that magazine. This season she returns to the monologue stage where she won her first fame.

Maurice Evans had also accepted to appear in a Shakespearean excerpt but has sent word he will be unable to attend.

In the gala spirit of the occasion Dr. Koussevitsky has programmed a group showing the development of the waltz for the grand concert at 9:15 P.M. The lively finale will include "Voices of Spring" by Strauss," "Valse Triste" by Sibelius, and "La Valse" of Ravel. The other numbers will be Beethoven's "Leonore" Overture No. 3 and Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" with Wesley Addy as narrator.

Festivities will begin at 6 P.M. with an actual parade of the 462 students of the Berkshire Music Center. They will proceed to their varous departments for demonstrations of all activities of the school —orchestra, opera, chorus, and chamber music. The hour from 7 to 8 P.M. will be given over to picnic supper on the grounds.

Patrons subscribing for reserved seats and box seats will be invited to a special added attraction, a performance at 4 P.M. in the Tanglewood gardens of "The Telephone" by Gian-Carlo Menotti and scenes from other operas. A custom-built RCA Victor Berkshire model radio-phonograph will be given away.

This Clipping From
LAWRENCE, MASS.
EAGLE
JUL 30 1948

Berkshire Music Festival Opens

LENOX, July 29 (AP)—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra opened the 11th Berkshire Festival season at Tanglewood tonight with 7,500 persons in the music shed and 1,500 more scattered over the lawns.

The weather was ideal with clear skies and the temperature about 65 degrees.

Dr. Koussevitzky was recalled four times after Paul Hindemith's symphony, "Matthias the Painter."

The orchestra opened the program with Bach's overture (suite) No. 3 in D major, performed at Tanglewood originally in 1945 at the Bach Mozart festival. The concert ended with Beethoven's Symphony No. 5 in C minor.

The second concert in the first series of three week end programs will be given at Tanglewood Saturday night when the orchestra will perform Walter Piston's Symphony No. 3.

Piston, a native of Rockland, Me., completed this composition in the summer of 1947 at South Woodstock, Vt. He dedicated the score "to the memory of Natalie Koussevitzky," the conductor's first wife. Also on the program will be Prokofieff's "Concerto for Violin and Orchestra No. 1," with Isaac Stern, 27-year-old violinist, as soloist.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
JUL 30 1948

John Garfield's Ghost-Fiddler Soloist at Festival Tomorrow

Isaac Stern

TANGLEWOOD — Twenty-seven-year-old Isaac Stern, violinist, who was the ghost-fiddler for John Garfield in the film, "Humoresque," will play the solo part of Prokofieff's first violin concerto in the Music Shed here tomorrow night at 8.15 with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conducting.

Festival officials today said Mr. Stern is the only top-flight violinist trained exclusively in the United States. He recently returned from a tour of Australia where he made 35 appearances in a dozen cities.

A resident of San Francisco, since the age of one year, he started when he was six to study piano. Two years later he switched to violin, and played first in public at the age of 11. He studied in New York with Louis Persinger, who spent several summers in Pittsfield as a member of the South Mountain Quartet and music colony.

Appearing with almost every major orchestra in the country, he played with the New York Philharmonic Symphony in the Stadium series last summer and with the Boston Orchestra in the past season.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
JUL 30 1948

TANGLEWOOD OPENS ANNUAL MUSIC FETE

Koussevitzky Conducts Boston Symphony in First Program of 14th Yearly Festival

By HOWARD TAUBMAN

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., July 29—The fourteenth annual Berkshire Music Festival began here at Tanglewood tonight under the most felicitous auspices—a huge crowd, a moonlit, starlit night and, of course, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky.

The opening program in the graceful, capacious Music Shed tonight provided a foretaste of what Mr. Koussevitzky has planned for the three long week-ends of the festival. There was one contemporary work, "Mathis der Maler," by Paul Hindemith, who was on the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center some seasons ago, with two classic scores—Bach's Suite in D, No. 3, and Beethoven's ever popular and lustrous Fifth Symphony.

All of the 6,000 seats in the shed were sold out in advance of concert time. As usual thousands of men and women sat and reclined on the lawn and, thanks to the splendid acoustics of the shed, heard a good account of the performance.

Interest in this year's festival seems to be at a peak. There was proof of this in the record-breaking crowds that turned out in the last fortnight for the two Bach and two Mozart programs that preceded the main part of the festival. The advance sale and a slight increase in ticket prices assures record receipts.

Audiences tonight saw a few changes that add to the beauty and comfort of Tanglewood. A strikingly handsome reception and exhibition room has been erected at the Main Gate. Entirely of plate glass, front and back, it is jointed harmoniously to the offices at the left of the gate. There is a series of slender supporting columns of steel that match happily with the lean, graceful columns that support the Music Shed.

The little red house, in which Nathaniel Hawthorne lived here more than a century ago and wrote "The House of Seven Gables," has been restored by the National Federation of Music Clubs, and sightseers who had time for a walk could examine its charming, old American lines.

The programs for the festival include, besides the usual assortment of standard works, several modern scores. Works by Prokofieff and Piston are scheduled for Saturday night, and a symphony by Milhaud, who is on the teaching staff of the Berkshire Music Center, will be on Sunday's program as well as Mahler's "Resurrection" Symphony.

In later weeks music by Stravinsky, Prokofieff, Vaughan Williams (American première on his new Sixth Symphony), Villa Lobos, Siqueira and Shostakovich will be played.

Granting the beauty of the setting and the holiday spirit of the crowd, it was the playing of the Boston Symphony under Mr. Koussevitzky's incandescent leadership that made the biggest impression tonight.

The Hindemith symphony is a noble, spacious work, and Mr. Koussevitzky and his men brought out the breadth and tenderness and grand design of the music. One might have preferred more rhythmic bite in the last movement, but this is a caviling at a detail. The conception as a whole was faithful to the composer's imagination.

The Bach suite was played with four-square vigor and character that suited it well, and there was a grave beauty in the familiar air that made it seem fresh and deeply moving despite many hearings. As to the Beethoven symphony, what more can be said that has not been said before about this masterwork and its performance by this ensemble?

The opening night was proof that there will be good listening at this festival.

THE HARTFORD TIMES, FRIDAY, JULY

7,500 Attend Opening Concert at Tanglewood

Special to The Hartford Times

Lenox, Mass—The first concert of the season in the big shed at Tanglewood drew a crowd of 7,500 which, if not a record, was considered very good for a Thursday night. While other summer musical attractions are falling off or even languishing, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire season flourishes phenomenally in spite of a more crowded schedule of events than ever before.

It was a typical opening night crowd, punctilious, sophisticated, contained. Rather a bit too much contained in the beginning—only some of the audience arose with the orchestra to greet the entrance of the master of the festival, Serge Koussevitsky, who has announced his forthcoming retirement, at least from his Boston activities. But reserve was soon laid aside.

While the great body of festival goers, young and old, seemed to be holding the fire of its enthusiasm for that household familiar, Beethoven's Fifth, it took the tensions of such modernism as Hindemith's "Matthew the Painter" to trip off a really excited ovation like the rebel yells of Dixie Democrats. Even those who declare against Hindemith cannot resist his pressure upon the nerves.

Koussevitsky was in a sensitive mood. He traced the well-worn contours of the air in Bach's D major Suite as though discovering its loveliness for the first time. The opening motto of the Fifth Symphony he delivered like a cannon shot and from then on kept his Jovian eminence.

* * *

THE BOSTON ORCHESTRA continues to be the richest well-spring of beautiful sound with which modern man is acquainted. When released upon a score like the Hindemith tryptich its compulsions are indescribable. Its quivering harmonics, its gorgeous brass, the collisions of its counterpoint, its sheer voluptuous noise assail the senses in such a way as to leave scars of aesthetic experience.

How well Koussevitzky manages his program material! He has up his well-tailored sleeve many things which are not considered manna for the masses — Walter Piston's Third Symphony night and Milhaud on Sunday — but thus to sandwich Hindemith between the bread of Bach and Beethoven—and pulling them out of their seats with it—shows that he knows a thing or two about musical metabolism and your average man.

* * *

IT WAS A PERFECT night, starry and cool. Improved facilities for refreshment and smoothly handled traffic arrangements continue to enhance the Tanglewood concerts as pleasantest sort of artistic diversions.

The week-end programs are: Saturday night at 8:15, Piston's Third Symphony, Prokofieff's Violin Concerto with Isaac Stern soloist and Brahms' First Symphony. Sunday afternoon at 3:30, Leonard Bernstein conducting Mahler's Second Symphony and Milhaud's Second Symphony with the composer conducting.

C. E. L.

This Clipping From
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER
JUL 30 1948

Campaign For Musicians

The campaign for assistance to European musicians in present need will be inaugurated at a great benefit by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., on next Tuesday. The American Section of the International Society for Contemporary Music, with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky at its head, is promoting benefit concerts to aid the creative side of music in Europe. The project has the endorsement of the State Department.

Among those serving on the national committee for the campaign is Mrs. Arnold Whitridge of Salisbury and New York City, formerly of this city.

7500 HEAR BERKSHIRE SYMPHONY

Post Jul 30

Koussevitzky Leads Hub Orchestra at Tanglewood

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

PITTSFIELD, July 29—Seventy-five hundred people heard the opening concert of the current Berkshire Festival at nearby Tanglewood this evening. This includes the 6000 in the great music shed and those who heard Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, united for the first time since the end of April, sitting or standing on the surrounding lawns.

BIG SHOW UNDER WAY

As in recent years, there have been preliminary concerts in the theatre concert hall, devoted to the music of Bach and Mozart and under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction. The festival proper, meaning the big show in the big tent, is what got under way this evening. Other concerts of the first of the three series will take place Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon.

The Berkshire festival programs are likely to be drawn those heard in Boston in the preceding season. One exception this year will occur a week from Saturday evening when Dr. Koussevitzky brings to pass the first American performance of the sixth Symphony of the venerable English composer, Ralph Vaughan Williams.

This evening's list consisted of Bach's Third Suite in D Major, Hindemith's so-called Symphony, "Mathis Der Maler" (Matthias the painter), and the Fifth Symphony of Beethoven.

Noble Overture

The chief glory of Bach's Suite, and of this evening's performance, is the noble overture. Some may feel that the sumptuous tone that Dr. Koussecitsky achieves here is not Bach, but that is mere quibbling. This suite, however, is chiefly famous for the beautiful air, known as "The Air for the G String" through Wilhelm's transcription for solo violin. This evening the massed fiddles again played it superbly.

It is probably also quibbling to complain that Dr. Koussevitzky romanticizes, dramatizes, and sentimentalizes the music of Hindemith. Unquestionably it lends itself to such treatment. It would be interesting to know how the composer, who taught for a time at the Berkshire Music Centre, feels about Dr. Koussevitzky's interpretation. And our curiousity in this respect is not likely to be gratified.

As for the music itself, this, we can safely say, is one of the enduring pieces created in our own time. We have here the necessary ingredients of a masterpiece: great technical skill, a sure sense of design and proportion, an individual idiom and strong and memorable themes.

There is, in addition, the pictorial aspect of the music, the fine realization in tone of the spirit of the three paintings of Matthias Gruenewald which inspired it, "The Angelic Concert," "The Entombment" and "The Temptation of St. Anthony". In such wise has the latest in the long line of great German composers done service to one of the greatest of German painters.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
JUL 31 1948

Tanglewood

Tonight at 8.15

Second concert of Berkshire Festival in the Shed, by Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting: Walter Piston's third symphony, Prokofieff's violin concerto No. 1, with Isaac Stern, soloist, Brahms' first symphony.

Tomorrow Morning at 10

Concert of organ music by Johann Sebastian Bach, played by E. Power Biggs: Toccata in F major, three chorale preludes, three contrapuncti from "The Art of Fugue," assacaglia and fugue in C minor.

Chamber Music Concert at 11 AM

String Quartet, Op. 55, No. 3 in B flat. ..... Haydn
Violins, Alfred Bruening, Vladimir Weisman
Viola, Erling Bengtsson
Coached by Vladimir Resnikoff
Ecco Mormorar l'Onde .... Monteverdi
I Thought That Love Had Been a Boy, ... Byrd
Audite Nova .... Lassus
Madrigal group of Department 8, conducted by Hugh Ross.
Concerto for violin, piano and string quartet .... Chansson Solo violin, Josef Bernstein.
Piano, Eloise Matthies.
Violins, Gordon Staples and Gottfried Wilfinger.
Viola, William Gromko.
Violoncello, Rowland Pack.
Coached by Jean Bedetti.

Tomorrow Afternoon at 3.30

Third concert of Berkshire Festival in the Shed; second symphony of Darius Milhaud, conducted by the composer; Gustav Mahler's second "Resurrection" hymphony, with chorus and soloists: Ellabelle Davis, soprano; Nan Merriman, contralto.

Tomorrow Night at 8.15

Opera scenes from "The Marriage of Figaro" (Mozart), Orlando (Handel), "The Magic Flute" (Mozart), "The Barber of Seville" (Rossini), "Faust" (Gounod), "Carmen" (Bizet), "The Marriage," Gretchaninoff.

Next Week

Monday

Department 4 chamber orchestra at 4.30.

Tuesday

Tanglewood on Parade from 6 to 10.30.

Wednesday Night

Special choral concert: Bach's "The Passion of Our Lord According to St John," Robert Shaw conducting.

Thursday Afternoon

Department 2 song recital.

Thursday Night

Opening of second series of Berkshire Festival by Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Koussevitzky conducting.

Friday Night

Symphony concert by Department 2 at 8.15.

Saturday Morning

Public rehearsal of Boston Symphony Orchestra at 10, for benefit of pension fund.

Saturday Evening

Berkshire Festival concert, Dr. Koussevitzky conducting.

All events excepting Festival concerts and the public rehearsal are open to members of the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center. Membership is by contribution to the support of the school.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN
JUL 31 1948

VIOLINIST . . . Isaac Stern will be soloist for the first time at the Berkshire Festival with the Boston Symphony Orchestra tonight at Tanglewood, Mass.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN
JUL 31 1948

A musical premiere of consequence will embellish the Tanglewood festival next week end, with the first performance of Ralph Vaughan Willians's sixth symphony under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky to be played by the Boston Symphony. The work was begun by the English composer in 1944, and completed last year. For those not inclined to make the trip to Lenox, the publishers announce a New York premiere scheduled for next winter by the Philharmonic-Symphony. "It is expected" says the announcement "that Leopold Stokowski will conduct."

HARTFORD TIMES
[illegible] 3 [illegible] 1948

Tanglewood Gala Festival To Aid European Talent

THE fountain scene from "Pelleas and Melisande", an excerpt from "Don Giovanni" and Menotti's "The Telephone", will be heard in the gardens at Tanglewood on Tuesday. The special outdoor performance at 4 p. m. is for boxholders and reserved seat patrons to "Tanglewood on Parade", the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Berkshire Music Center's benefit for assistance to musicians in Europe. The event inaugurates a nation-wide campaign to help unblock creative talent abroad.

For the opera department's contribution to the simultaneous demonstration of all departments of the Berkshire Music Center beginning at 6 p. m. and open to all ticket-holders for the benefit, Boris Goldovsky has selected Acts I and IV of "La Boheme" and Act II of "The Marriage of Figaro."

* * *

Supper on the lawn at 7 p. m. will follow the hour-long demonstrations. The manifestation at 8 p. m. in the Music Shed will bring appearances by Cornelia Otis Skinner, Archibald MacLeish, Aaron Copland, and other important figures in letters and the arts. Serge Koussevitzky will lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a concert beginning at 9:15 which will conclude with a group of waltzes. The three - quarter rhythm will be picked up and carried on after the concert by a student orchestra under the direction of Frederick Fennell of the conducting faculty for dancing on the lawn.

* * *

REMINISCENT of the great last act of "Die Meistersinger" will be the parade of the students which immediately precedes the demonstrations. Like the guilds in Wagner's great music drama, the 462 boys and girls from 42 states and 15 foreign countries will march by departments carrying banners and led by a band. There will be performances of orchestra, choral and chamber music as well as opera. It would require no less than four visits to Tanglewood to see and hear what will be going on there Tuesday within the period of an hour.

In the Music Shed the student orchestra under student conductors will play Beethoven's "Coriolanus" Overture, the Chorale and Toccata from William Schuman's Symphony No. 3, the first movement of Rachmaninoff's Second Concerto and three dances from Leonard Bernstein's ballet "Fancy Free."

* * *

THOSE WHO HAVE TAKEN BOXES for the benefit include: Frederick W. Beinecke, John S. Williams, Judge Charles Garside, Miss Florence Doody, and Columbia Artists Management, all of New York: Mrs. E. Jerry Chadwick, Syosset, Long Island; Mrs. Charles Mitchell, Oyster Bay, Long Island; Mr. and Mrs. Milton B. Warner, Mr. and Mrs. Alan J. Blau, and Simon England, Pittsfield, Mass.; Mr. and Mrs. Bruce Sanborn, Mr. and Mrs. C. D. Jackson, Mrs. Gordon Dexter, Mr. and Mrs. John H. P. Gould, Mr. and Mrs. Lester Roberts, Mrs. Hayden Channing, Miss Anna Alexandre, and Mrs. Clarence Warden, Lenox, Mass.; Mr. and Mrs. Shaun Kelly, Richmond, Mass.; Mr. and Mrs. Albert Spalding, Mrs. Thomas Blodgett, Mr. and Mrs. Robert K. Wheeler, and Mr. and Mrs. William Felton Barrett, Great Barrington, Mass.; Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Percival, Stockbridge; Mr. and Mrs. Alan Limburg, Windsor; Mr. and Mrs. W. Murray Crane, Dalton, Mass.; George Sokolsky, Otis, Mass.; Mr. and Mrs. Philip Marshall Brown, Williamstown, Mass.; Mrs. John Alden Carpenter, Beverly, Mass.; Mrs. A. M. Haughton, Prides Crossing, Mass.; Miss Edith Scoville, Mrs. Donald J. Warner, Mr. and Mrs. Maurice Firuski, Salisbury; Mrs. Harold Hatch, Mrs. Edward C. Jameson, Sharon; Mrs. Henry Sloan Coffin, Mr. and Mrs. John McChesney, Lakeville; Mr. and Mrs. B. M. Golband, Springfield, Mass.; Mrs. Edward Thaw, Dublin, N. H.; Mrs. Ernest B. Dane, Center Harbor, N. H.; Mrs. Dean Wilder, Peterboro, N. H.; Mr. and Mrs. Guy P. Gannett, Cape Elizabeth, Me.; Mrs. John S. Newberry, Grosse Pointe Farms, Mich.; Mr. and Mrs. Philip

---

Globe Jul 30

Tanglewood Concert Tuesday Will Aid Europe's Musicians

By MARJORIE W. SHERMAN

Musicians always have been internationally-minded but never more so than now, when Europe's artists are in great need. A campaign to assist musicians on the continent is being launched today, with the endorsement of the State Department. Opening gun in the far reaching campaign will be a large scale benefit by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood on Tuesday. The program will start at six, with the main concert scheduled for 9:15 and fireworks for the late evening.

Asst. Secretary of State George V. Allen told the national committee for the Berkshire Music Center concerts that "the American Section of the International Society for Contemporary Music, with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky at its head, is working in a field of great significance. Its project for promoting benefit concerts to aid the creative side of music in Europe deserves widespread support, and I believe Europeans will look upon this effort as further evidence of the sincere interest on the part of the American people in the welfare and progress of European intellectural life."

Mrs. Koussevitzky heads the Boston list of committee members on the central planning board for the benefit. Other Bostonians also helping include Dr. Lewis Perry and Frederic J. DeVeau on the Central Committee; members serving on the National Committee number James S. Plaut and Konrad Bose of Boston, Mrs. A. Kingsley Porter of Cambridge, Justice Felix Frankfurter of Cambridge and Washington, Mrs. M. Graeme Haughton of Pride's Crossing, Mrs. Alexander Steinert of Beverly, Mr. and Mrs. Allan Forbes of Westwood, and Mrs. Dudley Pickman of Hamilton.

There will be performances by each of the Music Center departments at 6 o'clock, including a symphony concert in the orchestra shed, a chorus performance in the orchard, scenes from great opera in the theatre concert hall, and a program entitled "A Hundred Years of Chamber Music" in the chamber music hall.

At 7 o'clock there will be time out for those who have brought picnic suppers to eat on the grounds, where additional refreshment also will be available.

An 8 o'clock fanfare in the shed will be opened by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky who will present several speakers before the gala concert featuring Beethoven, Prokofieff, Strauss, Sibelius, and Ravel. Fireworks will conclude the benefit.

Deerfield Academy and Harvard, class of 1937. During the war he served in the Army Chemical Corps and in the United States Office of Military Government in Berlin.

The wedding is planned for September and will take pl[illegible] in Orleans.

CATHERINE THISTLE WINSHIP—Mr. and Mrs. John S. Winship of Bedford, N. H., announce the birth of a daughter, Catherine Thistle, on July 20 at Elliot Hospital in Manchester, N. H.

SWIMMING PARTY—Students at the Wellesley Summer Theatre were invited to share the Gelston Kings' swimming pool in Sherborn yesterday with pretty Anne and "Sandy" King, and stay on for a picnic buffet afterwards. Among the Kings' guests were Anne Williams, who is playing a leading role in this week's interesting production of "Holiday." John Coyle Jr., of Gloucester, who won the radio summer theatre scholarship this year: Ann Robinson, Louis Golden, Jeanne Caswell, and Patricia Shannon.

This Clipping From
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
JUL 31 1948

Second Festival Concert Tonight

Boston Symphony Orchestra, Directed by Koussevitzky, to Present Program at Tanglewood at 8:15 o'Clock.

The Boston Symphony orchestra, with Dr. Serge Koussevitsky conducting, will present the second concert in Series A of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood tonight at 8.15 o'clock. The Festival season opened Thursday night before a capacity audience of more than 7,000 persons.

The program tonight will include Piston's "Symphony No. 3," Prokofieff's "Violin Concerto No. 1," with Isaac Stern as soloist, and Brahms' "Symphony in C Minor, No. 1."

The third concert, last in Series A, will be presented tomorrow afternoon at 3.30 o'clock, with Leonard Bernstein conducting the orchestra. The audience will hear Haydn's "Symphony in D Major, No. 104," and Mahler's "Symphony No. 2, Resurrection," with Ellabelle Davis, soprano, and Nan Merriam, contralto, as soloists.

A Tanglewood "extra" on Tuesday will be "Tanglewood on Parade," the concert to be presented for the benefit of needy musicians in Europe.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
JUL 31 1948

TANGLEWOOD LISTS PROGRAM OF BENEFIT

Further details were announced yesterday concerning the elaborate program, "Tanglewood on Parade," to be presented by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center next Tuesday at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., as the opening event in a campaign to assist European musicians. The benefit will open with a special outdoor performance in the gardens at 4 P. M., for boxholders and reserved seat patrons of the day's festivities.

At this special performance the Fountain Scene from Debussy's "Pelléas et Mélisande" and an excerpt from Mozart's "Don Giovanni" will be given, in addition to Menotti's "The Telephone." A simultaneous demonstration of all departments of the Berkshire Music Center is slated from 6 to 7 P.M. and will be open to all ticket-holders for the benefit. The opera department's contribution will consist of the first and fourth acts of Puccini's "Tosca" and the second act of Mozart's "The Marriage of Figaro."

Also included in this part of the program will be choral and chamber music concerts by the students, and in the Music Shed a student orchestra, under student conductors, will play Beethoven's "Coriolanus" Overture, the Chorale and Toccata from William Schuman's Third Symphony, excerpts from Leonard Bernstein's ballet, "Fancy Free," and, with a soloist, the first movement of Rachmaninoff's Second Piano Concerto.

Immediately preceding these demonstrations, the entire student body of 462 young men and women from forty-two states and fifteen foreign countries will march in a parade, preceded by a band.

The day's activities will close with a concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, led by Serge Koussevitzky, beginning at 9:15, after which a student orchestra led by Frederick Fennell of the conducting faculty will play for dancing on the lawn.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

JUL 31 1948

'The Telephone' To Be Sung In Gardens at Tanglewood Benefit for European Musicians

TANGLEWOOD — The fountain scene from "Pelleas and Melisande," played appropriately enough at a fountain, and an excerpt from "Don Giovanni" have been added to Menotti's "The Telephone," to be sung in its entirety in the gardens at Tanglewood Tuesday. The special outdoor performance at 4 PM is for box holders and reserved seat patrons to "Tanglewood on Parade," the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Berkshire Music Center's benefit for assistance to musicians in Europe. The event inaugurates a nation-wide campaign to help unblock creative talent abroad.

For the opera department's contribution to the simultaneous demonstration of all departments of the Berkshire Music Center beginning at 6 PM and open to all ticket-holders for the benefit, Boris Goldovsky has selected Acts I and IV of "La Boheme" and Act II of "The Marriage of Figaro."

Supper on the lawn at 7 will follow the hour-long demonstrations. The manifestation at 8 in the Music Shed will bring appearances by Cornelia Otis Skinner, Archibald MacLeish, Aaron Copland, and other important figures in letters and the arts. Serge Koussevitzky will lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a concert beginning at 9.15 which will conclude with a group of waltzes. The three-quarter rhythm will be picked up and carried on after the concert by a student orchestra under the direction of Frederick Fennell of the conducting faculty for dancing on the lawn.

Parade of Students

Reminiscent of the last act of "Die Meistersinger," will be the parade of the students which immediately precedes the demonstrations. Like the guilds in Wagner's great music drama, the 462 boys and girls from 42 states and 15 foreign countries will march by departments carrying banners and led by a band. There will be performances of orchestra, choral and chamber music as well as opera. It would require no less than four visits to see and hear what will be going on there Tuesday within the period of an hour, those in charge of the program said today.

In the Music Shed the student orchestra under student conductors will play Beethoven's "Coriolanus" overture, the Chorale and Toccata from William Schuman's symphony No. 3, the first movement of Rachmaninoff's second concerto and three dances from Leonard Bernstein's ballet "Fancy Free."

A $2200 Berkshire model RCA radio-phonograph will be given as a door prize.

Box-holders Listed

Those who have taken boxes for the benefit include: Frederick W. Beinecke, John S. Williams, Judge Charles Garside, Miss Florence Doody, and Columbia Artists Management, all of New York; Mrs. E. Jerry Chadwick, Syosset, Long Island; Mrs. Charles Mitchell, Oyster Bay, Long Island; Mr. and Mrs. Milton B. Warner, Mr. and Mrs. Alan J. Blau, and Simon England, Pittsfield; Mr. and Mrs. Bruce Sanborn, Mr. and Mrs. C. D. Jackson, Mrs. Gordon Dexter, Mr. and Mrs. John H. P. Gould, Mr. and Mrs. Lester Roberts, Mrs. Hayden Channing, Miss Anna Alexandre, and Mrs. Clarence Warden, Lenox; Mr. and Mrs. Shaun Kelly, Richmond; Mr. and Mrs. Albert Spalding, Mrs. Thomas Blodgett, Mr. and Mrs. Robert K. Wheeler, and Mr. and Mrs. William Felton Barrett, Great Barrington; Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Percival, Stockbridge; Mr. and Mrs. Alan Limburg, Windsor; Mr. and Mrs. W. Murray Crane, Dalton; George Sokolsky, Otis; Mr. and Mrs. Philip Marshall Brown, Williamstown; Mrs. John Alden Carpenter, Beverly; Mrs. A. M. Haughton, Prides Crossing; Miss Edith Scoville, Mrs. Donald J. Warner, Mr. and Mrs. Maurice Firuski, Salisbury, Conn.; Mrs. Harold Hatch, Mrs. Edward C. Jameson, Sharon, Conn.; Mrs. Henry Sloan Coffin, Mr. and Mrs. John McChesney, Lakeville, Conn.; Mr. and Mrs. B. M. Golband, Springfield; Mrs. Edward Thaw, Dublin, N.H.; Mrs. Ernest B. Dane, Centre Harbor, N.H.; Mrs. Dean Wilder, Peterboro, N.H.; Mr. and Mrs. Guy P. Gannett, Cape Elizabeth, Me.; Mrs. John S. Newberry, Grosse Pointe Farms, Mich.; Mr. and Mrs. Philip Wyman, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Cornelia Otis Skinner

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM

JUL 31 1948

Tanglewood a Cradle of Stars-To-Be

Young Musicians on Highway to Concert Stage

By ROBERT BAGAR.

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass., July 31.—Yesterday at Tanglewood was not exactly a day teeming with significant events. It was, more or less, a day of rest for the many visitors to this shrine of music. And one, even a mere music lover, earns his rest around these parts. As for the activity going on, there were the usual classes of the Berkshire Music Center—opera, symphony, instrumental, conducting, all of which may well produce the great stars of the future.

Last night there was a concert by the student orchestra of Department II. Howard Shanet conducted some of Mendelssohn's "Reformation" symphony; Seymore Lipkin did likewise for the Bach Concerto in D minor for two violins and string orchestra (Svi Setlin and Joseph Bernstein were the soloists). Irwin Hoffman led the musicians in a movement from Shapero's Symphony for classical orchestra, and a highly regarded alumnus of the Berkshire Music Center, Eleazar de Carvalho, closed the proceedings by conducting, the Richard Strauss "Thus Spake Zarathustra."

Quite a program. These youngsters really charge head on. And with something like grim purpose. Every young conductor wants to be another Leonard Bernstein, or better, perhaps. The final goal, I would venture, would be to become another Serge Koussevitzky. Well, somebody, somewhere will make it. Maybe somebody from up here.

Cheer Leaders Lacking.

More and more, the school part of this enterprise assumes an academic tone. There is also esprit de corps, all-for-one-and-one-for-all, and the like. What is missing, of course, is a rooting section, complete with cheer leaders. And there can be no cheering section because at Tanglewood's graduate musical conservatoire all the students get in and do. The rooters are listeners, who pay at so much for the privilege, and rightly consider themselves rewarded.

Someone remarked to me, the other day, "The Berkshire Music Festival has become democratized." I understand what he meant—there isn't the opening night chi-chi that we once knew. On Thursday evening by far the greater part of the audience was informally dressed. But that may be because people haven't enough time, after driving or riding trains for several hours, to primp up for an inaugural. Besides, the starting time of concerts is 8.15, which I think should be changed to 8:45, in order to give folks a chance to look their best.

There is a certain amount of New Look here, too. First of all the female members of the student body are walking around in ankle-length dresses, except those hardier ones (usually with Betty Grable figures) who flaunt their pretty sun suits. But one of the important things in the New Look department is a new building, put up recently.

Musical Curios Exhibited.

This is a reception and exhibition room where all may gaze at musical curios, like Mozart's cane, and other interesting exhibits. Occasionally, some student, off for an hour or so, may walk in and give the cutsomers an impromptu piano recital.

There are more studios now, in order to accommodate the larger enrollment. And the refreshment stands have added more items to their menus, besides offering greater facility for serving the hungry and thirsty (strictly non-alcoholic drinks).

Music marches on.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

Outdoor Program Planned for Lenox

The fountain scene from "Pelléas and Mélisande," played appropriately enough at a fountain, and an excerpt from "Don Giovanni" have been added to Menotti's "The Telephone," to be sung in its entirety in the gardens at Tanglewood on Tuesday. The special outdoor performance at 4 p.m. is for boxholders and reserved seat patrons to "Tanglewood on Parade," the Boston symphony Orchestra and Berkshire Music Center's benefit for assistance to musicians in Europe. The event inaugurates a nation-wide campaign to help creative talent abroad.

For the opera department's contribution to the simultaneous demonstration of all departments of the Berkshire Music Center, beginning at 6 p.m. and open to all ticket-holders for the benefit, Boris Goldovsky has selected Acts I and IV of "La Bohème" and Act II of "The Marriage of Figaro."

* * *

SUPPER on the lawn at 7 p.m. will follow the hour-long demonstrations. The program at 8 p.m. in the Music Shed will bring appearances by Cornelia Otis Skinner, Archibald MacLeish, Aaron Copland, and other important figures in letters and the arts. Serge Koussevitzky will lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a concert beginning at 9:15 which will conclude with a group of waltzes. The three-quarter rhythm will be picked up and carried on after the concert by a student orchestra under the direction of Frederick Fennell of the conducting faculty for dancing on the lawn.

* * *

REMINISCENT of the last act of "Die Meistersinger" will be the parade of the students which immediately precedes the demonstrations. Like the guilds in Wagner's great music drama, the 462 boys and girls from 42 states and 15 foreign countries will march by departments carrying banners and led by a band. There will be performances of orchestra, choral and chamber music as well as opera.

In the Music Shed the student orchestra under student conductors will play Beethoven's "Coriolanus" Overture, the Chorale and Toccata from William Schuman's Symphony No. 3, the first movement of Rachmaninoff's Second Concerto and three dances from Leonard Bernstein's ballet "Fancy Free."

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

JUL 31 1948

Tanglewood Opens

Boston Symphony Program Begins Week-End Series

By Arthur V. Berger

LENOX, Mass., July 30.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra opened the first of its three week ends at Tanglewood last night with a program that offered nothing unfamiliar to those of us who have heard this orchestra, either in its home city or on its periodic visits to New York.

In the company of Beethoven's Fifth Symphony, which made up the second half of Serge Koussevitzky's program, Paul Hindemuth's symphony, "Mathis Der Maler," stood in relief, to be sure, as something of a novelty. This contemporary masterpiece, which has happily become a part of standard repertory, received a reading from Dr. Koussevitzky that, after a tentative start, progressed toward impassioned heights and pursued its course, much of the time with remarkable flexibility. The pace in the first movement gave a halting impression; the overexpressive approach in the second movement took something away from the essentially hollow, inert basic pulse that should suggest the desolateness of a death-mask; the fugato in the finale was somewhat fuzzy, and the rhetorical three-note motive, following the dramatic pauses, never quite received its proper value.

But there was none of the self-consciousness or apology that often attends the development of a contemporary work. Hindemith's position in the grand evolutionary line stood out clearly from this performance. If he has taken certain steps to clarify and rigorously inform musical materials that tended to grow lax among some composers immediately preceding him, he is not the inveterate pedant he is often made out to be. Indeed, this symphony in many ways is in the broad romantic tradition, and Dr. Koussevitzky's performance last night emphasized this fact in the way it lent itself to the interpretative latitude generally accepted for symphonic literature in this tradition.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
AMSTERDAM STAR NEWS

JUL 31 1948

The Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., is in full swing. Sunday afternoon August 1, Serge Koussevitzky, music director of the orchestra and school, will turn the Boston Symphony over to Darius Milhaud who will conduct his 2nd Symphony, first performance. The remainder of the program will be given to Mahler's Symphony No. 2, the "Resurrection" with a chorus of 250 voices and Ellabelle Davis, soprona, and Nan Merriman, mezzo-soprano, as soloists. Leonard Bernstein, conducting. August 3 and 8, Carol Brice, contralto, will be the soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Straviksky's "Oedipus Rex."

* * *

Murial Rahn, soprano, will make her debut with the Salmaggi Opera Company in "Aida" at Triboro Stadium, August 7, with Mario Pasquetto, the famous tenor recently brought from Italy by Salmaggi, singing the part of "Rhadames." Miss Rahn is the eighth Negro artist the noted impressario has cast in leading operatic roles. Last week, Muriel Smith made a sensational debut in "Carmen." Others were Caterina Jarboro, Jules Bledsoe, Minta Cato, Edith Dixon Sewell, Paul Smith and James Boxwell.

* * *

Edward Matthews, baritone, original star of "Porgy and Bess" and the Stein-Thomson opjera, "Four Saint in Three Acts," will appear in concert on the last presentation of the Artists' Recitay Summer Series at Virginia State College, Petersburg.Thursday August 12, in Virginia Hall Auditorium. Mr. Matthews and Miss Rahn recently sang with the New Haven Symphony at the Yale Bowl Summer Concerts, the first Negro artist to appear there.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

JUL 31 1948

'The Telephone' To Be Sung In Gardens at Tanglewood Benefit for European Musicians

Cornelia Otis Skinner

TANGLEWOOD — The fountain scene from "Pelleas and Melisande," played appropriately enough at a fountain, and an excerpt from "Don Giovanni" have been added to Menotti's "The Telephone," to be sung in its entirety in the gardens at Tanglewood Tuesday. The special outdoor performance at 4 PM is for box holders and reserved seat patrons to "Tanglewood on Parade," the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Berkshire Music Center's benefit for assistance to musicians in Europe. The event inaugurates a nation-wide campaign to help unblock creative talent abroad.

For the opera department's contribution to the simultaneous demonstration of all departments of the Berkshire Music Center beginning at 6 PM and open to all ticket-holders for the benefit, Boris Goldovsky has selected Acts I and IV of "La Boheme" and Act II of "The Marriage of Figaro."

Supper on the lawn at 7 will follow the hour-long demonstrations. The manifestation at 8 in the Music Shed will bring appearances by Cornelia Otis Skinner, Archibald MacLeish, Aaron Copland, and other important figures in letters and the arts. Serge Koussevitzky will lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a concert beginning at 9.15 which will conclude with a group of waltzes. The three-quarter rhythm will be picked up and carried on after the concert by a student orchestra under the direction of Frederick Fennell of the conducting faculty for dancing on the lawn.

Parade of Students

Reminiscent of the last act of "Die Meistersinger," will be the parade of the students which immediately precedes the demonstrations. Like the guilds in Wagner's great music drama, the 462 boys and girls from 42 states and 15 foreign countries will march by departments carrying banners and led by a band. There will be performances of orchestra, choral and chamber music as well as opera. It would require no less than four visits to see and hear what will be going on there Tuesday within the period of an hour, those in charge of the program said today.

In the Music Shed the student orchestra under student conductors will play Beethoven's "Coriolanus" overture, the Chorale and Toccata from William Schuman's symphony No. 3, the first movement of Rachmaninoff's second concerto and three dances from Leonard Bernstein's ballet "Fancy Free."

A $2200 Berkshire model RCA radio-phonograph will be given as a door prize.

Box-holders Listed

Those who have taken boxes for the benefit include: Frederick W. Beinecke, John S. Williams, Judge Charles Garside, Miss Florence Doody, and Columbia Artists Management, all of New York; Mrs. E. Jerry Chadwick, Syosset, Long Island; Mrs. Charles Mitchell, Oyster Bay, Long Island; Mr. and Mrs. Milton B. Warner, Mr. and Mrs. Alan J. Blau, and Simon England, Pittsfield; Mr. and Mrs. Bruce Sanborn, Mr. and Mrs. C. D. Jackson, Mrs. Gordon Dexter, Mr. and Mrs. John H. P. Gould, Mr. and Mrs. Lester Roberts, Mrs. Hayden Channing, Miss Anna Alexandre, and Mrs. Clarence Warden, Lenox; Mr. and Mrs. Shaun Kelly, Richmond; Mr. and Mrs. Albert Spalding, Mrs. Thomas Blodgett, Mr. and Mrs. Robert K. Wheeler, and Mr. and Mrs. William Felton Barrett, Great Barrington; Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Percival, Stockbridge; Mr. and Mrs. Alan Limburg, Windsor; Mr. and Mrs. W. Murray Crane, Dalton; George Sokolsky, Otis; Mr. and Mrs. Philip Marshall Brown, Williamstown; Mrs. John Alden Carpenter, Beverly; Mrs. A. M. Haughton, Prides Crossing; Miss Edith Scoville, Mrs. Donald J. Warner, Mr. and Mrs. Maurice Firuski, Salisbury, Conn.; Mrs. Harold Hatch, Mrs. Edward C. Jameson, Sharon, Conn.; Mrs. Henry Sloan Coffin, Mr. and Mrs. John McChesney, Lakeville, Conn.; Mr. and Mrs. B. M. Golband, Springfield; Mrs. Edward Thaw, Dublin, N.H.; Mrs. Ernest B. Dane, Centre Harbor, N.H.; Mrs. Dean Wilder, Peterboro, N.H.; Mr. and Mrs. Guy P. Gannett, Cape Elizabeth, Me.; Mrs. John S. Newberry, Grosse Pointe Farms, Mich.; Mr. and Mrs. Philip Wyman, Cincinnati, Ohio.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM

JUL 31 1948

Tanglewood a Cradle of Stars-To [illegible]

Young Musicians on Highway to Concert Stage

By ROBERT BAGAR.

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass., July 31.—Yesterday at Tanglewood was not exactly a day teeming with significant events. It was, more or less, a day of rest for the many visitors to this shrine of music. And one, even a mere music lover, earns his rest around these parts. As for the activity going on, there were the usual classes of the Berkshire Music Center—opera, symphony, instrumental, conducting, all of which may well produce the great stars of the future.

Last night there was a concert by the student orchestra of Department II. Howard Shanet conducted some of Mendelssohn's "Reformation" symphony; Seymore Lipkin did likewise for the Bach Concerto in D minor for two violins and string orchestra (Svi Setlin and Joseph Bernstein were the soloists). Irwin Hoffman led the musicians in a movement from Shapero's Symphony for classical orchestra, and a highly regarded alumnus of the Berkshire Music Center, Eleazar de Carvalho, closed the proceedings by conducting, the Richard Strauss "Thus Spake Zarathustra."

Quite a program. These youngsters really charge head on. And with something like grim purpose. Every young conductor wants to be another Leonard Bernstein, or better, perhaps. The final goal, I would venture, would be to become another Serge Koussevitzky. Well, somebody, somewhere will make it. Maybe somebody from up here.

Cheer Leaders Lacking.

More and more, the school part of this enterprise assumes an academic tone. There is also esprit de corps, all-for-one-and-one-for-all, and the like. What is missing, of course, is a rooting section, complete with cheer leaders. And there can be no cheering section because at Tanglewood's graduate musical conservatoire all the students get in and do. The rooters are listeners, who pay at so much for the privilege, and rightly consider themselves rewarded.

Someone remarked to me, the other day, "The Berkshire Music Festival has become democratized." I understand what he meant—there isn't the opening night chi-chi that we once knew. On Thursday evening by far the greater part of the audience was informally dressed. But that may be because people haven't enough time, after driving or riding trains for several hours, to primp up for an inaugural. Besides, the starting time of concerts is 8.15, which I think should be changed to 8:45, in order to give folks a chance to look their best.

There is a certain amount of New Look here, too. First of all the female members of the student body are walking around in ankle-length dresses, except those hardier ones (usually with Betty Grable figures) who flaunt their pretty sun suits. But one of the important things in the New Look department is a new building, put up recently.

Musical Curios Exhibited.

This is a reception and exhibition room where all may gaze at musical curios, like Mozart's cane, and other interesting exhibits. Occasionally, some student, off for an hour or so, may walk in and give the cutsomers an impromptu piano recital.

There are more studios now, in order to accommodate the larger enrollment. And the refreshment stands have added more items to their menus, besides offering greater facility for serving the hungry and thirsty (strictly non-alcoholic drinks).

Music marches on.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

JUL 31 1948

Outdoor Program Planned for Lenox

The fountain scene from "Pelléas and Mélisande," played appropriately enough at a fountain, and an excerpt from "Don Giovanni" have been added to Menotti's "The Telephone," to be sung in its entirety in the gardens at Tanglewood on Tuesday. The special outdoor performance at 4 p.m. is for boxholders and reserved seat patrons to "Tanglewood on Parade," the Boston symphony Orchestra and Berkshire Music Center's benefit for assistance to musicians in Europe. The event inaugurates a nation-wide campaign to help creative talent abroad.

For the opera department's contribution to the simultaneous demonstration of all departments of the Berkshire Music Center, beginning at 6 p.m. and open to all ticket-holders for the benefit, Boris Goldovsky has selected Acts I and IV of "La Bohème" and Act II of "The Marriage of Figaro."

* * *

SUPPER on the lawn at 7 p.m. will follow the hour-long demonstrations. The program at 8 p.m. in the Music Shed will bring appearances by Cornelia Otis Skinner, Archibald MacLeish, Aaron Copland, and other important figures in letters and the arts. Serge Koussevitzky will lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a concert beginning at 9:15 which will conclude with a group of waltzes. The three-quarter rhythm will be picked up and carried on after the concert by a student orchestra under the direction of Frederick Fennell of the conducting faculty for dancing on the lawn.

* * *

REMINISCENT of the last act of "Die Meistersinger" will be the parade of the students which immediately precedes the demonstrations. Like the guilds in Wagner's great music drama, the 462 boys and girls from 42 states and 15 foreign countries will march by departments carrying banners and led by a band. There will be performances of orchestra, choral and chamber music as well as opera.

In the Music Shed the student orchestra under student conductors will play Beethoven's "Coriolanus" Overture, the Chorale and Toccata from William Schuman's Symphony No. 3, the first movement of Rachmaninoff's Second Concerto and three dances from Leonard Bernstein's ballet "Fancy Free."

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

JUL 31 1948

Tanglewood Opens

Boston Symphony Program Begins Week-End Series

By Arthur V. Berger

LENOX, Mass., July 30.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra opened the first of its three week ends at Tanglewood last night with a program that offered nothing unfamiliar to those of us who have heard this orchestra, either in its home city or on its periodic visits to New York.

In the company of Beethoven's Fifth Symphony, which made up the second half of Serge Koussevitzky's program, [illegible]muth's symphony, "Mathis Der Maler," stood in relief, to be sure, as something of a novelty. This contemporary masterpiece, which has happily become a part of standard repertory, received a reading from Dr. Koussevitzky that, after a tentative start, progressed toward impassioned heights and pursued its course, much of the time with remarkable flexibility. The pace in the first movement gave a halting impression; the overexpressive approach in the second movement took something away from the essentially hollow, inert basic pulse that should suggest the desolateness of a death-mask; the fugato in the finale was somewhat fuzzy, and the rhetorical three-note motive, following the dramatic pauses, never quite received its proper value.

But there was none of the self-consciousness or apology that often attends the development of a contemporary work. Hindemith's position in the grand evolutionary line stood out clearly from this performance. If he has taken certain steps to clarify and rigorously inform musical materials that tended to grow lax among some composers immediately preceding him, he is not the inveterate pedant he is often made out to be. Indeed, this symphony in many ways is in the broad romantic tradition, and Dr. Koussevitzky's performance last night emphasized this fact in the way it lent itself to the interpretative latitude generally accepted for symphonic literature in this tradition.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
AMSTERDAM STAR NEWS

JUL 31 1948

The Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., is in full swing. Sunday afternoon August 1, Serge Koussevitzky, music director of the orchestra and school, will turn the Boston Symphony over to Darius Milhaud who will conduct his 2nd Symphony, first performance. The remainder of the program will be given to Mahler's Symphony No. 2, the "Resurrection" with a chorus of 250 voices and Ellabelle Davis, soprona, and Nan Merriman, mezzo-soprano, as soloists. Leonard Bernstein, conducting. August 3 and 8, Carol Brice, contralto, will be the soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Straviksky's "Oedipus Rex."

* * *

Murial Rahn, soprano, will make her debut with the Salmaggi Opera Company in "Aida" at Triboro Stadium, August 7, with Mario Pasquetto, the famous tenor recently brought from Italy by Salmaggi, singing the part of "Rhadames." Miss Rahn is the eighth Negro artist the noted impressario has cast in leading operatic roles. Last week, Muriel Smith made a sensational debut in "Carmen." Others were Caterina Jarboro, Jules Bledsoe, Minta Cato, Edith Dixon Sewell, Paul Smith and James Boxwell.

* * *

Edward Matthews, baritone, original star of "Porgy and Bess" and the Stein-Thomson opjera, "Four Saint in Three Acts," will appear in concert on the last presentation of the Artists' Recitay Summer Series at Virginia State College, Petersburg, Thursday August 12, in Virginia Hall Auditorium. Mr. Matthews and Miss Rahn recently sang with the New Haven Symphony at the Yale Bowl Summer Concerts, the first Negro artist to appear there.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, ILL.
ILL. STATE JOURNAL
JUL 31 1948

Suggested By The Day's News

Revels In Glories Of Yesteryear At Berkshire Festival

By GEORGE E. SOKOLSKY,
King Features Writer.

Up here in Sandisfield, we go in for culture in a big way; that is, those of us who do not till the soil and chop down the trees for lumber. And that goes back a long time to the days of Mark Hopkins, Oliver Wendell Holmes, not the justice but the philosopher, Herman Melville of "Moby Dick," William Cullen Bryant, Henry Wadsworth Longfellow, to say nothing of the Sedgwick clan who dominated Stockbridge as the Atlantic Monthly was the personality of Ellery Sedgwick. So last Saturday, we foregathered at the little red house where Nathaniel Hawthorne conceived the Tanglewood Tales and where often Longfellow, Melville, Fanny Kemble and Hawthorne met to talk but even more to store in their memories the impress of the beauties of the Berkshires and of each other's personality.

The little red house has been restored externally by the National Federation of Music clubs under the leadership of Mrs. Guy Gannett, the wife of the Maine publisher, and a gracious and devoted lady. Manning Hawthorne was there to represent his grandfather, Nathaniel, and Henry Wadsworth Longfellow Dana, whose maternal grandfather was the poet and whose paternal grandfather wrote "Two Years Before the Mast," delivered a brilliant and witty address prepared as only Harry can when he takes the trouble, which is not often enough.

We were blessed with the best of Berkshire weather, as we sat in the shadow of Monument mountain and looked across the lake and listened to Serge Koussevitzky accept the little house ~~which is to be~~ used as studios for musicans who come to Tanglewood to improve themselves. And this is so important because out of Tanglewood will in time come American composers, American conductors, and American artists and all the internationalism of its atmosphere will go by the board. For no one can be in this New England long without becoming part of its rock and soil, without feeling the three centuries of America in the marrow of his bones.

Just as in the middle of the 19th century, this very place produced for this country a lasting, indigenous literature, so are we now on the threshold of finding here a lasting, indigenous American music. That indeed is a pot of gold.

As I sat upon a rock, upon which creeped myrtle and rose, I could not help but think that at that very moment were gathered in Philadelphia others who also called themselves Americans but who, somehow, had been cut off at the roots, or who, coming latterly, had no depth to their roots. And while we steeped ourselves richly in the lore of our own land, they were shrieking foully against their mother country and, gazing upon her beauties, saw only nettles and thistles, while the mirage from afar was richly verdant.

Yet their curses will wither on the vine. I recalled that Balaam, when pressured to curse, sang:

"How goodly are thy tents, O Jacob, and thy tabernacles, O Israel!

"As the valleys are they spread forth, as gardens by the river's side, as the trees of lign aloes which the Lord hath planted, and as cedar trees beside the waters."

For who can curse such a country as this and who can be its enemy? How varied are the ways of its people and there are none to order them to do this and that and to have no will of their own. Those in Philadelphia were free to steep themselves in shrill hate and we at Tanglewood were free to worship America's glorious past and to restore her monuments. And in a thousand places men and women were free to do as they minded with none to force them to do otherwise. And in a thousand places, often obscure, with none to write their histories, were, at that very moment, men and women devoted voluntarily to good and righteous service.

That is America and we who abide in these hills feel it so strongly, for here Longfellow caught the lines of Evangeline and here Hawthorne came after he had already written "The Scarlet Letter," and here Mark Hopkins sat on a log and founded a college. [illegible] these hills that one senses the man[illegible]ed this nation.

---

ction July 31 – Eagle Pi

GUEST CONDUCTOR: Leonard Bernstein, who will appear as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Music Shed at Tanglewood tomorrow afternoon, reviews the scores of the concert program to be presented. Featured during the afternoon in Mahler's Symphony in C minor, No. 2, will be the Festival chorus, prepared by Hugh Ross, with Ellabelle Davis, soprano, and Nan Merriman, contralto, as soloists. The afternoon program will open with Haydn's Symphony in D maj[illegible] 104.

Jul 31

Mouse at Tanglewood

While the account did not say so, we assume that the mouse at the opening Berkshire Festival concert was the first mouse ever to attend. At any occasion which is so minutely covered by the press, both musically and otherwise, the attendance of any mouse would certainly have been recorded.

We must take it for granted at the outset, however, that Thursday's concert-goer was a country mouse, and not a cultured city mouse like Stuart Little. His lack of sophistication is shown, first, by his failure to arrive until after the Hindemith. But more especially, his ignorance is demonstrated by the fact that he chose to get up and move around between movements of the Beethoven Fifth. While sometimes applause between movements can be excused, even in the musical cognoscenti on the grounds of strong emotional impact, leaving one's seat and wandering around the place at such pauses is inexcusable. A polite squeak behind his paws and shifting in his seat, maybe, but scampering about, definitely no.

We say the mouse left its seat. The fact of the matter is that no one actually knows whether the mouse had a seat. As a calculating and doubtlessly conservative mouse, he may have been just casing the Shed to see whether the show was worth the price. We place no stock in the legend from Hamlin about the charms that music is supposed to have on this order of the animal kingdom. Otherwise, with all the piping, tootling, fiddling, and umpah-ing which goes on at Tanglewood from dawn to midnight, you wouldn't be able to see Stockbridge Bowl for the mice.

This Clipping From NATION
NEW YORK, N. Y.
JUL 31 1948

Music

B. H. HAGGIN

IT IS only in recent years that the Berkshire Festivals have acquired a little of a real festival character by offering special events in addition to the mere repetition of the Boston Symphony's winter standard repertory that Koussevitzky offered the first years. Wartime conditions led him to give Bach and Mozart concerts with a small orchestra; the school began to give productions of opera and other performances—though only for audiences composed of the "Friends of the Berkshire Music Center," who had demonstrated their friendship with donations of money for its support.

The trouble with the Bach and Mozart concerts—aside from the dulness of some of the works that are mere exercises of fluently mechanical craftsmanship—is that this eighteenth-century music is what Koussevitzky understands least what to do with. Toscanini once talked about the difficulties in playing this music with its few directions in the score, and about how boring Mozart is unless one knows what to do between the p in the first measure and the f twenty measures later—which is something he does know and Koussevitzky does not. Toscanini's adherence to the printed score doesn't mean that he produces nothing but the p in the first measure and the f twenty measures later: he enlivens the music with a profusion of subtle inflection between them. It is Koussevitzky who cannot think of anything to do between the p and the f; and the life in the music that depends on the subtle inflection is not created.

137

And so, although I had looked forward to the July 20 performance of Mozart's Piano Concerto K.453—which is rarely played, though it is one of the most wonderful in the series of endlessly amazing works that Mozart created in this form—I was disappointed and irritated by the rattling off of the orchestral part which did nothing to present its delightful details to the listener's ear. The soloist, Lukas Foss, played the passage-work in the first movement fluently, but was wooden-fingered in the melodic episodes; the more surprising, therefore, was the excellence of his phrasing of the sustained melody in the slow movement.

There was, this time, none of the disintegration of drum-beats and loud sonorities that occurred in A. B. C.'s transmission of last year's performances from Tanglewood. But the sound came through dead; and the piano's quiet entrance in the slow movement was only the first of the passages—most of them quiet—which sounded as though they were being scrambled on one of those transatlantic telephone lines. It happened again in the finale, and more extensively in the Andante di molto of Mozart's Symphony K.338, which Koussevitzky played no better than the concerto.

The opera last summer was Mozart's "Idomeneo," for which one could not be sufficiently grateful to Boris Goldovsky. This summer it will be Rossini's unfamiliar "Il Turco in Italia," which, according to Francis Toye, "contains some delightful numbers, notably a quartet, a quintet, and a duet between the heroine and her husband that must

---

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
AMERICAN
JUL 31 1948

Needy Musicians To Be Benefited

A campaign for assistance to European musicians in present need will be inaugurated at a benefit concert to be presented by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Mass., Tuesday.

Mrs. Maurice Firuski, Salisbury, is serving on the central committee for the benefit and serving on the national committee from this vicinity are: Mrs. William M. Walcott, Judge Charles Garside, Norfolk; Miss Edith Scoville, Mrs. Donald J. Warner, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph R. Swan, Robert C. Osborn, Mrs. Arnold Whitridge, Mrs. William Lescaze, Mrs. Philip Warner and Mrs. Charles S. Wunder, Salisbury.

Also: Mrs. Henry Sloan Coffin, Mrs. Joseph Parsons, John McChesney and Frank Briscoe, Lakeville; Mrs. Harold Hatch, Mrs. Edwin C. Jameson, Sharon; and Mrs. Marshall Best, Lime Rock.

The campaign has been indorsed by the State Department.

[213]

This Clipping From
HANOVER, PA.
SUN
JUL 31 1948

The fountain scene from "Pelleas and Melisande," played appropriately enough at a fountain, and an excerpt from "Don Giovanni" have been added to Menotti's "The Telephone," to be sung in its entirety in the gardens at Tanglewood on Tuesday, August 3. The special outdoor performance at 4 p. m. is for boxholders and reserved seat patrons to "Tanglewood on Parade," the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Berkshire Music Center's benefit for assistance to musicians in Europe. The event inaugurates a nation-wide campaign to help unblock creative talent abroad.

For the opera department's contribution to the simultaneous demonstration of all departments of the Berkshire Music Center beginning at 6 p. m. and open to all ticket-holders for the benefit, Boris Goldovsky has selected Acts I and IV of "La Boheme" and Act. II of "The Marriage of Figaro."

Supper on the lawn at 7 p. m. will follow the hour-long domonstrations. The manifestation at 8 p. m. in the Music Shed will bring appearances by Cornelia Otis Skinner, Archibald MacLeish, Aaron Copland, and other important figures in letters and the arts. Serge Koussevitzky will lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a concert beginning at 9:15 which will conclude with a group of walzes. The three-quarter rhythm will be picked up and carried on after the concert by a student orchestra under the direction of Frederick Fennell of the conducting faculty of dancing on the lawn.

Parts of this program, beginning at 9:30 o'clock will be broadcast.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, ILL.
ILL. STATE JOURNAL
JUL 31 1948

Suggested By The Day's News

Revels In Glories Of Yesteryear At Berkshire Festival

By GEORGE E. SOKOLSKY,
King Features Writer.

Up here in Sandisfield, we go in for culture in a big way; that is, those of us who do not till the soil and chop down the trees for lumber. And that goes back a long time to the days of Mark Hopkins, Oliver Wendell Holmes, not the justice but the philosopher, Herman Melville of "Moby Dick," William Cullen Bryant, Henry Wadsworth Longfellow, to say nothing of the Sedgwick clan who dominated Stockbridge as the Atlantic Monthly was the personality of Ellery Sedgwick. So last Saturday, we foregathered at the little red house where Nathaniel Hawthorne conceived the Tanglewood Tales and where often Longfellow, Melville, Fanny Kemble and Hawthorne met to talk but even more to store in their memories the impress of the beauties of the Berkshires and of each other's personality.

The little red house has been restored externally by the National Federation of Music clubs under the leadership of Mrs. Guy Gannett, the wife of the Maine publisher, and a gracious and devoted lady. Manning Hawthorne was there to represent his grandfather, Nathaniel, and Henry Wadsworth Longfellow Dana, whose maternal grandfather was the poet and whose paternal grandfather wrote "Two Years Before the Mast," delivered a brilliant and witty address prepared as only Harry can when he takes the trouble, which is not often enough.

We were blessed with the best of Berkshire weather, as we sat in the shadow of Monument mountain and looked across the lake and listened to Serge Koussevitzky accept the little house ~~which is to be~~ used as studios for musicans who come to Tanglewood to improve themselves. And this is so important because out of Tanglewood will in time come American composers, American conductors, and American artists and all the internationalism of its atmosphere will go by the board. For no one can be in this New England long without becoming part of its rock and soil, without feeling the three centuries of America in the marrow of his bones.

Just as in the middle of the 19th century, this very place produced for this country a lasting, indigenous literature, so are we now on the threshold of finding here a lasting, indigenous American music. That indeed is a pot of gold.

As I sat upon a rock, upon which creeped myrtle and rose, I could not help but think that at that very moment were gathered in Philadelphia others who also called themselves Americans but who, somehow, had been cut off at the roots, or who, coming latterly, had no depth to their roots. And while we steeped ourselves richly in the lore of our own land, they were shrieking foully against their mother country and, gazing upon her beauties, saw only nettles and thistles, while the mirage from afar was richly verdant.

Yet their curses will wither on the vine. I recalled that Balaam, when pressured to curse, sang:

"How goodly are thy tents, O Jacob, and thy tabernacles, O Israel!

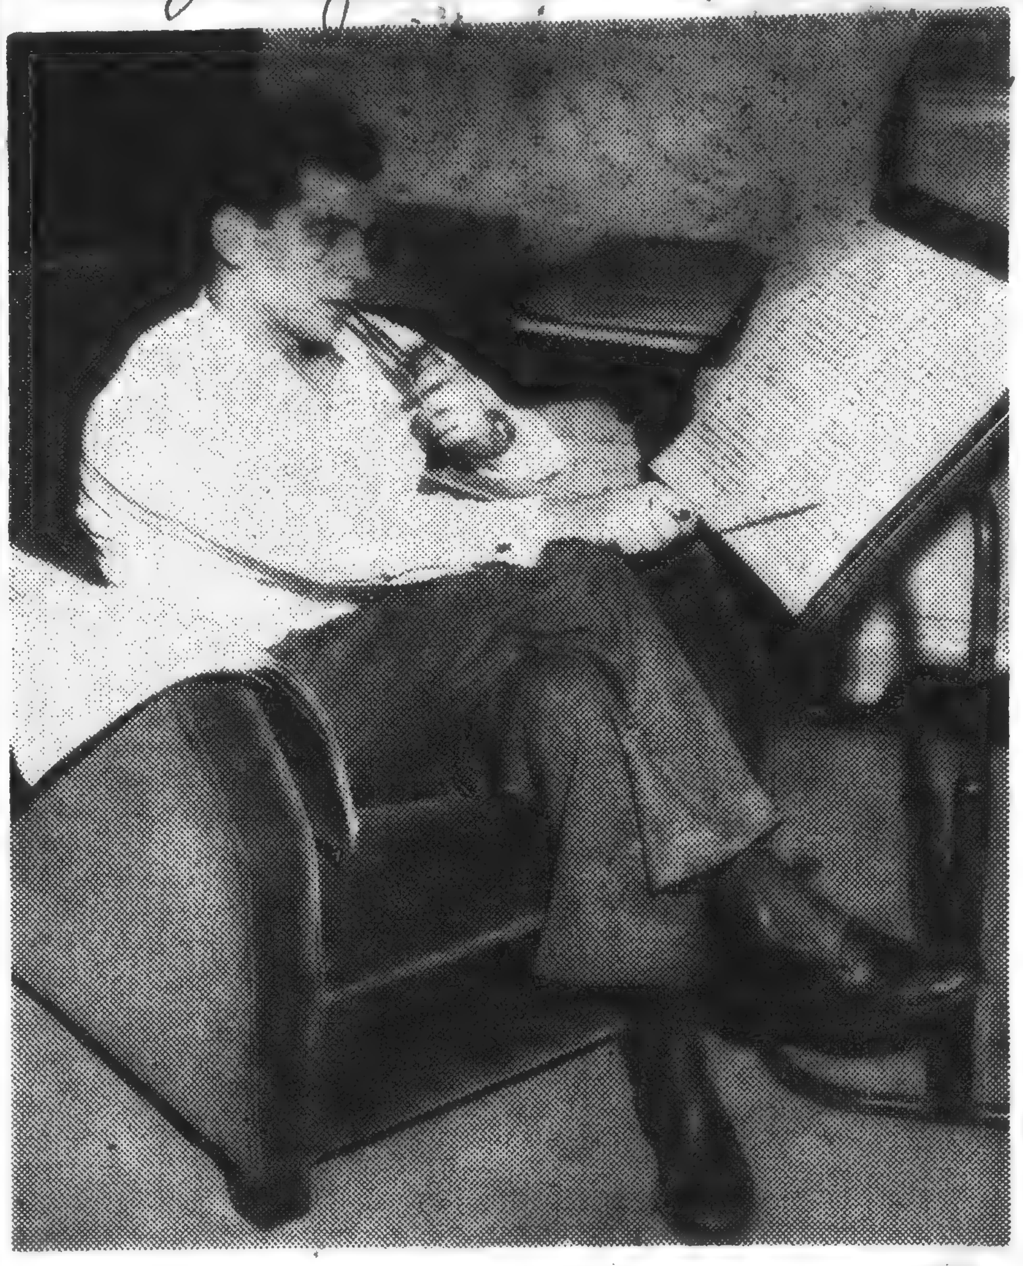
"As the valleys are they spread forth, as gardens by the river's side, as the trees of lign aloes which the Lord hath planted, and as cedar trees beside the waters."

For who can curse such a country as this and who can be its enemy? How varied are the ways of its people and there are none to order them to do this and that and to have no will of their own. Those in Philadelphia were free to steep themselves in shrill hate and we at Tanglewood were free to worship America's glorious past and to restore her monuments. And in a thousand places men and women were free to do as they minded with none to force them to do otherwise. And in a thousand places, often obscure, with none to write their histories, were, at that very moment, men and women devoted voluntarily to good and righteous service.

That is America and we who abide in these hills feel it so strongly, for here Longfellow caught the lines of Evangeline and here Hawthorne came after he had already written "The Scarlet Letter," and here Mark Hopkins sat on a log and founded a college. [illegible] these hills that one senses the man[illegible] [illegible]ed this nation.

---

ction July 31 – Eagle



GUEST CONDUCTOR: Leonard Bernstein, who will appear as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Music Shed at Tanglewood tomorrow afternoon, reviews the scores of the concert program to be presented. Featured during the afternoon in Mahler's Symphony in C minor, No. 2, will be the Festival chorus, prepared by Hugh Ross, with Ellabelle Davis, soprano, and Nan Merriman, contralto, as soloists. The afternoon program will open with Haydn's Symphony in D maj[illegible] 104.

Jul 31

Mouse at Tanglewood

While the account did not say so, we assume that the mouse at the opening Berkshire Festival concert was the first mouse ever to attend. At any occasion which is so minutely covered by the press, both musically and otherwise, the attendance of any mouse would certainly have been recorded.

We must take it for granted at the outset, however, that Thursday's concert-goer was a country mouse, and not a cultured city mouse like Stuart Little. His lack of sophistication is shown, first, by his failure to arrive until after the Hindemith. But more especially, his ignorance is demonstrated by the fact that he chose to get up and move around between movements of the Beethoven Fifth. While sometimes applause between movements can be excused, even in the musical cognoscenti on the grounds of strong emotional impact, leaving one's seat and wandering around the place at such pauses is inexcusable. A polite squeak behind his paws and shifting in his seat, maybe, but scampering about, definitely no.

We say the mouse left its seat. The fact of the matter is that no one actually knows whether the mouse had a seat. As a calculating and doubtlessly conservative mouse, he may have been just casing the Shed to see whether the show was worth the price. We place no stock in the legend from Hamlin about the charms that music is supposed to have on this order of the animal kingdom. Otherwise, with all the piping, tootling, fiddling, and umpah-ing which goes on at Tanglewood from dawn to midnight, you wouldn't be able to see Stockbridge Bowl for the mice.

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
AMERICAN
JUL 31 1948

Needy Musicians To Be Benefited

A campaign for assistance to European musicians in present need will be inaugurated at a benefit concert to be presented by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Mass., Tuesday.

Mrs. Maurice Firuski, Salisbury, is serving on the central committee for the benefit and serving on the national committee from this vicinity are: Mrs. William M. Walcott, Judge Charles Garside, Norfolk; Miss Edith Scoville, Mrs. Donald J. Warner, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph R. Swan, Robert C. Osborn, Mrs. Arnold Whitridge, Mrs. William Lescaze, Mrs. Philip Warner and Mrs. Charles S. Wunder, Salisbury.

Also: Mrs. Henry Sloan Coffin, Mrs. Joseph Parsons, John McChesney and Frank Briscoe, Lakeville; Mrs. Harold Hatch, Mrs. Edwin C. Jameson, Sharon; and Mrs. Marshall Best, Lime Rock.

The campaign has been indorsed by the State Department.

This Clipping From NATION
NEW YORK, N. Y.
JUL 31 1948

Music

B. H. HAGGIN

IT IS only in recent years that the Berkshire Festivals have acquired a little of a real festival character by offering special events in addition to the mere repetition of the Boston Symphony's winter standard repertory that Koussevitzky offered the first years. Wartime conditions led him to give Bach and Mozart concerts with a small orchestra; the school began to give productions of opera and other performances—though only for audiences composed of the "Friends of the Berkshire Music Center," who had demonstrated their friendship with donations of money for its support.

The trouble with the Bach and Mozart concerts—aside from the dulness of some of the works that are mere exercises of fluently mechanical craftsmanship—is that this eighteenth-century music is what Koussevitzky understands least what to do with. Toscanini once talked about the difficulties in playing this music with its few directions in the score, and about how boring Mozart is unless one knows what to do between the p in the first measure and the f twenty measures later—which is something he does know and Koussevitzky does not. Toscanini's adherence to the printed score doesn't mean that he produces nothing but the p in the first measure and the f twenty measures later: he enlivens the music with a profusion of subtle inflection between them. It is Koussevitzky who cannot think of anything to do between the p and the f; and the life in the music that depends on the subtle inflection is not created.

And so, although I had looked forward to the July 20 performance of Mozart's Piano Concerto K.453—which is rarely played, though it is one of the most wonderful in the series of endlessly amazing works that Mozart created in this form—I was disappointed and irritated by the rattling off of the orchestral part which did nothing to present its delightful details to the listener's ear. The soloist, Lukas Foss, played the passage-work in the first movement fluently, but was wooden-fingered in the melodic episodes; the more surprising, therefore, was the excellence of his phrasing of the sustained melody in the slow movement.

There was, this time, none of the disintegration of drum-beats and loud sonorities that occurred in A. B. C.'s transmission of last year's performances from Tanglewood. But the sound came through dead; and the piano's quiet entrance in the slow movement was only the first of the passages—most of them quiet—which sounded as though they were being scrambled on one of those transatlantic telephone lines. It happened again in the finale, and more extensively in the Andante di molto of Mozart's Symphony K.338, which Koussevitzky played no better than the concerto.

The opera last summer was Mozart's "Idomeneo," for which one could not be sufficiently grateful to Boris Goldovsky. This summer it will be Rossini's unfamiliar "Il Turco in Italia," which, according to Francis Toye, "contains some delightful numbers, notably a quartet, a quintet, and a duet between the heroine and her husband that must

---

This Clipping From
HANOVER, PA.
SUN
JUL 31 1948

The fountain scene from "Pelleas and Melisande," played appropriately enough at a fountain, and an excerpt from "Don Giovanni" have been added to Menotti's "The Telephone," to be sung in its entirety in the gardens at Tanglewood on Tuesday, August 3. The special outdoor performance at 4 p. m. is for boxholders and reserved seat patrons to "Tanglewood on Parade," the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Berkshire Music Center's benefit for assistance to musicians in Europe. The event inaugurates a nation-wide campaign to help unblock creative talent abroad.

For the opera department's contribution to the simultaneous demonstration of all departments of the Berkshire Music Center beginning at 6 p. m. and open to all ticketholders for the benefit, Boris Goldovsky has selected Acts I and IV of "La Boheme" and Act. II of "The Marriage of Figaro."

Supper on the lawn at 7 p. m. will follow the hour-long domonstrations. The manifestation at 8 p. m. in the Music Shed will bring appearances by Cornelia Otis Skinner, Archibald MacLeish, Aaron Copland, and other important figures in letters and the arts. Serge Koussevitzky will lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a concert beginning at 9:15 which will conclude with a group of walzes. The three-quarter rhythm will be picked up and carried on after the concert by a student orchestra under the direction of Frederick Fennell of the conducting faculty of dancing on the lawn.

Parts of this program, beginning at 9:30 o'clock will be broadcast.

[213]

This Clipping From
CORNING, N. Y.
LEADER

JUL 3

These Days

By George Sokolsky

THE LITTLE RED HOUSE

Up here in Sandisfield, we go in for culture in a big way; that is, those of us who do not till the soil and chop down the trees for lumber. And what goes back a long time to the days of Mark Hopkins, Oliver Wendell Holmes — not the Justice but the philosopher — Herman Melville of "Moby Dick," William Cullen Bryant, Henry Wadsworth Longfellow, to say nothing of the Sedgwick clan who dominated Stockbridge as the Atlantic Monthly was the personality of Ellery Sedgwick.

So last Saturday, we foregathered at the Little Red House where Nathaniel Hawthorne conceived the Tanglewood Tales and where often Longfellow, Melville, Fanny Kemble and Hawthorne met to talk but even more to store in their memories the impress of the beauties of the Berkshires and of each other's personality.

The Little Red House has been restored externally by the National Federation of Music Clubs under the leadership of Mrs. Guy Gannett, the wife of the Maine publisher, and a gracious and devoted lady. Manning Hawthorne was there to represent his grandfather, Nathaniel, and Henry Wadsworth Longfellow Dana, whose maternal grandfather was the poet and whose paternal grandfather wrote "Two Years Before the Mast," delivered a brilliant and witty address prepared as only Harry can when he takes the trouble, which is not often enough.

We were blessed with the best of Berkshire weather, as we sat in the shadow of Monument Mountain and looked across the lake and listened to Serge Koussevitzky accept the little house which is to be used as studios for musicians who come to Tanglewood to improve themselves. And this is so important because out of Tanglewood will in time come American composers, American conductors, and American artists and all the internationalism of its atmosphere will go by the board. For no one can be in this New England long without becoming part of its rock and soil, without feeling the three centuries of America in the marrow of his bones.

Just as in the middle nineteenth century, this very place produced for this country a lasting, indigenous literature, so are we now on the threshold of finding here a lasting, indigenous American music. That indeed is a pot of gold.

As I sat upon a rock, upon which creeped myrtle and rose, I could not help but think that at that very moment were gathered in Philadelphia others who also called themselves Americans but who, somehow, had been cut off at the roots, or who, coming latterly, had no depth to their roots. And while we steeped ourselves richly in the lore of our own land, they were shrieking foully against their mother country, and, gazing upon her beauties, saw only nettles and thistles, while the mirage from afar was richly verdant.

Yet their curses will wither on the vine. I recalled that Balaam, when pressured to curse, sang:

"How goodly are thy tents, O Jacob, and thy tabernacles, O Israel!

"As the valleys are they spread forth, as gardens by the river's side, as the trees of lign aloes which the Lord hath planted, and as cedar trees beside the waters."

For who can curse such a country as this and who can be its enemy? How varied are the ways of its people and there are none to order them to do this and that and to have no will of their own. Those in Philadelphia were free to steep themselves in shrill hate and we at Tanglewood were free to worship America's glorious past and to restore her monuments. And in a thousand places men and women were free to do as they minded with none to force them to do otherwise. And in a thousand places; often obscure, with none to write their histories, were, at that very moment, men and women devoted voluntarily to good and righteous service.

That is American and we who abide in these hills feel it so strongly, for here Longfellow caught the lines of Evangeline and here Hawthorne came after he had already written "The Scarlet Letter," and here Mark Hopkins sat on a log and founded a college. It is in these hills that one senses the manhood that produced this nation.

This Clipping From
BUFFALO, N. Y.
NEWS

JUL 3 1 1948

GEORGE E. SOKOLSKY SAYS—

Historic Berkshires Induce Sense of Nation's Manhood

Special to The Buffalo Evening News.

SANDISFIELD, Mass., July 31.—Up here we go in for culture in a big way; that is, those of us who do not till the soil and chop down the trees for lumber. And that goes back a long time to the days of Mark Hopkins, Oliver Wendell Holmes—not the justice but the philosopher—Herman Melville of "Moby Dick," William Cullen Bryant, Henry Wadsworth Long fellow, Ellery Sedgwick.

So last Saturday, we foregathered at the Little Red House where Nathaniel Hawthorne conceived the Tanglewood Tales and where often Longfellow, Melville, Fanny Kemble and Hawthorne met to talk but even more to store in their memories the impress of the beauties of the Berkshires and of each other's personality.

We were blessed with the best of Berkshire weather, as we sat in the shadow of Monument Mountain and looked across the lake and listened to ~~Serge Koussevitzky~~ accept the little house which is to be used as studios for musicians who come to Tanglewood to improve themselves.

JUST AS in the middle 19th Century, this very place produced for this country a lasting, indigenous literature, so are we now on the threshold of finding here a lasting, indigeuous American music. That indeed is a pot of gold.

As I sat upon a rock, upon which creeped myrtle and rose, I could not help but think that at that very moment were gathered in Philadelphia others who also called themselves Americans but who, somehow, had been cut off at the roots, or who, coming latterly, had no depth to their roots. And while we steeped ourselves richly in the lore of our own land, they were shrieking foully against their mother country and, gazing upon her beauties, saw only nettles and thistles, while the mirage from afar was richly verdant.

Yet their curses will wither on the vine. I recalled that Balaam, when pressured to curse, sang:

"How goodly are thy tents, O Jacob, and thy tabernacles, O Israel!

"AS THE VALLEYS are they spread forth, as gardens by the river's side, as the trees of lign aloes which the Lord hath planted, and as cedar trees beside the waters."

For who can curse such a country as this and who can be its enemy? How varied are the ways of its people and there are none to order them to do this and that and to have no will of their own. Those in Philadelphia were free to steep themselves in shrill hate and we at Tanglewood were free to worship America's glorious past and to restore her monuments.

That is America and we who abide in these hills feel it so strongly, for here Longfellow caught the lines of Evangeline and here Hawthorne came after he had already written "The Scarlet Letter," and here Mark Hopkins sat on a log and founded a college. It is in these hills that one senses the manhood that produced this nation.

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
HERALD-EXPRESS

[illegible]

These Days

Sokolsky
The Little Red House

By Geo. E. Sokolsky

Up here in Sandisfield, we go in for culture in a big way; that is, those of us who do not till the soil and chop down the trees for lumber. And that goes back a long time to the days of Mark Hopkins, Oliver Wendell Holmes—not the justice but the philosopher—Herman Melville of "Moby Dick," William Cullen Bryant, Henry Wadsworth Longfellow, to say nothing of the Sedgwick clan who dominated Stockbridge as the Atlantic Monthly was the personality of Ellery Sedgwick.

So last Saturday, we foregathered at the little red house where Nathaniel Hawthorne conceived the Tanglewood Tales and where often Longfellow, Melville, Fanny Kemble and Hawthorne met to talk but even more to store in their memories the impress of the beauties of the Berkshires and of each other's personality.

The little red house has been restored externally by the National Federation of Music Clubs under the leadership of Mrs. Guy Gannett, the wife of the Maine publisher, and a gracious and devoted lady. Manning Hawthorne was there to represent his grandfather, Nathaniel, and Henry Wadsworth Longfellow Dana, whose maternal grandfather was the poet and whose paternal grandfather wrote "Two Years Before the Mast," delivered a brilliant and witty address prepared as only Harry can when he takes the trouble, which is not often enough.

We were blessed with the best of Berkshire weather as we sat in the shadow of Monument Mountain and looked across the lake and listened to Serge Koussevitzky accept the ~~little house~~ which is to be used as studios for musicians who come to Tanglewood to improve themselves. And this is so important because out of Tanglewood will in time come American composers, American conductors and American artists, and rock and soil, without feeling the three centuries of America in the marrow of his bones.

Just as in the middle nineteenth century, this very place produced for this country a lasting, indigenous literature, so are we now on the threshold of finding here a lasting, indigenous American music. That indeed is a pot of gold.

As I sat upon a rock, upon which crept myrtle and rose, I could not help but think that at that very moment were gathered in Philadelphia others who also called themselves Americans, but who, somehow, had been cut off at the roots, or who, coming latterly, had no depth to their roots. And while we steeped ourselves richly in the lore of our own land, they were shrieking foully against their mother country and, gazing upon her beauties, saw only nettles and thistles, while the mirage from afar was richly verdant.

Yet their curses will wither on the vine. I recalled that Balaam, when pressured to curse, sang:

"How goodly are thy tents, O Jacob, and thy tabernacles, O Israel!

"As the valleys are they spread forth, as gardens by the river's side, as the trees of lignaloes which the Lord hath planted, and as cedar trees beside the waters."

For who can curse such a country as this and who can be its enemy? How varied are the ways of its people and there are none to order them to do this and that and to have no will of their own. Those in Philadelphia were free to steep themselves in shrill hate and we at Tanglewood were free to worship America's glorious past and to restore her monuments.

And in a thousand places men and women were free to do as they minded with none to force them to do otherwise. And in a thousand places, often obscure, with none to write their histories, were, at that very moment, men and women devoted voluntarily to good and righteous service.

That is America and we who abide in these hills feel it so strongly, for here Longfellow caught the lines of Evangeline and here Hawthorne came after he had already written "The Scarlet Letter," and here Mark Hopkins sat on a log and founded a college. It is in these hills that one senses the manhood that produced this nation.

Copyright, 1948, King Features Synd., Inc.

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES-UNION

[illegible]

Koussevitzky Directs Tanglewood Opening

By EDGAR S. VAN OLINDA

The Tanglewood Music festival was officially opened, Thursday night in the great music shed, with the full Boston Symphony orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky playing before an estimated audience of 8,000 music lovers, inside and outside the shell. Distinguished members of old New England society, motion picture stars, and world-famous musical artists filled the double tier of boxes.

Dr. Koussevitzky, apparently as fit as the fiddle of Richard Burgin, his concertmaster, opened the series of three week-end concerts on a very high artistic plane. Always a consistent program builder, the opening program consisted of the Bach suite in D-major (with its lovely "Air for the G-String"); a modern symphony, "Mathis der Maler" by Hindemith and the monumental "Fifth" symphony of Beethoven.

Structurally, the counterpoint of Bach was a logical introduction to the more complicated form of Hindemith, and tonally, the Hindemith filled nicely into the pattern of Beethoven. It seemed to us that the brass section was never in such fine form, the sonorities of that choir, bouncing against the back wall, but never overshadowing the string percussion and woodwind sections, for which the Bostonians are justly famous.

The orchestra, attired in white coats, followed the unorthodox leadership of Dr. Koussevitzky, sensing to the fullest, his personal interpretative inspiration of the moment, resulting in a program of instrumental music, while familiar, yet highly individualized, through his insistance upon prominence to subordinate instruments and secondary themes, frequently glossed over by conductors of lesser musical gifts.

Dr. Koussevitzky was greeted with tremendous ovations at his entrances, and following each section of the program. Even the staid old New England audience so far forget itself to indulge in some very enthusiastic cries of "Bravo." The program tonight, at 8:15 will be devoted to Piston, Prokofieff (violin concerto with Isaac Stern, soloist) and the Brahms' symphony No. 1 tomorrow afternoon at 3:30, the conductor will be Leonard Bernstein, and the soloists, Ellebelle Davis, soprano and Nan Merriman, contralto,

[214]

This Clipping From
CORNING, N. Y.
LEADER
JUL 31 1948

These Days

By George Sokolsky

THE LITTLE RED HOUSE

Up here in Sandisfield, we go in for culture in a big way; that is, those of us who do not till the soil and chop down the trees for lumber. And what goes back a long time to the days of Mark Hopkins, Oliver Wendell Holmes — not the Justice but the philosopher — Herman Melville of "Moby Dick," William Cullen Bryant, Henry Wadsworth Longfellow, to say nothing of the Sedgwick clan who dominated Stockbridge as the Atlantic Monthly was the personality of Ellery Sedgwick.

So last Saturday, we foregathered at the Little Red House where Nathaniel Hawthorne conceived the Tanglewood Tales and where often Longfellow, Melville, Fanny Kemble and Hawthorne met to talk but even more to store in their memories the impress of the beauties of the Berkshires and of each other's personality.

The Little Red House has been restored externally by the National Federation of Music Clubs under the leadership of Mrs. Guy Gannett, the wife of the Maine publisher, and a gracious and devoted lady. Manning Hawthorne was there to represent his grandfather, Nathaniel, and Henry Wadsworth Longfellow Dana, whose maternal grandfather was the poet and whose paternal grandfather wrote "Two Years Before the Mast," delivered a brilliant and witty address prepared as only Harry can when he takes the trouble, which is not often enough.

We were blessed with the best of Berkshire weather, as we sat in the shadow of Monument Mountain and looked across the lake and listened to Serge Koussevitzky accept the little house which is to be used as studios for musicians who come to Tanglewood to improve themselves. And this is so important because out of Tanglewood will in time come American composers, American conductors, and American artists and all the internationalism of its atmosphere will go by the board. For no one can be in this New England long without becoming part of its rock and soil, without feeling the three centuries of America in the marrow of his bones.

Just as in the middle nineteenth century, this very place produced for this country a lasting, indigenous literature, so are we now on the threshold of finding here a lasting, indigenous American music. That indeed is a pot of gold.

As I sat upon a rock, upon which creeped myrtle and rose, I could not help but think that at that very moment were gathered in Philadelphia others who also called themselves Americans but who, somehow, had been cut off at the roots, or who, coming latterly, had no depth to their roots. And while we steeped ourselves richly in the lore of our own land, they were shrieking foully against their mother country, and, gazing upon her beauties, saw only nettles and thistles, while the mirage from afar was richly verdant.

Yet their curses will wither on the vine. I recalled that Balaam, when pressured to curse, sang:

"How goodly are thy tents, O Jacob, and thy tabernacles, O Israel!

"As the valleys are they spread forth, as gardens by the river's side, as the trees of lign aloes which the Lord hath planted, and as cedar trees beside the waters."

For who can curse such a country as this and who can be its enemy? How varied are the ways of its people and there are none to order them to do this and that and to have no will of their own. Those in Philadelphia were free to steep themselves in shrill hate and we at Tanglewood were free to worship America's glorious past and to restore her monuments. And in a thousand places men and women were free to do as they minded with none to force them to do otherwise. And in a thousand places, often obscure, with none to write their histories, were, at that very moment, men and women devoted voluntarily to good and righteous service.

That is American and we who abide in these hills feel it so strongly, for here Longfellow caught the lines of Evangeline and here Hawthorne came after he had already written "The Scarlet Letter," and here Mark Hopkins sat on a log and founded a college. It is in these hills that one senses the manhood that produced this nation.

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
HERALD-EXPRESS
JUL 31 1948

These Days

Sokolsky

The Little Red House

By Geo. E. Sokolsky

Up here in Sandisfield, we go in for culture in a big way; that is, those of us who do not till the soil and chop down the trees for lumber. And that goes back a long time to the days of Mark Hopkins, Oliver Wendell Holmes—not the justice but the philosopher—Herman Melville of "Moby Dick," William Cullen Bryant, Henry Wadsworth Longfellow, to say nothing of the Sedgwick clan who dominated Stockbridge as the Atlantic Monthly was the personality of Ellery Sedgwick.

So last Saturday, we foregathered at the little red house where Nathaniel Hawthorne conceived the Tanglewood Tales and where often Longfellow, Melville, Fanny Kemble and Hawthorne met to talk but even more to store in their memories the impress of the beauties of the Berkshires and of each other's personality.

The little red house has been restored externally by the National Federation of Music Clubs under the leadership of Mrs. Guy Gannett, the wife of the Maine publisher, and a gracious and devoted lady. Manning Hawthorne was there to represent his grandfather, Nathaniel, and Henry Wadsworth Longfellow Dana, whose maternal grandfather was the poet and whose paternal grandfather wrote "Two Years Before the Mast," delivered a brilliant and witty address prepared as only Harry can when he takes the trouble, which is not often enough.

We were blessed with the best of Berkshire weather as we sat in the shadow of Monument Mountain and looked across the lake and listened to Serge Koussevitzky accept the little house which is to be used as studios for musicians who come to Tanglewood to improve themselves. And this is so important, because out of Tanglewood will in time come American composers, American conductors, and American artists, and rock and soil, without feeling the three centuries of America in the marrow of his bones.

Just as in the middle nineteenth century, this very place produced for this country a lasting, indigenous literature, so are we now on the threshold of finding here a lasting, indigenous American music. That indeed is a pot of gold.

As I sat upon a rock, upon which crept myrtle and rose, I could not help but think that at that very moment were gathered in Philadelphia others who also called themselves Americans, but who, somehow, had been cut off at the roots, or who, coming latterly, had no depth to their roots. And while we steeped ourselves richly in the lore of our own land, they were shrieking foully against their mother country and, gazing upon her beauties, saw only nettles and thistles, while the mirage from afar was richly verdant.

Yet their curses will wither on the vine. I recalled that Balaam, when pressured to curse, sang:

"How goodly are thy tents, O Jacob, and thy tabernacles, O Israel!

"As the valleys are they spread forth, as gardens by the river's side, as the trees of lignaloes which the Lord hath planted, and as cedar trees beside the waters."

For who can curse such a country as this and who can be its enemy? How varied are the ways of its people and there are none to order them to do this and that and to have no will of their own. Those in Philadelphia were free to steep themselves in shrill hate and we at Tanglewood were free to worship America's glorious past and to restore her monuments.

And in a thousand places men and women were free to do as they minded with none to force them to do otherwise. And in a thousand places, often obscure, with none to write their histories, were, at that very moment, men and women devoted voluntarily to good and righteous service.

That is America and we who abide in these hills feel it so strongly, for here Longfellow caught the lines of Evangeline and here Hawthorne came after he had already written "The Scarlet Letter," and here Mark Hopkins sat on a log and founded a college. It is in these hills that one senses the manhood that produced this nation.

Copyright, 1948, King Features Synd., Inc.

This Clipping From
BUFFALO, N. Y.
NEWS
JUL 31 1948

GEORGE E. SOKOLSKY SAYS—

Historic Berkshires Induce Sense of Nation's Manhood

Special to The Buffalo Evening News.

SANDISFIELD, Mass., July 31.—Up here we go in for culture in a big way; that is, those of us who do not till the soil and chop down the trees for lumber. And that goes back a long time to the days of Mark Hopkins, Oliver Wendell Holmes—not the justice but the philosopher—Herman Melville of "Moby Dick," William Cullen Bryant, Henry Wadsworth Long fellow, Ellery Sedgwick.

So last Saturday, we foregathered at the Little Red House where Nathaniel Hawthorne conceived the Tanglewood Tales and where often Longfellow, Melville, Fanny Kemble and Hawthorne met to talk but even more to store in their memories the impress of the beauties of the Berkshires and of each other's personality.

We were blessed with the best of Berkshire weather, as we sat in the shadow of Monument Mountain and looked across the lake and listened to Serge Koussevitzky accept the little house which is to be used as studios for musicians who come to Tanglewood to improve themselves.

JUST AS in the middle 19th Century, this very place produced for this country a lasting, indigenous literature, so are we now on the threshold of finding here a lasting, indigeuous American music. That indeed is a pot of gold.

As I sat upon a rock, upon which creeped myrtle and rose, I could not help but think that at that very moment were gathered in Philadelphia others who also called themselves Americans but who, somehow, had been cut off at the roots, or who, coming latterly, had no depth to their roots. And while we steeped ourselves richly in the lore of our own land, they were shrieking foully against their mother country and, gazing upon her beauties, saw only nettles and thistles, while the mirage from afar was richly verdant.

Yet their curses will wither on the vine. I recalled that Balaam, when pressured to curse, sang:

"How goodly are thy tents, O Jacob, and thy tabernacles, O Israel!

"AS THE VALLEYS are they spread forth, as gardens by the river's side, as the trees of lign aloes which the Lord hath planted, and as cedar trees beside the waters."

For who can curse such a country as this and who can be its enemy? How varied are the ways of its people and there are none to order them to do this and that and to have no will of their own. Those in Philadelphia were free to steep themselves in shrill hate and we at Tanglewood were free to worship America's glorious past and to restore her monuments.

That is America and we who abide in these hills feel it so strongly, for here Longfellow caught the lines of Evangeline and here Hawthorne came after he had already written "The Scarlet Letter," and here Mark Hopkins sat on a log and founded a college. It is in these hills that one senses the manhood that produced this nation.

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES-UNION
JUL 31 1948

Koussevitzky Directs Tanglewood Opening

By EDGAR S. VAN OLINDA

The Tanglewood Music festival was officially opened, Thursday night in the great music shed, with the full Boston Symphony orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky playing before an estimated audience of 8,000 music lovers, inside and outside the shell. Distinguished members of old New England society, motion picture stars, and world-famous musical artists filled the double tier of boxes.

Dr. Koussevitzky, apparently as fit as the fiddle of Richard Burgin, his concertmaster, opened the series of three week-end concerts on a very high artistic plane. Always a consistent program builder, the opening program consisted of the Bach suite in D-major (with its lovely "Air for the G-String"); the modern symphony, "Mathis der Maler" by Hindemith and the monumental "Fifth" symphony of Beethoven.

Structurally, the counterpoint of Bach was a logical introduction to the more complicated form of Hindemith, and tonally, the Hindemith filled nicely into the pattern of Beethoven. It seemed to us that the brass section was never in such fine form, the sonorities of that choir, bouncing against the back wall, but never overshadowing the string percussion and woodwind sections, for which the Bostonians are justly famous.

The orchestra, attired in white coats, followed the unorthodox leadership of Dr. Koussevitzky, sensing to the fullest, his personal interpretative inspiration of the moment, resulting in a program of instrumental music, while familiar, yet highly individualized, through his insistance upon prominence to subordinate instruments and secondary themes, frequently glossed over by conductors of lesser musical gifts.

Dr. Koussevitzky was greeted with tremendous ovations at his entrances, and following each section of the program. Even the staid old New England audience so far forget itself to indulge in some very enthusiastic cries of "Bravo." The program tonight, at 8:15 will be devoted to Piston, Prokofieff (violin concerto with Isaac Stern, soloist) and the Brahms' symphony, No. 1 tomorrow afternoon at 8:30, the conductor will be Leonard Bernstein, and the soloists, Ellebelle Davis, soprano and Nan Merriman, contralto.

WEATHER FAVORS BERKSHIRES FETE

Best Opening Week in History Possible for Music Festival if Its Luck Continues

By HOWARD TAUBMAN

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., July 31—With the weather man in benevolent mood, the second concert of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood brought out a crowd that far exceeded that of the opening on Thursday. If the festival's luck holds up tomorrow afternoon, when the next concert is presented, this may turn out to be the best opening week in its history.

The program tonight was divided between contemporary music and one of the classics of the repertory. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony offered Walter Piston's Symphony No. 3, with the composer present to hear this work which he wrote on Mr. Koussevitzky's commission; Prokofieff's Violin Concerto No. 1, with the gifted American fiddler, Isaac Stern, as soloist, and Brahm's First Symphony. Because of the exigencies of early deadlines for Sunday papers, comment on the performances tonight will be reserved for tomorrow's report.

Tanglewood, home of the festival and of the Berkshire Music Center, always has music going on. Yesterday, for example, there were two programs of interest, each for its own good reasons. In the evening the principal student orchestra of the music center gave its weekly concert, and in the afternoon an ensemble known affectionately as "The Incorrigibles" went through its paces.

Audience, by Invitation

The main student orchestra was absorbing to the invited audience of several thousand—invitations go to all who contribute to a group known as the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center—because it provided an insight into the operation of this unique institution. Mr. Koussevitzky's three personal conducting students—Irwin Hoffman, Howard Shanet and Seymour Lipkin, winner of the Rachmaninoff piano prize—conducted the student orchestra. And for a final fillip there was a work conducted by Eleazar de Carvalho, talented young Brazilian maestro, who is on the teaching staff here.

While it is premature to write critically of Mr. Koussevitsky's protégés and of the student orchestra they work with, it is not improper to report that each of the three young conductors has shown marked progress in the few weeks they have been working here.

This reporter chanced to hear them at one of their first rehearsals early in the month and then again at a Friday evening concert a fortnight ago. It was clear last night that they had gained measurably in poise, control of the orchestra and the capacity to communicate their wishes to the ensemble.

Mr. Hoffman, who at this stage of the summer session seems the most naturally gifted for a conductor's career, acquitted himself with credit last night in a difficult piece of music. He led the slow movement from the symphony for classical orchestra written last year by Harold Shapero, a young American composer who has not only a big future but, even on the basis of this one movement, a considerable achievement.

The adigetto is music of feeling and sensitive fibre. What impresses one is the clarity of its design and the resourcefulness of the writing for instruments. It would not be surprising to find a touch of bombast in a young man, but here is writing of maturity and character. And Mr. Hoffman, who is only 23, conducted it in the style it deserved.

Mr. Shanet was forceful and clear in his handling of [illegible] of Mendelsohn's "Reformation" Symphony. Mr. Lipkin handled orchestra and soloists smoothly in Bach's Double Concerto for violins. The two soloists were fiddlers from Palestine, Zvi Zeitlin and Joseph Bernstein. Both are capable, experienced musicians, but Mr. Bernstein's silken tone and finished interpretive style stamp him as another artist to be watched.

Mr. de Carvalho, who has done guest conducting in Boston and other American cities, but not yet in New York, proved to be a virtuoso conductor in the making. The student orchestra played Straus' "Also Sprach Zarathustra" with a live tone and musical understanding under the Brazilian's leadership.

"The Incorrigibles," led and trained by Frederick Fennell, another American conductor on the staff here, did not burn the world up, but showed what could be done in a short time with a body of amateurs, some of whom had not played in an orchestra before. The instrumentalists in this ensemble are young, and they are students, teachers, even engineers, by profession. The aim for them is to "arouse curiosity in music," and it is carried through admirably.

COMPOSERS HEED SOVIET

Tass Indicates Shostakovich and Prokofieff Follow Official Line

LONDON, July 31 (UP)—Russian composers have taken to heart recent official charges that their music has been out of tune with the Soviet way of life, a Tass dispatch from Moscow indicated today.

The official Soviet news agency carried an interview with Tikhon Khrennikov, general secretary of the Union of Soviet Composers, who said that Dmitri Shostakovich was writing a new opera based on Alexander Fadayev's novel "The Young Guard."

"This opera is about the young women of a Ukrainian town, who were tortured to death by the Gestapo during the war," he added.

The Leningrad Opera House is beginning rehearsals of Sergei Prokofieff's opera "Story of a Real Man." The hero is a flier who lost both legs in the war, but returned to his job and earned the title of "Hero of the Soviet Union."

Nicolai Miaskovsky has written a new symphony in two parts, dedicated to Premier Josef Stalin, Tass declared.

Benefit Event Tuesday Night In Berkshires

Festival Continues; New Vaughan Williams Work Next Saturday Evening

The Boston Symphony Orchestra continues its Berkshire Festival series this week in the Music Shed at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., and also takes part with the Berkshire Music Center in a large-scale benefit on Tuesday night in aid of musicians in Europe. The week's regular festival programs are:

Today, 3:30: Milhaud, Symphony No. 2, Darius Milhaud conducting; Mahler, Symphony No. 2, Leonard Bernstein conducting, with Ellabelle Davis, soprano; Nan Merriman, contralto, and chorus. (Last concert of Series A.)

Thursday, 8:15 (Series B): Conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. Beethoven, Symphony No. 6 (Pastoral); Stravinsky, Oedipus Rex, with Carol Brice, mezzo-soprano; David Lloyd, tenor; James Pease, barytone; Wesley Addy, speaker, and men's chorus.

Saturday, 8:15 (Series B): Conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. Prokofieff, "Romeo and Juliet" Suite No. 2; Vaughan Williams, Symphony No. 6 (first performance in America); Strauss, Don Quixote (cello solo, Gregor Piatigorsky).

Sunday, Aug. 8, 3:30 (Series B). Conductor, Eleazar de Carvalho. Berlioz, Fantastic symphony; Villa-Lobos, Madona; Falla, El Amor Brujo (mezzo-soprano solo, Carol Brice); Siqueira, Nordestina Suite No. 1.

The Boston Symphony will hold a public rehearsal next Saturday morning at 10 o'clock for the benefit of its pension fund.

Archibald MacLeish will be the chairman for Tuesday's benefit, which occupies the late afternoon and the entire evening. The program announced is:

4 p. m., Menotti's "The Telephone" and scenes from other operas (open to holders of reserved and box seats only).

6 p. m. to 7 p. m., "Tanglewood on Parade," parade of the Berkshire Music Center's students and demonstrations of the various departments' activities.

8 p. m., "The Manifestation," readings of Drayton's "The Parting" and Shakespeare's twenty-ninth sonnet by Cornelia Otis Skinner; speeches by Mr. MacLeish, Aaron Copland and others.

9:15 p. m., Boston Symphony, Dr. Koussevitzky conducting. Beethoven, Overture to "Leonore," No. 3; J. Strauss, waltz, Voices of Spring; Sibelius, Valse Triste, Prokofieff, Peter and the Wolf (narrator, Mr. Addy); Ravel, La Valse.

Ticket prices are $2.50 for general admission, $4 for reserved seats and $5 for box seats. Other events scheduled by the Berkshire Music Center for this week are:

Today, 10 a. m., E. Power Biggs, organist, in Bach program; 11 a. m., Department II chamber music; 8:15 p. m., Department IV, opera scenes. Monday, 4:30 p. m., Department IV chamber orchestra. Wednesday, 4:30 p. m., Department II song recital; 8:15 p. m., Bach's St. John Passion, Robert Shaw conducting. Friday, 4:30 p. m., Department IV, opera scenes; 8:15 p. m., Department II orchestra. Sunday, Aug. 8, 10 a. m., E. Power Biggs, organist, and instrumental ensemble, music by Piston, Mozart and Poulenc; 11 a. m., Department II chamber music.

Rossini's little-known opera, "The Turk in Italy" will be produced for the first time in this country at Tanglewood on Monday and Wednesday nights, Aug. 9 and 11, under Boris Goldovsky's benefit.

This Clipping From
ROCHESTER, MINN.
POST BULLETIN

JUL 31 [illegible]

George E. Sokolsky—

Berkshire Home Given As Musicians' Studio

Up here in Sandisfield, we go in for culture in a big way; that is, those of us who do not till the soil and chop down the trees for lumber. And that goes back a long time to the days of Mark Hopkins, Oliver Wendell Holmes — not the Justice but the philosopher—Herman Melville of "Moby Dick," William Cullen Bryant, Henry Wadsworth Longfellow, to say nothing of the Sedgwick clan who dominated Stockbridge as the Atlantic Monthly was the personality of Ellery Sedgwick.

So last Saturday, we foregathered at the Little Red House where Nathaniel Hawthorne conceived the Tanglewood Tales and where often Longfellow, Melville, Fanny Kemble and Hawthorne met to talk but even more to store in their memories the impress of the beauties of the Berkshires and of each other's personality.

The Little Red House has been restored externally by the National Federation of Music clubs under the leadership of Mrs. Guy Gannett, the wife of the Maine publisher, and a gracious and devoted lady. Manning Hawthorne was there to represent his grandfather, Nathaniel, and Henry Wadsworth Longfellow Dana, whose maternal grandfather was the poet and whose paternal grandfather wrote "Two Years Before the Mast", delivered a brilliant and witty address prepared as only Harry can when he takes the trouble, which is not often enough.

We were blessed with the best of Berkshire weather, as we sat in the shadow of Monument mountain and looked across the lake and listened to Serge Koussevitzky accept the little house which is to be used as studios for musicians who come to Tanglewood to improve themselves. And this is so important because out of Tanglewood will in time come American composers, American conductors, and American artists and all the internationalism of its atmosphere will go by the board. For no one can be in this New England long without becoming part of its rock and soil, without feeling the three centuries of America in the marrow of his bones.

Just as in the middle nineteenth century, this very place produced for this country a lasting, indigenous literature, so are we now on the threshold of finding here a lasting, ingenous American music. That indeed is a pot of gold.

As I sat upon a rock, upon which creeped myrtle and rose, I could not help but think that at that very moment were gathered in Philadelphia others who also called themselves Americans but who, somehow, had been cut off at the roots, or who, coming latterly, had no depth to their roots. And while we steeped ourselves richly in the lore of our own land, they were shrieking foully against their mother country and, gazing upon her beauties, saw only nettles and thistles, wihle the mirage from afar was richly verdant.

Yet their curses will wither on the vine. I recalled that Balaam, when pressured to curse, sang:

> "How goodly are thy tents,
> O Jacob, and thy tabernacles,
> O Israel!
> "As the valleys are they spread forth, as gardens by the river's side, as the trees of lign aloes which the Lord hath planted, and as cedar trees beside the waters."

For who can curse such a country as this and who can be its enemy? How varied are the ways of its people and there are none to order them to do this and that and to have no will of their own. Those in Philadelphia were free to steep themselves in shrill hate and we at Tanglewood were free to worship America's glorious past and to restore her monuments. And in a thousand places men and women were free to do as they minded with none to force them to do otherwise. And in a thousand places, often obscure, with none to write their histories, were at that very moment, men and women devoted voluntarily to good and righteous service.

That is America and we who abide in these hills feel it so strongly, for here Longfellow caught the lines of Evangeline and here Hawthorne came after he had already written "The Scarlet Letter," and here Mark Hopkins sat on a log and founded a college. It is in these hills that one senses the manhood that produced this nation.

Music" courses in college.

Thursday, July 31

Among the older music lovers who make Tanglewood a summer habit, the consensus of opinion was that nothing Dr. Koussevitsky had ever done had surpassed his reading of Beethoven's "Eroica," or Third Symphony in E Flat Major, as his concluding offering in Concert No. 6. An all-Beethoven program, the Symphony in C Major has been routinely excellent, the Second, in D Major, climbing to wondrous heights of musicianship. It was in the Third that the Boston Symphony Orchestra surpassed, most especially in the horn section, every previous record it has ever made in the realms of symphonic music.

* * *

---

the busy, gaily-lighted food booths or carried trays to favorite spot under the trees. Movies were shown of the early days in Tanglewood and sound movies featuring excerpt from scores played during these festival weeks. Moving pictures were taken and shown so that people saw themselves on the screen that same evening. Stars of the music, movie and radio worlds moved among the throng, some as incognito as possible. Of course there was classical music as well after which about 10,000 people promised themselves to return next year. Unlike former seasons, many young folk from Chicopee made the trip to Stockbridge, principally those who are devoting time to instrument or voice or who are taking the popular "Appreciation of

---

"Music for All"

If the festivities in Tanglewood have, in the past years, seemed "remote" in more ways than one, all the remoteness save that of distance was dispelled in the Tuesday evening that staged "Music for All."

The atmosphere was very "Old Home Week," hundreds of people came early, with hampers and rugs to picnic on the spacious, sunny lawns. Others had early supper at

WEATHER FAVORS BERKSHIRES FETE

Best Opening Week in History Possible for Music Festival if Its Luck Continues

By HOWARD TAUBMAN

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., July 31—With the weather man in benevolent mood, the second concert of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood brought out a crowd that far exceeded that of the opening on Thursday. If the festival's luck holds up tomorrow afternoon, when the next concert is presented, this may turn out to be the best opening week in its history.

The program tonight was divided between contemporary music and one of the classics of the repertory. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony offered Walter Piston's Symphony No. 3, with the composer present to hear this work which he wrote on Mr. Koussevitzky's commission; Prokofieff's Violin Concerto No. 1, with the gifted American fiddler, Isaac Stern, as soloist, and Brahm's First Symphony. Because of the exigencies of early deadlines for Sunday papers, comment on the performances tonight will be reserved for tomorrow's report.

Tanglewood, home of the festival and of the Berkshire Music Center, always has music going on. Yesterday, for example, there were two programs of interest, each for its own good reasons. In the evening the principal student orchestra of the music center gave its weekly concert, and in the afternoon an ensemble known affectionately as "The Incorrigibles" went through its paces.

Audience by Invitation

The main student orchestra was absorbing to the invited audience of several thousand—invitations go to all who contribute to a group known as the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center—because it provided an insight into the operation of this unique institution. Mr. Koussevitzky's three personal conducting students—Irwin Hoffman, Howard Shanet and Seymour Lipkin, winner of the Rachmaninoff piano prize—conducted the student orchestra. And for a final fillip there was a work conducted by Eleazar de Carvalho, talented young Brazilian maestro, who is on the teaching staff here.

While it is premature to write critically of Mr. Koussevitzky's protégés and of the student orchestra they work with, it is not improper to report that each of the three young conductors has shown marked progress in the few weeks they have been working here.

This reporter chanced to hear them at one of their first rehearsals early in the month and then again at a Friday evening concert a fortnight ago. It was clear last night that they had gained measurably in poise, control of the orchestra and the capacity to communicate their wishes to the ensemble.

Mr. Hoffman, who at this stage of the summer session seems the most naturally gifted for a conductor's career, acquitted himself with credit last night in a difficult piece of music. He led the slow movement from the symphony for classical orchestra written last year by Harold Shapero, a young American composer who has not only a big future but, even on the basis of this one movement, a considerable achievement.

The adigetto is music of feeling and sensitive fibre. What impresses one is the clarity of its design and the resourcefulness of the writing for instruments. It would not be surprising to find a touch of bombast in a young man, but here is writing of maturity and character. And Mr. Hoffman, who is only 23, conducted it in the style it deserved.

Mr. Shanet was forceful and clear in his handling of [illegible] Mendelsohn's "Reformation" Symphony. Mr. Lipkin handled orchestra and soloists smoothly in Bach's Double Concerto for violins. The two soloists were fiddlers from Palestine, Zvi Zeitlin and Joseph Bernstein. Both are capable, experienced musicians, but Mr. Bernstein's silken tone and finished interpretive style stamp him as another artist to be watched.

Mr. de Carvalho, who has done guest conducting in Boston and other American cities, but not yet in New York, proved to be a virtuoso conductor in the making. The student orchestra played Straus' "Also Sprach Zarathustra" with a live tone and musical understanding under the Brazilian's leadership.

"The Incorrigibles," led and trained by Frederick Fennell, another American conductor on the staff here, did not burn the world up, but showed what could be done in a short time with a body of amateurs, some of whom had not played in an orchestra before. The instrumentalists in this ensemble are young, and they are students, teachers, even engineers, by profession. The aim for them is to "arouse curiosity in music," and it is carried through admirably.

COMPOSERS HEED SOVIET

Tass Indicates Shostakovich and Prokofieff Follow Official Line

LONDON, July 31 (UP)—Russian composers have taken to heart recent official charges that their music has been out of tune with the Soviet way of life, a Tass dispatch from Moscow indicated today.

The official Soviet news agency carried an interview with Tikhon Khrennikov, general secretary of the Union of Soviet Composers, who said that Dmitri Shostakovich was writing a new opera based on Alexander Fadayev's novel "The Young Guard."

"This opera is about the young women of a Ukrainian town, who were tortured to death by the Gestapo during the war," he added.

The Leningrad Opera House is beginning rehearsals of Sergei Prokofieff's opera "Story of a Real Man." The hero is a flier who lost both legs in the war, but returned to his job and earned the title of "Hero of the Soviet Union."

Nicolai Miaskovsky has written a new symphony in two parts, dedicated to Premier Josef Stalin, Tass declared.

Benefit Event Tuesday Night In Berkshires

Festival Continues; New Vaughan Williams Work Next Saturday Evening

The Boston Symphony Orchestra continues its Berkshire Festival series this week in the Music Shed at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., and also takes part with the Berkshire Music Center in a large-scale benefit on Tuesday night in aid of musicians in Europe. The week's regular festival programs are:

Today, 3:30: Milhaud, Symphony No. 2, Darius Milhaud conducting; Mahler, Symphony No. 2, Leonard Bernstein conducting, with Ellabelle Davis, soprano; Nan Merriman, contralto, and chorus. (Last concert of Series A.)

Thursday, 8:15 (Series B): Conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. Beethoven, Symphony No. 6 (Pastoral); Stravinsky, Oedipus Rex, with Carol Brice, mezzo-soprano; David Lloyd, tenor; James Pease, barytone; Wesley Addy, speaker, and men's chorus.

Saturday, 8:15 (Series B): Conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, Prokofieff, "Romeo and Juliet" Suite No. 2; Vaughan Williams, Symphony No. 6 (first performance in America); Strauss, Don Quixote (cello solo, Gregor Piatigorsky).

Sunday, Aug. 8, 3:30 (Series B). Conductor, Eleazar de Carvalho. Berlioz, Fantastic symphony; Villa-Lobos, Madona; Falla, El Amor Brujo (mezzo-soprano solo, Carol Brice); Siqueira, Nordestina Suite No. 1.

The Boston Symphony will hold a public rehearsal next Saturday morning at 10 o'clock for the benefit of its pension fund.

Archibald MacLeish will be the chairman for Tuesday's benefit, which occupies the late afternoon and the entire evening. The program announced is:

4 p. m., Menotti's "The Telephone" and scenes from other operas (open to holders of reserved and box seats only).

6 p. m. to 7 p. m., "Tanglewood on Parade," parade of the Berkshire Music Center's students and demonstrations of the various departments' activities.

8 p. m., "The Manifestation," readings of Drayton's "The Parting" and Shakespeare's twenty-ninth sonnet by Cornelia Otis Skinner; speeches by Mr. MacLeish, Aaron Copland and others.

9:15 p. m., Boston Symphony, Dr. Koussevitzky conducting. Beethoven, Overture to "Leonore," No. 3; J. Strauss, waltz, Voices of Spring; Sibelius, Valse Triste, Prokofieff, Peter and the Wolf (narrator, Mr. Addy); Ravel, La Valse.

Ticket prices are $2.50 for general admission, $4 for reserved seats and $5 for box seats. Other events scheduled by the Berkshire Music Center for this week are:

Today, 10 a. m., E. Power Biggs, organist, in Bach program; 11 a. m., Department II chamber music; 8:15 p. m., Department IV, opera scenes. Monday, 4:30 p. m., Department IV chamber orchestra. Wednesday, 4:30 p. m., Department II song recital; 8:15 p. m., Bach's St. John Passion, Robert Shaw conducting. Friday, 4:30 p. m., Department IV, opera scenes; 8:15 p. m., Department II orchestra. Sunday, Aug. 8, 10 a. m., E. Power Biggs, organist, and instrumental ensemble, music by Piston, Mozart and Poulenc; 11 a. m., Department II chamber music.

Rossini's little-known opera, "The Turk in Italy" will be produced for the first time in this country at Tanglewood on Monday and Wednesday nights, Aug. 9 and 11, under Boris Goldovsky's benefit.

This Clipping From
ROCHESTER, MINN.
POST BULLETIN
JUL 31 1948

George E. Sokolsky—

Berkshire Home Given As Musicians' Studio

Up here in Sandisfield, we go in for culture in a big way; that is, those of us who do not till the soil and chop down the trees for lumber. And that goes back a long time to the days of Mark Hopkins, Oliver Wendell Holmes — not the Justice but the philosopher—Herman Melville of "Moby Dick," William Cullen Bryant, Henry Wadsworth Longfellow, to say nothing of the Sedgwick clan who dominated Stockbridge as the Atlantic Monthly was the personality of Ellery Sedgwick.

So last Saturday, we foregathered at the Little Red House where Nathaniel Hawthorne conceived the Tanglewood Tales and where often Longfellow, Melville, Fanny Kemble and Hawthorne met to talk but even more to store in their memories the impress of the beauties of the Berkshires and of each other's personality.

The Little Red House has been restored externally by the National Federation of Music clubs under the leadership of Mrs. Guy Gannett, the wife of the Maine publisher, and a gracious and devoted lady. Manning Hawthorne was there to represent his grandfather, Nathaniel, and Henry Wadsworth Longfellow Dana, whose maternal grandfather was the poet and whose paternal grandfather wrote "Two Years Before the Mast", delivered a brilliant and witty address prepared as only Harry can when he takes the trouble, which is not often enough.

We were blessed with the best of Berkshire weather, as we sat in the shadow of Monument mountain and looked across the lake and listened to Serge Koussevitzky accept the little house which is to be used as studios for musicians who come to Tanglewood to improve themselves. And this is so important because out of Tanglewood will in time come American composers, American conductors, and American artists and all the internationalism of its atmosphere will go by the board. For no one can be in this New England long without becoming part of its rock and soil, without feeling the three centuries of America in the marrow of his bones,

Just as in the middle nineteenth century, this very place produced for this country a lasting, indigenous literature, so are we now on the threshold of finding here a lasting, ingenous American music. That indeed is a pot of gold.

As I sat upon a rock, upon which creeped myrtle and rose, I could not help but think that at that very moment were gathered in Philadelphia others who also called themselves Americans but who, somehow, had been cut off at the roots, or who, coming latterly, had no depth to their roots. And while we steeped ourselves richly in the lore of our own land, they were shrieking foully against their mother country and, gazing upon her beauties, saw only nettles and thistles, wihle the mirage from afar was richly verdant.

Yet their curses will wither on the vine. I recalled that Balaam, when pressured to curse, sang:

> "How goodly are thy tents,
> O Jacob, and thy tabernacles,
> O Israel!
> "As the valleys are they spread forth, as gardens by the river's side, as the trees of lign aloes which the Lord hath planted, and as cedar trees beside the waters."

For who can curse such a country as this and who can be its enemy? How varied are the ways of its people and there are none to order them to do this and that and to have no will of their own. Those in Philadelphia were free to steep themselves in shrill hate and we at Tanglewood were free to worship America's glorious past and to restore her monuments. And in a thousand places men and women were free to do as they minded with none to force them to do otherwise. And in a thousand places, often obscure, with none to write their histories, were at that very moment, men and women devoted voluntarily to good and righteous service.

That is America and we who abide in these hills feel it so strongly, for here Longfellow caught the lines of Evangeline and here Hawthorne came after he had already written "The Scarlet Letter," and here Mark Hopkins sat on a log and founded a college. It is in these hills that one senses the manhood that produced this nation.

Music" courses in college.

Thursday, July 31

Among the older music lovers who make Tanglewood a summer habit, the consensus of opinion was that nothing Dr. Koussevitsky had ever done had surpassed his reading of Beethoven's "Eroica," or Third Symphony in E Flat Major, as his concluding offering in Concert No. 6. An all-Beethoven program, the Symphony in C Major has been routinely excellent, the Second, in D Major, climbing to wondrous heights of musicianship. It was in the Third that the Boston Symphony Orchestra surpassed most especially in the horn section, every previous record it has ever made in the realms of symphonic music.

* * *

---

the busy, gaily-lighted food booths or carried trays to favorite spot under the trees. Movies were shown of the early days in Tanglewood and sound movies featuring excerpt from scores played during these festival weeks. Moving pictures were taken and shown so that people saw themselves on the screen that same evening. Stars of the music, movie and radio worlds moved among the throng, some as incognito as possible. Of course there was classical music as well after which about 10,000 people promised themselves to return next year. Unlike former seasons, many young folk from Chicopee made the trip to Stockbridge, principally those who are devoting time to instrument or voice or who are tak-

---

"Music for All"

If the festivities in Tanglewood have, in the past years, seemed "remote" in more ways than one, all the remoteness save that of distance was dispelled in the Tuesday evening that staged "Music for All."

The atmosphere was very "Old Home Week," hundreds of people came early, with hampers and rugs to picnic on the spacious, sunny lawns. Others had early supper at

THE CHICOPEE HERALD —

"Just In Passing"

Frances O'Connell Corridan

Feast Days:
July 8—St. Elizabeth of Portugal
9—Lady of Atonement
10—Seven Brothers
11—Pentecost
12—St. John Gaulbert
13—St. Anacletus
14—St. Bonaventure

The Festival Begins

Only 10 more days and nights remain now until the return of that [illegible] crowned event of the Music Festival at Tanglewood. On July [illegible], Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will open the Festival with a Bach-Mozart series. The final concert will be presented Saturday evening on Aug. 1..

* * *

Each year to concerts come patrons who have only to jump over the hedge that separates their Berkshire camp from the wide acres of Tanglewood, and patrons who have journeyed from parts as distant as British Columbia, San Francisco, the Hawaiian Islands and Constantinople for the event; with the greatest number attending from esablished music capitals, such as Boston, New York and Philadelphia.

Each year visitors to the Festival, roaming about before concert time, notice hundreds of sun-tanned young patrons present, in camping togs and casual vacation costumes that contrast dramatically with the fabulous elegance of dress and jewels worn by Berkshire summer residents attending. In late August when the early-fallen dark is cool in the hills, camp blankets contrast with regal fur jackets and scarfs as protection from mountain breezes. Thousands of visitors sit in hushed delight in the darkness of the Music Shed while light plays only on the orchestra on the distant stage. Many hundreds of others sit or lie on the lawns alone, or in groups under the stars while the world's most famous orchestra plays the world's most famous music for their pleasure each night of each series.

* * *

It is not easy for music lovers from this section to attend even one of the concerts, yet every passing year sees more and more Chicopee folk present. It means that one's car has to be good enough for Jacob's Ladder or the Blandford hills, and that the driver feels equal to a 90-mile round trip and a late return home.

Usually about five travel in a group early enough to have a picnic on the lawn, to buy food at Tanglewood and have supper at the woodland tables, or to stop at Berkshire Inn, the Red Lion, or the Curtis and make a gala event of the day. To stop on the return journey for a late supper and dancing is a popular plan of the young married set, which forms a large segment of the audience. Husbands, it seems, have little serious objection to symphonic music played out-of doors.

* * *

The scenes, the sights and accessories of the Berkshire festival could be presented in such a way that readers of the report might expect some such phrase as "And there was music, too." But long before there was "glamour" at Tanglewood there was hard work, devotion and music for musicians and music lovers. That is the real mission of the summer festival, and if in later years the "festival" spirit is abroad that is all to the good for those whose music is not only their life's work but their life.

Hawthorne's Home

Nearly 100 years ago, in the 1850's, Nathaniel Hawthorne and his family were in residence at "the little red house in Stockbridge." This year that little house where the beloved Tanglewood Tales were written is to be dedicated on July 23 as part of the Berkshire Music Center. The "House" bears the crimson paint of the 50's, and the garden is as Mrs. Hawthorne described it in letters to her mother. The old pump in the yard still produces ice-cold water although the old kitchen has been modernized for the use of young students of the Federation and Advanced Orchestra Groups.

Serge Koussevitzy, old—past the biblical three score and 10—full of honors, world famous, will retire next year from the leadership of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

To hear his last few concerts of a lifetime one, certainly, might go to Boston occasionally during the coming winter months. But Koussevitzy at his best, Boston at its best, music at its most entrancing can be experienced on a velvety dark, starry nigth out of doors and the hills beside Lake Mehkeenac in Berkshire County.

Names don't mean much these days, because a mobile blood-solictation unit in Canada reported they succeeded in getting blood from A. tSone. And then a guy named Million out in Idaho was fined a dollar for overtime parking.

THE SPRINGFIELD SUNDAY REPUBLICAN, SPRINGFIELD, MAS

'TANGLEWOOD ON PARADE' FESTIVAL BENEFIT TUESDAY

Full Program of Afternoon and Evening Events by Prominent Figures

The fountain scene from "Pelleas and Melisande," played appropriately enough at a fountain, and an excerpt from "Don Giovanni" have been added to Menotti's "The Telephone," to be sung in its entirety in the gardens at Tanglewood on Tuesday, August 3. The special outdoor performance at 4 p. m. is for box holders and reserved seat patrons to "Tanglewood on Parade," the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Berkshire Music Center's benefit for assistance to musicians in Europe. The event inaugurates a nation wide campaign to help unblock talent abroad.

Three Acts Billed

For the opera department's contribution to the simultaneous demonstration of all departments of the Berkshire Music Center, beginning at 6 p. m. and open to all ticket holders for the benefit, Boris Goldovsky has selected Acts I and IV of "La Boheme" and Act III of "The Marriage of Figaro." Supper on the lawn at 7 p. m. will follow the hour-long demonstrations.

The manifestation at 8 p. m. in the Music Shed will bring appearances by Cornelia Otis Skinner, Archibald MacLeish, Aaron Copland, and other important figures in letters and the arts. Serge Koussevitzky will lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a concert beginning at 9.15 which will conclude with a group of waltzes. The three-quarter rhythm will be picked up and carried on after the concert by a student orchestra under the direction of Frederick Fennell of the conducting faculty for dancing on the lawn.

Reminiscent of the great last act of "Die Meistersinger" will be the parade of the students which immediately precedes the demonstrations. Like the guilds in Wagner's great music drama the 462 boys and girls from 42 states and 15 foreign countries will march by departments carrying banners and led by a band. There will be performances of orchestra, choral and chamber music as well as opera. It would require no less than four visits to Tanglewood to see and hear what will be going on there Tuesday within the period of an hour.

In the Music Shed the student orchestra under student conductors will play Beethoven's "Coriolanus" overture, the chorale and toccata from William Schuman's Symphony No. 3, the first movement of Rachmaninoff's second concerto and three dances from Leonard Bernstein's ballet "Fancy Free."

At Tanglewood Today

Leonard Bernstein and Nan Merriman will be conductor and mezzo-soprano soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Mahler's Second Symphony ("Resurrection") at the Berkshire Festival, Tanglewood, this afternoon. Ellabelle Davis, soprano, will be the other soloist.

"Hymn to Joy"

Among the quiet New England hills the other night, under the lonely reaches of the stars, the Ninth Symphony of Beethoven loosed its splendor on the air.

People far from the scene of the Berkshire Music Festival—in city rooms, on suburban porches—heard over their radios the Boston Symphony Orchestra bringing the mighty symphony to its triumphant last movement, where the chorus joins the instruments in proclaiming through Schiller's "Hymn to Joy" the blessedness and universal brotherhood of man.

During the last war a young anti-Nazi German girl wrote a letter to American friends which was smuggled out of Germany. In it she told of listening over her radio to the Vienna Philharmonic playing the Beethoven Ninth. When the chorus joined in the Schiller hymn, she wrote, they seemed to "sing from the bottom of their hearts, as though they were expressing the deepest longings of all the people of the earth for peace."

That was in the midst of total war. The other night it was in the midst of uneasy atomic peace. The same stars looked down—the stars that spoke to Schiller of a loving Father's reign.

The young anti-Nazi wrote that she wept as she listened, yet felt in her heart the joy of knowing that the law of brotherhood could not be forever hidden by the anarchy of war. Did any troubled heart the other night reach out through the botched, unhappy peace of today to the exultant joy that created the Ninth Symphony and that ordered the shining architecture of the stars?

In spite of the stupid slumbers and nightmares of men, reality breaks through to listening hearts.

Vaughan Williams' 6th Symphony Acclaimed

By Edward Lockspeiser

LONDON

PROUDLY but with appropriate discretion, for no composer of our day has taken such precautions to defend himself from the dangers of success, the new Sixth Symphony in E minor by Vaughan Williams has everywhere been acclaimed as a work of wonderful power, originality and character. "When the great contemporary English composer arrives," a skeptical critic once remarked, "we shall know what great contemporary English music should be." Let it be said straight away that the Vaughan Williams Sixth leaves no room for such skepticism. A first hearing not only leaves one amazed at its vitality and vigor; it impresses one even more by the inventiveness of a composer who, in his 75th year, has been able so to transform and elevate his style that his earlier works must acquire now, through this work, some new value of their own. Of too great integrity ever to have been satisfied with mere repetition, Vaughan Williams nevertheless combines in his E Minor Symphony something of the violence of his Fourth Symphony with the rapt meditation of the Fifth.

In his humorously blunt and forthright manner Vaughan Williams himself wrote the program annotation for the symphony's first performance at a Royal Philharmonic Society concert by the BBC Symphony under the direction of Sir Adrian Boult. Describing a passage in the second movement of tremendous obsessional power where the various members of the brass family seem to be struggling for domination, the composer, with almost school-boyish modesty, tells the listener to look out for the trumpets that "keep hammering away at their figure for over 40 bars getting louder and louder." As to the tempestuous Scherzo with its wildly chaotic theme treated fugally, this, he teasingly would lead us to believe is all a joke, since we are merely told that "various instruments make bad shots at it and after a bit it settles down." I like too his remark about a theme vaguely reminiscent of a folk tune: "Constant Lambert tells us that the only thing to do with a folk tune is to play it soft and repeat it loud. This is not a folk tune but the same difficulty seems to crop up." And this about a grimly adventurous fugal episode: "The woodwind experiment as to how the fugue subject will sound upside down, but the brass are angry and insist on playing it the right way up—so for a bit the two go on together and to the delight of everyone including the composer the two versions fit, so there is nothing to do but contique." All of which, aside from its fun, is an indication of that freedom from any sort of rhetorical sham—a quality not so often come by and which may claim to be the most characteristic English contribution to contemporary music.

The new production of Verdi's Falstaff given by the New London Opera Company at the Cambridge Theatre was remarkable for the authentic style of Mariano Stabile in the title role. A mixed cast of Italian and English singers were shepherded by the conductor, Alberto Erede, who infused the score with the right sense of keyed-up vivacity. Carl Ebert's memorable handling of the crowd scenes, especially the antics he makes them perform in the fantastic Windsor Forest scene, was an example of the great producer's art at its best. A new Don Giovanni produced by Ebert has earned more laurels for the young company, which is shortly to make its first tour abroad.

At Covent Garden Peter Grimes has been put on again with Richard Lewis in the title part and Doris Doree as Ellen Orford, with Reginald Goodall conducting. The production, helped not a little by the imaginative sets of Tanya Moiseiwitch, has acquired the breadth and ease of an established repertory work. Britten specialists have it that the authenticity of this Covent Garden production is not rivalled by either the current Berlin or New York versions.

The composer's increasing band of devotees are eagerly awaiting his new adaptation of The Beggar's Opera to be given at Cambridge. Speaking of his latest operatic venture, realized from the original 17th and 18th century airs, Britten writes, "The tunes to which John Gay wrote his apt and witty lyrics are among our finest national songs. These airs, known usually as traditional tunes, seem to me to be the most characteristically English of any of our folk songs. They are often strangely like Handel and Purcell—may perhaps have influenced them, or have been influenced by them. They have strong leaping intervals, sometimes in peculiar modes, and are often strange and severe in mood." Britten goes on to say that most previous arrangements had avoided the toughness and strangeness of the tunes, concentrating only on their lyrical prettiness. "For my arrangements of the tunes," he explains, "I have gone to a contemporary edition of the original arrangements by Dr. Pepusch. Apart from one or two extensions and repetitions I have left the tunes exactly as they stood. Unfortunately a few had to be cut because of the ex-

Ralph Vaughan Williams

(Continued on page 32)

Milhaud and Bernstein Will Conduct at Tanglewood Today

Berkshire Composition Teacher's Second Symphony and Mahler's 'Resurrection' Symphony On Program; Back-Mozart Series and Series A Opener Excellent

By VICTOR PRAHL

The season at Tanglewood is in full swing with two concerts in the major series already under way and another that promises to be the most interesting program of the season from the standpoint of novelty scheduled for this afternoon.

The two concerts during the past week devoted exclusively to the works of Bach and Mozart were the most intriguing ever given in this series, due mainly to the inclusion of rarely heard compositions. The super excellence of performances as well was responsible for the success of Mozart's Serenade in C minor for eight wind instruments, with its ingenious finale in variation form.

Lukas Foss Soloist

Another gay, light-hearted finale, the type at which Mozart excelled, this time in the rondo form, was that of the seldom heard piano concerto in G major (K. 453) played with sensitivity and delicacy of style by the orchestra's official pianist, Lukas Foss. It was performed with obvious relish to the accompaniment of much lively, rhythmical lip-popping on the part of both soloist and conductor. This enchanting composition has just as much popular appeal as some of the composer's other works in this form heard repeatedly. One can only conclude that most pianists are satisfied to confine themselves to the concertos easily available in print.

It is hoped that that the inclusion of a cantata or two will be followed in the makeup of other Bach programs. After all, nearly two thirds of the master's entire output was devoted to works in t his form, many containing some of the most sublime music ever written. Hugh Ross's well trained chorus sang the contrapuntal chorus of the cantata "They All from Saba Shall Come" with authority and clarity of vocal line, and the rich baritone of James Pease and fine lyric tenor of David Lloyd have never been heard to better advantage than in their respective solos, although the tempi in both airs might be questioned.

The two concertos for three pianos were distinct novelties with their stringy quality of combined tone and the playful juggling back and forth of contrapuntal motives in the solo passages. Lukas Foss, Bernard Zighera and Ralph Berkowitz were the three efficient soloists, Mr. Berkowitz adding an extra sparkle to the "Allegro" of the final concerto with his brilliant virtuosity. Dr. Koussevitzky held the whole together with the hand of the true, understanding master.

Full Orchestra Plays

With perfect weather, a capacity audience in the shed and on the lawn, and Dr. Koussevitzky in top form, the concerts by the full orchestra got off to a fine start. They struck musical [illegible]ture of the Bach suite in D major, the one with the famous "air for the G string." There was a brilliant, vibrant tone from the string section in this familiar page and a biting rhythmical verve in the four old court dances that constitute the remainder of the work.

Paul Hindemith's "Matthias the Painter" seems to have found a permanent place in the modern symphonic repertoire and Dr. Koussevitzky with his intuitive comprehension gave vivid musical portrayal of the three old altar pieces the composer had in mind when writing this sumptuous, dynamic score. Beethoven's "Fifth" was delivered with all the freshness of spirit, grandeur and fire, of a young conductor discovering this heroic work for the first time. Naturally it aroused the audience to a prolonged demonstration of approval.

Milhaud Conducts Today

Darious Milhaud, in residence as a teacher of composition at the center, will conduct his Symphony No. 2 at this afternoon concert. Commissioned by Dr. Koussevitzky, it is dedicated to the memory of Madame Natalie Koussevitzky. The second half will be taken up with Gustav Mahler's Symphony No. 2 in C minor. Not one to let the time element or the conventions of contemporary scoring interfere with his inspiration, Mahler conceived all of his symphonies on a lofty plane and scored them in the grand manner.

This work in five movements enlists the services of a large chorus and two soloists, not to mention five bassoons, 10 horns, 10 trumpets, two sets of tympani, small and large tamtams, three bells, Ruthe (bundle of sticks), two harps and organ in addition to the usual strings and other instruments. The soloists will be Ellabelle Davis, soprano, and Nan Merriman, contralto. The chorus has been trained by Hugh Ross and the performance will be conducted by Leonard Bernstein.

Worthy of support both musically and for the charitable cause, is the gala scheduled for Tuesday night called "Tanglewood on Parade" to be given for the benefit of needy European musicians. Starting at 6 p. m., there will be simultaneous performances in the different sheds by the orchestra, chorus, opera class, and chamber group. At 9:15 Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct a concert including Beethoven's "Leonore" Overture No. 3, Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" with Wesley Addy as narrator, and an "Evolution of the Waltz" group with examples by Johann Strauss, Sibelius and Ravel. Other programs for the week are as follows:

Thursday Evening, August 5, at 8:15

Symphony No. 6, "Pastoral" ... Beethoven

"Oedipus Rex" .... Stravinsky

With male chorus and soloists—Carol Brice, contralto; David Lloyd, tenor; James Pease, bass; Wesley Addy, narrator.

Saturday Evening, August 7, at 8:15

"Romeo and Juliet," Suite No. 2, Prokofieff

Symphony No. 6 ...... Vaughan Williams

"Don Quixote" .... Strauss

Violoncello solo: Gregor Piatigorsky.

Sunday Afternoon, August 8, at 3:30

(Eleazar de Carvalho conducting).

Fantastic Symphony .... Berlioz

Madona .... Villa Lobos

El Amor Brujo, (Soloist: Carol Brice), Falla

"Nordestina," Suite No. 1 .... Siqueira

This Clipping From SALEM, ORE.
OREGON STATESMAN
AUG 1 1948

Festival Plans About Complete

HOOD RIVER, Ore.—The Hood River music festival, August 5 to 8 will be directed by Boris Sirpo, Portland symphony conductor, whose idea it was to make the apple city become an American Salzburg each year. Five concerts are scheduled, four of which Sirpo will conduct. In five years of work at Hood River, Sirpo has built choruses and symphony orchestras which have gained national recognition.

The Alma Trio will open the festival, Thursday, August 5 at 8:30 p.m. Adolph Baller is the pianist; Roman Totenberg, violinist; and Gabor Rejto, cellist.

Friday evening, the Portland Chamber orchestra will present a program featuring soprano Marina Koshetz, Boston symphony soloist, screen and radio star. Saturday evening the deeply significant symphonic psalm "King David" is offered with a cast of 600. Saturday afternoon the Hood River junior symphony and chorus will be presented.

The final concert, Sunday night, features Ezio Pinza, operatic basso, who will sing two groups of arias with the Hood River symphony orchestra. The program will be climaxed by presentation of "Finlandia" by Sibellius, in a special arrangement using a chorus. Many of the members of the chorus are Finnish, as is Mr. Sirpo.

The festival will be held outdoors in an "alpine" setting, in the athletic grounds of the high school, with Mt. Adams in the background. Reservations, tickets and information may be secured from festival headquarters, Box 35, Hood River.

---

character actress.

SPECIAL CONCERT FROM TANGLEWOOD

The first of two concerts from the Berkshire Music Festival will be heard over ABC and Station WSPR Tuesday from 9.30 to 10.30 p. m. when Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducts the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a Prokofieff-Sibelius-Strauss-Ravel program.

The broadcast will be part of a special concert entitled "Tanglewood on Parade" in which the activities of the summer music school, of which Dr. Koussevitzky is direcor, will be displayed.

Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" will open the broadcast. Wesley Addy, well-known Shakespearean actor, will be the narrator for the composition.

Koussevitzky has also scheduled Sibelius' "Valse Triste" from the suite, "Kuolema." Strauss' familiar "Voices of Spring" waltz and Ravel's choreographic poem, "La Valse," for the broadcast.

The concluding broadcast from festival will be an all-Tch program Aug. 10.

Old

Syracuse Herald-Am
Aug 1

MUSIC

'Tanglewood' and Magic of Its Music, Enchantment of Sights, Sounds, Outdoors

By E. V. W.

It is likely that mid-August guest soloists at the four Syracuse Centennial Concerts in Thornden Park Amphitheater (in conjunction with the Syracuse Centorama) will be Mary Becker, violinist; Priscilla Gillette, soprano; Richmond Gale, and Barbara Micale, pianists. As it appears in advance: Becker and Gale with Prof. Andre Polah and an orchestra of 75; Gillette and Micale with Murray Bernthal and his "Pops" orchestra.

THE THRILL, the purpose and the significance of what "Tanglewood" music means to music lovers cannot be estimated in a single listening season in that enchanting spot, set in the Berkshire Hills near Lenox, Mass. With thousands of others, your reporter each summer finds inspiration and redirection in musical values in that impressively built center of culture and achievement.

ALL IN ALL, the Berkshire Festival and its many-faceted interests, is dedicated with what seems to be a burning faith and complete devotion to a great cause. It is a compelling musical journey, complete in itself each succeeding season, with memories of travels of the past, and a glimpse into the mysterious, wished-for future. It opens the gates as only good music, great music, can, with manifold orchestral tints and a vast wealth of vocal literature. Over all the music mind and heart of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, who sees a dream come true, in fine fruition, and who next year will turn over direction of his orchestra—the Boston Symphony—to Dr. Charles Muench.

FESTIVAL PROGRAMS in the Shed in Tanglewood opened Thursday night with the Bach Suite No. 3, and the Beethoven "Fifth" under the Koussevitzky baton. Last night, Isaac Stern, violinist. Included in the orchestra program were Walter Piston's Symphony No. 3; and the Brahms "First." Stern played the Prokofieff Concerto No. 1. This afternoon at 3:30 o'clock, Darius Milhaud, French composer, and Leonard Bernstein will conduct. Milhaud's Symphony No. 2 will be led by the composer. Mahler's Symphony No. 2 "Resurrection," with Chorus, will be presented and Ellabelle Davis, soprano and Nan Meriman, contralto as soloists under Bernstein's leadership.

ARCHIBALD MAC LEISH will serve as chairman of "Tanglewood on Parade," the benefit which the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center will stage Tuesday for the creative musicians of Europe. The distinguished American poet will introduce Cornelia Otis Skinner, Aaron Copland and other important figures in letters and the arts to be announced. Dr. Koussevitzky will speak as well as conduct the full orchestra in a concert in the Music Shed between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass. Maurice Evans had accepted to appear in a Shakespearean excerpt, but has sent word he will be unable to attend.

IN THE GALA SPIRIT of the occasion, Dr. Koussevitzky has programmed a group showing the development of the waltz for the grand concert at 9:15 P.M. The lively finale will include "Voices of Spring" by Strauss, "Valse Triste" by Sibelius, and "La Valse" of Ravel. Other numbers will be Beethoven's "Leonore" over No. 3 and Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" with Wesley Addy as narrator. Festivities will begin at 6 P.M. with a parade of the 462 students of the Berkshire Music Center. They will proceed to their various departments for demonstrations of all activities of the school—orchestra, opera, chorus, and chamber music. The hour from 7 to 8 will be given over to picnic supper on the grounds.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST
AUG 1 - 1948

BSO Presents Benefit For European Musicians

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, will present a special benefit for the assistance of musicians in Europe Tuesday, at the Berkshire Music Festival in Tanglewood, Mass.

The program, beginning at 4 p. m. and continuing into the evening, includes a concert led by Mr. Koussevitzky, excerpts from "La Boheme," "Don Giovanni," "The Marriage of Figaro" and "Pelleas and Melisande," and Menotti's short opera, "The Telephone," will be staged by the festival's opera department, under the direction of Boris Goldovsky. Also scheduled are a concert by the festival's student orchestra, under student conductors.

PROPHET WITH HONOR

No epoch is all of a piece. While it rises in one quarter, in another it may decline; while temples of gleaming marble rise on the Acropolis, out breaks the Peloponnesian War which is destined to destroy Athens and her empire. Yet the temples endure even in ruins centuries after the empire has vanished. Like organic life itself, every age is at once a building-up and a tearing-down, anabolism and katabolism.

We live in such an age. The forces of destruction are deadly and growing more so; the forces of construction, the building materials of a future, are in our midst and our own temples are rising. One of them is music.

At the opening of this Summer's session of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Dr. Koussevitzky spoke. Each year he seems to have reserved this occasion to utter in words, a language which he has grown to wield almost as deftly as his conductor's stick, the increment to his basic thinking which has accrued during the previous year. This year his speech at Tanglewood was contrived a double debt to pay, for its closing remarks were the same as his discourse on "Interpreting Music" in the current August issue of The Atlantic Monthly where it preludes his 25th year as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and it has come to this with him, that ". . . old experience doth attain

"To something like prophetic strain."

* * *

In the past few years it has become noticeable how many people will tell you "Music is my religion." Koussevitzky has worded this better:

"Men seek an outlet for their best and deeper emotions, and they find it in music. For music is the recovered word of true feeling, liberated from the banality, hypocrisy, and cruelty of life. Music is to help the souls of men. It is the pure language, regenerating, like mountain air."

At a time when passions are inflamed, when ideas are confused, when hearts are still torn by the wounds of two wars, when social systems are at feud across national boundaries, across class lines, and across mere back fences; when apprehension sleeps with one eye open, and when the only future we are sure of is that which we can create in our own souls, one of the sanctuaries we can still seek is this heroic world of sound, of tone, of cathedral architecture wrought in harmony of instruments and voices, where no sectarian concepts come between us and our deepest intuitions of good, while men of genius speak to us with no assumption of self-righteousness, with no presumption to claims of authority save that of the human soul ennobled, and where only the best that is in composer and performers speaks to whatsoever is best in the listener.

* * *

This divine office carries a grave responsibility and Serge Koussevitzky knows it. He says that music in our time "makes an increased demand upon the high moral standing of the musician, his integrity and complete devotion to his art. No longer should he submit to circumstances or to the passing whims of society; rather, he will conquer circumstance and guide society." In the 18th century the musician was an "entertainer," in the 19th he came perilously near to being a public pet; in the 20th we are entering a third stage in which the great artist must be also a great man.

"It seems only yesterday that we had among us Paderewski, the musician-patriot, statesman, and aristocrat of the spirit. We still have with us—though not among us—Albert Schweitzer, the musician philosopher, scientist, and humanitarian, who has set a singular example to mankind. The advent of such a man announces a new era in music, an era where outer perfection, brought to a definite point of attainment, does not suffice; where a new dimension is sought—that infinite fourth dimension which rests with and within us."

Fourth dimension is a phrase which may mean much or little to the reader, according to his own experience or to his capacity

[217]

NASHVILLE BANNER

KEYNOTES

BY BARBARA KEEBLE

Unique, inspiring, picturesque—such is the BERKSHIRE MUSIC CENTER at Tanglewood near Lenox, Mass., which is in the midst of its six weeks' session.

Bach-Mozart concerts are now drawing crowds to the delightful spot prior to the first concert by the full Boston Symphony in the Music Shed which officially opens the Festival this evening.

The four Bach-Mozart concerts were born of necessity in 1944 when the war threatened the survival of the Berkshire project. Maestro Koussevitsky, unable to stand by and watch his brain-child go under, created a chamber group of approximately 30 players and weathered the war. The idea is not only popular now but quite a money maker.

Sunday's concert was the second performance of the Mozart program and attracted a capacity house of 1,200 with 1,900 listening outside the building. Applause was not sufficient praise from the enthusiastic audience. Shouts of 'bravo" were frequent and spontaneous at the close of the "Symphony in E-flat major" which concluded the program.

Koussevitsky obviously enjoys every minute on the podium and the audience feels this. Certainly he wrung everything from the Mozart scores and added an interpretation of vitality and deep feeling that makes him the great conductor of the day.

The schedule is a full one and each day something of musical interest seems to be happening. Tuesday, August 3, Tanglewood will be particularly busy.

CORNELIA OTIS SKINNER, brilliant star of stage and radio, is one of the important figures in letters and the arts who will appear in "Tanglewood on Parade," the four-hour benefit which the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center will stage for needy musicians in Europe.

Tanglewood is a living memorial to Serge Koussevitzky and will ever bear his connection. His dream, however, is not to immortalize himself but to expand the field of music and his contribution is a tremendous opportunity to the art.

---

for understanding what his own experience means. A good many years ago, the captain of a Cunard steamship, docked in East Boston at dead of Winter between voyages, was speaking of his vigils on the bridge of his vessel at night in mid-ocean under the icy stars. He said that such were the times when he did his basic thinking, when he made his major decisions—such as his avowed sympathy for the labor movement, which showed first of all from the stokers on up to the officers aboard the "Carpathia," which was known throughout the fleet as "a happy ship"—and he said that out there in mid-Atlantic under the night sky full of glittering stars, he felt surest of the validity of his thinking, because surest that then he was functioning, as nearly as was possible to him, in the fourth dimension. This captain was the late Sir Arthur Rostron, affectionately known to his subordinate officers as "Rossie," and it was he and his "Carpathia," attuned to a wireless message, and the skipper attuned to a higher wireless, who rescued the survivors of the steamship "Titanic."

* * *

That was a good while ago and words as abstract as "fourth dimension" have a way of sliding past the ear of a young man without seeming to have registered. And yet have they slid past? May we not experience the thing without knowing any name for it, or needing to know? Last Spring a young man not then twenty-two, who had spent his 18th year scrubbing decks aboard a destroyer off the coast of Alaska and getting himself mucked-up in one way or another when he was not scrubbing decks, heard in Symphony Hall a performance of Brahms' First Symphony, which he supposed he knew well. Of a sudden in the Finale, when that chorale is intoned by the orchestra's full sonority, his inner landscape was illumined as by a lightning flash, and it was clear to him:

"There! That is what I must be and do." He said afterwards that the blaze of self-revelation was so intense that he almost resented the working-out passages of orchestration which follow, as irrelevant. "I had already had all I could have. Why have more?"

* * *

Dr. Koussevitzky was conducting that performance. Is it any accident that he should ask at the end of both discourses, his speech at Tanglewood and his essay in the Atlantic—

"Will the artist indeed open the gates of heaven and let the people experience ecstacy—were it for an infinitesimal moment?" and answer,

"As one chosen by destiny and richly endowed by nature, the artist must have a sense of obligation toward those who are denied these riches. It is for him to repay Nature and to offer his gifts to humanity, in all humility of heart, as an act of gratitude for the grace bestowed upon him."

---

58 Aug 1 Tms

WEATHER FAVORS BERKSHIRES FETE

Best Opening Week in History Possible for Music Festival if Its Luck Continues

By HOWARD TAUBMAN

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., July 31—With the weather man in benevolent mood, the second concert of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood brought out a crowd that far exceeded that of the opening on Thursday. If the festival's luck holds up tomorrow afternoon, when the next concert is presented, this may turn out to be the best opening week in its history.

The program tonight was divided between contemporary music and one of the classics of the repertory. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony offered Walter Piston's Symphony No. 3, with the composer present to hear this work which he wrote on Mr. Koussevitzky's commission; Prokofieff's Violin Concerto No. 1, with the gifted American fiddler, Isaac Stern, as soloist, and Brahm's First Symphony. Because of the exigencies of early deadlines for Sunday papers, comment on the performances tonight will be reserved for tomorrow's report.

Tanglewood, home of the festival and of the Berkshire Music Center, always has music going on. Yesterday, for example, there were two programs of interest, each for its own good reasons. In the evening the principal student orchestra of the music center gave its weekly concert, and in the afternoon an ensemble known affectionately as "The Incorrigibles" went through its paces.

Audience by Invitation

The main student orchestra was absorbing to the invited audience of several thousand—invitations go to all who contribute to a group known as the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center—because it provided an insight into the operation of this unique institution. Mr. Koussevitzky's three personal conducting students—Irwin Hoffman, Howard Shanet and Seymour Lipkin, winner of the Rachmaninoff piano prize—conducted the student orchestra. And for a final fillip there was a work conducted by Eleazar de Carvalho, talented young Brazilian maestro, who is on the teaching staff here.

While it is premature to write critically of Mr. Koussevitzky's protégés and of the student orchestra they work with, it is not improper to report that each of the three young conductors has shown marked progress in the few weeks they have been working here.

This reporter chanced to hear them at one of their first rehearsals early in the month and then again at a Friday evening concert a fortnight ago. It was clear last night that they had gained measurably in poise, control of the orchestra and the capacity to communicate their wishes to the ensemble.

Mr. Hoffman, who at this stage of the summer session seems the most naturally gifted for a conductor's career, acquitted himself with credit last night in a difficult piece of music. He led the slow movement from the symphony for classical orchestra written last year by Harold Shapero, a young American composer who has not only a big future but, even on the basis of this one movement, a considerable achievement.

The adigetto is music of feeling and sensitive fibre. What impresses one is the clarity of its design and the resourcefulness of the writing for instruments. It would not be surprising to find a touch of bombast in a young man, but here is writing of maturity and character. And Mr. Hoffman, who is only 23, conducted it in the style it deserved.

Mr. Shanet was forceful and clear in his handling of part of Mendelsohn's "Reformation" Symphony. Mr. Lipkin handled orchestra and soloists smoothly in Bach's Double Concerto for violins. The two soloists were fiddlers from Palestine, Zvi Zeitlin and Joseph Bernstein. Both are capable, experienced musicians, but Mr. Bernstein's silken tone and finished interpretive style stamp him as another artist to be watched.

Mr. de Carvalho, who has done guest conducting in Boston and other American cities, but not yet in New York, proved to be a virtuoso conductor in the making. The student orchestra played Straus' "Also Sprach Zarathustra" with a live tone and musical understanding under the Brazilian's leadership.

"The Incorrigibles," led and trained by Frederick Fennell, another American conductor on the staff here, did not burn the world up, but showed what could be done in a short time with a body of amateurs, some of whom had not played in an orchestra before. The instrumentalists in this ensemble are young, and they are students, teachers, even engineers, by profession. The aim for them is to "arouse curiosity in music," and it is carried through admirably.

COMPOSERS HEED SOVIET

Tass Indicates Shostakovich and Prokofieff Follow Official Line

LONDON, July 31 (UP)—Russian composers have taken to heart recent official charges that their music has been out of tune with the Soviet way of life, a Tass dispatch from Moscow indicated today.

The official Soviet news agency carried an interview with Tikhon Khrennikov, general secretary of the Union of Soviet Composers, who said that Dmitri Shostakovich was writing a new opera based on Alexander Fadayev's novel "The Young Guard."

"This opera is about the young women of a Ukrainian town, who were tortured to death by the Gestapo during the war," he added.

The Leningrad Opera House is beginning rehearsals of Sergei Prokofieff's opera "Story of a Real Man." The hero is a flier who lost both legs in the war, but returned to his job and earned the title of "Hero of the Soviet Union."

Nicolai Miaskovsky has written a new symphony in two parts, dedicated to Premier Josef Stalin, Tass declared.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
POST
AUG 1 1948

The Atlantic

Is the U. S becoming the musical center of the world because we have the most money? Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, denies this, explaining, "Musical life in this country grows because there is the need for music . . . men seek an outlet for their best and deeper emotion, and they find it in music."

Koussevitzky tells why musical performers have a right to interpret compositions: "Personally, I believe that a composer, when creating a work, transfuses it . . . with the entire meaning of his life—the essence of his being. That is why . . . we must find a 'central line' in the creation of every composer . . .

"When the artist-interpreter is able to perceive the inner meaning, the central line, of a composition, he will find in himself the right and illuminating emotion to perform it . . . a talented artist, no matter how accurately he follows the markings in the score, renders the composition through his own prism, his own perception of the score, his own temperament and emotion."

~~KOUSSEVITZKY~~
~~Interprets own~~
The Atlantic

[218]

This Clipping From OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.
OKLAHOMAN
AUG 1 1948

Musical Gifts For Europe

ARCHIBALD MACLEISH w serve as chairman of "Tangl wood on Parade," a benefit which the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music center will stage Tuesday for creative musicians of Europe.

The distinguished American poet will introduce Cornelia Otis Skinner, Aaron Copland and other important figures in letters and the arts. Serge Koussevitzky will speak, and conduct the full orchestra, in a concert at the Music Shed between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass.

"A musical CARE package" is the way one participant describes the four-hour event, which will inaugurate a nationwide campaign for assistance to fellow artists of the Old World. The national committee will request other orchestras to give benefits during the coming season.

Just returned from a tour in "Lady Windemere's Fan," which ran the season before in New York, Miss Skinner will read two Elizabethan sonnets at the "manifestation" beginning at 8 p. m.

Her selections are Michael Drayton's "The Parting" and Sonnet No. 29 from Shakespeare, "When in Disgrace." Equally known as author an actress, Miss Skinner will have her sixth book published this autumn. She is a frequent contributor to the New Yorker, and has a humorous sketch in its current issue. This season she returns to the monologue stage where she won her first fame.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
AUG 1 - 1948

WEATHER FAVORS BERKSHIRES FETE

Best Opening Week in History Possible for Music Festival if Its Luck Continues

By HOWARD TAUBMAN
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., July 31—With the weather man in benevolent mood, the second concert of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood brought out a crowd that far exceeded that of the opening on Thursday. If the festival's luck holds up tomorrow afternoon, when the next concert is presented, this may turn out to be the best opening week in its history.

The program tonight was divided between contemporary music and one of the classics of the repertory. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony offered Walter Piston's Symphony No. 3, with the composer present to hear this work which he wrote on Mr. Koussevitzky's commission; Prokofieff's Violin Concerto No. 1, with the gifted American fiddler, Isaac Stern, as soloist, and Brahms' First Symphony. Because of the exigencies of early deadlines for Sunday papers, comment on the performances tonight will be reserved for tomorrow's report.

Tanglewood, home of the festival and of the Berkshire Music Center, always has music going on. Yesterday, for example, there were two programs of interest, each for its own good reasons. In the evening the principal student orchestra of the music center gave its weekly concert, and in the afternoon an ensemble known affectionately as "The Incorrigibles" went through its paces.

Audience by Invitation

The main student orchestra was absorbing to the invited audience of several thousand—invitations go to all who contribute to a group known as the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center—because it provided an insight into the operation of this unique institution. Mr. Koussevitzky's three personal conducting students—Irwin Hoffman, Howard Shanet and Seymour Lipkin, winner of the Rachmaninoff piano prize—conducted the student orchestra. And for a final fillip there was a work conducted by Eleazar de Carvalho, talented young Brazilian maestro, who is on the teaching staff here.

While it is premature to write critically of Mr. Koussevitzky's protégés and of the student orchestra they work with, it is not improper to report that each of the three young conductors has shown marked progress in the few weeks they have been working here.

This reporter chanced to hear them at one of their first rehearsals early in the month and then again at a Friday evening concert a fortnight ago. It was clear last night that they had gained measurably in poise, control of the orchestra and the capacity to communicate their wishes to the ensemble.

Mr. Hoffman, who at this stage of the summer session seems the most naturally gifted for a conductor's career, acquitted himself with credit last night in a difficult piece of music. He led the slow movement from the symphony for classical orchestra written last year by Harold Shapero, a young American composer who has not only a big future but, even on the basis of this one movement, a considerable achievement.

Gifted for Career

The adigetto is music of feeling and sensitive fibre. What impresses one is the clarity of its design and the resourcefulness of the writing for instruments. It would not be surprising to find a touch of bombast in a young man, but here is writing of maturity and character. And Mr. Hoffman, who is only 23, conducted it in the style it deserved.

Mr. Shanet was forceful and clear in his handling of part of Mendelssohn's "Reformation" Symphony. Mr. Lipkin handled orchestra and soloists smoothly in Bach's Double Concerto for violins. The two soloists were fiddlers from Palestine, Zvi Zeitlin and Joseph Bernstein. Both are capable, experienced musicians, but Mr. Bernstein's silken tone and finished interpretive style stamp him as another artist to be watched.

Mr. de Carvalho, who has done guest conducting in Boston and other American cities, but not yet in New York, proved to be a virtuoso conductor in the making. The student orchestra played Strauss' "Also Sprach Zarathustra" with a live tone and musical understanding under the Brazilian's leadership.

"The Incorrigibles," led and trained by Frederick Fennell, another American conductor on the staff here, did not burn the world up, but showed what could be done in a short time with a body of amateurs, some of whom had not played in an orchestra before. The instrumentalists in this ensemble are young, and they are students, teachers, even engineers, by profession. The aim for them is to "arouse curiosity in music," and it is carried through admirably.

This Clipping From
EL PASO, TEXAS
TIMES
AUG 1 1948

Plan Tribute For Milhaud

(1)

New York, (UP)—A tribute will be paid to Darius Milhaud, guest composer, at the Berkshire Music Center this Summer, at a festival program on Aug. 1.

The Boston Symphony Orchestr will play Milhaud's Symphony No. 2, with the composer conducting. The remainder of the program will consist of Mahler's Symphony No. 2, with the festival chorus of 250 voices, Ellabelle Davis and Nan Merriman as soloists, and Leonard Bernstein conducting.

This Clipping From
SANTA BARBARA, CALIF.
EVENING NEWS PRESS
AUG

MILHAUD TRIBUTE

A tribute will be paid to Darius Milhaud, guest composer, at the Berkshire Music Center this Summer, at a festival program today. The Boston Symphony Orchestra will play Milhaud's Symphony No. 2, with the composer conducting. The remainder of the program will consist of Mahler's Symphony No. 2, with the festival chorus of 250 voices, Ellabelle Davis and Nan Merriman as soloists, and Leonard Bernstein conducting.

This Clipping From PORTLAND, ORE.
OREGONIAN

Care Concert To Be Given

TANGLEWOOD, Mass., July 31—Archibald MacLeish will serve as chairman of "Tanglewood on Parade," the benefit which the Boston Symphony orchestra and the Berkshire music center will stage Tuesday for the creative musicians of Europe. The distinguished American poet will introduce Cornelia Otis Skinner, Aaron Copland and other important figures in letters and the arts to be announced. Serge Koussevitzky will speak as well as conduct the full orchestra in the Music Shed between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass.

"A musical CARE package" is the way one participant describes the four-hour event which will inaugurate a nationwide campaign for assistance to the fellow artists of the Old World. The national committee will request other orchestras throughout the country to give benefits during the forthcoming season.

Just returned from a coast-to-coast tour in "Lady Windermere's Fan," which ran the entire season before in New York, Miss Skinner will read two Elizabethan sonnets at the "manifestation" beginning at 8 p. m. Her selections are Michael Drayton's "The Parting" and the Sonnet No. 29 of Shakespeare, "When in Disgrace."

Waltz Development shown

In the gala spirit of the occasion Dr. Koussevitzky has programmed a group showing the development of the waltz for the grand concert at 9:15 p. m. The lively finale will include "Voices of Spring" by Strauss, "Valse Triste" by Sibelius, and "La Valse" of Ravel. The other numbers will be Beethoven's "Leonore" Overture No. 3 and Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" with Wesley Addy as narrator.

Festivities will begin at 6 p. m. with an actual parade of the [illegible] students of the Berkshire music center.

Milhaud and Bernstein Will Conduct at Tanglewood Today

Berkshire Composition Teacher's Second Symphony and Mahler's 'Resurrection' Symphony On Program; Back-Mozart Series and Series A Opener Excellent

Aug. 1st

By VICTOR PRAHL

The season at Tanglewood is in full swing with two concerts in the major series already under way and another that promises to be the most interesting program of the season from the standpoint of novelty scheduled for this afternoon.

The two concerts during the past week devoted exclusively to the works of Bach and Mozart were the most intriguing ever given in this series, due mainly to the inclusion of rarely heard compositions. The super excellence of performances as well was responsible for the success of Mozart's Serenade in C minor for eight wind instruments, with its ingenious finale in variation form.

Lukas Foss Soloist

Another gay, light-hearted finale, the type at which Mozart excelled, this time in the rondo form, was that of the seldom heard piano concerto in G major (K. 453) played with sensitivity and delicacy of style by the orchestra's official pianist, Lukas Foss. It was performed with obvious relish to the accompaniment of much lively, rhythmical lip-popping on the part of both soloist and conductor. This enchanting composition has just as much popular appeal as some of the composer's other works in this form heard repeatedly. One can only conclude that most pianists are satisfied to confine themselves to the concertos easily available in print.

It is hoped that that the inclusion of a cantata or two will be followed in the makeup of other Bach programs. After all, nearly two thirds of the master's entire output was devoted to works in t his form, many containing some of the most sublime music ever written. Hugh Ross's well trained chorus sang the contrapuntal chorus of the cantata "They All from Saba Shall Come" with authority and clarity of vocal line, and the rich baritone of James Pease and fine lyric tenor of David Lloyd have never been heard to better advantage than in their respecti solos, although the tempi in both airs might be questioned.

The two concertos for three pianos were distinct novelties with their stringy quality of combined tone and the playful juggling back and forth of contrapuntal motives in the solo passages. Lukas Foss, Bernard Zighera and Ralph Berkowitz were the three efficient soloists, Mr. Berkowitz adding an extra sparkle to the "Allegro" of the final concerto with his brilliant virtuosity. Dr. Koussevitzky held the whole together with the hand of the true, understanding master.

Full Orchestra Plays

With perfect weather, a capacity audience in the shed and on the lawn, and Dr. Koussevitzky in top form, the concerts by the full orchestra got off to a fine start. They struck musical terra in the substantial Overture of the Bach suite in D major, the one with the famous "air for the G string." There was a brilliant, vibrant tone from the string section in this familiar page and a biting rhythmical verve in the four old court dances that constitute the remainder of the work.

Paul Hindemith's "Matthias the Painter" seems to have found a permanent place in the modern symphonic repertoire and Dr. Koussevitzky with his intuitive comprehension gave vivid musical portrayal of the three old altar pieces the composer had in mind when writing this sumptuous, dynamic score. Beethoven's "Fifth" was delivered with all the freshness of spirit, grandeur and fire, of a young conductor discovering this heroic work for the first time. Naturally it aroused the audience to a prolonged demonstration of approval.

Milhaud Conducts Today

Darious Milhaud, in residence as a teacher of composition at the center, will conduct his Symphony No. 2 at this afternoon concert. Commissioned by Dr. Koussevitzky, it is dedicated to the memory of Madame Natalie Koussevitzky. The second half will be taken up with Gustav Mahler's Symphony No. 2 in C minor. Not one to let the time element or the conventions of contemporary scoring interfere with his inspiration, Mahler conceived all of his symphonies on a lofty plane and scored them in the grand manner.

This work in five movements enlists the services of a large chorus and two soloists, not to mention five bassoons, 10 horns, 10 trumpets, two sets of tympani, small and large tamtams, three bells, Ruthe (bundle of sticks), two harps and organ in addition to the usual strings and other instruments. The soloists will be Ellabelle Davis, soprano, and Nan Merriman, contralto. The chorus has been trained by Hugh Ross and the performance will be conducted by Leonard Bernstein.

Worthy of support both musically and for the charitable cause, is the gala scheduled for Tuesday night called "Tanglewood on Parade" to be given for the benefit of needy European musicians. Starting at 6 p. m., there will be simultaneous performances in the different sheds by the orchestra, chorus, opera class, and chamber group. At 9:15 Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct a concert including Beethoven's "Leonore" Overture No. 3. Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" with Wesley Addy as narrator, and an "Evolution of the Waltz" group with examples by Johann Strauss, Sibelius and Ravel. Other programs for the week are as follows:

Thursday Evening, August 5, at 8:15
Symphony No. 6, "Pastoral" ... Beethoven
"Oedipus Rex" .... Stravinsky
With male chorus and soloists—Carol Brice, contralto; David Lloyd, tenor; James Pease, bass; Wesley Addy, narrator.

Saturday Evening, August 7, at 8:15
"Romeo and Juliet," Suite No. 2, Prokofieff
Symphony No. 6 ...... Vaughan Williams
"Don Quixote" .... Strauss
Violoncello solo: Gregor Piatigorsky.

Sunday Afternoon, August 8, at 3:30
(Eleazar de Carvalho conducting).
Fantastic Symphony .... Berlioz
Madona .... Villa Lobos
El Amor Brujo, (Soloist: Carol Brice), Falla
"Nordestina," Suite No. 1 .... Siqueira

This Clipping From
TROY, N. Y.
OBSERVER & BUDGET
AUG 1 - 1948

Berkshire Music Festival

The first of two concerts from the Berkshire Music Festival will be heard over ABC and WOKO on Tuesday, Aug. 3 from 9:30 to 10:30 p. m., EDT when Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducts the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a Prokofieff-Sibelius - Strauss - Ravel program.

The broadcast will be part of a special concert entitled "Tanglewood on Parade" in which the activities of the summer music school, of which Dr. Koussevitsky is director, will be displayed.

Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" will open the broadcast. Wesley Addy, well-known Shakespearean actor will be the narrator for the composition.

Koussevitsky has also scheduled Sibelius' "Valse Triste" from the suite, "Kuolema"; Strauss' familiar "Voices of Spring" waltz and Ravel's choreographic poem, "La Valse" for the broadcast.

The concluding ABC broadcast from the festival will be an all-Tchaikovsky program on Aug. 10.

This Clipping From BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
HERALD
AUG 1 1948

European Musicians Get Connecticut Aid

Tanglewood's benefit for European musicians, Tuesday night, will have the support of a number of Connecticut patrons.

With Dr. Serge Koussevitzky who heads the Boston Symphony event at Lenox, Mass., are these on the national committee:

Mrs. William M. Walcott, Judge Charles Garside, Norfolk; Miss Edith Scoville, Mrs. Donald J. Warner, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph R. Swan, Robert C. Osborn, Mrs. Arnold Whitridge, Mrs. William Lescaze, Mrs. Philip Warner, and Mrs. Charles S. Wunder, Salisbury; Mrs. Henry Sloan Coffin, Mrs. Joseph Parsons, John McChesney, and Frank Briscoe, Lakeville; Mrs. Harold Hatch, Mrs. Edwin C. Jameson, Sharon; Moshe Paranov, Hartford; and Mrs. Marshall Best, Lime Rock.

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
AUG 1 - 1948

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is displaying autographed excerpts of music and prints on musical subjects by the French caricaturist, Daumier, at the Berkshire Museum, Pittsfield.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
INQUIRER

AUG 1 - 1948

BERKSHIRE MUSIC FESTIVAL

Print a history of the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, Mass. Can you also tell me when its music school opened?

J. J. C.

The initial Berkshire Festival was held in August, 1934, on a farm at Stockbridge, Mass., and consisted of three concerts given under the direction of Henry Hadley and an orchestra assembled from New York. Two years later, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra began their long association with the summer concerts. In 1937 the festivals were moved to Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

When Dr. Koussevitzky accepted the invitation to conduct he had in mind not only a series of concerts but a school to develop the talents of young composers, conductors and musicians. His plan was realized when the Berkshire Music Center opened in 1940 under his direction.

Owing to wartime conditions the Boston Symphony did not appear at Tanglewood in 1942 but the students gave a festival series. No Tanglewood concerts were given in 1943, but a Mozart series in 1944 and a Bach-Mozart series in 1945 prefaced the resumption of the full-scale festivals in 1946.

This Clipping From
SHREVEPORT, LA.
TIMES

AUG 1 - 1948

Boston Symphony Heard From Berkshire Festival

The first of two concerts from the Berkshire Music Festival will be heard over ABC-KRMD on Tuesday, at 8:30-9:30 p.m when Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducts the Boston Symphony orchestra in a Prokofieff-Sibelius-Strauss-Ravel program.

The broadcast will be part of a special concert entitled "Tanglewood on Parade," in which the activities of the summer music school, of which Dr. Koussevitzky is director, will be displayed. Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" will open the broadcast. Wesley Addy, well-known Shakespearean actor, will be the narrator for the composition.

Koussevitzky has also scheduled Sibelius' "Valse Triste" from the suite "Kuolema," Strauss' familiar "Voices of Spring" waltz and Ravel's choreographic poem "La Valse" for the broadcast.

The concluding ABC broadcast from the festival will be an all Tschaikovsky program on August 10.

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

AUG 1 - 1948

PISTON SYMPHONY TANGLEWOOD HIT

By RAYMOND MORIN

LENOX, Sunday—The Boston Symphony, led by Serge Koussevitzky and assisted by Isaac Stern as violin soloist, performed the second concert of "Series A" last night at Tanglewood for an audience of 10,300.

The program: "Symphony No. 3" by Walter Piston, Prokofieff's "Violin Concerto No. 1, Opus 19." and Brahms' "Symphony No. 1 in C Minor."

The work of special interest was, of course, the Piston symphony, and incidentally, the composer was on hand to acknowledge a rousing ovation upon its conclusion.

Musical Fun

The Symphony, the composer's latest (it was completed last year) is a considerable advance over his earlier neo-classic style. So far as I am concerned, it appeals more to the senses than any other work of his that I have heard this year. Its second movement, an allegro, is musical fun, although perhaps it is a sort of sardonic humor, it has a stimulatingly syncopated beat employing the percussion and timpani to the fullest, even to xylophone reinforced by sharp staccato beats in brass.

Most of its heavy climaxes are arrived at with adjoining lines grating against each other. The first and final movements contain almost savage rhythms interspersed with clever counterpoint not unlike the Shostakovitch style. If, indeed there is an outstanding weakness in the work, it lies in the slow movement, "Adagio," which drags both in the opening and closing sequences.

Carefully Planned

The program notes which Mr. Piston provided indicate a carefully conceived and executed plan. If we may revert to a comparison, the Prokofieff work which followed seemed remarkably unencumbered with structural artifice.

By comparison with other of Mr. Piston's works, the new symphony impresses less as a skillfully constructed work than for its inspirational value, except for its rapid second movement, it hasn't the imaginativeness of, let us say, his "Incredible Flutist," but it rarely lacks drive to climactic and emotional destinations.

Throughout the work, Mr. Piston makes generous use of atonal and other modern harmonic devices, but at no time does one feel that he is obsessed with them.

Isaac Stern

Isaac Stern paraded his violinistic devices before a Civic Music audience a few seasons ago, and they were mightily impressive. The Prokofieff concerto, an early work, allows minimum opportunity for show-case display, unless it be the Scherzo movement, which bristles with technical challenges, therefore, Mr. Stern was called upon to demonstrate musicianship rather than technical showmanship, and he responded admirably.

Mr. Stern played with complete technical assurance, and most of the time with eclat. Most important, he gave a true feeling of the Prokofieff style, rigidly maintaining tempos in spite of hazardous rhythms, and never deviating from pitch, in spite of typically elusive Prokofieff melody. Dr. Koussevitzky directed an accompaniment that was not only conscientious, but inspiring.

Bralim's Symphony

It was not our good fortune to hear the Brahms symphony but what strains we did hear in the press room from the shed while preparing this review for an early deadline, gave indication of Koussevitzky's customarily gripping conception of this great work, which we personally the greatest of Brahms' four symphonies.

This afternoon's program, completing Series A, will be conducted by Leonard Bernstein. The program: Haydn's "Symphony in D Major, No. 104," and Mahler's "Second Symphony, for Orchestra, Soprano and Alto Solos, and Mixed Chorus". The soloists will be Ellabelle Davis and Nan Merriman.

This Clipping From SAN DIEGO, CAL.
UNION

* * *

AT BERKSHIRE CENTER

Bill Kraft, a San Diego musician whose chief interest is composition, is studying this summer at the Berkshire Music Center directed by Koussevitsky. Kraft is auditing a course in conducting and playing tympani in the opera orchestra. He plans to continue his studies in the fall at the Juilliard School of Music in New York.

Frank Smith, a San Diego flutist and composer, has been studying in Paris during the past year, composition with Nadia Boulanger, and flute with M. Moyse.

* * *

Marcel Dupre, the great French organist, has been holding master classes this summer at the University of Chicago. During residence there he has given a memorable series of organ recitals. Dupre has written his friend and pupil, Charles H. Marsh, that he and Mme. Dupre plan to spend a two-week holiday in La Jolla at Christmas. During his stay here, Dupre will give recitals in La Jolla and San Diego.

This Clipping From
TROY, N. Y.
OBSERVER & BUDGET

AUG 1 - 1948

To Pay Composer Tribute

A tribute will be paid to Darius Milhaud, guest composer, at the Berkshire Music Center this summer, at a festival program on Aug. 1. The Boston Symphony Orchestra will play Milhaud's Symphony No. 2, with the composer conducting. The remainder of the program will consist of Mahler's Symphony No. 2, with the festival chorus of 250 voices, Ellabelle Davis and Nan Merriman as soloists, and Leonard Bernstein conducting.

Aug 1

Milhaud Conducts Own Symphony at Tanglewood

TANGLEWOOD, Aug. 1—What undoubtedly will prove to have been one of the great occasions of the current Berkshire Music Festival was tumultuously applauded here this afternoon by an audience of 9600. This was the final concert of the first series, and it brought Composer Darius Milhaud as conductor of his own Second Symphony and the tremendous Second, or "Resurrection" Symphony by Gustav Mahler, conducted by Leonard Bernstein.

The soloists for Mahler's work were Nan Merriman, contralto, and Ellabelle Davis, Negro soprano. The chorus, trained by Hugh Ross, was drawn from the students of the Berkshire Music Center.

The "Resurrection" Symphony, in case anyone needs to be reminded, is one of the bigger masterpieces of the 19th century—bigger both in scope and the number of musicians required, and in the vast extent of Mahler's conception. This is music of astounding skill as well, in which a supreme master of the art and science of orchestral writing sought to encompass no less than life, death and the rising of spirits thereafter. This is also music of such depth, power and overwhelming emotional tension that it leaves you in something of a daze.

Mahler had what might be called a [illegible] temperament. He was not one to condense his thought, and consequently his scores require both time and receptive attention. The "Resurrection" takes more than an hour and 15 minutes, yet, except for a few early departures, the huge gathering in and outside the music shed listened quietly—although some did burst out with ill-timed applause between some of the movements.

Mr. Bernstein's performance of this work in Boston last Winter was the outstanding event of the season. If it does not turn out to have been the peak of the Berkshire festival, it will not have been due to any fault of his. Yesterday he repeated his impassioned and musicianly reading. There were some discrepancies, however, that made this performance a little less impressive than the one in Boston.

The chorus, though larger here, did not produce so much resonance as you were entitled to expect, though they did sing the soft entrance and elsewhere—with round beauty of tone and thorough precision. Of the soloists, Miss Davis excelled in a beautifully voiced and styled performance of the soprano part. Miss Merriman, making her festival debut, sang conscientiously, but her voice had something of a tremolo, the tex twas sometimes pe- [illegible] pronounced and there was less feeling than there out to have been.

However much one might have looked forward to hearing Haydn's Symphony in D Major, No. 104, the privileges of re-hearing the Second Symphony by Milhaud was an even greater pleasure. The symphony made a fine impression in Boston last Winter as music of skilled facture, considerable expressive strength. Mr. Milhaud, perhaps like many another excellent composer, is perhaps not the finest interpreter of his music—just as Brahms was not the best for his nor Tchaikovsky for his. Sometimes the practised—and practical—hand of the professional conductor brings out the most in a score.

Nevertheless, there was much to admire in Mr. Milhaud's own directing, which was forthright and capable. The state of Mr. Milhaud's health requires this large man to walk on crutches. Accordingly, once he had made his way to the stand, he conducted sitting down.

There was another event in the evening at the theatre-concert hall, which this reviewer's schedule unfortunately did not permit him to remain to hear. This was the first performance anywhere of the third act of Alexandre Gretchaninoff's new— and reportedly still unfinished—opera, "The Marriage." It is based upon a story of Gogul. The excerpt was presented by students of the Berkshire Music Center opera department, whose director is Boris Goldovsky. The composer was present.

AMUSEMENTS

This Clipping From LINCOLN, NEB.
STATE JOURNAL

European Benefit at Tanglewood Festival

The state department has endorsed the European musicians' benefit to be staged Aug. 3 at the Tanglewood music festival, Lenox, Mass., as "further evidence of the sincere interest on the part of the American people in the welfare and progress of European intellectual life." Archibald MacLeish as chairman of "Tanglewood on Parade" will introduce Cornelia Otis Skinner, Aaron Copland and other distinguished participants, and Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct his Boston Symphony orchestra in a concert beginning at 9:15 p. m. Miss Skinner will read two Elizabethan sonnets. Festivities begin at 6 o'clock with parade of the 462 students by departments — orchestra, opera, chorus and chamber music. From 7 to 8 picnic supper will be enjoyed on the green lawns of Hawthorne's home. Patrons buying reserved seats or box seats will be invited to witness a performance at 4 o'clock in the gardens of Gian-Carlo Menotti's opera, "The Telephone," and scenes from other operas.

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD-TIMES

AUG 1 - 1948

Violinist Makes Festival Debut

Appears at Tanglewood With Boston Symphony

LENOX, July 31 (AP)—Isaac Stern, 27-year-old Russian-born violinist, made his Tanglewood debut tonight with the Boston Symphony Orchestra before a record-breaking crowd of 10,300 in the second concert of the first series of the Berkshire Festival.

Six thousand persons filled the music shed and the others covered the spacious lawns of Tanglewood.

Stern played Prokofieff's "Violin Concerto No. 1." He was recalled to the platform several times.

The orchestra, conducted by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, played Walter Piston's Pulitzer Prize-winning "Symphony No. 3."

At its conclusion, Piston was escorted to the podium by Dr. Koussevitzky to share in the applause.

Piston, a native of Rockland, Me., composed this modern symphony in 1947 by commission of the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and dedicated it to the memory of Koussevitzky's first wife, Natalie, who died last year.

The symphony was originally presented in Boston Jan. 9.

Tomorrow afternoon Leonard Bernstein, 29-year-old native of Lawrence, will appear as the first guest conductor of the 11th festival season. Also featured will be the festival chorus with Ellabelle Davis, soprano, and Nan Merriman, contralto.

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES-UNION

Public May View Berkshire Gardens

Eleven gardens in Pittsfield and Dalton, Mass., will be opened to the public in August, during the Boston Symphony concerts at Tanglewood, for the benefit of the restoration of the Concert hall at South mountain, Pittsfield, scene of the first Berkshire festivals given by Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, internationally famous patroness of music.

This restoration project, announced by Mrs. Frederick G. Crane, president of the Berkshire Garden Club, is being sponsored by the garden club in preparation for the resumption of concerts at South mountain in 1949. Mrs. G. Boardman Tyler is chairman of the benefit committee.

Gardens of six Pittsfield residents and the grounds at South Mountain will be open August 6, from 3 to 6. Guests may visit the walled garden with pool at the 16 Colt road home of Samuel G. Colt, the president of the South Mountain association; the sunken flower garden at Mrs. William A. Whittlesey's home, 1 Crofut street; Mrs. Harold Grinnell's garden with Housatonic river vista at 100 Crofut street; Mrs. Sheridan R. Cate's small intimate garden at 49 Kenilworth street; Mrs. Robert W. McCracken's terraced city garden at 127 Wendell avenue and the historic Oliver Wendell Holmes house and garden of Mrs. Donald Weston at her residence at 497 Holmes road. The South Mountain Concert hall is located on Route 7 between Pittsfield and Lenox. Tea will be served in the gardens of Mr. Colt, Mrs. Whittlesey and Mrs. Weston.

On Friday afternoon, August 13, four gardens in Dalton, the historic Crane museum, and Mrs. Arthur Budd's terraced hillside garden at Windsor will be open from 3 to 6. These Dalton: Mrs. Bruce Crane's formal flower garden; Mrs. F. G. Crane's English hedged garden, Mrs. Winthrop M. Crane's formal flower garden, and Mrs. Charles Kittredge's small intimate garden. Tea will be served in Mrs. F. G. Crane's garden.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
INQUIRER

AUG 1 - 1948

BERKSHIRE MUSIC FESTIVAL

Print a history of the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, Mass. Can you also tell me when its music school opened?

J. J. C.

The initial Berkshire Festival was held in August, 1934, on a farm at Stockbridge, Mass., and consisted of three concerts given under the direction of Henry Hadley and an orchestra assembled from New York. Two years later, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra began their long association with the summer concerts. In 937 the festivals were moved to anglewood, Lenox, Mass.

When Dr. Koussevitzky accepted he invitation to conduct he had in ind not only a series of concerts ut a school to develop the talents f young composers, conductors and iusicians. His plan was realized hen the Berkshire Music Center pened in 1940 under his direction.

Owing to wartime conditions the oston Symphony did not appear at anglewood in 1942 but the students ave a festival series. No Tanglewood concerts were given in 1943, ut a Mozart series in 1944 and a ach-Mozart series in 1945 prefaced he resumption of the full-scale festivals in 1946.

This Clipping From
SHREVEPORT, LA.
TIMES

AUG 1 - 1948

Boston Symphony Heard From Berkshire Festival

The first of two concerts from the Berkshire Music Festival will be heard over ABC-KRMD on Tuesday, at 8:30-9:30 p.m. when Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducts the Boston Symphony orchestra in a Prokofieff-Sibelius-Strauss-Ravel program.

The broadcast will be part of a special concert entitled "Tanglewood on Parade," in which the activities of the summer music school, of which Dr. Koussevitzky is director, will be displayed. Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" will open the broadcast. Wesley Addy, well-known Shakespearean actor, will be the narrator for the composition.

Koussevitzky has also scheduled Sibelius' "Valse Triste" from the suite "Kuolema," Strauss' familiar "Voices of Spring" waltz and Ravel's choreographic poem "La Valse" for the broadcast.

The concluding ABC broadcast from the festival will be an all Tschaikovsky program on August 10.

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

AUG 1 - 1948

PISTON SYMPHONY TANGLEWOOD HIT

By RAYMOND MORIN

LENOX, Sunday—The Boston Symphony, led by Serge Koussevitzky and assisted by Isaac Stern as violin soloist, performed the second concert of "Series A" last night at Tanglewood for an audience of 10,300.

The program: "Symphony No. 3" by Walter Piston, Prokofieff's "Violin Concerto No. 1, Opus 19." and Brahms' "Symphony No. 1 in C Minor."

The work of special interest was, of course, the Piston symphony, and incidentally, the composer was on hand to acknowledge a rousing ovation upon its conclusion.

Musical Fun

The Symphony, the composer's latest (it was completed last year) is a considerable advance over his earlier neo-classic style. So far as I am concerned, it appeals more to the senses than any other work of his that I have heard this year. Its second movement, an allegro, is musical fun, although perhaps it is a sort of sardonic humor, it has a stimulatingly syncopated beat employing the percussion and timpani to the fullest, even to xylophone reinforced by sharp staccato beats in brass.

Most of its heavy climaxes are arrived at with adjoining lines grating against each other. The first and final movements contain almost savage rhythms interspersed with clever counterpoint not unlike the Shostakovitch style. If, indeed there is an outstanding weakness in the work, it lies in the slow movement, "Adagio," which drags both in the opening and closing sequences.

Carefully Planned

The program notes which Mr. Piston provided indicate a carefully conceived and executed plan. If we may revert to a comparison, the Prokofieff work which followed seemed remarkably unencumbered with structural artifice.

By comparison with other of Mr. Piston's works, the new symphony impresses less as a skillfully constructed work than for its inspirational value, except for its rapid second movement, it hasn't the imaginativeness of, let us say, his "Incredible Flutist," but it rarely lacks drive to climactic and emotional destinations.

Throughout the work, Mr. Piston makes generous use of atonal and other modern harmonic devices, but at no time does one feel that he is obsessed with them.

Isaac Stern

Isaac Stern paraded his violinistic devices before a Civic Music audience a few seasons ago, and they were mightily impressive. The Prokofieff concerto, an early work, allows minimum opportunity for show-case display, unless it be the Scherzo movement, which bristles with technical challenges, therefore, Mr. Stern was called upon to demonstrate musicianship rather than technical showmanship, and he responded admirably.

Mr. Stern played with complete technical assurance, and most of the time with eclat. Most important, he gave a true feeling of the Prokofieff style, rigidly maintaining tempos in spite of hazardous rhythms, and never deviating from pitch, in spite of typically elusive Prokofieff melody. Dr. Koussevitzky directed an accompaniment that was not only conscientious, but inspiring.

Brahm's Symphony

It was not our good fortune to hear the Brahms symphony but what strains we did hear in the press room from the shed while preparing this review for an early deadline, gave indication of Koussevitzky's customarily gripping conception of this great work, which we personally the greatest of Brahms' four symphonies.

This afternoon's program, completing Series A, will be conducted by Leonard Bernstein. The program: Haydn's "Symphony in D Major, No. 104," and Mahler's "Second Symphony, for Orchestra, Soprano and Alto Solos, and Mixed Chorus". The soloists will be Ellabelle Davis and Nan Merriman.

This Clipping From SAN DIEGO, CAL.
UNION

AUG 1 - 1948

* * *

AT BERKSHIRE CENTER

Bill Kraft, a San Diego musician whose chief interest is composition, is studying this summer at the Berkshire Music Center directed by Koussevitzky. Kraft is auditing a course in conducting and playing tympani in the opera orchestra. He plans to continue his studies in the fall at the Juilliard School of Music in New York.

Frank Smith, a San Diego flutist and composer, has been studying in Paris during the past year, composition with Nadia Boulanger, and flute with M. Moyse.

* * *

Marcel Dupre, the great French organist, has been holding master classes this summer at the University of Chicago. During residence there he has given a memorable series of organ recitals. Dupre has written his friend and pupil, Charles H. Marsh, that he and Mme. Dupre plan to spend a two-week holiday in La Jolla at Christmas. During his stay here, Dupre will give recitals in La Jolla and San Diego.

This Clipping From
TROY, N. Y.
OBSERVER & BUDGET

AUG 1 - 1948

To Pay Composer Tribute

A tribute will be paid to Darius Milhaud, guest composer, at the Berkshire Music Center this summer, at a festival program on Aug. 1. The Boston Symphony Orchestra will play Milhaud's Symphony No. 2, with the composer conducting. The remainder of the program will consist of Mahler's Symphony No. 2, with the festival chorus of 250 voices, Ellabelle Davis and Nan Merriman as soloists, and Leonard Bernstein conducting.

Boree Aug 1

Milhaud Conducts Own Symphony at Tanglewood

TANGLEWOOD, Aug. 1—What undoubtedly will prove to have been one of the great occasions of the current Berkshire Music Festival was tumultuously applauded here this afternoon by an audience of 9600. This was the final concert of the first series, and it brought Composer Darius Milhaud as conductor of his own Second Symphony, and the tremendous Second, or "Resurrection," Symphony by Gustav Mahler, conducted by Leonard Bernstein.

The soloists for Mahler's work were Nan Merriman, contralto, and Ellabelle Davis, Negro soprano. The chorus, trained by Hugh Ross, was drawn from the students of the Berkshire Music Center.

The "Resurrection" Symphony, in case anyone needs to be reminded, is one of the bigger masterpieces of the 19th century—bigger both in scope and the number of musicians required, and in the vast extent of Mahler's conception. This is music of astounding skill as well, in which a supreme master of the art and science of orchestral writing sought to encompass no less than life, death and the rising of spirits thereafter. This is also music of such depth, power and overwhelming emotional tension that it leaves you in something of a daze.

Mahler had what might be called a lengthy temperament. He was not one to condense his thought, and consequently his scores require both time and receptive attention. The "Resurrection" takes more than an hour and 15 minutes, yet, except for a few early departures, the huge gathering in and outside the music shed listened quietly—although some did burst out with ill-timed applause between some of the movements.

Mr. Bernstein's performance of this work in Boston last Winter was the outstanding event of the season. If it does not turn out to have been the peak of the Berkshire festival, it will not have been due to any fault of his. Yesterday he repeated his impassioned and musicianly reading. There were some discrepancies, however, that made this performance a little less impressive than the one in Boston.

The chorus, though larger here, did not produce so much resonance as you were entitled to expect, though they did sing the soft entrance—and elsewhere—with round beauty of tone and thorough precision. Of the soloists, Miss Davis excelled in a beautifully voiced and styled performance of the soprano part. Miss Merriman, making her festival debut, sang conscientiously, but her voice had something of a tremolo, the tex twas sometimes peculiarly pronounced and there was lass feeling than there out to have been.

However much one might have looked forward to hearing Haydn's Symphony in D Major, No. 104, the privileges of re-hearing the Second Symphony by Milhaud was an even greater pleasure. The symphony hade a fine impression in Boston last Winter as music of skilled facture, considerable expressive strength. Mr. Milhaud, perhaps like many another excellent composer, is perhaps not the finest interpreter of his music—just as Brahms was not the best for his nor Tchaikovsky for his. Sometimes the practised—and practical—hand of the professional conductor brings out the most in a score.

Nevertheless, there was much to admire in Mr. Milhaud's own directing, which was forthright and capable. The state of Mr. Milhaud's health requires this large man to walk on crutches. Accordingly, once he had made his way to the stand, he conducted sitting down.

There was another event in the evening at the theatre-concert hall, which this reviewer's schedule unfortunately did not permit him to remain to hear. This was the first performance anywhere of the third act of Alexandre Gretchaninoff's new— and reportedly still unfinished—opera, "The Marriage." It is based upon a story of Gogul. The excerpt was presented by students of the Berkshire Music Center opera department, whose director is Boris Goldovsky. The composer was present.

AMUSEMENTS

This Clipping From LINCOLN, NEB.
STATE JOURNAL

European Benefit at Tanglewood Festival

The state department has endorsed the European musicians' benefit to be staged Aug. 3 at the Tanglewood music festival, Lenox, Mass., as "further evidence of the sincere interest on the part of the American people in the welfare and progress of European intellectual life." Archibald MacLeish as chairman of "Tanglewood on Parade" will introduce Cornelia Otis Skinner, Aaron Copland and other distinguished participants, and Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct his Boston Symphony orchestra in a concert beginning at 9:15 p. m. Miss Skinner will read two Elizabethan sonnets. Festivities begin at 6 o'clock wi parade of the 462 students by departments — orchestra, o chorus and chamber music. From 7 to 8 picnic supper will be enjoyed on the green lawns of Hawthorne's home. Patrons buying reserved seats or box seats will be invited to witness a performance at 4 o'clock in the gardens of Gian-Carlo Menotti's opera, "The Telephone," and scenes from other operas.

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD-TIMES

AUG 1 - 1948

Violinist Makes Festival Debut

Appears at Tanglewood With Boston Symphony

LENOX, July 31 (AP)—Isaac Stern, 27-year-old Russian-born violinist, made his Tanglewood debut tonight with the Boston Symphony Orchestra before a record-breaking crowd of 10,300 in the second concert of the first series of the Berkshire Festival.

Six thousand persons filled the music shed and the others covered the spacious lawns of Tanglewood.

Stern played Prokofieff's "Violin Concerto No. 1." He was recalled to the platform several times.

The orchestra, conducted by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, played Walter Piston's Pulitzer Prize-winning "Symphony No. 3."

At its conclusion, Piston was escorted to the podium by Dr. Koussevitzky to share in the applause.

Piston, a native of Rockland, Me., composed this modern symphony in 1947 by commission of the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and dedicated it to the memory of Koussevitzky's first wife, Natalie, who died last year.

The symphony was originally presented in Boston Jan. 9.

Tomorrow afternoon Leonard Bernstein, 29-year-old native of Lawrence, will appear as the first guest conductor of the 11th festival season. Also featured will be the festival chorus with Ellabelle Davis, soprano, and Nan Merriman, contralto.

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES-UNION

AUG 1 1948

Public May View Berkshire Gardens

Eleven gardens in Pittsfield and Dalton, Mass., will be opened to the public in August, during the Boston Symphony concerts at Tanglewood, for the benefit of the restoration of the Concert hall at South mountain, Pittsfield, scene of the first Berkshire festivals given by Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, internationally famous patroness of music.

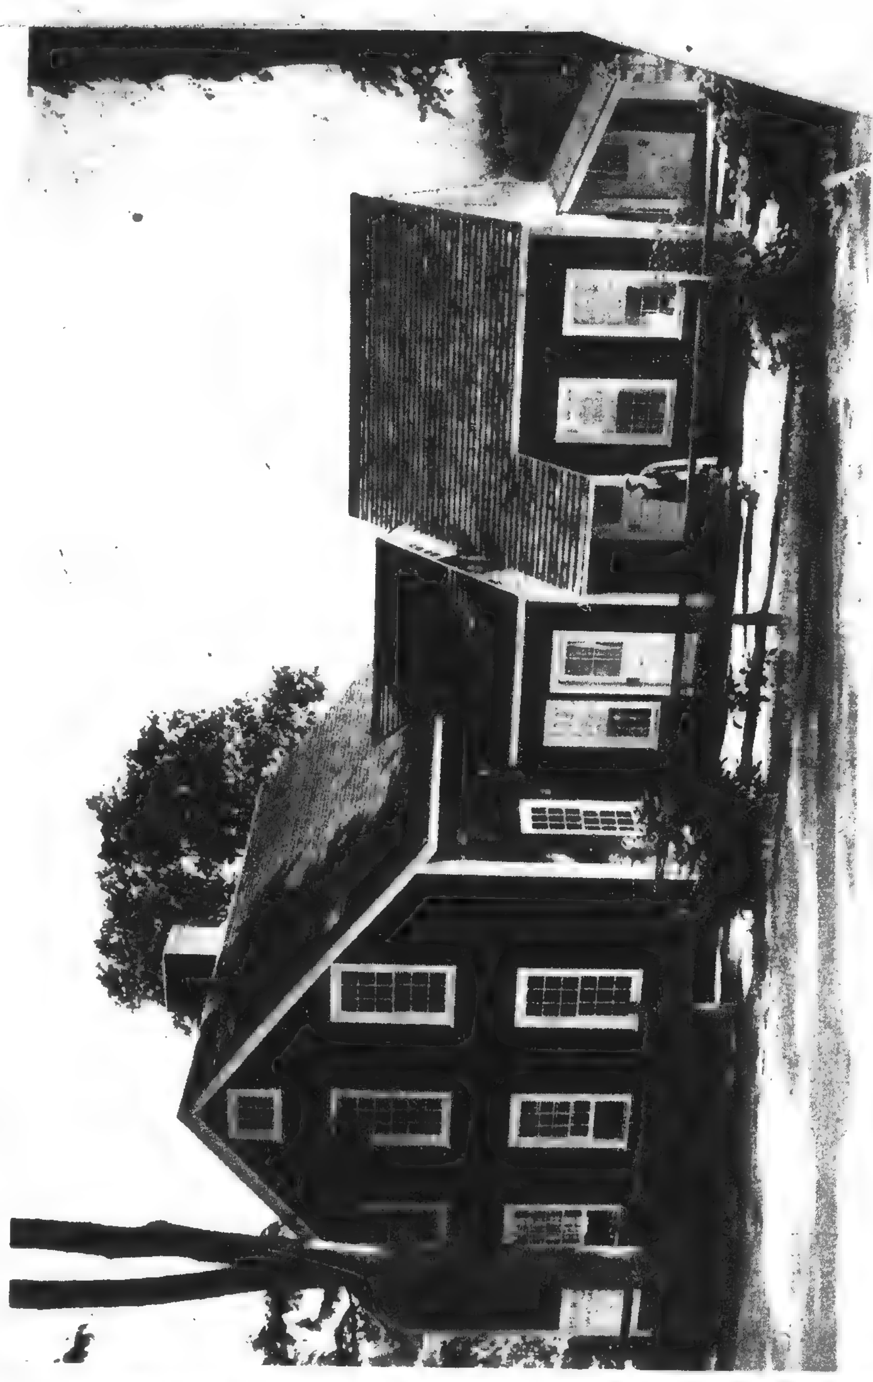
This restoration project, announced by Mrs. Frederick G. Crane, president of the Berkshire Garden Club, is being sponsored by the garden club in preparation for the resumption of concerts at South mountain in 1949. Mrs. G. Boardman Tyler is chairman of the benefit committee.

Gardens of six Pittsfield residents and the grounds at South Mountain will be open August 6, from 3 to 6. Guests may visit the walled garden with pool at the 16 Colt road home of Samuel G. Colt, the president of the South Mountain association; the sunken flower garden at Mrs. William A. Whittlesey's home, 1 Crofut street; Mrs. Harold Grinnell's garden with Housatonic river vista at 100 Crofut street; Mrs. Sheridan R. Cate's small intimate garden at 49 Kenilworth street; Mrs. Robert W. McCracken's terraced city garden at 127 Wendell avenue and the historic Oliver Wendell Holmes house and garden of Mrs. Donald Weston at her residence at 497 Holmes road. The South Mountain Concert hall is located on Route 7 between Pittsfield and Lenox. Tea will be served in the gardens of Mr. Colt, Mrs. Whittlesey and Mrs. Weston.

On Friday afternoon, August 13, four gardens in Dalton, the historic Crane museum, and Mrs. Arthur Budd's terraced hillside garden at Windsor will be open from 3 to 6. These Dal- Mrs. Bruce Crane's formal flower garden; Mrs. F. G. Crane's English hedged garden, Mrs. Winthrop M. Crane's formal flower garden, and Mrs. Charles Kittredge's small intimate garden. Tea will be served in Mrs. F. G. Crane's garden.

THE SPRINGFIELD SUNDAY REPUBLICAN • SPRINGFIELD, MASS. • AUGUST 1, 1948

With an elaborate two-day program including a concert by Serge Koussevitzky and the student orchestra at the Berkshire Music Center, the National Federation of Music Clubs dedicated the restored Hawthorne Cottage at Tanglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox, last week. Of local interest was the fact that Springfield's own Adele Addison (soprano soloist at Old First Church, Court Square), was the soloist selected for the dedicatory concert given by the Student orchestra. The first regular concert of the season was presented last Thursday evening with Dr. Koussevitzky conducting the full Boston Symphony Orchestra.



FULLY RESTORED

Part of the prelude to the opening of the regular season was the dedic of the restored home of the famous novelist Nathaniel Hawthorne. He in this house in 1850 and 1851. Dr. Koussevitsky is pictured in front of refurbished home prior to the colorful ceremonies.

OPENING ITS 8th SEASON

FROM THE AIR

Nestled in the beautiful Berkshire Hills, the Berkshire Music Center attracts thousands to the annual concerts and classes of instruction. This scene gives a graphic example of the hundreds of cars in the parking area and the overflow crowd in and about the music shed

• ROTO SECTION

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
AUG 1 - 1948

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

TANGLEWOOD
Lenox, Mass.

Boston Symphony Orchestra
Conductor, Koussevitzky

Today, 3:30 ~~P. M., Conductors,~~ Leonard Bernstein and Darius Milhaud; Ellabelle Davis, soprano; Nan Merriman, mezzo-soprano.

Milhaud's Symphony No. 2; Mahler's Symphony No. 2, Resurrection.

Tuesday, 4 P. M., Tanglewood on Parade (benefit for creative musicians of Europe).

Events will include a performance of Menotti's The Telephone and scenes from other operas; orchestral, choral, operatic and chamber music performances by the Berkshire Music Center; an appearance by Elizabeth Otis Skinner, who will read two Elizabethan sonnets; a picnic supper; a concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Dr. Koussevitzky: Waltzes by Lanner, Johann Strauss, Sibelius and Ravel; Prokofieff's Peter and the Wolf; Beethoven's Leonore Overture, No. 3.

Thursday, 8:15 P. M. Soloists: Carol Brice, contralto; David Lloyd, tenor; James Pease, bass; Wesley Addy, narrator.

Beethoven's Symphony No. 6; Stravinsky's Oedipus Rex.

Saturday, 8:15 P. M. Soloist: Gregor Piatigorsky, 'cello.

Prokofieff's Romeo and Juliet, Suite No. 2; Vaughan Williams' Symphony No. 6 (first time); Strauss' Don Quixote.

Next Sunday, Aug. 8, 3:30 P. M. Conductor, Eleazar de Carvalho; Carol Brice, contralto.

Berlioz: Fantastic Symphony; Villa-Lobos' Madona; de Falla's El Amor Brujo; Sequiera's Nordestina Suite, No. 1.

MONTICELLO, N. Y
NEWS
8/1/48

Concert Music

NEW YORK — Charles Muench is a Frenchman largely unknown to America music lovers outside the main centers, although destined to have a big part in our music-making.

He makes his American recording debut by conducting the New York Philharmonic-Symphony in Saint-Saens' "Organ Symphony," No. 3 in C minor (Columbia; four 12-in.).

When you've heard the records you understand why the Boston Symphony chose him to succeed its venerable conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. They make it clear there will be no pronounced conductorial changes down Boston way, It would be premature to say he is a younger Koussevitzky, of course. Yet the similarity in approach and style is striking. Anyone habituated to Koussevitzky methods is warmly swathed in the familiar.

Mozart-like Schubert

There is decided individuality in his conducting, however. A pleasing quality is of bounding energy under a very tight rein—that and a sensitive intelligence in pace and accent. He gives the amiable organ symphony a cheery illumination. The organ part is played by E. Nies-Berger.

Speaking of Koussevitzky and the Boston—they are represented in the new recordings by Franz Schubert's boyish and naively Mozart-like fifth symphony (RCA Victor; three 12-in.). If you didn't know better, you might mistake it for Mozart in the latter's phase when he is most like Haydn. The reading is entirely pleasing but the recording is not. It is scratchy and in places, muffled.

A third newly recorded symphony is Sibelius' oft-played and most popular second, performed by the Philadelphia Orchestra under Eugene Ormandy (Columbia; five 12-in.). It is a nice job, commendable for the depth and poignancy of feeling that has been fully realized from a score packjammed with it.

[221]

This Clipping From
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD-AMERICAN
AUG 1 1948

MUSIC

'Tanglewood' and Magic of Its Music, Enchantment of Sights, Sounds, Outdoors

By E. V. W.

It is likely that mid-August guest soloists at the four Syracuse Centennial Concerts in Thornden Park Amphitheater (in conjunction with the Syracuse Centorama) will be Mary Becker, violinist; Priscilla Gillette, soprano; Richmond Gale, and Barbara Micale, pianists. As it appears in advance: Becker and Gale with Prof. Andre Polah and an orchestra of 75; Gillette and Micale with Murray Bernthal and his "Pops" orchestra.

THE THRILL, the purpose and the significance of what "Tanglewood" music means to music lovers cannot be estimated in a single listening season in that enchanting spot, set in the Berkshire Hills near Lenox, Mass. With thousands of others, your reporter each summer finds inspiration and redirection in musical values in that impressively built center of culture and achievement.

ALL IN ALL, the Berkshire Festival and its many-faceted interests, is dedicated with what seems to be a burning faith and complete devotion to a great cause. It is a compelling musical journey, complete in itself each succeeding season, with memories of travels of the past, and a glimpse into the mysterious, wished-for future. It opens the gates as only good music, great music, can, with manifold orchestral tints and a vast wealth of vocal literature. Over all the music mind and heart of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, who sees a dream come true, in fine fruition, and who next year will, turn over direction of his orchestra—the Boston Symphony—to Dr. Charles Muench.

FESTIVAL PROGRAMS in the Shed in Tanglewood opened Thursday night with the Bach Suite No. 3, and the Beethoven "Fifth" under the Koussevitzky baton. Last night, Isaac Stern, violinist. Included in the orchestra program were Walter Piston's Symphony No. 3; and the Brahms "First." Stern played the Prokofieff Concerto No. 1. This afternoon at 3:30 o'clock, Darius Milhaud, French composer, and Leonard Bernstein will conduct. Milhaud's Symphony No. 2 will be led by the composer. Mahler's Symphony No. 2 "Resurrection," with Chorus, will be presented and Ellabelle Davis, soprano and Nan Meriman, contralto as soloists under Bernstein's leadership.

ARCHIBALD MAC LEISH will serve as chairman of "Tanglewood on Parade," the benefit which the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center will stage Tuesday for the creative musicians of Europe. The distinguished American poet will introduce Cornelia Otis Skinner, Aaron Copland and other important figures in letters and the arts to be announced. Dr. Koussevitzky will speak as well as conduct the full orchestra in a concert in the Music Shed between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass. Maurice Evans had accepted to appear in a Shakespearean excerpt, but has sent word he will be unable to attend.

IN THE GALA SPIRIT of the occasion, Dr. Koussevitzky has programmed a group showing the development of the waltz for the grand concert at 9:15 P.M. The lively finale will include "Voices of Spring" by Strauss, "Valse Triste" by Sibelius, and "La Valse" of Ravel. Other numbers will be Beethoven's "Leonore" over No. 3 and Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" with Wesley Addy as narrator. Festivities will begin at 6 P.M. with a parade of the 462 students of the Berkshire Music Center. They will proceed to their various departments for demonstrations of all activities of the school—orchestra, opera, chorus, and chamber music. The hour from 7 to 8 will be given over to picnic supper on the grounds.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
AUG 1 1948

Benefit Event Tuesday Night In Berkshires

Festival Continues; New Vaughan Williams Work Next Saturday Evening

The Boston Symphony Orchestra continues its Berkshire Festival series this week in the Music Shed at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., and also takes part with the Berkshire Music Center in a large-scale benefit on Tuesday night in aid of musicians in Europe. The week's regular festival programs are:

Today, 3:30: Milhaud, Symphony No. 2, Darius Milhaud conducting; Mahler, Symphony No. 2, Leonard Bernstein conducting, with Ellabelle Davis, soprano; Nan Merriman, contralto, and chorus. (Last concert of Series A.)

Thursday, 8:15 (Series B): Conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. Beethoven, Symphony No. 6 (Pastoral); Stravinsky, Oedipus Rex, with Carol Brice, mezzo-soprano; David Lloyd, tenor; James Pease, barytone; Wesley Addy, speaker, and men's chorus.

Saturday, 8:15 (Series B): Conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. Prokofieff, "Romeo and Juliet" Suite No. 2; Vaughan Williams, Symphony No. 6 (first performance in America); Strauss, Don Quixote (cello solo, Gregor Piatigorsky).

Sunday, Aug. 8, 3:30 (Series B). Conductor, Eleazar de Carvalho. Berlioz, Fantastic symphony; Villa-Lobos, Madona; Falla, El Amor Brujo (mezzo-soprano solo, Carol Brice); Siqueira, Nordestina Suite No. 1.

The Boston Symphony will hold a public rehearsal next Saturday morning at 10 o'clock for the benefit of its pension fund.

Archibald MacLeish will be the chairman for Tuesday's benefit, which occupies the late afternoon and the entire evening. The program announced is:

4 p. m., Menotti's "The Telephone" and scenes from other operas (open to holders of reserved and box seats only).

6 p. m. to 7 p. m., "Tanglewood on Parade," parade of the Berkshire Music Center's students and demonstrations of the various departments' activities.

8 p. m., "The Manifestation," readings of Drayton's "The Parting" and Shakespeare's twenty-ninth sonnet by Cornelia Otis Skinner; speeches by Mr. MacLeish, Aaron Copland and others.

9:15 p. m., Boston Symphony, Dr. Koussevitzky conducting. Beethoven, Overture to "Leonore," No. 3; J. Strauss, waltz, Voices of Spring; Sibelius, Valse Triste, Prokofieff, Peter and the Wolf (narrator, Mr. Addy); Ravel, La Valse.

Ticket prices are $2.50 for general admission, $4 for reserved seats and $5 for box seats. Other events scheduled by the Berkshire Music Center for this week are:

Today, 10 a. m., E. Power Biggs, organist, in Bach program; 11 a. m., Department II chamber music; 8:15 p. m., Department IV, opera scenes. Monday, 4:30 p. m., Department IV chamber orchestra. Wednesday, 4:30 p. m., Department II song recital; 8:15 p. m., Bach's St. John Passion, Robert Shaw conducting. Friday, 4:30 p. m., Department IV, opera scenes; 8:15 p. m., Department II orchestra. Sunday, Aug. 8, 10 a. m., E. Power Biggs, organist, and instrumental ensemble, music by Piston, Mozart and Poulenc; 11 a. m., Department II chamber music.

Rossini's little-known opera, "The Turk in Italy" will be produced for the first time in this country at Tanglewood on Monday and Wednesday nights, Aug. 9 and 11, under Boris Goldovsky's direction.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN
AUG 1 1948

Benefit to Aid Needy Musicians

To help needy musicians in Europe, the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center will stage a four-hour benefit, including a concert by the orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky and appearances by Maurice Evans and Cornelia Otis Skinner on Tuesday evening at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

Designated "Tanglewood on Parade," it will include simultaneous performances in their various buildings by all departments of the Berkshire Music Center — orchestral, choral, operatic and chamber music.

Miss Skinner and Evans each will appear in Shakespearean excerpts.

This Clipping From
ROCHESTER, N. Y.
DEMOCRAT-CHRONICLE
AUG 1 1948

Conductor, Composer at Tanglewood

Frederick Fennell, right, who conducted the Department V orchestra at Tanglewood in a concert Friday afternoon, is shown with Darius Milhaud, left, whose "Suite Francaise" was on that program. The celebrated Frenchman is guest composer on the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center this Summer. Fennell, of the Eastman School faculty, is teaching conducting at Berkshire Center.

This Clipping From
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD-AMERICAN
AUG 1 1948

MUSIC

'Tanglewood' and Magic of Its Music, Enchantment of Sights, Sounds, Outdoors

By E. V. W.

It is likely that mid-August guest soloists at the four Syracuse Centennial Concerts in Thornden Park Amphitheater (in conjunction with the Syracuse Centorama) will be Mary Becker, violinist; Priscilla Gillette, soprano; Richmond Gale, and Barbara Micale, pianists. As it appears in advance: Becker and Gale with Prof. Andre Polah and an orchestra of 75; Gillette and Micale with Murray Bernthal and his "Pops" orchestra.

THE THRILL, the purpose and the significance of what "Tanglewood" music means to music lovers cannot be estimated in a single listening season in that enchanting spot, set in the Berkshire Hills near Lenox, Mass. With thousands of others, your reporter each summer finds inspiration and redirection in musical values in that impressively built center of culture and achievement.

ALL IN ALL, the Berkshire Festival and its many-faceted interests, is dedicated with what seems to be a burning faith and complete devotion to a great cause. It is a compelling musical journey, complete in itself each succeeding season, with memories of travels of the past, and a glimpse into the mysterious, wished-for future. It opens the gates as only good music, great music, can, with manifold orchestral tints and a vast wealth of vocal literature. Over all the music mind and heart of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, who sees a dream come true, in fine fruition, and who next year will, turn over direction of his orchestra—the Boston Symphony—to Dr. Charles Muench.

FESTIVAL PROGRAMS in the Shed in Tanglewood opened Thursday night with the Bach Suite No. 3, and the Beethoven "Fifth" under the Koussevitzky baton. Last night, Isaac Stern, violinist. Included in the orchestra program were Walter Piston's Symphony No. 3; and the Brahms "First." Stern played the Prokofieff Concerto No. 1. This afternoon at 3:30 o'clock, Darius Milhaud, French composer, and Leonard Bernstein will conduct. Milhaud's Symphony No. 2 will be led by the composer. Mahler's Symphony No. 2 "Resurrection," with Chorus, will be presented and Ellabelle Davis, soprano and Nan Meriman, contralto as soloists under Bernstein's leadership.

ARCHIBALD MAC LEISH will serve as chairman of "Tanglewood on Parade," the benefit which the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center will stage Tuesday for the creative musicians of Europe. The distinguished American poet will introduce Cornelia Otis Skinner, Aaron Copland and other important figures in letters and the arts to be announced. Dr. Koussevitzky will speak as well as conduct the full orchestra in a concert in the Music Shed between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass. Maurice Evans had accepted to appear in a Shakespearean excerpt, but has sent word he will be unable to attend.

IN THE GALA SPIRIT of the occasion, Dr. Koussevitzky has programmed a group showing the development of the waltz for the grand concert at 9:15 P.M. The lively finale will include "Voices of Spring" by Strauss, "Valse Triste" by Sibelius, and "La Valse" of Ravel. Other numbers will be Beethoven's "Leonore" over No. 3 and Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" with Wesley Addy as narrator. Festivities will begin at 6 P.M. with a parade of the 462 students of the Berkshire Music Center. They will proceed to their various departments for demonstrations of all activities of the school—orchestra, opera, chorus, and chamber music. The hour from 7 to 8 will be given over to picnic supper on the grounds.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
AUG 1 - 1948

Benefit Event Tuesday Night In Berkshires

Festival Continues; New Vaughan Williams Work Next Saturday Evening

The Boston Symphony Orchestra continues its Berkshire Festival series this week in the Music Shed at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., and also takes part with the Berkshire Music Center in a large-scale benefit on Tuesday night in aid of musicians in Europe. The week's regular festival programs are:

Today, 3:30: Milhaud, Symphony No. 2, Darius Milhaud conducting; Mahler, Symphony No. 2, Leonard Bernstein conducting, with Ellabelle Davis, soprano; Nan Merriman, contralto, and chorus. (Last concert of Series A.)

Thursday, 8:15 (Series B): Conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. Beethoven, Symphony No. 6 (Pastoral); Stravinsky, Oedipus Rex, with Carol Brice, mezzo-soprano; David Lloyd, tenor; James Pease, barytone; Wesley Addy, speaker, and men's chorus.

Saturday, 8:15 (Series B): Conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. Prokofieff, "Romeo and Juliet" Suite No. 2; Vaughan Williams, Symphony No. 6 (first performance in America); Strauss, Don Quixote (cello solo, Gregor Piatigorsky).

Sunday, Aug. 8, 3:30 (Series B). Conductor, Eleazar de Carvalho. Berlioz, Fantastic symphony; Villa-Lobos, Madona; Falla, El Amor Brujo (mezzo-soprano solo, Carol Brice); Siqueira, Nordestina Suite No. 1.

The Boston Symphony will hold a public rehearsal next Saturday morning at 10 o'clock for the benefit of its pension fund.

Archibald MacLeish will be the chairman for Tuesday's benefit, which occupies the late afternoon and the entire evening. The program announced is:

4 p. m., Menotti's "The Telephone" and scenes from other operas (open to holders of reserved and box seats only).

6 p. m. to 7 p. m., "Tanglewood on Parade," parade of the Berkshire Music Center's students and demonstrations of the various departments' activities.

8 p. m., "The Manifestation," readings of Drayton's "The Parting" and Shakespeare's twenty-ninth sonnet by Cornelia Otis Skinner; speeches by Mr. MacLeish, Aaron Copland and others.

9:15 p. m., Boston Symphony, Dr. Koussevitzky conducting. Beethoven, Overture to "Leonore," No. 3; J. Strauss, waltz, Voices of Spring; Sibelius, Valse Triste, Prokofieff, Peter and the Wolf (narrator, Mr. Addy); Ravel, La Valse.

Ticket prices are $2.50 for general admission, $4 for reserved seats and $5 for box seats. Other events scheduled by the Berkshire Music Center for this week are:

Today, 10 a. m., E. Power Biggs, organist, in Bach program; 11 a. m., Department II chamber music; 8:15 p. m., Department IV, opera scenes. Monday, 4:30 p. m., Department IV chamber orchestra. Wednesday, 4:30 p. m., Department II song recital; 8:15 p. m., Bach's St. John Passion, Robert Shaw conducting. Friday, 4:30 p. m., Department IV, opera scenes; 8:15 p. m., Department II orchestra. Sunday, Aug. 8, 10 a. m., E. Power Biggs, organist, and instrumental ensemble, music by Piston, Mozart and Poulenc; 11 a. m., Department II chamber music.

Rossini's little-known opera, "The Turk in Italy" will be produced for the first time in this country at Tanglewood on Monday and Wednesday nights, Aug. 9 and 11, under Boris Goldovsky's direction.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN
AUG 1 - 1948

Benefit to Aid Needy Musicians

To help needy musicians in Europe, the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center will stage a four-hour benefit, including a concert by the orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky and appearances by Maurice Evans and Cornelia Otis Skinner on Tuesday evening at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

Designated "Tanglewood on Parade," it will include simultaneous performances in their various buildings by all departments of the Berkshire Music Center — orchestral, choral, operatic and chamber music.

Miss Skinner and Evans each will appear in Shakespearean excerpts.

This Clipping From
ROCHESTER, N. Y.
DEMOCRAT-CHRONICLE
AUG 1 - 1948

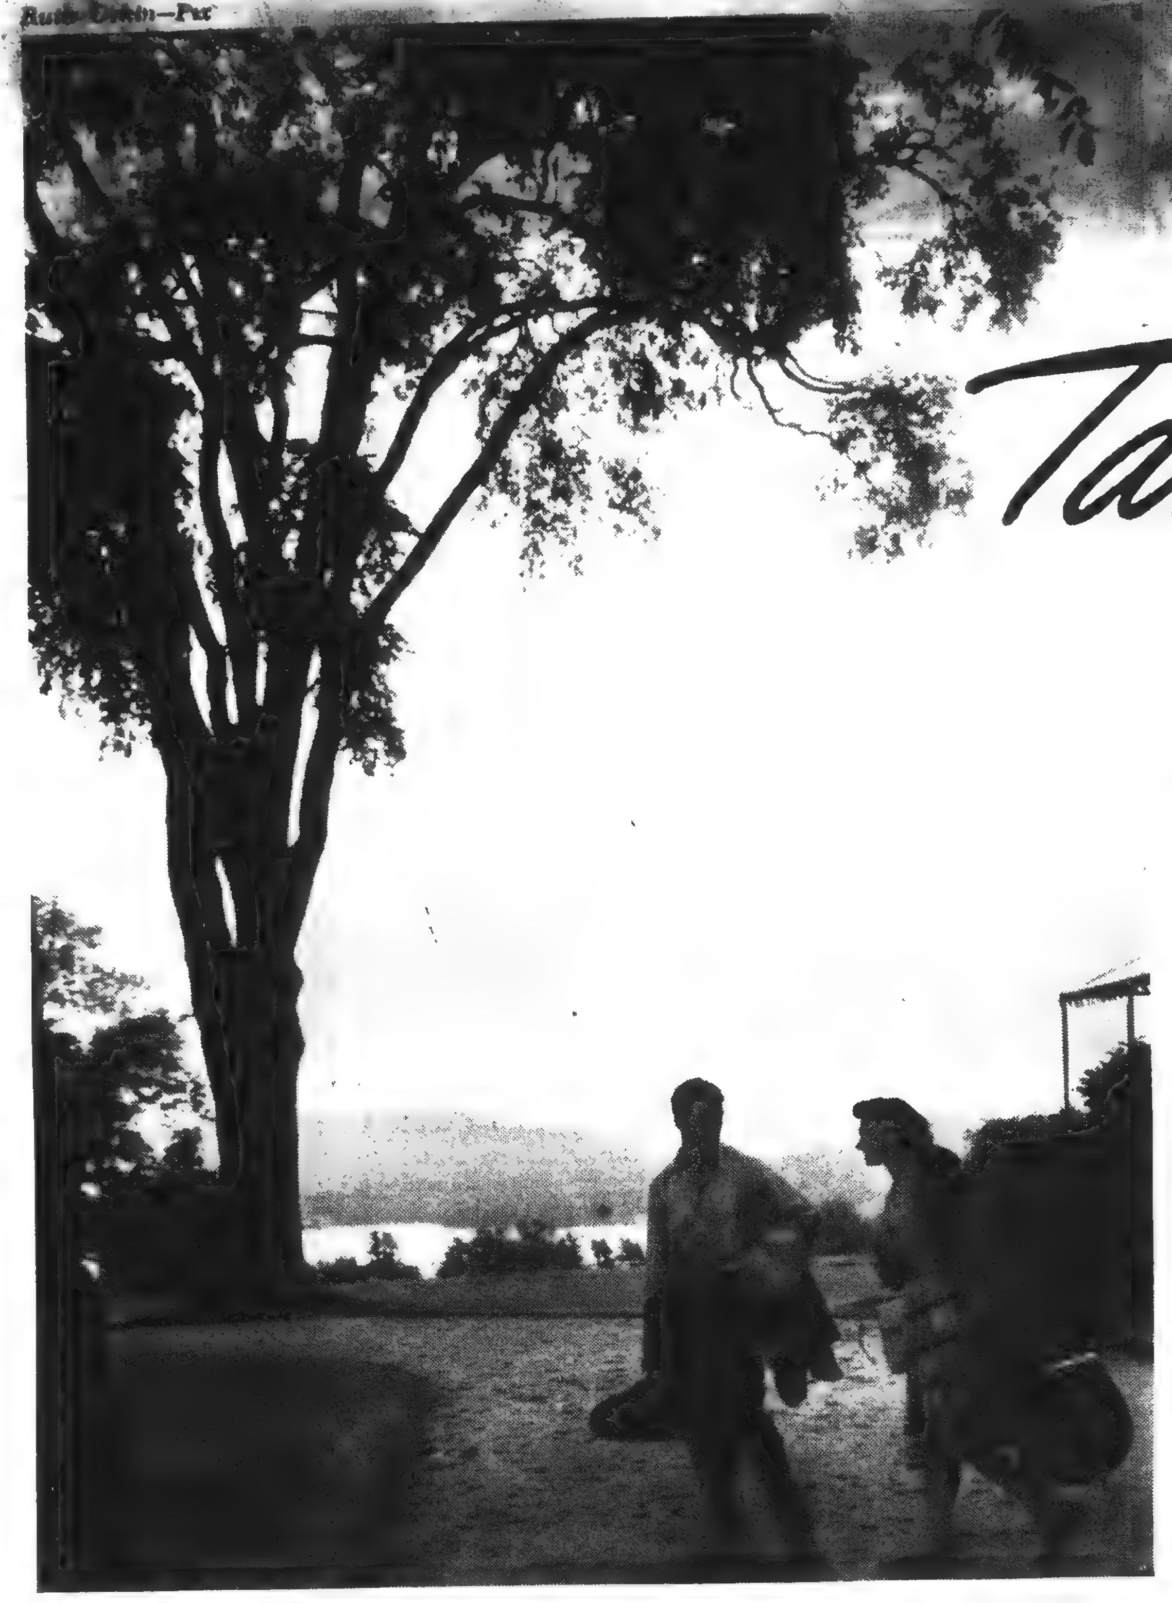
Conductor, Composer at Tanglewood

Frederick Fennell, right, who conducted the Department V orchestra at Tanglewood in a concert Friday afternoon, is shown with Darius Milhaud, left, whose "Suite Francaise" was on that program. The celebrated Frenchman is guest composer on the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center this Summer. Fennell, of the Eastman School faculty, is teaching conducting at Berkshire Center.

BY FRANCIS ROBINSON

Tanglewood

Ruth Orkin–Pix



Scene of the Berkshire Music Center is "Tanglewood," a beautiful estate near Lenox, Massachusetts. Here, two new students arrive

Ruth Orkin–Pix

Ready for a 9 a.m. class. Late in the after noon there may be time for a swim in the lak

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Picnics on the lawn are a regular feature o life at Tanglewood. The conversation? Music!

THE very name spells magic. Many of us know Hawthorne's "Tanglewood Tales" at least by name, and for those who have read the wonder stories of Theseus and the Minotaur, of Jason and the Golden Fleece, of Proserpina and the pomegranate seeds, "Tanglewood" means the doorway to adventure and romance.

In the past eight years the name has taken on a new association, for it is on an estate called Tanglewood that the Boston Symphony Orchestra makes its summer home. Two hundred beautiful acres between Stockbridge and Lenox, Massachusetts, are the scene of the world-famous Berkshire Festival concert series and the site of the Berkshire Music Center, the only school of its kind that has ever existed. It was founded by Serge Koussevitzky in 1940, and today his whole-hearted enthusiasm for "living and working in music" seems to pervade the atmosphere.

The best way to know a place is to visit it, so let's say you have been invited to Tanglewood for a week end. Your hostess, let us also suppose, is a friend of yours who is spending six weeks there this summer, studying. Harriet is in her teens, of course—young for Tanglewood, but she is a fine violinist, and here talent and application count more than age.

From New York you take the train to Lenox, a ride of about four hours through lovely green fields and hills. Harriet has written that she will be unable to meet your train, because it arrives at the time of orchestra rehearsal. There are two student orchestras at Tanglewood and Harriet

For six summer weeks there's music in the air at Tanglewood! Come a

---

Tanglewood

(Continued from page 19)

Tanglewood, and many of the students are on scholarships, or are working under the G. I. Bill of Rights.

You take a taxi or the school bus, because the station is three miles from the town of Lenox, where you are to stay. The town itself is one of the loveliest in New England. The driver points out the sights—the white church on the hill, the monument, and the two-hundred-year-old elms arching over the streets.

Many of the private homes in the vicinity take guests during the Festival, and in one of them Harriet has found you a tiny room for the week end. She herself lives down the Stockbridge Road at the Lenox School for Boys, which during the summer is turned into a dormitory for women students at the Berkshire Music Center. Every available bed is assigned, but you are invited to dinner there, and this is your first sight of Harriet, who has been so busy with her studies. You meet some of her friends—student flutists, cellists, singers, conductors, and many others—and you listen to snatches of conversation around you. It is music, music, music on all sides. You hear Dr. Koussevitzky's name mentioned many times and you hope to catch a glimpse of his tweed-caped figure.

It being a Friday night, there will be a student concert, so you will get to see Harriet in action, and as she changes into a white dress for the performance she tells you that the concert takes place in the big Music Shed. That is what it is called—a shed—but the modest name conveys nothing of the beauty of the structure.

It is shaped like a cut of pie, with the stage at the narrow end, and is of modern design with a strong Scandinavian functional influence. The floor is the earth, and the vast roof, measuring more than an acre, is supported by such delicate-looking steel columns that you will wonder how they can bear so much weight. But they give a feeling of incredible lightness, and the three open sides make for perfect ventilation even on the warmest August day. While the orchestra is tuning up, you notice the magnificent acoustics. Six thousand listeners are seated in the Shed and hundreds more are on the grass outside.

Finally the lights go down and the concert begins. It is hard to believe that such music can come from a group of students. The program is interesting—a Mozart overture, two movements of the Brahms Fourth Symphony, the entire Rachmaninoff Piano Concerto No. 2 (with a student as soloist, of course), and Aaron Copland's lovely Appalachian Spring. There are three conductors, two of them students and one a faculty member. It is an exciting evening.

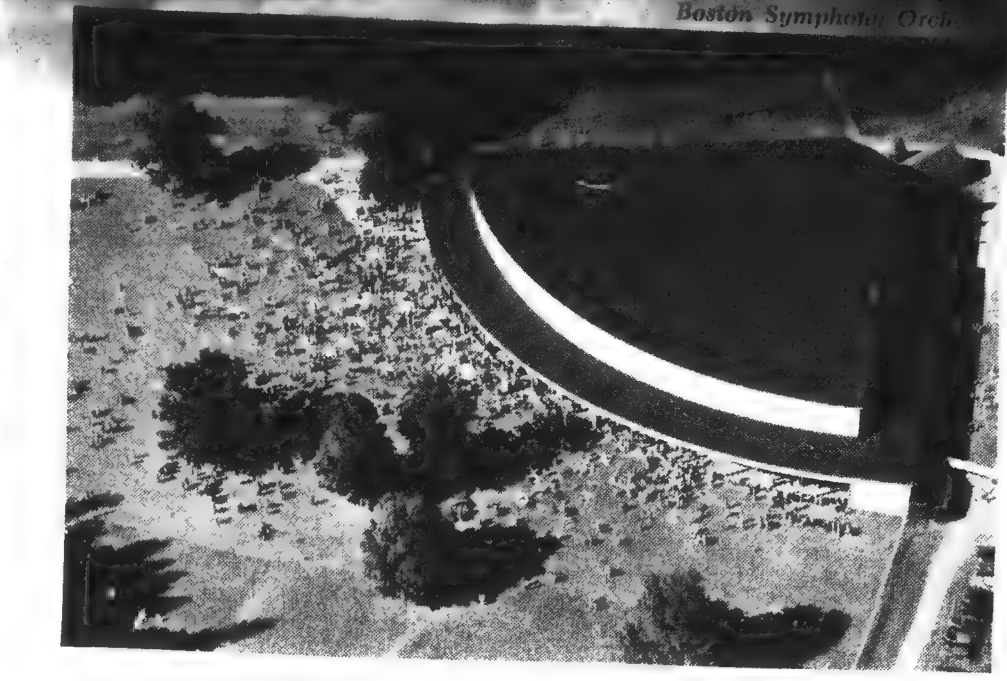
Next morning you do a little exploring of Tanglewood's beautiful grounds. There is the "Little Red House," an exact reproduction, erected by the National Federation of Music Clubs, of the cottage where Hawthorne lived and worked in 1850 and 1851. There are formal gardens and woods—and everywhere music. It seems to come out of the trees themselves, but you soon find that students are practicing in secluded spots outdoors and in the individual practice sheds scattered over the grounds.

[223]

Ruth Orkin—Pix

Members of a student orchestra unpack for rehearsal in the Shed. They hope Koussevitzky may lead them today

Boston Symphony Orc



And here's the famous Music Shed, shaped like a wedge of pie, seating 6,000. Main concerts are held here

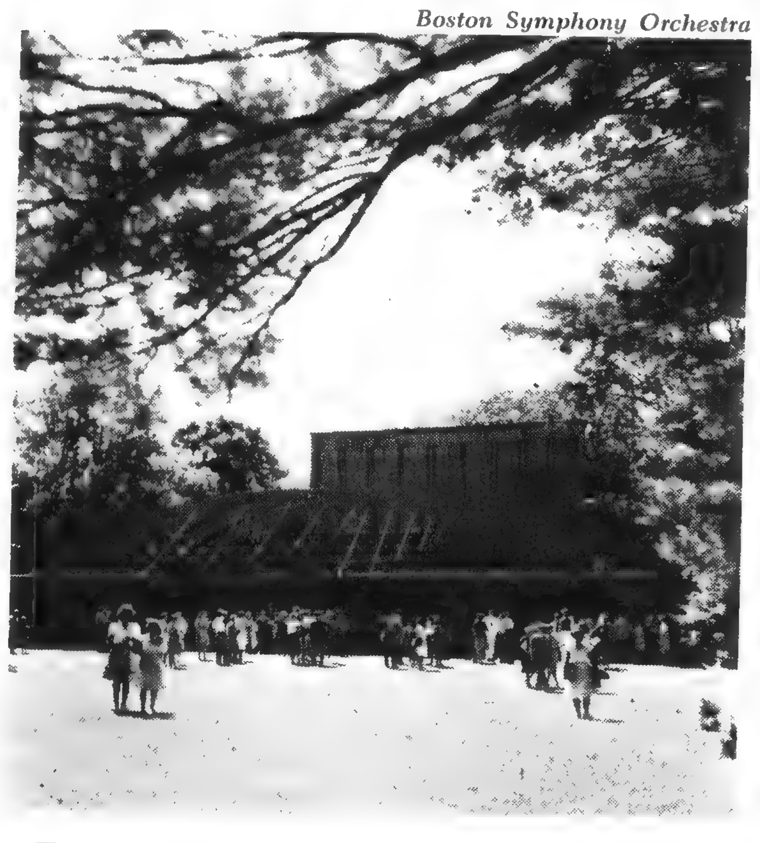
Ruth Orkin—Pix

It's exciting to watch Dr. Koussevitzky rehearse! A music center like this one was his lifelong dream

Ruth Orkin—Pix

Between classes, the Music Store is a popular meeting place for students. There's also a large music library

Boston Symphony Orchestra



The spacious Theater Concert Hall, not far from the formal gardens, is used for opera is already a member of the first violin section of one of them. Neither she nor any of the other hundred members of the orchestra would think of missing a rehearsal, although at Tanglewood there are very few rules and no penalty for absences.

As you ride along you remember hearing that the Berkshire Music Center is no ordinary school. No academic credit or certificate of musical achievement is given. The students learn by actually working with a faculty of distinguished musicians, including the "first-desk" instrumentalists of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Composer Aaron Copland heads the Department of Composition. Leonard Bernstein, the famous young conductor and composer, is first assistant to Dr. Koussevitzky in Conducting. There are also the Departments of Opera, of Choral Singing, and of Orchestral and Chamber Music. Harriet is working in this last one.

There are over four hundred students at Tanglewood this year, she has written you. But where do they come from? They are selected mostly by audition and interview from forty-two States, the District of Columbia, and fifteen foreign countries. There are a few more boys than girls, and though there is a fee of about $300.00 for the six weeks, no deserving applicant is turned down for lack of money. If the candidate is sufficiently talented, a way is found for her or him to come to with us for a week-end visit to the only center of its kind in the world

(Continued on page 54)

---

[illegible] down the [illegible] road is beautiful Lake Mahkeenac, surrounded by the lovely Berkshire Hills. You will have a swim there on Tanglewood's own stretch of lake front in the afternoon, but right now it is time for the traditional picnic lunch on the lawn between the Main House and the outdoor cafeteria. Harriet points out many musical celebrities and talented students taking the sun on the grass, and you have a chance to chat with some of them.

Saturday night you skip whatever musical event may be on at Tanglewood in favor of a party in the near-by town of Great Barrington. Most of the guests are students from the Center, and you understand more than ever why Harriet is so excited about this school. They are a fine, lively crowd, the kind you want for your friends.

Sunday morning there is a program of chamber music in the Theater-Concert Hall, a more enclosed structure than the Shed and seating only twelve hundred persons. This is where the opera department gives its performances—two years ago Benjamin Britten's new opera, "Peter Grimes," was played here for the first time in America; last summer the American premiere of Mozart's "Idomeneo"; and this year "The Turk In Italy," by Rossini.

You have admired the building, both inside and out, and would like to attend a performance there, but instead you decide to go to church in Stockbridge, where as the musical part of the service, a girls' chorus organized among the students, and a string orchestra, which includes Harriet and her violin, are doing a program composed of a work by Bach and an oratorio of Pergolesi. Yes, the students at Tanglewood make their contribution to the life of the community even in the brief time they are there. That is the spirit of the place—not how much you get, but how much you will be able to give to others because of your experience.

Sunday afternoon is the high point of your stay, a concert by the full Boston Symphony under Serge Koussevitzky. It is a magnificent picture—the hundred men of that great orchestra in their spotless white coats. You have never dreamed of such a big audience at a musical event. Every one of the six thousand seats in the shed is taken, and there are twice that number seated on blankets and cushions on the grass outside. In all, some eighteen thousand people, from miles around, have bought tickets for this Festival concert, and many of them reserved their seats far in advance.

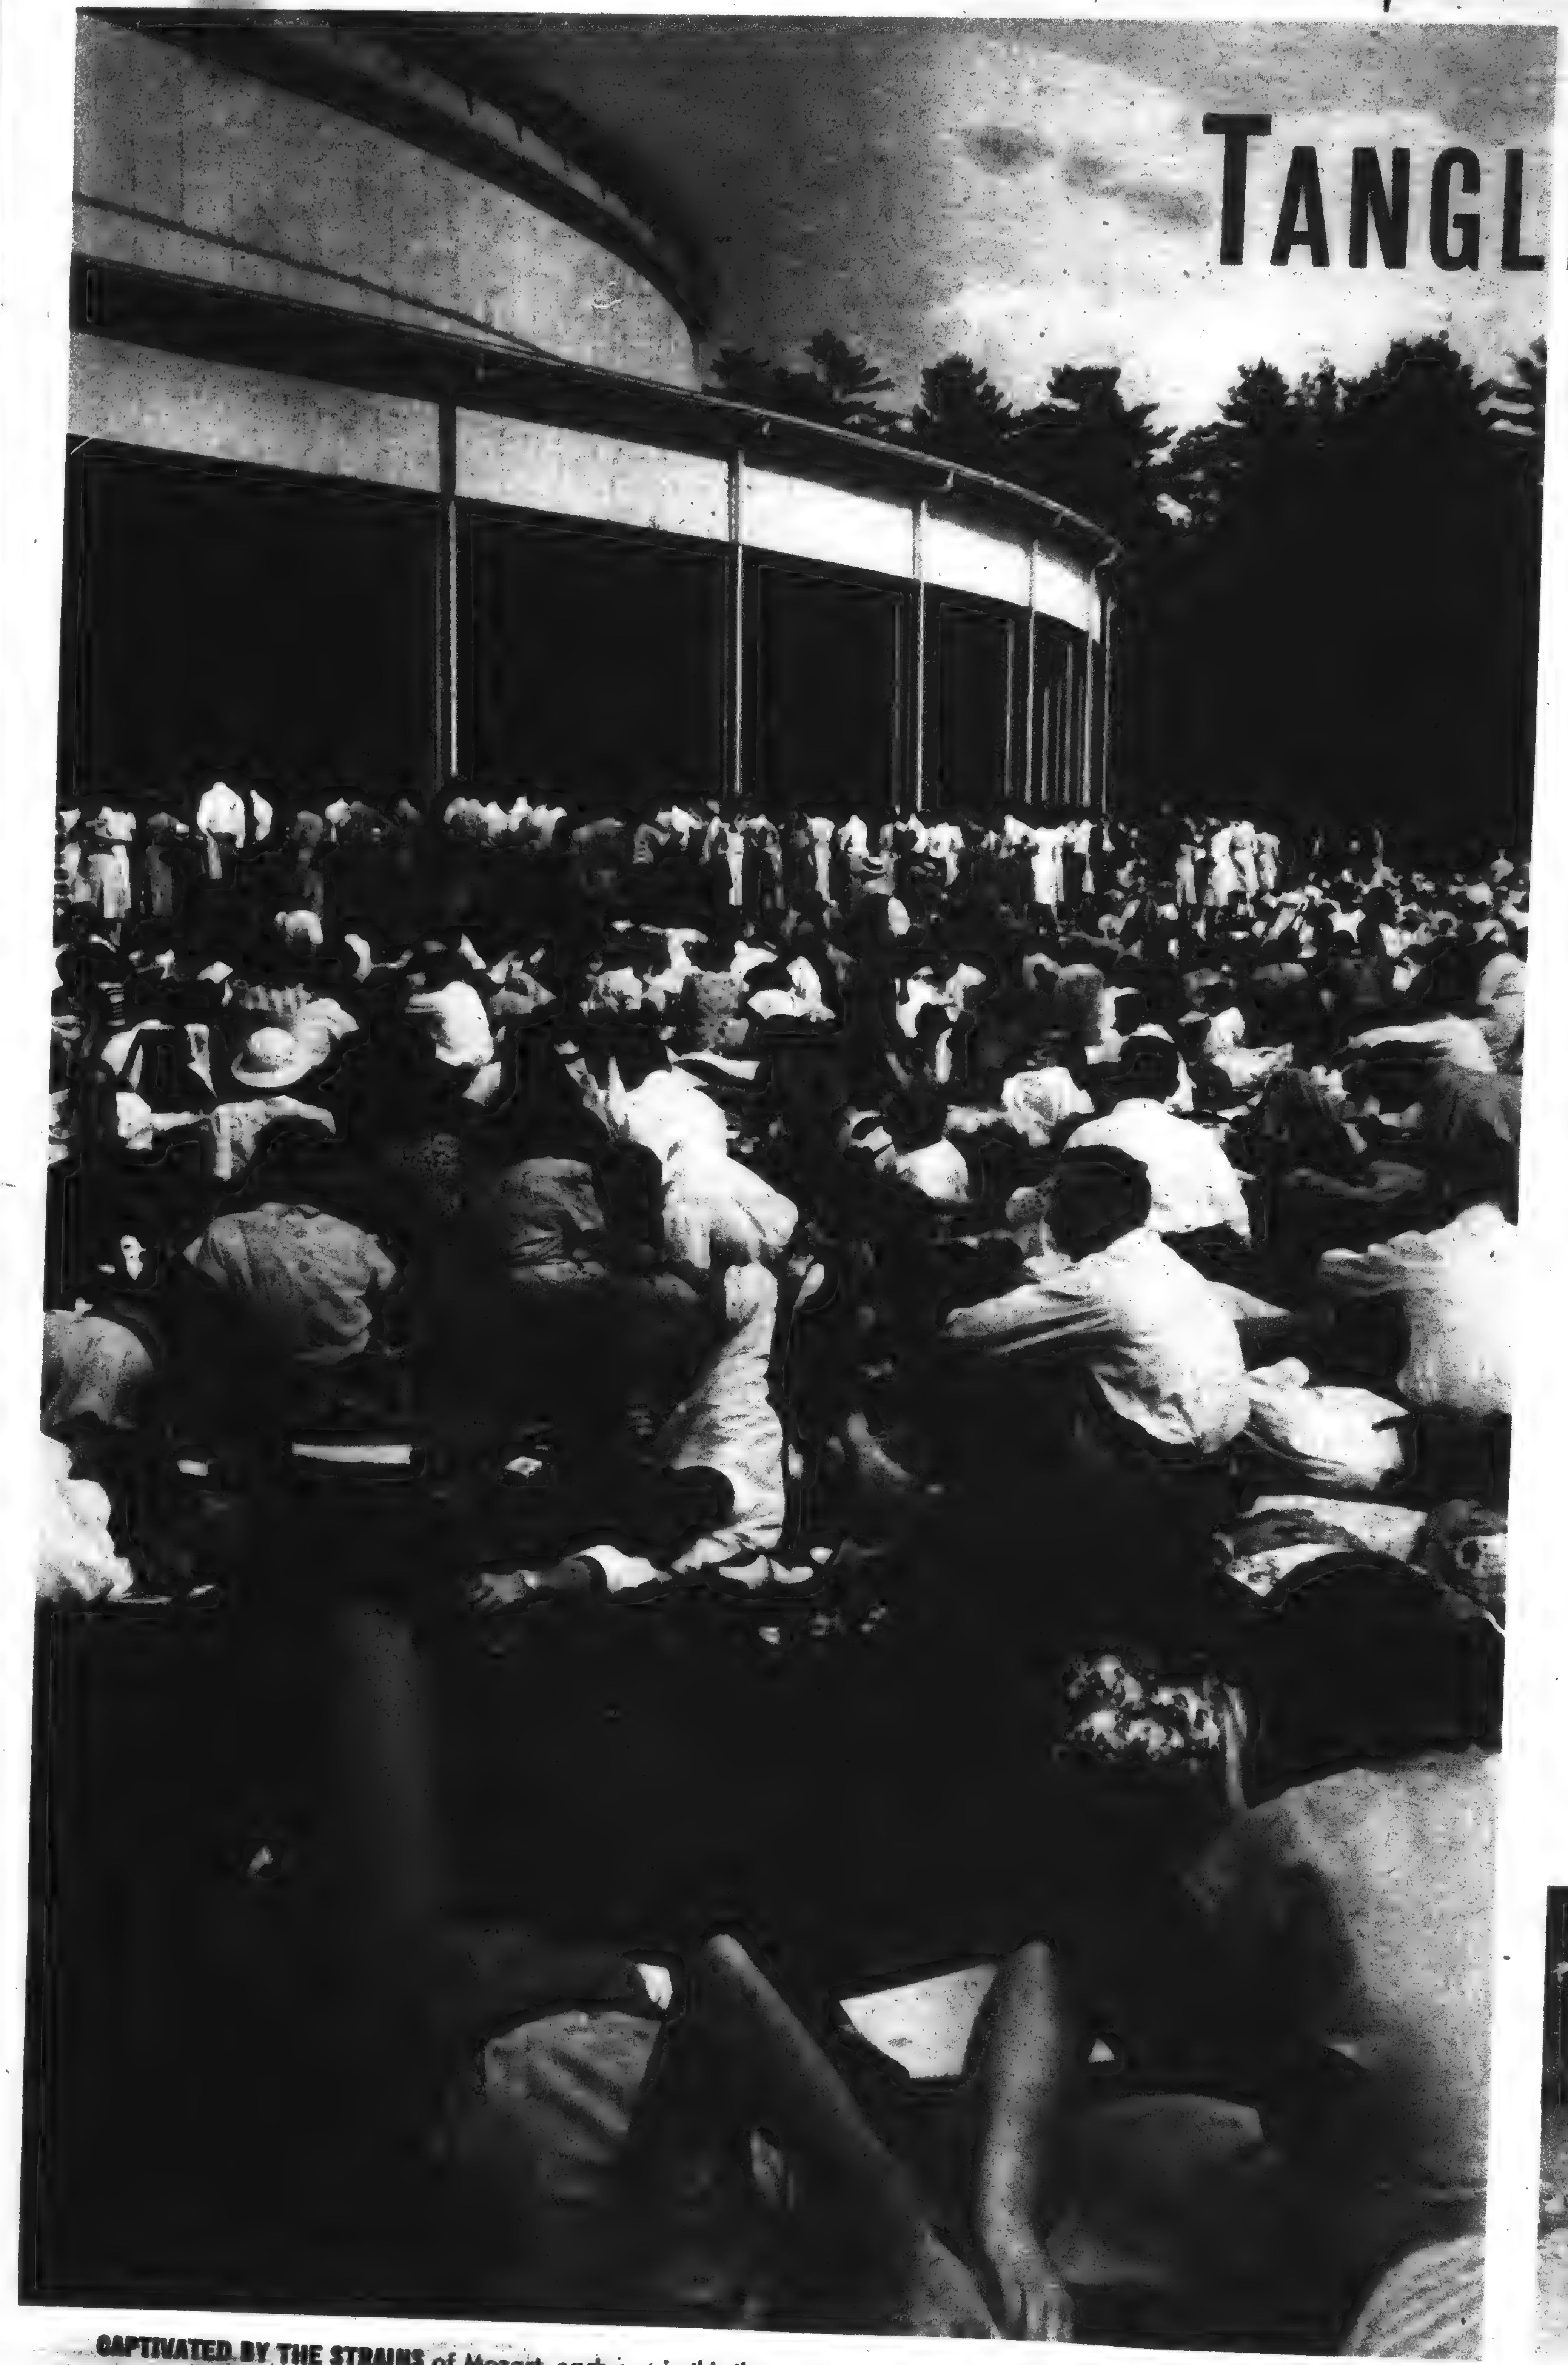
There is a tremendous ovation for the entrance of Koussevitzky, also dressed in white. For two hours you are lost in the beauty of the music and it is like awakening after a wonderful dream when you realize you haven't too much time before you have to catch the late afternoon train back to New York.

As you sink into your train seat, tired but happy, you turn through your program as if trying to hold on to the happiness of this golden day. Your eye falls on a fragment from a speech by Dr. Koussevitzky and you know that it is true:

"In a time when we seem unable to find a common contact and means of understanding each other, the Berkshire Music Center and its fine young student body are dedicated to an art which, more than any other, speaks a language accessible to all."

THE END

This Week Herald Tribune Aug. 1 1948



TANGLEWOOD

Soft grass and good music attract thousands yearly to the Berkshire Festival

THROUGH the beautiful Berkshire Hills thousands of music lovers from all over the east travel by car and train every summer. They head for Lenox, Mass., to enjoy the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky.

Outside the Tanglewood Music Shed the audience makes interesting studies — studies in backgrounds and in the psychology of music. In pairs, groups and as individuals they form moving plastics carried away by the symphonies. Bach, Mozart and Tschaikovsky hold them spellbound, while they knit, loll or just dream on the cliffs of sleep. Some dress, and some wear sport clothes.

Festival time is a time for the locals to raise eyebrows and for cud-chewing cows to gape over fences at these folk, who come from far away to see a beloved musical figure in action. — RICHARD F. CRANDELL

Photographs by Ruth Orkin

CAPTIVATED BY THE STRAINS of Mozart, each one in this throng at Lenox feels alone, forming music patterns in the sun

FINALE — a fan leaves, toting chairs

STUDY: A Koussevitzky enthusiast stares at surrounding green hills

A BLONDE BACK and a sleeping profile mold a design of appreciation

BOOK ENDS: On the greensward two girls knit and listen to Symphony in E Flat Major, completely oblivious to the other music lovers in the audience

Globe

BE—MONDAY, AUGUST 2, 1948

Milhaud Conducts Own Symphony at Tanglewood

TANGLEWOOD, Aug. 1—What undoubtedly will prove to have been one of the great occasions of the current Berkshire Music Festival was tumultuously applauded here this afternoon by an audience of 9600. This was the final concert of the first series, and it brought Composer Darius Milhaud as conductor of his own Second Symphony, and the tremendous Second, or "Resurrection," Symphony by Gustav Mahler, conducted by Leonard Bernstein.

The soloists for Mahler's work were Nan Merriman, contralto, and Ellabelle Davis, Negro soprano. The chorus, trained by Hugh Ross, was drawn from the students of the Berkshire Music Center.

The "Resurrection" Symphony, in case anyone needs to be reminded, is one of the bigger masterpieces of the 19th century—bigger both in scope and the number of musicians required, and in the vast extent of Mahler's conception. This is music of astounding skill as well, in which a supreme master of the art and science of orchestral writing sought to encompass no less than life, death and the rising of spirits thereafter. This is also music of such depth, power and overwhelming emotional tension that it leaves you in something of a daze.

Mahler had what might be called a lengthy temperament. He was not one to condense his thought, and consequently his scores require both time and receptive attention. The "Resurrection" takes more than an hour and 15 minutes, yet, except for a few early departures, the huge gathering in and outside the music shed listened quietly—although some did burst out with ill-timed applause between some of the movements.

Mr. Bernstein's performance of this work in Boston last Winter was the outstanding event of the season. If it does not turn out to have been the peak of the Berkshire festival, it will not have been due to any fault of his. Yesterday he repeated his impassioned and musicianly reading. There were some discrepancies, however, that made this performance a little less impressive than the one in Boston.

The chorus, though larger here, did not produce so much resonance as you were entitled to expect, though they did sing the soft entrance—and elsewhere—with round beauty of tone and thorough precision. Of the soloists, Miss Davis excelled in a beautifully voiced and styled performance of the soprano part. Miss Merriman, making her festival debut, sang conscientiously, but her voice had something of a tremolo, the tex twas sometimes peculiarly pronounced and there was lass feeling than there out to have been.

However much one might have looked forward to hearing Haydn's Symphony in D Major, No. 104, the privileges of re-hearing the Second Symphony by Milhaud was an even greater pleasure. The symphony hade a fine impression in Boston last Winter as music of skilled facture, considerable expressive strength. Mr. Milhaud, perhaps like many another excellent composer, is perhaps not the finest interpreter of his music—just as Brahms was not the best for his nor Tchaikovsky for his. Sometimes the practised—and practical—hand of the professional conductor brings out the most in a score.

Nevertheless, there was much to admire in Mr. Milhaud's own directing, which was forthright and capable. The state of Mr. Milhaud's health requires this large man to walk on crutches. Accordingly, once he had made his way to the stand, he conducted sitting down.

There was another event in the evening at the theatre-concert hall, which this reviewer's schedule unfortunately did not permit him to remain to hear. This was the first performance anywhere of the third act of Alexandre Gretchaninoff's new— and reportedly still unfinished—opera, "The Marriage." It is based upon a story of Gogul. The excerpt was presented by students of the Berkshire Music Center opera department, whose director is Boris Goldovsky. The composer was present.

THE SPRINGFIELD SUNDAY REPUBLICAN, SPRINGFIELD, MAS

Aug 1st

'TANGLEWOOD ON PARADE' FESTIVAL BENEFIT TUESDAY

Full Program of Afternoon and Evening Events by Prominent Figures

The fountain scene from "Pelleas and Melisande," played appropriately enough at a fountain, and an excerpt from "Don Giovanni" have been added to Menotti's "The Telephone," to be sung in its entirety in the gardens at Tanglewood on Tuesday, August 3. The special outdoor performance at 4 p. m. is for box holders and reserved seat patrons to "Tanglewood on Parade," the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Berkshire Music Center's benefit for assistance to musicians in Europe. The event inaugurates a nation wide campaign to help unblock talent abroad.

Three Acts Billed

For the opera department's contribution to the simultaneous demonstration of all departments of the Berkshire Music Center, beginning at 6 p. m. and open to all ticket holders for the benefit, Boris Goldovsky has selected Acts I and IV of "La Boheme" and Act III of "The Marriage of Figaro." Supper on the lawn at 7 p. m. will follow the hour-long demonstrations.

The manifestation at 8 p. m. in the Music Shed will bring appearances by Cornelia Otis Skinner, Archibald MacLeish, Aaron Copland, and other important figures in letters and the arts. Serge Koussevitzky will lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a concert beginning at 9.15 which will conclude with a group of waltzes. The three-quarter rhythm will be picked up and carried on after the concert by a student orchestra under the direction of Frederick Fennell of the conducting faculty for dancing on the lawn.

Reminiscent of the great last act of 'Die Meistersinger" will be the parade of the students which immediately precedes the demonstrations. Like the guilds in Wagner's great music drama, the 462 boys and girls from 42 states and 15 foreign countries will march by departments carrying banners and led by a band. There will be performances of orchestra, choral and chamber music as well as opera. It would require no less than four visits to Tanglewood to see and hear what will be going on there Tuesday within the period of an hour.

In the Music Shed the student orchestra under student conductors will play Beethoven's "Coriolanus" overture, the chorale and toccata from William Schuman's Symphony No. 3, the first movement of Rachmaninoff's second concerto and three dances from Leonard Bernstein's ballet "Fancy Free."

At Tanglewood Today

Leonard Bernstein and Nan Merriman will be conductor and mezzo-soprano soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Mahler's Second Symphony ("Resurrection") at the Berkshire Festival, Tanglewood, this afternoon. Ellabelle Davis, soprano, will be the other soloist.

GREEN MOUNTAIN FESTIVAL EVENTS

Burlington, Vt., July 31—Stell Andersen, pianist, will appear with the Vermont Symphony under the direction of Alan Carter, Saturday evening, Aug. 7, performing Brahms' second piano concerto as the final concert presentation of the Green Mountain Festival of the Arts. Miss Andersen joins two other outstanding musicians, Adolf Busch, violinist, who will appear with the symphony Friday evening, Aug. 6 and Miss Eleanor Davis, Messo-soprano, who will open the musical portion of the festival on Thursday evening, Aug. 5, in the Memorial Auditorium:

The Green Mountain Festival will present a chamber music concert on Friday afternoon, Aug. 6, by the celebrated Berkshire String Quartet, formerly the Gordon String Quartet.

The University of Vermont Summer Session Choral Group under the direction of Professor Howard G. Bennett will share the Thursday evening concert with Miss Davis. Prof. Bennett's singers will be heard in an original composition by Prof. Bennett, entitled, "Creator Spirit." It will be heard for the first time with orchestral accompaniment.

The entire festival program will open with the production "Fashion" or "Life In New York" to be staged by the university's Summer Session Theater Group under the direction . Carl Cass.

ny." Cathy McDonald joins the Players for the role of Alice, Anne Pitoniak and Pauline Myers make their first appearance of the season as Olga and Rheba, while Charles Benjamin, seen here last summer as Cal in "The Little Foxes," returns for the part of Donald.

Berkshire Playhouse

"Little Women," is the new attraction which will open at the Berkshire Playhouse, Stockbridge, tomorrow night. Among those who will play featured roles in the production are Barbara Brady, a grand daughter of the Broadway producer, William A. Brady and Amy Douglass, well known character actress.

SPECIAL CONCERT FROM TANGLEWOOD

The first of two concerts from the Berkshire Music Festival will be heard over ABC and Station WSPR Tuesday from 9.30 to 10.30 p. m. when Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducts the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a Prokofieff-Sibelius-Strauss-Ravel program.

The broadcast will be part of a special concert entitled "Tanglewood on Parade" in which the activities of the summer music school, of which Dr. Koussevitzky is direcor, will be displayed.

Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" will open the broadcast. Wesley Addy, well-known Shakespearean actor, will be the narrator for the composition.

Koussevitzky has also scheduled Sibelius' "Valse Triste" from the suite, "Kuolema," Strauss' familiar "Voices of Spring" waltz and Ravel's choreographic poem, "La Valse," for the broadcast.

The concluding broadcast from the festival will be an all-Tchaikovsky program Aug. 10.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN
AUG 1 - 1948

MUSIC

By Miles Kastendieck

QUITE often an idea is better in theory than in practice. The idea of a World's Fair of Music was not only excellent but timely. An exhibition of what is being done in the world of music is needed. Its coming after the biggest concert season in the history of New York would seem to be a natural outgrowth of expanded musical activity. But between the idea and the thing itself something went astray.

As set up at Grand Central Palace a week ago the first annual World's Fair of Music was hardly exciting and not particularly newsworthy. Static exhibitions are usually either striking or dull. Displays like those of such musical organizations as the Berkshire Music Center, the Pittsburgh Symphony, and a dozen others like them had no eye appeal.

They could have been improved by some illuminating photographic concept or by an advertising outlay calculated to draw attention. It was simply that the pictorial element was lacking; most of the exhibits were dull.

The fascination of television and Columbia's "Long-Playing" record carried the appeal of novelty. The commercial exhibits had no particular dramatic aspect. Thus the vast panorama of musical spectacle became only theoretically interesting.

Concerts at Core

SINCE music is a temporal art, the core of the Fair naturally had to be concerts. The schedule of programs for the week was comprehensive. It embraced the fields of the symphony orchestra, the ballet, jazz and popular music, folk song and dancing, and opera.

In choice of participants the selection was most promising. The program for each event contained the nucleus of popular appeal. Unfortunately half of them never took place. Midway through the week all performances were cancelled.

Timing Wrong

OF COURSE it could have been the heat. I doubt that was the only cause. The time of year was wrong. Midsummer carries musical madness to the outdoors.

The Grand Central Palace had no substitute for greenery nor the coolness of a Summer evening at Lewisohn Stadium, in Central Park, or up in the Berkshire hills.

Affairs like this belong either in May at the close of the season or in middle or late September at the beginning.

Something Missing

I WONDER if the idea was really worked out well enough in advance. As the first of its kind it perhaps faltered naturally. Yet lessons from all kinds of fairs were available.

The very thing that makes music the greatest of the arts was missing—imagination. It is that quality which always has and always will proclaim greatness in music, and the difference between the virtuoso and the artist.

The idea behind a world's fair of music is good. Let its sponsors take note of what its potentialities demand.

IN STRAWHAT . . . Frieda Hempel has finally gone the way of the Summer circuit. She sings at the Clinton Playhouse Saturday night, Aug. 7.

This Clipping From
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
JOURNAL-COURIER
AUG 2 1948

Two Conductors At Tanglewood

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 1—(AP)—Two guest conductors appeared with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the concluding concert of the first series of the Berkshire Music Festival today at Tanglewood.

Officials said 9,600 attended the concert, bringing to a record-breaking 27,400 the total attendance for the first series. The series attendance last year was 27,000.

Darius Milhaud of the Berkshire Music Center faculty opened the program with a rendition of his own "Symphony No. 2."

Leonard Bernstein of Lawrence presented Gustav Mahler's "Symphony No. 2 in C Minor" with the Festival chorus of 200 voices. Ellabell Davis, soprano, and Nan Merriman, contralto, were soloists.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
AUG 2 - 1948

Tanglewood Fete Set for Tomorrow

A veritable four-ring circus will take place at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., Tuesday, when students will perform, faculty and distinguished guests of the Berkshire Music Center will speak, and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will play for the benefit of the school and European musicians in need. The evening will close with waltzing on the lawn, fireworks and the awarding of an RCA Victor "Berkshire" radio-phonograph and a set of 10-record albums.

After a parade of the students at 6, there will be four musical programs at the same time.

Archibald MacLeish, poet and former librarian of Congress, will preside over a "manifestation" of les than an hour. Aaron Copland, composer; Dr. Howard Hanson, director of the Eastman School of Music, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and Supreme Court Justice Felix Frankfurther will speak briefly. Cornelia Otis Skinner will recite two Elizabethan sonnets.

[227]

THE NEW YORK TIMES, MONDAY, AUGUST 2, 1948

MILHAUD CONDUCTS PROGRAM AT LENOX

Directs His Second Symphony as Bernstein Offers Mahler Work at Tanglewood

By HOWARD TAUBMAN

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 1—The first week of the Berkshire Festival ended this afternoon with another gala crowd. The weather was again what the doctor—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, the boss man here—ordered, and the music shed was filled with an overflow throng spreading out over the lawns on all sides of the shed. There were 9,600 here today; with last night's 10,300 the week-end total of 19,900 was close to a record.

The Berkshire Festival has now become so securely established an institution that a good break in the weather nearly always means huge audiences. The news this year is the freshness and impact of the program-making. Whereas in seasons gone by the concerts leaned heavily on the unquestioned classics, this year's programs thus far have recognized the present more extensively. Contemporary music has not been found wanting, and the audience has been responsive to what has been offered.

Today's program was shared by Darius Milhaud, one of the ornaments of present-day composition, and Gustav Mahler, who may be regarded almost as a contemporary, inasmuch as his music is still a source of disputation among musicians and laymen.

Mr. Milhaud, who teaches composition at the Berkshire music center here, conducted his own Second Symphony to start the program. Leonard Bernstein, an aide of Mr. Koussevitzky on the conducting staff at Tanglewood, directed Mahler's Second Symphony, which he had led in a performance in Boston last winter. He also led it in New York with the City Symphony. His soloists today were Ellabelle Davis, soprano, and Nan Merriman, mezzo-soprano. The fresh resounding chorus of 200 was drawn from the center student body and trained by Hugh Ross.

Brahm's Symphony Heard

Before turning to this afternoon's program, let us return for a space to the unusally provocative concert presented by Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony last night. The staple work was Brahm's First Symphony. The spacious performance of this score by this conductor and orchestra needs little discussion: its grandeur and full-blooded vigor stirred the audience.

The Third Symphony by Walter Piston, Harvard professor and leading American composer, was the evening's revelation. This work won the Pulitzer Prize last spring, and the award was well deserved. Commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation, this symphony is one of Mr. Piston's most accessible scores. That it is written with a craftsman's command is not surprising, since Mr. Piston knows his way around an orchestra.

What is noteworthy is Mr. Piston's allowing himself the luxury of being lyrical, almost sentimental. The slow movement is a work of refinement and grave tenderness. The other movements, while perhaps more intricate in construction, have clarity and gusto.

Mr. Koussevitzky, who believes in the score, led a brilliant performance. The playing was incisive, controlled but full of breadth and vigor. It was an impressive presentation of one of Mr. Piston's best compositions.

Isaac Stern Is Soloist

Prokofieff's First Violin Concerto is a delightful contemporary work, and Isaac Stern as violin soloist gave it an authoritative performance. He has perhaps played it with more color and virtuosity in the past, but his performance last night had the stamp of a major violinist. Mr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra gave him admirable support.

At today's concert Mr. Milhaud, who has not been well, entered on the stage on crutches and conducted his symphony while seated. Once he gave the orchestra its first cue it was clear that he had the resources to lead his score with an expert's assurance. The music itself has the usual Milhaud earmarks—economy of expression, originality of thinking and, like the First Symphony, considerable depth of feeling.

Mr. Bernstein, who has proved himself a devoted interpreter of Mahler, gave the score an illuminating reading. In proclamatory passages the music had grandeur and sweep, and in moments of gentle lyricism the orchestra sang effectingly.

Mr. Bernstein makes out a good case for the validity of Mahler's inspiration. Miss Davis, who was soloist with Mr. Bernstein in Boston, sang with style and vocal opulence, as did Miss Merriman, who has also done this work before.

One of the highlights of a program of opera excerpts presented in the theatre tonight by Boris Goldovsky's opera department was the third act from "The Marriage" by Alexander Gretchaninoff, 84-year-old Russian-born composer, who was at Tanglewood to listen to his music.

This Clipping From BOISE, IDAHO
STATESMAN
AUG 3 1948

Barnard To Star In Opera

When the highbrows of the music world gather at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's big annual benefit this afternoon, a young Boisean will be taking the leading role. Francis Barnard, talented young bass-baritone, will sing the title role in excerpts from "Don Giovanni" at an outdoor performance at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass., at a benefit for assistance to musicians in Europe. Supper on the lawn at 7 p.m. will follow the program.

In the evening, a program in the famous Tanglewood Music Shed will bring appearances by several important figures in letters and the arts, including Cornelia Otis Skinner, who played in Boise recently.

Throughout the six-week season at Tanglewood, Mr. Barnard is taking several important parts. He sings the lead in the big production of the season, a revival of "The Turk in Italy," and also will sing the role of Mephistopheles in "Faust."

Herald Aug 2

MUSIC

Berkshire Festival

The first week-end concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the current Berkshire Festival were given at Tanglewood Saturday night and yesterday afternoon. Isaac Stern, violinist, was the soloist Saturday. Serge Koussevitzky conducted. Leonard Bernstein and Darius Milhaud conducted yesterday afternoon. Ellabelle Davis, soprano, and Nan Merriman, contralto, were the soloists. The programs were as follows:

Symphony No. 3	Piston
Violin Concerto No. 1	Prokofieff
Symphony No. 1 in C minor	Brahms

Symphony No. 2	Milhaud
Symphony No. 2, Resurrection	Mahler

By HOWARD WATSON

TANGLEWOOD, Aug. 1—The first of the annual Berkshire Festival concerts in the popular weekend series took place last night and this afternoon here with much in their favor. The weather, ever an important factor in view of the seating limitations of even the vast triangular Shed was ideal. The attendance, estimated at some 9,600 for this afternoon's concert and at 10,300 last night, was the largest combined attendance in the 11-year-old history of the festival.

Musically the programs of new, rarely heard and familiar music were well balanced and of great interest. Their performance at times surpassed the already accepted extremely high standards of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

PISTON SYMPHONY

Last night's concert conducted by Dr. Koussevitzky opened with Walter Piston's Third Symphony, included Prokofieff's Violin Concerto No. 1 with Isaac Stern as soloist, and concluded with Brahms' Symphony No. 1 in C minor. Each of these was, for carying reasons, accorded especially cordial applause by the highly responsive audience.

The year old, widely-acclaimed Piston symphony was received with especial interest. The composition, short of a beautiful adagio emphasized by a solo viola, is a fierce and vigorous piece from beginning to its noisy march-like concluding allegro. The composer, present in the audience, was called to the stage and returned three times by the enthusiastic listeners. Isaac Stern was next in line to receive equal honors for a likable performance of the seldom heard Prokofieff concerto. Although his performance was one of immense feeling and sensitivity, some of the subtleties of the solo section were sacrificed by the mere size of the Shed itself. The orchestral section, however, was as crystal clear as the score is a model of orchestral logic. Dr. Koussevitzky outdid himself with an inspired performance. This was a treasure, particularly the deeply moving second movement, following the momentous opening and including the majestic chorale-like phrases that lead to the spacious, heartening melody that sweeps onward to the triumphant finale. There was every indication from the applause that the huge audience would have chosen to stay and hear this masterpiece of symphonic music as played last night, again and again.

AFTERNOON CONCERT

Today's audience witnessed the distinguished composer, Darius Milhaud, conducting his own Second Symphony and Leonard Bernstein repeating the impressive Mahler Second which nearly lifted the roof of Symphony Hall last February and the New York City Center a year earlier. Mr. Bernstein's company included Ellabelle Davis and Nan Merriman as the gratifying soloists, and the 200-voice festival chorus evidently trained within an inch of their lives by Hugh Ross. Those who witnessed either of the earlier performances generally allowed that today's was easily the best of the three. The immense work here receives the space it deserves. Bernstein easily achieved another triumph.

As a distinguished "curtain-raiser," Milhaud conducted his charming symphony, incidentally from a sitting position by reason of an infirmity. They composition was given its world premiere with the Boston orchestra in 1946. Its performance today was especially lovely in the third movement, the serene and gracious fourth and the splendid finale.

Altogether the weekend series are off to a stimulating and distinguished start. Next Sunday's concert will be conducted by Eleazar de Carvalho.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN
AUG 2 - 1948

Berkshire Music Festival Attracts 27,000

By MILES KASTENDIECK

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 1.—Tanglewood magic lured 27,400 people to the first big weekend of the Berkshire Festival. The spell was powerful, considering the contemporary aspect of the programs.

That fact, however, did not deter big crowds from gathering on the lawns to enjoy the programs under ideal weather conditions. They came and were transported by the magnitude of the events.

Today's concert contained the most novelty. Darius Milhaud was present to conduct his Second Symphony. Leonard Bernstein repeated his last season's triumph at City Center with the Mahler Second Symphony. The two seconds lasted two hours and a half.

Suffering from arthritis, Milhaud came on stage on crutches and conducted from a chair on the podium.

Audience Cheers

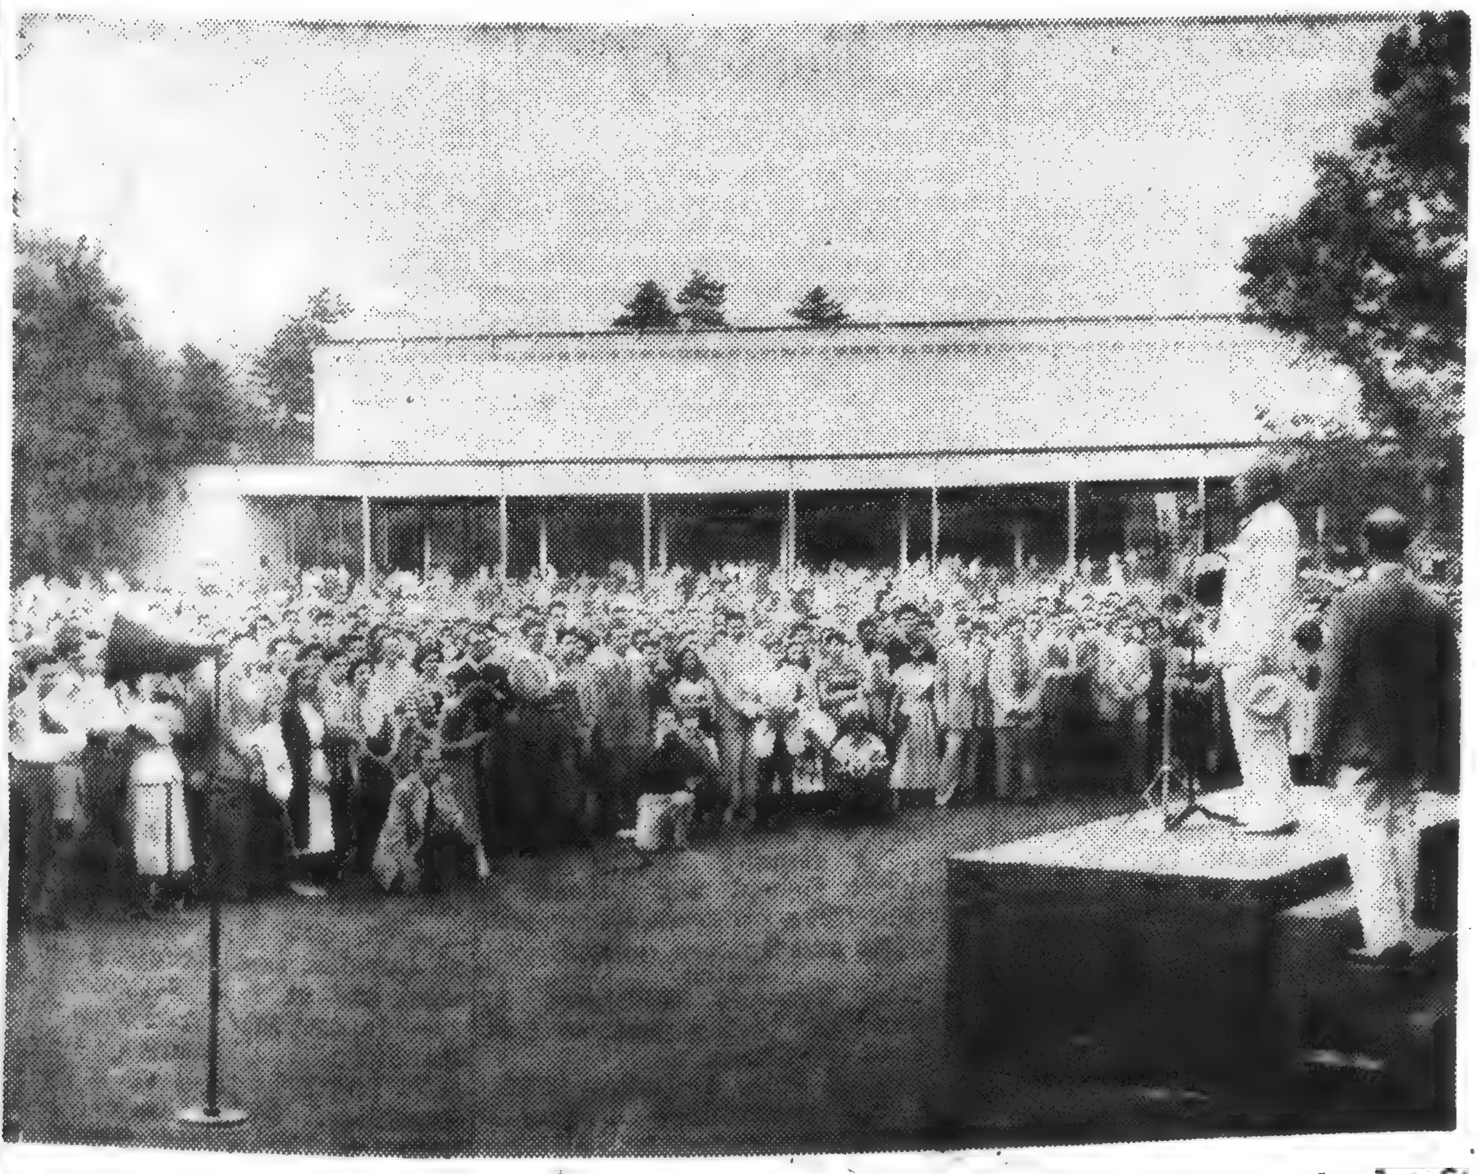
To say the performance of the Mahler was stupendous takes note of the huge canvas on which the composer worked. It was something to have lived through the intensity of this "resurrection" symphony.

The audience broke out into fervent cheers at the end of the 85-minute performance.

Bernstein conducted with that dynamic quality so characteristic of him. His emotional gesturing tends to rob the listener of the feeling the music arouses because his conducting supplies so much in so pictorial a fashion.

He had admirable control of the forces at his command; not only the Boston Symphony but the Festival Chorus, prepared by Hugh Ross, Ellabella Davis and Nan Merriman, soprano and contralto soloists.

The Saturday night program with Koussevitzky conducting, drew the ~~largest crowd~~, some 10,300 people. They heard Piston's Third Symphony, Prokofieff's First Violin Concerto and Isaac Stern as soloist, and the Brahms First Symphony.



MAESTRO'S WELCOME: Dr. Serge Koussevitzky welcomes to Tanglewood for the benefit program staged yesterday to aid European musicians, this crowd of visitors who arrived early for seven and one-half hour program. On the steps of the platform is Boris Goldovsky, head of the opera department at the Berkshire Music Center.

Tanglewood

Tonight at 8.15

Special choral concert: Bach's "The Passion of Our Lord according to St. John," Robert Shaw conducting. Open to Friends of the Berkshire Music Center only.

Tomorrow Afternoon

At 4.30 in the chamber music hall there will be a song recital by members of Departments 2 and 4 of the school, under the direction of Ralph Berkowitz, executive assistant to Serge Koussevitzky. The program will be:

Schumann ...... Frauen-Liebe und Leben
Juanita Brumfiel, soprano
Nell Thurman, piano
Debussy .... Fetes Galantes
En Sourdine
Fantoches
Clair de Lune
Janet Hayes, soprano
Lilian Kallir, piano
Brahms .... Two songs
Gestillte Sehnsucht
Geistliches Wiegenlied
Conchita Gaston, mezzo-soprano
Beatrice Brown, viola
Herbert Grossman, piano
Dvorak .... Zigeunerlieder
Rose der Derian, soprano
Herbert Grossman, piano

Tomorrow Night

Series B of the Berkshire Festival will open in the Shed with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting Beethoven's Sixth "Pastoral" symphony and Stravinsky's "Oedipus Rex." Carol Brice, mezzo-soprano; David Lloyd, tenor; James Pease, baritone; Wesley Addy, narator; and a male chorus.

INCORRECT PAGINATION

This Clipping From
POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
NEW YORKER

AUG 2 - 1948

Music Superb At Tanglewood

Concerts presented by the Boston Symphony orchestra at Tanglewood are certainly the quintessence of musical entertainment. Under the powerful direction of Serge Koussevitsky, music director of the orchestra, programs of outstanding perfection are presented for this famous Berkshire Festival, now in its 11th season.

Adding to the beauty of the music is the enchanting setting of Tanglewood. Here, indeed, is fine music with its perfect setting,—the undisturbing simplicity of the Music shed and the surrounding natural charm of the estate. It is no wonder that throngs pour into Tanglewood for these events.

Saturday night's program was a pleasing mixture of modern and romantic works. As the opening feature, Dr. Koussevitsky conducted the orchestra in the broad and bright Symphony No. 3 of Piston. In four movements, "Andantino," "Allegro," "Adagio," and "Allegro," the work is picturesque and varied. Under the conductors baton, it received a bold yet delicate interpretation. Effects of striking contrast were achieved through the abundance of moods.

Featured soloist for the program was Isaac Stern, violinist, who was heard in Prokofieff's Violin Concerto No. 1, Op. 19. This colorful composition is comprised of three movements, "Andantino," "Scherzo," and "Moderato." The variety within the work provides ample opportunity for dramatic presentations, and Mr. Stern was well aware of these flashes of humor, tranquility and verve.

Throughout his performance the violinist displayed admirable technical proficiency combined with a fine feeling for the intricacies of tone and shade. His excellent emphasis brought vigor to the many rhythmic accents.

A fitting conclusion to the program was the Brahms' Symphony No. 1 in C minor, Op. 68. The deep character of the symphony was expertly drawn by the orchestra under Dr. Koussevitsky's leadership. From the first throbbing notes of the 'Un poco sostenuto: Allegro," the richness of the music was revealed with sensitivity. Beautifully contrasted was the rollicking theme of the first movement. Of equal note were the varied thoughts of the last three sections,—the melodious, pensive "Andante Sostenuto," the captivating "Un poco allegretto e grazioso," and the straightforward "Adagio: Allegro non troppo, ma con brio."

The enthusiastic audience was lavish in demonstrating its approval of the orchestra, soloist and Dr. Koussevitsky, who was called for numerous bows.

The expert shading and balance of this orchestra provide the means of producing extraordinary effects and appeal. And attending a concert of the Berkshire Festival is an experience that no music lover should miss. It evokes, somehow, the basic beauty of this art, simple, unadorned.

The Festival will continue through Sunday, Aug. 15, featuring concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra and programs by the various music departments of Tanglewood.

M. K. J.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

AUG 2 - 1948

At Tanglewood

Boston Symphony Ends First Week End of Concerts

By Arthur V. Berger

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 1.—The Boston Symphony's first full week end at Tanglewood, which came to a close with this afternoon's concert, has shaped up in such a way as to provide rather special illumination upon the contemporary symphony.

This view of the occasion was underlined for your reporter by the parallel classroom discussions in the Berkshire Music Center, which were conducted on a far less spectacular plane than the concerts themselves. They helped to give new depth and uniqueness to concerts which differ from what you may hear, without taking the trip, only in the detail of their magnificent outdoor setting in the Berkshire Hills.

The appearance of Darius Milhaud as conductor of his own second symphony this afternoon also helped distinguish these concerts from the city series much more than if the originally scheduled Haydn symphony had been heard in its place. Milhaud's symphonic style, taking its cue from the gracious and flowing Mozartian pattern, presented a striking contrast to Hindemith's symphony, "Mathis der Maler," heard last Thursday. Serge Koussevitzky's reading of the Hindemith, as I have already indicated in these columns on Saturday, revealed its place in the mid-European, Brahmsian line, as music, of grand psychological aims.

Recalls Daring Idioms

Milhaud's symphony has some wild and frantic moments, notably in the eerie second movement, recalling the daring idioms of thirty years ago, which he, among very few others, was instrumental in shaping. But on the whole it proceeds gently without forcing your attention, and the fourth movement, which is Gallic grace and plasticity of line at their best, is for me the most satisfying of the five parts. The melody for the harmonies of a solo violin, giltedged by alto saxophone below, is an extraordinarily tender inspiration. By keeping the saxophone tacit up to this point, Milhaud sets this idea ingeniously in relief.

Last night, Mr. Koussevitzky gave Walter Piston's third symphony, which, like the Milhaud, has to its credit a single New York performance. This was an example of what is being done here in America with the form, and a rehearing suggests that it is one of the finest. Here one of our major composers emerges at the height of his powers. I recall more stirring sections in his second symphony. But the third, which quite intentionally concentrates its greatest substance within the brooding third movement, is better formed on the whole and more consistenty fresh in its material.

Outside of the Berkshire festival activities proper, but of very great interest, was a long and very moving adagietto from young Harold Shapero's symphony for classical orchestra, performed by a student orchestra of the center under Irwin Hoffman, twenty-thre-year-old conducting student of Mr. Koussevitzky

Makes Deep Impression

Even though lamentably out of context and though heard in what virtualy amounted to a mere reading, it made a deep impression. Conceived by the most vital and complex of our younger musical minds, it shares with the Piston the preoccupations of some of our American composers of what is loosely called the "neo-classic" School. Both composers are likely to be astonished at being grouped in this way, since they approach the problem in very different ways, Shapero from the anglo of Beethoven, whose spirit hovers over him these days, and Piston, unwittingly perhaps, via the late nineteenth-century symphonists. But both, in common with Stravinsky, represent a new kind of traditionalism that has nothing to do with conservatism, though it is often mistaken for it.

In former times, radicalism tantalized because it took a while to find the link with tradition. The same myopia now inversely makes it difficult for us to recognize the undeniable presentness in a traditionalism which is, after so many years of enforced originality, logically the order of the day as a means of restoring equilibrium and natural evolutionary flow.

The forums for composing students, led by Aaron Copland, the school's assistant director, brought thoughts like these to my mind. Milhaud and Piston, the guests at these forums, illuminated the musical events mos advanageously. Along with the forums, there were an overwhelming number of subsidiary musical events going on in this beehive of activity. Not the least notable of the week end's offerings were Leonard Bernstein's conducting of Mahler's second symphony at this afternoon's Boston Symphony concert and Isaac Stern's violin playing last night in Prokofieff's first concerto under Mr. Koussevitzky's direction. The artistry of these brilliant young musicians in these very works is familiar enough to New York audiences to give precedence for comment at this time to the modern music on these programs which is still in the category of the unfamiliar, even though some of it has been already heard in New York.

As at the New York City Center last season, Nan Merriman, mezzo-soprano, and Ellabelle Davis, soprano, were Bernstein's gratifying collaborators in the Mahler this afternoon.

---

ible minimum" of 130 trained offi-

Continued on Second Page

firms are under consideration.

"Tanglewood on Parade"

Aug 2 Eagle

Waltzing on Lawn Is Festival Innovation For Europeans' Benefit Tomorrow Night

TANGLEWOOD — There will be waltzing on the lawn to conclude the benefit program at Tanglewood tomorrow night. After the Boston Symphony Orchestra's gala concert at 9.15 when Serge Koussevitzky will conduct three famous watlzes by Strauss, Sibelius and Ravel, Frederick Fennell will lead a student orchestra on the porch of the main house for dancing between the house and the garden. The five-hour fiesta for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center and European musicians will close with fireworks.

Following the student parade at 6, the audience will be invited to a performance of their favorite form of ensemble music. The opera department will give Acts 1 and 4 of Puccini's "La Boheme" in the theatre-concert hall. The advanced orchestra will play, in the Shed, Beethoven's "Coriolanus" overture, Rachmaninoff's second piano concerto and Leonard Bernstein's three dances from "Fancy Free."

In the chamber music hall students of Departments 2, 3 and 4 will illustrate 100 years of chamber music with Mendelssohn's trio No. 1 in D minor, Juon's Divertimento for wind instruments and piano, compositions by students of Aaron Copland and Darius Milhaud, and Chausson's concerto for violin, piano and string quartet. In the orchard, on the rehearsal stage, the chorus will give a public rehearsal of two works to be performed in the Berkshire Festival —Stravinsky's "Oedipus Rex," coached by Hugh Ross, and Brahms' "Requiem."

After an hour out for a picnic supper from 7 to 8, poet Archibald MacLeish will preside over a brief "manifestation" in the Shed, with five leaders in music, the arts and Supreme Court Justice Felix Frankfurter speaking from two to eight minutes. Dr. Koussevitzky, Dr. Howard Hanson, director of the Eastman School of Music, Rochester, N.Y., who will represent UNESCO, and Aaron Copland, composer and assistant director of the Berkshire Music Center, will speak. Cornelia Otis Skinner will recite two Elizabethan sonnets.

At 9.15 the orchestra will play Beethoven's "Lenore Overture," Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf," with Wesley Addy as narrator, and the waltzes.

Notable musicians, artists, writers, statesmen and others who have accepted to sit on the stage are: Dr. Koussevitzky; Dr. Lewis Perry, chairman of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center; Mr. MacLeish; Miss Skinner; Mr. Copeland; Carlton Sprague Smith, director of the music section of the New York Public Library; Boris Goldovsky, pianist and director of opera at the Berkshire Music Center, the New England Conservatory of Music, Boston, and teacher at the Longy School; Dr. Hanson; Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist and director of chamber music at the Center; Darius Milhaud, composer, who conducted his second symphony at yesterday's Festival concert; Samuel Barber, composer and teacher at the Center in 1947; Walter Piston, composer, whose work was played Saturday night; Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, patron of chamber music; Justice Frankfurter; Nicholas Nabokov, composer; Walter Prichard Eaton, writer; John Alden Carpenter, composer; Stuart C. Henry, director of the Berkshire Museum; Rev. J. Herbert Owen, pastor of the Lenox Congregational Church; Stefan Lorant, Lincoln author; Rev. Anson Phelps Stokes; Rev. Hector J. Hebert; Rev. T. Everett McPeake; Mrs. Margaret French Cresson, sculptor and writer; Ture Bengtz, George Picken, artists; Sir Arthur Salter, British United Nations representative; Mitchel Siporin; C. D. Jackson.

Ten albums of Boston Symphony Orchestra recordings will be a second gift to be awarded after the custom-built RCA Victor Berkshire radio-phonograph winner is announced.

For holders of reserved seats or box tickets, the event will open at 4.30 with performances in the garden of Menotti's operetta, "The Telephone," an excerpt from Act 1 of Mozart's "Don Giovanni," and the first scene from Debussy's "Pelleas et Melisande."

The event will take place rain or shine. Tickets are on sale at the box office, Tanglewood, England Brothers and Wood Brothers, Pittsfield, and at the Blue Bird Shop, Stockbridge.

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

Tanglewood Concert to Aid Musicians

A benefit performance by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood tomorrow will open a campaign for assistance to European musicians in need.

The central committee for the benefit includes Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky, Dr. Lewis Perry, Boston; Albert Spaulding, Great Barrington; Mrs. James S. Deeley, Stockbridge; Mrs. Bruce Crane, Dalton; Mrs. Zay Jeffries, Alan J. Blau, and Mrs. George W. Edman, Pittsfield; Mrs. Charles Fox, Miss Kathleen Channing, and Mrs. C. D. Jackson, New York; Mrs. Maurice Firuski, Salisbury; and Frederic J. DeVeau, Groton.

On National Committee

Representing Massachusetts on the national committee are: Judge and Mrs. Jacob J. Kaplan, James S. Plaut, Konrad Bose, Boston; Mrs. A. Kingsley Porter, Cambridge; Mrs. Heyden Channing, Mr. and Mrs. Bruce Sanborn, Mr. and Mrs. Lester Roberts, Mrs. William N. Bullard, Lenox; Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Percival and Mrs. William Penn Cresson, Stockbridge; George Sokolsky, Otis; Rev. and Mrs. Richard Mortimer-Maddox, Mr. and Mrs. Robert K. Wheeler, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Blodgett, and Stephen Crane, Great Barrington; Mrs. Lawrence K. Miller, Mrs. Donald F. McPherson, Mr. and Mrs. Milton B. Warner, Pittsfield; Mrs. Shaun Kelly, Richmond; Dr. James Phinney Baxter, Philip Marshall Brown, Robert G. Barrow, Miss Ellen Safford, and Robert M. Derby, Williamstown; Winthrop M. Crane, III, Dalton; Mrs. Alan Limburg, Windsor; Judge Anthony Hanlon, Adams; Mrs. M. Graeme Haughton, Prides Crossing; Mrs. John Alden Carpenter and Mrs. Alexander Steinert, Beverly; Mr. and Mrs. Allen Forbes, Westwood; Mrs. D. W. Pickman, Hamilton.

Praise for Work

In a letter to Carleton Sprague Smith, a member of the national committee, Assistant Secretary of State George V. Allen wrote that the American Section of the International Society for Contemporary Music, with Dr. Serge Koussevitsky at its head, is working in a field of "great significance." He added that it is the desire of the State Department to support private undertakings such as the benefit performance which are designed to promote mutual understanding and cooperation.

[227]

INCORRECT PAGINATION

This Clipping From
POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
NEW YORKER
AUG 2 - 1948

Music Superb At Tanglewood

Concerts presented by the Boston Symphony orchestra at Tanglewood are certainly the quintessence of musical entertainment. Under the powerful direction of Serge Koussevitsky, music director of the orchestra, programs of outstanding perfection are presented for this famous Berkshire Festival, now in its 11th season.

Adding to the beauty of the music is the enchanting setting of Tanglewood. Here, indeed, is fine music with its perfect setting,—the undisturbing simplicity of the Music shed and the surrounding natural charm of the estate. It is no wonder that throngs pour into Tanglewood for these events.

Saturday night's program was a pleasing mixture of modern and romantic works. As the opening feature, Dr. Koussevitsky conducted the orchestra in the broad and bright Symphony No. 3 of Piston. In four movements, "Andantino," "Allegro," "Adagio," and "Allegro," the work is picturesque and varied. Under the conductors baton, it received a bold yet delicate interpretation. Effects of striking contrast were achieved through the abundance of moods.

Featured soloist for the program was Isaac Stern, violinist, who was heard in Prokofieff's Violin Concerto No. 1, Op. 19. This colorful composition is comprised of three movements, "Andantino," "Scherzo," and "Moderato." The variety within the work provides ample opportunity for dramatic presentations, and Mr. Stern was well aware of these flashes of humor, tranquility and verve.

Throughout his performance the violinist displayed admirable technical proficiency combined with a fine feeling for the intricacies of tone and shade. His excellent emphasis brought vigor to the many rhythmic accents.

A fitting conclusion to the program was the Brahms' Symphony No. 1 in C minor, Op. 68. The deep character of the symphony was expertly drawn by the orchestra under Dr. Koussevitsky's leadership. From the first throbbing notes of the 'Un poco sostenuto: Allegro," the richness of the music was revealed with sensitivity. Beautifully contrasted was the rollicking theme of the first movement. Of equal note were the varied thoughts of the last three sections,—the melodious, pensive "Andante-Sostenuto," the captivating "Un poco allegretto e grazioso," and the straightforward "Adagio: Allegro non troppo, ma con brio."

The enthusiastic audience was lavish in demonstrating its approval of the orchestra, soloist and Dr. Koussevitsky, who was called for numerous bows.

The expert shading and balance of this orchestra provide the means of producing extraordinary effects and appeal. And attending a concert of the Berkshire Festival is an experience that no music lover should miss. It evokes, somehow, the basic beauty of this art, simple, unadorned.

The Festival will continue through Sunday, Aug. 15, featuring concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra and programs by the various music departments of Tanglewood.

M. K. J.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
AUG 2 - 1948

At Tanglewood

Boston Symphony Ends First Week End of Concerts

By Arthur V. Berger

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 1.—The Boston Symphony's first full week end at Tanglewood, which came to a close with this afternoon's concert, has shaped up in such a way as to provide rather special illumination upon the contemporary symphony.

This view of the occasion was underlined for your reporter by the parallel classroom discussions in the Berkshire Music Center, which were conducted on a far less spectacular plane than the concerts themselves. They helped to give new depth and uniqueness to concerts which differ from what you may hear, without taking the trip, only in the detail of their magnificent outdoor setting in the Berkshire Hills.

The appearance of Darius Milhaud as conductor of his own second symphony this afternoon also helped distinguish these concerts from the city series much more than if the originally scheduled Haydn symphony had been heard in its place. Milhaud's symphonic style, taking its cue from the gracious and flowing Mozartian pattern, presented a striking contrast to Hindemith's symphony, "Mathis der Maler," heard last Thursday. Serge Koussevitzky's reading of the Hindemith, as I have already indicated in these columns on Saturday, revealed its place in the mid-European, Brahmsian line, as music, of grand psychological aims.

Recalls Daring Idioms

Milhaud's symphony has some wild and frantic moments, notably in the eerie second movement, recalling the daring idioms of thirty years ago, which he, among very few others, was instrumental in shaping. But on the whole it proceeds gently without forcing your attention, and the fourth movement, which is Gallic grace and plasticity of line at their best, is for me the most satisfying of the five parts. The melody for the harmonies of a solo violin, gilt-edged by alto saxophone below, is an extraordinarily tender inspiration. By keeping the saxophone tacit up to this point, Milhaud sets this idea ingeniously in relief.

Last night, Mr. Koussevitzky gave Walter Piston's third symphony, which, like the Milhaud, has to its credit a single New York performance. This was an example of what is being done here in America with the form, and a rehearing suggests that it is one of the finest. Here one of our major composers emerges at the height of his powers. I recall more stirring sections in his second symphony. But the third, which quite intentionally concentrates its greatest substance within the brooding third movement, is better formed on the whole and more consistenty fresh in its material.

Outside of the Berkshire festival activities proper, but of very great interest, was a long and very moving adagietto from young Harold Shapero's symphony for classical orchestra, performed by a student orchestra of the center under Irwin Hoffman, twenty-thre-year-old conducting student of Mr. Koussevitzky

Makes Deep Impression

Even though lamentably out of context and though heard in what virtualy amounted to a mere reading, it made a deep impression. Conceived by the most vital and complex of our younger musical minds, it shares with the Piston the preoccupations of some of our American composers of what is loosely called the "neo-classic" school. Both composers are likely to be astonished at being grouped in this way, since they approach the problem in very different ways, Shapero from the anglo of Beethoven, whose spirit hovers over him these days, and Piston, unwittingly perhaps, via the late nineteenth-century symphonists. But both, in common with Stravinsky, represent a new kind of traditionalism that has nothing to do with conservatism, though it is often mistaken for it.

In former times, radicalism tantalized because it took a while to find the link with tradition. The same myopia now inversely makes it difficult for us to recognize the undeniable presentness in a traditionalism which is, after so many years of enforced originality, logically the order of the day as a means of restoring equilibrium and natural evolutionary flow.

The forums for composing students, led by Aaron Copland, the school's assistant director, brought thoughts like these to my mind. Milhaud and Piston, the guests at these forums, illuminated the musical events mos advanageously. Along with the forums, there were an overwhelming number of subsidiary musical events going on in this beehive of activity. Not the least notable of the week end's offerings were Leonard Bernstein's conducting of Mahler's second symphony at this afternoon's Boston Symphony concert and Isaac Stern's violin playing last night in Prokofieff's first concerto under Mr. Koussevitzky's direction. The artistry of these brilliant young musicians in these very works is familiar enough to New York audiences to give precedence for comment at this time to the modern music on these programs which is still in the category of the unfamiliar, even though some of it has been already heard in New York.

As at the New York City Center last season, Nan Merriman, mezzo-soprano, and Ellabelle Davis, soprano, were Bernstein's gratifying collaborators in the Mahler this afternoon.

Continued on Second Page

ible minimum" of 130 trained offi-

firms are under consideration.

'Tanglewood on Parade'

Aug 2 Eagle

Waltzing on Lawn Is Festival Innovation For Europeans' Benefit Tomorrow Night

TANGLEWOOD — There will be waltzing on the lawn to conclude the benefit program at Tanglewood tomorrow night. After the Boston Symphony Orchestra's gala concert at 9.15 when Serge Koussevitzky will conduct three famous watlzes by Strauss, Sibelius and Ravel, Frederick Fennell will lead a student orchestra on the porch of the main house for dancing between the house and the garden. The five-hour fiesta for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center and European musicians will close with fireworks.

Following the student parade at 6, the audience will be invited to a performance of their favorite form of ensemble music. The opera department will give Acts 1 and 4 of Puccini's "La Boheme" in the theatre-concert hall. The advanced orchestra will play, in the Shed, Beethoven's "Coriolanus" overture, Rachmaninoff's second piano concerto and Leonard Bernstein's three dances from "Fancy Free."

In the chamber music hall students of Departments 2, 3 and 4 will illustrate 100 years of chamber music with Mendelssohn's trio No. 1 in D minor, Juon's Divertimento for wind instruments and piano, compositions by students of Aaron Copland and Darius Milhaud, and Chausson's concerto for violin, piano and string quartet. In the orchard, on the rehearsal stage, the chorus will give a public rehearsal of two works to be performed in the Berkshire Festival —Stravinsky's "Oedipus Rex," coached by Hugh Ross, and Brahms' "Requiem."

After an hour out for a picnic supper from 7 to 8, poet Archibald MacLeish will preside over a brief "manifestation" in the Shed, with five leaders in music, the arts and Supreme Court Justice Felix Frankfurter speaking from two to eight minutes. Dr. Koussevitzky, Dr. Howard Hanson, director of the Eastman School of Music, Rochester, N.Y., who will represent UNESCO, and Aaron Copland, composer and assistant director of the Berkshire Music Center, will speak. Cornelia Otis Skinner will recite two Elizabethan sonnets.

At 9.15 the orchestra will play Beethoven's "Lenore Overture," Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf," with Wesley Addy as narrator, and the waltzes.

Notable musicians, artists, writers, statesmen and others who have accepted to sit on the stage are: Dr. Koussevitzky; Dr. Lewis Perry, chairman of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center; Mr. MacLeish; Miss Skinner; Mr. Copeland; Carlton Sprague Smith, director of the music section of the New York Public Library; Boris Goldovsky, pianist and director of opera at the Berkshire Music Center, the New England Conservatory of Music, Boston, and teacher at the Longy School; Dr. Hanson; Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist and director of chamber music at the Center; Darius Milhaud, composer, who conducted his second symphony at yesterday's Festival concert; Samuel Barber, composer and teacher at the Center in 1947; Walter Piston, composer, whose work was played Saturday night; Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, patron of chamber music; Justice Frankfurter; Nicholas Nabokov, composer; Walter Prichard Eaton, writer; John Alden Carpenter, composer; Stuart C. Henry, director of the Berkshire Museum; Rev. J. Herbert Owen, pastor of the Lenox Congregational Church; Stefan Lorant, Lincoln author; Rev. Anson Phelps Stokes; Rev. Hector J. Hebert; Rev. T. Everett McPeake; Mrs. Margaret French Cresson, sculptor and writer; Ture Bengtz, George Picken, artists; Sir Arthur Salter, British United Nations representative; Mitchel Siporin; C. D. Jackson.

Ten albums of Boston Symphony Orchestra recordings will be a second gift to be awarded after the custom-built RCA Victor Berkshire radio-phonograph winner is announced.

For holders of reserved seats or box tickets, the event will open at 4.30 with performances in the garden of Menotti's operetta, "The Telephone," an excerpt from Act 1 of Mozart's "Don Giovanni," and the first scene from Debussy's "Pelleas et Melisande."

The event will take place rain or shine. Tickets are on sale at the box office, Tanglewood, England Brothers and Wood Brothers, Pittsfield, and at the Blue Bird Shop, Stockbridge.

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
AUG 2

Tanglewood Concert to Aid Musicians

A benefit performance by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood tomorrow will open a campaign for assistance to European musicians in need.

The central committee for the benefit includes Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky, Dr. Lewis Perry, Boston; Albert Spaulding, Great Barrington; Mrs. James S. Deeley, Stockbridge; Mrs. Bruce Crane, Dalton; Mrs. Zay Jeffries, Alan J. Blau, and Mrs. George W. Edman, Pittsfield; Mrs. Charles Fox, Miss Kathleen Channing, and Mrs. C. D. Jackson, New York; Mrs. Maurice Firuski, Salisbury; and Frederic J. DeVeau, Groton.

On National Committee

Representing Massachusetts on the national committee are: Judge and Mrs. Jacob J. Kaplan, James S. Plaut, Konrad Bose, Boston; Mrs. A. Kingsley Porter, Cambridge; Mrs. Heyden Channing, Mr. and Mrs. Bruce Sanborn, Mr. and Mrs. Lester Roberts, Mrs. William N. Bullard, Lenox; Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Percival and Mrs. William Penn Cresson, Stockbridge; George Sokolsky, Otis; Rev. and Mrs. Richard Mortimer-Maddox, Mr. and Mrs. Robert K. Wheeler, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Blodgett, and Stephen Crane, Great Barrington; Mrs. Lawrence K. Miller, Mrs. Donald F. McPherson, Mr. and Mrs. Milton B. Warner, Pittsfield; Mrs. Shaun Kelly, Richmond; Dr. James Phinney Baxter, Philip Marshall Brown, Robert G. Barrow, Miss Ellen Safford, and Robert M. Derby, Williamstown; Winthrop M. Crane, III, Dalton; Mrs. Alan Limburg, Windsor; Judge Anthony Hanlon, Adams; Mrs. M. Graeme Haughton, Prides Crossing; Mrs. John Alden Carpenter and Mrs. Alexander Steinert, Beverly; Mr. and Mrs. Allen Forbes, Westwood; Mrs. D. W. Pickman, Hamilton.

Praise for Work

In a letter to Carleton Sprague Smith, a member of the national committee, Assistant Secretary of State George V. Allen wrote that the American Section of the International Society for Contemporary Music, with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky at its head, is working in a field of "great significance." He added that it is the desire of the State Department to support private undertakings such as the benefit performance which are designed to promote mutual understanding and cooperation.

[227]

NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM

AUG

Music

Piston 3rd Symphony Hailed at Tanglewood

By ROBERT BAGAR.

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass., Aug. 2.—It can't be said that the Berkshire Symphonic Festival has been neglecting, so far, the works of modern composers. Consider that in the first three days of the festival four out of the eight pieces scheduled were by living masters—Hindemith last Thursday evening; Walter Piston and Serge Prokofieff on Saturday evening, and Darius Milhaud yesterday afternoon.

Under Serge Koussevitzky the Boston Symphony performed Walter Piston's Third Symphony, a work in four movements. Its qualities of excellent workmanship, bright inventiveness, and, in all movements but the third, terseness, were quite evident to Saturday night's audience, which went very enthusiastic over it.

It was my impression that the third movement, Adagio, is unnecessarily long, for all the interesting detail it contains. Something like too much of a good thing, perhaps. Otherwise, the Symphony everywhere reflects the scholarly attributes of its maker, as well as a freshness of spirit and a musical style not easily classifiable, except, perhaps that it might be called urbane American.

The audience loved the Symphony, calling the composer out to the stage numerous times.

Both this work and the following Prokofieff Violin Concerto, No. 1, with Isaac Stern as the soloist, were remarkably delivered. Mr. Stern, one of our most efficient young fiddlers, tossed off the snaggiest passages of the Concerto with perfect aplomb.

I wish that as much could be said for the account of the Brahms First, which closed the Saturday evening program. Mr. Koussevitzky chose tempos for this rendering that were not only strange, but almost beyond the powers of the orchestra.

In the last movement Mr. Koussevitzky took the early part of the movement at such a slow pace that might truly be preface to the noblest of human thoughts. And a grotesquely speeded up version of the chorale was what it lead to, instead. But, besides that, the orchestra was often whipped into such speeds and furies that the musicians had a devil of a time playing all the notes accurately, let alone making the quite impossible transitions and sudden contrasts (demanded by the music) under those conditions.

Yesterday afternoon Darius Milhaud conducted his own Second Symphony. The distinguished French composer, a victim of arthritis, walked slowly upon the stage, supporting himself on crutches. He led the orchestra from a conductor's chair.

This Second Symphony has much lyrical grace, much wit, and a quality best described, perhaps, as a folksy charm. It is a dissonant work, but always interesting to the ear, as well as to the intellect.

The piece might have had a cleaner performance, however, for it did seem to me that the orchestra was off its stride in the more rhythmic parts of the music. At any rate, the audience took the work entirely to its heart, and the composer was given an ovation.

Elaborate Mahler Work.

Leonard Bernstein closed yesterday's program with a very able, if super-robust performance of the Mahler Symphony in C minor, No. 2. This music calls for an orchestra of huge size (backstage musicians and all), besides a soprano, a mezzo soprano, and mixed chorus. The soloists were Ellabelle Davis and Nan Merriman, both acquitting themselves with honor.

For my part, the music is pretty tawdry, as a whole, and I know that many will take issue with that. Bombast and fustian do not always, in my estimation, express clearly such profound and universal thoughts as are attributed to the work by Paul Stefan, who would have us look upon this symphony as a "Symphony of Destiny," with such trappings as the "consuming lamentation," the "triumph of despair," and the final glorification of its human hero.

I didn't mind Mr. Bernstein's extraordinary sonorities, I only minded the fact that the Symphony, for all its pomposities, failed entirely to be convincing as an epic commentary on the nature and destiny of man. Anyway, Mr. Bernstein and his co-workers were applauded wildly.

Eileen Seigh, former Olympic skating star, is one of the features of the Sonja Henie-Arthur M. Wirtz production "Howdy, Mr. Ice," which has passed the half-century mark at the Center Theater.

This Clipping From JACKSON, TENN.
SUN

AUG 2 - 1948

The Little Red House

By GEORGE E. SOKOLSKY

Up here in Sandisfield, we go in for culture in a big way: That is, those of us who do not till the soil and chop down the trees for lumber. And that goes back a long time to the days of Mark Hopkins, Oliver Wendell Holmes—Not the justice but the philosopher—Herman Melcille of "Moby Dick," William Cullen Bryant, Henry Wadsworth Longfellow, to say nothing of the Sedgwick clan who dominated Stockbridge as the Atlantic monthly was the personality of Ellery Sedgwick.

So last Saturday, we foregathered at the little Red House where Nathaniel Hawthorne conceived the Tanglewood tales and where often Longfellow, Melville, Fanny Kemble and Hawthorne met to talk but even more to store in their memories the impress of the beauties of the Berkshires and of each other's personality.

The Little Red House has been restored externally by the National Federation of Music Clubs under the leadership of Mrs. Guy Gannett, the wife of the Maine publisher, and a gracious and devoted lady. Manning Hawthorne was there to represent his grandfather, Nathaniel, and Henry Wadsworth Longfellow Dana, whose maternal grandfather was the poet and whose paternal grandfather wrote "Two Years Before the Mast," delivered a brilliant and witty address prepared as only Harry can when he takes the trouble, which is not often enough.

We were blessed with the best of Berkshire weather, as we sat in the shadow of Monument Mountain and looked across the lake and listened to Serge Koussevitzky accept the little house ~~which is to be~~ used as studios for musicians who come to Tanglewood to improve themselves. And this is so important because out of Tanglewood will in time come American composers, American conductors, and American artists and all the internationalism of its atmosphere will go by the board. For no one can be in this New England long without becoming part of its rock and soil, without feeling the three centuries of America in the marrow of his bones.

Just as in the middle nineteenth century, this very place produced for this country a lasting, indigenous literature, so are we now on the threshold of finding here a lasting, indigenous American music. That indeed is a pot of gold.

As I sat upon a rock, upon which creeped myrtle and rose, I could not help but think that at that very moment were gathered in Philadelphia others who also called themselves Americans but who, somehow, had been cut off at the roots, or who, coming latterly, had no depth to their roots, and while we steeped ourselves richly in the lore of our own land, they were shrieking foully against their mother country and, gazing upon her beauties, saw only nettles and thistles, while the mirage from afar was richly verdant.

Yet their curses will wither on the vine. I recalled that Balaam, when pressured to curse, sang:

"How goodly are thy tents, O Jacob, and they tabernacles, O Israel!

"As the valleys are they spread forth, as gardens by the river's side, as the trees of Lign Aloes which the Lord hath planted, and as cedar trees beside the waters."

For who can curse such a country as this and who can be its enemy? How varied are the ways of its people and there are none to order them to do this and that and to have no will of their own. Those in Philadelphia were free to steep themselves in shrill hate and we at Tanglewood were free to worship America's glorious past and to restore her monuments. And in a thousand places men and women were free to do as they minded with none to force them to do otherwise. And in a thousand places, often obscure, with none to write their histories, were, at that very moment, men and women devoted voluntarily to good and righteous service.

That is America and we who abide in these hills feel it so strongly, for here Longfellow caught the lines of Evangeline and here Hawthorne came after he had already written "The Scarlet Letter," and here Mark Hopkins sat on a log and founded a college. It is in these hills that one senses the manhood that produced this nation.

This Clipping From
CHARLESTON, S. C.
NEWS COURIER

AUG 2 - 1948

The Little Red House

By George E. Sokolsky

Up here in Sandisfield, we go in for culture in a big way; that is, those of us who do not till the soil and chop down the trees for lumber. And that goes back a long time to the days of Mark Hopkins, Oliver Wendell Holmes—not the justice but the philosopher—Herman Melville of "Moby Dick," William Cullen Bryant, Henry Wadsworth Longfellow, to say nothing of the Sedgwick clan who dominated Stockbridge as The Atlantic Monthly was the personality of Ellery Sedgwick.

So last Saturday, we foregathered at the Little Red House where Nathaniel Hawthorne conceived the Tanglewood Tales and where often Longfellow, Melville, Fanny Kemble and Hawthorne met to talk but even more to store in their memories the impress of the beauties of the Berkshires and of each other's personality.

The Little Red House has been restored externally by the National Federation of Music Clubs under the leadership of Mrs. Guy Gannett, the wife of the Maine publisher, and a gracious and devoted lady. Manning Hawthorne was there to represent his grandfather, Nathaniel, and Henry Wadsworth Longfellow Dana, whose maternal grandfather was the poet and whose paternal grandfather wrote "Two Years Before the Mast," delivered a brilliant and witty address prepared as only Harry can when he takes the trouble, which is not often enough.

We were blessed with the best of Berkshire weather, as we sat in the shadow of Monument Mountain and looked across the lake and listened to Serge Koussevitzky accept the little house which is to be used as studios for musicians who come to Tanglewood to improve themselves. And this is so important because out of Tanglewood will in time come American composers, American conductors, and American artists and all the internationalism of its atmosphere will go by the board. For not one can be in this New England long without becoming part of its rock and soil, without feeling the three centuries of America in the marrow of his bones.

Just as in the middle 19th century, this very place produced for this country a lasting, indigenous literature, so are we now on the threshold of finding here a lasting, indigenous American music. That indeed is a pot of gold.

As I sat upon a rock, upon which creeped myrtle and rose, I could not help but think that at that very moment were gathered in Philadelphia others who also called themselves Americans but who, somehow, had been cut off at the roots, or who, coming latterly, had no depth to their roots. And while we steeped ourselves richly in the lore of our own land, they were shrieking foully against their mother country and, gazing upon her beauties, saw only nettles and thistles, while the mirage from afar was richly verdant.

Yet their curses will wither on the vine. I recalled that Balaam, when pressured to curse, sang:

"How goodly are thy tents, O Jacob, and thy tabernacles, O Israel!

"As the valleys are they spread forth, as gardens by the river's side, as the trees of lign aloes which the Lord hath planted, and as cedar trees beside the waters."

For who can curse such a country as this and who can be its enemy? How varied are the ways of its people and there are none to order them to do this and that and to have no will of their own. Those in Philadelphia were free to steep themselves in shrill hate and we at Tanglewood were free to worship America's glorious past and to restore her monuments. And in a thousand places men and women were free to do as they minded with none to force them to do otherwise. And in a thousand places, often obscure, with none to write their histories, were, at that very moment, men and women devoted voluntarily to good and righteous service.

That is America and we who abide in these hills feel it so strongly, for here Longfellow caught the lines of Evangeline and here Hawthorne came after he had already written "The Scarlet Letter," and here Mark Hopkins sat on a log and founded a college. It is in these hills that one senses the manhood that produced this nation.

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
AMERICAN

AUG 2 - 1948

Tanglewood Concert Thrills Thousands

Thousands of music lovers each season are discovering the thrill of hearing contemporary and classical symphony by the Boston Symphony Orchestra ~~in the spec~~tacular setting of the Berkshire Hills at Tanglewood.

Saturday night, in the first full week end of festival concerts, Dr. Serge Koussevitsky led the orchestra in a performance of "Brahms' First Symphony" that was richly satisfying. The grandeur of the score and its interpretation gripped listeners with an intenseness difficult to cast off at the concert's close.

The balance of Saturday's program illustrated the policy of the festival's directors to present "new" music in challenge to a repertoire grown familiar by repetition.

The challenge is for orchestra and audience. Both are responding enthusiastically.

The program offered works by two reflective contemporary composers, Walter Piston, whose "Symphony No. 3" was given, and Serge Prokofieff, represented by his "First Violin Concerto."

Piston's Symphony, commissioned by Dr. Koussevitsky, was completed last year and introduced by the Boston Symphony early this year before it was awarded a Pulitzer Prize for musical composition.

An example of adaptation of modern musical technique to symphonic structure, it shows Piston still developing, entirely capable of melodic form infinitely more appealing to listeners than the cold purity of atonal music.

The composer was on hand to hear the performance and shared repeated bows with the conductor afer the playing.

The Prokofieff concerto was almost overshadowed by the forcefulness of Piston's work, although Stern gave it more than adequate performance.

Programs of diversified phases of music supplement the public festival schedule. Student orchestra concerts are open by invitation to friends of the Berkshire Music Center, and a pleasant subsidiary to the Saturday night Music Shed program was a series of opera excerpts presented in the afternoon in the Theater-Concert Hall by the Music Center's opera department.

FZ

[228]

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

AUG 2 - 1948

Bernstein Scores Hit in Mahler's Symphony

Chorus, Soloists Join Orchestra Under Young Leader

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

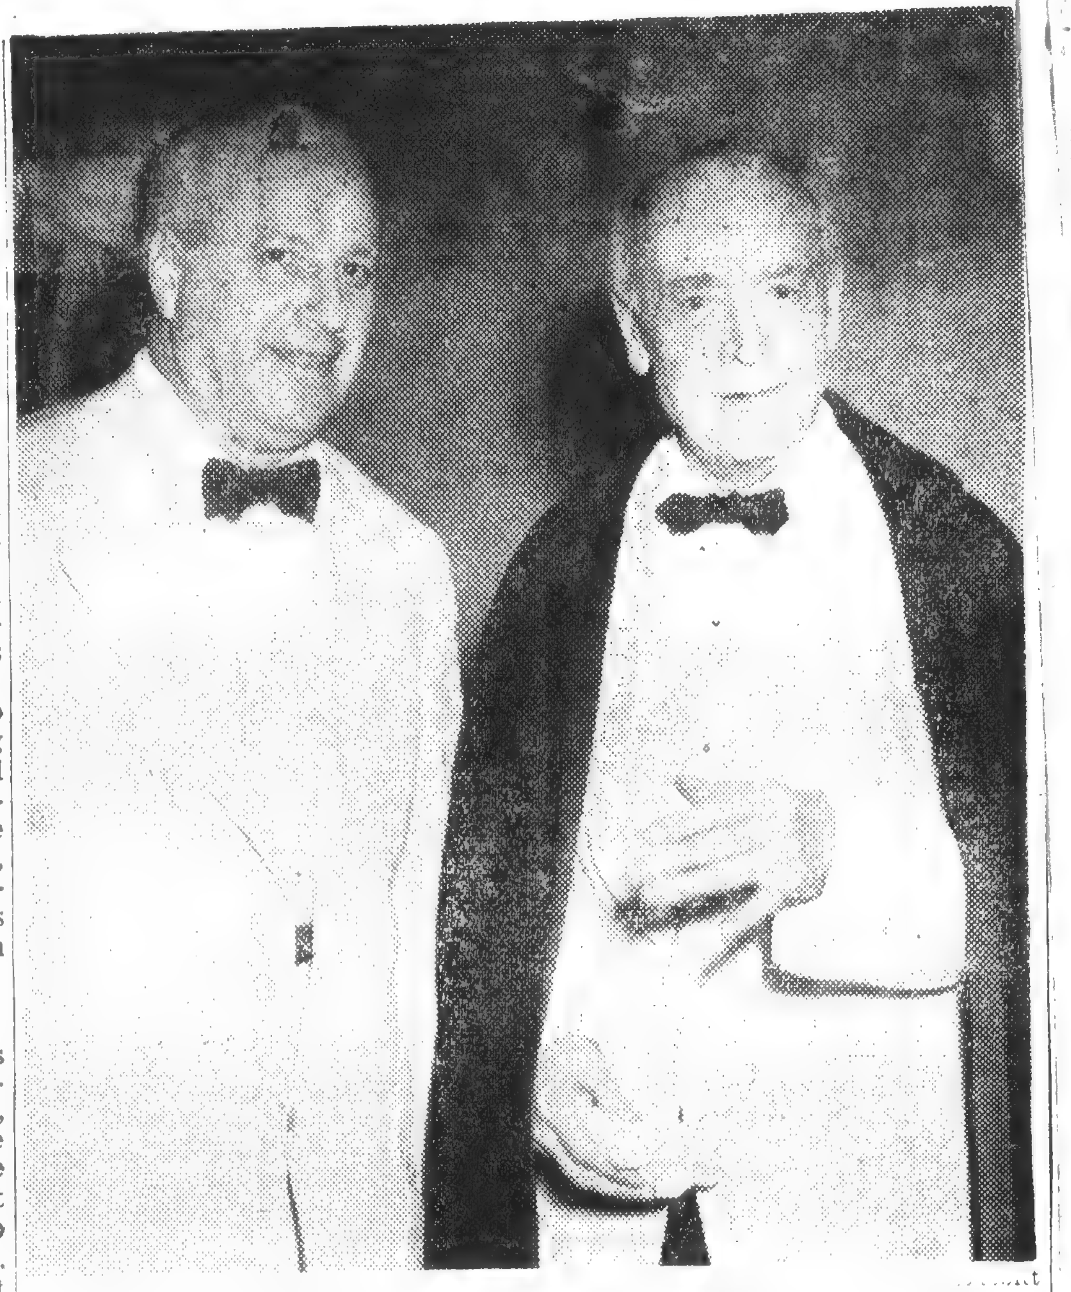
TANGLEWOOD—The first of the three week ends of the Berkshire Festival came to an exciting close yesterday afternoon when the Boston Symphony led by Leonard Bernstein played the Mahler second symphony. All previous attendance records for the first series were broken as 27,400 turned out for the three-day concerts. A crowd of 9600 paid admissions yesterday, 10,300 Saturday night and 7500 on Thursday. Last year's total for the first series, a previous record, was 23,500.

Yesterday's audience stayed to the final note of the long, taxing and wearing program to cheer and applaud the large orchestra, soloists, chorus and their leader. The symphony has acquired a name, "The Resurrection Symphony," because the verses used by the chorus in the final movement are from Klopstock's Ode "Aufersteh'n."

Achieves Herculean Task

The score calls for a tremendous orchestra, extra woodwind, and especially augmented brass sections, extra percussion and an organ. The first three movements are for the orchestra alone; a contralto soloist sings in the fourth and the soprano and the chorus enter in the fifth. The last three are played without stopping. It was a Herculean task that Bernstein achieved. He has developed a podium technique which is extremely vivid and graphic. He called for the entrance of the celli and basses in the second bar, after the strong forte in the viols, with gestures of startling violence. But they conveyed the emotion and the passionate immersion he undergoes when conducting, and the means are not really the issue. His strenuous indications, however, did not draw consistent response from the orchestra, for several times he called for what must have been leonine and was delivered of something appreciably less. His labors over the gently delightful, sympathetic andante gave the impression he was pressing or squeezing it out of resisting wet clay. This movement, after reasonable rehearsing, plays itself in the hands of an orchestra of the calibre of the Boston. His epic demands came so often that the audience, and the orchestra as well, were drained at the completion of the heroic work. The second and third movements have an ingratiating rhythmic swing and character. The remainder of the music is a narrative and could well be played in the pit with action and mime to portray the story.

The chorus, beautifully trained by Hugh Ross, was first heard (at quarter to six, incidentally) in a rarely achieved quality of restraint; and as the music proceeded, the voices unfolded to release untold power. Nan Merriman had a short solo in the fourth movement, "Man Lies in Greatest Need," in which she acquitted herself with the greatest of vocal warmth and deeply felt and understood style. She sustained her tones with ease and equality although there was the slightest deviation from pitch. The soprano, Ellabelle Davis, has less opportunity to display her art, but in the occasions allotted her, she sang, too, with beauty. The ovation at the completion of the colossal work found all the participants sharing in the applause, and Bernstein embracing all within distance.



Dr. Serge Koussevitzky greets Walter Piston, whose third symphony was heard Saturday evening at Tanglewood.

The concert had opened with the second symphony of Darius Milhaud, with the composer conducting. Mr. Milhaud is on the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center this summer. He is incapacitated by arthritis and came from the wings on crutches to take a seat placed on the raised podium for his convenience. His symphony has five movements, all moderately short, and they are entitled "Paisible," "Mysterieux," "Douloureux," "Avec Serenite" and "Allelouia."

It does not pretend to have a tragic lament to portray as does the Mahler, and thus in many places it is delightfully popular in spirit. There are also passages where the processes are less apparent, leaving melody or harmonic progression or contrapuntal writing quite obscured. He writes with an individual style which is frequently superficial enough to be immediately tangible. A dependable sense of orchestral sound was one of the agreeable features of the whole symphony.

Saturday Program

The Saturday evening program, in a succession of gala events, was also an outstanding concert. The welcome accorded Dr. Koussevitzky when he appeared at the beginning of the program set the tenor of the evening, and the Boston musical director was instantaneous in his response. The third symphony of Walter Piston, which had its premier performance only some half year ago in Boston, was commissioned by the Koussevitzky Musical Foundation and is dedicated "to the memory of Natalie Koussevitzky." The conductor gave of the last shred of his musical fibre to put spirit and shape to the craftsmanship of the Harvard professor and he found malleable material more often than not. There are still stretches of polyphonic intricacies which are not easily penetrable, but more apparent are lyric and folksy melodies harmonized not only with Mr. Piston's conceded skill but with particularly effective orchestration. The swifter movements, the second and fourth, are of decisive and original rhythmic patterns which Koussevitzky imbued with a biting attack and which the orchestra gave incisive and virtuoso elan. Mr. Piston was called to the stage from his seat in the audience and was applauded with long enthusiasm.

Isaac Stern's playing of the Prokofieff first concerto was an example of superb violin playing and musicianship. It was written 35 years ago when the composer was only 22 and, as John Burk pointed out in the program notes, "the orchestra is of symphonic interest and in no sense an accompaniment." Stern's tone is something to remember. Its even fluidity, in all registers and crossing the strings, just keeps coming without forcing and with remarkably relaxed effort. And when he chooses, and it is appropriate, he flings himself into some of the more technical passages with abandon and without thought of caution, yet always maintains the purity and warmth of tone which is such a significant mark of his artistry. The orchestral assistance was kept at such a perfect restraint it must be here noted that the soloist's efforts were allowed to emerge in their best features. The ovation which the performance evoked was without bounds in its frenzy.

The Brahms first is one in the catalogue of mature work in the repertory of an artist such as Koussevitzky. It has been polished and refined; it is understood with a deep insight and conception. Fired as he was Saturday by an excited audience, he makes such a symphony work of dramatic grandeur. Repetitions over the years may vary in details for any one of a number of seasons. The slow movement may lack a speck of its more normal serenity as did occur at this concert, but the basic formula the inner construction, is a constant thing. The orchestra under such conditions sounds with a glory and a majesty which nothing but music can produce. The audience's reaction, which is always a major part of the occasion at Tanglewood, was, as might have been expected, a personal triumph for Koussevitzky.

TUCSON, ARIZ.
CITIZEN

AUG [illegible]

'How Goodly Are Thy Tents--'

By George E. Sokolsky

Up here in Sandisfield, we go in for culture in a big way; that is, those of us who do not till the soil and chop down the trees for lumber. And that goes back a long time to the days of Mark Hopkins, Oliver Wendell Holmes—not the justice but the philosopher—Herman Melville of "Moby Dick," William Cullen Bryant, Henry Wadsworth Longfellow, to say nothing of the Sedgwick clan who dominated Stockbridge as the Atlantic Monthly was the personality of Ellery Sedgwick.

So last Saturday, we foregathered at the Little Red House where Nathaniel Hawthorne conceived the Tanglewood Tales and where often Longfellow, Melville, Fanny Kemble and Hawthorne met to talk but even more to store in their memories the impress of the beauties of the Berkshires and of each other's personality.

The Little Red House has been restored externally by the National Federation of Music clubs under the leadership of Mrs. Guy Gannett, the wife of the Maine publisher, and a gracious and devoted lady. Manning Hawthorne was there to represent his grandfather, Nathaniel, and Henry Wadsworth Longfellow Dana, whose maternal grandfather was the poet and whose paternal grandfather wrote "Two Years Before the Mast," delivered a brilliant and witty address prepared as only Harry can when he takes the trouble, which is not often enough.

We were blessed with the best of Berkshire weather, as we sat in the shadow of Monument Mountain and looked across the lake and listened to Serge Koussevitzky accept the little house which is to be used as studios for musicians who come to Tanglewood to improve themselves. And this is so important because out of Tanglewood will in time come American composers, American conductors, and American artists and all the internationalism of its atmosphere will go by the board. For no one can be in this New England long without becoming part of its rock and soil, without feeling the three centuries of America in the marrow of his bones.

Just as in the middle nineteenth century, this very place produced for this country a lasting, indigenous literature, so are we now on the threshold of finding here a lasting, indigenous American music. That indeed is a pot of gold.

As I sat upon a rock, upon which creeped myrtle and rose, I could not help but think that at that very moment were gathered in Philadelphia others who also called themselves Americans but who, somehow, had been cut off at the roots, or who, coming latterly, had no depth to their roots. And while we steeped ourselves richly in the lore of our own land, they were shrieking foully against their mother country and, gazing upon her beauties, saw only nettles and thistles, while the mirage from afar was richly verdant.

Yet their curses will wither on the vine. I recalled that Balaam, when pressured to curse, sang:

> "How goodly are thy tents, O Jacob, and thy tabernacles, O Israel!
>
> "As the valleys are they spread forth, as gardens by the river's side, as the trees of lign aloes which the Lord hath planted, and as cedar trees beside the waters."

For who can curse such a country as this and who can be its enemy? How varied are the ways of its people and there are none to order them to do this and that and to have no will of their own. Those in Philadelphia were free to steep themselves in shrill hate and we at Tanglewood were free to worship America's glorious past and to restore her monuments. And in a thousand places men and women were free to do as they minded with none to force them to do otherwise. And in a thousand places, often obscure, with none to write their histories, were, at that very moment, men and women devoted voluntarily to good and righteous service.

That is America and we who abide in these hills feel it so strongly, for here Longfellow caught the lines of Evangeline and here Hawthorne came after he had already written "The Scarlet Letter," and here Mark Hopkins sat on a log and founded a college. It is in these hills that one senses the manhood that produced this nation.

(© 1948, King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

AUG 2 - 1948

Bernstein Scores Hit in Mahler's Symphony

Chorus, Soloists Join Orchestra Under Young Leader

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

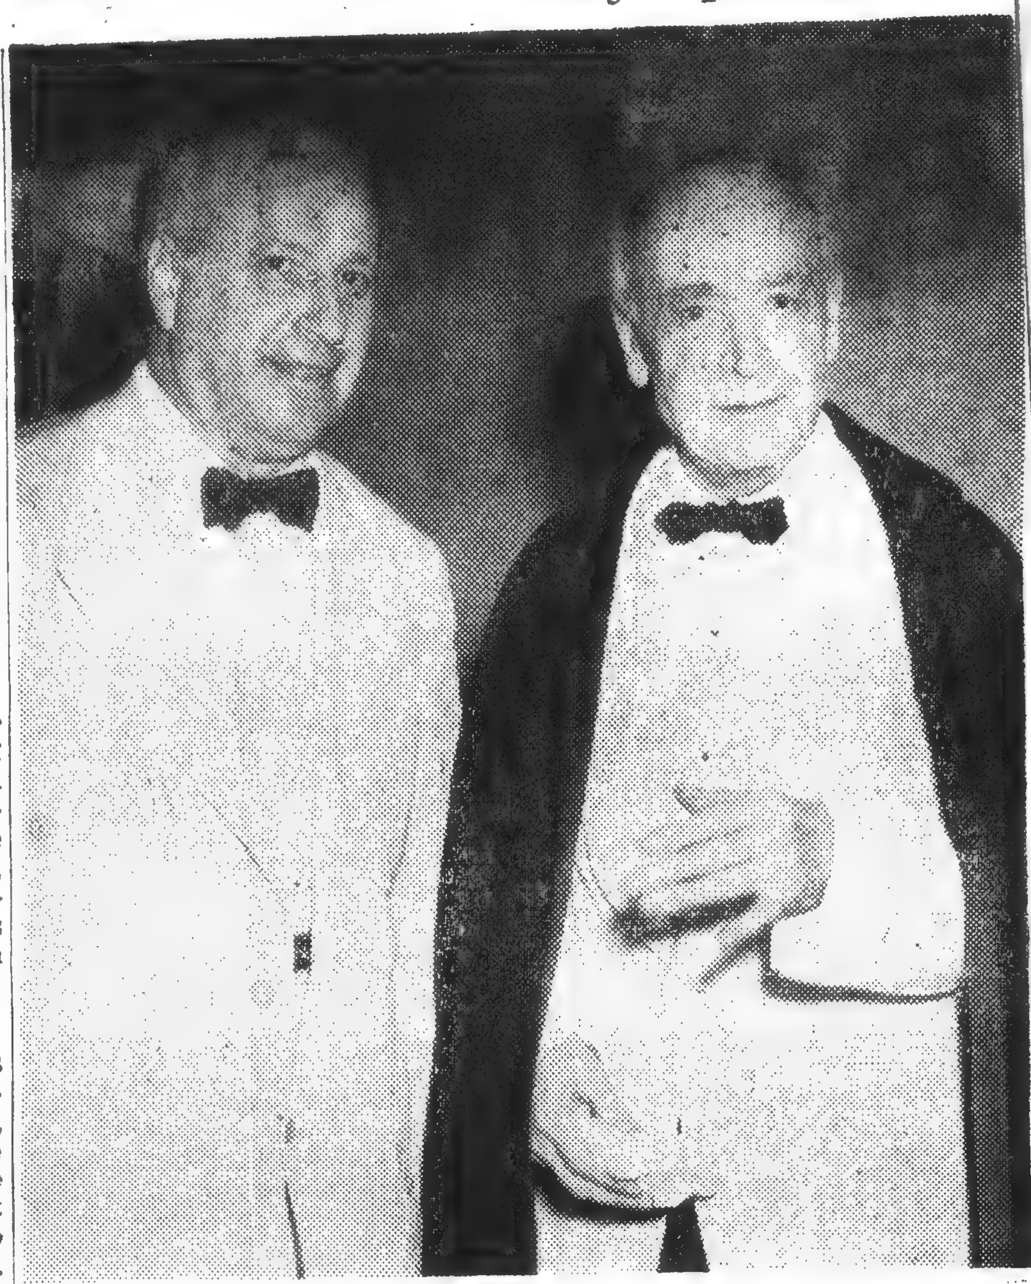
TANGLEWOOD—The first of the three week ends of the Berkshire Festival came to an exciting close yesterday afternoon when the Boston Symphony led by Leonard Bernstein played the Mahler second symphony. All previous attendance records for the first series were broken as 27,400 turned out for the three-day concerts. A crowd of 9600 paid admissions yesterday, 10,300 Saturday night and 7500 on Thursday. Last year's total for the first series, a previous record, was 23,500.

Yesterday's audience stayed to the final note of the long, taxing and wearing program to cheer and applaud the large orchestra, soloists, chorus and their leader. The symphony has acquired a name, "The Resurrection Symphony," because the verses used by the chorus in the final movement are from Klopstock's Ode "Aufersteh'n."

Achieves Herculean Task

The score calls for a tremendous orchestra, extra woodwind, and especially augmented brass sections, extra percussion and an organ. The first three movements are for the orchestra alone; a contralto soloist sings in the fourth and the soprano and the chorus enter in the fifth. The last three are played without stopping. It was a Herculean task that Bernstein achieved. He has developed a podium technique which is extremely vivid and graphic. He called for the entrance of the celli and basses in the second bar, after the strong forte in the viols, with gestures of startling violence. But they conveyed the emotion and the passionate immersion he undergoes when conducting, and the means are not really the issue. His strenuous indications, however, did not draw consistent response from the orchestra, for several times he called for what must have been leonine and was delivered of something appreciably less. His labors over the gently delightful, sympathetic andante gave the impression he was pressing or squeezing it out of resisting wet clay. This movement, after reasonable rehearsing, plays itself in the hands of an orchestra of the calibre of the Boston. His epic demands came so often that the audience, and the orchestra as well, were drained at the completion of the heroic work. The second and third movements have an ingratiating rhythmic swing and character. The remainder of the music is a narrative and could well be played in the pit with action and mime to portray the story.

The chorus, beautifully trained by Hugh Ross, was first heard (at quarter to six, incidentally) in a rarely achieved quality of restraint; and as the music proceeded, the voices unfolded to release untold power. Nan Merriman had a short solo in the fourth movement, "Man Lies in Greatest Need," in which she acquitted herself with the greatest of vocal warmth and deeply felt and understood style. She sustained her tones with ease and equality although there was the slightest deviation from pitch. The soprano, Ellabelle Davis, has less opportunity to display her art, but in the occasions allotted her, she sang, too, with beauty. The ovation at the completion of the colossal work found all the participants sharing in the applause, and Bernstein embracing all within distance.



Dr. Serge Koussevitzky greets Walter Piston, whose third symphony was heard Saturday evening at Tanglewood.

The concert had opened with the second symphony of Darius Milhaud, with the composer conducting. Mr. Milhaud is on the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center this summer. He is incapacitated by arthritis and came from the wings on crutches to take a seat placed on the raised podium for his convenience. His symphony has five movements, all moderately short, and they are entitled "Paisible," "Mysterieux," "Douloureux," "Avec Serenite" and "Allelouia."

It does not pretend to have a tragic lament to portray as does the Mahler, and thus in many places it is delightfully popular in spirit. There are also passages where the processes are less apparent, leaving melody or harmonic progression or contrapuntal writing quite obscured. He writes with an individual style which is frequently superficial enough to be immediately tangible. A dependable sense of orchestral sound was one of the agreeable features of the whole symphony.

Saturday Program

The Saturday evening program, in a succession of gala events, was also an outstanding concert. The welcome accorded Dr. Koussevitzky when he appeared at the beginning of the program set the tenor of the evening, and the Boston musical director was instantaneous in his response. The third symphony of Walter Piston, which had its premier performance only some half year ago in Boston, was commissioned by the Koussevitzky Musical Foundation and is dedicated "to the memory of Natalie Koussevitzky." The conductor gave of the last shred of his musical fibre to put spirit and shape to the craftsmanship of the Harvard professor and he found malleable material more often than not. There are still stretches of polyphonic intricacies which are not easily penetrable, but more apparent are lyric and folksy melodies harmonized not only with Mr. Piston's conceded skill but with particularly effective orchestration. The swifter movements, the second and fourth, are of decisive and original rhythmic patterns which Koussevitzky imbued with a biting attack and which the orchestra gave incisive and virtuoso elan. Mr. Piston was called to the stage from his seat in the audience and was applauded with long enthusiasm.

Isaac Stern's playing of the Prokofieff first concerto was an example of superb violin playing and muscianship. It was written 35 years ago when the composer was only 22 and, as John Burk pointed out in the program notes, "the orchestra is of symphonic interest and in no sense an accompaniment." Stern's tone is something to remember. Its even fluidity, in all registers and crossing the strings, just keeps coming without forcing and with remarkably relaxed effort. And when he chooses, and it is appropriate, he flings himself into some of the more technical passages with abandon and without thought of caution, yet always maintains the purity and warmth of tone which is such a significant mark of his artistry. The orchestral assistance was kept at such a perfect restraint it must be here noted that the soloist's efforts were allowed to emerge in their best features. The ovation which the performance evoked was without bounds in its frenzy.

The Brahms first is one in the catalogue of mature work in the repertory of an artist such as Koussevitzky. It has been polished and refined; it is understood with a deep insight and conception. Fired as he was Saturday by an excited audience, he makes such a symphony work of dramatic grandeur. Repetitions over the years may vary in details for any one of a number of reasons. The slow movement may lack a speck of its more normal serenity as did occur at this concert, but the basic formula the inner construction, is a constant thing. The orchestra under such conditions sounds with a glory and a majesty which nothing but music can produce. The audience's reaction, which is always a major part of the occasion at Tanglewood, was, as might have been expected, a personal triumph for Koussevitzky.

TUCSON, ARIZ.
CITIZEN

AUG 2 - 1948

'How Goodly Are Thy Tents--'

By George E. Sokolsky

Up here in Sandisfield, we go in for culture in a big way; that is, those of us who do not till the soil and chop down the trees for lumber. And that goes back a long time to the days of Mark Hopkins, Oliver Wendell Holmes—not the justice but the philosopher—Herman Melville of "Moby Dick," William Cullen Bryant, Henry Wadsworth Longfellow, to say nothing of the Sedgwick clan who dominated Stockbridge as the Atlantic Monthly was the personality of Ellery Sedgwick.

So last Saturday, we foregathered at the Little Red House where Nathaniel Hawthorne conceived the Tanglewood Tales and where often Longfellow, Melville, Fanny Kemble and Hawthorne met to talk but even more to store in their memories the impress of the beauties of the Berkshires and of each other's personality.

The Little Red House has been restored externally by the National Federation of Music clubs under the leadership of Mrs. Guy Gannett, the wife of the Maine publisher, and a gracious and devoted lady. Manning Hawthorne was there to represent his grandfather, Nathaniel, and Henry Wadsworth Longfellow Dana, whose maternal grandfather was the poet and whose paternal grandfather wrote "Two Years Before the Mast," delivered a brilliant and witty address prepared as only Harry can when he takes the trouble, which is not often enough.

We were blessed with the best of Berkshire weather, as we sat in the shadow of Monument Mountain and looked across the lake and listened to Serge Koussevitzky accept the little house which is to be used as studios for musicians who come to Tanglewood to improve themselves. And this is so important because out of Tanglewood will in time come American composers, American conductors, and American artists and all the internationalism of its atmosphere will go by the board. For no one can be in this New England long without becoming part of its rock and soil, without feeling the three centuries of America in the marrow of his bones.

Just as in the middle nineteenth century, this very place produced for this country a lasting, indigenous literature, so are we now on the threshold of finding here a lasting, indigenous American music. That indeed is a pot of gold.

As I sat upon a rock, upon which creeped myrtle and rose, I could not help but think that at that very moment were gathered in Philadelphia others who also called themselves Americans but who, somehow, had been cut off at the roots, or who, coming latterly, had no depth to their roots. And while we steeped ourselves richly in the lore of our own land, they were shrieking foully against their mother country and, gazing upon her beauties, saw only nettles and thistles, while the mirage from afar was richly verdant.

Yet their curses will wither on the vine. I recalled that Balaam, when pressured to curse, sang:

> "How goodly are thy tents, O Jacob, and thy tabernacles, O Israel!
>
> "As the valleys are they spread forth, as gardens by the river's side, as the trees of lign aloes which the Lord hath planted, and as cedar trees beside the waters."

For who can curse such a country as this and who can be its enemy? How varied are the ways of its people and there are none to order them to do this and that and to have no will of their own. Those in Philadelphia were free to steep themselves in shrill hate and we at Tanglewood were free to worship America's glorious past and to restore her monuments. And in a thousand places men and women were free to do as they minded with none to force them to do otherwise. And in a thousand places, often obscure, with none to write their histories, were, at that very moment, men and women devoted voluntarily to good and righteous service.

That is America and we who abide in these hills feel it so strongly, for here Longfellow caught the lines of Evangeline and here Hawthorne came after he had already written "The Scarlet Letter," and here Mark Hopkins sat on a log and founded a college. It is in these hills that one senses the manhood that produced this nation.

(© 1948, King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

[229]

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

AUG 2 - 1948

The Tanglewood Festival Begins Its Eleventh Season

After 10 years it is unlikely that the most confirmed pessimist or envious subversive from other areas would doubt that the Tanglewood Festival is firmly established. To such unbelievers, the attendance at the main concerts in the Shed of the opening week, furnish conclusive answer. The total paid attendance of the first series was 27,400, which is a new record for the initial trio. Saturday night the attendance was 10,300; Sunday afternoon it was 9600, the reduction possibly being due to the fact that Dr. Koussevitzky was not conducting or possibly ~~because~~ the program did not contain any work from the established repertoire. While their abstention is understandable, those who stayed away missed a treat. If audience reaction is any criterion, Mr. Bernstein's conducting of the Mahler second symphony was extraordinary.

The Tanglewood Festival has its detractors and will continue to have them. There are those who believe, or at least assert that most of the audiences are composed of curiosity-seekers or those who merely follow the crowd, and that few of the listeners are interested in music. This ingenious hypothesis sounds to us highly unlikely; we cannot imagine 10,000 people continuing year after year to pay $2 to $6 a seat for performances which they attend merely for the sake of being seen or doing what Rome does.

There are also those who say that the Festival has ruined the Berkshires and that the calm, peace and rustic charm of the county have been destroyed forever. It is true that with the influx of 10,000 people every week end, there is considerably less solitude and that the madding crowd is particularly evident to local residents living near Tanglewood. Yet except for a limited area for a limited time, there is little sign that Berkshire County is becoming over-crowded. At the height of the Festival season, the would-be Daniel Boone can find solitude in large lumps if he looks for it in the right places—which is not to be found in the middle of Route 20 or just off the hotel porch, to be sure. As to the quality of those attracted by the Festival, it is hard to see how they will do us any damage. The type who are interested in symphonic music are in general of high quality intellectually and artistically and culturally. Admittedly there are some inevitable results of the large attendance that are not desirable—the increasing number of pop-dispensaries and hot-dog stands. But music lovers and music students have to eat, and so far neither the munching of the frankfurters nor the phizzing of the carbonated drinks has served to drown out the music.

PAGE 6—WATERBURY AMERICAN, August 2nd

Tanglewood Concert Thrills Thousands

Thousands of music lovers each season are discovering the thrill of hearing contemporary and classical symphony by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the spectacular setting of the Berkshire Hills at Tanglewood.

Saturday night, in the first full week end of festival concerts, Dr. Serge Koussevitsky led the orchestra in a performance of "Brahms' First Symphony" that was richly satisfying. The grandeur of the score and its interpretation gripped listeners with an intenseness difficult to cast off at the concert's close.

The balance of Saturday's program illustrated the policy of the festival's directors to present "new" music in challenge to a repertoire grown familiar by repetition.

The challenge is for orchestra and audience. Both are responding enthusiastically.

The program offered works by two reflective contemporary composers, Walter Piston, whose "Symphony No. 3" was given, and Serge Prokofieff, represented by his "First Violin Concerto."

Piston's Symphony, commissioned by Dr. Koussevitsky, was completed last year and introduced by the Boston Symphony early this year before it was awarded a Pulitzer Prize for musical composition.

An example of adaptation of modern musical technique to symphonic structure, it shows Piston still developing, entirely capable of melodic form infinitely more appealing to listeners than the cold purity of atonal music.

The composer was on hand to hear the performance and shared repeated bows with the conductor afer the playing.

The Prokofieff concerto was almost overshadowed by the forcefulness of Piston's work, although Stern gave it more than adequate performance.

Programs of diversified phases of music supplement the public festival schedule. Student orchestra concerts are open by invitation to friends of the Berkshire Music Center, and a pleasant subsidiary to the Saturday night Music Shed program was a series of opera excerpts presented in the afternoon in the Theater-Concert Hall by the Music Center's opera department.

FZ

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

AUG 2 - 1948

Afternoon of Contrast At Berkshire Festival

Darius Milhaud Conducts Own Second Symphony at Tanglewood; Leonard Bernstein Provides Dramatic Show With Mahler's 'Resurrection'

By W. HARLEY RUDKIN

Leonard Bernstein conducting anything is a highly volatile experience. Turning him loose on such a remarkable composition as Gustav Mahler's Second Symphony was a promise of podium pyrotechnics which the young conductor exploited to the hilt before a large and enthusiastic audience at Tanglewood's Music Shed yesterday afternoon.

In its own right, the Mahler composition, styled the "Resurrection," covers a range of dramatic music that is very nearly all things to all listeners. It is grand in the truly grand manner; by turns it is deft, lively, pleading, urgent, and some of the time just plain noisy, winding up with a burst of fireworks that employs the full orchestra, two soloists and a large chorus.

But in the final analysis, it is the quality that manages to compel, beating out the quantity by a good, solid margin.

It is a long symphony, this Mahler No. 2, written in five movements, and depicting the death of a hero.

Each conductor employs his own style; each draws from the music and the instrument the elements that seem required. It is an intensely personal experience, wherein at one and the same time, the conductor is both part of the music, and still aloof from it.

The Gymnastic School

This reviewer has never been a proponent of the gymnastic school of conducting, finding it more a distraction than an aid. Watching and listening are functions that can be blended in opera or musical comedy, but the forced fixing of attention on a symphonic conductor is neither a recommendation to the music itself nor the interpreter.

It is an eloquent attribute to Mr. Bernstein's musical stature that both he and the Boston Symphony Orchestra managed ~~to present~~ a tremendous concert over and above his own personal animadversions.

The soloists appear late in the symphony, and Nan Merriman, contralto, and Ellabelle Davis, soprano appeared to very fine advantage, as did the excellent Festival chorus, which had been beautifully prepared by Hugh Ross.

The Milhaud Second

The afternoon opened with Darius Milhaud conducting his own Symphony No. 2, which by contrast with the music that was to folow it, was the zephyr that heralds the coming gale.

Milhaud's music, and that of other pioneers of his [illegible] was considered an insurrection in the days before the "school of dissonants" became an indelible part of the world's musical life

The Symphony No. 2, in which he conducted the Boston Symphony yesterday, is a gentle, almost placid piece of music. It makes very few demands on the listener, and it was a most fitting composition to precede the dynamic Mahler. The delicate melodies accorded the solo violin set the tone for the overall atmosphere, which I found pleasant, relaxing, and easy to accept.

Tomorrow will feature "Tanglewood on Parade," a special and varied program which will run from 6 to 11 p.m., and will includesymphonic and chamber music, scenes from the great operas, waltzing on the lawn and the appearance of Cornelia Otis Skinner as guest speaker.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

AUG 2 - 1948

'Tanglewood on Parade'

Waltzing on Lawn Is Festival Innovation For Europeans' Benefit Tomorrow Night

TANGLEWOOD — There will be waltzing on the lawn to conclude the benefit program at Tanglewood tomorrow night. After the Boston Symphony Orchestra's gala ~~concert~~ at 9.15 when Serge Koussevitzky will conduct three famous watlzes by Strauss, Sibelius and Ravel, Frederick Fennell will lead a student orchestra on the porch of the main house for dancing between the house and the garden. The five-hour fiesta for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center and European musicians will close with fireworks.

Following the student parade at 6, the audience will be invited to a performance of their favorite form of ensemble music. The opera department will give Acts 1 and 4 of Puccini's "La Boheme" in the theatre-concert hall. The advanced orchestra will play, in the Shed, Beethoven's "Coriolanus" overture, Rachmaninoff's second piano concerto and Leonard Bernstein's three dances from "Fancy Free."

In the chamber music hall students of Departments 2, 3 and 4 will illustrate 100 years of chamber music with Mendelssohn's trio No. 1 in D minor, Juon's Divertimento for wind instruments and piano, compositions by students of Aaron Copland and Darius Milhaud, and Chausson's concerto for violin, piano and string quartet. In the orchard, on the rehearsal stage, the chorus will give a public rehearsal of two works to be performed in the Berkshire Festival —Stravinsky's "Oedipus Rex," coached by Hugh Ross, and Brahms' "Requiem."

After an hour out for a picnic supper from 7 to 8, poet Archibald MacLeish will preside over a brief "manifestation" in the Shed, with five leaders in music, the arts and Supreme Court Justice Felix Frankfurter speaking from two to eight minutes. Dr. Koussevitzky, Dr. Howard Hanson, director of the Eastman School of Music, Rochester, N.Y., who will represent UNESCO, and Aaron Copland, composer and assistant director of the Berkshire Music Center, will speak. Cornelia Otis Skinner will recite two Elizabethan sonnets.

At 9.15 the orchestra will play Beethoven's "Lenore Overture," Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf," with Wesley Addy as narrator, and the waltzes.

Notable musicians, artists, writers, statesmen and others who have accepted to sit on the stage are: Dr. Koussevitzky; Dr. Lewis Perry, chairman of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center; Mr. MacLeish; Miss Skinner; Mr. Copeland; Carlton Sprague Smith, director of the music section of the New York Public Library; Boris Goldovsky, pianist and director of opera at the Berkshire Music Center, the New England Conservatory of Music, Boston, and teacher at the Longy School; Dr. Hanson; Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist and director of chamber music at the Center; Darius Milhaud, composer, who conducted his second symphony at yesterday's Festival concert; Samuel Barber, composer and teacher at the Center in 1947; Walter Piston, composer, whose work was played Saturday night; Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, patron of chamber music; Justice Frankfurter; Nicholas Nabokov, composer; Walter Prichard Eaton, writer; John Alden Carpenter, composer; Stuart C. Henry, director of the Berkshire Museum; Rev. J. Herbert Owen, pastor of the Lenox Congregational Church; Stefan Lorant, Lincoln author; Rev. Anson Phelps Stokes; Rev. Hector J. Hebert; Rev. T. Everett McPeake; Mrs. Margaret French Cresson, sculptor and writer; Ture Bengtz, George Picken, artists; Sir Arthur Salter, British United Nations representative; Mitchel Siporin; C. D. Jackson.

Ten albums of Boston Symphony Orchestra recordings will be a second gift to be awarded after the custom-built RCA Victor Berkshire radio-phonograph winner is announced.

For holders of reserved seats or box tickets, the event will open at 4.30 with performances in the garden of Menotti's operetta, "The Telephone," an excerpt from Act 1 of Mozart's "Don Giovanni," and the first scene from Debussy's "Pelleas et Melisande."

The event will take place rain or shine. Tickets are on sale at the box office, Tanglewood, England Brothers and Wood Brothers, Pittsfield, and at the Blue Bird Shop, Stockbridge.

This Clipping From
OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.
TIMES
AUG 2 1948

. . . Of Such Was America Born

By GEORGE E. SOKOLSKY

Up here in Sandisfield, Mass., we go in for culture in a big way, that is, those of us who do not till the soil and chop down the trees for lumber.

That goes back a long time to the days of Mark Hopkins, Oliver Wendell Holmes—not the justice but the philosopher, Herman Melville of "Moby Dick," William Cullen Bryant, Henry Wadsworth Longfellow, to say nothing of the Sedgwick clan who dominated Stockbridge as the Atlantic Monthly was the personality of Ellery Sedgwick.

So, a week ago Saturday, we foregathered at the little red house where Nathaniel Hawthorne conceived the Tanglewood Tales and where often Longfellow, Melville, Fanny Kemble and Hawthorne met to talk but even more to store in their memories the impress of the beauties of the Berkshires and of each other's personality.

The little red house has been restored externally by the National Federation of Music clubs under the leadership of Mrs. Guy Gannett, wife of the Maine publisher, and a gracious and devoted lady.

Manning Hawthorne was there to represent his grandfather, Nathaniel, and Henry Wadsworth Longfellow Dana, whose maternal grandfather was the poet and whose paternal grandfather wrote "Two Years Before the Mast," delivered a brilliant and witty address prepared as only Harry can when he takes the trouble, which is not often enough.

We were blessed with the best of Berkshire weather, as we sat in the shadow of Monument mountain and looked across the lake and listened to Serge Koussevitzky accept the little house which is to be used as a studio for musicians who come to Tanglewood to improve themselves.

This is so important because out of Tanglewood will in time come American composers, American conductors, and American artists and all the internationalism of its atmosphere will go by the board. For no one can be in this New England long without becoming part of its rock and soil, without feeling the three centuries of America in the marrow of his bone.

Just as in the middle nineteenth century, this very place produced for this country a lasting, indigenous literature, so are we now on the threshold of finding here a lasting, indigenous American music.

That indeed is a pot of gold.

As I sat upon a rock, upon which creeped myrtle and rose, I could not help but think that at that very moment were gathered in Philadelphia others who also called themselves Americans but who, somehow, had been cut off at the roots, or who, coming latterly, had no depth to their roots. And, while we steeped ourselves richly in the lore of our own land, they were shrieking foully against their mother country and, gazing upon her beauties, saw only nettles and thistles, while the mirage from afar was richly verdant.

Yet their curses will wither on the vine. I recalled that Balaam, when pressured to curse, sang:

"How goodly are thy tents, O Jacob, and thy tabernacles, O Israel!

"As the valleys are they spread forth, as gardens by the river's side, as the trees of lign aloes which the Lord hath planted, and as cedar trees beside the waters."

For who can curse such a country as this and who can be its enemy? How varied are the ways of its people and there are none to order them to do this and that and to have no will of their own.

Those in Philadelphia were free to steep themselves in shrill hate and we at Tanglewood were free to worship America's glorious past and to restore her monuments. And in a thousand places men and women were free to do as they minded with none to force them to do otherwise. And in a thousand places, often obscure, with none to write their histories, were, at that very moment, men and women devoted voluntarily to good and righteous service.

That is America and we who abide in these hills feel it so strongly, for here Longfellow caught the lines of Evangeline and here Hawthorne came after he had already written "The Scarlet Letter," and here Mark Hopkins sat on a log and founded a college. It is in these hills that one senses the manhood that produced this nation.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
AUG 3 - 1948

Help For Europe's Musicians

The incalculable value of the psychological and cultural leadership provided by creative artists is recognized in the recent organization of an International Music Fund to help the composers of Europe. This has been founded by the American Section of the International Society for Contemporary Music, with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, as honorary chairman. Its first benefit program will be a large scale event this afternoon and evening at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., where Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct and Archibald MacLeish, as chairman, will be one of the speakers. Other American orchestras and musical organizations have been invited to give benefit concerts for this purpose throughout the music season of 1948-'49.

Many of Europe's creative artists shared in the physical suffering and hardship caused by the war; few, if any, have escaped its spiritual and psychological toll. The International Music Fund should be valuable not only as actual assistance to the composers of Europe, but as an expression of sympathy and encouragement from musicians and music-lovers in America. Dr. Koussevitzky has pointed out that while the European Recovery Program is aimed at physical needs, there is also a need for "the relief of the spiritual vacuum and cultural hunger of a sick mankind," and this movement is a valuable step in this direction. The committee in charge, with Dr. Carleton Sprague Smith, chief of the Music Division of the New York Public Library, includes many prominent figures in the musical and other aspects of this country's cultural life. It is to be hoped that America's musicians and musical organizations will co-operate in realizing the International Music Fund's purposes.

This Clipping From BERKELEY, CALIF.
GAZETTE

Between the Commercials

Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the first of two concerts from the "Berkshire Festival" this evening. He will lead the Boston Symphony in Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf," for the first selection of the evening. KGO at 6:30 o'clock. . . . Marking the third anniversary of the use of the atomic bomb, "Living, 1948," will present a documentary type of program to drive home to the people the importance of atomic energy. KNBC at 6:30 o'clock. . . . "Roof Tops of the City" will return to the air this evening after a lapse of several months. A series of dramas, featuring life in the metropolis, will present "The Eyes of Jonathan Road" this p.m. KQW at 7:30. . . . "An Evening With Romberg" will present a medley of his own compositions to the radio audience this evening. He will play "The Fruitpicker's Song," "My Sleeping Beauty" and "That Rare Romance." KNBC at 7:30 o'clock. . . State Controller Thomas H. Kuchel will be interviewed on this evening's "Report to the People." He will discuss the activities of his office with Tony Koester, emcee of the program. KGO at 7:30 o'clock. . . . Sammy Kaye adds a touch of poetry to this evening's "Supper Club" program. KNBC at 8. . . . "Should Congress Pass the Taft-Ellender-Wagner Bill Now?" will be the question of importance on tonight's "Town Meeting" program. A panel of experts will attempt to answer the problem. KGO at 8:30 o'clock. . . .

This Clipping From
BUFFALO, N. Y.
NEWS
AUG 2 1948

2 PROTEGES PROVE KOUSSEVITZKY FAITH IS AMPLY JUSTIFIED

By THEODOLINDA C. BORIS
Special to The Buffalo Evening News.

TANGLEWOOD, Mass., Aug. 2.—Serge Koussevitzky, one of the world's great conductors, has given thousands of music-lovers unforgettable experiences as they have listened to his Boston Symphony Orchestra in its home city, on tour or at the Tanglewood Festival concerts. He has given the contemporary composer the heartening encouragement of repeated performances of new works. He has rendered continuous and faithful service to the cause of music in this country.

One of the services which the good doctor has given to music in part transcends, at least for this observer, even some of his most magnificent performances. That service is his encouragement, of young musicians, notably young conductors, in his Berkshire Music Center, the famed conductor's, "dream-come-true" school in which a hand-picked student body exemplifies, for a six-week summer session, Koussevitzky's happy phrase, "living and working in music."

Two Students Stand Out

Certainly the most newsworthy aspects of the opening week-end of the 1948 Tanglewood Festival concern two former proteges of Koussevitzky, both of whom are assistants to "Koussy" as instructors in conducting at the center.

They are Leonard Bernstein, who has made a meteoric advance from the conducting student of a few years ago to music director of the New York City Symphony, guest conductor of many major orchestras here and abroad, and newly-appointed artistic director of the Palestine Philharmonic for 1948-49; and Eleazar de Carvalho, brilliant young Brazilian composer and conductor, a Tanglewood student in 1946 and a faculty member since last year.

In his adroit direction of Mahler's "Resurrection" symphony at Sunday afternoon's concert, Mr. Bernstein reaffirmed with unmistakable authority his unusual gifts as a conductor of fine talent.

Handles Difficult Piece

Despite the musical verbosity and considerable "sound and fury" which even the most partisan of Mahlerites must admit are in this score, he succeeded admirably in holding his audience of some 8000 persons intent upon its unfolding. With unequivocal enthusiasm, the audience gave its approval, augmenting its applause with shouts and whistles.

De Carvalho, who impressed this writer last Summer as one of the finest new conducting talents it has been her good fortune to hear, corroborated that initial impression with a remarkable and heartfelt interpretation of Richard Strauss' tone poem, "So Spake Zarathustra," at Friday evening's student concert. Again, he was conducting the splendid Student Orchestra of the Center. Again, he achieved a reading which was a passionate recreation of the music.

Players Applaud Conductor

The gift that this young man has is given to very few. It is not only that he makes the music live, he is the music. He is graceful, he is intense and he is always authoritative.

The two young men present an arresting contrast—Bernstein brilliant, assured, given to balletic antics on occasion, is in short, a superb showman; De Carvalho, equally brilliant and assured but far more able to persuade the listener that his interpretation is based on a sincere personal conviction about the music.

The Boston Orchestra and the Center Chorus (admirably trained, by the way, by Hugh Ross) gave Bernstein fullest co-operation, as did the soloists, Nan Merriman, contralto, and Ellebelle Davis, soprano. The Student Orchestra was fully as devoted in its response to De Carvalho, and the players joined eagerly in the audience's ovation for the Brazilian, who is a favorite with the young instrumentalists.

Other Treats Offered

Other points of particular interest during a week-end overflowing with good things musically were Koussevitzky's spacious and beautiful reading of the Brahms' Symphony; Isaac Stern's brilliant performance, which the Boston players as brilliantly abetted, of Prokofieff's First Violin Concerto; the surprising warmth of the adagio in Walter Piston's Third Symphony, most of which, though thoughtfully-wrought, held to his usual somewhat impersonal style, and the unusual tonal colors of Malhaud's Second Symphony, conducted by the composer himself.

Ovations for Koussevitzky, who retires as conductor of the Boston Symphony after next season and a final bow at Tanglewood next Summer, reached a new heighth of affectionate warmth at the concerts of this opening week-end of the 11th season of the Berkshire Music Festival.

This Clipping From HOLLYWOOD, CAL.
CITIZEN NEWS

Wesley Addy, Shakespearian actor, will narrate Prokorierr's "Peter and the Wolf" which will open the "Tanglewood On Parade" concert from the Berkshire Music Festival, KECA at 6:30. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, founder and director of the summer music school, will further conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Sibelius' "Valse Triste," Strauss' "Voices of Spring" and Ravel's choreographic poem, "La Valse."

* * *

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN
AUG 3 - 1948

Music Lovers Thrilled By Concert

Thousands of music lovers each season are discovering the thrill of hearing contemporary and classical symphony by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the spectacular setting of the Berkshire Hills at Tanglewood.

Saturday night, in the first full week end of festival concerts, Dr. Serge Koussevitsky led the orchestra in a performance of "Brahms' First Symphony" that was richly satisfying. The grandeur of the score and its interpretation gripped listeners with an intenseness difficult to cast off at the concert's close.

The balance of Saturday's program illustrated the policy of the festival's directors to present "new" music in challenge to a repertoire grown familiar by repetition.

The challenge is for orchestra and audience. Both are responding enthusiastically.

The program offered works by two reflective contemporary composers, Walter Piston, whose "Symphony No. 3" was given, and Serge Prokofieff, represented by his "First Violin Concerto."

Piston's Symphony, commissioned by Dr. Koussevitsky, was completed last year and introduced by the Boston Symphony early this year before it was awarded a Pulitzer Prize for musical composition.

An example of adaptation of modern musical technique to symphonic structure, it shows Piston still developing, entirely capable of melodic form infinitely more appealing to listeners than the cold purity of atonal music.

The composer was on hand to hear the performance and shared repeated bows with the conductor after the playing.

The Prokofieff concerto was almost overshadowed by the forcefulness of Piston's work, although Stern gave it more than adequate performance.

Programs of diversified phases of music supplement the public festival schedule. Student orchestra concerts are open by invitation to friends of the Berkshire Music Center, and a pleasant subsidiary to the Saturday night Music Shed program was a series of opera excerpts presented in the afternoon in the Theater-Concert Hall by the Music Center's opera department.

FZ

This Clipping From
SAN DIEGO, CAL.
TRIBUNE SUN

NEGRO CONTRALTO DRAWS RAISE FOR RECORDING

Carol Brice, a Negro contralto of xceptional voice and expression, is n a 12-inch single Columbia, singng two Negro spirituals, "My Good Lord Been Here" and "On Ma Journey." Miss Brice was disovered by Serge Koussevitzky everal seasons ago but, for some ot apparent reason, has not yet ound the opportunities an artist f her caliber should have.

While the Reiner (Pittsburgh ymphony) album of De Falla's L'Amor Brujo" affords Miss Brice nly spasmodic opportunities, her nging of these rhapsodic phrases the best on records. She alsc ppears with Reiner in another olumbia set, the lovely and difcult "Wayfarer Songs," of Gustav Iahler. This is a vocally difficult ycle, emotionally elusive in Iahler's semi-folklorist style, with hat Austrian flavor he has inerited from Schubert and ruckner. One longs to hear La rice in concert.

This Clipping From MIAMI, FLA.
HERALD

AUG 3 - 1948

16-B THE MIAMI HERALD Tuesday, August 3,

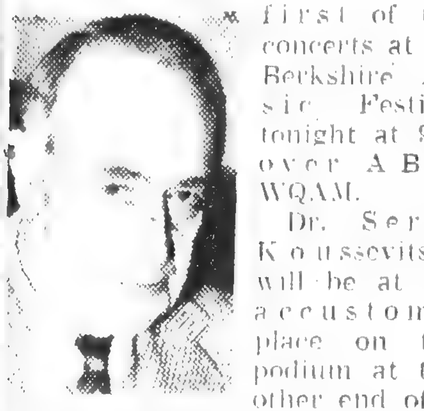
Housing Bill Is Town Meeting Topic

Boston Symphony To Play At Festival

By JACK E. ANDERSON

THERE are big doin's on the networks tonight—interesting symphonic music, a hot discussion on the housing situation, much popular music, a row of mystery thrillers and the inevitable give-away shows.

The superlative Boston symphony orchestra will give the first of two concerts at the Berkshire Music Festival tonight at 9:30 over ABC-WQAM.



KOUSSEVITSKY

Dr. Serge Koussevitsky will be at his accustomed place on the podium at the other end of a baton for a program devoted to the works of Prokofieff, Sibelius, Strauss and Ravel.

Youngsters - adult and minor - in the radio audience will enjoy particularly, the orchestra's performance of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" with Wesley Addy, a Shakespearean actor, as the narrator.

* * *

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES-UNION

AUG 3 - 1948

Tanglewood

Bernstein Scores Hit

By EDGAR S. VAN OLINDA

An audience of some 10,000 music lovers attended the final concert of Series A in the large Tangelwood music shed, Sunday afternoon and was thrilled to the almost overpowering performance of Mahler's choral symphony, No. 2 with Leonard Bernstein, Koussevitzyk protegee, conducting. The most enthusiastic demonstration within memory at these concerts, cheered, whistled and bravoed the young conductor for about 10 minutes. The orchestra was augmented by a chorus of 300, the organ and soloists, Nan Merriman, contralto and Ellabelle Davis, soprano.

IN PLACE OF the scheduled Haydn Symphony in D-major, the Milhaud Symphony, No. 2 with the conductor on the podium was substituted. Very modern in structure and orchestration, it was more interesting as a trend in composition than as enduring music. As an exponent of the woodwinds and brass of the Boston Symphony orchestra it served its purpose. It also had the expedient of making the Mahler symphony stand out in tremendous relief as a piece of inspired writing by one of the former titans of Bohemian composition.

Saturday night's concert offered the Walter Piston Symphony, No. 3 and the Prohofieff violin concerto No. 1 with Isaac Stern, as soloist. Leaning far toward the modern style of writing, Mr. Stern exploited the composer with his tremendously effective ability to make use of every technical device, and his acknowledged beauty of tone coloring.

MR. STERN, WHO was heard a few years with the Civic Music association in this city had gained enormously in artistic stature. He was recalled to the stage again and again to bow his thanks to the audience and outside the great hall.

The concert ended on a note of grandeur with the playing of the grateful and noble Brahms symphony, No. 1. Dr. Koussevitzky was in one of his most expansive moods and never has the German composer's music been given a more inspiring performance.

Tonight, an added concert, "The Manifestation," will be given on the Tanglewood grounds, starting at 6 o'clock. There will be performances of chamber, choral and operatic music in the theatre-concert hall and in the great shed. Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct works by Prokofieff ("Peter and the Wolf") [illegible], Strauss, Siebelius and Ravel. The tickets are $2.50 admititing to all events.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

AUG 3 - 1948

VARIED SHOW THIS EVENING AT FESTIVAL

'Tanglewood On Parade' to Have a Little of Everything

A veritable four-ring circus will take place at Tanglewood, Lenox, tonight when students will perform, faculty and distinguished guests of the Berkshire Music Center will speak and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will play for the benefit of the school and European musicians in need. The evening will close with waltzing on the lawn, fireworks and the awarding of an RCA Victor "Berkshire" radio-phonograph and a set of 10 record albums.

After a parade of the students at 6, there will be four musical programs taking place at the same time. The opera department will give two acts of "La Boheme" in the theater-concert hall and the advanced orchestra will play Beethoven's "Coriolanus" Overture, Rachmaninof's Concerto No. 2 for Piano and Orchestra in C minor, and Bernstein's "Three Dances from 'Fancy Free" in the Shed.

ARCHIBALD MACLEISH

In the chamber music hall 100 years of chamber music will be illustrated by the following program: Mendelssohn, Trio No. 1 in D Minor, Juon, Divertimento for Wind Instruments and Piano; Chausson, Concerto for Violin, Piano and String Quarter, Compositions by the students, William Flannagan, Edward Lewis and Hector Tosar.

Public Rehearsal

The chorus will offer a public rehearsal of two works to be performed in the Berkshire Festival—Stravinsky's "Oedipus Rex," coached by Hugh Ross, and the "Requiem" of Brahms, coached by Robert Shaw on the rehearsal stage in the orchard.

After supper, when picnic parties are invited, Archibald McLeish, poet and former librarian of Congress, will preside over a "manifestation" in the shed of less than an hour. Aaron Copland, composer and assistant director of the Center, Dr. Howard Hanson, composer of the Eastman School of Music, Rochester, N. Y., Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and Supreme Court Justice Felix Frankfurter will speak briefly. The longest speech will be eight minutes. The shortest will take two. Cornelia Otis Skinner will recite two Elizabethan sonnets.

At the grand concert, Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Beethoven's "Overture to Lenore," and Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf," with Wesley Addy as narrator. The evolution of the waltz will be illustrated by Strauss' "Voices of Spring," Sibelius, "Valse Triste" and Ravel's "La Valse."

On the conclusion of the concert an orchestra from department 5 will play waltzes for the public to dance on the lawn between the garden and the house.

For holders of box and reserved seat tickets, the opera department will perform in the garden at 4.30 an excerpt from act 1 of Mozart's Don Giovanni, scene 1 from Debussy's "Pelleas and "Melisande" and the complete operetta, "The Telphone," by Menotti.

Tickets are on sale at Tanglewood, England Brothers and Wood Brothers in Pittsfield and the Blue Bird Shop, Stockbridge.

Three Major Concerts Scheduled This Week For Music Festival

There will be three major symphonic concerts at the Berkshire Music Festival in Tanglewood this week, with the first of the "Series B" events opening on Thursday evening. This will include the Beethoven "Pastoral," Stravinsky's "Oedipus Rex," with male chorus and soloists.

On Saturday evening, the soloist will be Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist, and the orchestral program will feature Prokofieff's "Romeo and Juliet," Suite No. 2; Symphony No. 6, of Vaughan Williams, and "Don Quixote," by Strauss. On Sunday afternoon, Eleazar de Carvalho will conduct a program of Berlioz, Villa Lobos, Falla and Siqueira.

WEEK-END PROGRAM AT DANCE FESTIVAL

Starting Friday afternoon at [illegible] and with performances on Saturday at 4 and 9 p.m., the following program will be presented this week end at the Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival:—

I

1. Gnossienne (Satie) ....Ted Shawn
2. Bacchanale—as seen at the opera (St. Saens) ....Iva Kitchell
3. Cutting the Sugar Cane (Lecuona) ....Ted Shawn
4. Portrait of a Hostess (Harvey Brown) ....Iva Kitchell
5. Variation Classique .Natalie Krassovska
6. Ribbon Dance from "The Red Poppy" (Glier) ....Nikita Talin

II

7. Spear Dance—Japonesque (arr. by Horst) ....Ted Shawn
8. Obsession (Harvey Brown) Iva Kitchell
9. Spanish Flamenco Dances (Mss) ....Ted Shawn
10. The Tale of a Bird (Harvey Brown) ....Iva Kitchell
11. Pas de Deux from "Swan Lake" (Tschaikowsky) .Natalie Krassovska ....and Nikita Talin

Pianists:
for Iva Kitchell—Harvey Brown for Natalie Krassovska and Nikita Talin—John Colman for Ted Shawn—Harry Mayer
Lecture Monday, 8.30 p.m., Mme. Barbara Karinska, "The Costuming of Dancers."

This Clipping From MERIDEN, CONN.
RECORD

AUG 3 - 1948

Record Music Critic Reports: Tanglewood Is Cross Section Of Musical U. S.

By MARJORIE C. TOWER

For a practising musician or ardent music lover, a Saturday and Sunday at Tanglewood, the Berkshire Music Center and permanent summer home of the Boston Symphony at Lenox, Mass., seems a foretaste of heaven. Tanglewood was arranged with airy precision, artistry, imagination and practicality by Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Thousands of happy, time-free people lend reality to the vision as they stroll across the acres of landscaped and mountain-viewed lawns between the enormous open Music Shed where the Boston Symphony performs, the Theatre Concert Hall for the opera department and chamber music department, the small Chamber Music Hall, the Buffet, the formal gardens, and the futuristic gates and glassed-in office.

The schedule at Tanglewood calls for three performances weekly as follows: Thursday and Saturday at 1:15 p. m. and Sunday at 3:30 p. m. A special concert will be given Tuesday, August 10, at 8:15 p. m. The concluding concert of the summer will be given Sunday, August 15, at 8:15 p. m.

Musical Week End

Jostling for primary interest in two full days of music last weekend, were the personal appearance of the great French-American composer, Darius Milhaud, as conductor of his own Third Symphony; Isaac Stern, as violin soloist in Prokoffief's First Violin Concerto; Ellabelle Davis, soprano, and Nan Merriman, contralto, with the Festival Chorus of 150 voices, with the Boston Symphony in Mahler's overwhelming C Minor Symphony, conducted by the darling of the multitudes, Leonard Bernstein; and Mr. Koussevitsky conducting with soaring power and full romantic scope, Brahms' First Symphony.

Of secondary importance, but of tremendous delight to this writer, was the persuasive rendition of the Chausson Concerto for violin, accompanied by string quartet and piano, at the Chamber Music Hall. Joseph Bernstein, a former pupil of Carl Flesch, performed the solo part in this seldom heard work. Madrigals coached by Hugh Ross, and a Haydn string quartet nicely played by chamber music students followed the well-attended organ recital of E. Power Biggs, which had taken place at ten o'clock Sunday morning, just before my arrival.

A two dollar entrance fee permits a person to listen outside any of the open music halls. Any one of Saarinen's modernistically and functionally designed buildings, so open in construction; and superb accoustically, provides nearly as much listening pleasure to those outside as to the visually lucky ones nearer the performers. Almost every hour on Saturday or Sunday finds one or another of the halls the scene of some ideal form of music.

Without attempting in one article to embrace all that Tanglewood offers its 450 students of opera and ensemble, it may be possible to sketch the two-day impressions of a visitor, which anyone could easily duplicate or verify.

Rehearsal

Arriving at about 10:30 on Saturday morning, we found the capacious Music Shed with about two-thirds of its 6000 seats taken by an audience enthralled with Isaak Stern's rehearsal of Prokoffief's first violin concerto, accompanied by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Mr. Koussevitsky, with his inevitable cape draped over his shoulders, was seated high on the podium, while the 27-year-old virtuoso was playing vigorously at his left. How many times I have wondered how much rehearsal was necesary to top-flight performers, and just how they went about fitting soloist and orchestra together.

In this case, a short conference between soloist and conductor preceded each movement. The soloist established the rhythm, while the two principals watched each other like boxers for any ritard or acceleration. The ritards were generally sung out to the orchestra by Mr. Koussevitsky. "One . . . two . . . three . . . One, two, three, four, PIANISSIMO!" For individual instruction, the conductor jumped up and strode to the difficult section for his well-aimed but quiet words. In contrast with the rehearsal, when we heard each movement about three times, the Saturday evening performance of the concerto was clearer and more sonorous, like a fully cut and polished gem.

While the crowds picnicked about the grounds or satisfied their hunger at the Buffet, going at 2:30 to the Theater Concert Hall for scenes from Carmen, The Record music editor joined about twenty-five other reviewers for luncheon at the home of Jay Rosenfeld, music editor of the Berkshire Eagle. Sitting on the grass beside a lovely Norman hillside home, the writers on music hugely enjoyed, in very normal fashion, both the delicious food and the conversation of others with similar problems. Carl Lindstrom, of the Hartford Times, Howard Taubman of the New York Times, Arthur Berger of the New York Herald Tribune, Willard Clark of the Springfield Republican, Victor Prall of the same paper, Lipkin of Philadelphia, Cyrus Durgin of the Boston Globe, Raymond Morin of the Worcester Telegram, Warren Storey Smith of the Boston Post, and such officers of the Boston Symphony as the manager, George E. Judd and his assistant, Lewis Perry, and Mrs. George Edman of the press bureau, composed part of the group.

Two Symphony Performances

The most stirring ovation was given Mr. Milhaud, who with painful absorption arrived on crutches at the chair on the podium. There was no air of invalidism about his conducting, however. The symphony was Gallicly graceful, exquisite in workmanship, and generally happy in mood, with its discords tantalizing rather than jarring.

Whether the revelations in facial expression and gesture by which Mr. Bernstein pleads with the orchestra for their ultimate, adds or detracts from the effect, he is too fascinating and too handsome not to watch. The chorus in the finale of the Mahler Symphony, and the orchestra and soloists, threw reserve to the wind in the musical representation of the Promethian struggle of a fallen hero and his search for knowledge of life and resurrection. The shades of Wagner are discernable in this moving, romantic and interminable symphony.

Genius Looms Larger

Prokofieff looms ever larger as a musical genius, with his violin concertos adding much to his stature. Imagination, sound feeling for violin sonorities, protracted muted effects which are surpassingly beautiful, and sweeping lyrical passages, distinguish this piece of music. It was a rare treat to hear Mr. Stern's eloquent interpretation.

The Third Symphony of the contemporary American composer, Walter Piston, surprised me with the tenderness of its slow movement and the agreeable nature of the entire work, in spite of occasional horrendous snatches.

The two lanes of cars after a concert, moving at a snail's pace the mile and a half back into Lenox, is endured with good-natured philosophy by the thousands who have spent a period on the musical highlands of Tanglewood. The elation lingers of hearing the Boston Symphony in the Berkshires play with more glowing colors than they seem to mix in winter concert halls. The memory will last of Koussevitsky's dream come true—of hundreds of musical young people listening avidly, of quiet family groups sitting on automobile robes about picnic baskets in a wide fringe around the Music Shed, of correct school teachers or music teachers drinking in the music with eyes daringly closed, of arm-linked lovers and equally enraptured sophisticates. Tanglewood is a complete cross-section of musical America.

[232]

Tanglewood Music Lovers Pack Hall

Aug 4th
Syracuse-H. Herald

"AGAIN IT IS proved that we like what we know and know what we like," a New England music teacher told her pupils last night during intermission in the great Shed in "Tanglewood," home of the Berkshire Music Festival. The program "Tanglewood on Parade," brought thousand to the grounds and filled the Shed to its capacity of 6,000.

Dr. Hanson

A symphony concert was conducted by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. There were also scenes from the great operas in the Theater-Concert Hall; a demonstration rehearsal in the Orchard; and "A Hundred Years of Chamber Music," by an ensemble in the Chamber Music Hall.

U. S. SUPREME Court Justice Felix Frankfurter speaking for the laymen in music, Dr. Koussevitzky, Dr. Howard Hanson of Eastman School of Music, Rochester, and Aaron Copeland, widely known composer, were among speakers introduced by the chairman, former Assistant Secretary of State, Archibald MacLeish. The events were arranged as a benefit for the International Music fund under auspices of Berkshire Music Festival. Among contemporary composers on the platform were: Darius Milhaud of France, Walter Piston and John Alden Carpenter. Both Dr. Hanson and Mr. MacLeish are active in UNESCO committees.

MR. AND MRS. G. Karl Strebel of Syracuse, the former music chairman of the Syracuse Liederkranz and past president of the Syracuse Opera Guild, have been staying near Lee in the Berkshires for several days and attended Festival programs in the Shed and rehearsals.

Strebel

Proceeds from rehearsal tickets are given to the Boston Symphony pension fund.

LAST NIGHT'S orchestra program by the Boston Symphony included the Overture to Beethoven's "Leonore," and, for smaller orchestra, Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" with Wesley Addy as narrator. "The Evolution of the Waltz" brought the lilt of the Johann Strauss "Voices of Spring," the poignantly beautiful "Valse Triste" of Sibelius and Ravel's choro. graphic poem "La Valse," a colorful composition for full orchestra.

Messages to Dr. Koussevitzky from many parts of the world were read during The Manifestion which preceded the concert. Among them, one from the leading Finnish composer, Sibelius. E. V. W.

This Clipping From
ABILENE, TEXAS
MORNING REPORTER NEWS
[illegible]

THESE DAYS

The Little Red House

BY GEORGE E. SOKOLSKY

Up here in Sandisfield, we go in for culture in a big way that is, those of us who do not till the soil and chop down the trees for lumber. And that goes back a long time to the days of Mark Hopkins, Oliver Wendell Holmes—not the justice but the philosopher—Herman Melville of "Moby Dick," William Cullen Bryant, Henry Wadsworth Longfellow, to say nothing of the Sedgwick clan who dominated Stockbridge as the Atlantic Monthly was the personality of Ellery Sedgwick.

So last Saturday, we foregathered at the little red house where Nathaniel Hawthorne conceived the Tanglewood Tales and where often Longfellow, Melville, Fanny Kemble and Hawthorne met to talk but even more to store in their memories the impress of the beauties of the Berkshires and of each other's personality.

The little red house has been restored externally by the National Federation of Music Clubs under the leadership of Mrs. Guy Gannett, the wife of the Maine publisher, and a gracious and devoted lady. Manning Hawthorne was there to represent his grandfather, Nathaniel, and Henry Wadsworth Longfellow Dana, whose maternal grandfather was the poet and whose paternal grandfather wrote "Two Years Before the Mast," delivered a brilliant and witty address prepared as only Harry can when he takes the trouble, which is not often enough.

AT TANGLEWOOD

We were blessed with the best of Berkshire weather, as we sat in the shadow of Monument Mountain and looked across the lake and listened to Serge Koussevitzky accept the little house which is to be used as studios for musicians who come to Tanglewood to improve themselves and this is so important because out of Tanglewood will in time come American composers, American conductors, and American artists and all the internationalism of its atmosphere will go by the board. For no one can be in this New England long without becoming part of its rock and soil, without feeling the three centuries of America in the marrow of his bones.

Just as in the middle Nineteenth Century, this very place produced for this country a lasting, indigenous literature, so are we now on the threshold of finding here a lasting, indigenous American music. That indeed is a pot of gold.

As I sat upon a rock, upon which crept myrtle and rose, I could not help but think that at that very moment were gathered in Philadelphia others who also called themselves Americans but who, somehow, had been cut off at the roots, or who, coming latterly, had no depth to their roots. And while we steeped ourselves richly in the lore of our own land, they were shrieking foully against their mother country and, gazing upon her beauties, saw only nettles and thistles, while the mirage from afar was richly verdant.

HOW GOODLY!

Yet their curses will wither on the vine. I recalled that Balaam, when pressured to curse, sang:

"How goodly are thy tents, O Jacob, and thy tabernacles, O Israel!

"As the valleys are they spread forth. As gardens by the river's side, as the trees of lign aloes which the Lord hath planted, and as cedar trees beside the waters."

For who can curse such a country as this and who can be its enemy? How varied are the ways of its people and there are none to order them to do this and that and to have no will of their own. Those in Philadelphia were free to worship America's glorious past and to restore her monuments. And in a thousand places men and women were free to do as they minded with none to force them to do otherwise. And in a thousand places, often obscure, with none to write their histories, were, at that very moment, men and women devoted voluntarily to good and righteous service.

That is America and we who abide in these hills feel it so strongly, for here Longfellow caught the lines of Evangeline and here Hawthorne came after he had already written "The Scarlet Letter," and here Mark Hopkins sat on a college and founded a college. It is in these hills that one sense the manhood that produced this nation.

(Copyright, 1948, King Feat. Synd., Inc.)

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

AUG 4 - 1948

$10,000 IS RAISED FOR NEEDY ARTISTS

'Tanglewood on Parade' Draws 7,000, Aids European Talent —Frankfurter Speaks

By ROSS PARMENTER
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 3—By putting on "Tanglewood on Parade" here today, $10,000 was raised to aid European creative artists. That sum was paid by the crowd of 7,000 who came to hear and see a series of features that began in the early afternoon and ended with fireworks seven hours later.

The event was as difficult to classify as "The March of Musical Fidelity" staged last year. The underlying purpose was serious, but again everyone was in a relaxed mood and the beautiful estate was converted for a second time into a sort of musical circus.

There were six rings, and at one time there were programs going on simultaneously in four of them. And the event lived up to its name. Not only was there an actual parade of more than 400 students of The Berkshire Music Center, but listeners also saw and heard the chief attractions of Tanglewood, Serge Koussevitzky and The Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The serious purposes of the program were outlined in a series of speeches that was called, at Dr. Koussevitzky's suggestion, a "manifestation." Archibald MacLeish, United States representative to UNESCO, was the chairman, and Associate Justice Felix Frankfurter of the United States Supreme Court was the chief speaker.

"Music," said Justice Frankfurter, "is the instinctive learning of the soul. It is an essential need of life, for there is a deep need for harmony in man. It cuts across all boundaries and national differences. In music one finds a greater hope for one world than in all the political mechanisms."

Mr. MacLeish also related music to the hope for peace. UNESCO's basic concept of using cultural means to work for peace was not just "a frill on the cuff," but a serious hope, he said.

Aaron Copland explained how committees had been formed here and in Europe to work together. The money raised today and further funds that will be raised in a widening campaign will be disbursed by UNESCO to aid musicians and other artists in Europe.

The "Manifestation" was held in the big music shed. It was followed by the Boston Symphony's program, which opened with Beethoven's overture to "Leonore" No. 3, continued with Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" and ended with works by Strauss, Sibelius and Ravel illustrating the evelution of the waltz.

The shed was the sixth "ring" at Tanglewood to be put into use. The first was the formal garden, where early comers sat between the clipped hedges listening to operatic excerpts presented by Boris Goldovsky's students in the opera department. Gian-Carlo Menotti's "The Telephone" capped the program.

The second ring was the lawn in front of the old house. It was to this spot that the students paraded to hear Dr. Koussevizky welcome the crowd and hail the assistance to artists abroad. The parade was headed by a thirty-five piece band playing Sousa's "Stars and Stripes Forever."

Then four rings were put into action at one time. The student orchestra gave a concert in the shed, the composition and chamber music students gave one in the chamber hall, the opera students performed in the theatre-concert hall, and the chorus rehearsed in the orchard. Visitors picked their favorites but some just spread out their rugs and ate their picnic suppers in the golden light of the slanting afternoon sun.

This Clipping From
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

AUG 4 - 1948

Symphony Benefit Takes In $10,000

Lenos, Mass., Aug. 4—(AP)—A benefit program by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center last night helped raise $10,000 for needy musicians of Europe.

More than 7,000 persons attended the program, which included opera, choral work, chamber music and a symphony concert by Music Center students who come from 42 states and 16 foreign countries.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and founder of the Berkshire Music Center; Supreme Court Justice Felix Frankfurter and poet Archibald MacLeish were speakers.

---

conducted by Seymour Lipkin, pupil of Serge Koussevitzky. Born in Cicero, Illinois 26 years ago, the young composer studied at Columbia University. His wife, May, a pianist and teacher of piano, is also a student at the Centre.

This Clipping From
HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT TELEGRAM

AUG 4 - 1948

Tanglewood Raises $10,000 For Needy Musicians Abroad

Berkshire county music lovers helped contribute $10,000 yesterday to a fund for needy artists in Europe.

That was the amount provided by an appreciative audience of more than 7,000 which attended the "Tanglewood on Parade" program at the famous music center in Lenox.

They heard Archibald MacLeish, celebrated poet and former librarian for Congress, declare that the idea of using cultural means to promote international good will represented a serious hope for world peace, and they heard Justice Felix Frankfurter of the U.S. Supreme Court assert that music provides "a greater hope for one world than in all the political mechanisms."

They also heard a virtual carnival of music, as Dr. Serge Koussevitsky led the Boston Symphony orchestra in a concert that included Beethoven's "Overture to Lenore," Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf;" and waltzes by Strauss, Sibelius, and Ravel. Earlier, they heard students of the Berkshire Music center present excerpts from "Don Giovanni" and "Pelleas and Melisande," a complete performance of Menotti's "The Telephone," two acts of "La Boheme," and a recital exemplifying a century of chamber music.

And they saw the program open with a parade of 476 students, representing all nations, and end with a fireworks display and waltzing on the lawns.

The five-hour program was sponsored by the International Society of Contemporary Music, of which Dr. Koussevitzky is a chairman, and had the endorsement of the U.S. State department.

The regular schedule of the Berkshire Festival will be resumed tomorrow night, when the Boston Symphony orchestra will offer Beethoven's Sixth symphony, "Pastoral," and Stravinsky's "Oedipus Rex."

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

AUG 3 - 1948

Recorded Voice of Tanglewood To Be Heard Round the World

State Department Sets Up Studio At Festival Grounds—Tonight's Program To Be Heard in Foreign Countries

TANGLEWOOD—The voice of Tanglewood will be heard around the world.

Today the broadcasting division of the United States Department of State started to make recordings at the Berkshire Music Center of student activities which will be translated into several different languages for use on the "Voice of America" programs which are broadcast from the United States to foreign countries.

Part of tonight's Tanglewood on Parade program will be "cut" on disks and broadcast soon to countries in all parts of the world.

Harold Janis, chief of special events for the State Department, explained this morning that the "Voice of America" unit "is here to give the rest of the world a picture of what Tanglewood represents in our cultural life."

Recordings are being made in a special studio set up at Tanglewood. They include records in English, Russian, French, German, Spanish, Portuguese, Czech. Lewis Ross, an engineer with the "Voice of America" unit, explained "We hope to make recordings also in Polish and Italian."

With Mr. Janis and Mr. Ross are Nicholas Nabichoff, music expert for the "Voice of America"; Sidney Berry, commentator; and Edmund Raquello, producer.

The officials at the U.S. Weather Bureau at the Pittsfield Airport reported the weather this afternoon and tonight will be "ideal" for the program.

A special performance by the opera department will be given in the gardens this afternoon at 4.30, open only to box holders and persons with reserved seat tickets. Those with general admission tickets will be admitted at 6 PM when the student parade will open the evening's show.

The American Broadcasting Company will broadcast over WBEC the concert program from 9.30 to 10.30.

in Washington.

Aug 3 — Fab

Help For Europe's Musicians

The incalculable value of the psychological and cultural leadership provided by creative artists is recognized in the recent organization of an International Music Fund to help the composers of Europe. This has been founded by the American Section of the International Society for Contemporary Music, with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, as honorary chairman. Its first benefit program will be a large scale event this afternoon and evening at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., where Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct and Archibald MacLeish, as chairman, will be one of the speakers. Other American orchestras and musical organizations have been invited to give benefit concerts for this purpose throughout the music season of 1948-'49.

Many of Europe's creative artists shared in the physical suffering and hardship caused by the war; few, if any, have escaped its spiritual and psychological toll. The International Music Fund should be valuable not only as actual assistance to the composers of Europe, but as an expression of sympathy and encouragement from musicians and music-lovers in America. Dr. Koussevitzky has pointed out that while the European Recovery Program is aimed at physical needs, there is also a need for "the relief of the spiritual vacuum and cultural hunger of a sick mankind," and this movement is a valuable step in this direction. The committee in charge, with Dr. Carleton Sprague Smith, chief of the Music Division of the New York Public Library, includes many prominent figures in the musical and other aspects of this country's cultural life. It is to be hoped that America's musicians and musical organizations will co-operate in realizing the International Music Fund's purposes.

This Clipping From
MONTREAL, CANADA
GAZETTE

AUG 14 1948

Tanglewood to Hear Two Special Pieces

Two concerts at the Berkshire Music Centre at Tang[illegible], Lenox, Mass., will attract more than usual notice this week-end. In a recital Saturday afternoon at 3.30 Gregor Piatigorski, assisted by Ralph Berkowitz, pianist, will introduce a new sonata, written in the past spring for Mr. Piatigorski by Paul Hindemith. At their last symphony concert, last Friday evening the advanced orchestra will play an elegy composed in memory of the late Mrs. Andrew H. Hepburn, who presented Tanglewood to the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The tribute to Mrs. Hepburn was written at Tanglewood in the past three weeks by Robert Kurka, pupil in composition of Darius Milhaud. Composed for performance by English horn and strings, it will be

---

This Clipping From
BOSTON, MASS.
Christian Science Monitor

AUG 4 - 1948

Overtones at Tanglewood

Humanity must have its music to express the otherwise inexpressible. In heroic melodies and crashing discords, in nervous modern rhythms and pellucid folk airs, men look for release from the dailiness of existence. And to have music, they must have musicians.

Yesterday, at Tanglewood, the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Berkshire Music Center gave a benefit performance for the International Music Fund—founded recently by the American Section of the International Society for Contemporary Music to help the composers of Europe. Here are overtones to the European Recovery Program which will surely enrich that program. As Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the orchestra, points out, relief for physical needs must be supplemented by "the relief of the spiritual vacuum and cultural hunger of a sick mankind."

These days of physical pressure and shaken values are not easy for the musician or artist of any sort. They afford him neither an ivory tower of escape nor a solid foundation for communication with the world's restless masses. Particularly is this true of the artist who has suffered the dislocations of wartime and postwar Europe. The benefit performance at Tanglewood should be only the first movement in a great symphony of good will which will waken larger harmonies around the world.

This Clipping From
ST. ALBANS, VT.
MESSENGER

AUG 4 - 1948

Fund Aids Musicians

LENOX, Mass. (UP) — Serge Koussevitzky, retiring director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, announced today that about $10,000 has been collected under a financial plan to aid European composers and musicians.

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

AUG 4 1948

Tanglewood Aids Needy Musicians

By RAYMOND MORIN

LENOX, Wednesday—"Tanglewood on Parade" was a literal description of yesterday's heavy schedule of events.

The extravaganza, which lasted from four in the afternoon until late evening, was staged to raise funds for needy European musicians. The total audiences numbered about 7000, bringing in gate receipts of $10,000.

Even a track star couldn't have kept up with this program for at times it emanated from five locations simultaneously. First there were operatic scenes played in the beautiful Tanglewood gardens. Between the hours of six and seven there were more excerpts of opera in the theater-concert hall, symphonic music by the student orchestra in the shed, a program illustrating the development of chamber music in the Chamber Music Hall, and festival choral music on the rehearsal stage in the orchard.

Manifestation

Reminiscent of the great last act of Wagner's "Die Meistersinger" 462 boys and girls from 42 states and 15 foreign countries, paraded to the shed for the portion of the program titled "Manifestation." The students carried banners and were led by a band.

The Manifestation brought appearances by Howard Hanson, Archibald MacLeish, Aaron Copland, and other important figures in letters and the arts. Serge Koussevitzky led the Boston Symphony [illegible] concert.

The program was Beethoven's "Overture to Leonore, No. 3," "Peter and the Wolf," the orchestral fairy tale by Prokofieff, and three waltzes—Strauss' "Voices of Spring," Sibelius' "Valse Triste," and Ravel's "La Valse."

The three-quarter rhythm was picked up and carried on after the concert by a student orchestra under the direction of Frederick Fennell of the conducting faculty for dancing on the lawn. And the five-ring musical-circus was wound up with fireworks.

Seven-Hour Tour

As we traveled along this seven-hour concert tour of the Tanglewood grounds, we made notes of some of our impressions and incomplete as they are, will try to present them with continuity.

Most attractive of the events was the opera played in the gardens. As you looked toward the stage, the backdrop was a rather greyish Monument mountain and beautiful Lake Mahkenac. The scenes were from Mozart's "Don Giovanni," "Debussy," "Pelleas et Melissande," and Menotti's "The Telephone" was given in its entirety.

They were tastefully performed, in keeping with Boris Goldovsky's custom as director. Of the eleven students who performed special praise belongs to Robert Rounseville and Janet Hayes for a sensitively expressive execution of the "Fountain Scene" from the Debussy opera. Other fine assets were Peggy Lee Whiting's true-sense of phrase and attractive lyrical quality as Zerlina in the Mozart excerpt.

Although the Menotti score was conspicuously programmed, it did not prove exceptional in any respect, failing to project the high degree of precision it needs.

City Student Scores

Joan Moynagh, Worcester's only student at the Berkshire Music Center, made a particularly fine impression as "Musetta" in the fourth act of Puccini's "La Boheme" performed in the theater concert hall. She played the distress scene with conviction and sang the part with firm, resonant voice.

As a matter of fact, the two scenes (first and fourth) were admirable. David Lloyd sang the Rodolfo arias expressively and with good timbre. Throughout the scenes there was an unusual enthusiasm in the principal roles. The small stage proved at times a handicap to the action. Incidentally all of the operatic roles were sung in English.

The portion of the program called "Manifestation" took place immediately preceding the main concert of the evening by the Boston Symphony. Warm tributes were paid Dr. Koussevitzky for his efforts on behalf of the American section of the International Society for Contemporary Music.

Speaking Program

Speaking on behalf of the new organization which he heads, Dr. Koussevitzky said: "We believe that the artist belongs to the world: he carries the ideals, and he can help to heal and cement the world."

Archibald MacLeish spoke with great enthusiasm of the contributions of Dr. Koussevitzky, referring to them as "a declaration of faith." He told of the purposes to which money will be put in helping needy musicians not only abroad but in America as well.

Aaron Copland declared "composers more than others understand the plight of musicians in Europe. We want to help them, and with no strings attached." Mr. Copland went on. "It is rumored that Europe is musically finished. I don't believe it, and I know that there are young composers in Europe today who will carry on the work of the revered masters in a fresh and original style.

Howard Hanson expressed that it is particularly fitting that Dr. Koussevitzky should head the society to help European musicians because since his early years as a conductor he has always devoted himself to the best interests of the composer.

Speaking from the layman's point of view, Felix Frankfurter, Supreme Court justice, likened America to the "limbs of the trunk of Europe."

"We cannot cut ourselves off from Europe without cutting ourselves off from ourselves," he said.

Other prominent musicians seated on the stage were Darius Milhaud, John Alden Carpenter, and Walter Piston. Cornelia Otis Skinner, who was to give Shakespearean readings, was unable to be present because of illness in her family.

Before bringing the speaking session to a close, Mr. MacLeish read a number of cablegrams from Europe from Jean Sibelius, Pablo Casal, Sir Adrian Bolt, Francesco Malipiero, and others. It was also explained that the funds obtained would be handled by UNESCO (United Nations Education, Scientific, Cultural-Organization).

The festival will be resumed Thursday night (first concert of Series B) when Dr. Kousevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony in Beethoven's "symphony No. 6 "pastorale" and Stravinsky's "Oedipus Rex," for orchestra, chorus and soloists.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

G 4 - 1948

Tanglewood Finds $10,000 For European Musicians

Plan Warmly Praised; 'Tanglewood On Parade' Shows All Activities of Music Center

By WILLARD M. CLARK

Tanglewood, Aug. 3—There was a happy man at Tanglewood today. He was Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. He was happy because he saw the inauguration of a plan, which, when completed, will bring financial aid to composers and musicians in Europe. More than 7000 persons provided some $10,000 as a nucleus for this fund and it is the hope of its sponsors that orchestras throughout the country will do their bit to swell this fund.

Congratulations Voiced

The inauguration of this plan was rightfully called "a manifestation." It brought to the music shed such composers as Darius Milhaud, John Alden Carpenter, Walter Piston and Micholas Nobokoff, and such musicians as Dr. Koussevitzky, Aaron Copland and Howard Hanson were on hand to give their commendation to the plan. Congratulatory telegrams were read from Pablo Casals, Mapipiero, Sir Adrian Boult and others.

Supreme Court Justice Felix Frankfurter truly spoke for the laymen who love music, yet know little about it. He sees in this plan a cornerstone on which the hopes for one world may rest. Of all the plans for the formation of one world, he sees this humanitarian movement to help the European composer and the musician as that one plan which shall work.

This plan is sponsored by the International Society of Contemporary Music, of which Dr. Koussevitzky is chairman of the American section. Funds will be handled through UNESCO and a telegram from that office indicated its wholehearted approval and co-operation.

Dr. Koussevitzky spoke briefly introducing Archibald MacLeish as chairman of the meeting. Mr. MacLeish gave a report of the plan as outlined by Dr. Koussevitzky and then introduced Composer Aaron Copland, Dr. Howard Hanson and Justice Frankfurter. It was an absorbing meeting. The utter sincerity of each speaker, the response of the audience, were proof of how deeply Dr. Koussevitzky's plan was felt.

The day has been known as "Tanglewood on Parade." It was just that. Early this afternoon all the activities of the Berkshire Center were on view. In the garden one heard excerpts from "Don Giovanni" and "Pelleas and Melisande" as well as a complete performance of Menotti's "The Telephone." In the theater, we heard two acts from "La Boheme," splendidly sung in English, with David Lloyd winning particular praise for his singing of the tenor role of Rudolfo. Chamber music and a concert by the student orchestra also were to be heard. The parade of the 476 students was indeed impressive as it represented musical youth from every state in the nation and many foreign countries.

It was an informal program in every way. Even the concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra tonight was informal. It opened with a fine performance of Beethoven's "Leonora Overtune No. 3." Then came a typical Koussevitzky reading of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf," with Wesley Addy as narrator. To show the evolution of the waltz, Dr. Koussevitzky chose to program the Strauss "Voices of Spring," "Sibelius," "Valse Triste" and Ravel's "La Valse."

It must have been of tremendous interest to the thousands of people here today to note the many activities of the Berkshire Music Center. But above all these they could not fail to note the spirit of the young musicians, their friendliness with each other regardless of race, creed or color. While the spirit of competition runs high, the spirit of co-operation remains the paramount force. One only need watch three or four students poring over a score, helping each other solve its complexities to realize this. Unknowing, perhaps, these boys and girls are undergoing a spiritual strengthening as well as receiving cultural and practical assistance.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

AUG 4 - 1948

Tanglewood

600 Take Part in Benefit for Europe's Composers

Special to the Herald Tribune

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 3.—Seven thousand visitors assembled at Tanglewood this afternoon for a large-scale benefit for the International Music Fund, recently organized for the aid of composers in Europe. With Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the faculty and students of the Berkshire Music Center, there were fully 600 participants. The centers of the various activities were the big music shed, the theater-concert hall and the chamber music hall. Hundreds of visitors enjoyed picnic suppers in Tanglewood's orchard and on the lawn. Archibald MacLeish, former Librarian of Congress, was the chairman for the benefit.

The four-hour show started in the afternoon in the garden with a presentation of Gian-Carlo Menotti's one-act opera, "The Telephone," and excerpts from "Pelleas et Melisande" and "Don Giovanni."

In the evening, Dr. MacLeish introduced as speakers Dr. Koussevitzky, Associate Justice Felix Frankfurter of the Supreme Court, Aaron Copland, associate director of the Berkshire Music Center, and Dr. Howard Hanson, director of the Eastman School of Music. The speakers touched upon cultural relations between the New World and the Old in inaugurating a campaign for the nation-wide assistance to European creative artists.

Cornelia Otis Skinner, who was to have read two poems, sent word late this afternoon that she could not come to Tanglewood on account of illness in her family. In the last part of the benefit, Dr. Koussevitzky conducted the orchestra in Beethoven's third "Leonore" overture, Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" with Wesley Addy as narrator, Johann Strauss's waltz, "Voices of Spring," Sibelius's "Valse Triste" and Ravel's "La Valse."

Today's fete was the fifth Tanglewood benefit. Last year $8.000 was cleared for the Berkshire Music Center. The all-time maximum was an Allied War Relief performance several years ago which netted $24,000.

The receipts were estimated at $10,000. In addition to Mr. Copland and Dr. Hansen, four other composers, Walter Piston, Darius Milhaud, Nicolas Nabokoff and John Alden Carpenter, were on the stage during the speeches. Telegrams of congratulation on the inauguration of the International Music Fund were sent by Ernest Ansermet, Jean Sibelius, Sir Adrian Boult, Paul Delvincourt, G. Francesco Malipiero and Pablo Casals.

[illegible] Aug 14

Record Audience Hears All-Tchaikovsky Program at Tanglewood

LENOX, Aug. 10 (AP)—The largest crowd of the 1948 Berkshire Festival season turned out at Tanglewood tonight for an all-Tchaikovsky program by the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducting.

The paid attendance was 11,900 to top the previous 1948 record of 10,300 on July 31.

Seymour Lipkin's performance of the piano concerto No. 1 was received enthusiastically. Lipkin won the Rachmaninoff fund's national piano contest last Spring.

Tomorrow night the opera department of the Berkshire Music Center will give its second and final presentation of Rossini's "The Turk in Italy."

The third and final series of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be given Thursday. Saturday and Sunday.

Leonard Bernstein will return as guest conductor Thursday night.

Robert Shaw, youthful choral conductor, will direct the orchestra and the Berkshire Festival Chorus in Debussy's "The Blessed Damozel" and Brahm's Requiem on Saturday night. Ellen Faull, France Yeend and James Pease will be solo[illegible]

Dr. Koussevitzky will lead the orchestra in Beethoven's Symphony No. 3 (Eroica) and Sibelius' Symphony in D Major No. 2 Saturday afternoon.

in Washington.

Aug 3 ~~Trib~~

Help For Europe's Musicians

The incalculable value of the psychological and cultural leadership provided by creative artists is recognized in the recent organization of an International Music Fund to help the composers of Europe. This has been founded by the American Section of the International Society for Contemporary Music, with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, as honorary chairman. Its first benefit program will be a large scale event this afternoon and evening at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., where Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct and Archibald MacLeish, as chairman, will be one of the speakers. Other American orchestras and musical organizations have been invited to give benefit concerts for this purpose throughout the music season of 1948-'49.

Many of Europe's creative artists shared in the physical suffering and hardship caused by the war; few, if any, have escaped its spiritual and psychological toll. The International Music Fund should be valuable not only as actual assistance to the composers of Europe, but as an expression of sympathy and encouragement from musicians and music-lovers in America. Dr. Koussevitzky has pointed out that while the European Recovery Program is aimed at physical needs, there is also a need for "the relief of the spiritual vacuum and cultural hunger of a sick mankind," and this movement is a valuable step in this direction. The committee in charge, with Dr. Carleton Sprague Smith, chief of the Music Division of the New York Public Library, includes many prominent figures in the musical and other aspects of this country's cultural life. It is to be hoped that America's musicians and musical organizations will co-operate in realizing the International Music Fund's purposes.

This Clipping From
MONTREAL, CANADA
GAZETTE
AUG 14 1948

Tanglewood to Hear Two Special Pieces

Two concerts at the Berkshire Music Centre at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., will attract more than usual notice this week-end. In a recital Saturday afternoon at 3.30 Gregor Piatigorski, assisted by Ralph Berkowitz, pianist, will introduce a new sonata, written in the past spring for Mr. Piatigorski by Paul Hindemith. At their last symphony concert, last Friday evening the advanced orchestra will play an elegy composed in memory of the late Mrs. Andrew H. Hepburn, who presented Tanglewood to the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The tribute to Mrs. Hepburn was written at Tanglewood in the past three weeks by Robert Kurka, pupil in composition of Darius Milhaud. Composed for performance by English horn and strings, it will be

---

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
AUG 4 1948

Tanglewood Aids Needy Musicians

By RAYMOND MORIN

LENOX, Wednesday—"Tanglewood on Parade" was a literal description of yesterday's heavy schedule of events.

The extravaganza, which lasted from four in the afternoon until late evening, was staged to raise funds for needy European musicians. The total audiences numbered about 7000, bringing in gate receipts of $10,000.

Even a track star couldn't have kept up with this program for at times it emanated from five locations simultaneously. First there were operatic scenes played in the beautiful Tanglewood gardens. Between the hours of six and seven there were more excerpts of opera in the theater-concert hall, symphonic music by the student orchestra in the shed, a program illustrating the development of chamber music in the Chamber Music Hall, and festival choral music on the rehearsal stage in the orchard.

Manifestation

Reminiscent of the great last act of Wagner's "Die Meistersinger" 462 boys and girls from 42 states and 15 foreign countries, paraded to the shed for the portion of the program titled "Manifestation." The students carried banners and were led by a band.

The Manifestation brought appearances by Howard Hanson, Archibald MacLeish, Aaron Copland, and other important figures in letters and the arts. Serge Koussevitzky led the Boston Symphony in concert.

The program was Beethoven's "Overture to Leonore, No. 3," "Peter and the Wolf," the orchestral fairy tale by Prokofieff, and three waltzes—Strauss' "Voices of Spring," Sibelius' "Valse Triste," and Ravel's "La Valse."

The three-quarter rhythm was picked up and carried on after the concert by a student orchestra under the direction of Frederick Fennell of the conducting faculty for dancing on the lawn. And the five-ring musical-circus was wound up with fireworks.

Seven-Hour Tour

As we traveled along this seven-hour concert tour of the Tanglewood grounds, we made notes of some of our impressions and incomplete as they are, will try to present them with continuity.

Most attractive of the events was the opera played in the gardens. As you looked toward the stage, the backdrop was a rather greyish Monument mountain and beautiful Lake Mahkenac. The scenes were from Mozart's "Don Giovanni," "Debussy," "Pelleas et Melissande," and Menotti's "The Telephone" was given in its entirety.

They were tastefully performed, in keeping with Boris Goldovsky's custom as director. Of the eleven students who performed special praise belongs to Robert Rounseville and Janet Hayes for a sensitively expressive execution of the "Fountain Scene" from the Debussy opera. Other fine assets were Peggy Lee Whiting's true-sense of phrase and attractive lyrical quality as Zerlina in the Mozart excerpt.

Although the Menotti score was conspicuously programmed, it did not prove exceptional in any respect, failing to project the high degree of precision it needs.

City Student Scores

Joan Moynagh, Worcester's only student at the Berkshire Music Center, made a particularly fine impression as "Musetta" in the fourth act of Puccini's "La Boheme" performed in the theater concert hall. She played the distress scene with conviction and sang the part with firm, resonant voice.

As a matter of fact, the two scenes (first and fourth) were admirable. David Lloyd sang the Rodolfo arias expressively and with good timbre. Throughout the scenes there was an unusual enthusiasm in the principal roles. The small stage proved at times a handicap to the action. Incidentally all of the operatic roles were sung in English.

The portion of the program called "Manifestation" took place immediately preceding the main concert of the evening by the Boston Symphony. Warm tributes were paid Dr. Koussevitzky for his efforts on behalf of the American section of the International Society for Contemporary Music.

Speaking Program

Speaking on behalf of the new organization which he heads, Dr. Koussevitzky said: "We believe that the artist belongs to the world: he carries the ideals, and he can help to heal and cement the world."

Archibald MacLeish spoke with great enthusiasm of the contributions of Dr. Koussevitzky, referring to them as "a declaration of faith." He told of the purposes to which money will be put in helping needy musicians not only abroad but in America as well.

Aaron Copland declared "composers more than others understand the plight of musicians in Europe. We want to help them, and with no strings attached." Mr. Copland went on. "It is rumored that Europe is musically finished. I don't believe it, and I know that there are young composers in Europe today who will carry on the work of the revered masters in a fresh and original style.

Howard Hanson expressed that it is particularly fitting that Dr. Koussevitzky should head the society to help European musicians because since his early years as a conductor he has always devoted himself to the best interests of the composer.

Speaking from the layman's point of view, Felix Frankfurter, Supreme Court justice, likened America to the "limbs of the trunk of Europe."

"We cannot cut ourselves off from Europe without cutting ourselves off from ourselves," he said.

Other prominent musicians seated on the stage were Darius Milhaud, John Alden Carpenter, and Walter Piston. Cornelia Otis Skinner, who was to give Shakespearean readings, was unable to be present because of illness in her family.

Before bringing the speaking session to a close, Mr. MacLeish read a number of cablegrams from Europe from Jean Sibelius, Pablo Casal, Sir Adrian Bolt, Francesco Malipiero, and others. It was also explained that the funds obtained would be handled by UNESCO (United Nations Education, Scientific, Cultural-Organization).

The festival will be resumed Thursday night (first concert of Series B) when Dr. Kousevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony in Beethoven's "symphony No. 6 "pastorale" and Stravinsky's "Oedipus Rex," for orchestra, chorus and soloists.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
G 4 - 1948

Tanglewood Finds $10,000 For European Musicians

Plan Warmly Praised; 'Tanglewood On Parade' Shows All Activities of Music Center

By WILLARD M. CLARK

Tanglewood, Aug. 3—There was a happy man at Tanglewood today. He was Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. He was happy because he saw the inauguration of a plan, which, when completed, will bring financial aid to composers and musicians in Europe. More than 7000 persons provided some $10,000 as a nucleus for this fund and it is the hope of its sponsors that orchestras throughout the country will do their bit to swell this fund.

Congratulations Voiced

The inauguration of this plan was rightfully called "a manifestation." It brought to the music shed such composers as Darius Milhaud, John Alden Carpenter, Walter Piston and Nicholas Nobokoff, and such musicians as Dr. Koussevitzky, Aaron Copland and Howard Hanson were on hand to give their commendation to the plan. Congratulatory telegrams were read from Pablo Casals, Mapipiero, Sir Adrian Boult and others.

Supreme Court Justice Felix Frankfurter truly spoke for the laymen who love music, yet know little about it. He sees in this plan a cornerstone on which the hopes for one world may rest. Of all the plans for the formation of one world, he sees this humanitarian movement to help the European composer and the musician as that one plan which shall work.

This plan is sponsored by the International Society of Contemporary Music, of which Dr. Koussevitzky is chairman of the American section. Funds will be handled through UNESCO and a telegram from that office indicated its wholehearted approval and co-operation.

Dr. Koussevitzky spoke briefly introducing Archibald MacLeish as chairman of the meeting. Mr. MacLeish gave a report of the plan as outlined by Dr. Koussevitzky and then introduced Composer Aaron Copland, Dr. Howard Hanson and Justice Frankfurter. It was an absorbing meeting. The utter sincerity of each speaker, the response of the audience, were proof of how deeply Dr. Koussevitzky's plan was felt.

The day has been known as "Tanglewood on Parade." It was just that. Early this afternoon all the activities of the Berkshire Center were on view. In the garden one heard excerpts from "Don Giovanni" and "Pelleas and Melisande" as well as a complete performance of Menotti's "The Telephone." In the theater, we heard two acts from "La Boheme," splendidly sung in English, with David Lloyd winning particular praise for his singing of the tenor role of Rudolfo. Chamber music and a concert by the student orchestra also were to be heard. The parade of the 476 students was indeed impressive as it represented musical youth from every state in the nation and many foreign countries.

It was an informal program in every way. Even the concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra tonight was informal. It opened with a fine performance of Beethoven's "Leonora Overtune No. 3." Then came a typical Koussevitzky reading of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf," with Wesley Addy as narrator. To show the evolution of the waltz, Dr. Koussevitzky chose to program the Strauss "Voices of Spring," "Sibelius," "Valse Triste" and Ravel's "La Valse."

It must have been of tremendous interest to the thousands of people here today to note the many activities of the Berkshire Music Center. But above all these they could not fail to note the spirit of the young musicians, their friendliness with each other regardless of race, creed or color. While the spirit of competition runs high, the spirit of co-operation remains the paramount force. One only need watch three or four students poring over a score, helping each other solve its complexities to realize this. Unknowing, perhaps, these boys and girls are undergoing a spiritual strengthening as well as receiving cultural and practical assistance.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
AUG 4 - 1948

Tanglewood

600 Take Part in Benefit for Europe's Composers

Special to the Herald Tribune

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 3.—Seven thousand visitors assembled at Tanglewood this afternoon for a large-scale benefit for the International Music Fund, recently organized for the aid of composers in Europe. With Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the faculty and students of the Berkshire Music Center, there were fully 600 participants. The centers of the various activities were the big music shed, the theater-concert hall and the chamber music hall. Hundreds of visitors enjoyed picnic suppers in Tanglewood's orchard and on the lawn. Archibald MacLeish, former Librarian of Congress, was the chairman for the benefit.

The four-hour show started in the afternoon in the garden with a presentation of Gian-Carlo Menotti's one-act opera, "The Telephone," and excerpts from "Pelleas et Melisande" and "Don Giovanni."

In the evening, Dr. MacLeish introduced as speakers Dr. Koussevitzky, Associate Justice Felix Frankfurter of the Supreme Court, Aaron Copland, associate director of the Berkshire Music Center, and Dr. Howard Hanson, director of the Eastman School of Music. The speakers touched upon cultural relations between the New World and the Old in inaugurating a campaign for the nation-wide assistance to European creative artists.

Cornelia Otis Skinner, who was to have read two poems, sent word late this afternoon that she could not come to Tanglewood on account of illness in her family. In the last part of the benefit, Dr. Koussevitzky conducted the orchestra in Beethoven's third "Leonore" overture, Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" with Wesley Addy as narrator, Johann Strauss's waltz, "Voices of Spring," Sibelius's "Valse Triste" and Ravel's "La Valse."

Today's fete was the fifth Tanglewood benefit. Last year $8,000 was cleared for the Berkshire Music Center. The all-time maximum was an Allied War Relief performance several years ago which netted $24,000.

The receipts were estimated at $10,000. In addition to Mr. Copland and Dr. Hansen, four other composers, Walter Piston, Darius Milhaud, Nicolas Nabokoff and John Alden Carpenter, were on the stage during the speeches. Telegrams of congratulation on the inauguration of the International Music Fund were sent by Ernest Ansermet, Jean Sibelius, Sir Adrian Boult, Paul Delvincourt, G. Francesco Malipiero and Pablo Casals.

This Clipping From
BOSTON, MASS.
Christian Science Monitor
AUG 4 - 1948

Overtones at Tanglewood

Humanity must have its music to express the otherwise inexpressible. In heroic melodies and crashing discords, in nervous modern rhythms and pellucid folk airs, men look for release from the dailiness of existence. And to have music, they must have musicians.

Yesterday, at Tanglewood, the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Berkshire Music Center gave a benefit performance for the International Music Fund—founded recently by the American Section of the International Society for Contemporary Music to help the composers of Europe. Here are overtones to the European Recovery Program which will surely enrich that program. As Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the orchestra, points out, relief for physical needs must be supplemented by "the relief of the spiritual vacuum and cultural hunger of a sick mankind."

These days of physical pressure and shaken values are not easy for the musician or artist of any sort. They afford him neither an ivory tower of escape nor a solid foundation for communication with the world's restless masses. Particularly is this true of the artist who has suffered the dislocations of wartime and postwar Europe. The benefit performance at Tanglewood should be only the first movement in a great symphony of good will which will waken larger harmonies around the world.

This Clipping From
ST. ALBANS, VT.
MESSENGER
AUG 4 - 1948

Fund Aids Musicians

LENOX, Mass. (UP) — Serge Koussevitzky, retiring director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, announced today that about $10,000 has been collected under a financial plan to aid European composers and musicians.

[illegible] Aug 14

Record Audience Hears All-Tchaikovsky Program at Tanglewood

LENOX, Aug. 10 (AP)—The largest crowd of the 1948 Berkshire Festival season turned out at Tanglewood tonight for an all-Tchaikovsky program by the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducting.

The paid attendance was 11,900 to top the previous 1948 record of 10,300 on July 31.

Seymour Lipkin's performance of the piano concerto No. 1 was received enthusiastically. Lipkin won the Rachmaninoff fund's national piano contest last Spring.

Tomorrow night the opera department of the Berkshire Music Center will give its second and final presentation of Rossini's "The Turk in Italy."

The third and final series of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be given Thursday, Saturday and Sunday.

Leonard Bernstein will return as guest conductor Thursday night.

Robert Shaw, youthful choral conductor, will direct the orchestra and the Berkshire Festival Chorus in Debussy's "The Blessed Damozel" and Brahm's Requiem on Saturday night. Ellen Faull, Frances Yeend and James Pease will be soloists.

Dr. Koussevitzky will lead the orchestra in Beethoven's Symphony No. 3 (Eroica) and Sibelius' Symphony in D Major No. 2 Saturday afternoon.

[234]

Aug 4

$10,000 IS RAISED FOR NEEDY ARTISTS

'Tanglewood on Parade' Draws 7,000, Aids European Talent —Frankfurter Speaks

By ROSS PARMENTER

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 3—By putting on "Tanglewood on Parade" here today, $10,000 was raised to aid European creative artists. That sum was paid by the crowd of 7,000 who came to hear and see a series of features that began in the early afternoon and ended with fireworks seven hours later.

The event was as difficult to classify as "The March of Musical Fidelity" staged last year. The underlying purpose was serious, but again everyone was in a relaxed mood and the beautiful estate was converted for a second time into a sort of musical circus.

There were five rings, and at one time there were programs going on simultaneously in four of them. And the event lived up to its name. Not only was there an actual parade of more than 400 students of The Berkshire Music Center, but listeners also saw and heard the chief attractions of Tanglewood, Serge Koussevitzky and The Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The serious purposes of the program were outlined in a series of speeches that was called, at Dr. Koussevitzky's suggestion, a "manifestation." Archibald MacLeish, United States representative to UNESCO, was the chairman, and Associate Justice Felix Frankfurter of the United States Supreme Court was the chief speaker.

"Music," said Justice Frankfurter, "is the instinctive learning of the soul. It is an essential need of life, for there is a deep need for harmony in man. It cuts across all boundaries and national differences. In music one finds a greater hope for one world than in all the political mechanisms."

Mr. MacLeish also related music to the hope for peace. UNESCO's basic concept of using cultural means to work for peace was not just "a frill on the cuff," but a serious hope, he said.

Aaron Copland explaiend how committees had been formed here and in Europe to work together. The money raised today and further funds that will be raised in a widening campaign will be disbursed by UNESCO to aid musicians and other artists in Europe.

The "Manifestation" was held in the big music shed. It was followed by the Boston Symphony's program, which opened with Beethoven's overture to "Leonore" No. 3, continued with Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" and ended with works by Strauss, Sibelius and Ravel illustrating the evolution of the waltz.

The shed was the fifth "ring" at Tanglewood to be put into use. The first was the formal garden, where early comers sat between the clipped hedges listening to operatic excerpts presented by Boris Goldovsky's students in the opera department. Gian-Carlo Menotti's "The Telephone" capped the program.

The second ring ..as the lawn in front of the old house. It was to this spot that the students paraded to hear Dr. Koussevizky welcome the crowd and hail the assistance to artists abroad. The parade was headed by a thirty-five piece band playing Sousa's "Stars and Stripes Forever."

Then four rings were put into action at one time. The student orchestra gave a concert in the shed, the composition and chamber music students gave one in the chamber hall, the opera students performed in the theatre-concert hall, and the chorus rehearsed in the orchard. Visitors picked their favorites but some just spread out their rugs and ate their picnic suppers in the golden light of the slanting afternoon sun.

~~Hartford Times~~

Campaign to Aid Musicians Begun

Special to The Hartford Times

Lenox, Mass.—The inauguration of a nation-wide campaign to help creative musical talent in Europe opened yesterday at Tanglewood under the auspices of Serge Koussevitsky and the Berkshire Music Center. The festivities, which started at 4:30, ended with a concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the shed at Tanglewood.

A performance of an exerpt from Act I of "Don Giovanni" in English began the first concert. Under the direction of Boris Goldovsky, the opera students of the Berkshire Music Center also sang the Fountain Scene from Debussy's "Pelleas et Melisande."

The complete performance of the modern opera in English "The Telephone" by Menotti finished the program.

Four simultaneous programs were offered to the thousands of spectators at 6 o'clock. The Student Symphony Orchestra performed Beethoven's "Coriolamus Overture," the first movement of Rachmaninoff's Second Piano Concerto and three dances from Leonard Bernstein's ballet suite "Fancy Free." The entire program, held in the shed, was played and conducted by students.

Picnic supper was held on the lawn before the evening activities began at 8 o'clock. The Manifestation which dedicated the benefit performances, was held in the shed. Dr. Koussevitsky opened the proceedings and explained the purpose of the International Society for Contemporary Music.

"This country remains to preserve and restore life and liberty to Europe," he said. "We artists think of our brothers in distress and rise on their behalf."

Dr. Koussevitsky introduced Archibald MacLeish, chairman of the American committee of the international Society who gave his approval to the undertaking started by Dr. Koussevitsky. He said that the Music Fund is an "establishment of faith" among the people of all countries.

Other speakers included Aaron Copland who represented American composers, Dr. Howard Hanson, a representative of UNESCO, the organization which will distribute the funds, and Justice Felix Frankfurter who represented "the layman."

"Tanglewood on Parade", for the benefit of the creative spirit in music all over the world, closed with the Boston Symphony Orchestra playing under Dr. Kousevitsky's direction. The concert included Beethoven's Overture to Leonore No. 3, and Peter and the Wolf by Prokofieff. Wesley Addy was narrator in this fairytale set to music.

The program ended with a trilogy of waltzes which depicted the evolution of this type of music.

As usual, the Boston Symphony and Dr. Koussevitsky were warmly received by the audience in the shed and on the lawn of Tanglewood.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

AUG 4- 1948

Tanglewood

Continued from Page 1

meeting. The utter sincerity of each speaker, the response of the audience, were proof of how deeply Dr. Koussevitzky's plan was felt.

The day has been known as "Tanglewood on Parade." It was just that. Early this afternoon all the activities of the Berkshire Center were on view. In the garden one heard excerpts from "Don Giovanni" and "Pelleas and Melisande" as well as a complete performance of Menotti's "The Telephone." In the theater, we heard two acts from "La Boheme," splendidly sung in English, with David Lloyd winning particular praise for his singing of the tenor role of Rudolfo. Chamber music and a concert by the student orchestra also were to be heard. The parade of the 476 students was indeed impressive as it represented musical youth from every state in the nation and many foreign countries.

It was an informal program in every way. Even the concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra tonight was informal. It opened with a fine performance of Beethoven's "Leonora Overtune No. 3." Then came a typical Koussevitzky reading of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf," with Wesley Addy as narrator. To show the evolution of the waltz, Dr. Koussevitzky chose to program the Strauss "Voices of Spring," "Sibelius," "Valse Triste" and Ravel's "La Valse."

It must have been of tremendous interest to the thousands of people here today to note the many activities of the Berkshire Music Center. But above all these they could not fail to note the spirit of the young musicians, their friendliness with each other regardless of race, creed or color. While the spirit of competition runs high, the spirit of co-operation remains the paramount force. One only need watch three or four students poring over a score, helping each other solve its complexities to realize this. Unknowing, perhaps, these boys and girls are undergoing a spiritual strengthening as well as receiving cultural and practical assistance.

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
AMERICAN

AUG 4- 1948

Tanglewood Plans Benefit For Musicians

New York—(UP)—A four-hour benefit to help the needy musicians of Europe will be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass., on Aug. 3.

The main event will be a concert by the orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky. Maurice Evans and Cornelia Otis Skinner will appear in Shakespearean excerpts. Under the title of "Tanglewood on Parade," there will be simultaneous performances in their various buildings by all departments of the Berkshire Music Center—orchestra, choral, operatic and chamber music.

At an assembly preceding the orchestral concert, speakers will urge "nation-wide assistance from the New World to the creative artists of the Old World."

Tanglewood Finds $10,000 For European Musicians

Plan Warmly Praised; 'Tanglewood On Parade' Shows All Activities of Music Center

[illegible] Aug 4

By WILLARD M. CLARK

Tanglewood, Aug. 3—There was a happy man at Tanglewood today. He was Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. He was happy because he saw the inauguration of a plan, which, when completed, will bring financial aid to composers and musicians in Europe. More than 7000 persons provided some $10,000 as a nucleus for this fund and it is the hope of its sponsors that orchestras throughout the country will do their bit to swell this fund.

Congratulations Voiced

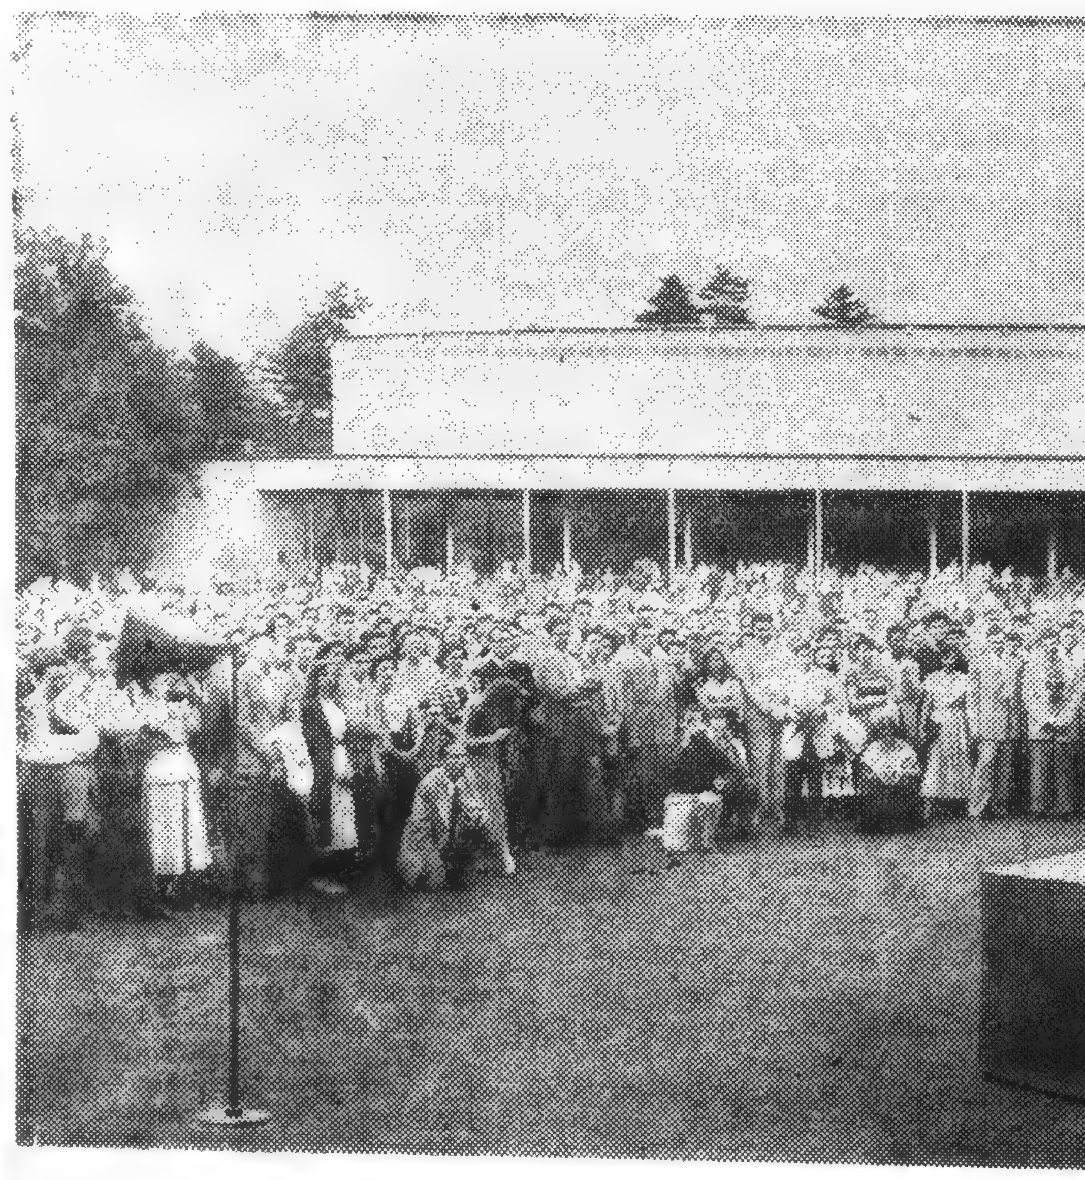
The inauguration of this plan was rightfully called "a manifestation." It brought to the music shed such composers as Darius Milhaud, John Alden Carpenter, Walter Piston and Nicholas Nobokoff, and such musicians as Dr. Koussevitzky, Aaron Copland and Howard Hanson were on hand to give their commendation to the plan. Congratulatory telegrams were read from Pablo Casals, Malipiero, Sir Adrian Boult and others.

Supreme Court Justice Felix Frankfurter truly spoke for the laymen who love music, yet know little about it. He sees in this plan a cornerstone on which the hopes for one world may rest. Of all the plans for the formation of one world, he sees this humanitarian movement to help the European composer and the musician as that one plan which shall work.

This plan is sponsored by the International Society of Contemporary Music, of which Dr. Koussevitzky is chairman of the American section. Funds will be handled through UNESCO and a telegram from that office indicated its wholehearted approval and co-operation.

Dr. Koussevitzky spoke briefly introducing Archibald MacLeish as chairman of the meeting. Mr. MacLeish gave a report of the plan as outlined by Dr. Koussevitzky and then introduced Composer Aaron Copland, Dr. Howard Hanson and Justice Frankfurter. It was an absorbing

Continued on Page 6



MAESTRO'S WELCOME: Dr. Serge Koussevitzky welcomes to Tanglewood for the benefit program staged yesterday to aid European musicians, this crowd of visitors who arrived early for seven and one-half hour program. On the steps of the platform is Boris Goldovsky, head of the opera department at the Berkshire Music Center.

Aug 4

$10,000 IS RAISED FOR NEEDY ARTISTS

'Tanglewood on Parade' Draws 7,000, Aids European Talent —Frankfurter Speaks

By ROSS PARMENTER
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 3—By putting on "Tanglewood on Parade" here today, $10,000 was raised to aid European creative artists. That sum was paid by the crowd of 7,000 who came to hear and see a series of features that began in the early afternoon and ended with fireworks seven hours later.

The event was as difficult to classify as "The March of Musical Fidelity" staged last year. The underlying purpose was serious, but again everyone was in a relaxed mood and the beautiful estate was converted for a second time into a sort of musical circus.

There were five rings, and at one time there were programs going on simultaneously in four of them. And the event lived up to its name. Not only was there an actual parade of more than 400 students of The Berkshire Music Center, but listeners also saw and heard the chief attractions of Tanglewood, Serge Koussevitzky and The Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The serious purposes of the program were outlined in a series of speeches that was called, at Dr. Koussevitzky's suggestion, a "manifestation." Archibald MacLeish, United States representative to UNESCO, was the chairman, and Associate Justice Felix Frankfurter of the United States Supreme Court was the chief speaker.

"Music," said Justice Frankfurter, "is the instinctive learning of the soul. It is an essential need of life, for there is a deep need for harmony in man. It cuts across all boundaries and national differences. In music one finds a greater hope for one world than in all the political mechanisms."

Mr. MacLeish also related music to the hope for peace. UNESCO's basic concept of using cultural means to work for peace was not just "a frill on the cuff," but a serious hope, he said.

Aaron Copland explaiend how committees had been formed here and in Europe to work together. The money raised today and further funds that will be raised in a widening campaign will be disbursed by UNESCO to aid musicians and other artists in Europe.

The "Manifestation" was held in the big music shed. It was followed by the Boston Symphony's program, which opened with Beethoven's overture to "Leonore" No. 3, continued with Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" and ended with works by Strauss, Sibelius and Ravel illustrating the evolution of the waltz.

The shed was the fifth "ring" at Tanglewood to be put into use. The first was the formal garden, where early comers sat between the clipped hedges listening to operatic excerpts presented by Boris Goldovsky's students in the opera department. Gian-Carlo Menotti's "The Telephone" capped the program.

The second ring was the lawn in front of the old house. It was to this spot that the students paraded to hear Dr. Koussevizky welcome the crowd and hail the assistance to artists abroad. The parade was headed by a thirty-five piece band playing Sousa's "Stars and Stripes Forever."

Then four rings were put into action at one time. The student orchestra gave a concert in the shed, the composition and chamber music students gave one in the chamber hall, the opera students performed in the theatre-concert hall, and the chorus rehearsed in the orchard. Visitors picked their favorites but some just spread out their rugs and ate their picnic suppers in the golden light of the slanting afternoon sun.

~~Hartford Times~~

AUG 4 1948

Campaign to Aid Musicians Begun

Special to The Hartford Times

Lenox, Mass.—The inauguration of a nation-wide campaign to help creative musical talent in Europe opened yesterday at Tanglewood under the auspices of Serge Koussevitsky and the Berkshire Music Center. The festivities, which started at 4:30, ended with a concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the shed at Tanglewood.

A performance of an exerpt from Act I of "Don Giovanni" in English began the first concert. Under the direction of Boris Goldovsky, the opera students of the Berkshire Music Center also sang the Fountain Scene from Debussy's "Pelleas et Melisande."

The complete performance of the modern opera in English "The Telephone" by Menotti finished the program.

Four simultaneous programs were offered to the thousands of spectators at 6 o'clock. The Student Symphony Orchestra performed Beethoven's "Coriolamus Overture," the first movement of Rachmaninoff's Second Piano Concerto and three dances from Leonard Bernstein's ballet suite "Fancy Free." The entire program, held in the shed, was played and conducted by students.

Picnic supper was held on the lawn before the evening activities began at 8 o'clock. The Manifestation which dedicated the benefit performances, was held in the shed. Dr. Koussevitsky opened the proceedings and explained the purpose of the International Society for Contemporary Music.

"This country remains to preserve and restore life and liberty to Europe," he said. "We artists think of our brothers in distress and rise on their behalf."

Dr. Koussevitsky introduced Archibald MacLeish, chairman of the American committee of the international Society who gave his approval to the undertaking started by Dr. Koussevitsky. He said that the Music Fund is an "establishment of faith" among the people of all countries.

Other speakers included Aaron Copland who represented American composers, Dr. Howard Hanson, a representative of UNESCO, the organization which will distribute the funds, and Justice Felix Frankfurter who represented "the layman."

"Tanglewood on Parade", for the benefit of the creative spirit in music all over the world, closed with the Boston Symphony Orchestra playing under Dr. Koussevitsky's direction. The concert included Beethoven's Overture to Leonore No. 3, and Peter and the Wolf by Prokofieff. Wesley Addy was narrator in this fairytale set to music.

The program ended with a trilogy of waltzes which depicted the evolution of this type of music.

As usual, the Boston Symphony and Dr. Koussevitsky were warmly received by the audience in the shed and on the lawn of Tanglewood.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

AUG 4- 1948

Tanglewood

Continued from Page 1

meeting. The utter sincerity of each speaker, the response of the audience, were proof of how deeply Dr. Koussevitzky's plan was felt.

The day has been known as "Tanglewood on Parade." It was just that. Early this afternoon all the activities of the Berkshire Center were on view. In the garden one heard excerpts from "Don Giovanni" and "Pelleas and Melisande" as well as a complete performance of Menotti's "The Telephone." In the theater, we heard two acts from "La Boheme," splendidly sung in English, with David Lloyd winning particular praise for his singing of the tenor role of Rudolfo. Chamber music and a concert by the student orchestra also were to be heard. The parade of the 476 students was indeed impressive as it represented musical youth from every state in the nation and many foreign countries.

It was an informal program in every way. Even the concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra tonight was informal. It opened with a fine performance of Beethoven's "Leonora Overtune No. 3." Then came a typical Koussevitzky reading of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf," with Wesley Addy as narrator. To show the evolution of the waltz, Dr. Koussevitzky chose to program the Strauss "Voices of Spring," "Sibelius," "Valse Triste" and Ravel's "La Valse."

It must have been of tremendous interest to the thousands of people here today to note the many activities of the Berkshire Music Center. But above all these they could not fail to note the spirit of the young musicians, their friendliness with each other regardless of race, creed or color. While the spirit of competition runs high, the spirit of co-operation remains the paramount force. One only need watch three or four students poring over a score, helping each other solve its complexities to realize this. Unknowing, perhaps, these boys and girls are undergoing a spiritual strengthening as well as receiving cultural and practical assistance.

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
AMERICAN

AUG 4- 1948

Tanglewood Plans Benefit For Musicians

New York—(UP)—A four-hour benefit to help the needy musicians of Europe will be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass., on Aug. 3.

The main event will be a concert by the orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky. Maurice Evans and Cornelia Otis Skinner will appear in Shakespearean excerpts. Under the title of "Tanglewood on Parade," there will be simultaneous performances in their various buildings by all departments of the Berkshire Music Center—orchestra, choral, operatic and chamber music.

At an assembly preceding the orchestral concert, speakers will urge "nation-wide assistance from the New World to the creative artists of the Old World."

Tanglewood Finds $10,000 For European Musicians

Plan Warmly Praised; 'Tanglewood On Parade' Shows All Activities of Music Center

[illegible] Aug 4

By WILLARD M. CLARK

Tanglewood, Aug. 3—There was a happy man at Tanglewood today. He was Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. He was happy because he saw the inauguration of a plan, which, when completed, will bring financial aid to composers and musicians in Europe. More than 7000 persons provided some $10,000 as a nucleus for this fund and it is the hope of its sponsors that orchestras throughout the country will do their bit to swell this fund.

Congratulations Voiced

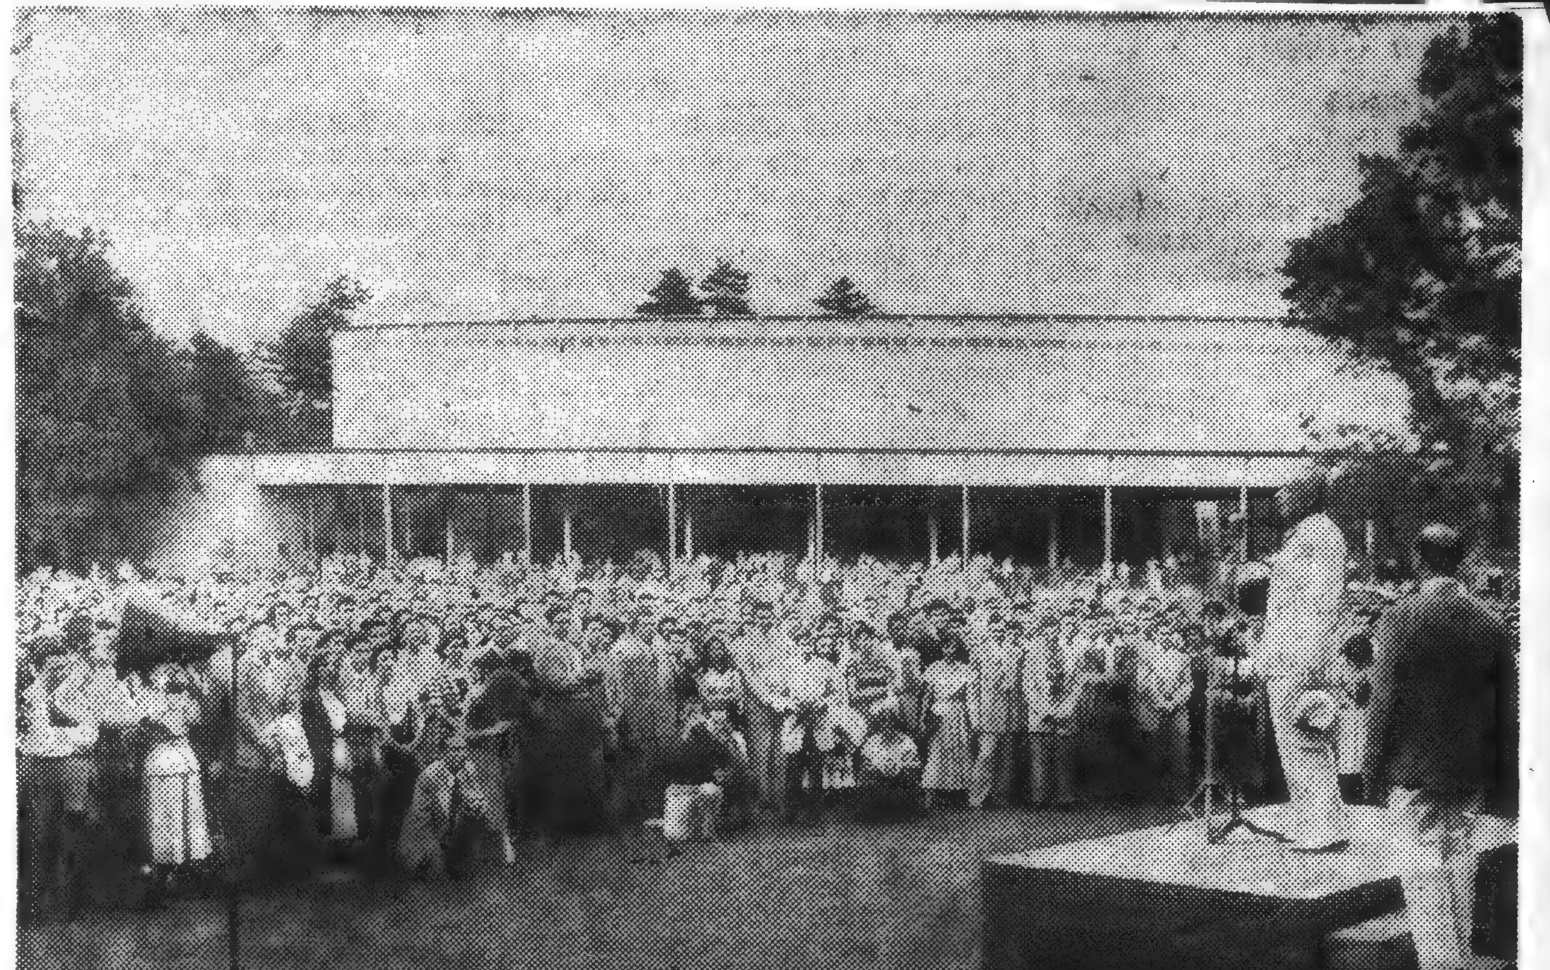
The inauguration of this plan was rightfully called "a manifestation." It brought to the music shed such composers as Darius Milhaud, John Alden Carpenter, Walter Piston and Micholas Nobokoff, and such musicians as Dr. Koussevitzky, Aaron Copland and Howard Hanson were on hand to give their commendation to the plan. Congratulatory telegrams were read from Pablo Casals, Mapipiero, Sir Adrian Boult and others.

Supreme Court Justice Felix Frankfurter truly spoke for the laymen who love music, yet know little about it. He sees in this plan a cornerstone on which the hopes for one world may rest. Of all the plans for the formation of one world, he sees this humanitarian movement to help the European composer and the musician as that one plan which shall work.

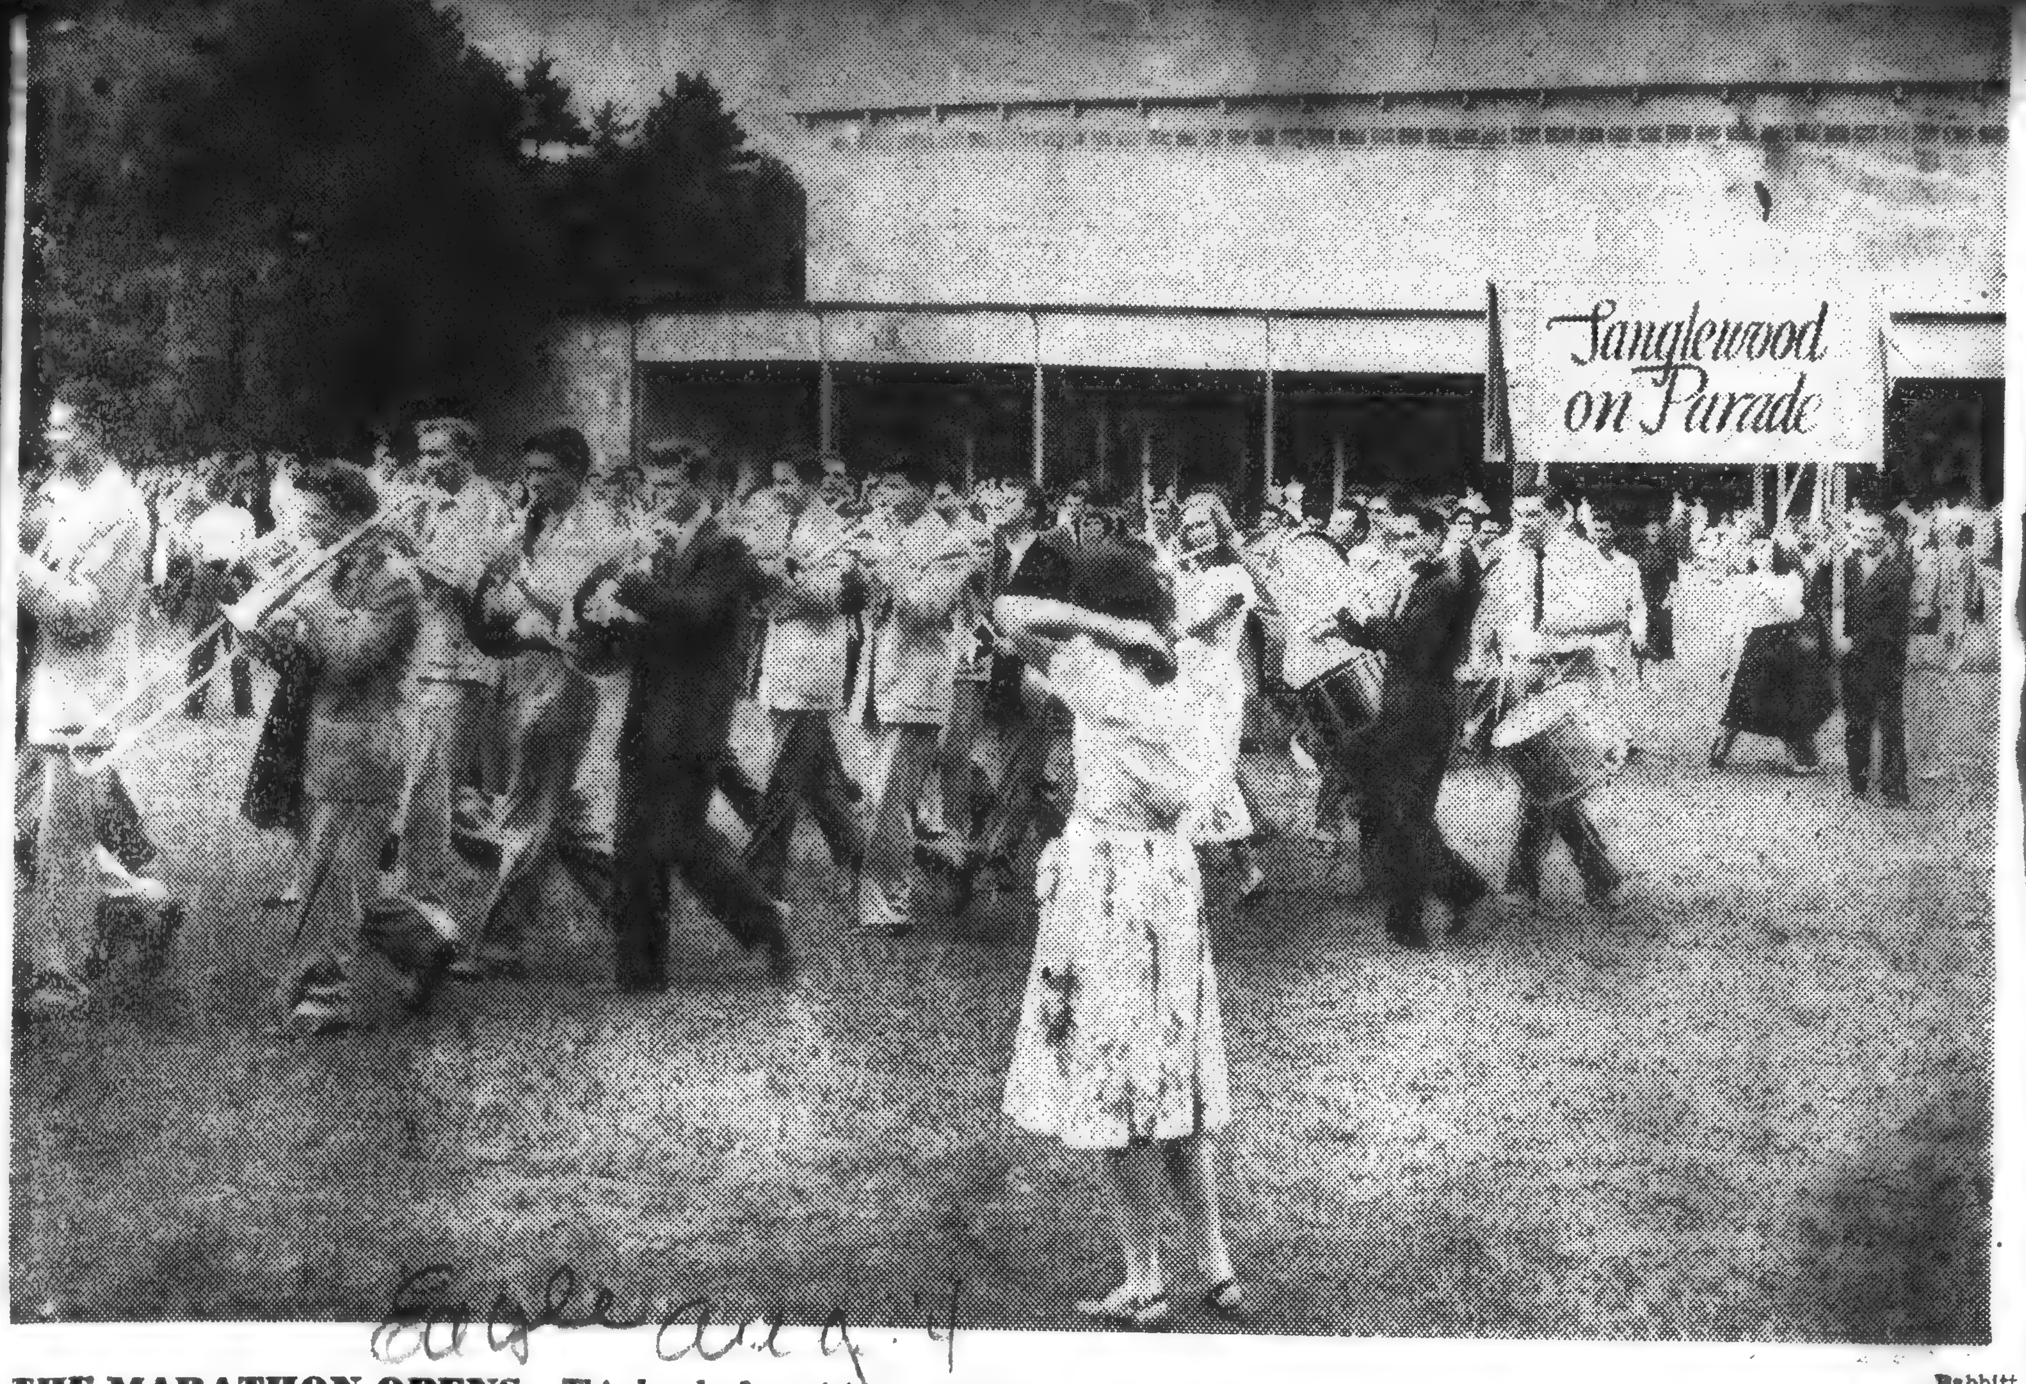
This plan is sponsored by the International Society of Contemporary Music, of which Dr. Koussevitzky is chairman of the American section. Funds will be handled through UNESCO and a telegram from that office indicated its wholehearted approval and co-operation.

Dr. Koussevitzky spoke briefly introducing Archibald MacLeish as chairman of the meeting. Mr. MacLeish gave a report of the plan as outlined by Dr. Koussevitzky and then introduced Composer Aaron Copland, Dr. Howard Hanson and Justice Frankfurter. It was an absorbing

Continued on Page 6



MAESTRO'S WELCOME: Dr. Serge Koussevitzky welcomes to Tanglewood for the benefit program staged yesterday to aid European musicians, this crowd of visitors who arrived early for seven and one-half hour program. On the steps of the platform is Boris Goldovsky, head of the opera department at the Berkshire Music Center.



Eagle Aug 4

Babbitt

THE MARATHON OPENS: This band of musicians, made up of students from the Berkshire Music Center, opened the Tanglewood-on-Parade program at the Berkshire Festival last night at 6. Simultaneous demonstrations followed in all sections of the estate and a lively program kept the 7000 visitors busy until after midnight.

Tanglewood Jammed for Benefit Event

7000 Contribute $10,000 to European Musicians' Fund

TANGLEWOOD — The 7½-hour arathon held here yesterday afternoon and last night netted $10,00 for the International Music 'und, organized for the aid of omposers and musicians in Eupe. A crowd of 7000 turned out the event as Tanglewood went parade, providing more enterinment than a three-ring circus. The mammoth musical program, ecuted under the auspices of the rkshire Music Center, was an tstanding success. Throngs of ople came early and stayed late. e program was so full and events numerous that visitors found it fficult to make a decision as to hat they would like to see or ar first.

The long show started in the afternoon at 4.30 in the garden when opera department, headed by ris Goldovsky, presented Gianrlo Menotti's one-act opera, "The lephone," and excerpts from elleas and Melisande" and "Don vanni." Then the 464 students de a spontaneous appearance on grounds behind a band under e direction of Freddie Fennell, hose baton-wielding made a great t with the crowd. He displayed nee action in leading the band of appy musicians which provided the necessary color for the event. Fennell had a busy day and concluded the program by directing the "Ferocious Fiddlers" on the piazza of the Tanglewood house in waltz music for the hundreds who remained after the fireworks for dancing on the lawn. Fennell instilled a rhythm to put life and pep in the most staid among the crowds who stayed to participate or watch. It became evident early that bare feet glide better on the grass than high heels and many young ladies took advantage of this item of social advancement.

Following the parade, "all hell broke loose," as one Tanglewood visitor described it, when the program offered simultaneous demonstrations in all parts of the grounds—the Shed, the orchard, the theatre-concert hall, chamber music hall and even the rehearsal stage.

Opera excerpts were performed in one hall, a symphony concert was under way in the Shed, "A Hundred Years of Chamber Music," was being presented in another hall, a choral rehearsal started up in the orchard and a few unscheduled events took place near the rehearsal stage which sounded like a rehearsal of a barber shop quartet. There was something doing every minute, everywhere.

Dr. MacLeish Speaks

Then there was a lull and hundreds happily slumped on the grounds to picnic and rest until the next bell was sounded to signal another event about to start.

A distinguished group of speak-

Tanglewood
Continued on Eighteenth Page

Cir. (D 97,651) (S 145,901)

This Clipping From
ST. PAUL, MINN.
PIONEER PRESS
AUG 4 - 1948

George E. Sokolsky--

The Little Red House

UP HERE IN SANDISFIELD, WE GO IN FOR CULTURE IN a big way; that is, those of us who do not till the soil and chop down the trees for lumber, and that goes back a long time to the days of Mark Hopkins, Oliver Wendell Holms—not the justice, but the philosopher—Herman Melville of "Moby Dick," William Cullen Bryant, Henry Wadsworth Longfellow.

So last Saturday, we foregathered at the little red house where Nathaniel Hawthorne conceived the Tanglewood Tales and where often Longfellow, Melville, Fanny Kemble and Hawthorne met to talk but even more to store in their memories the impress of the beauties of the Berkshires and of each other's personality.

The little red house has been restored externally by the National Federation of Music Clubs. Manning Hawthorne was there to represent his grandfather, Nathaniel, and Henry Wadsworth Longfellow Dana, whose maternal grandfather was ths poet and whose paternal grandfather wrote "Two Years Before the Mast," delivered a brilliant and witty address.

* * *

WE WERE BLESSED WITH the best of Berkshire weather. As we sat in the shadow of Monument mountain and looked across the lake and listened to Serge Koussevitzky accept the little house which is to be used as studios for musicians who come to Tanglewood to improve themselves. And this is so important because out of Tanglewood will in time come American composers, American conductors and American artists and all the internationalism of its atmosphere will go by the board.

As I sat on a rock, on which creeped myrtle and rose, I could not help but think that at that very moment were gathered in Philadelphia others who also called themselves Americans but who, somehow, had been cut off at the roots, or who, coming latterly, had no depth to their roots. And while we steeped ourselves richly in the lore of our own land, they were shrieking foully against their mother country and, gazing on her beauties, saw only nettles and thistles, while the mirage from afar was richly verdant.

* * *

YET THEIR CURSES WILL wither on the vine. I recalled that Balaam, when pressured to curse, sang:

"How goodly are thy tents, O Jacob, and thy tabernacles, O Israel!

"As the valleys are they spread forth, as gardens by the river's side, as the trees of lign aloes which the Lord hath planted, and as cedar trees beside the waters."

For who can curse such a country as this and who can be its enemy? How varied are the ways of its people and there are none to order them to do this and that and to have no will of their own.

(Copyright, 1948, King Features Syndicate)

This Clipping From
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD JOURNAL
AUG 4 1948

Tanglewood Music Lovers Pack Hall

"AGAIN IT IS proved that we like what we know and know what we like," a New England music teacher told her pupils last night during intermission in the great Shed in "Tanglewood," home of the Berkshire Music Festival. The program "Tanglewood on Parade," brought thousand to the grounds and filled the Shed to its capacity of 6,000.

Dr. Hanson

A symphony concert was conducted by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. There were also scenes from the great operas in the Theater-Concert Hall; a demonstration rehearsal in the Orchard; and "A Hundred Years of Chamber Music," by an ensemble in the Chamber Music Hall.

U. S. SUPREME Court Justice Felix Frankfurter speaking for the laymen in music, Dr. Koussevitzky, Dr. Howard Hanson of Eastman School of Music, Rochester, and Aaron Copeland, widely known composer, were among speakers introduced by the chairman, former Assistant Secretary of State, Archibald MacLeish. The events were arranged as a benefit for the International Music fund under auspices of Berkshire Music Festival. Among contemporary composers on the platform were: Darius Milhaud of France, Walter Piston and John Alden Carpenter. Both Dr. Hanson and Mr. MacLeish are active in UNESCO committees.

MR. AND MRS. G. Karl Strebel of Syracuse, the former music chairman of the Syracuse Liederkranz and past president of the Syracuse Opera Guild, have been staying near Lee in the Berkshires for several days and attended Festival programs in the Shed and rehearsals.

Strebel

Proceeds from rehearsal tickets are given to the Boston Symphony pension fund.

LAST NIGHT'S orchestra program by the Boston Symphony included the Overture to Beethoven's "Leonore," and, for smaller orchestra, Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" with Wesley Addy as narrator. "The Evolution of the Waltz" brought the lilt of the Johann Strauss "Voices of Spring," the poignantly beautiful "Valse Triste" of Sibelius and Ravel's choro. graphic poem "La Valse," a colorful composition for full orchestra.

Messages to Dr. Koussevitzky from many parts of the world were read during The Manifestion which preceded the concert. Among them, one from the leading Finnish composer, Sibelius. E. V. W.

[236]

Berkshire Festival

Replica Of "Red House" Used For Musicmaking

The following is the third in a series of four articles on Tanglewood, home of the Berkshire Music Festival at Lenox, Massachusetts, written by the music and drama editor of the Evening Citizen, who spent a week there observing the students and attending the concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

By Lauretta Thistle
Evening Citizen Music Editor

Nathaniel Hawthorne hated music. He also detested a certain little red house in Massachusetts which he described as "the very ugliest little bit of an old red farmhouse you ever saw" and "the most inconvenient and wretched home I ever put my head into."

Today an exact replica of that little red house at Tanglewood (remember Hawthorne's Tanglewood Tales?) is being used for musicmaking. The National Federation of Music Clubs presented the reconstructed house to the Berkshire Music Center on July 24 of this year.

Nowhere on the grounds of Tanglewood are you out of sound of music, for students are rehearsing all around you. Some of them are preparing for a "scenes from opera" night or for the major operatic production, Rossini's "A Turk in Italy." Trios and quintets explore the literature of chamber music, under the watchful eye of Gregor Piatigorsky, or one of the first desk men of the Boston Symphony. And off in the remote practice huts in the woods the trombonists and horn players do their lonely stint of practising.

Discussing Manuscripts

Somewhere on the grounds a few advanced students of composition are discussing and criticising manuscripts with massive, phlegmatic-looking Darius Milhaud, member of the famous French "groupe des six." On Sunday afternoon they will hear him conduct the orchestra in his new Second Symphony.

A few students who are not in class at the moment are sitting in the shade studying scores, or carrying on animated discussions of things musical. That boy over there is from the Philippines and his companion came all the way from China.

Several talented young Canadians are hard at work in this summer session. There's Sandra Coupal from Ottawa, a pianist at home, but now singing in a small choir, and having ambitions to learn the trombone so that she can play in the orchestra next summer. Donna Grescoe of Winnipeg, already well known as a solo artist, is here with her violin; Hiller Diamond of Toronto, with his viola; Rowland S. Pack of London, with his cello; Billie Olive Murray of Windsor, with her trumpet; and Lee Alfred Hepner of Edmonton, who is studying orchestral conducting.

With all the 462 talented young musicians, most of them graduates and many of them on scholarships, the emphasis is on all-round musicianship and enlargement of musical horizons. Very little mention is made of individual achievements. They have to be good in their own fields to get to Tanglewood at all, but once here they spend their time cooperating with others, in choirs, orchestras or small chamber groups. Perhaps students who had little or no interest in choral work find themselves attracted by the magnetism of Robert Shaw, and in a few seasons will be drawing on his technique to direct choirs in their own home towns.

Making Good Use

Whatever Hawthorne might think of the paradoxical fate of his "red shanty", the students are making good use of its space, both for social functions and for rehearsals. It is here that Koussevitsky gives private instruction to his three special students of conducting, chosen from 150 applicants.

These three young men, Seymour Lipkin (who won the Rachmaninoff Prize this year), Irwin Hoffman and Howard Shanet, speak in glowing terms of Koussevitsky's devotion to them. The school itself is his own creation, but these student conductors are his special pride and joy.

"We know a lesson is going to be long, but we never know how long," says Howard Shanet, who was assistant conductor in the New York City Center Orchestra last winter. "Once when we were having a group lesson we knew that Dr. Koussevitsky had an important meeting at five o'clock. At about five, Leonard Bernstein reminded him of this meeting.

"Koussevitsky's answer was, 'But I couldn't think of leaving my children now. Will you go along and represent me, please?' "

The public hears these young conductors in Friday evening concerts when they conduct the student orchestra. On the night of our visit they lead their orchestra through compositions of such diverse styles as Bach's Double Concerto (the young violinists are from Palestine and Russia), Mendelssohn's Reformation Symphony and a composition by the contemporary Shapero.

The members of the orchestra, who played together for the first time three weeks ago, have so far this evening played correctly, completely and unexcitingly. Then Eleazar de Carvalho, Brazilian conductor now on the faculty of the school, takes the baton and sweeps the orchestra and the audience into the color and warmth of Richard Strauss — not the obviously programatic music of Strauss either, but the more obscure Also Sprach Zarathustra.

Under the stimulation of the rich tone palette of Strauss and the dynamic leadership of Carvalho those students suddenly come alive in such thrilling fashion that they sweep the audience off its feet. Gone are all thoughts of student orchestras and student conductors — this is exciting music, beautifully performed.

But perhaps only the naive are surprised at anything that happens at Tanglewood, for it is a land of pleasant surprises.

To Be Continued

Would Have Had RCMP Band To Lead N.Y. Parade

By The Canadian Press

MONTREAL—Federal and provincial governments should give financial aid to service clubs, W. J. Shields, vice-president of the Montreal Lions Club, said here yesterday.

Such aid, he told a luncheon meeting, would enable Canadian delegates to United States service club conventions to do a better job of advertising Canada.

Street Convent

Record Music Critic Reports:

Tanglewood Is Cross Section Of Musical U. S.

Aug.

By MARJORIE C. TOWER

For a practising musician or ardent music lover, a Saturday and Sunday at Tanglewood, the Berkshire Music Center and permanent summer home of the Boston Symphony at Lenox, Mass., seems a foretaste of heaven. Tanglewood was arranged with airy precision, artistry, imagination and practicality by Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Thousands of happy, time-free people lend reality to the vision as they stroll across the acres of landscaped and mountain-viewed lawns between the enormous open Music Shed where the Boston Symphony performs, the Theatre Concert Hall for the opera department and chamber music department, the small Chamber Music Hall, the Buffet, the formal gardens, and the futuristic gates and glassed-in office.

The schedule at Tanglewood calls for three performances weekly as follows: Thursday and Saturday at 1;15 p. m. and Sunday at 3:30 p. m. A special concert will be given Tuesday, August 10, at 8:15 p. m. The concluding concert of the summer will be given Sunday, August 15, at 8:15 p. m.

Musical Week End

Jostling for primary interest in two full days of music last weekend, were the personal appearance of the great French-American composer, Darius Milhaud, as conductor of his own Third Symphony; Isaac Stern, as violin soloist in Prokoffief's First Violin Concerto; Ellabelle Davis, soprano, and Nan Merriman, contralto, with the Festival Chorus of 150 voices, with the Boston Symphony in Mahler's overwhelming C Minor Symphony, conducted by the darling of the multitudes, Leonard Bernstein; and Mr. Koussevitsky, conducting with soaring power and full romantic scope, Brahms' First Symphony.

Of secondary importance, but of tremendous delight to this writer, was the persuasive rendition of the Chausson Concerto for violin, accompanied by string quartet and piano, at the Chamber Music Hall. Joseph Bernstein, a former pupil of Carl Flesch, performed the solo part in this seldom heard work. Madrigals coached by Hugh Ross, and a Haydn string quartet nicely played by chamber music students followed the well-attended organ recital of E. Power Biggs, which had taken place at ten o'clock Sunday morning, just before my arrival.

A two dollar entrance fee permits a person to listen outside any of the open music halls. Any one of Saarinen's modernistically and functionally designed buildings, so open in construction, and superb accoustically, provides nearly as much listening pleasure to those outside as to the visually lucky ones nearer the performers. Almost every hour on Saturday or Sunday finds one or another of the halls the scene of some ideal form of music.

Without attempting in one article to embrace all that Tanglewood offers its 450 students of opera and ensemble, it may be possible to sketch the two-day impressions of a visitor, which anyone could easily duplicate or verify.

Rehearsal

Arriving at about 10:30 on Saturday morning, we found the capacious Music Shed with about two-thirds of its 6000 seats taken by an audience enthralled with Isaak Stern's rehearsal of Prokoffief's first violin concerto, accompanied by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Mr. Koussevitsky, with his inevitable cape draped over his shoulders, was seated high on the podium, while the 27-year-old virtuoso was playing vigorously at his left. How many times I have wondered how much rehearsal was necesary to top-flight performers, and just how they went about fitting soloist and orchestra together.

In this case, a short conference between soloist and conductor preceded each movement. The soloist established the rhythm, while the two principals watched each other like boxers for any ritard or acceleration, The ritards were generally sung out to the orchestra by Mr. Koussevitsky. "One . . . two . . . three . . . One, two, three; four. PIANISSIMO!" For individual instruction, the conductor jumped up and strode to the difficult section for his well-aimed but quiet words. In contrast with the rehearsal, when we heard each movement about three times, the Saturday evening performance of the concerto was clearer and more sonorous, like a fully cut and polished gem.

While the crowds picnicked about the grounds or satisfied their hunger at the Buffet, going at 2:30 to the Theater Concert Hall for scenes from Carmen, The Record music editor joined about twenty-five other reviewers for luncheon at the home of Jay Rosenfeld, music editor of the Berkshire Eagle. Sitting on the grass beside a lovely Norman hillside home, the writers on music hugely enjoyed, in very normal fashion, both the delicious food and the conversation of others with similar problems. Carl Lindstrom, of the Hartford Times, Howard Taubman of the New York Times, Arthur Berger of the New York Herald Tribune, Willard Clark of the Springfield Republican, Victor Prall of the same paper, Lipkin of Philadelphia, Cyrus Durgin of the Boston Globe, Raymond Morin of the Worcester Telegram, Warren Storey Smith of the Boston Post, and such officers of the Boston Symphony as the manager, George E. Judd and his assistant, Lewis Perry, and Mrs. George Edman of the press bureau, composed part of the group.

Two Symphony Performances

The most stirring ovation was given Mr. Milhaud, who with painful absorption arrived on crutches at the chair on the podium. There was no air of invalidism about his conducting, however. The symphony was Gallicly graceful, exquisite in workmanship, and generally happy in mood, with its discords tantalizing rather than jarring.

Whether the revelations in facial expression and gesture by which Mr. Bernstein pleads with the orchestra for their ultimate, adds or detracts from the effect, he is too fascinating and too handsome not to watch. The chorus in the finale of the Mahler Symphony, and the orchestra and soloists, threw reserve to the wind in the musical representation of the Promethian struggle of a fallen hero and his search for knowledge of life and resurrection. The shades of Wagner are discernable in this moving, romantic and interminable symphony.

Genius Looms Larger

Prokofieff looms ever larger as a musical genius, with his violin concertos adding much to his stature. Imagination, sound feeling for violin sonorities, protracted muted effects which are surpassingly beautiful, and sweeping lyrical passages, distinguish this piece of music. It was a rare treat to hear Mr. Stern's eloquent interpretation.

The Third Symphony of the contemporary American composer, Walter Piston, surprised me with the tenderness of its slow movement and the agreeable nature of the entire work, in spite of occasional horrendous snatches.

The two lanes of cars after a concert, moving at a snail's pace the mile and a half back into Lenox, is endured with good-natured philosophy by the thousands who have spent a period on the musical highlands of Tanglewood. The elation lingers of hearing the Boston Symphony in the Berkshires play with more glowing colors than they seem to mix in winter concert halls. The memory will last of Koussevitsky's dream come true—of hundreds of musical young people listening avidly, of quiet family groups sitting on automobile robes about picnic baskets in a wide fringe around the Music Shed, of correct school teachers or music teachers drinking in the music with eyes daringly closed, of arm-linked lovers and equally enraptured sophisticates. Tanglewood is a complete cross-section of musical America.

Music

11,900 Hear Tchaikovsky Played by BSO

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

The record attendance of the season swarmed in and around the Shed at Tanglewood last night to hear the "extra" Tchaikovsky concert played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky. Eleven thousand nine hundred was the figure announced by the box office, which meant 6000 in the Shed and 6000 outside. This figure was all the more remarkable when it is considered that it has been accepted as a fact that it was necessary to draw on week-end visiting crowds to swell attendance to such numbers. This was essentially a neighborhood audience, drawn from the environs of 50 miles or more.

Everyone felt more than amply rewarded with a program which reached ecstatic heights. Dr. Koussevitzky laid on with lavish extravagance and the orchestra responded with superb tonal splendor. The B minor symphony, the "Pathetique" is by now considered a "specialte de la maison." And without cavil the Boston conductor has given it, by years of refining, a distinction quite his own. Tchaikovsky can stand such treatment. Such exaggerations or tamperings with details as it pleases one to apply to his music only augment its abundance of emotion. The symphony has rarely been given a more dramatic reading. Koussevitzky's unique sense of spacious and theatrical timing forced the last ounce of sentiment and passion from it. The absorbed audience remained transfixed and mouse-still seemingly for minutes after the last lamenting note of the final movement had been sounded.

Lipkin Brilliant

Seymour Lipkin, 21-year-old new piano sensation of the year, was the soloist in the B flat minor concerto. Young Lipkin has recently been awarded the Rachmaninoff fund prize after a national competition. He has also been an assistant to George Szell, conductor of the Cleveland Orchestra, and has been at the Berkshire Music Center this season as a student in the conducting class of Dr. Koussevitzky. His performance was brilliant and galvanic. In the slow movement, he showed a sense of poetic expression and warmth of tone which proved that it had taken a bit of time to gain control of himself before such a huge and near overwhelming mass of listeners, for in the first movement his technique was more to the fore than an impression that he thoroughly understand the music. An urge to hurry was plain indication of a mild case of the jitters. The audience, completely sympathetic to the engaging young man, gave every shred of approval their hands, and, of many, their voices, could convey.

The evening closed with a thunderous performance of the "1812" Overture. With the organ, the percussion and particularly the cathedral chimes banging away at their best, the last few bars became inaudible when the rising surge of applause completely overran the tonal explosion coming from the stage and the audience took over in a wild rush of noisy enthusiasm.

7th Birthday Party

Mr. and Mrs. Samuel G. Colt Jr.

Record 27,400 Attend First Festival Series; Bernstein Scores Hit in Mahler's Symphony

Chorus, Soloists Join Orchestra Under Young Leader

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

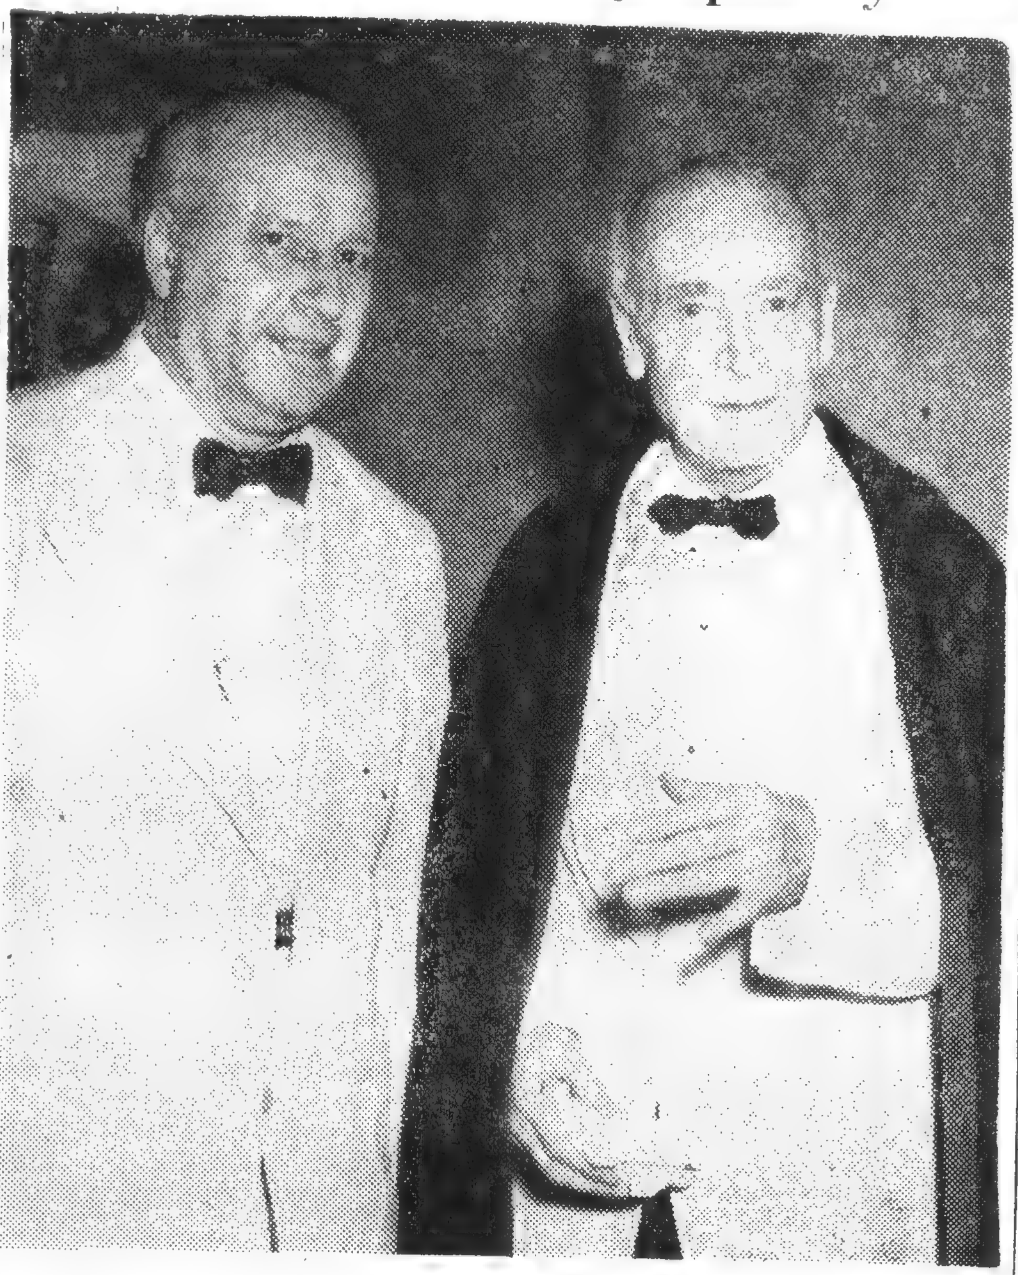
TANGLEWOOD—The first of the three week ends of the Berkshire Festival came to an exciting close yesterday afternoon when the Boston Symphony led by Leonard Bernstein played the Mahler second symphony. All previous attendance records for the first series were broken as 27,400 turned out for the three-day concerts. A crowd of 9600 paid admissions yesterday, 10,300 Saturday night and 7500 on Thursday. Last year's total for the first series, a previous record, was 23,500.

Yesterday's audience stayed to the final note of the long, taxing and wearing program to cheer and applaud the large orchestra, soloists, chorus and their leader. The symphony has acquired a name, "The Resurrection Symphony," because the verses used by the chorus in the final movement are from Klopstock's Ode "Aufersteh'n."

Achieves Herculean Task

The score calls for a tremendous orchestra, extra woodwind, and especially augmented brass sections, extra percussion and an organ. The first three movements are for the orchestra alone; a contralto soloist sings in the fourth and the soprano and the chorus enter in the fifth. The last three are played without stopping. It was a Herculean task that Bernstein achieved. He has developed a podium technique which is extremely vivid and graphic. He called for the entrance of the celli and basses in the second bar, after the strong forte in the viols, with gestures of startling violence. But they conveyed the emotion and the passionate immersion he undergoes when conducting, and the means are not really the issue. His strenuous indications, however, did not draw consistent response from the orchestra, for several times he called for what must have been leonine and was delivered of something appreciably less. His labors over the gently delightful, sympathetic andante gave the impression he was pressing or squeezing it out of resisting wet clay. This movement, after reasonable rehearsing, plays itself in the hands of an orchestra of the calibre of the Boston. His epic demands came so often that the audience, and the orchestra as well, were drained at the completion of the heroic work. The second and third movements have an ingratiating rhythmic swing and character. The remainder of the music is a narrative and could well be played in the pit with action and mime to portray the story.

The chorus, beautifully trained by Hugh Ross, was first heard (at quarter to six, incidentally) in a rarely achieved quality of restraint; and as the music proceeded, the voices unfolded to release untold power. Nan Merriman had a short solo in the fourth movement, "Man Lies in Greatest Need," in which she acquitted herself with the greatest of vocal warmth and deeply felt and understood style. She sustained her tones with ease and equality although there was the slightest deviation from pitch. The soprano, Ellabelle Davis, has less opportunity to display her art, but in the occasions allotted her, she sang, too, with beauty. The ovation at the completion of the colossal work found all the participants sharing in the applause, and Bernstein embracing all within distance.



Babbitt

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky greets Walter Piston, whose third symphony was heard Saturday evening at Tanglewood.

The concert had opened with the second symphony of Darius Milhaud, with the composer conducting. Mr. Milhaud is on the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center this summer. He is incapacitated by arthritis and came from the wings on crutches to take a seat placed on the raised podium for his convenience. His symphony has five movements, all moderately short, and they are entitled "Paisible," "Mysterieux," "Douloureux," "Avec Serenite" and "Allelouia."

It does not pretend to have a tragic lament to portray as does the Mahler, and thus in many places it is delightfully popular in spirit. There are also passages where the processes are less apparent, leaving melody or harmonic progression or contrapuntal writing quite obscured. He writes with an individual style which is frequently superficial enough to be immediately tangible. A dependable sense of orchestral sound was one of the agreeable features of the whole symphony.

Saturday Program

The Saturday evening program, in a succession of gala events, was also an outstanding concert. The welcome accorded Dr. Koussevitzky when he appeared at the beginning of the program set the tenor of the evening, and the Boston musical director was instantaneous in his response. The third symphony of Walter Piston, which had its premier performance only some half year ago in Boston, was commissioned by the Koussevitzky Musical Foundation and is dedicated "to the memory of Natalie Koussevitzky." The conductor gave of the last shred of his musical fibre to put spirit and shape to the craftsmanship of the Harvard professor and he found malleable material more often than not. There are still stretches of polyphonic intricacies which are not easily penetrable, but more apparent are lyric and folksy melodies harmonized not only with Mr. Piston's conceded skill but with particularly effective orchestration. The swifter movements, the second and fourth, are of decisive and original rhythmic patterns which Koussevitzky imbued with a biting attack and which the orchestra gave incisive and virtuoso elan. Mr. Piston was called to the stage from his seat in the audience and was applauded with long enthusiasm.

Isaac Stern's playing of the Prokofieff first concerto was an example of superb violin playing and musicianship. It was written 35 years ago when the composer was only 22 and, as John Burk pointed out in the program notes, "the orchestra is of symphonic interest and in no sense an accompaniment." Stern's tone is something to remember. Its even fluidity, in all registers and crossing the strings, just keeps coming without forcing and with remarkably relaxed effort. And when he chooses, and it is appropriate, he flings himself into some of the more technical passages with abandon and without thought of caution, yet always maintains the purity and warmth of tone which is such a significant mark of his artistry. The orchestral assistance was kept at such a perfect restraint it must be here noted that the soloist's efforts were allowed to emerge in their best features. The ovation which the performance evoked was without bounds in its frenzy.

The Brahms first is one in the catalogue of mature work in the repertory of an artist such as Koussevitzky. It has been polished and refined; it is understood with a deep insight and conception. Fired as he was Saturday by an excited audience, he makes such a symphony work of dramatic grandeur. Repetitions over the years may vary in details for any one of a number of reasons. The slow movement may lack a speck of its more normal serenity as did occur at this concert, but the basic formula the inner construction, is a constant thing. The orchestra under such conditions sounds with a glory and a majesty which nothing but music can produce. The audience's reaction, which is always a major part of the occasion at Tanglewood, was, as might have been expected, a personal triumph for Koussevitzky.

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

CORDIALLY INVITES YOU TO A DEMONSTRATION OF THE

RCA VICTOR Berkshire SERIES

OF HIGH FIDELITY RADIO-TELEVISION PHONOGRAPHS

EXHIBITION ROOM
MAIN ENTRANCE
TANGLEWOOD

BENEFIT
BERKSHIRE MUSIC CENTER
SCHOLARSHIP FUND

Open daily until August 15, 1948

MUSIC

By Miles Kastendieck

CONTEMPORARY music is having its innings at the Berkshire Festival this year. By the time the nine concerts of the three big week-ends are over, living composers will have out-numbered dead composers by two. To say the Festival is very much alive this year simply resognizes that Koussevitzky has stressed modern music more than usual.

That this focus of attention on the living composers means anything in the way of policy has not been disclosed. The Berkshire Festivals in the past have given little indication that an overall policy directed their course.

The upshot of the programs culminated in the conclusion that the music heard at Tanglewood was little different from the programs heard in New York during the Winter season.

This year some kind of aim appears to lurk in the background. Perhaps it is the beginning of a definite policy.

Composers Living

IN THE first series last weekend four of the eight composers were living. Their music had all been heard, some of it in New York, but not often. To stabilize a hearing of Hindemith, Prokofieff, Piston and Milhaud were Beethoven's Fifth Symphony and Brahms's First. They have been heard almost too often. By way of novelty there was Mahler's Second Symphony, a most welcome inclusion.

This weekend the living composers outnumber the dead two to one. In the program last night all three were living. That such should be the case is unusual in these days of hidebound program-making for orchestral concerts.

A glance at the works performed in this second series is rewarding: Stravinsky's "Oedipus Rex", the American premiere of Vaughan Williams' Sixth Symphony, Villa Lobos "Madona", and Siqueira's "Nordestina". To hear these in a single weekend means a great deal to inveterate music lovers. It will undoubtedly be illuminating to average music lovers. As an opportunity it is indeed rare.

To Honor Dead

NEXT weekend the balance favors the dead composer. The moderns included form that interesting combination beginning with the letter "S": Stravinsky, Shostakovich and Sibelius. None of their music will warrant any hissing; in fact it will be enthusiastically received.

Perhaps the worm has turned. The generous showing of contemporary composers did not deter audiences from attending in large numbers last weekend. Some of the people may not have liked all that they heard, but most would acknowledge that it was well worth hearing.

The point has always been getting acquainted with this new music. People will hear more contemporary music in this Festival than they have heard in any one of the other ten.

This year's Festival has made a great contribution to the "cause".

This Clipping From MONROE, LA.
WORLD

AUG 5 1948

These Days

By George E. Sokolsky

THE LITTLE RED HOUSE

Up here in Sandisfield, we go in for culture in a big way; that is, those of us who do not till the soil and chop down the trees for lumber. And that goes back a long time to the days of Mark Hopkins, Oliver Wendell Holmes--not the Justice but the philosopher--Herman Melville of "Moby Dick," William Cullen Bryant, Henry Wadsworth Longfellow, to say nothing of the Sedgwick clan who dominated Stockbridge as the Atlantic Monthly was the personality of Ellery Sedgwick.

So last Saturday, we foregathered at the Little Red House where Nathaniel Hawthorne conceived the Tanglewood Tales and where often Longfellow, Melville, Fanny Kemble and Hawthorne met to talk but even more to store in their memories the impress of the beauties of the Berkshires and of each other's personality.

The Little Red House has been restored externally by the National Federation of Music Clubs under the leadership of Mrs. Guy Gannett, the wife of the Maine publisher, and a gracious and devoted lady. Manning Hawthorne was there to represent his grandfather, Nathaniel, and Henry Wadsworth Longfellow Dana, whose maternal grandfather was the poet and whose paternal grandfather wrote "Two Years Before the Mast," delivered a brilliant and witty address prepared as only Harry can when he takes the trouble, which is not often enough.

We were blessed with the best of Berkshire weather, as we sat in the shadow of Monument Mountain and looked across the lake and listened to Serge Koussevitzky accept the little house which is to be used as studios for musicians who come to Tanglewood to improve themselves. And this is so important because out of Tanglewood will in time come American composers, American conductors, and American artists and all the internationalism of its atmosphere will go by the board. For no one can be in this New England long without becoming part of its rock and soil, without feeling the three centuries of America in the marrow of his bones.

Just as in the middle nineteenth century, this very place produced for this country a lasting, indigenous literature, so are we now on the threshold of finding here a lasting, indigenous American music. That indeed is a pot of gold.

As I sat upon a rock, upon which creeped myrtle and rose, I could not help but think that at that very moment were gathered in Philadelphia others who also called themselves Americans but who, somehow, had been cut off at the roots, or who, coming latterly, had no depth to their roots. And while we steeped ourselves richly in the lore of our own land, they were shrieking foully against their mother country and, gazing upon her beauties, saw only nettles and thistles, while the mirage from afar was richly verdant.

Yet their curses will wither on the vine. I recalled that Balaam, when pressured to curse, sang:

"How goodly are thy tents, O Jacob, and thy tabernacles, O Israel!

"As the valleys are they spread forth, as gardens by the river's side, as the trees of lign aloes which the Lord hath planted, and as cedar trees beside the waters."

For who can curse such a country as this and who can be its enemy? How varied are the ways of its people and there are none to order them to do this and that and to have no will of their own. Those in Philadelphia were free to steep themselves in shrill hate and we at Tanglewood were free to worship America's glorious past and to restore her monuments. And in a thousand places men and women were free to do as they minded with none to force them to do otherwise. And in a thousand places, often obscure, with none to write their histories, were, at that very moment, men and women devoted voluntarily to good and righteous service.

That is America and we who abide in these hills feel it so strongly, for here Longfellow caught the lines of Evangeline and here Hawthorne came after he had already written "The Scarlet Letter," and here Mark Hopkins sat on a log and founded a college. It is in these hills that one sees the manhood that produced this nation.

(Copyright, 1948, King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

AUG 6 - 1948

British Composer's Symphony In U.S. Premiere Tomorrow

TANGLEWOOD—The sixth symphony of Vaughan Williams, British composer, will be played for the first time in America here tomorrow night by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky. The concert will be the second of Series B of the Berkshire Festival.

Begun during the war, the symphony was first performed by the Royal Philharmonic Society in Albert Hall, London; Sir Adrian Boult conducting, last April.

Also on the program will be the ballet, "Romeo and Juliet," from which the second suite is taken. It was composed by Serge Prokofieff in 1935 for the Bolshoi Theatre in Moscow. The movements are entitled: "Montagues and Capulets"; "Juliet, the Maiden"; "Dance"; and "Romeo by Juliet's Grave."

GREGOR PIATIGORSKY
Cello Soloist

The last number on the program will be "Don Quixote, Fantastic Variations on a Theme of Knightly Character," by Richard Strauss. Gregor Piatigorsky, who will be the cello soloist, is well-known as a concert cellist. A member of the faculties of the Curtis Institute, Philadelphia, and the Berkshire Music Center, he has headed the chamber music department at the latter school since its beginning in 1940, excepting last season, when he was on leave. A native of Russia, he moved to Berlin after World War I, becoming first violoncellist of the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra under Wilhelm Furtwangler. He has played many times with the Boston orchestra.

The rehearsal of the orchestra at 10 tomorrow morning will be open to the public for the benefit of the pension fund.

Lenox, Stockbridge and the surrounding communities are filling again with Festival guests arriving for the week-end concerts. Tickets are on sale for seats in the rear of the Music Shed and boxes at the box office, England Brothers, Pittsfield, and the Blue Bird Shop, Stockbridge.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

AUG 5 - 1948

LUKAS FOSS TO CONDUCT OWN MUSIC

Boston Symphony Pianist Will Be On Festival Podium

Lukas Foss, pianist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and faculty member of the Berkshire Music Center, will conduct the advanced student orchestra at Tanglewood, Lenox tomorrow night in one of his own compositions. The symphony concert in the Music Shed will be one of three events open to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

Tomorrow evening's program will include Weber's "Overture to der Freischutz," conducted by Seymour Lipkin; Haydn's 'Cello Concerto, conducted by Howard Shanet, with Erling Engtsson, soloist; Debussy's "La Mer," Irwin Hoffman conducting; and Foss' "Song of Songs," with the soprano solo by Phillis Curtin.

The "Song of Songs" was commissioned by the League of Composers and performed many times in the United States and Europe. The composer, who studied both composition and conducting at the school in 1940 and 1941, was piano soloist in the Bach-Mozart series of the Berkshire Festival. Mr. Bengtsson is from Denmark.

Sunday morning at 10 E. Power Biggs, Boston Orchestra organist, and an instrumental ensemble, will perform Piston's Prelude and Allegro, Mozart's Three Church Sonatas and Poulenc's Concerto in G minor.

At 11, the chamber group will play a Trio by Kauder, a Mozart String Quartet and a Trio by Ravel.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

AUG 5 1948

Second Series Opens Tonight At Festival

BSO To Play Symphony Heard in Tent 11 Years Ago

TANGLEWOOD — The Boston Symphony Orchestra will open the second series of Berkshire Festival concerts in the Music Shed at Tanglewood tonight with Beethoven's sixth or "Pastoral" symphony. The work is referred to by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky as the "Tanglewood Symphony," because he conducted it at the first concert at Tanglewood in a tent, 11 years ago tonight.

The symphony is in four movements:

1. Awakening of serene impressions on arriving in the country.
2. Scene by the brookside.
3. Jolly gathering of country folk; thunderstorm; tempest.
4. Shepherd's song: Gladsome and thankful feelings after the storm.

The second half of the program will be Stravinsky's "Oedipus Rex," an opera oratorio in two acts, with text by Jean Cocteau, after the drama of Sophocles. The Festival chorus of 200 students of the Berkshire Music Center, prepared by Hugh Ross, will participate with David Lloyd, tenor, as Oedipus and the shepherd; Carol Brice, mezzo-soprano as Jocasta; James Pease, baritone, as Creon, Tiresias and the messenger; and Wesley Addy as the speaker.

The opera oratorio was first performed in America by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in February, 1928, having had its world premiere in Paris the preceding May.

The Festival program for Saturday evening follows:

Romeo and Juliet ballet, Second Suite ... Prokofieff
Symphony No. 6 (first performance in America .... Vaughan Williams
Don Quixote, fantastic variations on a theme of knightly character ... Strauss
Violoncello solo—Gregor Piatigorsky
Viola solo—Joseph DePasquale

Tickets for seats in the rear of the Shed and in boxes are on sale at the box office, England Brothers and the Blue Bird Shop, Stockbridge. General admission to the grounds will be sold three hours before the opening of the concerts.

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
AMERICAN

AUG 6 - 1948

6,000 Attend Fourth Concer At Tanglewood

Rain dampened the bodies bu not the spirit of 6,000 supporter of the Boston Symphony who a tended the fourth concert of th Berkshire Festival series a Tanglewood last night. For the firs time this season seats went beggin in the vast shed.

Those who did attend were pre sented a two-part program wit Beethoven's "Symphony No. 6" a one extreme, and Stravinsky' classic-spawned oratorio, "Oedipu Rex," as the other.

Since this reviewer is totally un amiliar with the Stravinsky work omparative criticism of its per ormance is unfeasible. It wa iven last night as a purely audi ory composition, without even th rapery background or characte nasks called for in Stravinsky' wn stage directions.

Wesley Addy, narrator for Tues ay night's presentation of "Pe er and The Wolf," was side-stag peaker last night, reciting the tex vritten by Jean Cocteau in 1926 fo Stravinsky's interpretation of th Greek tragedy. Soloists were Da vid Lloyd, as Oedipus; Carol Brice s Jocasta; Glenn Schnittke, th Shepherd; and James Pease Creon. They were accompanied b n 80-voice male chorus directe y Hugh Ross.

Beethoven's "Pastoral" sym phony is a standby for Boston Sym phony followers. Last night's per ormance was marred by a lack uster reading of the second move nent, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky bein obviously disturbed by an audienc which applauded in the wron places and tromped up and dow aisles when time out for seat-hunt ers was called after the opening novement.

Conductor and orchestra were re vivified, however, for the melodi brassiness of the symphony's tune ful third movement.

Tomorrow night's program offers Prokofieff's "Romeo and Juliet," Suite No. 2; the first American performance of Vaughan Williams' "Symphony No. 6;" and "Don Quixote," by Strauss. The Sunday afternoon concert will be conducted by Eleazar de Carvalho, one of Dr. Koussevitzky's assistant directors at Tanglewood.

FZ.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

AUG 5 - 1948

Sings Tonight

CAROL BRICE

Carol Brice, contralto, will sing the role of "Jacosta," in Stravinsky's "Oedipus Rex," with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood this evening. The program will also include the Beethoven Sixth Symphony, the "Pastoral."

[From Late Editions of Yesterday's Times.]

6,300 BRAVE RAIN AT TANGLEWOOD

Throng Turns Out for Fourth Concert of Berkshire Fete— 'Oedipus Rex' Featured

By OLIN DOWNES
Special to The New York Times.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 5—A rainy night did not prevent an audience of 6,300 from attending the fourth concert of the Berkshire Symphony Festival this evening in Tanglewood. The program provided a sufficient incentive for such attendance. It juxtaposed two works of "classic" and "neo-classic" reputation, as the jargon goes, and each was given a superlative performance.

The first is no novelty to Boston Symphony Orchestra audiences, but is given a performance by Koussevitzky and his men which stales the "Pastoral" symphony of Beethoven. There is no need to descant on the beauties of this performance or the infinite variety that Beethoven's familiar music possesses even for the ears of today, when it is so performed.

The second score was Stravinsky's "Oedipus Rex." It was done in regular concert style, that is, without setting or pantomime to give it visual as well as aural design. The impression which "Oedipus Rex" made upon this observer when it was so mounted last season at the Juilliard School of Music is still with him. There is no doubt that with such presentation the work reaches its most complete effect. Its quality as music pure and simple is not precisely the same.

The solo singers for this performance were David Lloyd, Oedipus; Carol Brice, Hocasta; James Pease, Creon, Tiriasis and the messenger, and Glenn Schnittker, the Shepherd. Wesley Addy was the reciter of the text of Jean Cocteau.

Performance of High Quality

The performance again was of a very high quality. Dr. Koussevitzky's authority and sympathy with the score was evident at all times. The solo singers, however, were not always at an advantage, accoustically speaking, and this detracted considerably from the tonal proportion and the unbroken effectiveness of the work. The solo parts were overbalanced, as a rule, by the sonorities of the chorus and of the orchestra.

It may therefore not be exact to say that the lyrical beauty of Mr. Lloyd's voice did not recompense for a more powerful and possibly a more severe and heroic delivery of his text. He sang with feeling and sensibility, but not with the tragic impressiveness which perhaps he would have realized in a smaller auditorium.

Not every measure of the parts that Mr. Pease took found him in his best range, but his style was excellent. There is no question that Carol Brice, with her rich voice and the sonority she was able to summon and her evident development as singer and interpreter since last she was heard here, was the most effective member of the cast.

Anyhow, one believes, the passages for the individual parts in "Oedipus Rex" are of less musical significance than the writing for the chorus and the orchestra. The chorus, prepared for this performance by Hugh Ross, excelled not only in dramatic impact, in contrast and graduation of tone, and rhythmic incisiveness, but also in the dramatic treatment of its text.

Choral Work Is Best

The monumental intention of the score is in this choral writing the most fully realized. And when the work is presented with costumes, scenery and pantomime, these choral passages become the proportionate pedestal which throws into relief the heroic statuary of the individual parts. In concert performance it is different. The chorus then dwarfs in significance the parts of the soloists and they become the shadow of the musical substance of the score.

The big aria of Jocasta, with its monumental line and its elaborate melodic ornaments after the classic idea, is perhaps the exception to this. There are also dramatic phrases for Oedipus and passages for Tiriasis which have the accent of destiny. There are also stretches of solo writing which are long, which sag in the middle, or become monotonous and ineffective through an imposed syllabic and rhythmic pattern.

On the stage we can pass over these places because of the prevailing significance of the spectacle, or accept them as symbol rather than expression of emotion. Without the stage the work is incomplete, and its classicism, in stretches, academic. Allowing for any irregularities of errors in tonal balance tonight, the impression is stronger than ever with this writer that Stravinsky is only firmly on his feet, creatively speaking, when he composes in the form, or a variation of the form, that first won him fame for spectacle, color, pantomime, in the theatre.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN
AUG 6 - 1948

6,300 Brave Festival Rain

By MILES KASTENDIECK

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass., Aug. 6.—Serge Koussevitsky and the Boston Symphony launched into the second big weekend of the Berkshire Festival last night. They offered a two-work program: Beethoven's Sixth Symphony and Stravinsky's opera-oratorio, "Oedipus Rex." A crowd of 6,300 people braved continuous rain to hear the concert.

The contrast between the serene "nature" symphony of Beethoven and the sombre "complex drama of Stravinsky provided considerable interest musically.

Poles apart in style and in purpose, they nevertheless met on programatic purpose. Beethoven was content to tell his story through imitations of natural sounds; Stravinsky through the use of voices and chorus. Stravinsky is by far the more abstract.

Noteworthy Success

In "Oedipus Rex," Stravinsky found a medium which dictated austerity of style. This strongly complemented his own austere approach to music with the result that his success is noteworthy.

His "off-color" music fits the off-color story with extraordinary rapport. Oedipus was the sport of heartless gods; Stravinsky the sport of incessant rhythm.

Those who seek beauty in their music find it here in details rather than in the work as a whole (as in Beethoven). They may even be content to let Oedipus solve the riddle.

The performances of both works sounded somewhat dampened. They inclined too much to understatement. The Stravinsky called for much more dramatic treatment. It came in flashes from the orchestra, the chorus. and in the scene of Jocasta and Oedipus, but it was not sustained.

Participating in the Stravinsky were David Lloyd, tenor; Carol Brice, mezzo-soprano; James Pease, baritone, and Wesley Addy, speaker. The Festival chorus was trained by Hugh Ross. Mr. Lloyd was musically pleasing while Miss Brice was vocally satisfying. Mr. Addy indulged in histrionics.

AUFBAU Friday, August 6, 1948

Berkshire Music Festival

L. W. Es ist gleichgültig, ob in Tanglewood im grossen "Shad" Koussevitzky das Boston Symphony Orchestra dirigiert oder ob in den kleineren Hallen Studenten Opern aufführen oder Kammermusik spielen — es ist gleichgültig, ob Leonard Bernstein, Robert Shaw oder der Brasilianer Eleazar de Carvalho am Pult stehen — ob der junge Isaac Stern oder der bewährte Gregor Piatigorsky musizieren—ob Mahler, Hindemith oder Brahms gespielt werden — auf all das kommt es nicht an. Tanglewood ist Musik an sich! Deshalb kommen aus allen Teilen Amerikas — und ich sah nie vorher eine so vollständige Sammlung der Autonummern aus den 48 Staaten — jedes Jahr immer mehr Menschen, um unter dem Sternenhimmel im Grase zu liegen und dabei Musik zu hören.

Tanglewood ist zu einem Symbol unseres Musiklebens geworden. Und das weit über die Berge der Berkshire-Landschaft hinaus. Denn in diesem Jahre wird es Tanglewoods Höhepunkt sein, in einer grossangelegten Veranstaltung Mittel zu sammeln, um den hungrigen Musikern Europas die Möglichkeit zu geben, weiter arbeiten zu können.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
AUG 6 - 1948

Tanglewood Concert

Koussevitzky Conducts Works by Beethoven and Stravinsky

By a Staff Correspondent

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 5.—The second week end of the Berkshire music festival in the music shed at Tanglewood began tonight when Serge Koussevitzky conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in two works—Beethoven's Pastoral Symphony and Stravinsky's opera oratorio, "Oedipus Rex," which this conductor and orchestra introduced to this country twenty years ago. Considering the showery weather the audience of 7,000 could be considered as of good size.

In "Oedipus Rex" Carol Brice represented the hapless Jocasta, with David Lloyd doubling as Oedipus and the shepherd, and James Pease singing three other roles. Wesley Addy was the narrator with the Berkshire festival chorus, trained by Hugh Ross. Since "Oedipus," which had several performances in New York at the Juilliard School last spring but cannot yet be classed as familiar, followed the intermission in tonight's concert, comment on the performance must await Saturday's Herald Tribune.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
AUG 6 - 1948

Music

Stravinsky 'Oedipus' Heard in Berkshires

By ROBERT BAGAR.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 6.—A two-part program was what Serge Koussevitsky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra offered an audience of 6300 in the Tanglewood Music Shed last night. The works concerned were the Beethoven "Pastoral" Symphony, and, following the intermission, the Igor Stravinsky opera-oratorio "Oedipus Rex," with soloists and chorus, besides orchestra.

"Oedipus Rex" is in two acts. It has a Latin text by Jean Cocteau, after the drama of Sophocles, and there are also lines for a speaker, originally French, which were spoken last night in English. The speaker acts as a master of ceremonies, or as the program notes had it, a conferencier.

The principals in this performance were Carol Brice, as Jocasta; David Lloyd, as Oedipus; James Pease, as Creon, Tiresias, and the messenger Glenn Schnittke, as the Shepherd, and Wesley Addy as the speaker.

Monument of Time.

It was Stravinsky's idea, when he composed this work, to present the ancient legend as a sort of monument carved out of time. It was to be like the austere style of the old masters, devoid of any sentimentalism or individuality. Therefore, he chose Latin for the language of the text, reasoning that this dead language, without the communicating power or emotional associations of a living language, would be perfect for his purpose, namely, that of setting music to phonetic syllables.

How far Stravinsky has succeeded in achieving all that requires no discussion here. To a certain extent, judging from last night's performance, the interest of one listener became often more concentrated on what was being sung, rather on the musical sounds. Yet it must be admitted that some of this music possesses the remote quality, the almost detached expression of things far off, yet ever so close, of universal matters that reach down into the particular moment.

Always Interesting.

Needless to say, the score is always interesting as to workmanship, and it may be pointed out that in those passages of fiery comment from the chorus and, in addition, certain others delivered by the singers, there was much that seemed to be quite close, and emotional, and personal.

For the performance itself, generally it was effective on more counts than one. The orchestra and the festival chorus prepared by Hugh Ross were superb in their particular assignments. Miss Brice, while singing the more vehement lines of Jocasta with fervor, sounded rather thin at the top. But she was always in tune, at any rate, and always musical.

Mr. Lloyd's Oedipus lacked, I think, the dramatic quality that the tenor lines seemed to want. He also sang musically well, however, even though he lacked dramatic conviction. Mr. Pease proved quite equal to most of his share in the proceedings, except that the messenger's part was cast a bit low for his voice.

A Sparkling "Pastoral."

The "Pastoral" Symphony was given one of those Koussevitsky-in-the-mood performances. It bubbled with life and charm and humor. It has brilliant moments when the strings sparkled with fresh and folksy grace. And there were many, but many passages when the wood winds sang their special parts felicitiously.

Beethoven is by no means the seeker of destiny's motives in this work. He is at leisure, enjoying the rural beauties of the countryside, which he loved intensely. He speaks here in the terms of simple people who have no greater tribulations, perhaps, than to get out of the rain which comes down, believe it, in the storm measures.

The audience last evening enjoyed itself hugely. It took the performances to its heart; yes, including the Stravinsky. Whether this was good or bad for Beethoven or Stravinsky isn't the question. It is good for music, and that, in the long run, is what composers really aim at, to create works for the greater cause of music.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
AUG 6 - 1948

Local Soprano Featured In Opera at Tanglewood

Adele Addison Will Be Soloist for Rossini's 'Turk in Italy,' Highlight of Final Week at Music Festival

A highlight of the final week of the Berkshire Festival will be the first performances in America for more than 100 years of "The Turk in Italy" by Rossini Monday and Wednesday evenings in the Theater-Concert Hall at Tanglewood. Tickets have been issued to friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

The cast for the first performance, announced by Boris Goldovsky, head of the opera department at the Berkshire Music Center, includes June Gardner, soprano, Adele Addison, soprano, David Lloyd, tenor, Marshall Heinbaugh, baritone, Arthur Schoep, baritone, and Francis Barnard, bass-baritone. On Wednesday evening principals will be Miss Gardner, Miss Addison, David Garen, Mr. Heinbaugh, Robert Goss, and James Pease. Mr. Goldovsky will conduct both performances.

Nassan Abiskhairoun, the young Egyptian sculptor and designer discovered by Mr. Goldovsky last winter, is responsible for the settings. The costumes have been designed by Leo Van Witsen. Sarah Caldwell is chorus master and Robert J. Lawthers, technical director.

Two Conductors

Two former students of Serge Koussevitzky will share the podium of the Boston Symphony Orchestra with him during the final days of the Festival. Eleazar de Carvalho will conduct this Sunday afternoon. His program includes the "Fantastic Symphony" of Berlioz, "Madona" by Villa Lobos, Siquera's "Nordestina' 'Suite No. 1, and Falla's "El Amor Brujo" with Carol Brice as soloist. On Thursday evening, Leonard Bernstein as guest will conduct the Scherzo from Moussorgsky's "Night on Bald Mountain," the complete "Petrouchka" ballet of Stravinsky, and the Shostakovitch Symphony No. 5.

For the all-Tchaikovsky program Tuesday evening Dr. Koussevitzky has chosen the Symphony No. 6 "Pathetique," "1812 Overture," and the Piano Concerto No. 1 with Seymour Lipkin, winner of the 1948 Rachmaninoff Fund award, as soloist.

Enlisting the forces of the Festival Chorus of 250 voices Robert Shaw will be guest conductor with the orchestra Saturday evening, August 11, in a program made up entirely of two great choral works. Ellen Faull, soprano, and Eunice Alberts, contralto, will be soloists in "The Blessed Damozel" of Debussy. Frances Yeend, soprano, and James Pease, baritone, will be soloists in the Brahms "Requiem".

For the finale to the Festival Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct Symphony No. 3 ("Eroica") by Beethoven on Sunday afternoon, Aaugust 15, and the Sibelius Symphony in D major No. 2.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION
AUG 6 - 1948

Foss to Conduct Advanced Student Orchestra Tonight

Lukas Foss, pianist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and faculty member of the Berkshire Music Center, will conduct the advanced student orchestra at Tanglewood, Lenox tonight in one of his own compositions. The symphony concert in the music shed will be one of three events open to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

The program will include Weber's "Overture to der Freischutz," conducted by Seymour Lipkin; Haydn's "Cello Concerto," conducted by Howard Shanet, with Erling Bengtsson, soloist; Debussy's "La Mer," Irwin Hoffman conducting; and Foss' "Song of Songs," with the soprano solo by Phyllis Curtin.

The "Song of Songs" was commissioned by the League of Composers and performed many times in the United States and Europe. The composer who studied both composition and conducting at the school in 1940 and 1941, was piano soloist in the Bach-Mozart series of the Berkshire Festival. Mr. Bengtsson is from Denmark.

Sunday morning at 10 E. Power Biggs, Boston Orchestra organist, and an instrumental ensemble, will perform Piston's "Prelude and Allegro," Mozart's "Three Church Sonatas" and Poulenc's "Concerto in G minor."

At 11, the chamber group will play a trio by Kauder, a Mozart string quartet and a trio by Ravel.

This Clipping From
GLOVERSVILLE, N. Y.
LEADER-REPUBLICAN
AUG 5 - 1948

Hawthorne Cottage Restored in Massachusetts

AP Newsfeatures

LENOX, Mass.—The Hawthorne cottage at Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., has been restored and now houses three studios, including Serge Koussevitsky's class in advanced orchestral conducting.

Mrs. Guy Patterson Gannett of Portland, Me., former president of the National Federation of Music Clubs and chairman of the committee for restoration, has presented the house where Nathaniel Hawthrne lived in 1850-1851 to the Berkshire Music Center.

There the novelist wrote "The House of Seven Gables."

Manning Hawthorne, the oldest grandson of the novelist, and Henry Wadsworth Longfellow Dans, great grandson of the poet, were among scheduled speakers, as was Mrs. Royden J. Keith of Chicago, national president of the federation, and Gay Tapley of Portland, Me.

This Clipping From
HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT TELEGRAM
AUG 5 - 1948

Special Week-End Concert Programs

Three to be Open to Friends of Music Center —Series B of Public Concerts Opens Tonight

Three programs open to friends of the Berkshire Music center will be presented at Tanglewood during the week-end in addition to the regular public concerts of the annual festival.

The advanced student orchestra, with Lukas Foss, pianist of the Boston Symphony orchestra, conducting, will present a program Friday night which will include Weber's "Overture to der Freisehutz," Haydn's 'cello concerto, Debussy's "La Mer," and "Song of Songs," which was composed by Mr. Foss.

On Sunday morning at 10 o'clock, an instrumental ensemble and E. Power Biggs, organist, will present Piston's "Prelude and Allegro," Mozart's "Three Church Sonata," and Poulene's "Concerto in G Minor," and at 11 o'clock the chamber music group will play a Kauder trio, a Mozart string quartet, and a Ravel trio.

Series B of the public concerts will open tonight at 8:15 o'clock, with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky leading the Boston Symphony orchestra in Beethoven's Sixth symphony, "Pastoral," and Stravinsky's "Oedipus Rex."

This Clipping From
BRATTLEBORO, VT.
REFORMER
AUG 5 1948

Seymour Lipkin to Play With Boston Symphony

Seymour Lipkin, a student of Rudolf Serkin, eminent concert pianist of Guilford, will appear as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Music Festival, Tanglewood, Tuesday evening. The concert will be broadcast over station WJZ at 9.30 p.m.

Earlier in the season Lipkin visited in Guilford while studying with Serkin, staying in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Arvine Boyd.

A graduate of the Curtis Institute of Music, Philadelphia, the young pianist recently was awarded a Rachmaninoff prize for his outstanding ability.

[240]

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
AUG 6 - 1948

Stravinsky's 'Oedipus' at Tanglewood

Special to The Hartford Times

Lenox, Mass.—Tanglewood heard its motto symphony last night—Beethoven's "Pastoral" which, if memory serves, has never yet been missing from a Berkshire Festival.

It was paired with Stravinsky's opera-oratorio, "Oedipus Rex," a major work which has been securely established for quarter of a century but so far has not been heard in Hartford.

So there you have Tanglewood, 1948, treasured pages for the faithful, conned lovingly and beautifully like scriptures, contrasted with a baptismal experience for ever so many of the thousands who packed the big shed on a stormy night.

Dr. Koussevitsky had expert soloists, ~~and a good~~-sized group of young men singers billed as the Festival Chorus. The latter had been trained by Hugh Ross.

* * *

THE LATIN TEXT of the oratorio is used phonetically by the composer who rhapsodized: "What a joy it is to compose music to a language of convention, almost of ritual, the very nature of which imposes a lofty dignity! One no longer feels dominated by the phrase and the literal meaning of the word."

In order to make sense of it a speaker, in the person of Wesley Addy, narrated in the vernacular the argument of the Sophoclean drama and he did it in such a way as to make himself clearly understood without voice amplification. The listeners were thus reminded during intervals in the music of the story of the struggle of Oedipus against the fates.

* * *

THIS IS the neo-classical Stravinsky. It is completely unhistorical-music of our time, or plausibly Greek, as you will. It has grandeur without massiveness, dignity, power, simplicity withal. Structurally it exists in a straight line, composed of sheer melos with a minimum of harmonic life. The chorus, for instance, sings mostly in unisons, often doubling the instrumental voice with only occasional stentorian chords for rhetorical effect.

Baritone James Pease, variously as Creon, Tiresias and the Messenger, and Tenor David Lloyd, as Oedipus and the Shepherd proved superb vocalists who infused dramatic accents into a difficult but convincing form of lyrical declamation.

It remained, though, for Carol Brice to capture utterly the drama's essence. Singing without score she made the part of Jocasta a seizing interpretation. something terrifying and inexorable.

* * *

STRAVINSKY'S powerful work absorbed and excited a closely-packed audience. It was a remarkable exhibition of the mass appeal of the unfamiliar, not to call it modern, music in a truly communicative performance.

Koussevitzky takes hold of this sort of medium as he does such a household familiar as the "Pastoral" Symphony — with vision, freshness and a magistral authority. Beethoven or Stravinsky, it is all the same—he commands his huge audiences as he does his matchless Boston Orchestra.

There will be more of this kind of thing over the weekend with a U. S. premiere of Vaughan Williams' Sixth Symphony on Saturday night, together with Prokofieff's "Romeo and Juliet" Suite and Strauss' Don Quixote; and on Sunday afternoon, Villa Lobos, De Falla, Siqueira and Berlioz.

C. E. L.

---

rom
EW ORK, N. Y.
TIMES
AUG 6 - 1948

6,300 BRAVE RAIN AT TANGLEWOOD

Throng Turns Out for Fourth Concert of Berkshire Fete—'Oedipus Rex' Featured

By OLIN DOWNES
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 5—A rainy night did not prevent an audience of 6,300 from attending the fourth concert of the Berkshire Symphony Festival this evening in Tanglewood. The program provided a sufficient incentive for such attendance. It juxtaposed two works of "classic" and "neo-classic" reputation, as the jargon goes, and each was given a superlative performance.

The first is no novelty to Boston Symphony Orchestra audiences, but is given a performance by Koussevitzky and his men which stales the "Pastoral" symphony of Beethoven. There is no need to descant on the beauties of this performance or the infinite variety that Beethoven's familiar music possesses even for the ears of today, when it is so performed.

The second score was Stravinsky's "Oedipus Rex." It was done in regular concert style, that is, without setting or pantomime to give it visual as well as aural design. The impression which "Oedipus Rex" made upon this observer when it was so mounted last season at the Juilliard School of Music is still with him. There is no doubt that with such presentation the work reaches its most complete effect. Its quality as music pure and simple is not precisely the same.

The solo singers for this performance were David Lloyd, Oedipus; Carol Brice, Hocasta; James Pease, Creon, Tiriasis and the messenger, and Glenn Schnittker, the Shepherd. Wesley Addy was the reciter of the text of Jean Cocteau.

Performance of High Quality

The performance again was of a very high quality. Dr. Koussevitzky's authority and sympathy with the score was evident at all times. The solo singers, however, were not always at an advantage, accoustically speaking, and this detracted considerably from the tonal proportion and the unbroken effectiveness of the work. The solo parts were overbalanced, as a rule, by the sonorities of the chorus and of the orchestra.

It may therefore not be exact to say that the lyrical beauty of Mr. Lloyd's voice did not recompense for a more powerful and possibly a more severe and heroic delivery of his text. He sang with feeling and sensibility, but not with the tragic impressiveness which perhaps he would have realized in a smaller auditorium.

Not every measure of the parts that Mr. Pease took found him in his best range, but his style was excellent. There is no question that Carol Brice, with her rich voice and the sonority she was able to summon and her evident development as singer and interpreter since last she was heard here, was the most effective member of the cast.

Anyhow, one believes, the passages for the individual parts in "Oedipus Rex" are of less musical significance than the writing for the chorus and the orchestra. The chorus, prepared for this performance by Hugh Ross, excelled not only in dramatic impact, in contrast and graduation of tone, and rhythmic incisiveness, but also in the dramatic treatment of its text.

Choral Work Is Best

The monumental intention of the score is in this choral writing the most fully realized. And when the work is presented with costumes, scenery and pantomime, these choral passages become the proportionate pedestal which throws into relief the heroic statuary of the individual parts. In concert performance it is different. The chorus then dwarfs in significance the parts of the soloists and they become the shadow of the musical substance of the score.

The big aria of Jocasta, with its monumental line and its elaborate melodic ornaments after the classic idea, is perhaps the exception to this. There are also dramatic phrases for Oedipus and passages for Tiriasis which have the accent of destiny. There are also stretches of solo writing which are long, which sag in the middle, or become monotonous and ineffective through an imposed syllabic and rhythmic pattern.

On the stage we can pass over these places because of the prevailing significance of the spectacle, or accept them as symbol rather than expression of emotion. Without the stage the work is incomplete, and its classicism, in stretches, academic. Allowing for any irregularities of errors in tonal balance tonight, the impression is stronger than ever with this writer that Stravinsky is only firmly on his feet, creatively speaking, when he composes in the form, or a variation of the form, that first won him fame for spectacle, color, pantomime, in the theatre.

Cir. (D 6,533)

This Clipping From
WATERTOWN, WIS.
TIMES
AUG 7 1948

MUSICAL SHRINE

The home of a man who had not the slightest interest in music has now become a musical shrine. This strange fate has come to Tanglewood, the western Massachusetts home of Nathaniel Hawthorne, who wrote there "The House of Seven Gables" and "Tanglewood Tales". For the last ten years it has been the headquarters of the Berkshire festival of the Boston Symphony orchestra under the leadership of its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

Recently a reconstruction of Hawthorne's little red house was presented by the National Federation of Music Clubs to the orchestra to be used as a studio. Menning Hawthorne of North Woodstock, Conn., great-grandson of the writer, who was one of the speakers, referred to Nathaniel's indifference to music.

Even if Hawthorne was no music lover, he was a master craftsman in a kindred field, that of literature. Both lovers of literature and of music will applaud the generous action of the National Federation of Music Clubs, which insures the perpetual maintenance of one of America's notable literary shrines.

* * *

This Clipping From CLEVELAND, OHIO
PLAIN DEALER
AUG 6 - 1948

HAWTHORNE'S red house, which has been restored by the National Federation of Music Clubs for the studios of Serge Koussevitzky and Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist.

MAESTRO and students at work in a famous studio—Serge Koussevitzky, left, directs Seymour Lipkin at the piano, as Howard Shanet of Hunter College, New York, watches.

* * * * * * *

Hawthorne's Cottage in Berkshires Is Restored

AP Newsfeatures

LENOX, Mass.—The Hawthorne cottage at Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., has been restored and now houses three studios, including Serge Koussevitzky's class in advanced orchestral conducting.

Mrs. Guy Patterson Gannett of Portland, Me., former president of the National Federation of Music Clubs and chairman of the committee for restoration, has presented the house where Nathaniel Hawthorne lived in 1850-1851 to the Berkshire Music Center.

There the novelist wrote "The House of Seven Gables."

A two-day music festival was arranged for the dedication.

Manning Hawthorne, the eldest grandson of the novelist, and Henry Wadsworth Longfellow Dana, great grandson of the poet, were among scheduled speakers, as was Mrs. Royden J. Keith of Chicago, national president of the federation, and Gay Tapley of Portland, Me.

This Clipping From
OWATONNA, MINN.
PEOPLE'S PRESS
AUG 7 1948

SINGER—Frances Yeend, soprano, will sing for fourth year at Berkshire Music Festival, Tanglewood, Mass., with Boston Symphony Orchestra. She is a native of Oregon.

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
AUG 7 - 1948

Musical Skunk At Tanglewood Declines to Act

Competition for the Malden Bridge Playhouse mouse has appeared at Tanglewood's Berkshire Music Festival.

Just after the intermission bell rang in the Shed a couple of nights ago a four-footed black visitor with a white stripe down its back came out of the darkness and nearly up to the seats at the far right, near the stage.

The skunk, taking its constitutional regardless of a heavy rain, was sighted by Perry Dunlap Smith, headmaster of North Shore Country Day School, Chicago.

The unwelcome but well-behaved visitor hoisted tail and disappeared into the darkness just as Wellsey Addy began narrating the text written for Stravinsky's "Oedipus Rex."

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
AUG 6 - 1948

Weatherman Deals Stiff Blow As Second Festival Week Opens

Crowd Held Down to 6300—Critic Hails Performance of Beethoven's Symphony No. 6 Lauds Introduction of Novel Compositions

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

TANGLEWOOD—The first concert of the Berkshire Festival's second week end last night at Tanglewood met with rainy weather which limited the attendance to the huge Shed. The benches which are usually placed along the edge of the great open-sided auditorium were moved in to the wide corridors which are normally left free. An audience of more than 6300, was treated to a program consisting one half of a familiar favorite and the other of a novelty and first performance for Tanglewood.

Serge Koussevitzky repeated his oft heard and authoritative interpretation of the Beethoven F major symphony, No. 6; "the Pastoral." Tanglewood, by right of association with its broad green acres and the distant lake, has partially, at least, appropriated this symphony as its own. It somehow seems to express better than any other means the nature and character of the lovely terrain on which the concerts take place. Dr. Koussevitzky, after a wobbly start, soon established the mood of serenity which befits the music so well. The rain fell softly and even did not have a detracting effect.

Musicians in Prime Fettle

This symphony is an ideal one to display the unexcelled sonorities the Boston orchestra produces. The opportunities afforded various instruments for solos and the general ensemble are a joy more apparent here than in other works and last night the men were in prime fettle.

The second half of the program brought Stravinsky's "Oedipus Rex," a complex opera oratorio in two acts with a text by Jean Cocteau, after the drama of Sophocles. This enlists a male chorus; last night it was recruited a hundred strong from the students of the Berkshire Music Center and trained by Hugh Ross. It also calls for a tenor as Oedipus, sung by David Lloyd; a mezzo-soprano as Jocasta, this performed by Carol Brice; a tenor as, the shepherd, Glenn Schnittke; a baritone as Creon and as the messenger, both sung by James Pease; and a speaker, narrated by Wesley Addy.

Mr. Stravinsky's autobiography has explained that he chose to have his oratorio or his opera, as one chooses, sung in Latin; so that the words would be considered for their phonetic values only, the master of ceremonies explaining the action or the progress of the music. The presentation as last night in oratorio form, without the benefit of costumes or even limited stage action, is thus a hybrid, and immediately loses some of its effectiveness and particularly seems to have its impact dissipated in an auditorium of the Shed's size.

Mr. Stravinsky is no sentimentalist. His stark and rigid approach to music does not achieve the passing from horror to tenderness too easily, yet the soloists succeeded in portraying a warmth and sincerity by the force of their vocal abilities in spite of the indistinguishable text. Particularly effective were Miss Brice as the mother Jocasta and Mr. Lloyd as the King Oedipus.

Ross Shares in Applause

The audience expressed an enthusiastic appreciation of the efforts of all the principals and the orchestra and chorus. Dr. Koussevitzky escorted Mr. Ross from the wings after the performance to share in the applause. We would not pronounce the music an unqualified success. However, we endorse whole-heartedly and with all the strength at our command the courageous inclusion of this work on the program as we do the listing of other new and novel musical compositions on the Festival's schedule. The distinction of Tanglewood heretofore has been lodged in the standards of performance, which, compared with other semi-outdoor and summer musical projects, has stood pre-eminent by reason of the adherence to the best and highest measure of the Boston orchestra's competence. There has been no easing off or careless preparation of programs under a succession of guests of varying ability. It is the only summer orchestral venture where the orchestra's principal wintertime director has maintained his post and his artistic criterions. While this year Dr. Koussevitzky is sharing the podium with some younger colleagues, the tradition is being scrupulously upheld, with a fervency, indeed, almost amounting to a sacred trust.

Lauds Koussevitzky's Vision

But this newer policy of making Tanglewood not only the outstanding summer event by performance standards but also by program originality and pioneering is a sure way of assuring its position and continuance. There may be varying success accompanying the performance of individual numbers, but the continual repetition of only the familiar repertory cannot but lead at some time to a gradual, if not a more precipitous, decline in standards and in appeal. Tanglewood is essentially a youthful and eagerly forward-looking institution. The presence of the hundreds of young students at the Berkshire Music Center gives it a character, fostered by the vision of Dr. Koussevitzky, which is becoming a source of encouragement and support of the whole contemporary music world. The coming first world performance of the Vaughn Williams symphony as well as last night's presentation of a rarely heard and difficult-to-prepare oratorio are steps which are marks of progress. Sure, let's have the "Pastoral" and the Tchaikovsky and the Brahms symphonies, but let's hail the leadership and the spirit which gives us Mahler, Milhaud, Piston, Stravinsky, Williams and all the others. This spells vision.

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
AUG 6 - 1948

6300 at Tanglewood Despite Weather

By RAYMOND MORIN

LENOX, Friday—The plain-spoken, ear soothing music of Beethoven's Symphony No. 6 in F Major "Pastoral" reflected against Stravinsky's dissonant oratorio, "Oedipus Rex," was the program fare last night at Tanglewood for the opening of the second series by the Boston Symphony under Serge Koussevitzky.

In spite of a wet evening 6300 crowded the Shed to the edges of its shelter.

The Stravinsky score required the services of the festival chorus, prepared by Hugh Ross, and soloists David Lloyd, tenor; Carol Brice, mezzo-soprano; James Pease, baritone; Glenn Schnittke, tenor, and Wesley Addy speaker.

These two scores are at opposite extremes. Adjectives and descriptive phrases would hardly suffice to explain the impressions they made as companion works. They have in common the "programme" or imitative style. Both are a series of tableaux—the Beethoven describing a sense of serenity interrupted by a storm and returning to the bucolic picture explained by the title. The Stravinsky music, written over twenty years ago, is an abstraction of Sophocles' great drama. The text by Jean Cocteau was translated into the Latin by J. Danielou. While the Beethoven work is a direct recitation of a series of events, the Stravinsky is more a monument of a tragedy than an imitative succession of episodes.

Instrumental Effects

Dr. Koussevitsky's interpretation of the "pastoral" markedly concerned itself with instrumental effects. The most rewarding results were achieved by the woodwinds in the second, and the horns in the third movements. The defect of continuity that was noted in recent performances of Beethoven's "Symphony No. 5," and in Brahms' "Symphony No. 1" was remedied last night.

The two opening movements, depicting the pleasant impressions of the countryside, were no trivial imitations, but colorful pastels in sound, suggesting pictures.

The developments of events leading to the storm scene were intensified by a close linking of episodes, giving the third movement strong climatic momentum. The retransition to the soft agreeableness of the concluding movement again was enacted with deliberation.

If Dr. Koussevitzky succeeded in creating the illusions of majesty and monumentality it was due in no small measure to the superb singing by the men's chorus. In supplying the vocal scores with Latin texts, Stravinsky strove to concentrate more upon tonal effect than narrative. As he expressed it—"the Latin text is purely phonetic material for the composer."

In several respects the performance was disappointing. Wesley Addy proved himself a master or diction with an unfortunate addiction to histrionics. Miss Brice who sang the first sequences of the Jocasta score with admirable fullness in low tones and expressiveness, suffered a lapse of memory in the final section which could possibly have been averted if she had elected to sing from score as did the others.

Mr. Lloyd, whom we have always associated with lyrical singing, infused the tenor with more dramatic quality than we would have expected but with an effort toward sentimentality that was distinctly foreign to the spirit of the work.

Mr. Pease was unfortunately eclipsed by a fullsome orchestra.

The Chorus Excelled

In all respects the chorus excelled—in intonation, precision of attack, and acquiescence to the conductor's requirements. In fact, whatever success was achieved last night in the Stranvinsky score may be attributed in the main to the male chorus with acknowledgement of some singing by the soloists. The orchestra played brilliantly.

The next event is Saturday night's concert to be conducted by Dr. Koussevitzky. The program—Prokofieff's "Romeo and Juliette" ballet. The first performance in America of Vaughn Williams '"Symphony No 6." and Strauss's tone-peom, "Don Quixote" with Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist, and Joseph de Pasquale, violist, as soloists.

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN
AUG 7 - 1948

6,000 Hear Beethoven At Tanglewood

Rain dampened the bodies but not the spirit of 6,000 supporters of the Boston Symphony who attended the fourth concert of the Berkshire Festival series at Tanglewood Thursday night. For the first time this season seats went begging in the vast shed.

Those who did attend were presented a two-part program with Beethoven's "Symphony No. 6" as one extreme, and Stravinsky's classic-spawned oratorio, "Oedipus Rex," as the other.

Since this reviewer is totally unfamiliar with the Stravinsky work, comparative criticism of its performance is unfeasible. It was given as a purely auditory composition, without even the drapery background or character masks called for in Stravinsky's own stage directions.

Wesley Addy, narrator for Tuesday night's presentation of "Peter and The Wolf," was side-stage speaker Thursday, reciting the text written by Jean Cocteau in 1926 for Stravinsky's interpretation of the Greek tragedy. Soloists were David Lloyd, as Oedipus; Carol Brice, as Jocasta; Glenn Schnittke, the Shepherd; and James Pease Creon. They were accompanied by an 80-voice male chorus directed by Hugh Ross.

Beethoven's "Pastoral" symphony is a standby for Boston Symphony followers. Thursday night's performance was marred by a lackluster reading of the second movement, Dr. Serge Koussevitsky being obviously disturbed by an audience which applauded in the wrong places and tromped up and down aisles when time out for seat-hunters was called after the opening movement.

Conductor and orchestra were revivified, however, for the melodic brassiness of the symphony's tuneful third movement.

Tonight's program offers Przkofieff's "Romeo and Juliet," Suite No. 2; the first American performance of Vaughan Williams' "Symphony No. 6;" and "Don Quixote," by Strauss. The Sunday afternoon concert will be conducted by Eleazar de Carvalho, one of Dr. Koussevitsky's assistant directors at Tanglewood.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
AUG 7 - 1948

Alternate Casts To Sing Leads In Rossini's Opera

Alternate casts will sing the lead parts in the two performances of Rossini's "The Turk in Italy," Monday and Wednesday. All seats have been assigned to Friends of the Berkshire Music Center for the opera, not produced in America for more than 100 years.

The cast for the first night, announced by Boris Goldovsky, head of the opera department at the Berkshire Music Center, includes June Gardner, soprano; Adele Addison, soprano; David Lloyd, tenor; Marshall Heimbaugh, baritone; Arthur Schoep, baritone; and Francis Barnard, bass-baritone. Wednesday evening principals will be Miss Gardner, Miss Addison, David Garen, Mr. Heimbaugh, Robert Goss and James Pease. Mr. Goldovsky will conduct both performances.

Nassan Abiskhairoun, young Egyptian sculptor and designer who worked with Mr. Goldovsky last winter, is responsible for the settings. The costumes have been designed by Leo VanWitsen. Sarah Caldwell is chorus master and Robert J. Lawthers, technical director.

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
NEWS
AUG 7 1948

* * *

Highlight of the Berkshire Festival's final week will be the first performance in America for over 100 years of Rossini's "The Turk in Italy." . . . Windup of the festival will be Robert Shaw conducting a chorus of 250 in Debussy's "Blessed Damozel" and the Brahms' "Requiem" Aug. 14. Frances Yeend, one of the soloists for the recent Mahler Eighth Symphony in the Hollywood Bowl, will be heard with James Pease as soloist in the Brahms work.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
AUG 6 - 1948

Tanglewood

Tonight at 8.15

Symphony concert by the orchestra of Department 2: Weber, Overture to Der Freischutz; Haydn, cello concerto; Debussy, "La Mer"; Foss, "Song of Songs," conducted by the composer.

Tomorrow Morning

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will open its rehearsal to the public at 10, for the benefit of the pension fund.

Tomorrow Night

Berkshire Festival concert by Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting: Prokofieff's "Romeo and Juliet" suite; Vaughan Williams' symphony No. 6 (first performance in America); Strauss' Don Quixote, with Gregor Piatigorsky as cello soloist.

This Clipping From
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
AUG 7 - 1948

OVER 200 STUDENTS TO ATTEND FESTIVAL

Second Pilgrimage From University of Massachusetts

More than 200 students from the University of Massachusetts summer session at Amherst are making their second annual pilgrimage to the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood today.

By bus, by car and by thumb the students this morning flocked to the music center to hear a morning rehearsal of the Boston Symphony orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitsky.

Commenting on the overwhelming registration of students desiring to make the trip, compared to the available transportation, Prof. Doric Alviani, head of the music department, said: "They'd even travel in surreys with the fringe on top—if we could find any."

This Clipping From RIVERSIDE, CALIF.
PRESS
AUG 7 1948

J. William Jones Studies With Serge Koussevitzky

J. WILLIAM JONES

J. William Jones, Riverside resident and director of the church music department at the University of Redlands, is enrolled for the six-week term of the Berkshire Music School at Lenox, Mass., home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer Music Festival.

Jones is enrolled in classes conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra; Robert Shaw, the American choral conductor; Julius Hereford, Columbia University and Hugh Ross, conductor of the New York Oratorio Society.

On his way back to California, Jones will visit Albany, N. Y., where he was director of music for 10 years at the Cathedral of All Saints, and will attend a reunion of those who were members of his concert choir of that time.

The choir toured the east for several years under a New York concert management.

In Albany, Jones will also be guest of honor at a dinner given by the Albany Diocesan Choir-masters Assn., which he founded 14 years ago.

This Clipping From
HANOVER, PA.
SUN
AUG 7 - 1948

A highlight of the final week of the Berkshire Festival will be the first performances in America for more than a hundred years of "The Turk in Italy" by Rossini Monday and Wednesday evenings in the Thetre-Concert Hall at Tanglewood.

Two former students of Serge Koussevitzky will share the podium of the Boston Symphony Orchestra with him during the final days of the Festival. Eleazar de Carvalho will conduct this Sunday afternoon. His program includes the "Fantastic Symphony" of Berlioz, "Madona" by Villa Lobos, Siquera's "Nordestina" Suite No. 1, and Falla's "El Amor Brujo" with Carol Brice as soloist. On Thursday evening, Leonard Bernstein as guest will conduct the Scherzo from Moussorgsky's "Night on Bald Mountain," the complete "Petrouchka" ballet of Stravinsky, and the Shostakovitch Symphony No. 5.

For the all-Tchaikovsky program Tuesday evening Dr. Koussevitzky has chosen the Symphony No. 6 "Pathetique", "1812 Overture," and the Piano Concerto No. 1 with Seymour Lipkin, winner of the 1948 Rachmaninoff Fund award, as soloist.

Enlisting the forces of the Festival Chorus of 250 voices Robert Shaw will be guest conductor with the orchestra Saturday evening, in a program made up entirely of two great choral works. Ellen Faull, soprano, and Eunice Alberts, contralto, will be soloists in "The Blessed Damozel" of Debussy. Frances Yeend, soprano, and James Pease, baritone, will be soloists in the Brahms "Requiem".

For the finale to the Festival Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct Symphony No. 3 ("Eroica") by Beethoven on Sunday afternoon, and the Sibelius Symphony in D major, No. 2.

* * *

Today's good news for playgoers eager for top-flight entertainment at reasonable cost is that Richard Rodgers and Oscar Hammerstein 2nd will bring their production of "Show Boat" into the City Center New York for a two-week engagement from September 7 through September 19.

The same lavish production of the great classic among American musicals which ran at the Ziegfeld Theater for a solid year at a $6.00 scale will open the new season of the municipally controlled playhouse in West Fifty-fifth street at a $2.50 top for evening performances and a $2.00 top for matinees, exclusive of tax.

The cast includes Billy House (Cap'n Andy), Norwood Smith (Ravenal), Pamela Caveness (Magnolia), Sammy White (Frank), Clare Alden (Ellie), Ruth Gates (Parthy Ann Hawks), William Smith (Poe), Laverne French (Dahomey King), and Helen Dowdy (Queenie), as well as large choral and dancing ensembles.

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES-UNION
AUG 7 - 1948

7,000 in Rain Hear Concert At Tanglewood

By EDGAR S. VAN OLINDA

In spite of inclement weather, some 7,000 music lovers attended the first concert of Series-B of the Berkshire Music festival, Thursday night.

The outside benches had been moved under the shed, but a few hardy devotees, clad in raincoats, heard the concert from under the nearby trees.

The "Pastorale" symphony by Beethoven was quite appropriate to the night. Mr. Koussevitzky gave it his most enthusiastic treatment, and while Mr. Beethoven's "Storm" finally clears up, nature was not so kind, members of the audience leaving the shed in a drizzle of rain.

FOLLOWING HIS established plan of presenting something new on these Tanglewood concerts, Dr. Koussevitzky programmed the opera-oratorio, "Oedipus Rex," by Igor Stravinsky. As is the case with a fireworks exhibition, it was exciting while it lasted but left no lasting impression. Like Wagner, Stravinsky doesn't realize the limitations of the human voice, with the result that he has written some very unvocal passages for three voices. One is more impressed with the amount of time and study put into the work by the soloists than with the ultimate quality of the ensemble.

THE EXCELLENT soloists were Miss Carol Brice, Negro mezzo-soprano; David Lloyd, tenor and James Pease, baritone. As an endurance contest to see whether the orchestra could outplay the singers or the singers outshout the instrumentalists, the work had a kind of sporting interest.

A chorus of 80 male voices, trained by Hugh Ross was heard to advantage. The narrator was Wesley Addy, the recent Iago in the Saratoga playhouse performance of "Othello." His enunciation was so clear and his prejection so perfrect that the story of the music was made plain to every member of the audience.

The concert tonight will include the Prokofieff "Romeo and Juliet" ballet suite; Vaughn William's Symphony No. 6, and the Strauss tone poem, "Don Quixote."

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
AUG 7 - 1948

At Tanglewood

Stravinsky's 'Oedipus Rex' Is Offered by Bostonians

By Francis D. Perkins

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 6.—There is a musical representation of a storm in Beethoven's "Pastoral" symphony played last night in the music shed at Tanglewood by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky's direction, and a heavy shower outside enhanced the atmosphere of this part of the music. Stravinsky's opera oratorio "Oedipus Rex" completed this first concert of the Berkshire festival's second series, with David Lloyd singing the title role and Carol Brice as Jocasta. What with the weather, the usual contingent of listeners on the lawn was absent, but the music shed was filled by an audience of 6,300.

"Oedipus Rex" has been heard in New York as straight oratorio, as opera with stationary singers and mobile puppets, and as straight opera. In this last form, it was produced by the Juilliard School a few months ago, and therefore does not need further extensive discussion. Last night's performance, with James Pease tripling as Creon, Tiresias and the Messenger and Glenn Schnittke as the Shepherd completing the cast, and with Wesley Addy as the narrator, was the first in these festivals. This is the form in which "Oedipus" was first introduced to America by Dr. Koussevitzky and the Bostonians twenty years ago.

"Oedipus" ranks among Stravinsky's major masterpieces; the cumulative effect of the music is impressive. It fulfills the composer's intentions; there is dignity and a certain remoteness, a stylization appropriate to a modern presentation of a universally known classic legend, and yet the emotions of the situation and characters are conveyed. One is conscious of the inexorable fate which so often pervades Greek tragedy, wreaking woes for which none of those involved are personally responsible. The general directness of the music and its frequent use of persistent rhythms, sometimes recalling those of "Le Sacre du Printemps," also contribute to this prevailing impression.

Another factor is the dominating dark hues of the score with its chorus, varied indeed by measures of brighter color in the orchestra, by passages in which personal emotion comes to the front in the vocal solos, or by the plangent brass which announces the tragic narrative of death near the close. From time to time, indeed, this listener was also conscious of a sense of length and repetition which might be less apparent in a stage performance, but the prevalent impression was one of music which combined projection of the inevitability of the story with expressive sympathy for those concerned in it.

The men's chorus trained by Hugh Ross sang admirably with spirit and expressiveness; the orchestra was in excellent form, and there was a memorable coordination, in tonal proportion and in expressive understanding, between the choral and instrumental ensembles, under a conductor long acquainted with this music who knows this score both externally and inwardly. The color of Miss Brice's mezzo-soprano voice is well suited to this music, and a certain vocal tension, gradually replaced by freer and more expansive tones as her long monologue reached its climax, also seemed appropriate. Mr. Lloyd gave an able and musical interpretation of Oedipus's tenor role, which might have gained by a wider span of vocal and expressive color.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
AUG 7 - 1948

Festival Out To Break Record For Week-End Concert Crowds

Weatherman Predicts Favorable Conditions Tonight and Tomorrow—40,700 Have Attended First Five Programs

TANGLEWOOD — With good weather predicted for the week end Berkshire Festival officials will be out to break last year's all-time record for attendance when 27,000 people turned out for the Saturday night and Sunday afternoon concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. A year ago 14,000 crowded the Tanglewood grounds on Saturday night and another 13,000 listened to the concert the following afternoon. To date 40,700 persons have attended the first five concerts, compared to 28,100 last year at this time.

Officials at the United States Weather Bureau at the Pittsfield Airport reported this noon that there will be a clear sky tonight and warned Festival visitors to dress warmly as the temperature is expected to drop to around 53 or 54 degrees. No rain is in sight for tomorrow but it will be warmer and there will be some cloudiness in the afternoon.

Tonight's program, which will start in the Music Shed at 8.15 will feature Vaughan Williams sixth symphony which will be played for the first time in America. Also on the program will be the ballet, "Romeo and Juliet," from which the second suite is taken. It was composed by Serge Prokofieff in 1935. The last number will be "Don Quixote, Fantastic Variations on a Theme of Knightly Character," by Richard Strauss. Gregor Piatigorsky will appear as cello soloist.

Eleazar deCarvalho, Brazilian conductor, will lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow afternoon in a program of French Spanish and South American music.

The concert will conclude the second week-end series of the Berkshire Festival, to be followed by an all-Tchaikovsky program Tuesday evening.

Mr. deCarvalho, who conducted the Boston orchestra for two weeks at Symphony Hall, Boston, last January, is a native of Brazil, where he has conducted the Brazilian Symphony Orchestra in many concerts. Born in 1912 in the Iguatu in the state of Ceara, he spent his childhood on the farm of his parents, who were Dutch on his father's side and Indian on his mother's. He "played in the Naval and Marine Bands and in the orchestras of casinos, cabarets and circuses. After studying conducting with Serge Koussevitzky at Tanglewood in 1946, he returned last summer and this season to assist in supervising the class and in conducting the school orchestra.

The "Fantastic Symphony," written by Hector Berlioz in 1830, first performed at the conservatory in that year when the composer was 25, was his first important work. It will open tomorrow's program.

The manuscript score of "Madona, Poema Sinfonica," was written by Hector Villa-Lobas in 1945 for the Koussevitzky Music Foundation, and dedicated to the late Mrs. Natalie Koussevitzky. It is being performed for the first time. Villa-Lobos, who was born in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil in 1881, conducted his music at the Boston Symphony concerts in February, 1945.

The third number, "El Amor Brujo" (Love the Sorcerer), ballet-pantomime, was written by Manuel de Falla, a Spaniard, who spent the latter part of his life in Argentina. The ballet, whose plot was furnished by Gregorio Martinez Sierra, has the subtitle, "Gitaneria" (Gypsy Life). It is in one act and two scenes, written for a small orchestra with voice. It was first produced at the Teatro de Lara, Madrid, in 1915.

Carol Brice Soloist

The concluding work, Congo, Toada and Coco from the suite, "Nordestina," was written by Jose Siqueira of Brazil. A pupil of Francisco Braga, with Mr. deCarvalho, Siqueira has taken his themes from the folk-music of northeastern Brazil. The Toada is a Brazilian song. The Coco is an instrumental dance of Afro-Amer-Indian origin. The composer became administrative director of the Brazilian Symphony Orchestra when it was founded in 1940, and organized its radio programs.

Carol Brice, young Negro contralto, who will be the soloist Sunday afternoon in deFalla's "El Amor Brujo," is the first of her race to win the coveted Naumberg Foundation award, entitling her to a debut in New York's Town Hall. The daughter of a Congregational minister and a teacher, she grew up in Sedalia, N.C., where her parents were associated with the Palmer Memorial Institute, founded and conducted by her aunt, Dr. Charlotte Howkins Brown.

At the age of three, Miss Brice sang in New York and at Symphony Hall, Boston, with the Sedalia choir. After graduating with a degree in music from Talladega College in Alabama, she won for five successive years a scholarship at the Juilliard School of Music, New York City. In 1940 she sang at the third inauguration of President [illegible] and later at the White [illegible]

Other [illegible] engagements were with the [illegible] Symphony, Pittsburgh, [illegible] City and other orchestras, with the [illegible] University Glee [illegible] at Carnegie and Chicago's Orchestra Halls, and as star of her own radio show..

Tickets for the concert and tonight's Festival program as well as for Tuesday evening and next week end are on sale at the box office, England Brothers and the Blue Bird Shop, Stockbridge. Seats in the rear of the Shed and in the boxes remain for all performances. Admission to the grounds will be sold three hours before each program. Those attending the concerts are invited to picnic, as more than 200 parties did last Sunday noon.

[243]

This Clipping From RIVERSIDE, CALIF.
PRESS
AUG 7 1948

J. William Jones Studies With Serge Koussevitzky

J. WILLIAM JONES

J. William Jones, Riverside resident and director of the church music department at the University of Redlands, is enrolled for the six-week term of the Berkshire Music School at Lenox, Mass., home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer Music Festival.

Jones is enrolled in classes conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra; Robert Shaw, the American choral conductor; Julius Hereford, Columbia University and Hugh Ross, conductor of the New York Oratorio Society.

On his way back to California, Jones will visit Albany, N. Y., where he was director of music for 10 years at the Cathedral of All Saints, and will attend a reunion of those who were members of his concert choir of that time.

The choir toured the east for several years under a New York concert management.

In Albany, Jones will also be guest of honor at a dinner given by the Albany Diocesan Choir-masters Assn., which he founded 14 years ago.

This Clipping From
HANOVER, PA.
SUN

AUG 7 - 1948

A highlight of the final week of the Berkshire Festival will be the first performances in America for more than a hundred years of "The Turk in Italy" by Rossini Monday and Wednesday evenings in the Thetre-Concert Hall at Tanglewood.

Two former students of Serge Koussevitzky will share the podium of the Boston Symphony Orchestra with him during the final days of the Festival. Eleazar de Carvalho will conduct this Sunday afternoon. His program includes the "Fantastic Symphony" of Berlioz, "Madona" by Villa Lobos, Siquera's "Nordestina" Suite No. 1, and Falla's "El Amor Brujo" with Carol Brice as soloist. On Thursday evening, Leonard Bernstein as guest will conduct the Scherzo from Moussorgsky's "Night on Bald Mountain," the complete "Petrouchka" ballet of Stravinsky, and the Shostakovitch Symphony No. 5.

For the all-Tchaikovsky program Tuesday evening Dr. Koussevitzky has chosen the Symphony No. 6 "Pathetique", "1812 Overture," and the Piano Concerto No. 1 with Seymour Lipkin, winner of the 1948 Rachmaninoff Fund award, as soloist.

Enlisting the forces of the Festival Chorus of 250 voices Robert Shaw will be guest conductor with the orchestra Saturday evening, in a program made up entirely of two great choral works. Ellen Faull, soprano, and Eunice Alberts, contralto, will be soloists in "The Blessed Damozel" of Debussy. Frances Yeend, soprano, and James Pease, baritone, will be soloists in the Brahms "Requiem".

For the finale to the Festival Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct Symphony No. 3 ("Eroica") by Beethoven on Sunday afternoon, and the Sibelius Symphony in D major, No. 2.

* * *

Today's good news for playgoers eager for top-flight entertainment at reasonable cost is that Richard Rodgers and Oscar Hammerstein 2nd will bring their production of "Show Boat" into the City Center New York for a two-week engagement from September 7 through September 19.

The same lavish production of the great classic among American musicals which ran at the Ziegfeld Theater for a solid year at a $6.00 scale will open the new season of the municipally controlled playhouse in West Fifty-fifth street at a $2.50 top for evening performances and a $2.00 top for matinees, exclusive of tax.

The cast includes Billy House (Cap'n Andy), Norwood Smith (Ravenal), Pamela Caveness (Magnolia), Sammy White (Frank), Clare Alden (Ellie), Ruth Gates (Parthy Ann Hawks), William Smith (Poe), Laverne French (Dahomey King), and Helen Dowdy (Queenie), as well as large choral and dancing ensembles.

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES-UNION

AUG 7 - 1948

7,000 in Rain Hear Concert At Tanglewood

By EDGAR S. VAN OLINDA

In spite of inclement weather, some 7,000 music lovers attended the first concert of Series-B of the Berkshire Music festival, Thursday night.

The outside benches had been moved under the shed, but a few hardy devotees, clad in raincoats, heard the concert from under the nearby trees.

The "Pastorale" symphony by Beethoven was quite appropriate to the night. Mr. Koussevitzky gave it his most enthusiastic treatment, and while Mr. Beethoven's "Storm" finally clears up, nature was not so kind, members of the audience leaving the shed in a drizzle of rain.

FOLLOWING HIS established plan of presenting something new on these Tanglewood concerts, Dr. Koussevitzky programmed the opera-oratorio, "Oedipus Rex," by Igor Stravinsky. As is the case with a fireworks exhibition, it was exciting while it lasted but left no lasting impression. Like Wagner, Stravinsky doesn't realize the limitations of the human voice, with the result that he has written some very unvocal passages for three voices. One is more impressed with the amount of time and study put into the work by the soloists than with the ultimate quality of the ensemble.

THE EXCELLENT soloists were Miss Carol Brice, Negro mezzo-soprano; David Lloyd, tenor and James Pease, baritone. As an endurance contest to see whether the orchestra could outplay the singers or the singers outshout the instrumentalists, the work had a kind of sporting interest.

A chorus of 80 male voices, trained by Hugh Ross was heard to advantage. The narrator was Wesley Addy, the recent Iago in the Saratoga playhouse performance of "Othello." His enunciation was so clear and his prejection so perfect that the story of the music was made plain to every member of the audience.

The concert tonight will include the Prokofieff "Romeo and Juliet" ballet suite; Vaughn William's Symphony No. 6, and the Strauss tone poem, "Don Quixote."

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

AUG 7 - 1948

At Tanglewood

Stravinsky's 'Oedipus Rex' Is Offered by Bostonians

By Francis D. Perkins

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 6.—There is a musical representation of a storm in Beethoven's "Pastoral" symphony played last night in the music shed at Tanglewood by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky's direction, and a heavy shower outside enhanced the atmosphere of this part of the music. Stravinsky's opera oratorio "Oedipus Rex" completed this first concert of the Berkshire festival's second series, with David Lloyd singing the title role and Carol Brice as Jocasta. What with the weather, the usual contingent of listeners on the lawn was absent, but the music shed was filled by an audience of 6,300.

"Oedipus Rex" has been heard in New York as straight oratorio, as opera with stationary singers and mobile puppets, and as straight opera. In this last form, it was produced by the Juilliard School a few months ago, and therefore does not need further extensive discussion. Last night's performance, with James Pease tripling as Creon, Tiresias and the Messenger and Glenn Schnittke as the Shepherd completing the cast, and with Wesley Addy as the narrator, was the first in these festivals. This is the form in which "Oedipus" was first introduced to America by Dr. Koussevitzky and the Bostonians twenty years ago.

"Oedipus" ranks among Stravinsky's major masterpieces; the cumulative effect of the music is impressive. It fulfills the composer's intentions; there is dignity and a certain remoteness, a stylization appropriate to a modern presentation of a universally known classic legend, and yet the emotions of the situation and characters are conveyed. One is conscious of the inexorable fate which so often pervades Greek tragedy, wreaking woes for which none of those involved are personally responsible. The general directness of the music and its frequent use of persistent rhythms, sometimes recalling those of "Le Sacre du Printemps," also contribute to this prevailing impression.

Another factor is the dominating dark hues of the score with its chorus, varied indeed by measures of brighter color in the orchestra, by passages in which personal emotion comes to the front in the vocal solos, or by the plangent brass which announces the tragic narrative of death near the close. From time to time, indeed, this listener was also conscious of a sense of length and repetition which might be less apparent in a stage performance, but the prevalent impression was one of music which combined projection of the inevitability of the story with expressive sympathy for those concerned in it.

The men's chorus trained by Hugh Ross sang admirably with spirit and expressiveness; the orchestra was in excellent form, and there was a memorable coordination, in tonal proportion and in expressive understanding, between the choral and instrumental ensembles, under a conductor long acquainted with this music who knows this score both externally and inwardly. The color of Miss Brice's mezzo-soprano voice is well suited to this music, and a certain vocal tension, gradually replaced by freer and more expansive tones as her long monologue reached its climax, also seemed appropriate. Mr. Lloyd gave an able and musical interpretation of Oedipus's tenor role, which might have gained by a wider span of vocal and expressive color.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

AUG 7 - 1948

Festival Out To Break Record For Week-End Concert Crowds

Weatherman Predicts Favorable Conditions Tonight and Tomorrow—40,700 Have Attended First Five Programs

TANGLEWOOD — With good weather predicted for the week end Berkshire Festival officials will be out to break last year's all-time record for attendance when 27,000 people turned out for the Saturday night and Sunday afternoon concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. A year ago 14,000 crowded the Tanglewood grounds on Saturday night and another 13,000 listened to the concert the following afternoon. To date 40,700 persons have attended the first five concerts, compared to 28,100 last year at this time.

Officials at the United States Weather Bureau at the Pittsfield Airport reported this noon that [illegible] will be a clear sky tonight and warned Festival visitors to [illegible] warmly as the temperature is expected to drop to around 53 or 54 degrees. No rain is in sight for tomorrow but it will be warmer and there will be some cloudiness in the afternoon.

Tonight's program, which will start in the Music Shed at 8.15 will feature Vaughan Williams sixth symphony which will be played for the first time in America. Also on the program will be the ballet, "Romeo and Juliet," from which the second suite is taken. It was composed by Serge Prokofieff in 1935. The last number will be "Don Quixote, Fantastic Variations on a Theme of Knightly Character," by Richard Strauss. Gregor Piatigorsky will appear as cello soloist.

Eleazar deCarvalho, Brazilian conductor, will lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow afternoon in a program of French Spanish and South American music.

The concert will conclude the second week-end series of the Berkshire Festival, to be followed by an all-Tchaikovsky program Tuesday evening.

Mr. deCarvalho, who conducted the Boston orchestra for two weeks at Symphony Hall, Boston, last January, is a native of Brazil, where he has conducted the Brazilian Symphony Orchestra in many concerts. Born in 1912 in the Iguatu in the state of Ceara, he spent his childhood on the farm of his parents, who were Dutch on his father's side and Indian on his mother's. He "played in the Naval and Marine Bands and in the orchestras of casinos, cabarets and circuses. After studying conducting with Serge Koussevitzky at Tanglewood in 1946, he returned last summer and this season to assist in supervising the class and in conducting the school orchestra.

The "Fantastic Symphony," written by Hector Berlioz in 1830, first performed at the conservatory in that year when the composer was 25, was his first important work. It will open tomorrow's program.

The manuscript score of "Madona, Poema Sinfonica," was written by Hector Villa-Lobas in 1945 for the Koussevitzky Music Foundation, and dedicated to the late Mrs. Natalie Koussevitzky. It is being performed for the first time. Villa-Lobos, who was born in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil in 1881, conducted his music at the Boston Symphony concerts in February, 1945.

The third number, "El Amor Brujo" (Love the Sorcerer), ballet-pantomime, was written by Manuel de Falla, a Spaniard, who spent the latter part of his life in Argentina. The ballet, whose plot was furnished by Gregorio Martinez Sierra, has the subtitle, "Gitaneria" (Gypsy Life). It is in one act and two scenes, written for a small orchestra with voice. It was first produced at the Teatro de Lara, Madrid, in 1915.

Carol Brice Soloist

The concluding work, Congo, Toada and Coco from the suite, "Nordestina," was written by Jose Siqueira of Brazil. A pupil of Francisco Braga, with Mr. deCarvalho, Siqueira has taken his themes from the folk-music of northeastern Brazil. The Toada is a Brazilian song. The Coco is an instrumental dance of Afro-Amer-Indian origin. The composer became administrative director of the Brazilian Symphony Orchestra when it was founded in 1940, and organized its radio programs.

Carol Brice, young Negro contralto, who will be the soloist Sunday afternoon in deFalla's "El Amor Brujo," is the first of her race to win the coveted Naumberg Foundation award, entitling her to a debut in New York's Town Hall. The daughter of a Congregational minister and a teacher, she grew up in Sedalia, N.C., where her parents were associated with the Palmer Memorial Institute, founded and conducted by her aunt, Dr. Charlotte Howkins Brown.

At the age of three, Miss Brice sang in New York and at Symphony Hall, Boston, with the Sedalia choir. After graduating with a degree in music from Talladega College in Alabama, she won for five successive years a scholarship at the Juilliard School of Music, New York City. In 1940 she sang at the third inauguration of President [illegible] and later at the White [illegible]

Other [illegible] engagements were with the [illegible] Symphony, Pittsburgh, [illegible] City and other orchestras, with the Yale University Glee Club at Carnegie and Chicago's Orchestra Halls, and as star of her own radio show..

Tickets for the concert and tonight's Festival program as well as for Tuesday evening and next week end are on sale at the box office, England Brothers and the Blue Bird Shop, Stockbridge. Seats in the rear of the Shed and in the boxes remain for all performances. Admission to the grounds will be sold three hours before each program. Those attending the concerts are invited to picnic, as more than 200 parties did last Sunday noon.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

Museum Members' Night Is Mestrovic's

Ivan Mestrovic talks with John J. Cunningham (far left), while Director Stuart C. Henry, Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge and Boaz Piller stand in front of one of Mestrovic's bas-reliefs currently on exhibition in the Ellen Crane memorial room of the Berkshire Museum. Mr. Piller, a contra-bassoonist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has loaned the museum his collection of framed letters and photographs of illustrious musicians. They are hung in a small gallery adjoining the North Gallery.

More Than 500 Attend Program Opening Exhibit

From the moment that the 500 persons who attended the Berkshire Museum's summer members' night arrived, they were made conscious that last night belonged to Ivan Mestrovic, the small and bearded Yugoslavian who has been teaching sculpture at the Museum's summer art school. Two of the sculptor's bronzes were lit up on the lawn.

Once inside the museum, Mestrovic's statuary was visible from almost any angle on both the first and second floors. Visitors were immediately ushered into the auditorium where a film portrayed the method the sculptor chose in making the Indian equestrian statues that have dominated Chicago's Michigan Avenue for the past 25 years.

Movie Filmed in Zagreb

John H. Cunningham, educational director for the National Sculpture Society, told the jammed hall that the movie had been filmed in Zagreb, Yugoslavia, by Malvina Hoffman, the outstanding American sculptor. He read a commentary by Miss Hoffman, whose scheduled appearance last night was prevented by an unexpected trip to her Paris studio.

She met Mestrovic, she wrote, when he came to America for the first time 23 years ago. As a student, she returned with him to Zagreb where she filmed the extraordinary record of the work.

Observers last night watched Mestrovic's students build the iron supports and the wooden framework on which the clay was thrown. They saw the huge casts made of plaster, and then watched the bronze founders guide the work of bronze casting in the so-called "lost wax" process.

At times during the movie, spectators believed they were witnessing medieval magic. The shed-like building in which Mestrovic worked was dark. Huge pits were dug to serve as cleaning pools, and earth floors were excavated to make a place for the brick ovens. The movie showed young men working with white-hot crucibles holding molten metal. It was bronze casting as conceived by someone like Benvenuto Cellini.

Pan-American Has Bad Time

Before the audience left the auditorium, they were treated to a movie entitled "Week End to Bermuda," a promotional stunt put out by Pan-American Airways. Unfortunately for the company's public relations department, the film was faulty. Laughter filled the room when the Pan-American plane seemed to hit an air pocket immediately after it left La Guardia Field. The plane jumped up and down on the screen as if manipulated on pulleys. Not long afterward, four passengers were shown seated at lunch. Instead of the pleasant conversation designed by the producers, the sound tract emitted a series of noises not unlike a suction pump in distress. It wasn't until the plane landed in Bermuda that the film stopped misbehaving.

Between movies, the large crowd was titillated by Bartlett Hendricks' auction, held for the benefit of the museum. After getting hold of three volunteers, Mr. Hendricks played "Twenty Questions" with them until they identified two large boxes on the stage. The first contained a book of Mestrovic sculptures, autographed by the artist. The second hid an album of North American bird songs, and the records were advertised as unbreakable.

After somewhat spotty bidding, Leon Mohill topped the field for the book, and Mrs. Zenas C. Colt won the records. Their bids were respectively $25 and $15.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
AUG 7 - 1948

An Old Rossini Opera Is Revived

Berkshire Music Festival Will Hear 'The Turk in Italy'

By ROBERT BAGAR.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 7.—It wouldn't be correct to call Boris Goldovsky a curio hunter. He is a good deal more than that—a hunter who comes up with curios which should never have been permitted to get that way.

Last summer, up here, he was responsible for the production of Mozart's "Idomeneo," about which many of us allegedly in the know could have told you very little. We know something more about it now, having had the delightful experience of listening to an unfamiliar work of Mozart's done, as it was, very engagingly.

Mr. Goldovsky's latest curio is something being touted hereabouts as a gem from the archives of one Gioacchino Rossini. The work, an opera, is "Il Turco In Italia," or, since we are to hear it in English next Monday and Wednesday evenings "The Turk in Italy." And if Mr. Goldovsky's and everybody else's enthusiasm is any criterion, it should be a pip.

Premiere in 1814.

"The Turk in Italy" was given its world premiere at La Scala, Milan, on Aug. 14, 1814. By no means an overwhelming success, it was produced several times in later seasons under such varying titles as "The Deluded Tutor" (Vicenza, 1816) and "The Capricious One Disciplined" (Rome, 1819). The last Italian revival, insofar as is known, took place at Florence, on March 16, 1882.

In the United States the opera obtained its initial hearing at the Park Theater, New York, March 14, 1826, when the famous Garcias put it on. It was revived, also in New York, on Dec. 18, 1840. So, this Berkshire Music Center production comes after a lapse of 108 years, in this country, at least. And, therefore, it is all the more welcome.

There is quite an interesting story in connection with the present revival. The work was suggested by Helmuth Wolfes, well-known conductor and coach, who began research on it a number of years ago. Then an act of providence intervened, and the only obtainable score of the original went down on the torpedoed Athenia, during the early days of the last war.

Rejuvenated Plot.

Mr. Goldovsky's pursuit of "The Turk in Italy" almost approaches in dramatic thoroughness an FBI manhunt. A manuscript copy was found in a collection of scores which the late Maj. Henry L. Higginson, founder of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bought from the Opera House in Palermo, and which then reposed for years in several crates stored on the top floor of Symphony Hall in Boston. Another partial score turned up among the Brown collection of the public library in Boston. Then, piano scores were discovered in the Widener Library of Harvard and the library of the Harvard Musical Assn.

For the present version Mr. Wolfes is supplying orchestral parts wherever they are absent from existing scores. And Mr. Goldovsky, besides being in charge of the production, has both revised and Englished the text.

Our genial Mr. Goldosvky, who is properly ubiquitous in this article, tells us that Rossini himself was very free with his opera. Arias and concerted numbers were shifted about indiscriminately, being present in one version and absent from the next.

He further declares that "The Barber of Seville" is the only Rossini opera in the standard repertoire today, "and it has survived because it is the only one with a plot we can accept. We can't take the others any more. Our production of "The Turk in Italy" will attempt to preserve all the charm of Rossini's delightful music, while the rejuvenated plot will permit a radically new style in the staging."

The main character, we learn, is not that of the title, but a poet who "lives in front of the curtain," and practically constructs the opera as it goes along, meanwhile keeping on informal terms with the people on both sides of the footlights.

[244]

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
AUG 7 - 1948

Public Favors Classics Over Music of Our Day

By CARL E. LINDSTROM

NOWHERE in recent times has so much modern music been played before so any people as in the Tanglewood concerts of this season. In a shrewd, almost sly manner, Dr. Koussevitzky has alternated the advanced music with the ~~established~~ classics so that nobody has been either much hurt or much pampered. It has been a good deal like a canny old nursemaid cajoling the fussing babe with peppermint stick between doses of castor oil.

They still make politely wry faces over Milhaud and Stravinsky and Hindemith. If you don't think so, just keep your ears open as the crowd mills about on the broad lawns during intermission. Ordinarily a music critic would be ill-advised to take much stock in what he hears so casually. His judgments ought to be insulated against these little accidental prssures, but let's listen to a few of them.

First, in order to size up the crowd itself we might note the remark of a woman who has been in a position to observe a good many musical audiences. Said she: "I've never seen such a curious combination of bohemianism and gentility."

* * *

THAT'S PRETTY ACCURATE. Now what else do we hear? Of the first program which began with Bach and continued with Mathis der Maler and the Fifth Symphony, a lady of cultured manner and accent remarked: "This program won't mean much to me until we get to Beethoven."

As a post mortem on the Saturday night concert a small group was taking apart Walter Piston, Prokofieff and Brahms of the C minor Symphony. "Now Brahms!" declared a middle-aged man of seeming substance, enthusiastically: "That's music for you! All the others—simply pretty notes."

Do the composers of today ever hear these things? Most of them are frightful critic-baiters, as though the critics had something to do with the reluctance of concert goers to hear contemporary music. It must be discouraging to the creative artist to note that the clamor for the classics seems to be fundamental with ticket buyers. "Music lovers" are lovers of Schubert and Strauss and Tschaikovsky and Mozart but they plainly are unresponsive to anybody born since 1890.

* * *

THERE STANDS Aaron Copeland loyally beating his hands off for Milhaud and Hindemith and Piston and the rest of his colleagues. He has a smile on his face and he obviously thinks it is great that Koussevitzy is giving today's music a break.

You are kind of glad that he doesn't hear the remark of another Brahms devotee. "That last movement of the First Symphony was the most dramatic thing I've ever heard!"

Mixing with a crowd of ten thousand people and noting the mass response to such widely differentiated musical works provides a disturbing criterion of artistic values.

Composers who can't get their stuff performed have a right to be resentful. But their music is being played today—and plenty, especially by Koussevitzky. But the plain fact is that they are not making as much of a dent as you would expect and I think that many of them might well take another look or two at their manuscripts and ask themselves if they really have so much to say after all.

This is not to be construed as criticism of Koussevitzky's program making. Quite the contrary. It is the frequency of these modern scores that makes it almost impossible for your reviewer to skip any of these concerts.

These programs of new music are very important. The pity is that so many of the customers think they sound important without sounding musical.

* * *

THE PHONE JUST RANG. A gentle voice inquired about the programs to be played at Tanglewood on Sunday and on Tuesday. In the most impartial tone she was told that on Sunday the "Fantastic Symphony" of Berlioz was scheduled along with Villa Lobos "Modana," De Falla's "El amor brujo" and Siqueira's "Nordestina."

"That's modern, isn't it?" was the dubious comment.

"And on Tuesday there will be an all-Tschaikowsky concert—the Pathetique Symphony, the piano Concerto and the "1812 Overture."

"Oh, that's a much better program! We shall go on Tuesday."

There you have some of the difficulties of program making. It's a good thing critics are not consulted. They would probably ask for the moderns, even if most composers don't think so. But critics have been wrong before and Harold Bauer says that people, not critics, are the best judge of what is great in art.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
AUG 7 - 1948

Museum Members' Night Is Mestrovic's

Ivan Mestrovic talks with John J. Cunningham (far left), while Director Stuart C. Henry, Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge and Boaz Piller stand in front of one of Mestrovic's bas-reliefs currently on exhibition in the Ellen Crane memorial room of the Berkshire Museum. Mr. Piller, a contra-bassoonist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has loaned the museum his collection of framed letters and photographs of illustrious musicians. They are hung in a small gallery adjoining the North Gallery.

More Than 500 Attend Program Opening Exhibit

From the moment that the 500 persons who attended the Berkshire Museum's summer members' night arrived, they were made conscious that last night belonged to Ivan Mestrovic, the small and bearded Yugoslavian who has been teaching sculpture at the Museum's summer art school. Two of the sculptor's bronzes were lit up on the lawn.

Once inside the museum, Mestrovic's statuary was visible from almost any angle on both the first and second floors. Visitors were immediately ushered into the auditorium where a film portrayed the method the sculptor chose in making the Indian equestrian statues that have dominated Chicago's Michigan Avenue for the past 25 years.

Movie Filmed in Zagreb

John H. Cunningham, educational director for the National Sculpture Society, told the jammed hall that the movie had been filmed in Zagreb, Yugoslavia, by Malvina Hoffman, the outstanding American sculptor. He read a commentary by Miss Hoffman, whose scheduled appearance last night was prevented by an unexpected trip to her Paris studio.

She met Mestrovic, she wrote, when he came to America for the first time 23 years ago. As a student, she returned with him to Zagreb where she filmed the extraordinary record of the work.

Observers last night watched Mestrovic's students build the iron supports and the wooden framework on which the clay was thrown. They saw the huge casts made of plaster, and then watched the bronze founders guide the work of bronze casting in the so-called "lost wax" process.

At times during the movie, spectators believed they were witnessing medieval magic. The shed-like building in which Mestrovic worked was dark. Huge pits were dug to serve as cleaning pools, and earth floors were excavated to make a place for the brick ovens. The movie showed young men working with white-hot crucibles holding molten metal. It was bronze casting as conceived by someone like Benvenuto Cellini.

Pan-American Has Bad Time

Before the audience left the auditorium, they were treated to a movie entitled "Week End to Bermuda," a promotional stunt put out by Pan-American Airways. Unfortunately for the company's public relations department, the film was faulty. Laughter filled the room when the Pan-American plane seemed to hit an air pocket immediately after it left La Guardia Field. The plane jumped up and down on the screen as if manipulated on pulleys. Not long afterward, four passengers were shown seated at lunch. Instead of the pleasant conversation designed by the producers, the sound tract emitted a series of noises not unlike a suction pump in distress. It wasn't until the plane landed in Bermuda that the film stopped misbehaving.

Between movies, the large crowd was titillated by Bartlett Hendricks' auction, held for the benefit of the museum. After getting hold of three volunteers, Mr. Hendricks played "Twenty Questions" with them until they identified two large boxes on the stage. The first contained a book of Mestrovic sculptures, autographed by the artist. The second hid an album of North American bird songs, and the records were advertised as unbreakable.

After somewhat spotty bidding, Leon Mohill topped the field for the book, and Mrs. Zenas C. Colt won the records. Their bids were respectively $25 and $15.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
AUG 7 - 1948

An Old Rossini Opera Is Revived

Berkshire Music Festival Will Hear 'The Turk in Italy'

By ROBERT BAGAR.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 7.—It wouldn't be correct to call Boris Goldovsky a curio hunter. He is a good deal more than that—a hunter who comes up with curios which should never have been permitted to get that way.

Last summer, up here, he was responsible for the production of Mozart's "Idomeneo," about which many of us allegedly in the know could have told you very little. We know something more about it now, having had the delightful experience of listening to an unfamiliar work of Mozart's done, as it was, very engagingly.

Mr. Goldovsky's latest curio is something being touted hereabouts as a gem from the archives of one Gioacchino Rossini. The work, an opera, is "Il Turco In Italia," or, since we are to hear it in English next Monday and Wednesday evenings "The Turk in Italy." And if Mr. Goldovsky's and everybody else's enthusiasm is any criterion, it should be a pip.

Premiere in 1814.

"The Turk in Italy" was given its world premiere at La Scala, Milan, on Aug. 14, 1814. By no means an overwhelming success, it was produced several times in later seasons under such varying titles as "The Deluded Tutor" (Vicenza, 1816) and "The Capricious One Disciplined" (Rome, 1819). The last Italian revival, insofar as is known, took place at Florence, on March 16, 1882.

In the United States the opera obtained its initial hearing at the Park Theater, New York, March 14, 1826, when the famous Garcias put it on. It was revived, also in New York, on Dec. 18, 1840. So, this Berkshire Music Center production comes after a lapse of 108 years, in this country, at least. And, therefore, it is all the more welcome.

There is quite an interesting story in connection with the present revival. The work was suggested by Helmuth Wolfes, well-known conductor and coach, who began research on it a number of years ago. Then an act of providence intervened, and the only obtainable score of the original went down on the torpedoed Athenia, during the early days of the last war.

Rejuvenated Plot.

Mr. Goldovsky's pursuit of "The Turk in Italy" almost approaches in dramatic thoroughness an FBI manhunt. A manuscript copy was found in a collection of scores which the late Maj. Henry L. Higginson, founder of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, bought from the Opera House in Palermo, and which then reposed for years in several crates stored on the top floor of Symphony Hall in Boston. Another partial score turned up among the Brown collection of the public library in Boston. Then, piano scores were discovered in the Widener Library of Harvard and the library of the Harvard Musical Assn.

For the present version Mr. Wolfes is supplying orchestral parts wherever they are absent from existing scores. And Mr. Goldovsky, besides being in charge of the production, has both revised and Englished the text.

Our genial Mr. Goldosvky, who is properly ubiquitous in this article, tells us that Rossini himself was very free with his opera. Arias and concerted numbers were shifted about indiscriminately, being present in one version and absent from the next.

He further declares that "The Barber of Seville" is the only Rossini opera in the standard repertoire today, "and it has survived because it is the only one with a plot we can accept. We can't take the others any more. Our production of "The Turk in Italy" will attempt to preserve all the charm of Rossini's delightful music, while the rejuvenated plot will permit a radically new style in the staging."

The main character, we learn, is not that of the title, but a poet who "lives in front of the curtain," and practically constructs the opera as it goes along, meanwhile keeping on informal terms with the people on both sides of the footlights.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
AUG 7 - 1948

Public Favors Classics Over Music of Our Day

By CARL E. LINDSTROM

NOWHERE in recent times has so much modern music been played before so any people as in the Tanglewood concerts of this season. In a shrewd, almost sly manner, Dr. Koussevitzky has alternated the advanced music with the ~~established~~ classics so that nobody has been either much hurt or much pampered. It has been a good deal like a canny old nursemaid cajoling the fussing babe with peppermint stick between doses of castor oil.

They still make politely wry faces over Milhaud and Stravinsky and Hindemith. If you don't think so, just keep your ears open as the crowd mills about on the broad lawns during intermission. Ordinarily a music critic would be ill-advised to take much stock in what he hears so casually. His judgments ought to be insulated against these little accidental prssures, but let's listen to a few of them.

First, in order to size up the crowd itself we might note the remark of a woman who has been in a position to observe a good many musical audiences. Said she: "I've never seen such a curious combination of bohemianism and gentility."

* * *

THAT'S PRETTY ACCURATE. Now what else do we hear? Of the first program which began with Bach and continued with Mathis der Maler and the Fifth Symphony, a lady of cultured manner and accent remarked: "This program won't mean much to me until we get to Beethoven."

As a post mortem on the Saturday night concert a small group was taking apart Walter Piston, Prokofieff and Brahms of the C minor Symphony. "Now Brahms!" declared a middle-aged man of seeming substance, enthusiastically: "That's music for you! All the others—simply pretty notes."

Do the composers of today ever hear these things? Most of them are frightul critic-baiters, as though the critics had something to do with the reluctance of concert goers to hear contemporary music. It must be discouraging to the creative artist to note that the clamor for the classics seems to be fundamental with ticket buyers. "Music lovers" are lovers of Schubert and Strauss and Tschaikovsky and Mozart but they plainly are unresponsive to anybody born since 1890.

* * *

THERE STANDS Aaron Copeland lovally beating his hands off for Milhaud and Hindemith and Piston and the rest of his colleagues. He has a smile on his face and he obviously thinks it is great that Koussevitzy is giving today's music a break.

You are kind of glad that he doesn't hear the remark of another Brahms devotee. "That last movement of the First Symphony was the most dramatic thing I've ever heard!"

Mixing with a crowd of ten thousand people and noting the mass response to such widely differentiated musical works provides a disturbing criterion of artistic values.

Composers who can't get their stuff performed have a right to be resentful. But their music is being played today—and plenty, especially by Koussevitzky. But the plain fact is that they are not making as much of a dent as you would expect and I think that many of them might well take another look or two at their manuscripts and ask themselves if they really have so much to say after all.

This is not to be construed as criticism of Koussevitzky's program making. Quite the contrary. It is the frequency of these modern scores that makes it almost impossible for your reviewer to skip any of these concerts.

These programs of new music are very important. The pity is that so many of the customers think they sound important without sounding musical.

* * *

THE PHONE JUST RANG. A gentle voice inquired about the programs to be played at Tanglewood on Sunday and on Tuesday. In the most impartial tone she was told that on Sunday the "Fantastic Symphony" of Berlioz was scheduled along with Villa Lobos "Modana," De Falla's "El amor brujo" and Siqueira's "Nordestina."

"That's modern, isn't it?" was the dubious comment.

"And on Tuesday there will be an all-Tschaikowsky concert—the Pathetique Symphony, the piano Concerto and the "1812 Overture."

"Oh, that's a much better program! We shall go on Tuesday."

There you have some of the difficulties of program making. It's a good thing critics are not consulted. They would probably ask for the moderns, even if most composers don't think so. But critics have been wrong before and Harold Bauer says that people, not critics, are the best judge of what is great in art.

[244]

Hartford Times

Public Favors Classics Over Music of Our Day

By CARL E. LINDSTROM

NOWHERE in recent times has so much modern music been played before so any people as in the Tanglewood concerts of this season. In a shrewd, almost sly manner, Dr. Koussevitzky has alternated the advanced music with the established classics so that nobody has been either much hurt or much pampered. It has been a good deal like a canny old nursemaid cajoling the fussing babe with peppermint stick between doses of castor oil.

They still make politely wry faces over Milhaud and Stravinsky and Hindemith. If you don't think so, just keep your ears open as the crowd mills about on the broad lawns during intermission. Ordinarily a music critic would be ill-advised to take much stock in what he hears so casually. His judgments ought to be insulated against these little accidental prssures, but let's listen to a few of them.

First, in order to size up the crowd itself we might note the remark of a woman who has been in a position to observe a good many musical audiences. Said she: "I've never seen such a curious combination of bohemianism and gentility."

* * *

THAT'S PRETTY ACCURATE. Now what else do we hear? Of the first program which began with Bach and continued with Mathis der Maler and the Fifth Symphony, a lady of cultured manner and accent remarked: "This program won't mean much to me until we get to Beethoven."

As a post mortem on the Saturday night concert a small group was taking apart Walter Piston, Prokofieff and Brahms of the C minor Symphony. "Now Brahms!" declared a middle-aged man of seeming substance, enthusiastically: "That's music for you! All the others—simply pretty notes."

Do the composers of today ever hear these things? Most of them are frightul critic-baiters, as though the critics had something to do with the reluctance of concert goers to hear contemporary music. It must be discouraging to the creative artist to note that the clamor for the classics seems to be fundamental with ticket buyers. "Music lovers" are lovers of Schubert and Strauss and Tschaikovsky and Mozart but they plainly are unresponsive to anybody born since 1890.

* * *

THERE STANDS Aaron Copeland lovally beating his hands off for Milhaud and Hindemith and Piston and the rest of his colleagues. He has a smile on his face and he obviously thinks it is great that Koussevitzy is giving today's music a break.

You are kind of glad that he doesn't hear the remark of another Brahms devotee. "That last movement of the First Symphony was the most dramatic thing I've ever heard!'

Mixing with a crowd of ten thousand people and noting the mass response to such widely differentiated musical works provides a disturbing criterion of artistic values.

Composers who can't get their stuff performed have a right to be resentful. But their music is being played today—and plenty, especially by Koussevitzky. But the plain fact is that they are not making as much of a dent as you would expect and I think that many of them might well take another look or two at their manuscripts and ask themselves if they really have so much to say after all.

This is not to be construed as criticism of Koussevitzky's program making. Quite the contrary. It is the frequency of these modern scores that makes it almost impossible for your reviewer to skip any of these concerts.

These programs of new music are very important. The pity is that so many of the customers think they sound important without sounding musical.

* * *

THE PHONE JUST RANG. A gentle voice inquired about the programs to be played at Tanglewood on Sunday and on Tuesday. In the most impartial tone she was told that on Sunday the "Fantastic Symphony" of Berlioz was scheduled along with Villa Lobos "Modana," De Falla's "El amor brujo" and Siqueira's "Nordestina."

"That's modern, isn't it?" was the dubious comment.

"And on Tuesday there will be an all-Tschaikowsky concert—the Pathetique Symphony, the piano Concerto and the "1812 Overture."

"Oh, that's a much better program! We shall go on Tuesday."

There you have some of the difficulties of program making. It's a good thing critics are not consulted. They would probably ask for the moderns, even if most composers don't think so. But critics have been wrong before and Harold Bauer says that people, not critics, are the best judge of what is great in art.

Rossini Work To Highlight At Tanglewood

A highlight of the final week of the Berkshire Festival will be the first performances in America for more than 100 years of "The Turk in Italy," by Rossini, Monday ar. l Wedensday evenings in the Theatre-Concert Hall at Tanglewood. Tickets have been issued to friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

The cast for the first performance, announced by Boris Goldovsky, head of the opera department at the Berkshire Music Center, includes June Gardner, soprano; Adele Addison, soprano; David Lloyd, tenor; Marshall Heinbaugh, baritone; Arthur Schoep, baritone; and Francis Barnard, bass-baritone. On Wednesday evening, principals will be Miss Gardner, Miss Addison, David Garen, Mr. Heinbaugh, Robert Goss, and James Pease. Mr. Goldovsky will conduct both performances.

* * *

NASSAN ABISKHAROUN, the young Egyptian sculptor and designer discovered by Mr. Goldovsky last winter, is responsible for the settings. The costumes have been designed by Leo Van Witsen. Sarah Caldwell is chorus master and Robert J. Lawthers, technical director.

Two former students of Serge Koussevitzky will share the podium of the Boston Symphony Orchestra with him during the final days of the Festival. Eleazar de Carvalho will conduct this Sunday afternoon. His program includes the "Fantastic Symphony" of Berlioz, "Madona" by Villa Lobos, Siquera's "Nordestina" Suite No. 1, and Falla's "El Amor Brujo" with Carol Brice as soloist. On Thursday evening, Leonard Bernstein as guest will conduct the Scherzo from Moussorgsky's "Night on Bald Mountain," the complete "Petrouchka" ballet of Stravinsky, and the Shostakovitch Symphony No. 5.

* * *

FOR THE ALL-Tchaikovsky program Tuesday evening, Dr. Koussevitzky has chosen the Symphony No. 6 "Pathetique," "1812 Overture," and the Piano Concerto No. 1 with Seymour Lipkin, winner of the 1948 Rachmaninoff Fund award, as soloist.

Enlisting the forces of the Festival Chorus of 250 voices, Robert Shaw will be guest conductor with the orchestra Saturday evening, Aug. 14, in a program made up entirely of two great choral works.

Ellen Faull, soprano, and Eunice Alberts, contralto, will be soloists in "The Blessed Damozel" by Debussy. Frances Yeend, soprano, and James Pease, baritone, will be soloists in the Brahms "Requiem."

For the finale to the Festival, Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct Symphony No. 3 ("Eroica") by Beethoven Sunday afternoon, Aug. 15, and the Sibelius Symphony in D Major, No. 2.

[From Late Editions of Yesterday's TIMES.]

NEW WORK PLAYED AT LENOX FESTIVAL

Koussevitzky Leads Vaughan Williams' Sixth Symphony in American Premiere

By OLIN DOWNES

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 7—If the eleventh Berkshire Festival, which has been one of exceptional brilliancy, had done nothing but present the American premiére of Vaughan Williams' Sixth Symphony this evening it would have placed the nation in its debt.

For this is one of the most powerful and deeply felt symphonic writings to have appeared since the turn of the century. The sincerity of the expression blazes in every page. The virility and driving energy of it are companioned by pages of tenderness and mysticism. Had this music only reflected the realizations and mellow understandings of an introspective spirit and an artist now in his seventy-sixth year, it would have been more than enough.

But we have here a score of astonishing strength and of the most passionate emotion. It is drama, inner drama, wrought from suffering and realization, and compassion, and experience. And it is great music.

Begun in Wartime

The symphony was begun in wartime, and it cannot be a misleading interpretation which concludes that the greatest tragedy humanity has suffered in centuries is the origin of its thought. That thought, one would say, has bitten deep into the composer's consciousness. What he has felt, what he has lived beyond verbal power to relate or describe in words, has gotten into his measures.

Every measure is an emotional imperative. The form is free, the ideas are inevitable. The discursiveness which has marked some of Vaughan Williams' earlier scores—it might be better to say the over-luxuriance of his ideas—is here magnificently absent. The symphony is the last word in concision. Not a measure could be spared. All that had to be put down, and nothing else, is there. There are duly contrasted themes. They are thoughts, not melodies stated merely for purposes of balance and design. All is order and logic, but the logic and emotion and idea, to which form adjusts itself. The succession of key is unorthodox.

Opens With Cry of Anguish

Whatever may have been the travail involved in the creation of this piece, the listener gets the impression of something that is poured molten hot from the man who produced it, and this under such compulsion that he had to put on paper, with no artifice at all, what it was impossible not to say. It opens with a cry of anguish, and proceeds in a furious and sardonic spirit. Then a theme shines through, of an ecclesiastic character, lofty and tender withal. It first glows in the strings, then is strengthened with brass and ascends, against sweeps of the harp, to a near-apotheosis, only to be ended by the agonized cry that introduced the movement.

As remarked, form is purely the vehicle of emotion. The second movement, with a mournful, chromatic sort of a figure, begins like some Passacaglia, but instead flowers out into music of a gripping intensity. Three short notes which have been an integral part of this theme are later broadened and flung out by the trumpets, over roaring drums, and reiterated insistently through the rest of the movement, like an insistent summons, as if this composer, like Beethoven in his time, were saying "Thus fate knocks at the door."

All the movements follow each other, as they are intended, without a pause. The scherzo, built on an ascending series of fourths and of a driving energy, is again torrent fury, an embristling part, somewhat modal and in the folk vein, which, however, does not stay the headlong course of the movement or the sensation of a terrific universe.

And then what? The finale is the shortest, the most unconventional and, perhaps, the most poignant part of the whole work. It is a mystical dialogue called in the score, "epilogue," and it is the music of another world.

Much of this movement is for strings, sometimes subdivided, and in the upper registers. Woodwinds enter in the course of it, solo fragments of an oboe's song are heard. It is solitude, prayer, music so intimate, so unspectacular, unsymphonic if you like, that one knows Vaughan Williams would not have written it if it had not been as inevitable with him as the rest of the work.

Orchestra as Palette

The symphony uses an immense orchestra, as a palette from which the most delicate as well as the most imposing effects may be gained. A third of that orchestra suffices for this reverie, this self-communing, which finale lapses into silence. For concert purposes, for salvos of applause, a movement utterly worthless. For the final word, spoken in the silence of the soul—all.

The performance we believe to be one of the finest that we know Dr. Koussevitzky has ever given. He conducted the work as though his life, and the lives of his listeners, depended upon the music being understood: conducted with command of the orchestra, and an imperious will that left no player immune from the music's needs.

The other two features of the program were an admirable performance of Prokofieff's music to his ballet, "Romeo and Juliet," and rich, beautiful music it is; and finally Richard Strauss' "Don Quixote," with Gregor Piatigorsky as the 'cello soloist. It is a score which amazingly withstands the passages of the years, which indeed contains some of the greatest pages that Strauss wrote. And Mr. Piatigorsky, especially in such passages as the conclusion, when the knight of the sorrowful countenance, in all humility and understanding, gives up the ghost, has the tone and the expression that fully and movingly reveal the pathos of the work.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN

AUG 8 - 1948

'The Turk in Italy' At Tanglewood

A highlight of the final week of the Berkshire Festival will be the first performances in America for more than 100 years of "The Turk in Italy" by Rossini tomorrow and Wednesday evenings in the Theatre - Concert Hall at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

The cast for the first performance includes June Gardner, soprano; Adele Addison, soprano; David Lloyd, tenor; Marshall Heinbaugh, baritone; Arthur Schoep, baritone, and Francis [illegible], bass-baritone.

This Clipping From
MUSKOGEE, OKLA.
PHOENIX

AUG 8 1948

FINAL "BERKSHIRE" BROADCAST TUESDAY

With the fourth and final broadcast next Tuesday over KBIX-ABC from the Berkshire Music Festival, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will conclude its 1947-1948 season. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will be on the podium for the all-Tchaikovsky program which will include the "Concerto No. 1 for Pianoforte in B-Flat Minor" and the overture "1812." The broadcast will be heard at 8:30 p. m.

The season of ABC broadcasts started last October 14 in Boston. Since that time ABC has presented the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 18 out of town broadcasts originating in Providence, Cambridge, New Haven, Pittsburgh, Detroit, New London and Hartford, as well as from Symphony Hall, Boston, the Boston "Pops" and the Esplanade Concerts. There also was a special broadcast from New York arranged by Edward J. Noble to inaugurate the annual appeal of the Salvation Army.

In addition to Dr. Koussevitzky, who retires after the close of next season, his 25th with the orchestra, the podium has been occupied by Charles Muench, French conductor who will succeed him, Leonard Berstein, American composer-conductor, and Eleazar de Carvalho, Brazilian conductor and Richard Burgin, Koussevitzky's associate conductor.

This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD-TIMES

AUG 8 1948

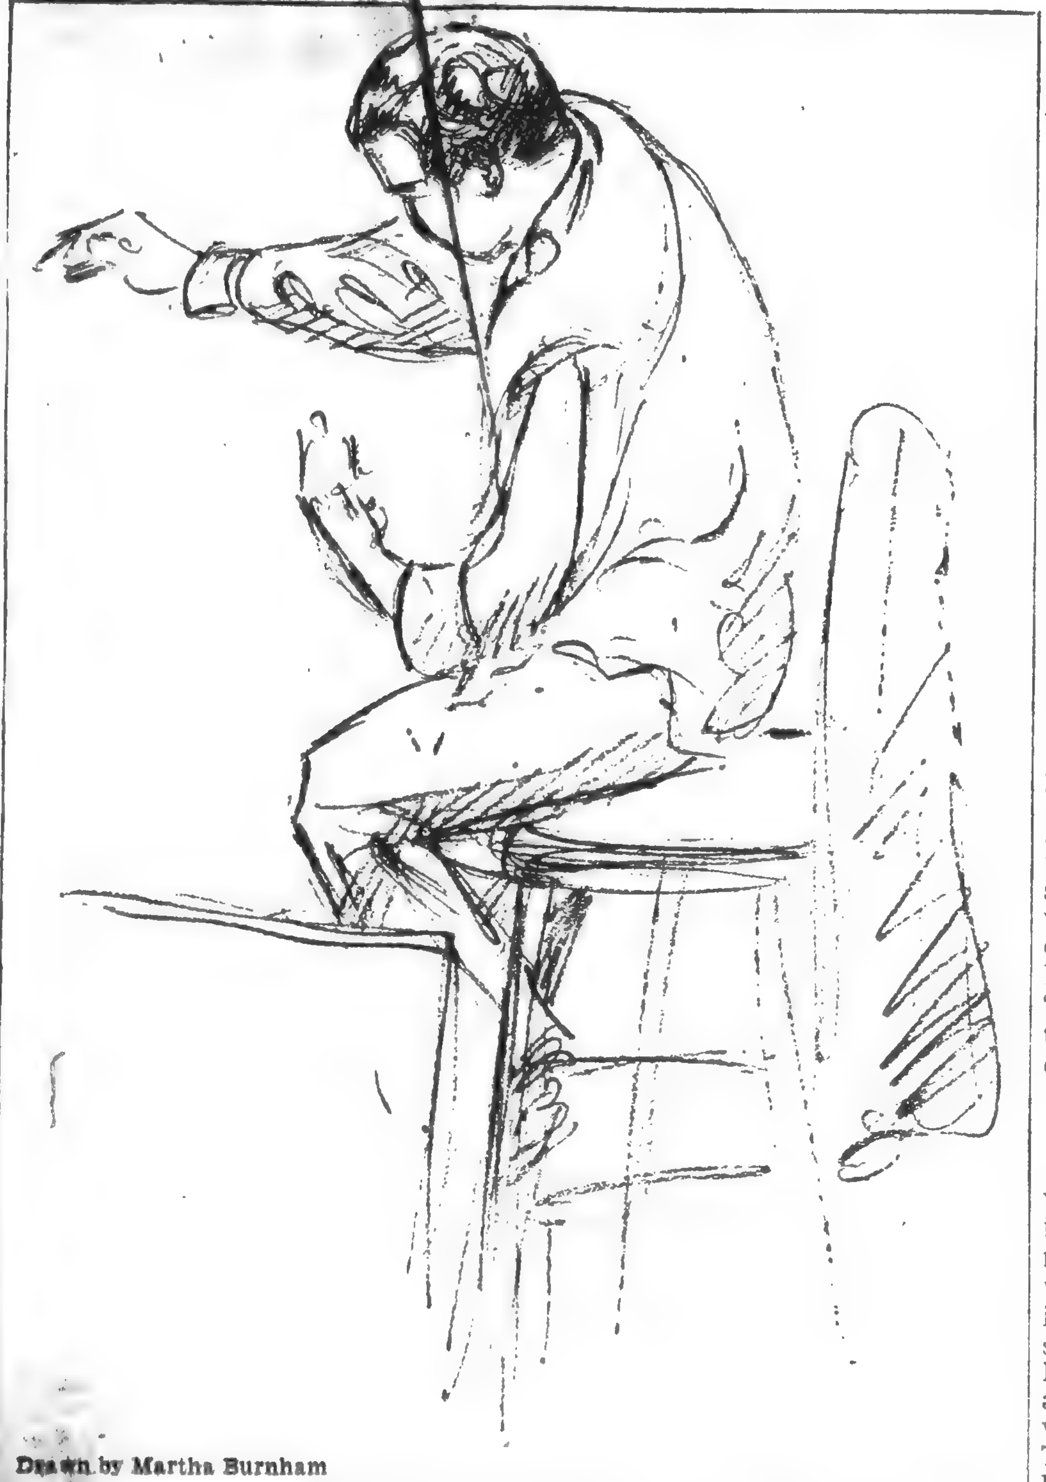
Symphony by Briton Presented At Lenox

LENOX, Aug. 7 (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Dr. Serge Koussevitsky conducting, tonight presented for the first time in America, Symphony No. 6 by Vaughan Williams of Great Britain.

More than 9,700 persons, huddled in coats and blankets in the 52-degree temperature, gave an enthusiastic reception to the composition.

The symphony featured the second concert of the Berkshire Music Festival second series.

Stages—A Brazilian on Brazilian Composers



Drawn by Martha Burnham

Rehearsal sketch of Eleazar de Carvalho, who conducts the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood Sunday.

Mr. de Carvalho Discusses Creative Fellow Countrymen

By Eleazar de Carvalho

Brazilian composers first concentrated on investing their works with a definitely Brazilian character after the First World War.

Music was composed by natives, however, from early times. The first known native-born composer—the Father of Brazilian Music—was Padre José Maurico Nunes Garcia. He was a contemporary of Beethoven. His mother was an African slave, his father a Portuguese. Never in Europe, he probably availed himself of European musical books. At any rate, his music resembles that of his predecessors and contemporaries, from Handel and Gluck to Haydn and Beethoven. In fact, the overture to his opera, "Zamira," bears striking similarities to Beethoven's "Coriolanus" Overture. At one time it was supposed that Padre Garcia had plagiarized "Coriolanus," but it was proved that Garcia's work was composed eight years earlier.

* * *

Antonio Carlos Gomes, (1339-1896) was the first Brazilian to write an opera capable of entering the world's repertoire and remaining there to this day. This was "Il Guarany." It was written in Milan, where Gomes was studying under a grant of the Brazilian emperor, Dom Pedro II, and was an immediate success when staged there at La Scala Theater in March, 1870. The following December, it was produced in Rio de Janeiro, under the composer's direction.

In treatment, "Il Guaranay" was a good Italian opera, as were Gomes' next four—which included "Lo Schiavo," written nine years later. But, unlike the others, "Il Guarany" and "Lo Schiavo" (The Slave) had Brazilian subjects—the Indians and their Portuguese overlords—for their libretti. There were Indian themes in the overture to "Il Guarany," and in the ballets of that work and "Lo Schiavo." Brazilian bird calls appear in a charming interlude in the latter.

Francisco Braga, (1868-1945) become a pupil of Massenet in counterpoint. He also traveled in Germany, where he heard Wagnerian opera. On his return to Rio in 1900, he exerted a valuable influence on Brazilian musical life. His opera, "Jypira," produced on his return, was very successful. For more than 40 years, he was professor of composition in the National School of Music. José Sequeira and I are among those who benefited by his sound technique and clarity of style.

* * *

As a conductor, Braga was our Father of Symphonic Music. In addition to writing our first symphonic compositions, he founded, and for 20 years conducted, the Symphonic Concert Society. This was the predecessor of the Brazilian Symphony Orchestra. He introduced us to the European orchestral repertoire, stimulating thus a reaction against the monopoly of opera, which had prevailed both in composition and performance. Famous European guest conductors—even the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra, under the conductorship of Richard Strauss—were brought to us by him.

Pupils who profited by the discipline of Braga, and have won fame as Nationalists, include Lorenzo Fernandez, and Assis Republicano, both born in 1897.

Villa-Lobos, born in Rio about 1881, is the Dean of our Nationalists. Although he studied in Paris, he had previously written much with strong Nationalist influence and highly individual style, and has continued to do so. He invents his own versions of all folk and concert forms, in endless profusion and variety. Essentially, his is a rhapsodic style.

Notable pupils of Villa-Lobos are Radames Gnattali (born 1906), Luiz Cosme (born 1908), and Claudio Santoro (born in 1919).

Camargo Guarnieri, born in 1907, is an ardent Nationalist who contrasts strikingly with Villa-Lobos. After attending the São Paulo Conservatory, he had thoroughgoing instruction in France from Charles Koechlin. Returning home in 1940, he established himself as a composer in modern idiom. He has a strong regard for form, yet the ability to achieve originality within it. Above all, he has infused his numerous works with pronounced National elements.

José Sequeira, born in 1907, is a leading exponent of Nationalism (we call it "Brasilidade," which might be translated as "Brazilianism"). His two "Nordestina" Suites resulted from an expedition to the northeast of Brazil, where he found folk music that was rich and varied, and free of European influence. Sequeira has analyzed and given precise definition to the folk forms. These definitions are accepted generally by Brazilian composers as the standard.

Bruno

Frances Yeend, soprano soloist in the Brahms Requiem with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Festival Chorus under the direction of Robert Shaw at the Berkshire Music Festival, Tanglewood, on Aug. 14.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, ILL.
Ill. State Journal and Register
AUG 8 - 1948

Boston Symphony To End Season

A.B.C. Network To Carry Program.

With the fourth and final broadcast on Tuesday over A.B.C. from the Berkshire Music festival, the Boston Symphony orchestra will conclude its 1947-1948 season. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will be on the podium for the all-Tschaikovsky program which will include the "Concerto No. 1 for Pianoforte in B Flat Minor" and the overture "1812." The broadcast will be heard at 8:30 p. m., over WCVS.

The season of A.B.C. broadcasts started last Oct. 14 in Boston. Since that time A.B.C. has presented the Boston Symphony orchestra in 18 out of town broadcasts originating in Providence, Cambridge, New Haven, Pittsburgh, Detroit, New London and Hartford, as well as from Symphony hall, Boston, the Boston "Pops" and the Esplanade concerts. There also was a special broadcast from New York arranged by Edward J. Noble to inaugurate the annual appeal of the Salvation Army.

In addition to Dr. Koussevitzky, who retires after the close of next season, his 25th with the orchestra, the podium has been occupied by Charles Muench, French conductor who will succeed him, Leonard Berstein, American composer-conductor, and Eleazar de Carvalho, Brazilian conductor and Richard Burgin, Koussevitzky's associate conductor.

The season saw the world radio premieres of Malipiero's "Symphony No. 4," Walter Piston's "Symphony No. 3" and David Diamond's "Symphony No. 4." Special tribute was paid to Felix Mendelssohn on the 100th anniversary of his death. This was the 22nd season of broadcasts by the Boston Symphony orchestra.

This Clipping From OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.
OKLAHOMAN
[illegible]

Musicians Of Europe Aided

"TANGLEWOOD ON PARADE," the Boston Symphony orchestra and Berkshire Music center's benefit for assistance to musicians in Europe presented the fountain scene from "Pelleas and Melisande," played appropriately enough at a fountain, and an excerpt from "Don Giovanni" was added to Menotti's "The Telephone," which was sung in its entirety in the gardens at Tanglewood on Tuesday. The event inaugurated a nation-wide campaign to help unblock creative talent abroad.

For the opera department's contribution to the simultaneous demonstration of all departments of the Berkshire Music center, Boris Goldovsky selected acts I and IV of "La Boheme" and act II of "The Marriage of Figaro."

The Music Shed presented the Student orchestra under student conductors playing Beethoven's "Coriolanus" Overture, the Chorale and Toccata from William Schuman's Symphony No. 3 and the first movement of Rachmaninoff's Second Concerto. Three dances were also given from Leonard Bernstein's ballet "Fancy Free."

Reminiscent of the great last act of "Die Meistersinger" was the parade of the students which immediately preceded the demonstrations. Like the guilds in Wagner's great music drama, the 462 boys and girls from 42 states and 15 foreign countries marched by departments carrying banners and led by a band. There were performances of orchestra, choral and chamber music as well as opera. It would require no less than four visits to Tanglewood to see and hear what went on there on Tuesday within the period of an hour.

Supper on the lawn followed the hour-long demonstrations. The manifestation in the Music Shed brought the appearances by Cornelia Otis Skinner, Archibald MacLeish, Aaron Copland, and other important figures in letters and arts.

This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CAL.
TIMES
AUG 8 1948

Vaughan Williams' Sixth Symphony, in E Minor, was scheduled to have its American premiere by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky in Tanglewood yesterday. It probably will also be played by the New York Philharmonic next season with Leopold Stokowski conducting. At the recent first performance in London Ernest Newman, music critic of the Sunday Times, wrote: "It is clear already that here we have a new Vaughan Williams. Superficially it links up in mood with the vehement fourth, now with the mysticism of certain others of his works. But it would be a mistake to regard the No. 6 as merely a retraveling, even a superior retraveling, of the old routes. It reveals a new order of ideas and a new logic in handling them."

This Clipping From
BATON ROUGE, LA.
ADVOCATE
AUG 8 1948

Berkshire Music Festival

With the fourth and final broadcast on Tuesday, Aug. 10, over ABC and WLCS from the Berkshire Music Festival, the Boston Symphony orchestra will conclude its 1947-1948 season. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will be on the podium for the all-Tschaikovsky program which will include the "Concerto No. 1 for Pianoforte in B-Flat Minor" and the overture "1812." The broadcast will be heard at 8:30 p. m., CDT.

This Clipping From PORTLAND, ORE.
OREGONIAN
AUG 8 1948

Tanglewood Fete Draws

BY DOROTHY D. RYAN
Exclusive Dispatch to The Oregonian

NEW YORK, Aug. 7 (Special)—Beautiful weather and the superb playing of the Boston Symphony orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky's "incandescent" leadership, brought record crowds to the opening concerts of the 14th annual Berkshire music festival at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass.

Moonlit, starlit nights contributed to the pleasure of the large audiences who filled the 6000 seats in the specially designed music shed at last week end's concerts, and sat or reclined on the lawns beyond.

Concert Interest Grows

Interest in these concerts has been growing yearly, and music lovers who come from long distances are rewarded with superlative programs, interpreted and heard under ideal conditions. Even before the main festival opened, there was lively interest this season in the preliminary programs presented by student orchestras and young conductors.

Several modern scores of unusual interest are being presented on three successive week ends. The American premiere of Vaughan Williams' new sixth symphony was a feature of Saturday's program, which included also Prokofieff's Romeo and Juliet, suite No. 2, and Strauss' Don Quixote. Soloist was Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist.

"Tanglewood" Added

"Tanglewood on Parade," a benefit for creative musicians of Europe, was an added attraction this past week, with a long and varied program including a performance of Menotti's opera, "The Telephone," a reading by Cornelia Otis Skinner of two Elizabethan sonnets, and a special orchestral program conducted by Dr. Koussevitsky.

Leonard Bernstein and Darius Milhaud were the conductors at last Sunday afternoon's concert, which was devoted to Milhaud's Symphony No. 2, and Mahler's "Resurrection" Symphony.

At Tanglewood

Sixth Symphony of Vaughan Williams Has U. S. Debut

By Francis D. Perkins

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 8.—The sixth symphony of Ralph Vaughan Williams, dean of English composers, had its first American performance in last night's Berkshire Festival Concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky's direction in Tanglewood music shed. In this afternoon's concert under Eleazar de Carvalho's conductorship, two Brazilian works were introduced to Tanglewood, "Madona," a symphonic poem by Heitor Villa-Lobos, played for the first time in public, and three sections—congo, toada and coco—from Jose Siquiera's Nordestina's suite.

Dr. Koussevitzky opened yesterday's program with four parts of Serge Prokofieff's second Romeo and Juliet suite, and Richard Strauss's "Don Quixote," with Gregor Piatigorsky as solo cellist, followed the intermission. Besides the two works by his compatriots, Mr. De Carvalho also presented Berlioz's Fantastic symphony and Manuel De Falla's suite "El Amor Brujo" with Carol Brice as the singer in the afternoon concert.

The Vaughan Williams symphony is a remarkable work for a composer in his mid-seventies, but it is also noteworthy on its own account. Quite often when a composer is still active when well along in years he is likely to rework ideas and material of earlier compositions rather than to show a freshness of approach and an avoidance of retrospective summarizing. There is no impression of reworking or reminiscence, however, in this noteworthy symphony, which is a work of today rather than an echo of yesterday, the work of a composer whose style remains his own but has not become fixed and invariable; the atmosphere of the music is of today.

He began the symphony before the end of the war, and an English commentator says that the work first states what the composer felt about the war and then meditates upon an ideal peace, with the agitated vigor of the first of the four connected movements, the plangency of the second, the turbulence of the third and the almost remote calm of the fourth. This interpretation is certainly admissible, but not necessary for an understanding of the music from an emotional point of view.

In harmonic and orchestral color the first three movements are more in the vein of Vaughan Williams fourth symphony, the most advanced of his previous works, than of the fifth. The scoring is often full, but not so as to give a sense of excessive and confused sonorities.

An occasional impression in the first three movements of weight in the brass choir can be ascribed to acoustic conditions in the forward rows of the music shed. At the end of the first movement an earlier theme becomes a broad melody of a model flavor, and here there is a note of outspoken confidence, contrasted with the expressive stress which precedes and follows.

In the finale all is different. Here there is the utmost delicacy of scoring, dominated by the higher strings, with lower registers and other choirs apparent only in the background as the prevailing idea is drawn out and meditated upon. This occupies twelve of the symphony's thirty-six minutes, and one can wonder whether the movement is spun out too long. At the same time, one can be impressed by its mood, which can suggest that the composer, having contemplated present times and circumstances, has now entered a world of his own thoughts and visions. At a first hearing, the symphony seems a strong and consequential work, while more likely to meet a varied reception than unanimous approval.

The performance under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction was eloquent and revealing, and, as expected, the interpretation of "Don Quixote" by Mr. Piatigorsky and the orchestra deserved high praise.

Mr. De Carvalho conducted student concerts in Tanglewood last summer and was a guest conductor of the Boston Symphony in Boston last season, but this was his first appearance in a regular Berkshire festival concert.

Mr. De Carvalho's conducting gave a general impression of significant talent and promise, especially in the two Brazilian works and in the De Falla suite, projected with pervasive spirit, vividness of color and communicativeness of the varied range of moods in the music in interpretations of convincing national flavor. In the Fantastic Symphony the young Brazilian conductor was at his best when the music was energetic and outspoken; there were climaxes of notable intensity in the first movement, but less expressive penetration in the introduction and at times in softer episodes later, while the second movement needed a lighter, more buoyant treatment. But the scene in the fields was persuasively performed, and the finale was played with interpretative understanding and vitality.

Villa-Lobos's "Madona" was composed in 1945 for the Koussevitzky Music Foundation. The composer has not enlarged upon the purport of his title, but the character of the music suggests a Brazilian subject. It's twelve-minute course is occupied by a brooding introduction, a lively dance of indigenous rhythms and a series of episodes of varying expressive color, scored in pronounced and effective orchestral hues. Jose Siquiera's Nordestina Suite is based on folk music from northeastern Brazil; the three dances offered were skilfully scored to project their essential folk quality.

Miss Brice's voice is well suited to the music of the De Falla suite and the locale and emotions of its subject, and the warmth and emotional sincerity of her singing matched the unusual expressive insight displayed by the conductor in this work. The two concerts had nearly equal attendance—9,700 on Saturday and 9,800 today.

Leonard Bernstein will conduct next Thursday night's festival concert. Saturday night there will be two choral works—De Bussey's "Blessed Damozel" and Brahms's "Requiem," with Robert Shaw conducting, and Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the closing concert next Sunday afternoon.

In the season's last orchestral student concert next Friday night Seymour Lipkin will conduct a new work for English horn and strings by Robert Kurka, a pupil of Darius Milhaud, composed in memory of the late Mrs. Andrew H. Hepburn, donor of the Tanglewood estate to the Boston Symphony.

In a cello recital Saturday afternoon Mr. Piatigorsky will give the first performance of a sonata composed by Paul Hindemith last spring.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN

AUG 8 - 1948

MUSIC

By Miles Kastendieck

CONTEMPORARY music is having its innings at the Berkshire Festival this year. By the time the nine concerts of the three big week-ends are over, living composers will have out-numbered dead composers by two. To say the Festival is very much alive this year simply recognizes that Koussevitzky has stressed modern music more than usual.

That this focus of attention on the living composers means anything in the way of policy has not been disclosed. The Berkshire Festivals in the past have given little indication that an overall policy directed their course.

The upshot of the programs culminated in the conclusion that the music heard at Tanglewood was little different from the programs heard in New York during the Winter season.

This year some kind of aim appears to lurk in the background. Perhaps it is the beginning of a definite policy.

4 Composers Living

IN THE first series last weekend four of the eight composers were living. Their music had all been heard, some of it in New York, but not often. To stabilize a hearing of Hindemith, Prokofieff, Piston and Milhaud were Beethoven's Fifth Symphony and Brahms's First. They have been heard almost too often. By way of novelty there was Mahler's Second Symphony, a most welcome inclusion.

This weekend the living composers outnumber the dead two to one. In the program last night all three were living. That such should be the case is unusual in these days of hidebound program-making for orchestral concerts.

A glance at the works performed in this second series is rewarding: Stravinsky's "Oedipus Rex", the American premiere of Vaughan Williams' Sixth Symphony, Villa Lobos "Madona", and Siqueira's "Nordestina". To hear these in a single weekend means a great deal to inveterate music lovers. It will undoubtedly be illuminating to average music lovers. As an opportunity it is indeed rare.

To Honor Dead

NEXT weekend the balance favors the dead composer. The moderns included form that interesting combination beginning with the letter "S": Stravinsky, Shostakovich and Sibelius. None of their music will warrant any hissing; in fact it will be enthusiastically received.

Perhaps the worm has turned. The generous showing of contemporary composers did not deter audiences from attending in large numbers last weekend. Some of the people may not have liked all that they heard, but most would acknowledge that it was well worth hearing.

The point has always been getting acquainted with this new music. People will hear more contemporary music in this Festival than they have heard in any one of the other ten.

This year's Festival has made a great contribution to the "cause".

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

AUG 8 - 1948

Brazilian Conductor Excels In Colorful Performance

Eleazar de Carvalho Brilliant in Presentation of 'Fantastic Symphony,' by Berlioz; Carol Brice Pleases In De Falla Suite

By W. HARLEY RUDKIN

A large and flamboyant reading of large and flamboyant music caught the imagination of yesterday afternoon's capacity audience at the Berkshire Music Festival, and if there was any disappointment in the Boston Symphony's presentation of the Berlioz "Fantastic Symphony" it was inherent within the music itself, and not the fault of the musicians.

The "Fantastic Symphony" is a battle between rainbows, flashing through all the prismatic changes of a kaleidoscopic imagination. It is utterly and completely mad. For some reason, it never reaches any point of true hilarity, and the nearest touch to laughter is a sort of macabre off-key giggle that produces nervous tension, but no merriment.

Written in five movements, the symphony was created by a man who placed all his colors and all his powers on one canvas, and Eleazar de Carvalho, who conducted yesterday afternoon, produced every single one of them in an exquisite performance that brought the crowd up standing.

There may be depth to the Berlioz work, but the listener is never permitted to get far enough beneath the roiling surface waters to perceive it. The entire symphony could have been a gigantic hoax, perpetrated on a musical time that was not ready to either accept or rationalize its qualities, for when it burst on the world in 1830 there had been nothing to compare it with. It stood alone then, a monument to a monumental imagination, and the passing of the years has done nothing to dim its strange, individual lustre.

De Carvalho Excellent

This is the first time that this reviewer has been privileged to watch the Brazilian conductor at work, and I hope it will not be the last. He is smooth, facile; works with a minimum of effort and produces a maximum of effect. "The Fantastic Symphony," which covers a wide range of improbables, moves from the cloying sweetness of the traditional waltz to the verge of unexplored dissonance. It needs sharp, clear handling, and that is what De Carvalho gave it.

The rest of the program, even with the intervention of an intermission, could have been pallid by comparison were it not for the same musicianly qualities of the conductor, and the rich bell-like quality of the contralto of Carol Brice, who sang the solo passages in De Falla's suite from "El Amor Brujo."

The second half of the program opened with "Madona," a symphonic poem written for the Koussevitzky Music Foundation by Villa-Lobos, and closed with three selections from the Suite, "Nordestina," by Siqueira.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

AUG 8 - 1948

At Tanglewood

'Song of Songs' Conducted by Its Composer, Lukas Foss

By Francis D. Perkins

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 7.—A new English work, Ralph Vaughan Williams's sixth symphony, had its first American performance in tonight's Berkshire festival concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky's direction in the music shed at Tanglewood. The program began with the second suite from Serge Prokofieff's ballet "Romeo and Juliet."

Prokofieff at fifty-seven is the youngest of the three living composers represented in this program; Vaughan Williams is seventy-five and Richard Strauss, whose "Don Quixote" followed the intermission, is eighty-four. In "Don Quixote" Gregory Piatigorsky's solo cello represented the Don, and Joseph de Pasquale played the solo viola.

Critical comments on the new Vaughan Williams symphony must wait until tomorrow. It was first played in London last April with Sir Adrian Boult conducting and won praise from English critics, whose remarks suggested that the dean of English symphonists has lost none of his inspiration and powers for musical creation.

There was no formal festival concert last night, but an audience of more than 3,000 heard a program in the music shed by the Berkshire Music Center's Department II Orchestra, composed of advanced students.

Lukas Foss, already well known in New York as a composer and pianist, appeared here in a third role, conducting his "Song of Songs" with Phyllis Curtin as the soprano soloist. Seymour Lipkin, the Rachmaninoff Fund prize winner who plays the solo in Tchaikovsky's first piano concerto next Tuesday, conducted Weber's "Euryanthe" overture. Erling Bengtsson, a sixteen-year-old Dane, was soloist in Haydn's concerto, with Howard Shanet conducting, and Irwin Hoffman conducted the orchestra in Debussy's "La Mer."

The "Song of Songs" with a Biblical text was introduced to New York by Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony two seasons ago, when Ellabelle Davis was the singer. On a rehearsing, it impressed as well constructed music, in the skillful use of orchestral colors and the combination of the vocal solo with the instrumental ensemble. The melodic ideas are also appealing. It suggested, however, that Mr. Foss, one of our most talented musicians, has not yet fully realized individuality of style. It also seemed that the composer, while at home on the podium, did not realize all the resources of his own music, judging by memories of a Carnegie Hall performance of this work.

Miss Curtin, who sang last season with Boris Goldovsky's New England Opera Company, has a pleasing voice; the quality was prevalently clear and the production marked by musicianship. But in the first two sections her voice seemed too light for the spacious music shed. In the third section there was more volume and, with lighter scoring, the voice floated over the instrumental sounds effectively. There was a commendable degree of expressiveness, but more pronounced color and more sensuousness would have been valuable.

No more tickets can be obtained for Monday's and Wednesday's performances of Rossini's "The Turk in Italy" by the center's opera department, since the demand by members of the friends of the Berkshire Music Center has been well in excess of the Tanglewood Theater's capacity.

This Clipping From CINCINNATI, O.
ENQUIRER

AUG 8 - 1948

Of interest to Cincinnatians are Dr. Johnson's invitations next summer to join the staff of the Tanglewood Festival with Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to head a summer music camp at Lawrence, Kans., and to assist as a trustee of the Transylvania Music Center at Brevard in his home state of North Carolina. The Cincinnati conductor also will continue his activities with the California summer festival at Ojai Valley.

Of more immediate concern are the CSO programs which, among other things, will take cognizance of the centennial observance of Swiss independence, as well as the hundredth anniversary of the death of the German composer, Carl Otto Nicolai. The concerts also will introduce the music of new composers—the Norwegian, Harald Saeverud; the Americans, Franz Waxman and Cecil Effinger, and 7th century Italian, Girolamo Frescobaldi, whose name has never appeared on CSO programs.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
AUG 8 - 1948

MUSIC ON THE RADIO

By B. H. HAGGIN

A. B. C.'s transmission of the second ~~Boston~~ Symphony broadcast from Tanglewood on July 27 suffered from the same distortion as the first; periodically the sound changed from clear to scrambled and back to clear. Placed about an hour from Boston I get the broadcasts from WLAW in Lawrence, which brings me the A. B. C. Symphony on Saturday afternoon and other programs without the slightest distortion of any kind.

In addition the occasion was one of those when the performance had begun before the scheduled time of the broadcast; and so for radio listeners Bach's Concerto in D minor for three claviers began with its second movement. And this is the point at which to mention another technical defect in the broadcast; even when the sound was not distorted the microphone-placement made it almost impossible to hear the orchestra when the pianos were in action.

Not that it mattered very much; since these were among the most incompetent—even though wildly applauded—performances in my recent experience. If understanding of the music was more than one might expect them to show, adequate preparation certainly was the least. And if the Bach concertos for three claviers are works that Koussevitzky hasn't conducted the orchestra in much, if at all, the Suite in B minor for flute and strings is a standard piece that he has played and recorded; and one wouldn't expect to be aware, all of a sudden, that the solo flute and the orchestra had lost each other in the second slow section of the overture, and to hear them continue this way for several measures before they made contact again. Or even to hear their unprecise playing together when they were in the same place at the same time.

* * *

Placed, as I have said, an hour from Boston, I am able to experience at first hand what people have been writing me about the new time of the N. B. C. Symphony broadcasts. WBZ in Boston rebroadcasts a recording at 11:30 Saturday night, and by that time I have usually been too tired to care much about listening to music. But duty got me to the radio on July 17, when Alexander Hilsberg conducted the orchestra in Berlioz's "Roman Carnival" Overture and Tchaikovsky's Fifth Symphony. At that late hour, for one thing, it was impossible to set the volume sufficiently high for the performances to come through with any effectiveness. And in the middle of the first movement of the symphony there was a momentary break in continuity caused either by the needle jumping a groove on the record or by a patching together of two records. That was as much as I listened to.

* * *

On WQXR today at 6 there are quartets by Schubert and Mozart, at 11 Beethoven's Cello Sonata in D. On WJZ-A. B. C. next Saturday at 3:30 there is an American program from Colorado College Summer School. And that night at 8 WNYC has a two-hour Schubert program.

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
AUG 8 - 1948

Music

FREEDOM VITAL, COMPOSER SAYS

By RAYMOND MORIN

LENOX, Sunday—"If I were to talk with Joseph Stalin, I would say to him: You have to give an artist the right to be wrong because he learns from his mistakes."

AARON COPLAND

This is what Aaron Copland, America's most famous living composer of serious music, told me at Tanglewood.

Mr. Copeland went on to explain that he believes Stalin has every right to inform the Russian composers, from a political point of view, what the Russian people should hear, but that the composer himself should have complete freedom of self-expression.

A composer doesn't write what he is supposed to — he writes what he has to," said Mr. Copland.

Genial Person

The composer of several symphonies, a piano concerto and sonata "El Salon Mexico," tone-poems, and much more, is a genial person. He has a ready and infectious smile, and is direct in expressing his views. He is assistant to Serge Koussevitzky of the Berkshire Music Center. He and Darius Milhaud direct the composition department.

Asked if he were composing at Tanglewood, he replied that it is impossible because of his heavy duties and lack of leisure. Mr. Copland says he is not the stick-to-it-at-a-sitting-until-it-is-finished type of composer. He works as the spirit moves, does correcting until the work is finished, and once it is completed he leaves it alone and doesn't change his mind.

At present he has a new work three-quarters completed—a concerto for clarinet and orchestra, commissioned by, and to be played by Benny Goodman.

Shares Pastor's View

When I interviewed Walter Piston a few weeks ago, he declared that it doesn't matter much what the critics have to say about a composer's music. He goes on writing in his adopted style.

Essentially, Mr. Copland shares the same view. He reads with interest what is written about his music because, as he explains it —"I want to know what people are being told about my music.

It is purely a utilitarian point of view, I know, but people are influenced by what they read."

He also takes into account the qualifications of the individual critic, feeling that a "sense of involvement" is the critic's first requisits.

Lauds Late Critic

In clarify this point Mr. Copland spoke in glowing terms of H. T. Parker, late critic of the Boston Transcript. "I know that he had a limited academic knowledge of music," said Mr. Copland, "but he had a sensitivity for values. He could sense when a work was too long, or whatever qualities it lacked."

This ability to "feel the essence of music" is the important thing to Mr. Copland and explains why the response of the layman, in a sense; is equally important as that of the professional musician. It is a gift that doesn't depend entirely upon academic training.

On the other hand, Mr. Copland spoke of many trained musicians who are unable to recognize the merits of an unknown piece of music.

Speaks of Contemporaries

Speaking of his contemporaries, and of Arnold Schoenberg in particular, Mr. Copland said: "You must remember that some composers write for a small public. For example, Schoenberg developed his style (twelve tone system) beginning with Wagner. If most of the audience that hears his music is still at Wagner's level, there is no reason for Schoenberg to alter his style to conform with it. It is the same principle as certain books being written for a small reading public."

At the time of the interview, strains could be heard from the Shed of Leonard Bernstein's rehearsal with the Boston Symphony of Mahler's "Second Symphony (Resurrection), so it seemed apropos to ask Mr. Copland's opinion of the young American composer-conductor-pianist.

"I don't know that I can add anything that has not already been said." Mr. Copland declared. "However, I would say that American composition needs conductors like Bernstein. He was born near Boston and spent his youth in the midst of the modern idiom, even jazz. He can infuse other American composers' works with a true spirit."

'What about his interpretations of Haydn," I asked.

Listens Like Anyone

"It doesn't make his Haydn any worse," he replied. "I can't say just how Haydn would be interpreted by someone from Esterhazy." Mr. Copland was referring to the estate where Haydn lived and where he did most of his writing.

It interested me to know in what spirit Mr. Copland listens to the music of his contemporaries.

"I listen to it as anyone else," he admitted, "I suppose I can express my reasons for liking it or not easier than most, but I don't listen to it analytically."

Mr. Copland was born in Brooklyn 47 years ago. His family name was originally Kaplan. When his father arrived from Russia in England, the immigration officials supplied him with an impromptu spelling of his name, as it sounded to them.

It has been Copland ever since

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
AUG 8 - 1948

NEW WORK PLAYED AT TANGLEWOOD

By RAYMOND MORIN

LENOX, Sunday—Last night's concert at Tanglewood, the second concert of Series B at the Berkshire Music Festival, was distinguished by the first performance in America of Ralph Vaughan Williams' Symphony No. 6, played by Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony. The concert drew 9700.

The program also ~~included~~ Prokofieff's "Romeo and Juliet," ballet, Second Suite, Opus 64, and "Don Quixote," fantastic variations on a theme of knightly character, Opus 35, by Richard Strauss.

Bid for Spotlight

Any first American performance is destined to bid for the spotlight. Vaughan Williams new work did not fully merit that prominence. By no means did it measure up to the other two works that accompanied it—nor am I suggesting that it was a dud.

The English composer is in his seventies, but there is no evidence in his new symphony of an emotional depreciation nor was it technically slipshod. Incidentally, it was played for the first time in London last April 21 under the direction of Sir Adrian Boult.

Idea Repetition

The Symphony No. 6 has an underlying motive. It was begun before the conclusion of the last war, and begins ("allegro" movement) with strong statements that are curiously enough in this age of dissonance, plausible to the ear.

While it is not a work that is harmonically or structurally irritating, it is handicapped by idea repetition, shallowness of materials, and climaxes that try to arrive but somehow shy from their completion.

Brief Crescendos

For examples, it employs brief crescendos from quiet violin passages to heavy timpani attacks, with frequency but not dissimilarly. The second movement has a brief figure repeated through a long episode by brasses; at first they are effective but give way to monotony. The "scherzo" moves about a great deal, keeping full orchestra very busy, but again the repetition element pervades its entirety. The final "epilogue" is a beautiful study in intonation but to me, at least, lacking in vitality.

It is clear that as the work progresses it strives to find an inward peace into which one might almost read a wishfulness. It doesn't strain to decipher purposes and its aim is obviously one of friendly sounds and pleasantness, with the exclusion of the first movement. Even here one finds strong statements without strategy or radicalism of technic.

It has been interesting to observe Vaughan Williams' development from the revolutionary trend of his Fourth Symphony to the hopeful expression of spiritual peace in the Fifth and now a philosophic approach in the last.

Without resorting to artificial methods Vaughan Williams has given us a philosophic work beneath which there is an obvious element of sincerity. It is entirely possible that successive hearings will supplement what this reviewer felt were material defects with underlying profundity of thought. In any event it should prove a lesson to contemporaries who write from the head instead of the heart.

To Meet Deadline

As is customary on Saturday nights, we had to by pass the post-intermission program to meet a pressing deadline. In this instance it was the Strauss work. We did, however, hear the Prokofieff.

We are constantly impressed with results obtained by Dr. Koussevitzky with an economy, or should I say, a minimum of motion? The Prokofieff was a work in question. Whereas a number of younger conductors might have approached it with athleticism, Dr. Koussevitzky directed it as a musician rather than a baton virtuoso.

Juliet Motive

Of the seven sections, only four were played—Numbers 1, 2, 4, and 7. The main part of the first movement "Montagues and Capulets," was a graphic description of the stuffy old gentleman, with a delightfully lightsome "trio" for the Juliet motive.

The successive movements, portraying Juliet's emotional development, the rapid minuet at Capulet's ball, and the tragic scene at Juliet's grave were engrossingly narrated. During this festival there have been technical defects from the orchestra (notably in the winds) but there were very few in last night's Prokofieff. Every desk, particularly the horns, responded with well night perfect playing.

Tanglewood Debut

This afternoon, Eleazar de Carvalho will make his ~~Tanglewood debut~~ with the Boston Symphony. The Brazilian conductor has heretofore confined his efforts to the student orchestra. He will present a program of French, Spanish, and South American music. Carol Brice, mezzo soprano, will be heard in De Falla's "El Amor Brujo."

This Clipping From DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS
AUG 8 1948

THE MUSICAL DIGEST

By ERIC CLAUDIN

TANGLEWOOD, Mass.: A highlight of the final week of the Berkshire Festival will be the final concert Sunday, Aug. 15, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky. The program will include Beethoven's Symphony No. 3 ("Eroica") and the Sibelius Symphony in D Major, No. 2. During the coming week, the Festival will present the first performance in America for more than a hundred years of Rossini's "The Turk in Italy," in addition to performances of Debussys "The Blessed Damozel" and Brahms' Requiem, both directed by Robert Shaw.

CHICAGO: Pierre Monteux, conductor of the San Francisco Symphony Orchestra, will close the Ravinia series with a final program Sunday including the Overture to "Rienzi" by Wagner, Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 5, the suite from Stravinsky's "The Firebird" and a suite from Strauss' 'Der Rosenkavalier." The Budapest String Quartet will also perform its final post-season concert on the afternoon of Aug. 15.

WASHINGTON, D.C.: The Lyric Opera Association, which states that it is primarily interested in the recognition of unusually gifted young American singers, is currently presenting an opera festival at the Watergate. Eight operas will be presented, beginning with "Aida." Among those appearing are Florence Kirk, Bruno Landi, Frederick Jagel, Robert Weede and Francesco Valentino.

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo.: Six compositions by American composers, all of which will receive their first radio performances, will be presented by the Colorado College String Symphonia over ABC on Saturday Aug. 14, at 2:30 p.m. CDT. Three of the composers studied with Dr. Roy Harris, composer in residence at Colorado College, who will conduct. The program also lists the conductor's own "Chorale." Other works will include Robert Evett's "Prelude and Fugue for Violins," Reuel Lahmer's "Concerto Grosso," Cecil Effinger's "Pastorale for Oboe and Orchestra," John Vincent's "Recitative and Dance" and Peter Mennin's "Fantasia for Strings."

Two New Symphonies Prove Worthy Contemporary Music

Works by Walter Piston and Darius Milhaud Heard On Recent Tanglewood Programs, as Well as Stravinsky's 'Oedipus Rex' and Mahler's 'Resurrection'

By VICTOR PRAHL

The rarely-sung opera-oratorio "Oedipus Rex" by Igor Stravinsky was performed at Tanglewood on Thursday night. Although composed some 20 years ago, it was probably a first hearing for most of the audience. This classic tragedy cast in a Latin text was not as austere as one might expect. Wesley Addy told the story in dignified, clearly understood English and the music, genuinely gripping in its dramatic intensity, spoke for itself. As usual with Stravinsky, the musical unfoldment was highly personal but in this case not without evident influences.

Carol Brice Thrills

In the more sustained male choruses one thought of the Russian church, at other times of "Boris Godounow," and parts of Jocasta's aria smacked of Italian opera. It was, however, consistently coherent in deliniation, the music at all times reinforcing the underlying drama of the tragic tale. It was a superb performance. David Lloyd's firm, clear tenor tones were convincing in the role of Oedipus, an unnamed tenor did well as the shepherd, James Pease was an effective Crean and as Jocasta, Carol Brice was simply magnificent. Singing her dramatic aria with its difficut intervals, from memory, she dominated the scene in a queenly manner, her gorgeous voice projecting a real thrill.

The male chorus, trained by Hugh Ross, sang with a full, virile, expressive tone, and as for the commanding hands of Dr. Koussevitzky, only superlatives are in order. The great conductor's performance of Beethoven's "Pastoral" which opened the program is too well known to require comment, but it did sound exceptionally fresh. As is so often the case at Tanglewood, nature cooperated, not with an outright thunderstorm this time, but a steady, heavy downpour of rain.

Two new symphonies that turned out ot be worthwhile additions to contemporary orchestra literature were heard at previous concerts. The first was by an American, Walter Piston of Harvard University, and the second by a Frenchman, Darius Milhaud, who is teaching at the Berkshire Center this summer. Both works were commissions from the Koussevitzky Music Foundation.

The Piston work in four movements is the composer's third effort in this form. It is well constructed and of substantial musical content, frank enough in thematic statement to please the conservative and sufficiently modern in it orchestration to delight the more sophisticated. If applause is a barometer of a work's merit this symphony should become a popular item for it was loud and long, recalling the conductor and composer to the stage repeatedly.

Milhaud Symphony

The Milhaud "Symphony No. 2" is in the best French tradition. While each of its five short movements creates a different mood, as a whole it is essentially pastoral in character. Sweet, tender, sad and gay in turn, there is a subtle musical continuity in its freely moving lyricism. On the technical side there was an economy of instrumentation and the hand of the experienced master was evident in the utterance of every phrase. Both in idiom and form it was the most appealing work I have ever heard from this gifted composer. The fact that Mr. Milhaud is confined to his crutches did not prevent him from mounting the podium and conducting his symphony, the fine performance of which must have been as gratifying to him as it was to the most discriminating in the large audience.

Of all the hours in the day, 10 the morning seems to be the hour at which one's musical perception keenest. And one could hardly ask for more when the music is by Bach and the organist is E. Powers Biggs. All this and more too happened at Tanglewood on Sunday morning. There was sheer poetry in Mr. Biggs' playing of three contrasting choral preludes and the grander aspects of the master were explored in scholarly performances of three excerpts from "The Art of the Fugue," the Toccata in F and the great Passacaglia and Fugue in C minor.

Outstanding in the hour of chamber music that followed was the performance of Ernest Chausson's concerto for violin, piano and string quartet. The beauty of its ecstatic, soaring phrases cast a spell and held one in spite of practice sounds from other sheds, a noisy airplane and the collapse of several overcrowded wooden benches. Joseph Berbstein, violinist, and Eloise Matthies were the talented student soloists and credit goes to Jean Bedetti for the supervision of its efficient preparation.

The music of Gustav Mahler is a thing apart and needs a buildup, literary, mystical, or spiritual, to carry one over its long stretches of boredom. At other times, without any prop whatsoever, it hits below the belt musically and moves one to the point of tears. Such was the case Sunday afternoon with the composer's second symphony, "The Resurrection." In spite of program notes on its lofty theme of destiny, a superlatively fine performance, and some rewarding musical moments, the first four movements seemed overlong during which the seat became very hard.

Transcendent Climax

Then when the chorus started singing in the last movement, the heavens seem to open and one was completely transported with an overwhelming climax that was truly transcendent. The composer's inspiration alone was not responsible for this thrilling experience, but also Leonard Bernstein's masterly, understanding conducting, the realization of the mighty score on the part of the orchestra, Hugh Ross's finely trained chorus and the two gifted soloists, Nan Merriam and Ellabelle Davis. Mr. Bernstein and his colleagues received a prolonged ovation the like of which is usually reserved for Dr. Koussevitzky after the final concert of the season.

A goodly sum was raised for the worthy cause of the needy European musician at Tuesday's fete "Tanglewood on Parade." A brass band tooting away at "Stars and Stripes Forever" lead the parade followed by the entire student body under banners labelling the different departments After a few words of welcome from Dr. Koussevitzky, Boris Goldovsky told the audience to make a choice and follow their favorite banner and its students to the proper shed where performances were scheduled. Previous to this four-ring circus there were operatic scenes in the charming setting of the formal garden overlooking the lake and the distant hills.

The full day was climaxed by the evening gala in the big shed at which there was some fine speech-making. Dr. Koussevitzky must have been pleased with the many tributes paid him by Felix Frankfurter, Howard Hanson, Archibald MacLiesh and others as well as the warm response of the audience. He was in top form when he conducted the sweeping, breathtaking performance of Ravel's "La Valse" and obviously enjoyed with the audience "Peter and the Wolf" with the helpful dramatization of Wesley Addy.

In addition to performances of Rossini's opera "The Turk in Italy" performances for the final week of concerts are as follows:

This Afternoon at 3.30

(Eleazar de Carvalho Conducting)

Berlioz .. .. Fantastic Symphony
Villa-Lobos .... Madona..
de Falla (Carol Brice, soloist) El Amor Brujo
Siqueiro ...... "Nordestina" Suite No. 1

Tuesday at 8.15

(Tchaikowsky Program)

Symphony No. 6
Piano Concerto No. 1
(Seymour Lipkin, soloist)
1812 Overture ....

Thusday Evening at 8.15

(Leonard Bernstein Conducting)

Weber ... .. Overture to "Der Freischutz"
Stravinsky ...... "Petrouchka" (Complete)
Shostakovich .... Symphony No. 5

Saturday Evening at 8.15

(Robert Shaw Conducting)

Debussy .... The Blessed Damozel
Female chorus and soloists—Ellen Faull, soprano; Eunice Alberts, contralto.
Brahms .... Requiem
Chorus and soloists—Frances Yeend, soprano; James Pease, bass.

Sunday Afternoon at 3.30

Beethoven ...... Symphony No. 3 "Eroica"
Sibelius ...... Symphony in D Major, No. 2

CARVALHO LEADS ORCHESTRA TODAY AT TANGLEWOOD

Tchaikovsky Program Tuesday, Rossini Opera Tomorrow and Wednesday

Series B in the Boston Symphony concerts at the Berkshire Festival in Tanglewood will end today, with Eleazar de Carvalho, South American conductor, leading the orchestra in a program. Starting at 3.30. The Fantastic symphony by Hector Berlioz will be played first, followed by "Madonna," by the Brazilian Heitor-Villa-Lobos. Manuel de Falla's "El Amor Brujo," with Carol Brice as mezzo-soprano soloist, and "Nordestina" Suite No. 1 by Siqueira will conclude the program.

Opera Tomorrow

A highlight of the final week of the The cast for the first performance, in America for more than a 100 years of "The Turk in Italy" by Rossini, tomorrow and Wednesday evenings in the Theater-Concert Hall. Tickets have been issued to friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

SEYMOUR LIPKIN

The cst for the first performance, announced by Boris Goldovsky, head of the opera department at the Berkshire Music Center, includes June Gardner, soprano, Adele Addison, soprano, David Lloyd tenor, Marshall Heinbaugh baritone, Arthur Schoep baritone, and Francis Barnard, bass-baritone. On Wednesday evening principals will be Miss Gardner, Miss Addison, David Garen, Mr. Heinbaugh, Robert Goss and James Pease. Mr. Goldovsky will conduct both performances.

Two former students of Serge Koussevitzky will share the podium with him during the final days of the festival. De Carvalho will conduct tomorrow afternoon, and Thursday evening Leonard Bernstein will conduct the scherzo from Moussorgsky's "Night on Bald Mountain," the complete "Petrouchka" ballet of Stravinsky, and the Shostakovitch Symphony No. 5. For the all-Tchaikovsky program Tuesday evening Dr. Koussevitzky has chosen the symphony No. 6 "Pathetique," "1812 Overture," and the Piano Concerto No. 1 with Seymour Lipkin, winner of the 1948 Rachmaninoff Fund award, as soloist.

Enlisting the forces of the Festival Chorus of 250 voices Robert Shaw will be guest conductor with the orchestra Saturday evening, August 14, in a program made up of two choral works, "The Blessed Damozel" of Debussy and the Brahms "Requiem." For the finale to the festival Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct Symphony No. 3 ("Eroica") by Beethoven on Sunday afternoon, August 15, and the Sibelius Symphony in D major, No. 2.

FINAL TANGLEWOOD BROADCAST TUESDAY

With the fourth and final broadcast Tuesday over ABC from the Berkshire Music Festival, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will conclude its 1947-1948 season. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will be on the podium for the all-Tchsikovsky program which will include the "Concerto No. 1 for Pianoforte in B flat minor" and the overture "1812." The broadcast over Station WSPR will be heard at 9.30 p. m.

Aug 8 Post

TANGLEWOOD TALE

Critic's Visit to Berkshire Festival Leads to Conclusions Now Set Down Here

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

It took the Mahler Second, last Sunday, to persuade your correspondent to make Tanglewood a real visit, instead of arriving one day and returning the next, as has been his wont. Not only because of the glorious performance of that glorious score but also for the many other things that turned up, the extended stay in this beehive of musical activity was well worth while. At last I became a genuine Tanglewoodian, even to swims in the lake with the Music Centre students and the natatorially inclined Symphony men. This, I can assure you, is the life. No wonder the youngsters rave about it. Here both nature and man have put their best foot forward.

To give you an idea of what one can encounter at Tanglewood in the space of three days, here are some events that I attended, or looked in on, between July 29 and Aug. 1. An account of the opening concert of the Berkshire Festival appeared in these columns. Just to make the record complete, Dr. Koussevitzky conducted on that occasion Bach's Third Suite, Hindemith's "Mathis der Maler" and the Beethoven Fifth.

Bernstein Rehearses

The following morning, in the music shed, Leonard Bernstein rehearsed the Mahler. The feeling that a chorus of more than twice the size was not making the effect that the Harvard and Radcliffe singers made in the "Resurrection" at Symphony Hall last February was happily dispelled in the actual performance. The huge empty shed was the answer. Nan Merriman, the contralto, failed to arrive in time and Mr. Bernstein had to add the singing of her music to his other heroic exertions. The actual performance was an unqualified success, a triumph for the gifted young conductor, for the orchestra, playing above itself, for the festival chorus (as trained by Hugh Ross), for Miss Merriman and Ellabelle Davis, as the soloists—and for Mahler.

That evening the shed was the scene of a concert by the student orchestra, which in one wartime festival successfully replaced the Boston Symphony. Three student-conductors, pupils of Dr. Koussevitzky, led these talented young people through Mendelssohn's "Reformation" Symphony, Bach's Concerto for two violins, and the rambling Adagietto of Harold Shapero's Symphony for Classical Orchestra, which had its first performance here last season. They were Howard Shanet, Seymour Lipkin (who as pianist won the recent Rachmaninoff Fund award) and Irwin Hoffman. Eleazar de Carvalho, assistant to Dr. Koussevitzky, who conducted a pair of Symphony Concerts last season, then took over, and one sensed a new authority. Under him the student players gave a creditable performance of Strauss' "Thus Spake Zarathustra." This is a virtuoso piece of the highest order, and by report none of the musicians had any acquaintance with their parts when the rehearsals began four days earlier.

Dr. Koussevitzky

Saturday morning Dr. Koussevitzky rehearsed the evening's program: Piston's Third Symphony, Prokofieff's First Violin Concerto (Isaac Stern) and the Brahms First. These Saturday rehearsals are open to the public, at a dollar a head, and the proceeds go to the orchestra's pension fund. Dropping in that afternoon at the theatre-concert hall I heard Boris Goldovsky's department in a scene from Tchaikovsky's "Pique Dame," tritely sentimental stuff musically.

More to my liking was the last act of Gretchaninoff's "The Marriage," which was receiving Sunday morning its last going-over prior to its world premiere that evening, and with the 83-year-old composer in attendance. Gretchaninoff, who for the past few years has been living in New York, though he still hasn't mastered English, made this setting of Gogol's comedy in 1946-47. The excellent translation is the work of Mr. Goldovsky. There was no orchestra that morning, only a piano, but as already reported, the music proved both skillful and charming, and the singing-players admirable in their respective roles. Mr. Goldovsky is afraid that the American public wouldn't understand these caricatures of Russian types. But why not? We have no trouble with Chekhov.

The only thing I have overlooked in this summary is the curtain-raiser to the Mahler, Milhaud's Second Symphony. The distinguished French composer, now teaching at the Centre, conducted his work, as he did when it received its initial performance here in '46. A sufferer from arthritis, he was obliged, as before, to sit rather than stand, and he cannot walk without the aid of crutches. There was here an abundance of musical and personal interest. Nevertheless, the Mahler would have made a better effect if something shorter and less taxing had preceded it. In Symphony Hall, by the way, there was hardly space for the huge forces that the last-named requires.

This Clipping From
ROCHESTER, MINN.
POST BULLETIN
AUG 9 1948

Musical Shrine

The home of a man who had not the slightest interest in music has now become a musical shrine. This strange fate has come to Tanglewood, the western Massachusetts home of Nathaniel Hawthorne, who wrote there "The House of Seven Gables" and "Tanglewood Tales." For the last ten years it has been the headquarters of the Berkshire Festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the leadership of its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

Recently a reconstruction of Hawthorne's little red house was presented by the National Federation of Music Clubs to the orchestra to be used as a studio. Menning Hawthorne of North Woodstock, Conn., great-grandson of the writer, who was one of the speakers, referred to Nathaniel's indifference to music.

Even if Hawthorne was no music lover, he was a master craftsman in a kindred field, that of literature. Both lovers of literature and of music will applaud the generous action of the National Federation of Music Clubs, which insures the perpetual maintenance of one of America's notable literary shrines.

This Clipping From
NEW ORLEANS, LA.
TIMES-PICAYUNE
AUG 9 - 1948

FUND FOR EUROPE MUSICIANS RAISED

(Special to The Times-Picayune)

Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., Aug. 8.—A special event at the Berkshire Music Festival here raised $10,000 as the initial contribution to a fund for support of contemporary European musicians who have entered the musical scene since World War II.

The event, called "Tanglewood on Parade," featured prominent speakers and the music of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, the orchestra's conductor, used the event as a means of establishing a committee to raise the fund.

"It is hoped," Dr. Koussevitsky said, "that this particular period in the history of music will not be devoid of significant European composers, who, in the past, have been the principal contributors to classical music.

"The European composers who have matured since 1939 have not had reasonable opportunities for accomplishment, nor have they enjoyed the aid which Americans gave to the preceding generation of European composers."

Another speaker, Associate Justice Felix Frankfurter of the United States supreme court, asserted that "in music one finds a greater hope for one world than in all the political mechanisms." Other speakers included Archibald MacLeish, the poet and US representative to UNESCO, and Aaron Copland and Howard Hanson, composers.

]

Two New Symphonies Prove Worthy Contemporary Music

Works by Walter Piston and Darius Milhaud Heard On Recent Tanglewood Programs, as Well as Stravinsky's 'Oedipus Rex' and Mahler's 'Resurrection'

By VICTOR PRAHL

The rarely-sung opera-oratorio "Oedipus Rex" by Igor Stravinsky was performed at Tanglewood on Thursday night. Although composed some 20 years ago, it was probably a first hearing for most of the audience. This classic tragedy cast in a Latin text was not as austere as one might expect. Wesley Addy told the story in dignified, clearly understood English and the music, genuinely gripping in its dramatic intensity, spoke for itself. As usual with Stravinsky, the musical unfoldment was highly personal but in this case not without evident influences.

Carol Brice Thrills

In the more sustained male choruses one thought of the Russian church, at other times of "Boris Godounow," and parts of Jocasta's aria smacked of Italian opera. It was, however, consistently coherent in deliniation, the music at all times reinforcing the underlying drama of the tragic tale. It was a superb performance. David Lloyd's firm, clear tenor tones were convincing in the role of Oedipus, an unnamed tenor did well as the shepherd, James Pease was an effective Crean and as Jocasta, Carol Brice was simply magnificent. Singing her dramatic aria with its difficut intervals, from memory, she dominated the scene in a queenly manner, her gorgeous voice projecting a real thrill.

The male chorus, trained by Hugh Ross, sang with a full, virile, expressive tone, and as for the commanding hands of Dr. Koussevitzky, only superlatives are in order. The great conductor's performance of Beethoven's "Pastoral" which opened the program is too well known to require comment, but it did sound exceptionally fresh. As is so often the case at Tanglewood, nature cooperated, not with an outright thunderstorm this time, but a steady, heavy downpour of rain.

Two new symphonies that turned out ot be worthwhile additions to contemporary orchestra literature were heard at previous concerts. The first was by an American, Walter Piston of Harvard University, and the second by a Frenchman, Darius Milhaud, who is teaching at the Berkshire Center this summer. Both works were commissions from the Koussevitzky Music Foundation.

The Piston work in four movements is the composer's third effort in this form. It is well constructed and of substantial musical content, frank enough in thematic statement to please the conservative and sufficiently modern in it orchestration to delight the more sophisticated. If applause is a barometer of a work's merit this symphony should become a popular item for it was loud and long, recalling the conductor and composer to the stage repeatedly.

Milhaud Symphony

The Milhaud "Symphony No. 2" is in the best French tradition. While each of its five short movements creates a different mood, as a whole it is essentially pastoral in character. Sweet, tender, sad and gay in turn, there is a subtle musical continuity in its freely moving lyricism. On the technical side there was an economy of instrumentation and the hand of the experienced master was evident in the utterance of every phrase. Both in idiom and form it was the most appealing work I have ever heard from this gifted composer. The fact that Mr. Milhaud is confined to his crutches did not prevent him fro mounting the podium and conducti his symphony, the fine performan of which must have been as grati ing to him as it was to the mo discriminating in the large audien

Of all the hours in the day, 10 the morning seems to be the ho at which one's musical perception keenest. And one could hardly as for more when the music is by Bac and the organist is E. Powers Bigg All this and more too happened a Tanglewood on Sunday mornin There was sheer poetry in Mr. Bigg playing of three contrasting chora preludes and the grander aspects o the master were explored in scholarly performances of three excerpts from "The Art of the Fugue," the Toccata in F and the great Passacaglia and Fugue in C minor.

Outstanding in the hour of chamber music that followed was the performance of Ernest Chausson's concerto for violin, piano and string quartet. The beauty of its ecstatic, soaring phrases cast a spell and held one in spite of practice sounds from other sheds, a noisy airplane and the collapse of several overcrowded wooden benches. Joseph Berbstein, violinist, and Eloise Matthies were the talented student soloists and credit goes to Jean Bedetti for the supervision of its efficient preparation.

The music of Gustav Mahler is a thing apart and needs a buildup, literary, mystical, or spiritual, to carry one over its long stretches of boredom. At other times, without any prop whatsoever, it hits below the belt musically and moves one to the point of tears. Such was the case Sunday afternoon with the composer's second symphony, "The Resurrection." In spite of program notes on its lofty theme of destiny, a superlatively fine performance, and some rewarding musical moments, the first four movements seemed overlong during which the seat became very hard.

Transcendent Climax

Then when the chorus started singing in the last movement, the heavens seem to open and one was completely transported with an overwhelming climax that was truly transcendent. The composer's inspiration alone was not responsible for this thrilling experience, but also Leonard Bernstein's masterly, understanding conducting, the realization of the mighty score on the part of the orchestra, Hugh Ross's finely trained chorus and the two gifted soloists, Nan Merriam and Ellabelle Davis. Mr. Bernstein and his colleagues received a prolonged ovation the like of which is usually reserved for Dr. Koussevitzky after the final concert of the season.

A goodly sum was raised for the worthy cause of the needy European musician at Tuesday's fete "Tanglewood on Parade." A brass band tooting away at "Stars and Stripes Forever" lead the parade followed by the entire student body under banners labelling the different departments After a few words of welcome from Dr. Koussevitzky, Boris Goldovsky told the audience to make a choice and follow their favorite banner and its students to the proper shed where performances were scheduled. Previous to this four-ring circus there were operatic scenes in the charming setting of the formal garden overlooking the lake and the distant hills.

The full day was climaxed by the evening gala in the big shed at which there was some fine speech-making. Dr. Koussevitzky must have been pleased with the many tributes paid him by Felix Frankfurter, Howard Hanson, Archibald MacLiesh and others as well as the warm response of the audience. He was in top form when he conducted the sweeping, breathtaking performance of Ravel's "La Valse" and obviously enjoyed with the audience "Peter and the Wolf" with the helpful dramatization of Wesley Addy.

In addition to performances of Rossini's opera "The Turk in Italy" performances for the final week of concerts are as follows:

This Afternoon at 3.30

(Eleazar de Carvalho Conducting)

Berlioz ... ... Fantastic Symphony
Villa-Lobos .... Madona..
de Falla (Carol Brice, soloist) El Amor Brujo
Siqueiro ...... "Nordestina" Suite No. 1

Tuesday at 8.15

(Tchaikowsky Program)

Symphony No. 6
Piano Concerto No. 1
(Seymour Lipkin, soloist)
1812 Overture ....

Thusday Evening at 8.15

(Leonard Bernstein Conducting)

Weber ... .. Overture to "Der Freischutz"
Stravinsky ...... "Petrouchka" (Complete)
Shostakovich .... Symphony No. 5

Saturday Evening at 8.15

(Robert Shaw Conducting)

Debussy .... The Blessed Damozel
Female chorus and soloists—Ellen Faull, soprano; Eunice Alberts, contralto.
Brahms .... Requiem
Chorus and soloists—Frances Yeend, soprano; James Pease, bass.

Sunday Afternoon at 3.30

Beethoven ...... Symphony No. 3 "Eroica"
Sibelius ...... Symphony in D Major, No. 2

CARVALHO LEADS ORCHESTRA TODAY AT TANGLEWOOD

Tchaikovsky Program Tuesday, Rossini Opera Tomorrow and Wednesday

Series B in the Boston Symphony concerts at the Berkshire Festival in Tanglewood will end today, with Eleazar de Carvalho, South American conductor, leading the orchestra in a program. Starting at 3.30. The Fantastic symphony by Hector Berlioz will be played first, followed by "Madonna," by the Brazilian Heitor-Villa-Lobos. Manuel de Falla's "El Amor Brujo," with Carol Brice as mezzo-soprano soloist, and "Nordestina" Suite No. 1 by Siqueira will conclude the program.

Opera Tomorrow

A highlight of the final week of the The cast for the first performance, in America for more than a 100 years of "The Turk in Italy" by Rossini, tomorrow and Wednesday evenings in the Theater-Concert Hall. Tickets have been issued to friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

SEYMOUR LIPKIN

The cst for the first performance, announced by Boris Goldovsky, head of the opera department at the Berkshire Music Center, includes June Gardner, soprano, Adele Addison, soprano, David Lloyd tenor, Marshall Heinbaugh baritone, Arthur Schoep baritone, and Francis Barnard, bass-baritone. On Wednesday evening principals will be Miss Gardner, Miss Addison, David Garen, Mr. Heinbaugh, Robert Goss and James Pease. Mr. Goldovsky will conduct both performances.

Two former students of Serge Koussevitzky will share the podium with him during the final days of the festival. De Carvalho will conduct tomorrow afternoon, and Thursday evening Leonard Bernstein will conduct the scherzo from Moussorgsky's "Night on Bald Mountain," the complete "Petrouchka" ballet of Stravinsky, and the Shostakovitch Symphony No. 5. For the all-Tchaikovsky program Tuesday evening Dr. Koussevitzky has chosen the symphony No. 6 "Pathetique," "1812 Overture," and the Piano Concerto No. 1 with Seymour Lipkin, winner of the 1948 Rachmaninoff Fund award, as soloist.

Enlisting the forces of the Festival Chorus of 250 voices Robert Shaw will be guest conductor with the orchestra Saturday evening, August 14, in a program made up of two choral works, "The Blessed Damozel" of Debussy and the Brahms "Requiem." For the finale to the festival Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct Symphony No. 3 ("Eroica") by Beethoven on Sunday afternoon, August 15, and the Sibelius Symphony in D major, No. 2.

FINAL TANGLEWOOD BROADCAST TUESDAY

With the fourth and final broadcast Tuesday over ABC from the Berkshire Music Festival, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will conclude its 1947-1948 season. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will be on the podium for the all-Tchsikovsky program which will include the "Concerto No. 1 for Pianoforte in B flat minor" and the overture "1812." The broadcast over Station WSPR will be heard at 9.30 p. m.

Aug 8 Post

TANGLEWOOD TALE

Critic's Visit to Berkshire Festival Leads to Conclusions Now Set Down Here

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

It took the Mahler Second, last Sunday, to persuade your correspondent to make Tanglewood a real visit, instead of arriving one day and returning the next, as has been his wont. Not only because of the glorious performance of that glorious score but also for the many other things that turned up, the extended stay in this beehive of musical activity was well worth while. At last I became a genuine Tanglewoodian, even to swims in the lake with the Music Centre students and the natatorially inclined Symphony men. This, I can assure you, is the life. No wonder the youngsters rave about it. Here both nature and man have put their best foot forward.

To give you an idea of what one can encounter at Tanglewood in the space of three days, here are some events that I attended, or looked in on, between July 29 and Aug. 1. An account of the opening concert of the Berkshire Festival appeared in these columns. Just to make the record complete, Dr. Koussevitzky conducted on that occasion Bach's Third Suite, Hindemith's "Mathis der Maler" and the Beethoven Fifth.

Bernstein Rehearses

The following morning, in the music shed, Leonard Bernstein rehearsed the Mahler. The feeling that a chorus of more than twice the size was not making the effect that the Harvard and Radcliffe singers made in the "Resurrection" at Symphony Hall last February was happily dispelled in the actual performance. The huge empty shed was the answer. Nan Merriman, the contralto, failed to arrive in time and Mr. Bernstein had to add the singing of her music to his other heroic exertions. The actual performance was an unqualified success, a triumph for the gifted young conductor, for the orchestra, playing above itself, for the festival chorus (as trained by Hugh Ross), for Miss Merriman and Ellabelle Davis, as the soloists—and for Mahler.

That evening the shed was the scene of a concert by the student orchestra, which in one wartime festival successfully replaced the Boston Symphony. Three student-conductors, pupils of Dr. Koussevitzky, led these talented young people through Mendelssohn's "Reformation" Symphony, Bach's Concerto for two violins, and the rambling Adagietto of Harold Shapero's Symphony for Classical Orchestra, which had its first performance here last season. They were Howard Shanet, Seymour Lipkin (who as pianist won the recent Rachmaninoff Fund award) and Irwin Hoffman. Eleazar de Carvalho, assistant to Dr. Koussevitzky, who conducted a pair of Symphony Concerts last season, then took over, and one sensed a new authority. Under him the student players gave a creditable performance of Strauss' "Thus Spake Zarathustra." This is a virtuoso piece of the highest order, and by report none of the musicians had any acquaintance with their parts when the rehearsals began four days earlier.

Dr. Koussevitzky

Saturday morning Dr. Koussevitzky rehearsed the evening's program: Piston's Third Symphony, Prokofieff's First Violin Concerto (Isaac Stern) and the Brahms First. These Saturday rehearsals are open to the public, at a dollar a head, and the proceeds go to the orchestra's pension fund. Dropping in that afternoon at the theatre-concert hall I heard Boris Goldovsky's department in a scene from Tchaikovsky's "Pique Dame," tritely sentimental stuff musically.

More to my liking was the last act of Gretchaninoff's "The Marriage," which was receiving Sunday morning its last going-over prior to its world premiere that evening, and with the 83-year-old composer in attendance. Gretchaninoff, who for the past few years has been living in New York, though he still hasn't mastered English, made this setting of Gogol's comedy in 1946-47. The excellent translation is the work of Mr. Goldovsky. There was no orchestra that morning, only a piano, but as already reported, the music proved both skillful and charming, and the singing-players admirable in their respective roles. Mr. Goldovsky is afraid that the American public wouldn't understand these caricatures of Russian types. But why not? We have no trouble with Chekhov.

The only thing I have overlooked in this summary is the curtain-raiser to the Mahler, Milhaud's Second Symphony. The distinguished French composer, now teaching at the Centre, conducted his work, as he did when it received its initial performance here in '46. A sufferer from arthritis, he was obliged, as before, to sit rather than stand, and he cannot walk without the aid of crutches. There was here an abundance of musical and personal interest. Nevertheless, the Mahler would have made a better effect if something shorter and less taxing had preceded it. In Symphony Hall, by the way, there was hardly space for the huge forces that the last-named requires.

This Clipping From
ROCHESTER, MINN.
POST BULLETIN
AUG 9 1948

Musical Shrine

The home of a man who had not the slightest interest in music has now become a musical shrine. This strange fate has come to Tanglewood, the western Massachusetts home of Nathaniel Hawthorne, who wrote there "The House of Seven Gables" and "Tanglewood Tales." For the last ten years it has been the headquarters of the Berkshire Festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the leadership of its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

Recently a reconstruction of Hawthorne's little red house was presented by the National Federation of Music Clubs to the orchestra to be used as a studio. Menning Hawthorne of North Woodstock, Conn., great-grandson of the writer, who was one of the speakers, referred to Nathaniel's indifference to music.

Even if Hawthorne was no music lover, he was a master craftsman in a kindred field, that of literature. Both lovers of literature and of music will applaud the generous action of the National Federation of Music Clubs, which insures the perpetual maintenance of one of America's notable literary shrines.

This Clipping From
NEW ORLEANS, LA.
TIMES-PICAYUNE
AUG 9 - 1948

FUND FOR EUROPE MUSICIANS RAISED

(Special to The Times-Picayune)

Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., Aug. 8.—A special event at the Berkshire Music Festival here raised $10,000 as the initial contribution to a fund for support of contemporary European musicians who have entered the musical scene since World War II.

The event, called "Tanglewood on Parade," featured prominent speakers and the music of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, the orchestra's conductor, used the event as a means of establishing a committee to raise the fund.

"It is hoped," Dr. Koussevitsky said, "that this particular period in the history of music will not be devoid of significant European composers, who, in the past, have been the principal contributors to classical music.

"The European composers who have matured since 1939 have not had reasonable opportunities for accomplishment, nor have they enjoyed the aid which Americans gave to the preceding generation of European composers."

Another speaker, Associate Justice Felix Frankfurter of the United States supreme court, asserted that "in music one finds a greater hope for one world than in all the political mechanisms." Other speakers included Archibald MacLeish, the poet and US representative to UNESCO, and Aaron Copland and Howard Hanson, composers.

[249]

Peuple

UN PEU DE MUSIQUE...

Dimanche 8 aout 1948

(De notre correspondant à New-York, L. SEIGEL.)

New-York, 3 août. — A Washington, le Congrès ne fait pas grand-chose. Les candidats à la présidence n'en sont encore qu'aux premiers rounds : c'est au début de septembre que l'affaire battra son plein. Détournons-nous pour une fois de la politique. Le bel été nous invite à nous évader; que ce soit vers la musique.

Tanglewood, séjour estival du Boston Symphony Orchestra, est une thébaïde à la fois littéraire et musicale. C'est l'endroit où, il y a à peu près cent ans, Nathaniel Hawthorne a écrit ses « Tanglewood Tales ». C'est là qu'en ce moment a lieu le Berkshire Music Festival. Tanglewood s'étend sur quatre-vingt hectares dans les collines du Berkshire, à environ 200 kilomètres de New-York et de Boston (Massachusetts). Le parc s'enorgueillit de très beaux ormes, de splendides bouleaux et de sapins, sans adjectif français à ma disposition. La vue donne sur un lac, des surfaces de gazon et les montagnes de l'arrière-plan. Il est naturel que le festival ait lieu ici : outre sa beauté, Tanglewood a une ancienne tradition de culture, c'est comme le lieu de vacances de l'intelligentsia bostonienne.

Pendant cinq semaines, en juillet et août, Tanglewood est la Mecque musicale des Etats-Unis. Des voitures aux plaques de tous les Etats se croisent dans les immenses parcs; douze à quinze mille auditeurs, venus ici dans leur propre auto, c'est l'habituelle moyenne. Ils logent dans des campements ou dans les modestes pensions et villages d'alentour. Foule bariolée; on y trouve des gens du monde en tenue impeccable et toute une jeunesse en costume de sport et de camping. Beaucoup font la dînette sur l'herbe; sandwiches et boissons s'achètent sur place. Les allées et venues s'interrompent quand la musique commence à jouer. Tout le monde alors fraternise dans le plaisir de la beauté.

L'enceinte où se trouve l'orchestre contient 6.000 sièges. Il y a de la place pour le double sur le gazon. Au-dessus de l'orchestre, un plafond soutenu par des colonnes envoie le son jusqu'au dernier rang de la foule. L'acoustique est excellente.

Cette année est la dixième où le Boston Symphony Orchestra, dirigé par Serge Koussevitsky, joue à Tanglewood. Mais les trois années de guerre ne comptent pas: les concerts publics étaient supprimés à cause du rationnement de l'essence.

La saison est traditionnellement inaugurée par des concerts de Bach et de Mozart (dans une plus petite salle). Puis viennent les grands concerts symphoniques, qui produisent au moins une œuvre pour chœur. Cette année, c'est le Requiem de Brahms, l'Œdipe de Stravinsky et la Demoiselle Elue de Debussy.

Pour le reste du programme, la musique contemporaine alterne avec le classique dans une juste proportion. Chaque année, un concert spécial est donné au profit d'une « cause » qui le mérite. Cette année, ce sont les musiciens nécessiteux de l'Europe qui sont à l'honneur.

Mais le cœur de Tanglewood est le Berkshire Music Center et la Fondation Musicale Koussevitsky. Celle-ci a été fondée en 1942 par ce grand musicien, en mémoire de sa femme. Depuis lors, la Fondation a fait exécuter vingt-huit œuvres; onze symphonies, dont celles d'Aaron Copland, de David Diamond, d'Olivier Messiaien, de Darius Milhaud et de William Schumann, huit autres œuvres pour orchestre, six œuvres de musique de chambre et trois opéras dont Peter Grimes de Benjamin Britten et deux autres de Samuel Barber et de Marc Blitzstein. La Fondation octroie des bourses à des étudiants.

Dr Serge Koussevitsky, avec deux de ses élèves : A gauche, Eleazar de Carvalho, directeur brésilien; à droite, Leonard Bernstein.

Le Berkshire Music Center est la réalisation d'un rêve de Serge Koussevitsky, d'un lieu « pour la pratique et la contemplation de la musique dans tous ses nobles aspects ».

Le travail du département de l'opéra, sous Boris Goldovsky, est particulièrement intéressant. M. Goldovsky choisit d'habitude des œuvres peu connues comme l'Acis et Galatea de Haendel. La première présentation de l'admirable Peter Grimes a eu lieu ici, et aussi celle de l'Idomeneo de Mozart. Cette année, ce sera Il Turco in Italia de Rossini, qui n'a plus été représenté en Amérique depuis 1840.

En ces huit années d'existence, le Centre a largement contribué aux carrières de jeunes musiciens tels que le jeune compositeur et chef d'orchestre Léonard Berstein, le compositeur et pianiste Lukas Foss, le directeur brésilien E. de Carvalho, le directeur adjoint du New-York Philharmonic-Symphony Walter Hendl.

Cet été, 462 étudiants, soigneusement choisis et dont un quart sont boursiers, se trouvent ici. Ils viennent de plusieurs pays d'Europe, d'Amérique du Sud et même de la Chine. Aucun étudiant qui a du talent n'est écarté, si pauvre qu'il soit. Les bourses sont données par des institutions et des personnes privées. Pour les autres étudiants, les six semaines d'étude coûtent, tout compris, un peu plus de 200 dollars, soit 9.000 francs. Il y a aussi d'anciens soldats, subsidiés par le gouvernement. Ces élèves donnent des concerts, ouverts à un public restreint.

C'est un délice de passer ici quelques jours. Peut-être ai-je cité un peu trop de noms : je ne désespère pas cependant que certains ne vous soient connus; les autres, j'espère que vous les connaîtrez.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
PERKSHIRE EAGLE

AUG 9 - 1948

BSO To Play Tchaikovsky Program

Lipkin To Appear As Festival Soloist Tomorrow

TANGLEWOOD — The Boston Symphony Orchestra with Serge Koussevitzky conducting, will play an extra all-Tchaikovsky concert tomorrow night at 8.15 in the Berkshire Festival series. Tickets are available for the front or rear of the Music Shed, at the box office, England Brothers and the Blue Bird Shop, Stockbridge. General admission will be sold at the gate three hours before the concert.

Seymour Lipkin

The program will include the popular Symphony No. 6 in B minor, known as the "Pathetique," the concerto for pianoforte No. 1, in B flat minor, with Seymour Lipkin, soloist, and the Ouverture Solenelle, "1812."

Written in 1893, the sixth symphony was first performed at St. Petersburg in October of the same year. The composer wrote of it, "I certainly regard it as quite the best—and especially the most sincere—of all my works. I love it as I never loved any one of my musical offspring before."

The first concerto, written in 1874, had its first public performance in Music Hall, Boston, in October, 1875, with Hans von Bulow as soloist and B. J. Lang, conductor. It was later performed with even greater success in New York, under Leopold Damrosch.

The soloist tomorrow night is a student in conducting of Dr. Koussevitzky at the Berkshire Music Center. A native of Detroit, he played with the orchestra of that city at the age of 11, making his first public appearance as a pianist at four. He was chosen by George Szell to be one of two apprentice conductors of the Cleveland Orchestra last season, and in the spring won the Rachmaninoff fund national piano contest.

The Ouverture Solennelle has been named "1812" because it was first played in Moscow to commemorate the defeat of Napoleon's armies by the Russians. The premiere was at the Art and Industrial Exhibition in August, 1882.

This Clipping From
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE

AUG 9 - 1948

Introduce Symphony at Tanglewood

By D. E. RITZ

The Symphony number 6 by Vaughan Williams was given its first performance in this country at the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood Saturday evening. Serge Koussevitzky conducted.

The symphony is typically British in concept, contains some vigorous string writing and most effective use of percussion and brass. The four movements were played without pause and the whole given most sympathetic interpretation by Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra. The music was given its first performance in London by the Royal Philharmonic Society with Sir Adrian Boult conducting on April 21 of this year. This writing was begun in wartime and the influence of the armed conflict is very apparent. It also contains music cool and detached as the da n and ends with a marvelously sustained thin fine line of tone from the strings.

Whimsy in Music

The program closed with Gregor Piatigorsky as the 'cello soloist in the whimsical "Don Quixote" variations by Richard Strauss with Joseph De Pasquale playing the almost equally important viola solos. Prokofieff's "Romeo and Juliet" ballet, second suite, opened the program.

To those who can appreciate whimsy in music—we have learned that not everyoné can—the Don is a delight. There is no need here to compliment either Piatigorsky or DePasquale on their playing, both are artists of the first water. But there are effects from the orchestra that only one who has looked at a Strauss score can marvel at. For instance how do woodwinds produce that peculiar "split reeds effect" anyway?

The Prokofieff ballet is marked by the Russian feeling for lush orchestration. It accentuated by contrast the reserve of the Williams symphony.

The third and concluding series of festival concerts will open Thursday evening with Leonard Bernstein conducting. Robert Shaw will onduct the Saturday evening concert and Dr. Koussevitzky will lead the orchestra for the final concert on Sunday afternoon.

This Clipping From WINONA, MINN.
REPUBLICAN HERALD

AUG 9

All Tchaikowsky Program Over KWNO Tuesday

With the fourth and final broadcast on Tuesday over ABC, KWNO and KWNO-FM, from the Berkshire Music Festival, the Boston Symphony orchestra will conclude its 1947-1948 season. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will be on the podium for the all-Tschaikowsky program which will include the "Concerto No. 1 for Pianoforte in B-flat Minor" and the overture "1812." The broadcast will be heard at 8:30 p. m.

The season of ABC broadcasts started last October 14 in Boston, Since that time ABC has presented the Boston Symphony orchestra in 18 out of town broadcasts originating in Providence, Cambridge, New Haven, Pittsburgh, Detroit, New London and Hartford, as well as from Symphony Hall, Boston, the Boston "Pops" and the Esplanade Concerts. There also was a special broadcast from New York arranged by Edward J. Noble to inaugurate the annual appeal of the Salvation Army.

In addition to Dr. Koussevitzky, who retires after the close of next season, his 25th with the orchestra, the podium has been occupied by Charles Muench, French conductor who will succeed him, Leonard Berstein, American composer-conductor, and Eleazar de Carvalho, Brazilian conductor and Richard Burgin, Koussevitzky's associate conductor.

The season saw the world radio premiere of Malipiero's "Symphony No. 4," Walter Piston's "Symphony No. 3" and David Diamond's "Symphony No. 4." Special tribute was paid to Felix Mendelssohn on the 100th anniversary of his death. This was the 22nd season of broadcasts by the Boston Symphony orchestra.

In this respect, the music shed provided a far better setting, its dimensions well suited to the huge array of singers and instrumentalists and to the composer's grandiose conceptions.

This Clipping From
STOCKTON, CAL.
RECORD

AUG 9 1948

Musical Shrine for Hawthorne

The home of a man who had not the slightest interest in music has now become a musical shrine. This strange fate has come to Tanglewood, the western Massachusetts home of Nathaniel Hawthorne, who wrote there "The House of Seven Gables" and "Tanglewood Tales." For the last 10 years it has been the headquarters of the Berkshire Festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the leadership of its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

Recently a reconstruction of Hawthorne's little red house was presented by the National Federation of Music Clubs to the orchestra to be used as a studio. Menning Hawthorne of North Woodstock, Conn., great-grandson of the writer, who was one of the speakers, referred to Nathaniel's indifference to music.

Even if Hawthorne was no music lover, he was a master craftsman in a kindred field, that of literature. Both lovers of literature and of music will applaud the generous action of the National Federation of Music Clubs, which insures the perpetual maintenance of one of America's notable literary shrines.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
AUG 9 - 1948

Music

Eleazar de Carvalho Conducts All-Latin Program

By ROBERT BAGAR.

LENGX, Mass., Aug. 9.—The honor of conducting yesterday afternoon's program fell to Eleazar De Carvalho, a young Brazilian who, among other academic studies, was a pupil in Serge Koussevitzky's class two summers ago. He has already put some major orchestral performances to his credit, including one with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at its home base last season.

It may or may not be coincidence that Mr. Carvalho's program was an all-Latin one. He began with the Berlioz "Fantastic" Symphony, and then went on to the Villa-Lobos "Madonna," the Falla "Amor Brujo," and the Congo, Toada and Coco from the Siqueira Suite "Nordestina." In the Falla number Carol Brice was the soloist.

Mr. Carvalho is a dusky and husky chap, about the size of a light heavyweight, he is forceful on the podium, and his most impressive gestures are those cajoling lyricism out of the musicians, and certain others with which he punches out emphasis and accent. He is more or less quiet otherwise, and he never takes the listener's mind off the music with terpsichorean activity.

It was my feeling that Berlioz came off rather well under Mr. Carvalho's ministrations. Particularly in the last three movements. There was the necessary drive, yet not at all overpowering. The Gallic spirit of the music generally came through, and was at times quite enchanting.

In the first two movements he was either getting warmed up or he was nervous, for he missed some opportunities to make gracious phrases, to life the line and let it fall elegantly, and matters of that sort. For me, the best part of the performance was in the "March to the Scaffold," where derision and irony go hand in hand with languorous sentiments.

Miss Brice's voice was quite at home in the Falla score. Further, she delivered those swerves and twists of the part with just those flamenco inflections they wanted. And the conductor, as you might expect, left nothing undone to give us the basic, elemental quality of the music. All this was noisily appreciated by an audience of 9700.

On Saturday evening Mr. Koussevitzky offered, as piece de resistance, the first American performance of the Vaughan Williams Symphony No. 6. He provided 9700 more people with a brilliant rendering of a work often noisily commemorative and often quietly reflective. Its general topic being the last war.

Also on the Saturday night bill were the second suite from the Prokofieff "Romeo and Juliet," and the Richard Strauss "Don Quixote," with Gregor Piatigorsky as soloist and Joseph De Pasquale as 'cello soloist.

The Prokofieff is a beauty. It is an orchestral joy which, I should imagine, is as much fun for the conductor and musicians to play as it is for listeners to take in.

And how the Bostonians performed it! I think that note for note the rendering represented just about the best I've heard up here this summer.

The orchestra, I felt, gave Mr. Koussevitzky all he asked of it in the supporting role, and that had also to do with some long and oversentimental phrasing, nevertheless, that sort of thing doesn't hurt "Don Quixote" too much, unless the line sags, because of it. This it did several times.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
AUG 9 - 1948

Carvalho Brings Out Best In Orchestra at Tanglewood

Special to The Hartford Times

Lenox, Mass.—There was a new conductor and much new music in the weekend concerts at Tanglewood.

Sunday afternoon Eleazar de Carvalho introduced the symphonic poem "Madona" by Villa Lobos, Siqueira's Conga, Toada and Coco from the Suite "Nordestina" along with the familiar de Falla's El Amor Brujo but his talents as a conductor were best measured in so constantly challenging a work as Berlioz' "Fantastic Symphony."

It is long enough to be dull unless the interpreter perceives the lesser beauties as well as the more obvious ones; Carvalho found much important detail. It is packed with drama but not of the fustian and grease paint kind. This director, who omitted the calisthenics, produced nevertheless a fine state of tension which put the ~~Boston Orchestra on~~ its mettle and kept the listeners at chair's edge.

* * *

CONDUCTING without score and without baton, he established his authority over the orchestra which produced for him a fine tone, rhythmic aliveness and flooding crescendos of which he seems to be fond.

In both concerts there was a good deal of story telling music. The hectic imaginings of Beldioz' frustrated love life culminating in the grisly March to the Scaffold and the Witches' Sabbath, were terrifically real to the composer. For the objective listener it was mainly to marvel over the brilliance of the orchestral prism and the sweep of narrative power.

The premiere of a Vaughan Williams symphony is an event of major importance. The anticipation which builds up runs into a dissappointment risk unless the new work prove itself a worthy companion to the "London" and "Sea" symphonies whose impact came at a time when the composer rated as a modern. The Sixth Symphony sounded like something in the Elgar tradition with overtones of Sibelius; to that extent it was a dissappointment. It did have feeling and a sense of purpose; in that respect it sounded more important than most of the unfamiliar music we have been hearing at Tanglewood.

* * *

HERE'S THE WAY it sounded to me: The orchestra was divided against itself, string choir and brass choir, protagonist and antagonist. These divisions, while not in literal discord, never were reconciled. It didn't take a great deal of imagination to think of the clamorous, truculent brass section in terms of war's alarms, the strings as humanity in tribulation. The symphony began tumultuously and over the four movements tended to subside, not into a state of peace but rather an anxious, negative state of absence of hostility.

To find such a feeling of tireless waiting on the brink of despair this symphony conveyed you have to go to the introduction to the third act of Tristan and Isolde. The epilogue in which the end, like hope, was all but too long deferred, evoked that fitful half-awake state which never quite emerges from troubled sleep. The whole symphony sounds like the work of a tired, disconsolate and worried Englishman.

This was not image-making music in the same sense as the Don Quixote variations of Strauss which found place on the Saturday night program. The adventures of a zany knight against windmills and marching sheep were admirably depicted, with Gregor Piatigorsky's solo cello capturing the pathos of the soul that is mad and without guile because it is also sweet.

It was downright cold Saturday night, calling for coats and hot coffee; Sunday was agreeably warm. Crowds continue around the ten thousand mark.

—C. E. I.

This Clipping From
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
AUG 9 - 1948

19,500 at Tanglewood Boost Total for Season to 60,200

Two Concerts Conclude Festival Series B—Sunday Attendance Sets New Record, Bettering 1947 Mark by 200—All-Tschaikowsky Program to be Conducted by Koussevitzky Tomorrow Evening—First of Series C Concerts Will be Presented Thursday —Opera Department to Perform Tonight.

This season's attendance at major Tanglewood concerts was boosted to 60,200 when a total of 19,500 thronged to the music shed on the picturesque estate Saturday night and yesterday afternoon for the two concerts that concluded the 1948 Berkshire festival Series B.

Unseasonably Cool

The attendance count Saturday evening was 9,700, somewhat below the crowd at the corresponding performance in 1947, but yesterday afternoon's turnout of 9,800 set a new record for the second Sunday afternoon concert of the season, bettering last year's mark by 200. The unseasonably low temperatures which chilled both the music shed seat-holders and the outside audience of more than 4,000 that heard the music from the lawns, were blamed for whittling down the Saturday evening attendance below last year's figure.

The aggregate figure of 60,200 for all the major concerts so far this season was announced this morning by Mrs. George W. Edman who is in charge of public relations at Tanglewood. She said it included the three concerts each in Series A and B and the "Tanglewood on Parade" concert given last Tuesday evening. The record crowds which attended the four Bach-Mozart concerts in the Tanglewood theater-music hall are not included in the figure which covers only Festival attractions in the big music shed.

The two huge week-end audiences were rewarded by two outstanding programs. On Saturday evening Serge Koussevitzky conducted the Boston Symphony orchestra in sensitive readings of Prokofieff's "Romeo and Juliet" suit No. 2, Vaughan Williams Sixth symphony and Strauss' "Don Quixote," with Gregor Piatigorsky as violincello soloist. Yesterday afternoon Dr. Koussevitzky relinquished his baton to Eleazar De Carvalho, Brazilian conductor who has appeared on several previous occasions with the Boston symphony, for a program which included Berlioz' "Fantastic" symphony, a first performance of Villa Lobos symphonic poem, "Madona,'" written for the Koussevitzky Foundation; Fallas "El Amor Brujo," in which Carol Brice, contralto, was the soloist, and Siqueira's "Nordestina" suite No. 1.

Tschaikowsky Program

Tomorrow evening, Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct, as a prelude to the final 1948 series of three concerts, the all-Tschaikowsky program which, to lovers of the Russian composer's music, will be a highlight of this year's festival.

The "Pathetique" (No. 6) symphony, the familiar First piano concerto with Seymour Lipkin as soloist, and the 1812 Overture comprise the Tschaikowsky program.

The first of the Series C concerts Thursday evening will be conducted by Leonard Benstein and will present Weber's Overture to "Der Freischutz," Stravinsky's "Petrouchka" complete, and Shostakovich's Fifth symphony. On Saturday evening Robert Shaw will conduct a program which will lay special emphasis on choral music: Debussy's "The Blessed Damozel," and Brahm's "Requiem." The 1948 season will close with the concert next Sunday afternoon at which Koussevitzky will conduct Beethoven's Third ("Eroica") symphony and Sibelius Second symphony in D major.

This evening, members of the Berkshire Music center Opera department will give the first performance of Rossini's "A Turk in Italy," which will be repeated Wednesday evening.

This Clipping From
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
JOURNAL-COURIER
AUG 9 - 1948

De Carvalho Leads Boston Symphony

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 8—(AP)—Eleazer De Carvalho, 36-year old Brazilian guest conductor, led the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a performance of ~~Berlioz~~'s Fantastic Symphony today before a crowd of 9,800 at Tanglewood's Berkshire Music Center.

At the conclusion De Carvalho faced the orchestra and applauded it instead of acknowledging the ovation of the crowd. He was called back to the podium several times.

Today's program also included Madona, symphonic poem by Villa-Lobos; Suite from El Amor Brujo by De Falla and Siqueira's Nordestina Suite.

Tomorrow night and Wednesday night the opera department will present Rossini's "The Turk in Italy."

Tuesday night Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will return to lead the orchestra in an all-Tchaikovsky program.

This Clipping From
RAVENNA, OHIO
RECORD & COURIER-TRIBUNE
AUG 9 - 1948

MUSICAL SHRINE

The home of a man who had not the slightest interest in music has now become a musical shrine. This strange fate has come to Tanglewood, the western Massachusetts home of Nathaniel Hawthorne, who wrote there "The House of Seven Gables" and "Tanglewood Tales". For the last ten years it has been the headquarters of the Berkshire Festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the leadership of its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

Recently a reconstruction of Hawthorn' little red house was presented by the National Federation of Music Clubs to th orchestra to be used as a studio. Mennin Hawthorne of North Woodstock, Conn great-grandson of the writer, who was on of the speakers, referred to Nathaniel's ir difference to music.

[251]

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
AUG 9 - 1948

Music

Eleazar de Carvalho Conducts All-Latin Program

By ROBERT BAGAR.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 9.—The honor of conducting yesterday afternoon's program fell to Eleazar De Carvalho, a young Brazilian who, among other academic studies, was a pupil in Serge Koussevitzky's class two summers ago. He has already put some major orchestral performances to his credit, including one with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at its home base last season.

It may or may not be coincidence that Mr. Carvalho's program was an all-Latin one. He began with the Berlioz "Fantastic" Symphony, and then went on to the Villa-Lobos "Madonna," the Falla "Amor Brujo," and the Congo, Toada and Coco from the Siqueira Suite "Nordestina." In the Falla number Carol Brice was the soloist.

Mr. Carvalho is a dusky and husky chap, about the size of a light heavyweight, he is forceful on the podium, and his most impressive gestures are those cajoling lyricism out of the musicians, and certain others with which he punches out emphasis and accent. He is more or less quiet otherwise, and he never takes the listener's mind off the music with terpsichorean activity.

It was my feeling that Berlioz came off rather well under Mr. Carvalho's ministrations. Particularly in the last three movements. There was the necessary drive, yet not at all overpowering. The Gallic spirit of the music generally came through, and was at times quite enchanting.

In the first two movements he was either getting warmed up or he was nervous, for he missed some opportunities to make gracious phrases, to life the line and let it fall elegantly, and matters of that sort. For me, the best part of the performance was in the "March to the Scaffold," where derision and irony go hand in hand with languorous sentiments.

Miss Brice's voice was quite at home in the Falla score. Further, she delivered those swerves and twists of the part with just those flamenco inflections they wanted. And the conductor, as you might expect, left nothing undone to give us the basic, elemental quality of the music. All this was noisily appreciated by an audience of 9700.

On Saturday evening Mr. Koussevitzky offered, as piece de resistance, the first American performance of the Vaughan Williams Symphony No. 6. He provided 9700 more people with a brilliant rendering of a work often noisily commemorative and often quietly reflective. Its general topic being the last war.

Also on the Saturday night bill were the second suite from the Prokofieff "Romeo and Juliet," and the Richard Strauss "Don Quixote," with Gregor Piatigorsky as soloist and Joseph De Pasquale as 'cello soloist.

The Prokofieff is a beauty. It is an orchestral joy which, I should imagine, is as much fun for the conductor and musicians to play as it is for listeners to take in.

And how the Bostonians performed it! I think that note for note the rendering represented just about the best I've heard up here this summer.

The orchestra, I felt, gave Mr. Koussevitzky all he asked of it in the supporting role, and that had also to do with some long and oversentimental phrasing, nevertheless, that sort of thing doesn't hurt "Don Quixote" too much, unless the line sags, because of it. This it did several times.

This Clipping From
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
AUG 9 - 1948

19,500 at Tanglewood Boost Total for Season to 60,200

Two Concerts Conclude Festival Series B—Sunday Attendance Sets New Record, Bettering 1947 Mark by 200—All-Tschaikowsky Program to be Conducted by Koussevitzky Tomorrow Evening—First of Series C Concerts Will be Presented Thursday—Opera Department to Perform Tonight.

This season's attendance at major Tanglewood concerts was boosted to 60,200 when a total of 19,500 thronged to the music shed on the picturesque estate Saturday night and yesterday afternoon for the two concerts that concluded the 1948 Berkshire festival Series B.

Unseasonably Cool

The attendance count Saturday evening was 9,700, somewhat below the crowd at the corresponding performance in 1947, but yesterday afternoon's turnout of 9,800 set a new record for the second Sunday afternoon concert of the season, bettering last year's mark by 200. The unseasonably low temperatures which chilled both the music shed seat-holders and the outside audience of more than 4,000 that heard the music from the lawns, were blamed for whittling down the Saturday evening attendance below last year's figure.

The aggregate figure of 60,200 for all the major concerts so far this season was announced this morning by Mrs. George W. Edman who is in charge of public relations at Tanglewood. She said it included the three concerts each in Series A and B and the "Tanglewood on Parade" concert given last Tuesday evening. The record crowds which attended the four Bach-Mozart concerts in the Tanglewood theater-music hall are not included in the figure which covers only Festival attractions in the big music shed.

The two huge week-end audiences were rewarded by two outstanding programs. On Saturday evening Serge Koussevitzky conducted the Boston Symphony orchestra in sensitive readings of Prokofieff's "Romeo and Juliet" suit No. 2, Vaughan Williams Sixth symphony and Strauss' "Don Quixote,' with Gregor Piatigorsky as violincello soloist. Yesterday afternoon Dr. Koussevitzky relinquished his baton to Eleazar De Carvalho, Brazilian conductor who has appeared on several previous occasions with the Boston symphony, for a program which included Berlioz' "Fantastic" symphony, a first performance of Villa Lobos symphonic poem, "Madona,'" written for the Koussevitzky Foundation; Fallas "El Amor Brujo," in which Carol Brice, contralto, was the soloist, and Siqueira's "Nordestina" suite No. 1.

Tschaikowsky Program

Tomorrow evening, Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct, as a prelude to the final 1948 series of three concerts, the all-Tschaikowsky program which, to lovers of the Russian composer's music, will be a highlight of this year's festival.

The "Pathetique" (No. 6) symphony, the familiar First piano concerto with Seymour Lipkin as soloist, and the 1812 Overture comprise the Tschaikowsky program.

The first of the Series C concerts Thursday evening will be conducted by Leonard Benstein and will present Weber's Overture to "Der Freischutz," Stravinsky's "Petrouchka" complete, and Shostakovich's Fifth symphony. On Saturday evening Robert Shaw will conduct a program which will lay special emphasis on choral music: Debussy's "The Blessed Damozel," and Brahm's "Requiem." The 1948 season will close with the concert next Sunday afternoon at which Koussevitzky will conduct Beethoven's Third ("Eroica") symphony and Sibelius Second symphony in D major.

This evening, members of the Berkshire Music center Opera department will give the first performance of Rossini's "A Turk in Italy," which will be repeated Wednesday evening.

This Clipping From
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
JOURNAL-COURIER
AUG 9 - 1948

De Carvalho Leads Boston Symphony

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 8—(AP)—Eleazer De Carvalho, 36-year old Brazilian guest conductor, led the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a performance of Berlioz's Fantastic Symphony today before a crowd of 9,800 at Tanglewood's Berkshire Music Center.

At the conclusion De Carvalho faced the orchestra and applauded it instead of acknowledging the ovation of the crowd. He was called back to the podium several times.

Today's program also included Madona, symphonic poem by Villa-Lobos; Suite from El Amor Brujo by De Falla and Siqueira's Nordestina Suite.

Tomorrow night and Wednesday night the opera department will present Rossini's "The Turk in Italy."

Tuesday night Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will return to lead the orchestra in an all-Tchaikovsky program.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
AUG 9 - 1948

Carvalho Brings Out Best In Orchestra at Tanglewood

Special to The Hartford Times

Lenox, Mass.—There was a new conductor and much new music in the weekend concerts at Tanglewood.

Sunday afternoon Eleazar de Carvalho introduced the symphonic poem "Madona" by Villa Lobos, Siqueira's Conga, Toada and Coco from the Suite "Nordestina" along with the familiar de Falla's El Amor Brujo but his talents as a conductor were best measured in so constantly challenging a work as Berlioz' "Fantastic Symphony."

It is long enough to be dull unless the interpreter perceives the lesser beauties as well as the more obvious ones; Carvalho found much important detail. It is packed with drama but not of the fustian and grease paint kind. This director, who omitted the calisthenics, produced nevertheless a fine state of tension which put the Boston Orchestra on its mettle and kept the listeners at chair's edge.

* * *

CONDUCTING without score and without baton, he established his authority over the orchestra which produced for him a fine tone, rhythmic aliveness and flooding crescendos of which he seems to be fond.

In both concerts there was a good deal of story telling music. The hectic imaginings of Beldioz' frustrated love life culminating in the grisly March to the Scaffold and the Witches' Sabbath, were terrifically real to the composer. For the objective listener it was mainly to marvel over the brilliance of the orchestral prism and the sweep of narrative power.

The premiere of a Vaughan Williams symphony is an event of major importance. The anticipation which builds up runs into a dissappointment risk unless the new work prove itself a worthy companion to the "London" and "Sea" symphonies whose impact came at a time when the composer rated as a modern. The Sixth Symphony sounded like something in the Elgar tradition with overtones of Sibelius; to that extent it was a dissappointment. It did have feeling and a sense of purpose; in that respect it sounded more important than most of the unfamiliar music we have been hearing at Tanglewood.

* * *

HERE'S THE WAY it sounded to me: The orchestra was divided against itself, string choir and brass choir, protagonist and antagonist. These divisions, while not in literal discord, never were reconciled. It didn't take a great deal of imagination to think of the clamorous, truculent brass section in terms of war's alarms, the strings as humanity in tribulation. The symphony began tumultuously and over the four movements tended to subside, not into a state of peace but rather an anxious, negative state of absence of hostility.

To find such a feeling of tireless waiting on the brink of despair this symphony conveyed you have to go to the introduction to the third act of Tristan and Isolde. The epilogue in which the end, like hope, was all but too long deferred, evoked that fitful half-awake state which never quite emerges from troubled sleep. The whole symphony sounds like the work of a tired, disconsolate and worried Englishman.

This was not image-making music in the same sense as the Don Quixote variations of Strauss which found place on the Saturday night program. The adventures of a zany knight against windmills and marching sheep were admirably depicted, with Gregor Piatigorsky's solo cello capturing the pathos of the soul that is mad and without guile because it is also sweet.

It was downright cold Saturday night, calling for coats and hot coffee; Sunday was agreeably warm. Crowds continue around the ten thousand mark.

—C. E. I.

This Clipping From RAVENNA, OHIO
RECORD & COURIER-TRIBUNE
AUG 9 - 1948

MUSICAL SHRINE

The home of a man who had not the slightest interest in music has now become a musical shrine. This strange fate has come to Tanglewood, the western Massachusetts home of Nathaniel Hawthorne, who wrote there "The House of Seven Gables" and "Tanglewood Tales". For the last ten years it has been the headquarters of the Berkshire Festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the leadership of its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

Recently a reconstruction of Hawthorn' little red house was presented by the National Federation of Music Clubs to th orchestra to be used as a studio. Mennin Hawthorne of North Woodstock, Conn great-grandson of the writer, who was on of the speakers, referred to Nathaniel's indifference to music.

[251]

This Clipping From CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE
AUG 9 - 1948

ON THE AISLE

Koussevitzky Gives New Williams' Work

By Claudia Cassidy

Tanglewood, Mass., Aug. 8 (Special)—Altho Tanglewood is dedicated to youth—on Friday evening a 23 year old conductor led the extraordinary students' orchestra in a brilliant performance of "La Mer," and its 16 year old soloist broke a string at the start of Haydn's cello concerto, loped imperturbably offstage, fixed it, and came back to play a lyrical performance—there is no doubt in any one's mind that the youngest thing about Tanglewood is Serge Koussevitzky's conducting. Mr. Koussevitzky had a birthday last week, and I think the calendar said he is 74. On Saturday night he conducted the American premiere of the Sixth symphony by Vaughan Williams, who is 75. For vitality and vigor, nothing could have been younger, fresher, and more arrestingly absorbing. To have all these things and wisdom, too—well, that is why Tanglewood has become a place of pilgrimage.

When Koussevitzky introduces a score, the composer is in luck. Not only does he achieve the magnificent Boston orchestra, but he gets the benediction by fire of a conductor who flings himself heart and soul into music, standing aloof only to be his own supreme critic. What he has done in recent years for the Prokofieff Fifth and the Copland Third, he has now done for the Vaughan Williams Sixth.

—o—

In England, where the symphony was played last April, they called it the composer's utterance of what he feels about war, and his meditation on an other worldly peace. Perhaps that is official. Certainly it is plausible. For this concise, uninterrupted music seems to come upon the world in lively tempo touched with jazz, to be caught in violent turmoil, to achieve in a broad flow of melody an affirmation of faith, to rediscover the old world razor edged by an even more accute nervous tension—and to withdraw into a muted realm of quiet retrospection which might be subtitled "All Passion Spent."

In this thoughtful aftermath a low voiced orchestra slips eloquently into silence. If what had gone before were not so vitally young, you might, as one instrument after another sings its swan song, call it Vaughan Williams' "Farewell," and you might linger afterward to wonder about the significance of that highly effective reiteration of three trumpet notes.

Such a score, superbly played under such conditions, was happily met with the noble Don Quixote, who left his name to generations of gallant dreamers. And I am not at all sure I have encountered a more memorable performance of Richard Strauss' "Fantastic Variations on a Theme of Knightly Character" than that in which Gregor Piatigorsky joined at the same concert. This is truly a fantastic score. Wonderfully wrought, it has the roar of wind machines, the bleating of sheep, and yet it has passages for the cello as supremely compassionate, as ineffably tender, as the Marschallin's music in "Der Rosenkavalier."

—o—

That the orchestra was masterly goes without saying. But Mr. Piatigorsky's performance reminded me of what a pianist, who had perhaps better remain nameless, said to me at the rehearsal in the afternoon. He was talking about conductors. "O, yes," he said, "so and so is a good one. Playing with him is as safe as sitting in a rocking chair. But Koussevitzky, well, he is the one if you want inspiration."

It must have worked that way with Piatigorsky, too. It is no secret that he has tone, technique, and style. But to have splendor in "Don Quixote" you must have all the breaks on your side. He had them, including Joseph De Pasquale's solo viola.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
AUG 9 - 1948

CARVALHO GIVES EXCITING READING OF BERLIOZ WORK

Young Brazilian Conductor Meets With Approval of Audience

By WILLARD CLARK

Lenox, Aug. 8—The appearance of the young Brazilian conductor Eleazar Carvalho; the first performance of the symphonic poem "Madona," written for the Koussevitzy Foundation by Villa-Lobas, and the magnificent singing of contralto Carol Brice were the highlights of the eighth program in the 11th season of the Berkshire Festival given this afternoon by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Nearly 10,000 people filled the shed and the spacious grounds to hear this concert.

A Sound Musician

Mr. Carvalho impressed us as a sound musician. He knew what he wanted and how to get it. It was no easy task to undertake a reading of the "Fantastic Symphony" by Berlioz. Here is a monstrous creation both in length and content. It demands interpretive resources beyond the range of the average conductor. It is saying much for Mr. Carvalho that he succeeded in providing an exciting reading ,particularly in the horrendus music depicting the unholy carrying on of the witches' Sabbath. He revealed also the satire in the "March to the Scaffold." In such introspective movements as "Dreams and Passions" he provided a delicacy of expression and feeling for the line which met all purposes. Yet, in spite of these excellencies, somehow the reading did not catch fire. The spark was lacking.

It was refreshing to watch a conductor who did not give the audience a continuous profile, as some of the younger, and even the older conductors are apt to do.

It was notable that he obtained his most massive effects with a minimum of gesture.

Solid, Impressive Work

The Villa-Lobas work is a solid, impressive work. It had a profound effect upon the audience and with reason, for while he often speaks in dissonant invective, Villa-Lobas can, and does write with clarity in spite of technical complexity of rhythms. There were many lovely moments in this symphonic poem. It comes as a welcome addition to the literature for orchestra.

Manuel De Falla's "El Amor Brujo" or "Love for Sorcerer" is practically fool proof as far as audience reaction is concerned. Does it not contain the perennial favorites: "Dance of Terror" and "Ritual Fire Dance"? I think we heard a definitive reading of the work today. Its magnificience was increased by the singing of Carol Brice. What a gorgeous, dark-hued voice this Negro contralto has. Even better is the fact that she sesems always musically and spiritually prepared for whatever she must sing. Her sense of rhythm is absolute. The music glittered and flashed as we seldom have heard it.

"Nordestina"

The program concluded with three movements from the suite "Nordestina" by Jose Siqueira. This Brazilian is an ardent nationalist and his compositions are based on the rich folk music lore of his country. The movements played were: "Congo," an Afro-Brazilian dance of intricate rhythms; "The Toada" a song form not unlike a berceuse. and the "Cico" a Brazilian instrumental dance. It is music to hear again and again before it is fully absorbed, yet a first hearing can be. and today was. a provocative musical experience.

Series C of the festival will open Thursday night when Leonard Bernstein conducts a program made up of "Night on Bald Mountain" by Moussorgsky; the complete "Petrouchka" by Stravinsky and "Symphony No. 5" by Shostakovitch.

Tomorrow night the first performance of "A Turk in Italy," by Rossini, will be sung by the opera department. It will be repeated on Wednesday. Tuesday night the special all Tschaikowsky program will be conducted by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky with Seymour Lipkin appearing as soloist in the Concerto No. 1 in B flat Minor.

This Clipping From
HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT TELEGRAM
AUG 9 - 1948

20,000 Music Lovers At Thrilling Tanglewood Week-End Concerts

The Berkshires were calling over the week-end as well as the Tanglewood concerts. For the Saturday night concert the first production of the Sixth Symphony of Ralph Vaughan Williams, dean of British composers, magnificently interpreted by Serge Koussevitzky and his Boston Symphony, was a thrilling performance. Tanglewood this year has been showing its well educated music lovers that there are great new things in music and new leaders of high promise.

For yesterday afternoon Eleazar de Carvalho, Brazilian conductor who has been working with Koussevitzky for three seasons at Tanglewood, and who is 35 years old, conducted, with Berlioz' magnificent Fantastic Symphony as the proven first section of the program. For the second section there was the first presentation of "Madonna," composed by Villa Loboz, young Brazilian, in honor of Koussevitzky.

There was great response from the audience for the Spanish De-Falla's "Lover For a Sorcerer" in which Carol Brice, Negro contralto, sang superbly. Over and over again the audience wanted her back. She came smilingly and most naturally and that left a good feeling. For the finale of the program yesterday the orchestra played a composition of three dances called "Nordestina" by Jose Siquera. This was a primitive, elemental music in far reach from the superb expression of music culture and people culture in the great Berlioz symphony. The exceeding beauty of the meadow music, the thrilling march to the scaffold and the gorgeous finale with Mr. Carvalho conducting before the great and appreciative audience for the first time was a memorable page in this year's Tanglewood. Let it be said that the splendid orchestra never let the young conductor down but kept telling him and the audience that it was an unexcelled instrument and that it liked the way this new, young, South American, part Indian by the way, was handling himself and the orchestra.

If you sat near enough you felt the same appreciation going out to Carol Brice as she sang the passionate music of Lover for a Sorcerer." The men fairly beamed upon her. There were 10,000 people present for each of the week-end concerts for which the weather was gorgeous.

There are four concerts at Tanglewood this week and that closes the season. Tuesday evening Koussevitzky will conduct and again Sunday afternoon. It will be something to attend.

Tanglewood has shown more progress this year than during any of its history and this will be the finale for the 78 years old conductor and the father of Tanglewood.

To add to the drawing force of the last concert the Symphony chosen is the Beethoven Eroica which to many music lovers, all over the world, is one of the most super Symphonies ever written. Leonard Bernstein will conduct Thursday evening and Robert

---

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL
AUG 9 - 1948

LEADS BOSTON SYMPHONY

Brazilian Conductor Bows to Orchestra, Instead of Crowd

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 8.—(AP)—Eleazer DeCarvalho, 36-year-old Brazilian guest conductor, led the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a performance of Berlioz's Fantastic Symphony today before a crowd of 9800 at Tanglewood's Berkshire Music Center.

At the conclusion DeCarvalho faced the orchestra and applauded it instead of acknowledging the ovation of the crowd. He was called back to the podium several times.

Today's program also included Madona, sypmphonic poem by Villa-Lobos; suite from El Amor Brujo by De Falla and Siqueira's Nordestina suite.

Tomorrow night and Wednesday night the opera department will present Rossini's "The Turk in Italy."

Tuesday night Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will return to lead the orchestra in an all-Tchaikovsky program.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN
AUG 9 - 1948

Williams 6th Premiered

By MILES KASTENDIECK

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass., Aug. 9.—Two events highlighted the week-end of the Berkshire Festival: the American premiere of Vaughan Williams' Sixth Symphony and the debut of the Brazilian conductor, Eleazar de Carvalho. Both were impressive. Vaughan Williams' symphony is a noble work; Mr. Carvalho is a stimulating conductor.

At 75, Vaughan Williams has written with the understanding and the wisdom of a lifetime, the knowledge and the experience of the moment. The blending into a communicative work of art is an achievement rare among living composers. The music is deeply stirring not only in its drama but also in its purpose.

This is a war symphony. It expresses what war does to a poetic soul. It opens in conflict and resolves in absolution.

Through its four movements (which Koussevitzky elected to play continuously) the music passes from a statement of violence and consequent anguish into a clash of forces to emerge in a pronouncement of faith. It aims to idealize, if not to establish, the "peace which passeth understanding."

A Masterpiece

All this is more the exception than the rule in contemporary music.

It has taken a greater composer to state it so the average person can feel and understand. While the symphony reflects the musical currents of the times, it stands quite on its own as a creative expression stamped with the individuality of the composer. It is a modern masterpiece.

Koussevitzky and the Bostonians played the new work with conviction. There was no mistaking the effect it had made upon them. The audience may not have grasped its significance immediately, but showed itself aware that this was an exceptional work.

The Saturday night concert which featured the Vaughan Williams was devoted entirely to works by living composers.

Prokofieff's "Romeo and Juliet" suite opened the program; Strauss's "Don Quixote," with Piatigorsky as cello soloist and Joseph De Pasquale playing the viola, closed it.

Koussevitsky paced the music rather deliberately but overlooked no detail of its "theater."

Carvalho On Sunday

Carvalho conducted the Sunday afternoon concert. His program included the Berlioz Fantastic Symphony, Villa-Lobas symphonic poem, "Madona," Falla's "El Amor Brujo" with Carol Brice as soloist, excerpts from Siqueira's suite, "Nordestina." He was well received.

Conducting without score or baton, Carvalho uses a wrist and shoulder technique quite individual. His innate sense of rhythm is his forte with a certain vitality imparted in the incisiveness of his gestures.

They often suggest the movements of a Flamenco dancer, but there is no empty showmanship about them. His nature appears to be quite genial, a fact which may explain some lack of fire in his interpretations.

The best part of the Berlioz came in the March of the Scaffold. The performance as a whole needed more integration, sounding somewhat detached from its programmatic content.

Carvalho set forth his own Brazilian music and the Falla in thoroughly musical performances, treating them with more grace and less sharpness of outline than we customarily hear. This was sound conducting without great intensity.

This Clipping From
PORTLAND, ME.
PRESS HERALD
AUG - 9 1948

Guest Leader Claps For Boston Symphony

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 8 (AP)—Eleazer de Carvalho, 36-year-old Brazilian guest conductor, led the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a performance of Berlioz's Fantastic Symphony today before a crowd of 9,800 at Tanglewood's Berkshire Music Center.

At the conclusion de Carvalho faced the orchestra and applauded it instead of acknowledging the ovation of the crowd. He was called back to the podium several times.

Today's program also included Madona, symphonic poem by Villa-[illegible] Suite from El Amor Brujo by D Fall and Siqueria's Nordestina Su[illegible]

Monday night and Wednesday night the opera department will present Rossini's The Turk In [illegible]

Tuesday night Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will return to lead the orchestra in an all-Tschaikovsky program.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
AUG 9 - 1948

YOUNG CONDUCTOR SCORES AT LENOX

de Carvalho 'Wows' Throng at Tanglewood as He Leads His Mentor's Orchestra

By OLIN DOWNES
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 8—Eleazar de Carvalho conducted this afternoon's concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood. He is the second of Koussevitzky's conductor pupils to share the podium with his master during this festival.

When Dr. Koussevitzky was asked recently why, if he had decided not to conduct certain of the festival concerts himself he did not invite some veteran leader of international fame to substitute for him, he replied, "Because I have boys here of such talent and spirit that they will bring a special freshness and interest to their performances."

Judging by the reports of the performances that Leonard Bernstein has conducted, and the concert of this afternoon by Mr. de Carvalho, Dr. Koussevitzky did not make a mistake. For Mr. de Carvalho, conducting the Berlioz "Fantastic" symphony and work by Villa-Lobos, de Falla and Siquiera, had an exceptional success with an audience of some 9,800 persons.

This is the immediate fact, aside from the application of the critical yardstick in estimating the present stage of his prowess. He conducted entirely from memory, and he "wowed" the audience.

Emulated Teacher's Gestures

Mr. de Carvalho has an entirely different artistic personality than Mr. Bernstein, although, like Bernstein, he unconsciously emulated more or less the gestures and stylistic methods of Koussevitzky. He may prove to be the profounder talent of the two.

He conducts with apparent certainty and authority the scores that he memorizes with astonishing rapidity, and with the effect of having fully thought out and practically conveyed his intentions. In the worn old phrase, he knows what he wants, and gets it.

This is true, at least, so far as Mr. de Carvalho lets himself go. He does not wholly let himself go, and this, perhaps, with good reason, for he has a temperament more elemental and perhaps chaotic and emotional than it might be for his own best interest to let fly. He is studying with enormous industry, concentration and self-criticism.

It was believable, listening to him this afternoon, that he had not only reflected long and intensely on every note of the score, but had with equal intensity, and also humility, heeded the counsels of his teacher in the interpretation.

This induces certain restraints, occasional angularities and emotional inequalities—not enough to obscure the emotional and intellectual levels of the interpretation, which are very high, but enough to indicate a shade of immaturity, or at least stiffness.

Nor are Koussevitzky's finesses precisely up this young man's alley. He has a boiling temperament and immense virility so that he alternated occasionally between an over-refinement and self-restraint which characterized, for example, the first movement of the Berlioz symphony, and the sudden

These are much simpler scores than the ones by Berlioz. Their exotic coloring and immediate effectiveness were a further asset in the situation.

New to this writer was the tone poem of Villa-Lobos, "Madona," written on commission of the Koussevitzky Music Foundation. What the poetical implications of this work may be remains unknown. The program book contented itself by quoting the words of Nicolas Slonimsky, to the effect that "every piece of music he (Villa-Lobos) writes has a story," but did not vouchsafe to tell what the story is in the work advanced by the conductor.

Let it here suffice that "Madona" has an abundance of Villa-Lobos' exoticism and flashing orchestral color. It mounts, on the basis of a broad lyrical phrase that might be construed as one of homage to life and its inherent divinity, to an imposing climax. It is rich if somewhat theatrical music, and it was obviously an open book for the commanding reading of Mr. de Carvalho.

He then, with the able assistance of Carol Brice for the contralto solo, played the complete "Amor Brujo" suite of de Falla, with abundant lyricism and fire. This reminded us again of what a gifted composer of music of Andalusia languor and dream de Falla was, before he allowed his natural creative gifts to be diluted and distorted by the councils of the Parisian neo-classicists.

Miss Brice, with the conductor, was repeatedly recalled. Three dance movements from the suite, "Nordestina," by a second Brazilian composer and countryman of the conductor, José Siquera, brought the end. This was performed with a fine gusto, and full advantage of its interesting rhythms and scoring.

This Clipping From BALTIMORE, MD.
NEWS-POST
AUG 9 - 1948

These Days

By GEORGE E. SOKOLSKY

THE LITTLE RED HOUSE

Up here in Sandisfield we go in for culture in a big way; that is, those of us who do not till the soil and chop down the trees for lumber.

And that goes back a long time to the days of Mark Hopkins, Oliver Wendell Holmes—not the justice but the philosopher—Herman Melville of "Moby Dick," William Cullen Bryant and Henry Wadsworth Longfellow.

So last Saturday we foregathered at the little red house where Nathaniel Hawthorne conceived the Tanglewood tales and where often Longfellow, Melville, Fanny Kemble and Hawthorne met to talk but even more to store in their memories the impress of the beauties of the Berkshires and of each other's personality.

HOUSE RESTORED

The little red house has been restored externally by the National Federation of Music Clubs.

Manning Hawthorne was there to represent his grandfather, Nathaniel, and Henry Wadsworth Longfellow Dana, whose maternal grandfather was the poet and whose paternal grandfather wrote "Two Years Before the Mast," delivered a brilliant and witty address prepared as only Harry can when he takes the trouble, which is not often enough.

BEST OF WEATHER

We were blessed with the best of Berkshire weather, as we sat in the shadow of Monument Mountain and looked across the lake and listened to Serge Koussevitzky accept the little house, which is to be used as studios for musicians who come to Tanglewood to improve themselves.

And this is so important because out of Tanglewood will in time come American composers, American conductors, and American artists and all the internationalism of its atmosphere will go by the board.

For no one can be in this New England long without becoming part of its rock and soil, without feeling the three centuries of America in the marrow of his bones.

POT OF GOLD

Just as in the middle nineteenth century, this very place produced for this country a lasting, indigenous American music.

That, indeed, is a pot of gold.

Sam T. Mallison takes me to task in a friendly spirit for not liking Presidential conventions. Well, when I want fun, I like it undiluted by intellectual hokum. But I do not like to mix fun with serious business.

A sense of humor has its place, and a sense of seriousness has its place. Holliganism, like the young lady flapdoodling during the Stassen demonstration, is neither fun nor serious business. It is just bad taste.

There is nothing traditional about this madness, which is pretty new in political history.

Mr. Mallison objects to my references to hired demonstrations. But I went to the place where three demonstrations were being prepared. I saw the Mummers. I talked to them. I saw them march into the aisles.

Mr. Mallison further says:

> "I agree with you that all the nominating and seconding speeches are tomfoolery and a waste of time, but so are practically all political speeches — I might even say all speeches."

CAN'T AGREE

I did not say that all nominating speeches are tomfoolery or that all political speeches are of that nature. Again Mr. Mallison generalizes from the particular.

I am sure that Congressman Judd's nominating speech for Harold Stassen was an oration of quality. Also, Herbert Hoover's speech and Tom Dewey's acceptance speech possessed marked oratorical and intellectual quality.

No, if we are to have fun, let us make it fun. Let us engage Abbott and Costello or Olson and Johnson to run the conventions. But if we adopt a platform for a country facing a debt of $253,000,000,000, and an annual budget that will run between $40 and $50 billions, let us not mix it with fun.

(Copyright, 1948, King Features Syndicate, Incorporated.)

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
AUG 9 - 1948

At Tanglewood

Sixth Symphony of Vaughan Williams Has U. S. Debut

By Francis D. Perkins

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 8.—The sixth symphony of Ralph Vaughan Williams, dean of English composers, had its first American performance in last night's Berkshire Festival Concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky's direction in Tanglewood music shed. In this afternoon's concert under Eleazar de Carvalho's conductorship, two Brazilian works were introduced to Tanglewood, "Madóna," a symphonic poem by Heitor Villa-Lobos, played for the first time in public, and three sections—congo, toada and coco—from Jose Siquiera's Nordestina's suite.

Dr. Koussevitzky opened yesterday's program with four parts of Serge Prokofieff's second Romeo and Juliet suite, and Richard Strauss's "Don Quixote," with Gregor Piatigorsky as solo cellist, followed the intermission. Besides the two works by his compatriots, Mr. De Carvalho also presented Berlioz's Fantastic symphony and Manuel De Falla's suite "El Amor Brujo" with Carol Brice as the singer in the afternoon concert.

The Vaughan Williams symphony is a remarkable work for a composer in his mid-seventies, but it is also noteworthy on its own account. Quite often when a composer is still active when well along in years he is likely to rework ideas and material of earlier compositions rather than to show a freshness of approach and an avoidance of retrospective summarizing. There is no impression of reworking or reminiscence, however, in this noteworthy symphony, which is a work of today rather than an echo of yesterday, the work of a composer whose style remains his own but has not become fixed and invariable; the atmosphere of the music is of today.

He began the symphony before the end of the war, and an English commentator says that the work first states what the composer felt about the war and then meditates upon an ideal peace with the agitated vigor of the first of the four connected movements, the plangency of the second, the turbulence of the third and the almost remote calm of the fourth. This interpretation is certainly admissible, but not necessary for an understanding of the music from an emotional point of view.

In harmonic and orchestral color the first three movements are more in the vein of Vaughan Williams fourth symphony, the most advanced of his previous works, than of the fifth. The scoring is often full, but not so as to give a sense of excessive and confused sonorities.

An occasional impression in the first three movements of weight in the brass choir can be ascribed to acoustic conditions in the forward rows of the music shed. At the end of the first movement an earlier theme becomes a broad melody of a model flavor, and here there is a note of outspoken confidence, contrasted with the expressive stress which precedes and follows.

In the finale all is different. Here there is the utmost delicacy of scoring, dominated by the higher strings, with lower registers and other choirs apparent only in the background as the prevailing idea is drawn out and meditated upon. This occupies twelve of the symphony's thirty-six minutes, and one can wonder whether the movement is spun out too long. At the same time, one can be impressed by its mood, which can suggest that the composer, having contemplated present times and circumstances, has now entered a world of his own thoughts and visions. At a first hearing, the symphony seems a strong and consequential work, while more likely to meet a varied reception than unanimous approval.

The performance under Dr. Koussevitsky's direction was eloquent and revealing, and, as expected, the interpretation of "Don Quixote" by Mr. Piatigorsky and the orchestra deserved high praise.

Mr. De Carvalho conducted student concerts in Tanglewood last summer and was a guest conductor of the Boston Symphony in Boston last season, but this was his first appearance in a regular Berkshire festival concert.

Mr. De Carvalho's conducting gave a general impression of significant talent and promise, especially in the two Brazilian works and in the De Falla suite, projected with pervasive spirit, vividness of color and communicativeness of the varied range of moods in the music in interpretations of convincing national flavor. In the Fantastic Symphony the young Brazilian conductor was at his best when the music was energetic and outspoken; there were climaxes of notable intensity in the first movement, but less expressive penetration in the introduction and at times in softer episodes later, while the second movement needed a lighter, more buoyant treatment. But the scene in the fields was persuasively performed, and the finale was played with interpretative understanding and vitality.

Villa-Lobos's "Madona" was composed in 1945 for the Koussevitzky Music Foundation. The composer has not enlarged upon the purport of his title, but the character of the music suggests a Brazilian subject. It's twelve-minute course is occupied by a brooding introduction, a lively dance of indigenous rhythms and a series of episodes of varying expressive color, scored in pronounced and effective orchestral hues. Jose Siquiera's Nordestina Suite is based on folk music from northeastern Brazil; the three dances offered were skilfully scored to project their essential folk quality.

Miss Brice's voice is well suited to the music of the De Falla suite and the locale and emotions of its subject, and the warmth and emotional sincerity of her singing matched the unusual expressive insight displayed by the conductor in this work. The two concerts had nearly equal attendance—9,700 on Saturday and 9,800 today.

Leonard Bernstein will conduct next Thursday night's festival concert. Saturday night there will be two choral works—De Bussey's "Blessed Damozel" and Brahms's "Requiem," with Robert Shaw conducting, and Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the closing concert next Sunday afternoon.

In the season's last orchestral student concert next Friday night Seymour Lipkin will conduct a new work for English horn and strings by Robert Kurka, a pupil of Darius Milhaud, composed in memory of the late Mrs. Andrew H. Hepburn, donor of the Tanglewood estate to the Boston Symphony.

In a cello recital Saturday afternoon Mr. Piatigorsky will give the first performance of a sonata composed by Paul Hindemuth last night.

This Clipping From COLUMBIA, PA.
NEWS
AUG 9 - 1948

MUSICAL SHRINE

The home of a man who had not the slightest interest in music has now become a musical shrine. This strange fate has come to Tanglewood, the western Massachusetts home of Nathaniel Hawthorne, who wrote there "The House of Seven Gables" and "Tanglewood Tales." For the last ten years it has been the headquarters of the Berkshire Festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the leadership of its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

Recently a reconstruction of Hawthorne's little red house was presented by the National Federation of Music Clubs to the orchestra to be used as a studio. Menning Hawthorne of North Woodstock, Conn., great-grandson of the writer, who was one of the speakers, referred to Nathaniel's indifference to music.

Even if Hawthorne was no music lover, he was a master craftsman in a kindred field, that of literature. Both lovers of literature and of music will applaud the generous action of the National Federation of Music Clubs, which insures the perpetual maintenance of one of America's notable literary shrines.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

AUG 9 - 1948

YOUNG CONDUCTOR SCORES AT LENOX

de Carvalho 'Wows' Throng at Tanglewood as He Leads His Mentor's Orchestra

By OLIN DOWNES

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 8—Eleazar de Carvalho conducted this afternoon's concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood. He is the second of Koussevitzky's conductor pupils to share the podium with his master during this festival.

When Dr. Koussevitzky was asked recently why, if he had decided not to conduct certain of the festival concerts himself he did not invite some veteran leader of international fame to substitute for him, he replied, "Because I have boys here of such talent and spirit that they will bring a special freshness and interest to their performances."

Judging by the reports of the performances that Leonard Bernstein has conducted, and the concert of this afternoon by Mr. de Carvalho, Dr. Koussevitzky did not make a mistake. For Mr. de Carvalho, conducting the Berlioz "Fantastic" symphony and work by Villa-Lobos, de Falla and Siquiera, had an exceptional success with an audience of some 9,800 persons.

This is the immediate fact, aside from the application of the critical yardstick in estimating the present stage of his prowess. He conducted entirely from memory, and he "wowed" the audience.

Emulated Teacher's Gestures

Mr. de Carvalho has an entirely different artistic personality than Mr. Bernstein, although, like Bernstein, he unconsciously emulated more or less the gestures and stylistic methods of Koussevitzky. He may prove to be the profounder talent of the two.

He conducts with apparent certainty and authority the scores that he memorizes with astonishing rapidity, and with the effect of having fully thought out and practically conveyed his intentions. In the worn old phrase, he knows what he wants, and gets it.

This is true, at least, so far as Mr. de Carvalho lets himself go. He does not wholly let himself go, and this, perhaps, with good reason, for he has a temperament more elemental and perhaps chaotic and emotional than it might be for his own best interest to let fly. He is studying with enormous industry, concentration and self-criticism.

It was believable, listening to him this afternoon, that he had not only reflected long and intensely on every note of the score, but had with equal intensity, and also humility, heeded the counsels of his teacher in the interpretation.

This induces certain restraints, occasional angularities and emotional inequalities—not enough to obscure the emotional and intellectual levels of the interpretation, which are very high, but enough to indicate a shade of immaturity, or at least stiffness.

Nor are Koussevitzky's finesses precisely up this young man's alley. He has a boiling temperament and immense virility so that he alternated occasionally between an over-refinement and self-restraint which characterized, for example, the first movement of the Berlioz symphony, and the sudden sense one had of release and the explosion of pent-up force in more turbulent passages. But these are limitations which do not obscure the communicative sincerity, vitality and effectiveness of his readings.

With the works of the second half of his program, all of them of a Latin character, by a Spaniard and South Americans, Mr. de Carvalho completed his success.

These are much simpler scores than the ones by Berlioz. Their exotic coloring and immediate effectiveness were a further asset in the situation.

New to this writer was the tone poem of Villa-Lobos, "Madona," written on commission of the Koussevitzky Music Foundation. What the poetical implications of this work may be remains unknown. The program book contented itself by quoting the words of Nicolas Slonimsky, to the effect that "every piece of music he (Villa-Lobos) writes has a story," but did not vouchsafe to tell what the story is in the work advanced by the conductor.

Let it here suffice that "Madona" has an abundance of Villa-Lobos' exoticism and flashing orchestral color. It mounts, on the basis of a broad lyrical phrase that might be construed as one of homage to life and its inherent divinity, to an imposing climax. It is rich if somewhat theatrical music, and it was obviously an open book for the commanding reading of Mr. de Carvalho.

He then, with the able assistance of Carol Brice for the contralto solo, played the complete "Amor Brujo" suite of de Falla, with abundant lyricism and fire. This reminded us again of what a gifted composer of music of Andalusian languor and dream de Falla was, before he allowed his natural creative gifts to be diluted and distorted by the councils of the Parisian neo-classicists.

Miss Brice, with the conductor, was repeatedly recalled. Three dance movements from the suite, "Nordestina," by a second Brazilian composer and countryman of the conductor, José Siquera, brought the end. This was performed with a fine gusto, and full advantage of its interesting rhythms and scoring.

This Clipping From BALTIMORE, MD.
NEWS-POST

AUG 9 - 1948

These Days

THE LITTLE RED HOUSE

By GEORGE E. SOKOLSKY

Up here in Sandisfield we go in for culture in a big way; that is, those of us who do not till the soil and chop down the trees for lumber.

And that goes back a long time to the days of Mark Hopkins, Oliver Wendell Holmes—not the justice but the philosopher—Herman Melville of "Moby Dick," William Cullen Bryant and Henry Wadsworth Longfellow.

So last Saturday we foregathered at the little red house where Nathaniel Hawthorne conceived the Tanglewood tales and where often Longfellow, Melville, Fanny Kemble and Hawthorne met to talk but even more to store in their memories the impress of the beauties of the Berkshires and of each other's personality.

HOUSE RESTORED

The little red house has been restored externally by the National Federation of Music Clubs.

Manning Hawthorne was there to represent his grandfather, Nathaniel, and Henry Wadsworth Longfellow Dana, whose maternal grandfather was the poet and whose paternal grandfather wrote "Two Years Before the Mast," delivered a brilliant and witty address prepared as only Harry can when he takes the trouble, which is not often enough.

BEST OF WEATHER

We were blessed with the best of Berkshire weather, as we sat in the shadow of Monument Mountain and looked across the lake and listened to Serge Koussevitzky accept the little house, which is to be used as studios for musicians who come to Tanglewood to improve themselves.

And this is so important because out of Tanglewood will in time come American composers, American conductors, and American artists and all the internationalism of its atmosphere will go by the board.

For no one can be in this New England long without becoming part of its rock and soil, without feeling the three centuries of America in the marrow of his bones.

POT OF GOLD

Just as in the middle nineteenth century, this very place produced for this country a lasting, indigenous American music.

That, indeed, is a pot of gold.

Sam T. Mallison takes me to task in a friendly spirit for not liking Presidential conventions. Well, when I want fun, I like it undiluted by intellectual hokum. But I do not like to mix fun with serious business.

A sense of humor has its place, and a sense of seriousness has its place. Holliganism, like the young lady flapdoodling during the Stassen demonstration, is neither fun nor serious business. It is just bad taste.

There is nothing traditional about this madness, which is pretty new in political history.

Mr. Mallison objects to my references to hired demonstrations. But I went to the place where three demonstrations were being prepared. I saw the Mummers. I talked to them. I saw them march into the aisles.

Mr. Mallison further says:

"I agree with you that all the nominating and seconding speeches are tomfoolery and a waste of time, but so are practically all political speeches — I might even say all speeches."

CAN'T AGREE

I did not say that all nominating speeches are tomfoolery or that all political speeches are of that nature. Again Mr. Mallison generalizes from the particular.

I am sure that Congressman Judd's nominating speech for Harold Stassen was an oration of quality. Also, Herbert Hoover's speech and Tom Dewey's acceptance speech possessed marked oratorical and intellectual quality.

No, if we are to have fun, let us make it fun. Let us engage Abbott and Costello or Olson and Johnson to run the conventions. But if we adopt a platform for a country facing a debt of $253,000,000,000, and an annual budget that will run between $40 and $50 billions, let us not mix it with fun.

(Copyright, 1948, King Features Syndicate, Incorporated.)

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

At Tanglewood

Sixth Symphony of Vaughan Williams Has U. S. Debut

By Francis D. Perkins

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 8.—The sixth symphony of Ralph Vaughan Williams, dean of English composers, had its first American performance in last night's Berkshire Festival Concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky's direction in Tanglewood music shed. In this afternoon's concert under Eleazar de Carvalho's conductorship, two Brazilian works were introduced to Tanglewood, "Madóna," a symphonic poem by Heitor Villa-Lobos, played for the first time in public, and three sections—congo, toada and coco—from Jose Siquiera's Nordestina's suite.

Dr. Koussevitzky opened yesterday's program with four parts of Serge Prokofieff's second Romeo and Juliet suite, and Richard Strauss's "Don Quixote," with Gregor Piatigorsky as solo cellist, followed the intermission. Besides the two works by his compatriots, Mr. De Carvalho also presented Berlioz's Fantastic symphony and Manuel De Falla's suite "El Amor Brujo" with Carol Brice as the singer in the afternoon concert.

The Vaughan Williams symphony is a remarkable work for a composer in his mid-seventies, but it is also noteworthy on its own account. Quite often when a composer is still active when well along in years he is likely to rework ideas and material of earlier compositions rather than to show a freshness of approach and an avoidance of retrospective summarizing. There is no impression of reworking or reminiscence, however, in this noteworthy symphony, which is a work of today rather than an echo of yesterday, the work of a composer whose style remains his own but has not become fixed and invariable; the atmosphere of the music is of today.

He began the symphony before the end of the war, and an English commentator says that the work first states what the composer felt about the war and then meditates upon an ideal peace, with the agitated vigor of the first of the four connected movements, the plangency of the second, the turbulence of the third and the almost remote calm of the fourth. This interpretation is certainly admissible, but not necessary for an understanding of the music from an emotional point of view.

In harmonic and orchestral color the first three movements are more in the vein of Vaughan Williams fourth symphony, the most advanced of his previous works, than of the fifth. The scoring is often full, but not so as to give a sense of excessive and confused sonorities.

An occasional impression in the first three movements of weight in the brass choir can be ascribed to acoustic conditions in the forward rows of the music shed. At the end of the first movement an earlier theme becomes a broad melody of a model flavor, and here there is a note of outspoken confidence, contrasted with the expressive stress which precedes and follows.

In the finale all is different. Here there is the utmost delicacy of scoring, dominated by the higher strings, with lower registers and other choirs apparent only in the background as the prevailing idea is drawn out and meditated upon. This occupies twelve of the symphony's thirty-six minutes, and one can wonder whether the movement is spun out too long. At the same time, one can be impressed by its mood, which can suggest that the composer, having contemplated present times and circumstances, has now entered a world of his own thoughts and visions. At a first hearing, the symphony seems a strong and consequential work, while more likely to meet a varied reception than unanimous approval.

The performance under Dr. Koussevitsky's direction was eloquent and revealing, and, as expected, the interpretation of "Don Quixote" by Mr. Piatigorsky and the orchestra deserved high praise.

Mr. De Carvalho conducted student concerts in Tanglewood last summer and was a guest conductor of the Boston Symphony in Boston last season, but this was his first appearance in a regular Berkshire festival concert.

Mr. De Carvalho's conducting gave a general impression of significant talent and promise, especially in the two Brazilian works and in the De Falla suite, projected with pervasive spirit, vividness of color and communicativeness of the varied range of moods in the music in interpretations of convincing national flavor. In the Fantastic Symphony the young Brazilian conductor was at his best when the music was energetic and outspoken; there were climaxes of notable intensity in the first movement, but less expressive penetration in the introduction and at times in softer episodes later, while the second movement needed a lighter, more buoyant treatment. But the scene in the fields was persuasively performed, and the finale was played with interpretative understanding and vitality.

Villa-Lobos's "Madona" was composed in 1945 for the Koussevitzky Music Foundation. The composer has not enlarged upon the purport of his title, but the character of the music suggests a Brazilian subject. It's twelve-minute course is occupied by a brooding introduction, a lively dance of indigenous rhythms and a series of episodes of varying expressive color, scored in pronounced and effective orchestral hues. Jose Siquiera's Nordestina Suite is based on folk music from northeastern Brazil; the three dances offered were skilfully scored to project their essential folk quality.

Miss Brice's voice is well suited to the music of the De Falla suite and the locale and emotions of its subject, and the warmth and emotional sincerity of her singing matched the unusual expressive insight displayed by the conductor in this work. The two concerts had nearly equal attendance—9,700 on Saturday and 9,800 today.

Leonard Bernstein will conduct next Thursday night's festival concert. Saturday night there will be two choral works—De Bussey's "Blessed Damozel" and Brahms's "Requiem," with Robert Shaw conducting, and Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the closing concert next Sunday afternoon.

In the season's last orchestral student concert next Friday night Seymour Lipkin will conduct a new work for English horn and strings by Robert Kurka, a pupil of Darius Milhaud, composed in memory of the late Mrs. Andrew H. Hepburn, donor of the Tanglewood estate to the Boston Symphony.

In a cello recital Saturday afternoon Mr. Piatigorsky will give the first performance of a sonata composed by Paul Hindemuth last night.

SHRINE

not the slightest interest in m shrine. This strange fate ha ern Massachusetts home of Na there "The House of Seven
Ga Tanglewood Tales." For the last ten years it has been the headquarters of the Berkshire Festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the leadership of its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

Recently a reconstruction of Hawthorne's little red house was presented by the National Federation of Music Clubs to the orchestra to be used as a studio. Menning Hawthorne of North Woodstock, Conn., great-grandson of the writer, who was one of the speakers, referred to Nathaniel's indifference to music.

Even if Hawthorne was no music lover, he was a master craftsman in a kindred field, that of literature. Both lovers of literature and of music will applaud the generous action of the National Federation of Music Clubs, which insures the perpetual maintenance of one of America's notable literary shrines.

This Clipping From

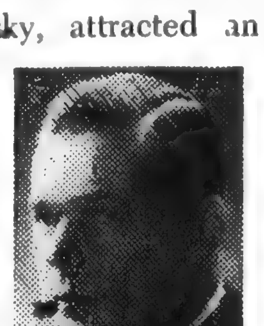
This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
~~PM~~
STAR
AUG 9 - 1948

Music

Vaughan Williams' Sixth Has Premiere

By Robert A. Hague

LENOX, Mass. Aug. 8 — The seventh concert of the Berkshire Festival, given Saturday evening at Tanglewood by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the baton of Serge Koussevitzky, attracted an audience of 9700. The 6300 seats in the huge music shed were filled and the remaining thousands listened to the music on the surrounding lawns, huddled in coats and blankets — for it was an uncommonly chilly evening for August.



Hague

Dr. Koussevitzky's program was made up of works by three living composers of three different nationalities. Russia was represented by the second suite from Serge Prokofiev's ballet, Romeo and Juliet; Germany by Richard Strauss' Don Quixote, and England by Ralph Vaughan Williams Symphony No. 6, in E minor, which was receiving its first American performance.

* * *

Vaughan Williams' Sixth Symphony finds the distinguished, 75-year-old British composer not only at the height of his technical powers as a maker of music, but also with a deal to say that is original and arresting, and with a remarkably virile, inventive and eloquent way of saying it. It is an immediately accessible, notably mature and cogent work, extensive in design and substantial in content, unhurriedly, logically and convincingly developed. And in its final movement, the epilogue, its composer reaches beyond anything he has done before, creating music of an unearthly and mystical quality that is at once serenely moving and disturbingly prophetic.

Begun during the war years, in 1943, and completed in 1947, the Sixth Symphony reflects in no uncertain way the turbulence and tragedy of its time. There is a great deal of violence, vehemently and powerfully expressed, in its first three movements. Conflict and contrast mark its vigorous opening Allegro and the more discursive Moderato which follows. Passages that are happily bucolic and pastoral. or quietly poetic and reflective, alternate with ones that are stormy and troubled. Simple, spacious and long-breathed melodies in the strings and woodwinds often are lacerated by quick, warlike rhythms or cut off by fanfare and brasses. The third movement, the Scherzo, becomes predominantly warlike and strident in character, almost brutal and oppressive in mood. To this, the muted, many-voiced and extended epilogue, which follows without pause, comes as an especially striking contrast. Here is music of extraordinary peacefulness and quietude, almost celestial in quality, and sometimes dying down to a tiny, shimmering whisper in the strings and the woodwinds. But though it is serene, it is also touched with renunciation and a feeling of hopelessness. It is as if man's day in the world were over and only the gentle echo of his music remained to mingle with the vast silences of a wasted and empty land.

* * *

Dr. Koussevitzky's and the orchestra's presentation of the Vaughan Williams Symphony was an admirable one, the signs of careful preparation being evident in its everywhere impeccable execution. The same high order of performance was also accorded the Prokofiev Romeo and Juliet excerpts and the Strauss tone poem. All three were warmly received by the audience, which recalled Dr. Koussevitzky many times for bows.

In Strauss' Don Quixote, the fantastic variations on a theme of knightly character were unfolded with ebullient and telling virtuosity by the orchestra and by the two soloists—Gregor Piatigorsky, whose cello voiced the utterances of the Mad Knight, and Joseph De Pasquale, whose viola did the same for his squire, Sancho Panza. The piece itself does not wear too well, and after a number of hearings, seems over-long and a bit tedious. Besides, there is a trace too much of maliciousness and cruelty in the music, which is not quite compensated by its genuine humor and by the brilliance of its instrumentation.

* * *

Brazilian Conductor Conquers Tanglewood

LENOX, Mass.—A warm, sunny afternoon drew a crowd of 9800 to Tanglewood Sunday, when Eleazar de Carvalho took over the podium, directing a program that opened with Berlioz's Symphonie Fantastique and closed with music by Spanish and Brazilian composers.

de Carvalho

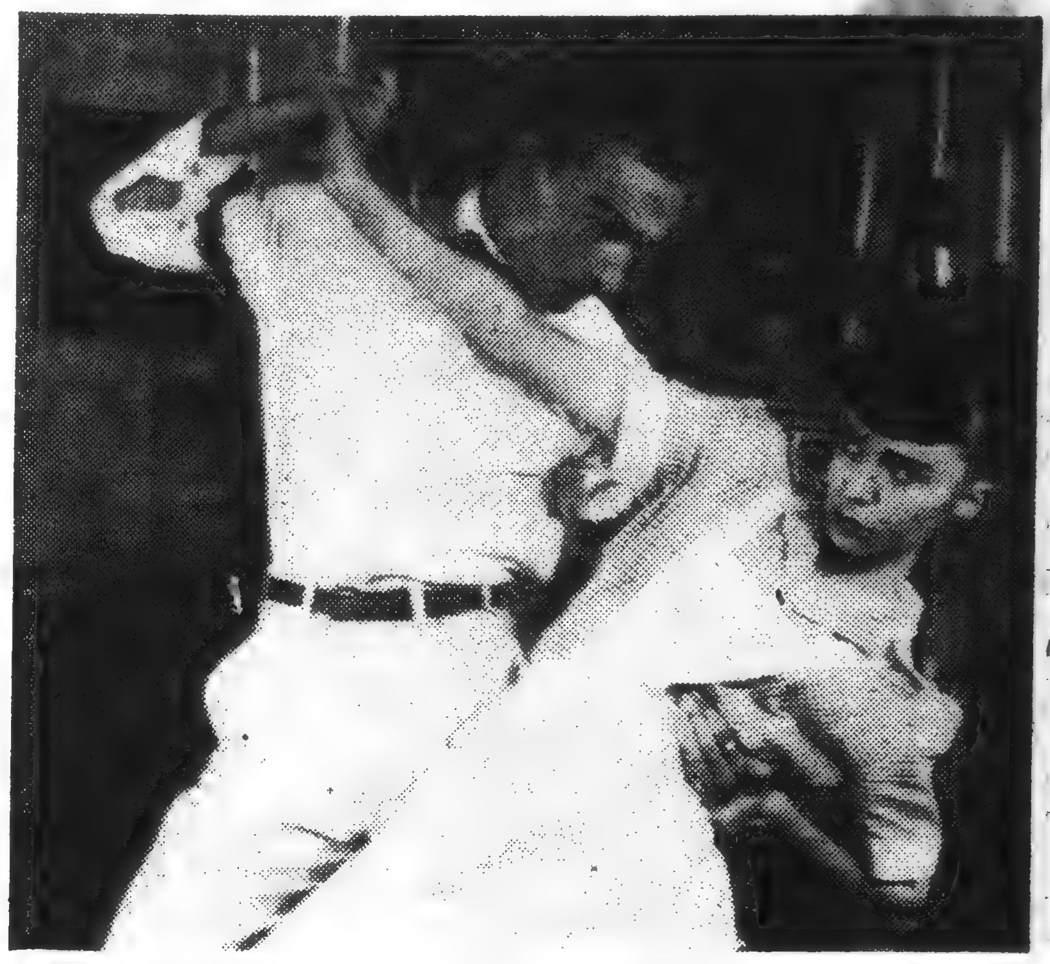
The stocky, 33-year-old Brazilian, who made his Tanglewood debut last summer and conducted the Boston Symphony for two weeks during its regular winter season, again demonstrated that he is an unusually able and energetic director with a flair for the dramatic. By means of graphic body movements and facial expression, he manages to transmit a good deal of his own passion and vitality to the players. Conducting the many-sectioned, complex Berlioz masterpiece without a score, he brought out much of its vivid descriptive coloring, emphasized the dramatic power and impact of such sections as the March to the Scaffold and underlined the fiendish humors and eerie horrors of the concluding Witches' Sabbath. Under his enkindling direction in the latter, the Boston Brass Choir blazed an especially steady and blistering heat, and the finale was greeted by the audience with thunderous applause, in which Concert Master Burgin and the other musicians joined when Dr. de Carvalho took the bows.

* * *

The young Brazilian conductor had an equal success with the items from his native land and with the wonderful Andalusian-flavored music of the suite from Manuel de Falla's El Amor Brujo, in which he shared the spotlight with Carol Brice, the distinguished young American contralto. Her rich, dramatic voice was heard with fine effect in the vocal parts of the Falla score, and the conductor rewarded her at the conclusion by gracefully kissing her hand.

The two Brazilian pieces on the program, both new to this listener, were enormously skillful and engaging works, worthy of many future rehearings. Villa-Lobos' symphonic poem, Madona, is characteristically bright-hued and intensely lyrical. The three excerpts from Siqueira's Nordestina Suite should prove popular with American audiences. One is a strongly syncopated congo, a ceremonial dance of Afro-Brazilian origin; another is a charming, song-like toada, derived from the folk music of Northeast Brazil, and the third a lively and orgiastic coco, a Brazilian instrumental dance based on Afro-Amerindian rhythms.

—R. A. H.



'HIGH BUTTON SHOES': Helen Gallagher and Donald Saddler dance the tango in the hit musical which celebrates its 350th performance this evening at the Shubert Theatre.

This Clipping From DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS
AUG 1 0 1948

MUSIC: The final broadcast of the Berkshire Musical Festival will offer an all-Tchaikovsky program with Serge Koussevitzky conduction. (WFAA-570, and WFAA-FM at 8:30 p.m.). Included on the program will be the composer's Concerto No. 1 in B Flat Minor, and his "1812" Overture. . . . F composer.

~~HARTFORD TIMES~~

Carvalho Brings Out Best In Orchestra at Tanglewood

Special to The Hartford Times

Lenox, Mass.—There was a new conductor and much new music in the weekend concerts at Tanglewood.

Sunday afternoon Eleazar de Carvalho introduced the symphonic poem "Madona" by Villa Lobos, Siqueira's Conga, Toada and Coco from the Suite "Nordestina" along with the familiar de Falla's El Amor Brujo but his talents as a conductor were best measured in so constantly challenging a work as Berlioz' "Fantastic Symphony."

It is long enough to be dull unless the interpreter perceives the lesser beauties as well as the more obvious ones; Carvalho found much important detail. It is packed with drama but not of the fustian and grease paint kind. This director, who omitted the calisthenics, produced nevertheless a fine state of tension which put the Boston Orchestra on its mettle and kept the listeners at chair's edge.

* * *

CONDUCTING without score and without baton, he established his authority over the orchestra which produced for him a fine tone, rhythmic aliveness and flooding crescendos of which he seems to be fond.

In both concerts there was a good deal of story telling music. The hectic imaginings of Beldioz' frustrated love life culminating in the grisly March to the Scaffold and the Witches' Sabbath, were terrifically real to the composer. For the objective listener it was mainly to marvel over the brilliance of the orchestral prism and the sweep of narrative power.

The premiere of a Vaughan Williams symphony is an event of major importance. The anticipation which builds up runs into a dissappointment risk unless the new work prove itself a worthy companion to the "London" and "Sea" symphonies whose impact came at a time when the composer rated as a modern. The Sixth Symphony sounded like something in the Elgar tradition with overtones of Sibelius; to that extent it was a dissappointment. It did have feeling and a sense of purpose; in that respect it sounded more important than most of the unfamiliar music we have been hearing at Tanglewood.

* * *

HERE'S THE WAY it sounded to me: The orchestra was divided against itself, string choir and brass choir, protagonist and antagonist. These divisions, while not in literal discord, never were reconciled. It didn't take a great deal of imagination to think of the clamorous, truculent brass section in terms of war's alarms, the strings as humanity in tribulation. The symphony began tumultuously and over the four movements tended to subside, not into a state of peace but rather an anxious, negative state of absence of hostility.

To find such a feeling of tireless waiting on the brink of despair this symphony conveyed you have to go to the introduction to the third act of Tristan and Isolde. The epilogue in which the end, like hope, was all but too long deferred, evoked that fitful half-awake state which never quite emerges from troubled sleep. The whole symphony sounds like the work of a tired, disconsolate and worried Englishman.

This was not image-making music in the same sense as the Don Quixote variations of Strauss which found place on the Saturday night program. The adventures of a zany knight against windmills and marching sheep were admirably depicted, with Gregor Piatigorsky's solo cello capturing the pathos of the soul that is mad and without guile because it is also sweet.

It was downright cold Saturday night, calling for coats and hot coffee; Sunday was agreeably warm. Crowds continue around the ten thousand mark.

—C. E. I.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
AUG 1 0 1948

Sparkling Rossini Opera Presented by Goldovsky

A little-known Rossini opera, "The Turk in Italy," tailored by Boris Goldovsky, is as excellent an example of good critical principles put into practice as it is possible to find today.

Well-known for his discussions of what makes opera tick during the Metropolitan broadcasts in the winter, Mr. Goldovsky last night at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood showed how well he can create and conduct.

* * *

HE HAS TAKEN the commonplaces of plot complication and made them the gist of a story that is a little gem of organization, and sustained humor. An 18th Century poet is writing a play. The characters he creates or borrows from other plays come to life and refuse to abide by the situations he takes from Metastasio. They create their own complications like Pinocchio.

The wonder is that this neat and sparkling idea is never exaggerated, never cute, never flat, and always surprising.

Rossini's music is exuberant, the setting for virtuosity. The Tanglewood students who presented last night's performance from stage and pit are not virtuosos, but they are adept, confident, well-equipped, and were more high sprited than sophisticated. From the moment she stepped on the stage, June Gardner, as the wife, sang, if not like a nightingale, then like our native Wilson thrush. She is bold, and electrifying. Her soprano is so dashing that many of the fine details of coloratura singing are hurried over.

* * *

HER TURK, Marshall Heinbaugh, had a clear baritone, and Arthur Schoep as the husband was in excellent character. The Lover, costumed from a Renaissance painting, was David Lloyd, whose tenor was used con amore. The Poet himself, Francis Barnard, acted with discretion and wit. As the Gypsy who adds a final complication, Adele Addison had a chance to display a pure soprano to advantage.

Mr. Goldovsky laughs at as well as with Rossini. The English translation which Mr. Goldovsky liberally rearranged is witty, and from beginning to end, with its little ode to Art, coherent in style.

The audience, which included Serge Koussevitzky and music critics from the eastern seaboard, was enthusiastic. "The Turk in Italy" contains all the charm of Rossini's music, though not his most brilliant, and the story now is perfectly presentable. Welcome not to Italy, Turk, but to the repertory.

A. B.

This Clipping From
HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT TELEGRAM
AUG 10 1948

Koussevitzky Autograph Hunters Sent to Carvalho

Lenox, Aug. 10 (AP)—Music patrons of the Boston symphony's Berkshire festival are busy writing postcards to friends to tell them this dressing room scene for two conductors.

The young Brazilian maestro, Eleazar de Carvalho, was being crowded by autograph hunters after his concert which included works of Villa Lobos and Siqueira, his compatriot composers.

The hunters turned when Boston's noted Conductor Serge Koussevitzky entered and congratulated de Carvalho.

Koussevitzky brushed away the autograph books, suddenly pointed at him and said, smilingly:

"Why do you ask my autograph? I came here simply to attend the concert like you. I had no more to do with the work than you."

The autograph hunters went back to de Carvalho.

[254]

Babbitt

A KISS FOR CAROL: Brazilian Eleazar de Carvalho used the South American way to pay tribute to Carol Brice after her performance as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon in the De Falla suite from "El Amor Brujo," which Carvalho conducted at Tanglewood in the final concert of the second series.

Eagle Aug 9

Carvalho Is Acclaimed In Debut at Festival

19,500 Turn Out for Saturday and Sunday Concerts at Tanglewood but Attendance Runs 5000 Behind 1947 Record

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

TANGLEWOOD—Eleazar de Carvalho, heretofore successively student and instructor at the Berkshire Music Center, made his Tanglewood debut yesterday afternoon as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the final concert of the second week end of the 11th Berkshire Festival. A crowd of 9800 turned out yesterday afternoon while 9700 attended the Saturday night concert.

Attendance Takes Drop

Attendance at the week-end concerts took a sharp drop in comparison to the second series a year ago when 27,000 turned out for the Saturday night and Sunday afternoon performances. The Festival is running about 5000 behind last year's attendance record when 65,100 took in the first seven concerts, compared to 60,200 this year.

Carvalho has had considerable experience conducting in his native Brazil. He made his professional debut in the United States last winter when he conducted the Boston orchestra for two weeks, at which time the Berlioz "Fantastic Symphony," as yesterday, was one of the major works he selected.

He also included, quite properly, several numbers by Brazilian composers or associated with the country, and these proved to be both illuminating and engaging in their color and rhythm. An initial performance of a new symphonic poem "Madona" by his fellow countryman, Heitor Villa-Lobos, and, later, another product of Brazil, three rhythmic sketches from a suite called "Nordestina," by Jose Siqueira, were indicative of the advanced state of music in that country. To complete the picture, he also played "El Amor Brujo" of Manuel de Falla, with the contralto, Carol Brice, singing the solos. De Falla, while a Spaniard by birth, was the inspiration of much South American music, and, indeed, passed the final few years of his life there.

It was a trifle unfortunate that the Siquera dances came at the very end of the program, for their charm, a bit barbaric, lost some of its impact by falling on tried and tired ears. The program had started two hours before Carvalho raised his baton for this last group. However, it was one of the most revealing of the characteristic music of Brazil, with its provocative and tantalizing pace.

Miss Brice Effective

Miss Brice sang with warm and intensely dramatic feeling for the few assignments the score allows. Her grasp of the nature of the music was easily apparent and with the beauty of her voice made her singing most effective. Those who remember one of her very early recitals in Pittsfield only a few years ago rejoice with her in the progress she has made in her musical stature.

Carvalho is a serious and very able conductor. His gestures are for musical significance only and his control of the orchestra is based on a thorough and profound understanding of the music he chose. Each number he directed was given an integrated performance, with a keen sense of dynamics. It was extremely colorful in the more excited and forceful moments and only lacks but a degree of imagination to make the peaceful passages more vivid. His rhythmic ideas are sound and valid but can still be expanded, as witness the lovely Berlioz waltz and

Carvalho
Continued on Second Page

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
AUG 10 1948

Rare Rossini Opera Given at Tanglewood

By RAYMOND MORIN

LENOX, Tuesday—"The Turk in Italy," an opera in two acts and eight scenes, by Rossini, was presented by the opera department of the Berkshire Music Center last night in the theater-concert hall at Tanglewood. This was the first American performance of this long-forgotten production in more than one hundred years.

I said "The Turk in Italy" was by Rossini and that is true but only in one sense. As Boris Goldovsky explained in a pre-curtain speech, the music is by Rossini but is a potpourri of extracts from various Rossini productions. The text by Felice Romani has been considerably altered "to make it credible," and Mr. Goldovsky has reassigned the importance of the roles so that the part of the poet which was a secondary one in the original production has now become the lead.

The Story

The original story concerned a young Turk who finds himself alone among Christians. Shipwrecked on the Italian coast, the youthful infidel reaches land and falls in love with the first pretty woman who crosses his path. The pretty woman, after the fashion, has a husband and a lover. She torments them both by affecting an interest in the Turkish stranger.

Mr. Goldovsky has introduced a new and inspired idea in handling this sequence of events which remains essentially the same. The poet, who originally was a part of the background, becomes the central character. He stands between the stage and the audience and unravels the plot as he goes along.

Series of Episodes

This role is largely recitative and was well-handled last night by Francis Barnard. He depicts a series of episodes in which he introduces individually the main characters. Some of them he brings on stage as mannequins whom he brings to life, and then places in their proper settings. Each of them then carries the plot forward in a story he spins for the audience as he goes along.

Most of the opening action of each sequence takes place before the curtain and is smoothly transferred into the main action as the curtain parts. This idea is novel, imaginative, and curiously enough the threads between episodes retain greater continuity than one would expect. Whether this would be so if the opera were not performed in English I can't say, but I doubt it.

An early scene showing a seashore episode, brought the charming voice of Adele Addison to the stage. As the most prominent of the chorus of gypsies, she sang beautifully and performed her role with verve and conviction. Miss Addison, a Springfield girl, who has made great strides by her appearance with Mr. Goldovsky's Boston productions of the New England Opera Theater Guild, last night added Tanglewood honors to her record.

Other Performers

Arthur Schoep was convincingly frustrated and resentful as the husband, but short of excellent in his diction. June Gardner was visually and vocally ornamental as the fickle wife. Rossini gave her a generous share of vocalistics customarily assigned the coloraturas of that period. Miss Gardner sang the highly ornate score with a measure of virtuosity but lacked a richness of tone that became apparent in sustained tones.

Marshall Heinbaugh was picturesque as the well-draped Turk and sang with excellent tone and ease of style. David Lloyd, looking very cherubic indeed as the lover, did his best singing thus far in this festival. His diction and tone were not only excellent but he infused the role with a conspicuous verve.

The chorus managed itself with spontaneity and unanimity of movement. Its ensemble singing is what you might expect of a group of skilled singers.

Beautiful Settings

The settings by Nassan Abiskhairoun were beautifully executed. They are models of simplicity but highly effective and illusionary. The young Egyptian sculptor and designer was discovered by Mr. Goldovsky last Winter and his first Tanglewood assignment has been well fulfilled.

Credit in abundance is also due Leo van Witsen for imaginative, tasteful, and colorful costumes. Listed on the long production staff is the name of Claire Wilson without whose clever lighting Mr. Abiskhairoun's settings would have been less striking.

Had the Metropolitan Opera not folded it is doubtful if "The Turk in Italy" would have been added to its repertory. It is essentially a production for the intimate presentation of a small hall. Its music is in the main pattering and its arias have a sameness of coloratura style.

Good Orchestra

In spite of Mr. Goldovsky's masterful assemblage of this material, it does give an episodic impression that strikes at the unanimity of the production as a whole. The orchestral score is typically Rossini without the benefit of outstanding quality, as is found in "The Barber of Seville." The overture contains the best of the orchestral music and was well-played by the student orchestra. With the exception of occasional excesses of tone during the vocal solos the orchestra provided good backgrounds as well.

"The Turk in Italy" is light but good entertainment and should prove a rewarding vehicle for performance by enterprising companies who seek the adventure of new repertory.

A second performance, again for an invited audience of Berkshire Music Center friends, will be given on Wednesday evening. There will be three changes in cast—James Pease will sing the poet Robert Goss the husband; David Garen the lover.

Tonight the Boston Symphony, under Serge ~~Koussevitzky, will~~ present an all-Tchaikowsky program in the shed. Seymour Lipkin will be piano soloist in the "Pianoforte Concerto in B-Flat."

This Clipping From HOUSTON, TEX.
POST
AUG 10 1948

Eight Soloists Picked For Berkshire Festival

BOSTON, Aug. 9.—(Sp)—Eight singers, all of them American born and trained, will appear as soloists at the Berkshire Festival this summer, Serge Koussevitzky, music director of the [illegible]ston Symphony orchestra, announced Saturday.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
AUG 10 1948

Famed Cellist Will Be Heard At Tanglewood

Piatigorsky Introduces New Hindemith Sonata Saturday

Two concerts at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, will attract more than usual notice this coming week end. In a recital Saturday afternoon at 3.30 Gregor Piatigorsky, assisted by Ralph Berkowitz, pianist, will introduce a new sonata, written last spring for Mr. Piatigorsky by Paul Hindemith. At their last symphony concert Friday evening the advanced orchestra will play an elegy composed in memory of the late Mrs. Andrew H. Hepburn, who presented Tanglewood to the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The tribute to Mrs. Hepburn was written at Tanglewood in the past three weeks by Robert Kurka, pupil in composition of Darius Milhaud. Composed for performance by English horn and strings, it will be conducted by Seymour Lipkin, pupil of Serge Koussevitzky. Born in Cicero, Ill., 26 years ago, the young composer studied at Columbia University. His wife, May, a pianist and teacher of piano, is also a student at the Center.

GREGOR PIATIGORSKY

Mrs. Hepburn and her aunt, Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan, gave the estate of her grandparents, the late Mr. and Mrs. Richard Dixey, and their children and grandchildren, to the orchestra in the fall of 1936. After one more season in the tent, a Music Shed was built on the property in 1938, and later the theater-concert and chamber music halls, studios and other buildings. The original house, one of the earliest summer homes of Berkshire County, is used for administration and studios. Mrs. Hepburn's family will attend the memorial concert.

Mr. Piatigorsky, noted cellist, who heads the chamber music department of the school and is on the faculty of the Curtis Institute, Philadelphia, will include in his program Beethoven's "Sonata in A Major" and Schumann's "Fantasiestucke." Mr. Berkow[illegible], executive assistant to Dr. Kousse[illegible]tzky, director of the Center, was soloist in the Bach concert opening

[255]

This Clipping From
Cir. (D 90,684) (S 103,091)

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES-UNION

AUG 10 1948

10,000 Hear Young Brazilian at Tanglewood

By EDGAR S. VAN OLINDA

Ideal weather conditions over at Tanglewood, Sunday afternoon brought out an audience, inside and outside the great shed of some 10,000 music lovers. Elezar de Carvalho, young Brazilian conductor, making his Tanglewood debut with the Boston Symphony orchestra presented a program which was evenly divided between the "immense symphony" by Belioz and works by the modern composers of Latin-America, Villa-Lobos, de Falla and Siqueira.

Mr. de Carvalho's tenchnic closely resembles that of Dr. Koussevitzky who beamed approval from his box in the first tier. The Berlioz symphony, remarkable for its vitality and colorful orchestration (it was composed in 1830) was given vigorous and understanding treatment by the conductor of the day.

As was to be expected the three South American numbers on the second half of the program called into play every principal and subordinate instrument in the orchestra, with Carol Brice, Negro contralto lending her superb vocal and intellectual gifts to the incidental solos in "Love, the Sorcerer" by de Falla.

Saturday night's program included the Prokofieff "Romeo and Juliet" ballot suite; the Vaughan Williams symphony, No. 6 and the spritely Strauss fantasy, "Don Quixot," the latter featuring Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist as the "voice" of the knightly Don. The Vaughan Williams work, rather hard to digest by those who relish a followable melody, was novertheless, interesting from the fact that the English composer, at the age of 76 felt called upon to write in the idiom of the present decade. Dr. Koussevitzky conducted with his usual flair.

Tonight's extra concert, an "All Tchaikowsky" program, will offer the "Pathetique" symphony; the piano concerto, No. 1 with Seymour Lipkin, soloist and the "1812" overture. The City club is arranging bus transportation from its club house, leaving at six o'clock and returning after the concert. Reservations may be made by calling Albany 4-4647.

Cir. (D 339,815) (S ...)

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

AUG 10 1948

Tanglewood Opera

Rossini's 'The Turk in Italy' Heard After 108 Years

By Francis D. Perkins

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 9.—Rossini's comic opera, "The Turk in Italy," had its first American performance in 108 years tonight in the theater at Tanglewood by the Berkshire music center's opera department before a capacity audience. This was the department's third annual production of an unfamiliar opera. It had introduced Britten's "Peter Grimes" to America in 1946, and staged Mozart's "Idomeneo" last summer.

Boris Goldovsky, head of the deparement, doubled as conductor and stage director, and also supplied an English version of Felice Romani's libretto for this production of Rossini's long forgotten opera, which was first produced in Milan in 1814. The cast included Marshall Heinbaugh for the barytone title role of Selim the Turk. Adele Addison and June Gardner sang the soprano roles of Zaida and Giorilla; David Lloyd, tenor, was Narciso; Arthur Schoep was Geronio, Fiorilla's husband, and Francis Barnard was the bass-barytone poet.

"The Turk in Italy" long ranked among the operas of Rossini which had their day and then were forgotten. Mr. Goldovsky attributes this oblivion to the outmoded nature and loose structure of the plots, and one aim of his editing of "The Turk" has been to increase the persuasiveness of the story for a modern audience.

"The Turk," which antedates the well known "Barber of Seville" by three years, appeared the year after "The Italian in Algiers," which the Metropolitan revived twenty-eight years ago and which has a somewhat similar story. It was performed in Italy and many other countries of Europe during the twenty years after its Milan premiere, but, according to Loewenberg's "Annals of Opera," has not been revived in Italy since 1882. In New York it figured in Manuel Garcia's season at the Park Theater, in March, 1826; it was also heard again in December, 1840, but, so far as is known, has not since been heard in the United States.

The idea of giving it at Tanglewood was suggested to Mr. Goldovsky by Helmuth Wolfes, who was doing some research on the opera. A manuscript copy of the score was found in Boston's Symphony Hall among a collection of scores brought from Palermo by Henry L. Higginson, the Boston Symphony's founder. No full score could be obtained in Italy, but another partial score was found in the Boston Public library, and piano scores were also found in Boston and at Harvard University.

These scores are the basis for Mr. Goldovsky's version, in which Mr. Wolfes has supplied orchestrations where they were not available in the existing material. In changing the order of certain numbers for dramatic reasons, he points out that he is following the practice of Rossini himself, who moved a complete quintet from "The Turk" into a later opera, "La Gazzetta."

A review of the music itself and the performance, which will be repeated on Wednesday night, must await Wednesday's issue of the Herald Tribune.

Herald

MUSIC

Aug 10

Berkshire Festival

The second weekend of the Berkshire Festival was given at Tanglewood with concerts Saturday evening and this afternoon. Serge Koussevitzky conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Saturday night, Eleazar de Carvalho on Sunday. Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist, was the soloist on the former occasion, Carol Brice, contralto, on the latter. The programs are as follows:

"Romeo and Juliet" Suite No 2	Prokofieff
Symphony No. 6	Vaughan Williams
"Don Quixote"	Strauss
Fantastic Symphony	Berlioz
Madona	Villa Lobos
"Nordestina" Suite No. 1	Siquera
"El Amor Brujo"	Falla

By ELINOR HUGHES

LENOX, Aug. 8—Two perfect days, one of them sufficiently cool for the thermometer to drop close to what felt like the freezing point and for the ladies — those forehanded enough—to don their mink coats, brought large crowds to the Saturday night and Sunday afternoon concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the shed at Tanglewood. Serge Koussevitzky conducted the Saturday concert, which featured the American premiere of Vaughan Williams Symphony No. 6. The young Brizilian conductor, Eleazar de Carvalho, led the orchestra this afternoon in a program featuring the work of two of his fellow countrymen, Villa-Lobos and Siqueira, in addition to Berlioz' fantastic symphony, and Manuel de Falla's suite from "El Amor Brujo," with Carol Brice, contralto, as soloist.

The Vaughan Williams Symphony was begun in 1944, finished in 1947 and had its first performance in the Royal Albert Hall in London last April by the BBC Symphony Orchestra with Sir Adrian Boult conducting. At that time it was received with great enthusiasm by the London press and public, partly, one suspects, because of the high and deserved esteem in which the 75-year-old composer is regarded in England and partly because of the quality of the music itself. How it will appeal to American concert goers remains to be seen. The performance by Mr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra was one of luminous beauty and clarity; the singing tone of strings and the brilliance of the woodwinds and brass cannot be done justice to in a short space of time, but there is going to be a great difference of opinion regarding the intrinsic value of the music itself.

Begun by the composer while war was still raging over his country, it begins in stormy, passionate vein, as though the instruments were shouting their defiance of the guns seeking to silence them in a thunder of total destruction. You might interpret as the composer's own expression of the imperishable qualities of the human spirit in the face of disaster, or as his interpretation of the impact of war on his own creed. It is, for much of the Symphony's length, confident and affirmative music, but as the work draws on to the close, the mood changes to one of still, quiet beauty—call it the peace of exhaustion or the expression of serene joy in the end of war. The impression is antimactic, however and a lady sitting near me expressed the feelings of many by saying, a little ruefully, that "if this was peace, she had to admit that war was more exciting."

Mr. Koussevitzky began the concert with a spirited performance of Prokofieff's Second Suite from his "Romeo and Juliet" Ballet—a work which is extremely effective, if far more Russian in feeling that Elizabethan or Italian; and concluded the evening's pleasures with his characteristically fine rendering of Strauss's "Don Quixote," with Gregor Piatigorsky at the peak of his great talents in the solo 'cello part, and Joseph de Pasquale assiting notably on the viola.

The Sunday afternoon concert opened with an excellent performance of the Berlioz Fantastic Symphony, whose dramatic and romantic qualities were admirably brought out by Mr. De Carvalho. The second and third movements, the waltz and the scene in the meadows had a most lovely lyrical quality, and the March to the Scaffold and Witches' Sabbath were rendered with unabashed fire and fury. Villa-Lobos' Madona, characteristic of the composer's lush, lavish style, seemed by comparison not overly interesting; while Jose Siqueira's Nordestina Suite had a lively, folk music content that pleased the audience greatly and should win much popularity for the work in the future. Falla's "El Amor Brujo" is a work of unfailing brilliance and fire; the conductor and composer, assisted by Miss Brice in the contralto solo part, gave it a performance of fine quality and understanding.

This Clipping From
FINDLAY, OHIO
REPUBLICAN COURIER

AUG 10 1948

MUSICAL SHRINE

The home of a man who had not the slightest interest in music has now become a musical shrine. This strange fate has come to Tanglewood, the western Massachusetts home of Nathaniel Hawthorne, who wrote there "The House of Seven Gables" and "Tanglewood Tales". For the last ten years it has been the headquarters of the Berkshire Festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the leadership of its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

Recently a reconstruction of Hawthorne's little red house was presented by the National Federation of Music clubs to the orchestra to be used as a studio. Menning Hawthorne of North Woodstock, Conn., great- grandson of the writer, who was one of the speakers, referred to Nathaniel's indifference to music.

Even if Hawthorne was no music lover, he was a master craftsman in a kindred field, that of literature. Both lovers of literature and of music will applaud the generous action of the National Federation of Music Clubs, which insures the perpetual maintenance of one of America's notable literary shrines.

---

the Berkshire Festival. He also is a member of the Curtis faculty.

Friday night's program will include Vivaldi's "Concerto Grosso in D Minor", Palmer's K-19, Glazunoff's Violin Concerto, Sebastiani's "Fiesta" and Rimsky-Korsakov's "Scheherazade".

Both concerts will be open to friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

This Clipping From
BETHLEHEM, PA.
GLOBE-TIMES

AUG 10 1948

Musical Shrine

The home of a man who had not the slightest interest in music has now become a musical shrine. This strange fate has come to Tanglewood, the western Massachusetts home of Nathaniel Hawthorne, who wrote there "The House of Seven Gables" and "Tanglewood Tales." For the last ten years it has been the headquarters of the Berkshire Festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the leadership of its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

Recently a reconstruction of Hawthorne's little red house was presented by the National Federation of Music Clubs to the orchestra to be used as a studio. Menning Hawthorne of North Woodstock, Conn., great-grandson of the writer, who was one of the speakers, referred to Nathaniel's indifference to music.

Even if Hawthorne was no music lover, he was a master craftsman in a kindred field, that of literature. Both lovers of literature and of music will applaud the generous action of the National Federation of Music Clubs, which insures the perpetual maintenance of one of America's notable literary shrines.

This Clipping From
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD JOURNAL

AUG 10 1948

Good Listening

By The Listener

WITH THE fourth and final airing from the Berkshire Music Festival (9:30 tonight, WAGE), the Boston Symphony Orchestra will conclude its 1947-48 season with an all-Tchaikovsky program conducted by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

[256]

(S 103,091)

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES-UNION

AUG 1 0 1948

10,000 Hear Young Brazilian at Tanglewood

By EDGAR S. VAN OLINDA

Ideal weather conditions over at Tanglewood, Sunday afternoon brought out an audience, inside and outside the great shed of some 10,000 music lovers. Elezar de Carvalho, young Brazilian conductor, making his Tanglewood debut with the Boston Symphony orchestra presented a program which was evenly divided between the "immense symphony" by Belioz and works by the modern composers of Latin-America, Villa-Lobos, de Falla and Siqueira.

Mr. de Carvalho's tenchnic closely resembles that of Dr. Koussevitzky who beamed approval from his box in the first tier. The Berlioz symphony, remarkable for its vitality and colorful orchestration (it was composed in 1830) was given vigorous and understanding treatment by the conductor of the day.

As was to be expected the three South American numbers on the second half of the program called into play every principal and subordinate instrument in the orchestra, with Carol Brice, Negro contralto lending her superb vocal and intellectual gifts to the incidental solos in "Love, the Sorcerer" by de Falla.

Saturday night's program included the Prokofieff "Romeo and Juliet" ballot suite; the Vaughan Williams symphony, No. 6 and the spritely Strauss fantasy, "Don Quixot," the latter featuring Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist as the "voice" of the knightly Don. The Vaughan Williams work, rather hard to digest by those who relish a followable melody, was nevertheless, interesting from the fact that the English composer, at the age of 76 felt called upon to write in the idiom of the present decade. Dr. Koussevitzky conducted with his usual flair.

Tonight's extra concert, an "All Tchaikowsky" program, will offer the "Pathetique" symphony; the piano concerto No. 1 with Seymour Lipkin, soloist and the "1812" overture. The City club is arranging bus transportation from its club house, leaving at six o'clock and returning after the concert. Reservations may be made by calling Albany 4-4647.

This Clipping From
FINDLAY, OHIO
REPUBLICAN COURIER

AUG 1 0 1948

MUSICAL SHRINE

The home of a man who had not the slightest interest in music has now become a musical shrine. This strange fate has come to Tanglewood, the western Massachusetts home of Nathaniel Hawthorne, who wrote there "The House of Seven Gables" and "Tanglewood Tales''. For the last ten years it has been the headquarters of the Berkshire Festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the leadership of its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

Recently a reconstruction of Hawthorne's little red house was presented bv the National Federation of Music clubs to the orchestra to be used as a studio. Menning Hawthorne of North Woodstock, Conn., great- grandson of the writer, who was one of the speakers, referred to Nathaniel's indifference to music.

Even if Hawthorne was no music lover, he was a master craftsman in a kindred field, that of literature. Both lovers of literature and of music will applaud the generous action of the National Federation of Music Clubs, which insures the perpetual maintenance of one of America's notable literary shrines.

This Clipping From
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD JOURNAL

AUG 1 0 1948

Good Listening

By The Listener

WITH THE fourth and final airing from the Berkshire Music Festival (9:30 tonight, WAGE), the Boston Symphony Orchestra will conclude its 1947-48 season with an all-Tchaikovsky program conducted by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

AUG 1 0 1948

Tanglewood Opera

Rossini's 'The Turk in Italy' Heard After 108 Years

By Francis D. Perkins

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 9.—Rossini's comic opera, "The Turk in Italy," had its first American performance in 108 years tonight in the theater at Tanglewood by the Berkshire music center's opera department before a capacity audience. This was the department's third annual production of an unfamiliar opera. It had introduced Britten's "Peter Grimes" to America in 1946, and staged Mozart's "Idomeneo" last summer.

Boris Goldovsky, head of the deparement, doubled as conductor and stage director, and also supplied an English version of Felice Romani's libretto for this production of Rossini's long forgotten opera, which was first produced in Milan in 1814. The cast included Marshall Heinbaugh for the barytone title role of Selim the Turk. Adele Addison and June Gardner sang the soprano roles of Zaida and Giorilla; David Lloyd, tenor, was Narciso; Arthur Schoep was Geronio, Fiorilla's husband, and Francis Barnard was the bass-barytone poet.

"The Turk in Italy" long ranked among the operas of Rossini which had their day and then were forgotten. Mr. Goldovsky attributes this oblivion to the outmoded nature and loose structure of the plots, and one aim of his editing of "The Turk" has been to increase the persuasiveness of the story for a modern audience.

"The Turk," which antedates the well known "Barber of Seville" by three years, appeared the year after "The Italian in Algiers," which the Metropolitan revived twenty-eight years ago and which has a somewhat similar story. It was performed in Italy and many other countries of Europe during the twenty years after its Milan premiere, but, according to Loewenberg's "Annals of Opera," has not been revived in Italy since 1882. In New York it figured in Manuel Garcia's season at the Park Theater, in March, 1826; it was also heard again in December, 1840, but, so far as is known, has not since been heard in the United States.

The idea of giving it at Tanglewood was suggested to Mr. Goldovsky by Helmuth Wolfes, who was doing some research on the opera. A manuscript copy of the score was found in Boston's Symphony Hall among a collection of scores brought from Palermo by Henry L. Higginson, the Boston Symphony's founder. No full score could be obtained in Italy, but another partial score was found in the Boston Public library, and piano scores were also found in Boston and at Harvard University.

These scores are the basis for Mr. Goldovsky's version, in which Mr. Wolfes has supplied orchestrations where they were not available in the existing material. In changing the order of certain numbers for dramatic reasons, he points out that he is following the practice of Rossini himself, who moved a complete quintet from "The Turk" into a later opera, "La Gazzetta."

A review of the music itself and the performance, which will be repeated on Wednesday night, must await Wednesday's issue of the Herald Tribune.

---

the Berkshire Festival. He also is a member of the Curtis faculty.

Friday night's program will include Vivaldi's "Concerto Grosso in D Minor", Palmer's K-19, Glazunoff's Violin Concerto, Sebastiani's "Fiesta" and Rimsky-Korsakov's "Scheherazade".

Both concerts will be open to friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

This Clipping From
BETHLEHEM, PA.
GLOBE-TIMES

AUG 1 0 1948

Musical Shrine

The home of a man who had not the slightest interest in music has now become a musical shrine. This strange fate has come to Tanglewood, the western Massachusetts home of Nathaniel Hawthorne, who wrote there "The House of Seven Gables" and "Tanglewood Tales." For the last ten years it has been the headquarters of the Berkshire Festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the leadership of its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

Recently a reconstruction of Hawthorne's little red house was presented by the National Federation of Music Clubs to the orchestra to be used as a studio. Menning Hawthorne of North Woodstock, Conn., great-grandson of the writer, who was one of the speakers, referred to Nathaniel's indifference to music.

Even if Hawthorne was no music lover, he was a master craftsman in a kindred field, that of literature. Both lovers of literature and of music will applaud the generous action of the National Federation of Music Clubs, which insures the perpetual maintenance of one of America's notable literary shrines.

Herald

MUSIC

Aug 9

Berkshire Festival

The second weekend of the Berkshire Festival was given at Tanglewood with concerts Saturday evening and this afternoon. Serge Koussevitzky conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Saturday night. Eleazar de Carvalho on Sunday. Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist, was the soloist on the former occasion, Carol Brice, contralto, on the latter. The programs are as follows:

"Romeo and Juliet" Suite No 2	Prokofieff
Symphony No. 6	Vaughan Williams
"Don Quixote"	Strauss
Fantastic Symphony	Berlioz
Madona	Villa-Lobos
"Nordestina" Suite No. 1	Siquera
"El Amor Brujo"	Falla

By ELINOR HUGHES

LENOX, Aug. 8—Two perfect days, one of them sufficiently cool for the thermometer to drop close to what felt like the freezing point and for the ladies — those forehanded enough—to don their mink coats, brought large crowds to the Saturday night and Sunday afternoon concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the shed at Tanglewood. Serge Koussevitzky conducted the Saturday concert, which featured the American premiere of Vaughan Williams Symphony No. 6. The young Brizilian conductor, Eleazar de Carvalho, led the orchestra this afternoon in a program featuring the work of two of his fellow countrymen, Villa-Lobos and Siqueira, in addition to Berlioz' fantastic symphony, and Manuel de Falla's suite from "El Amor Brujo," with Carol Brice, contralto, as soloist.

The Vaughan Williams Symphony was begun in 1944, finished in 1947 and had its first performance in the Royal Albert Hall in London last April by the BBC Symphony Orchestra with Sir Adrian Boult conducting. At that time it was received with great enthusiasm by the London press and public, partly, one suspects, because of the high and deserved esteem in which the 75-year-old composer is regarded in England and partly because of the quality of the music itself. How it will appeal to American concert goers remains to be seen. The performance by Mr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra was one of luminous beauty and clarity: the singing tone of strings and the brilliance of the woodwinds and brass cannot be done justice to in a short space of time, but there is going to be a great difference of opinion regarding the intrinsic value of the music itself.

Begun by the composer while war was still raging over his country, it begins in stormy, passionate vein, as though the instruments were shouting their defiance of the guns seeking to silence them in a thunder of total destruction. You might interpret as the composer's own expression of the imperishable qualities of the human spirit in the face of disaster, or as his interpretation of the impact of war on his own creed. It is, for much of the Symphony's length, confident and affirmative music, but as the work draws on to the close, the mood changes to one of still, quiet beauty—call it the peace of exhaustion or the expression of serene joy in the end of war. The impression is antimactic, however and a lady sitting near me expressed the feelings of many by saying, a little ruefully, that "if this was peace, she had to admit that war was more exciting."

Mr. Koussevitzky began the concert with a spirited performance of Prokofieff's Second Suite from his "Romeo and Juliet" Ballet—a work which is extremely effective, if far more Russian in feeling that Elizabethan or Italian; and concluded the evening's pleasures with his characteristically fine rendering of Strauss's "Don Quixote," with Gregor Piatigorsky at the peak of his great talents in the solo 'cello part, and Joseph de Pasquale assiting notably on the viola.

The Sunday afternoon concert opened with an excellent performance of the Berlioz Fantastic Symphony, whose dramatic and romantic qualities were admirably brought out by Mr. De Carvalho. The second and third movements, the waltz and the scene in the meadows had a most lovely lyrical quality, and the March to the Scaffold and Witches' Sabbath were rendered with unabashed fire and fury. Villa-Lobos' Madona, characteristic of the composer's lush, lavish style, seemed by comparison not overly interesting; while Jose Siqueira's Nordestina Suite had a lively, folk music content that pleased the audience greatly and should win much popularity for the work in the future. Falla's "El Amor Brujo" is a work of unfailing brilliance and fire; the conductor and composer, assisted by Miss Brice in the contralto solo part, gave it a performance of fine quality and understanding.

[256]

Berkshire Festival Week End

Monitor Aug 19

By Miles Kastendieck

Lenox, Mass.

Emphasis on contemporary music characterized the first big week end of the Berkshire Festival on the Tanglewood Estate. It suggested that Koussevitzky may have had some definite plan in so featuring it, for of the eight composers represented in the three concerts four are living. The crowds gathered just the same, approaching a record count for a first week end with 27,400 present. Ideal weather conditions enhanced the concerts.

Most conventional of the programs was the first, on July 29: Bach's Suite No. 3 in D, Hindemith's Symphony "Mathis der Maler," and Beethoven's Fifth. Since the Hindemith is fast becoming a modern classic, this program might almost be termed traditional. Certainly the performances by the Boston Symphony under its eminent leader carried a traditional stamp.

Some 10,300 people attended the July 31st concert, also conducted by Koussevitzky. They heard Piston's Third Symphony, Prokofiev's First Violin Concerto with Isaac Stern as soloist, and the Brahms First Symphony. If they did not like the contemporary music—many thoroughly enjoyed the Prokofiev—they loved the Brahms. Opinions varied as to the merits of the Piston.

Won Pulitzer Prize

Having won the Pulitzer Prize, Piston's Symphony has acquired a certain distinction, though in critical circles preference is expressed for his Second. The craftsmanship of the Third can be readily acknowledged, its communicative values welcomed. The former characterizes the first two movements; the latter, the last two. Piston has seldom written more appealing music than the Adagio nor conformed more to the "American" style than in the Finale. Koussevitzky promoted the work in his own way and convinced a great many listeners.

Mr. Stern played the Prokofiev brilliantly and successfully. One wonders why more violinists do not avail themselves of the opportunity. The insinuating Scherzo was so artfully set forth that expressions of delight came spontaneously from the audience. The final movement was the most satisfying musically. The Brahms sounded tremendous, though the performance had its arbitrary moments.

In Milhaud's Second Symphony and Mahler's Second, presented on Aug. 1, an audience of 9,600 might find considerable novelty. Neither work could be designated as a familiar item in the repertory. The Mahler dwarfed the Milhaud, being about an hour longer, but could not eclipse the memory of some charming music, attractively written. Milhaud conducted his own work. He gave it that kind of understatement which set it forth most persuasively. It does not, however, impress as a work of outstanding merit, except for the skill with which it is written.

Bernstein Conducts

Leonard Bernstein conducted the Mahler. He did it with the fervor, the drama, and the gesturing characteristic of him. He is still too pictorial a conductor, but he got the effects he wanted. They ranged at times from the stupendous to the colossal, somewhat like the symphony itself. The emotional upheaval of the music—and the performance—brought cheers from the audience. There was no doubt that Mahler advanced one more notch in public favor under the circumstances since this was his first appearance in Berkshire Festival programs.

The performance was a distinctive achievement as given by the Boston Symphony, the Festival Chorus prepared by Hugh Ross, and Ellabella Davis and Nan Merriman as soloists.

In one of the student concerts that evening the Third Act of Getchanino's opera, "The Marriage," was given its world première. The 85-year-old compos was present, having participa in the rehearsals. Sung in English the work proved to be of more than passing interest.

An event called "Tanglewood on Parade" was held on Aug. 3. The exhibition was a benefit which the Boston Symphony and the Berkshire Music Center staged for the International Music Fund for assistance to fellow artists in the Old World. At least 600 people participated, counting the 462 students, members of the orchestra, and others. Archibald MacLeish acted as chairman.

Holders of reserved seats attended a "Garden Party" where Menotti's one-act opera, "The Telephone," and excerpts from "Pelléas et Mélisande" and "Don Giovanni" were given. Simultaneous performances by orchestral, choral, opera, and chamber music departments preceded the picnic supper hour in the Tanglewood orchard and on the lawn.

Concert in Lighter Vein

A concert by the Bostonians was conceived in the lighter vein with Prokofiev's "Peter and the Wolf," Wesley Addy, narrator, and the waltzes, "Voices of Spring" (Strauss), Valse Triste (Sibelius), and "La Valse" (Ravel), as the chief attractions.

Among the speakers for the occasion were Dr. Koussevitzky, Associate Justice Felix Frankfurter of the Supreme Court of the United States, Aaron Copland, associate director of the Berkshire Music Center, and Dr. Howard Hanson, director of the Eastman School of Music. In stressing the cultural relations between the New World and the Old they inaugurated a nation-wide campaign. Some 7,000 people attended and receipts were estimated at $10,000.

HARTFORD-T

Sparkling Ros Presented by

A little-known Rossini opera, "The Turk in Italy," tailored by Boris Goldovsky, is as excellent an example of good critical principles put into practice as it is possible to find today.

Well-known for his discussions of what makes opera tick during the Metropolitan broadcasts in the winter, Mr. Goldovsky last night at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood showed how well he can create and conduct.

* * *

HE HAS TAKEN the commonplaces of plot complication and made them the gist of a story that is a little gem of organization, and sustained humor. An 18th Century poet is writing a play. The characters he creates or borrows from other plays come to life and refuse to abide by the situations he takes from Metastasio. They create their own complications like Pinocchio.

The wonder is that this neat and sparkling idea is never exaggerated, never cute, never flat, and always surprising.

Rossini's music is exuberant, the setting for virtuosity. The Tanglewood students who presented last night's performance from stage and pit are not virtuosos, but they are adept, confident, well-equipped, and were more high sprited than sophisticated. From the moment she stepped on the stage, June Gardner, as the wife, sang, if not like a nightingale, then like our native Wilson thrush. She is bold, and electrifying. Her soprano is so dashing that many of the fine details of coloratura singing are hurried over.

* * *

HER TURK, Marshall Heinbaugh, had a clear baritone, and Arthur Schoep as the husband was in excellent character. The Lover, costumed from a Renais-

---

This Clipping From
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE
AUG 10 1948

Music Notes

By D. E. RITZ

A Tchaikowsky concert will be held at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., tonight with Serge Koussevitzky conducting. The program announced for this extra concert is the Symphony number 6, the 1812 Overture and the Piano Concerto number 1 with Seymour Lipkin, winner of the 1948 Rachmaninoff Fund award, as the soloist.

Rossini's "The Turk in Italy" will be repeated tomorrow evening at the theater. The cast for tomorrow will include June Gardner, Adele Addison, David Garen, Marshall Heinbaugh, Robert Goss and James Pease. Boris Goldovsky, head of the center opera department, will conduct. Sarah Caldwell is chorus master and Robert J. Lawthers, technical director.

Series C of the Tanglewood concerts will open Thursday evening with Leonard Bernstein conducting the Boston ~~Symphony. The~~ program is listed as the Weber "Overture to 'Der Freishutz'"; Stravinsky "Petrouchka" (complete); and the Shostakovich Symphony number 5.

The Saturday evening concert will be conducted by Robert Shaw. The orchestra will be augmented with a 250 voice festival chorus. The program will include two works, Debussy's "The Blessed Damozel" and the Brahms "Requiem." Ellen Faull, soprano, and Eunice Alberts, contralto, will be the soloists for the first and Frances Yeend, soprano, and James Pease, baritone, will be the soloists for the "Requiem."

Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the final concert of the festival on Sunday afternoon. It will include the Beethoven Symphony number 3 ("Eroica") and the Sibelius Symphony in D major, number 2.

A circular from Ashland, Oregon, tells of the eighth annual Shakespearean Festival held there from Aug. 11 to 28. Honorary president of the festival is Governor John H. Hall of Oregon. The honorary directors are headed by Herbert Hoover. Presentations this year will include "Othello," "Love's Labour Lost," "King John" and "The Merchant of Venice." It is claimed to be the "only Civic Elizabethan theater in the world." A note enclosed from Miss Virginia Lutz of the Ashland Daily Tidings asks for information about a "similar" Schenectady play group?

Mary Bothwell, Canadian soprano, will be the soloist at the Brevard Music Festival at Brevard, NC, on Saturday evening. Miss Bothwell will sail for London on Aug. 21 to appear at Albert hall, London, on Aug. 30 in the Promenade concerts.

The program at Jacob's Pillow, Lee, Mass., will include three types of dancing this weekend. Natalie Krassovska and Nikita Talin, stars of the Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo, will appear in the classical form; Lin Pei Fen in a group of Chinese tribal dances; Federico Rey and his company will present a series of Spanish dances. Performances will start on Friday and Saturday afternoons at 4 o'clock with tea served in the garden at 3 o'clock. The program will be repeated on Saturday evening at 9 o'clock.

---

in South Berwick, Me., Feb. 17, 1891, and died Dec. 11, 1940. I do not know the cause of death.

2. Preston Foster was born in Ocean City, N. J., Aug. 24, 1902. His latest film is "Thunderhoof," and he works for Columbia Pictures. His wife is Shelia D'Arcy, whom he married April 2, 1946. His former wife was Gertrure True Foster and their daughter Stephanie was born Sept. 18, 1938. Foster obtained his first stage job in 1928 in "New Moon." His first film was "Life Begins," in 1932. He has also sung with La Scala Opera Company in Italy.

3. Dennis is scheduled to be in "The Turquoise" with Viveca Lindfors and he has also been in Honolulu.

Q—You did not mention who was the star of the first silent film version of "Riders of the Purple Sage" in a recent column. It was William Farnum, and the picture was shown at the Modern and Beacon Theatres many years ago. In my opinion the first version was the best of the four.
—C. E. P., Marblehead.

A—Thanks very much—I do not have information going back that far very often, especially when the questions deal with casts.

Q—What is Collette Lyons doing now?—Babe.

A—Collette is to play the comedy lead in "The Lone Wolf and His Lady," which is to be made as an A class picture by Columbia, and will appear with Australian Ron Randall as the Lone Wolf. She has been singing on Broadway last season.

E—TUESDAY, AUGUST 10, 1948

Rossini's 'Turk in Italy' Revived at Tanglewood

"The Turk in Italy," comic opera by Rossini. New libretto by Boris Goldovsky; music revised with additional orchestration, by Helmuth Wolfes. Translation and recitatives by Boris Goldovsky and Sarah Caldwell. Conductor and stage director, Mr. Goldovsky. Scenic designer, Nassan Abiskhairoun. Costume designer, Leon Van Witsen. Technical director, Robert J. Lawthers. First performance anywhere in this version. The cast:

The Poet	Francis Barnard
Zaida	Adale Addison
Geronio	Arthur Schoep
Fiorilla	June Gardner
Selim	Marshall Heinbaugh
Narciso	David Lloyd

By CYRUS DURGIN

TANGLWOOD, Aug. 9—Boris Goldovsky presented here tonight the first performance in something over 100 years of Rossini's comic opera "The Turk in Italy." This was not a "straight" production, however, but a few version prepared by Mr. Goldovsky himself, with a trick, surprise ending. The theatre-concert hall was filled by a cordial audience.

"The Turk in Italy" is the Summer's production of the Berkshire Music Center Opera Department, of which Mr. Goldovsky is head. Like "Peter Grimes" of two years ago., and the American premiere of Mozart's "Idomeneo" in 1947, the Rossini work shows the excellence of Mr. Goldovsky's knowing way with opera.

Once again you had the feeling of a cast so thoroughly trained that there were few moments tentative or other than completely routined. The singers did not look at the conductor (hidden from the audience in a deep pit before the stage). There was no prompter. The words came over as clearly—for the most part—as if they had been spoken. The orchestra played expertly and the stage pictures were colorful and lively.

This version of "The Turk in Italy" boasts not only the changes in libretto made by Mr. Goldovsky, but some musical revision, including added orchestration by Helmuth Wolfes, brother of Felix Wolfes who is a colleague of Mr. Goldovsky in the opera department.

In this version, it is musically solid and interesting, not too overburdened with recitative for the taste of modern audiences. As for the music, it is typical Rossini, bright, animated and often sparkling. If it sounds like Gilbert and Sullivan from time to time, that only goes to show where Sullivan doubtless got some of his ideas.

The story is a pretty slim joke to be spread out over an evening, but thanks to the efforts of all concerned this comic badminton bird is kept lightly in the aid. The plot doesn't make much sense in the telling—nor does it in the unfolding. A poet begins to write a drama, finds inspiration dull, and therefore sets to work inventing a set of characters: the Italian husband and his somewhat bored wife; an amorous Turk, and the Gypsy girl Zaida, who is in love with him. There is also a lover for the wife to round out the poet's plans for his drama.

These characters get completely out of hand, not only upsetting what the poet has in mind but they bicker with each other and with the poet. At one point they go so far that, at a masked ball in the Italian home, there are three males in Turkish costume and two dressed as the wife. Finally, all six characters are so completely at odds that the poet has to develop a happy ending, and to that end decides he will have the wife for himself, advising both husband and Turk to write the rest themselves, and take up where he is leaving off. There you are.

Obviously such a feather-weight piece must be sung and acted with sparkling vivicity. On the whole this quality was present in every scene. Vocally speaking, the two best of tonight's cast were Adele Addison as Zaida, and the robust husband of Arthur Schoep. Both sang with admirable tone, clear enunciation and real feeling for the comic style. June Gardner as Fiorella, the wife, looked attractive and her work was commendable, but at the same time there was a hard quality in her tones, approaching a temolo. Francis Bernard managed the caperings of the harrassed poet more than competently; Marshall Heinbaugh was a sonorous Turk, and David Lloyd did nicely as the lover, Narciso.

In terms of stage production, this is the best that the Berkshire Music Center has put forward, surpassing the settings and lighting for both "Peter Grimes" and "Idomeneo." Nassan Abiskhairoun deserved much credit for his scenery and Leo Van Witsen for his costumes.

There will be a second performance Wednesday night, with a somewhat different cast. After that, it seems logical to expect that Mr. Goldovsky and the New England Opera Theatre will let us have a look at the work in Boston next season.

Goldovsky Thinking of Opera in Boston

TANGLEWOOD, Aug. 9—Boris Goldovsky stated that he had nothing to say when queried here tonight about a report that he planned to present opera in Boston if the Metropolitan Opera Association did not visit Boston.

"Naturally, I have thought about presenting opera if the Metropolitan were not to visit Boston. But until it is definite that it will not, I have nothing to say," responded the head of the New England Opera Theatre and the Opera Department of the Berkshire Music Center.

ERALD TRIBUNE, WEDNESDAY, AUG

'Turk in Italy'

Goldovsky Produces Rossini Work at Tanglewood

By Francis D. Perkins

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 10.—Rossini's opera buffa, "The Turk in Italy," as produced last night by the Berkshire Music Center's opera department in the theater at Tanglewood, is a good show, and had a spirited and admirably co-ordinated performance by the student soloists and ensembles under Boris Goldovsky's direction. Mr. Goldovsky, indeed, can be credited with a substantial share of the effectiveness of the work itself as well as that of the production, since the audience of 1,840 which heard the last New York performance of "The Turk" would probably have found some differences in the Tanglewood version.

Mr. Goldovsky, as he pointed out in a short speech yesterday, composed the recitatives in Rossinian style for this production. Otherwise the current score has no music not composed by Rossini for the various versions of this work. In the skillfully wrought English text provided by Mr. Goldovsky and Sarah Caldwell, chorus director for this production, there is considerable modernization to tighten up the plot and to make it more credible.

The Poet Is Modernized

The principal change is in the character of the poet, originally a minor figure who was not assigned even a single aria but who here becomes perhaps the principal figure, devising the action, commenting upon it and taking part in it. In Romanis's original libretto, Fiorilla, the principal soprano character, finally returns to her elderly husband, Geronio, in preference to her lover, Narciso, a tenor, or the bass-barytone Turk, Selim; in the new text she chooses the poet.

The original plot has the standard elements of early nineteenth century opera buffa. In Mr. Glodovsky's version it becomes at times an occasionally Gilbertian satire on opera buffa, but the result is successful; it is effective, amusing and runs a direct and readily comprehensible course; the text is well fitted to the music and was sung with a notably high standard of distinctiveness.

As for the music, the points of reference for most of us today are "The Barber of Seville," plus the Rossini overtures in the concert repertory, along with memories of the Metropolitan production of "Il Signor Bruschino," and for older opera-goers, that of "The Italian in Algiers." The music for "The Turk" is mainly typical Rossini of the period of "The Barber," which this work precedes by two years. It has the melodic fluency, imaginativeness and appeal associated with this composer, numbers. Sometimes, a shade more than in "The Barber," we are reminded of the late century of Mozart and Cimarosa. But the score can be briefly described as essential Rossini, with all that this implies.

Will Be Repeated

In this version, it should be a valuable addition to the repertory of any opera group, either professional or student, appearing in a small or moderate-sized theater in this country. The performance was characterized by an unusual impression of a mutually understanding ensemble spirit which is often absent from the familiar brand of professional opera and which reflected much credit upon the work of Mr. Goldovsky and his associates.

If the singing revealed no new stars from a purely vocal point of view, it told of good enunciation and persuasive use of vocal and expressive color by all the soloists—Francis Barnard as the witty, sometimes slightly ironic poet; June Gardner as Fiorilla; Adele Addison as Zaida, the gypsy; Arthur Schoep as the barytone, Geronio; Marshall Heinbaugh as Selim, and David Lloyd as Narciso. The characterizations were convincing and no one followed the frequent operatic practice of gazing at the conductor.

Miss Gardner, with the vocally most exacting role, did not always focus her tones, but she sang with effective fluency; Mr. Schoep projected patter song crisply and made Geronio sympathetic as well as laughable. But the dominating impression was made by the production as a whole, with a playing time slightly under two hours. Nassan Abiskhairoun's sets, while simple, reflected the atmosphere of the work, and Leo Van Witsen's costumes were satisfying.

Tonight, Serge Koussevitzky conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a non-subscription Tchaikovsky program in the Music Shed, with Seymour Lipkin, the Rachmaninoff Fund prize winner, as a soloist in the B-flat minor piano concerto. The opera will be repeated tomorrow night with two changes of cast, James Pease as the poet and Robert Goss as Geronio.

NTS THE NEW YORK TIMES, WE

OLD ROSSINI OPERA TOPS TANGLEWOOD

'Turk in Italy,' With Goldovsky as Conductor, Scores a Hit —Romani Libretto Revised

By OLIN DOWNES

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 10 — The performance last night of Rossini's "Turk In Italy"—"Turco In Italia" as it was, of course, at the première of this piece in 1814—represents the most brilliant performance of the opera department of the Berkshire music centre in the three years of existence, and is particularly to be recognized as something in the nature of a creative as well as technical achievement by Boris Goldovsky and his cohorts.

For Mr. Goldovsky, in this instance, has officiated as conductor, stage director and librettist, too. His singers were almost equally collaborative. The principals in the cast were Francis Barnard, the poet; Adele Addison, Zaida, the gypsy; Arthur Schoep, Geronio, the husband; June Gardner, Fiorilla, the wife; Marshall Heinbaugh, Selim, the Turk, and David Lloyd, Norciso, the lover.

But the chorus, which acted and sang as earnestly as the principles, was made of singers who had themselves taken individual parts in other performances and who eagerly made a background of ensemble singing and acting that was only less arresting than the performances of the soloists.

Goldovsky Provides Text

There will be occasion next Sunday to speak in more detail of the singularly felicitious manner in which Mr. Goldovsky provided a new English text for Rossini's music, the manner in which he edited and rearranged parts of the score and wrote in, with the Sarah Caldwell, a few brief recitatives to melodic phrases in the Rossinian style.

As is well known, Rossini himself never hesitated to lift an aria or concerted piece from one of his operas into another when he felt so disposed. As for the original libretto of Felice Romani, it is so weak as to be absolutely useless for a modern audience—perhaps for any audience—since "The Turk in Italy" had not been performed in America for more than a century before last night.

As for the opera in its present form, it is one of the gayest, most exhilarating pieces that it would be possible to find. The sparkle and jest of Rossini is present, almost unabated, from the first note to the last. It can be said, without flattery to Mr. Goldovsky's arrangement, that the text and the situation parallel the zest and laughter of the music. It was a bold thing to venture to do, but the musicianship and the dramatic ingenuity of the accomplishment fully justify what has been done and what has been done has been done with the most careful consideration and genuine respect for Rossini.

Poet's Role Is Altered

What adds to the cream of the jest is the happy thought by which the poet, who in Romani's original plot has but a subsidiary role, becomes here the author of a play, or opera buffa, in which his characters go all awry and confuse him in his attempt to plot out their destinies. The poet tells his audience of his resolve to let life give him his story. He will chronicle the actions of his characters who will step on the stage. Then the delicious nonsense begins. It is comedy-farce, with confusions of identities, and all sorts of comical misunderstandings.

Denouement is wholly unexpected, when the erring wife announces that she will neither return to her husband nor her youthful lover, nor yet to the Turk, who has tried to purchase her for his harem, but wil lhave instead the poet, and/sinks into his astonished arms while, to a chorus of aproval of this [illegible] the curtain falls.

There is a trio [illegible]st, a quintet which is a mas[illegible]piece, a sextet, very comical, and brilliant arias and a corking duet in Rossini's inimitable vein. It is not the time to differentiate between each artist's achievement, nor so very easy, for the cast was so well chosen and drilled and the interplay of action and song so excellently achieved.

Singers Are Excellent

But the brilliancy of June Gardner's singing of the coloratura music f thewife, her languishing airs, caprice, facial play; the buffoonery of the bamboozled husband, also a fine voice; the beautiful voice and the finished singing of Adele Addison, who was the Gypsy, the poet of Mr. Barnard and the excellent singing of David Lloyd, the Narcisso, have to be mentioned.

The re-orchestration of parts of the score was the work of Helmuth Wolfes, who first brought the opera to Mr. Goldovsky's attention. The final curtain brought back to the stage with him, not only his principal singers, but his stage assistant and costume designer, whom he recognized as the agencies of a delightful show. This show started a little ineptly, but soon was in full swing. It was the accomplishment of Earnest, intelligent, spirited musicians, who showed taste and imagination, who acted as well as sang, without a stare at the conductor or an instant's unawareness of the collective purpose of the cast. It was joyous, and it was youth.

MES

ssini Opera Goldovsky

sance painting, was David Lloyd, whose tenor was used con amore. The Poet himself, Francis Barnard, acted with discretion and wit. As the Gypsy who adds a final complication, Adele Addison had a chance to display a pure soprano to advantage.

Mr. Goldovsky laughs at as well as with Rossini. The English translation which Mr. Goldovsky liberally rearranged is witty, and from beginning to end, with its little ode to Art, coherent in style.

The audience, which included Serge Koussevitzky and music critics from the eastern seaboard, was enthusiastic. "The Turk in Italy" contains all the charm of Rossini's music, though not his most brilliant, and the story now is perfectly presentable. Welcome, not to Italy, Turk, but to the repertory.

A. B.

NEW YORK

Tchaikovsky

Koussevitzky Conducts His Music at Tanglewood

By Francis D. Perkins

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 11.—Tchaikovsky, Serge Koussevitzky, and the Boston Symphony Orchestra drew the largest Berkshire Festival audience of the summer, nearly 12,000, to last night's concert in the Tanglewood Music Shed. The attendance figure was particularly notable since this was an extra concert not in the regular subscription series.

Dr. Koussevitzky's all-Tchaikovsky program included the Pathetic Symphony, Concerto in B flat minor and the 1812 Overture. The soloist in the concerto was Seymour Lipkin, who won the Rachmaninoff fund prize last April, and who has been active here this summer as a student conductor. The aim of the Rachmaninoff fund was to discover a young artist of exceptional ability, and Mr. Lipkin can be so described in last night's performance. There was poise, and thorough and mature technical mastery, along with discerning musicianship and interpretative understanding and a noteworthy clarity of medium; his playing gave evidence of remarkable power employed with taste and discretion. The orchestra's accompaniment was well unified and in expressive accord with the talented soloist.

The Boston Symphony's interpretations of Tchaikovsky's music under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction are well known, and had their familiar but still impressive effectiveness last night; the 1812 Overture provided a sonorously imposing and triumphant close.

This Clipping From
PATHFINDER
CHICAGO, ILL.
AUG 11 1948

Music

Koussevitzky. His students fiddle where Hawthorne's house burned. (SEE: Tale)

Tanglewood Tale

In 1850 a bushy-haired writer brought his family to live in a big, sprawling red farmhouse near Lenox, Mass. But winter there was too tough. Nathaniel Hawthorne lived in "Tanglewood" a year and a half—long enough to write The House of Seven Gables, the Wonder Book and an outline for Tanglewood Tales. Then he moved away. In 1890 the house burned.

In 1941, when Mrs. Guy Patterson Gannett of the Federation of Music Clubs asked Serge Koussevitzky what the Federation might contribute to his newly founded Berkshire Music Festival, he suggested rebuilding the Hawthorne home on its original site on the Festival grounds.

Old & New. Late last month "The Little Red House" was officially opened. But it's more than just a cultural shrine. In it are two much-needed sound-proof practice studios for the chamber music and opera departments—and a kitchen where perspiring students can whip up a lemonade on a hot afternoon.

This Clipping From
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
JOURNAL-COURIER
AUG 11 1948

Largest Crowd Of 1948 Season At Tanglewood

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 10 (AP)—The largest crowd of the 1948 Berkshire festival season turned out at Tanglewood tonight for an all-Tchaikovsky program by the ~~Boston Symphony~~ Orchestra with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducting.

The paid attendance was 11,900 to top the previous 1948 record of 10,300 on July 31.

Seymour Lipkin's performance of the Piano Concerto No. 1 was received enthusiastically. Lipkin won the Rachmaninoff Fund's National Piano Contest last Spring.

Tomorrow night the opera department of the Berkshire Music Center will give its second and final presentation of Rossini's "The Turk in taly."

The third and final series of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orhestra will be given Thursday, aturday and Sunday.

~~Leonard Bernstein~~ will return as uest conductor Thursday night.

Robert Shaw, youthful choral conuctor, will direct the orchestra and e Berkshire festival chorus in Dessy's "The Blessed Damozel" and ahms' Requiem on Saturday ght. Ellen Faull, Frances Yeend d James Pease will be soloists.

Dr. Koussevitzky will lead the orestra in Beethoven's Symphony 3 (Eroica) and Sibelius' Symony in D major No. 2 Saturday ernoon.

'Turk in Italy'

Goldovsky Produces Rossini Work at Tanglewood

By Francis D. Perkins

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 10.—Rossini's opera buffa, "The Turk in Italy," as produced last night by the Berkshire Music Center's opera department in the theater at Tanglewood, is a good show, and had a spirited and admirably co-ordinated performance by the student soloists and ensembles under Boris Goldovsky's direction. Mr. Goldovsky, indeed, can be credited with a substantial share of the effectiveness of the work itself as well as that of the production, since the audience of 1,840 which heard the last New York performance of "The Turk" would probably have found some differences in the Tanglewood version.

Mr. Goldovsky, as he pointed out in a short speech yesterday, composed the recitatives in Rossinian style for this production. Otherwise the current score has no music not composed by Rossini for the various versions of this work. In the skillfully wrought English text provided by Mr. Goldovsky and Sarah Caldwell, chorus director for this production, there is considerable modernization to tighten up the plot and to make it more credible.

The Poet Is Modernized

The principal change is in the character of the poet, originally a minor figure who was not assigned even a single aria but who here becomes perhaps the principal figure, devising the action, commenting upon it and taking part in it. In Romanis's original libretto, Fiorilla, the principal soprano character, finally returns to her elderly husband, Geronio, in preference to her lover, Narciso, a tenor, or the bass-barytone Turk, Selim; in the new text she chooses the poet.

The original plot has the standard elements of early nineteenth century opera buffa. In Mr. Glodovsky's version it becomes at times an occasionally Gilbertian satire on opera buffa, but the result is successful; it is effective, amusing and runs a direct and readily comprehensible course; the text is well fitted to the music and was sung with a notably high standard of distinctiveness.

As for the music, the points of reference for most of us today are "The Barber of Seville," plus the Rossini overtures in the concert repertory, along with memories of the Metropolitan production of "Il Signor Bruschino," and for older opera-goers, that of "The Italian in Algiers." The music for "The Turk" is mainly typical Rossini of the period of "The Barber," which this work precedes by two years. It has the melodic fluency, imaginativeness and appeal associated with this composer, numbers. Sometimes, a shade more than in "The Barber," we are reminded of the late century of Mozart and Cimarosa. But the score can be briefly described as essential Rossini, with all that this implies.

Will Be Repeated

In this version, it should be a valuable addition to the repertory of any opera group, either professional or student, appearing in a small or moderate-sized theater in this country. The performance was characterized by an unusual impression of a mutually understanding ensemble spirit which is often absent from the familiar brand of professional opera and which reflected much credit upon the work of Mr. Goldovsky and his associates.

If the singing revealed no new stars from a purely vocal point of view, it told of good enunciation and persuasive use of vocal and expressive color by all the soloists—Francis Barnard as the witty, sometimes slightly ironic poet; June Gardner as Fiorilla; Adele Addison as Zaida, the gypsy; Arthur Schoep as the barytone, Geronio; Marshall Heinbaugh as Selim, and David Lloyd as Narciso. The characterizations were convincing and no one followed the frequent operatic practice of gazing at the conductor.

Miss Gardner, with the vocally most exacting role, did not always focus her tones, but she sang with effective fluency; Mr. Schoep projected patter song crisply and made Geronio sympathetic as well as laughable. But the dominating impression was made by the production as a whole, with a playing time slightly under two hours. Nassan Abiskhairoun's sets, while simple, reflected the atmosphere of the work, and Leo Van Witsen's costumes were satisfying.

Tonight, Serge Koussevitzky conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a non-subscription Tchaikovsky program in the Music Shed, with Seymour Lipkin, the Rachmaninoff Fund prize winner, as a soloist in the B-flat minor piano concerto. The opera will be repeated tomorrow night with two changes of cast, James Pease as the poet and Robert Goss as Geronio.

MES

ssini Opera Goldovsky

AUG 10 1948

sance painting, was David Lloyd, whose tenor was used con amore. The Poet himself, Francis Barnard, acted with discretion and wit. As the Gypsy who adds a final complication, Adele Addison had a chance to display a pure soprano to advantage.

Mr. Goldovsky laughs at as well as with Rossini. The English translation which Mr. Goldovsky liberally rearranged is witty, and from beginning to end, with its little ode to Art, coherent in style. The audience, which included Serge Koussevitzky and music critics from the eastern seaboard, was enthusiastic. "The Turk in Italy" contains all the charm of Rossini's music, though not his most brilliant, and the story now is perfectly presentable. Welcome, not to Italy, Turk, but to the repertory.

A.B.

OLD ROSSINI OPERA TOPS TANGLEWOOD

'Turk in Italy,' With Goldovsky as Conductor, Scores a Hit —Romani Libretto Revised

By OLIN DOWNES

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 10—The performance last night of Rossini's "Turk In Italy"—"Turco In Italia" as it was, of course, at the première of this piece in 1814—represents the most brilliant performance of the opera department of the Berkshire music centre in the three years of existence, and is particularly to be recognized as something in the nature of a creative as well as technical achievement by Boris Goldovsky and his cohorts.

For Mr. Goldovsky, in this instance, has officiated as conductor, stage director and librettist, too. His singers were almost equally collaborative. The principals in the cast were Francis Barnard, the poet; Adele Addison, Zaida, the gypsy; Arthur Schoep, Geronio, the husband; June Gardner, Fiorilla, the wife; Marshall Heinbaugh, Selim, the Turk, and David Lloyd, Norciso, the lover.

But the chorus, which acted and sang as earnestly as the principles, was made of singers who had themselves taken individual parts in other performances and who eagerly made a background of ensemble singing and acting that was only less arresting than the performances of the soloists.

Goldovsky Provides Text

There will be occasion next Sunday to speak in more detail of the singularly felicitious manner in which Mr. Goldovsky provided a new English text for Rossini's music, the manner in which he edited and rearranged parts of the score and wrote in, with the Sarah Caldwell, a few brief recitatives to melodic phrases in the Rossinian style.

As is well known, Rossini himself never hesitated to lift an aria or concerted piece from one of his operas into another when he felt so disposed. As for the original libretto of Felice Romani, it is so weak as to be absolutely useless for a modern audience—perhaps for any audience—since "The Turk in Italy" had not been performed in America for more than a century before last night.

As for the opera in its present form, it is one of the gayest, most exhilarating pieces that it would be possible to find. The sparkle and jest of Rossini is present, almost unabated, from the first note to the last. It can be said, without flattery to Mr. Goldovsky's arrangement, that the text and the situation parallel the zest and laughter of the music. It was a bold thing to venture to do, but the musicianship and the dramatic ingenuity of the accomplishment fully justify what has been done and what has been done has been done with the most careful consideration and genuine respect for Rossini.

Poet's Role Is Altered

What adds to the cream of the jest is the happy thought by which the poet, who in Romani's original plot has but a subsidiary role, becomes here the author of a play, or opera buffa, in which his characters go all awry and confuse him in his attempt to plot out their destinies. The poet tells his audience of his resolve to let life give him his story. He will chronicle the actions of his characters who will step on the stage. Then the delicious nonsense begins. It is comedy-farce, with confusions of identities, and all sorts of comical misunderstandings.

Denouement is wholly unexpected, when the erring wife announces that she will neither return to her husband nor her youthful lover, nor yet to the Turk, who has tried to purchase her for his harem, but will have instead the poet, and sinks into his astonished arms while, to a chorus of aproval of this [illegible] the curtain falls.

There is a trio of [illegible], a quintet which is a masterpiece, a sextet, very comical, and brilliant arias and a corking duet in Rossini's inimitable vein. It is not the time to differentiate between each artist's achievement, nor so very easy, for the cast was so well chosen and drilled and the interplay of action and song so excellently achieved.

Singers Are Excellent

But the brilliancy of June Gardner's singing of the coloratura music f thewife, her languishing airs, caprice, facial play; the buffoonery of the bamboozled husband, also a fine voice; the beautiful voice and the finished singing of Adele Addison, who was the Gypsy, the poet of Mr. Barnard and the excellent singing of David Lloyd, the Narcisso, have to be mentioned.

The re-orchestration of parts of the score was the work of Helmuth Wolfes, who first brought the opera to Mr. Goldovsky's attention. The final curtain brought back to the stage with him, not only his principal singers, but his stage assistant and costume designer, whom he recognized as the agencies of a delightful show. This show started a little ineptly, but soon was in full swing. It was the accomplishment of Earnest, intelligent, spirited musicians, who showed taste and imagination, who acted as well as sang, without a stare at the conductor or an instant's unawareness of the collective purpose of the cast. It was joyous, and it was youth.

Tchaikovsky

Koussevitzky Conducts His Music at Tanglewood

By Francis D. Perkins

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 11.—Tchaikovsky, Serge Koussevitzky, and the Boston Symphony Orchestra drew the largest Berkshire Festival audience of the summer, nearly 12,000, to last night's concert in the Tanglewood Music Shed. The attendance figure was particularly notable since this was an extra concert not in the regular subscription series.

Dr. Koussevitzky's all-Tchaikovsky program included the Pathetic Symphony, Concerto in B flat minor and the 1812 Overture. The soloist in the concerto was Seymour Lipkin, who won the Rachmaninoff fund prize last April, and who has been active here this summer as a student conductor. The aim of the Rachmaninoff fund was to discover a young artist of exceptional ability, and Mr. Lipkin can be so described in last night's performance. There was poise, and thorough and mature technical mastery, along with discerning musicianship and interpretative understanding and a noteworthy clarity of medium; his playing gave evidence of remarkable power employed with taste and discretion. The orchestra's accompaniment was well unified and in expressive accord with the talented soloist.

The Boston Symphony's interpretations of Tchaikovsky's music under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction are well known, and had their familiar but still impressive effectiveness last night; the 1812 Overture provided a sonorously imposing and triumphant close.

This Clipping From
PATHFINDER
CHICAGO, ILL.
AUG 11 1948

Music

Koussevitzky. His students fiddle where Hawthorne's house burned. (SEE: Tale)

Tanglewood Tale

In 1850 a bushy-haired writer brought his family to live in a big, sprawling red farmhouse near Lenox, Mass. But winter there was too tough. Nathaniel Hawthorne lived in "Tanglewood" a year and a half—long enough to write The House of Seven Gables, the Wonder Book and an outline for Tanglewood Tales. Then he moved away. In 1890 the house burned.

In 1941, when Mrs. Guy Patterson Gannett of the Federation of Music Clubs asked Serge Koussevitzky what the Federation might contribute to his newly founded Berkshire Music Festival, he suggested rebuilding the Hawthorne home on its original site on the Festival grounds.

Old & New. Late last month "The Little Red House" was officially opened. But it's more than just a cultural shrine. In it are two much-needed sound-proof practice studios for the chamber music and opera departments—and a kitchen where perspiring students can whip up a lemonade on a hot afternoon.

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
JOURNAL-COURIER
AUG 11 1948

Largest Crowd Of 1948 Season At Tanglewood

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 10 (AP)—The largest crowd of the 1948 Berkshire festival season turned out at Tanglewood tonight for an all-Tchaikovsky program by the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducting.

The paid attendance was 11,900 to top the previous 1948 record of 10,300 on July 31.

Seymour Lipkin's performance of the Piano Concerto No. 1 was received enthusiastically. Lipkin won the Rachmaninoff Fund's National Piano Contest last Spring.

Tomorrow night the opera department of the Berkshire Music Center will give its second and final presentation of Rossini's "The Turk in Italy."

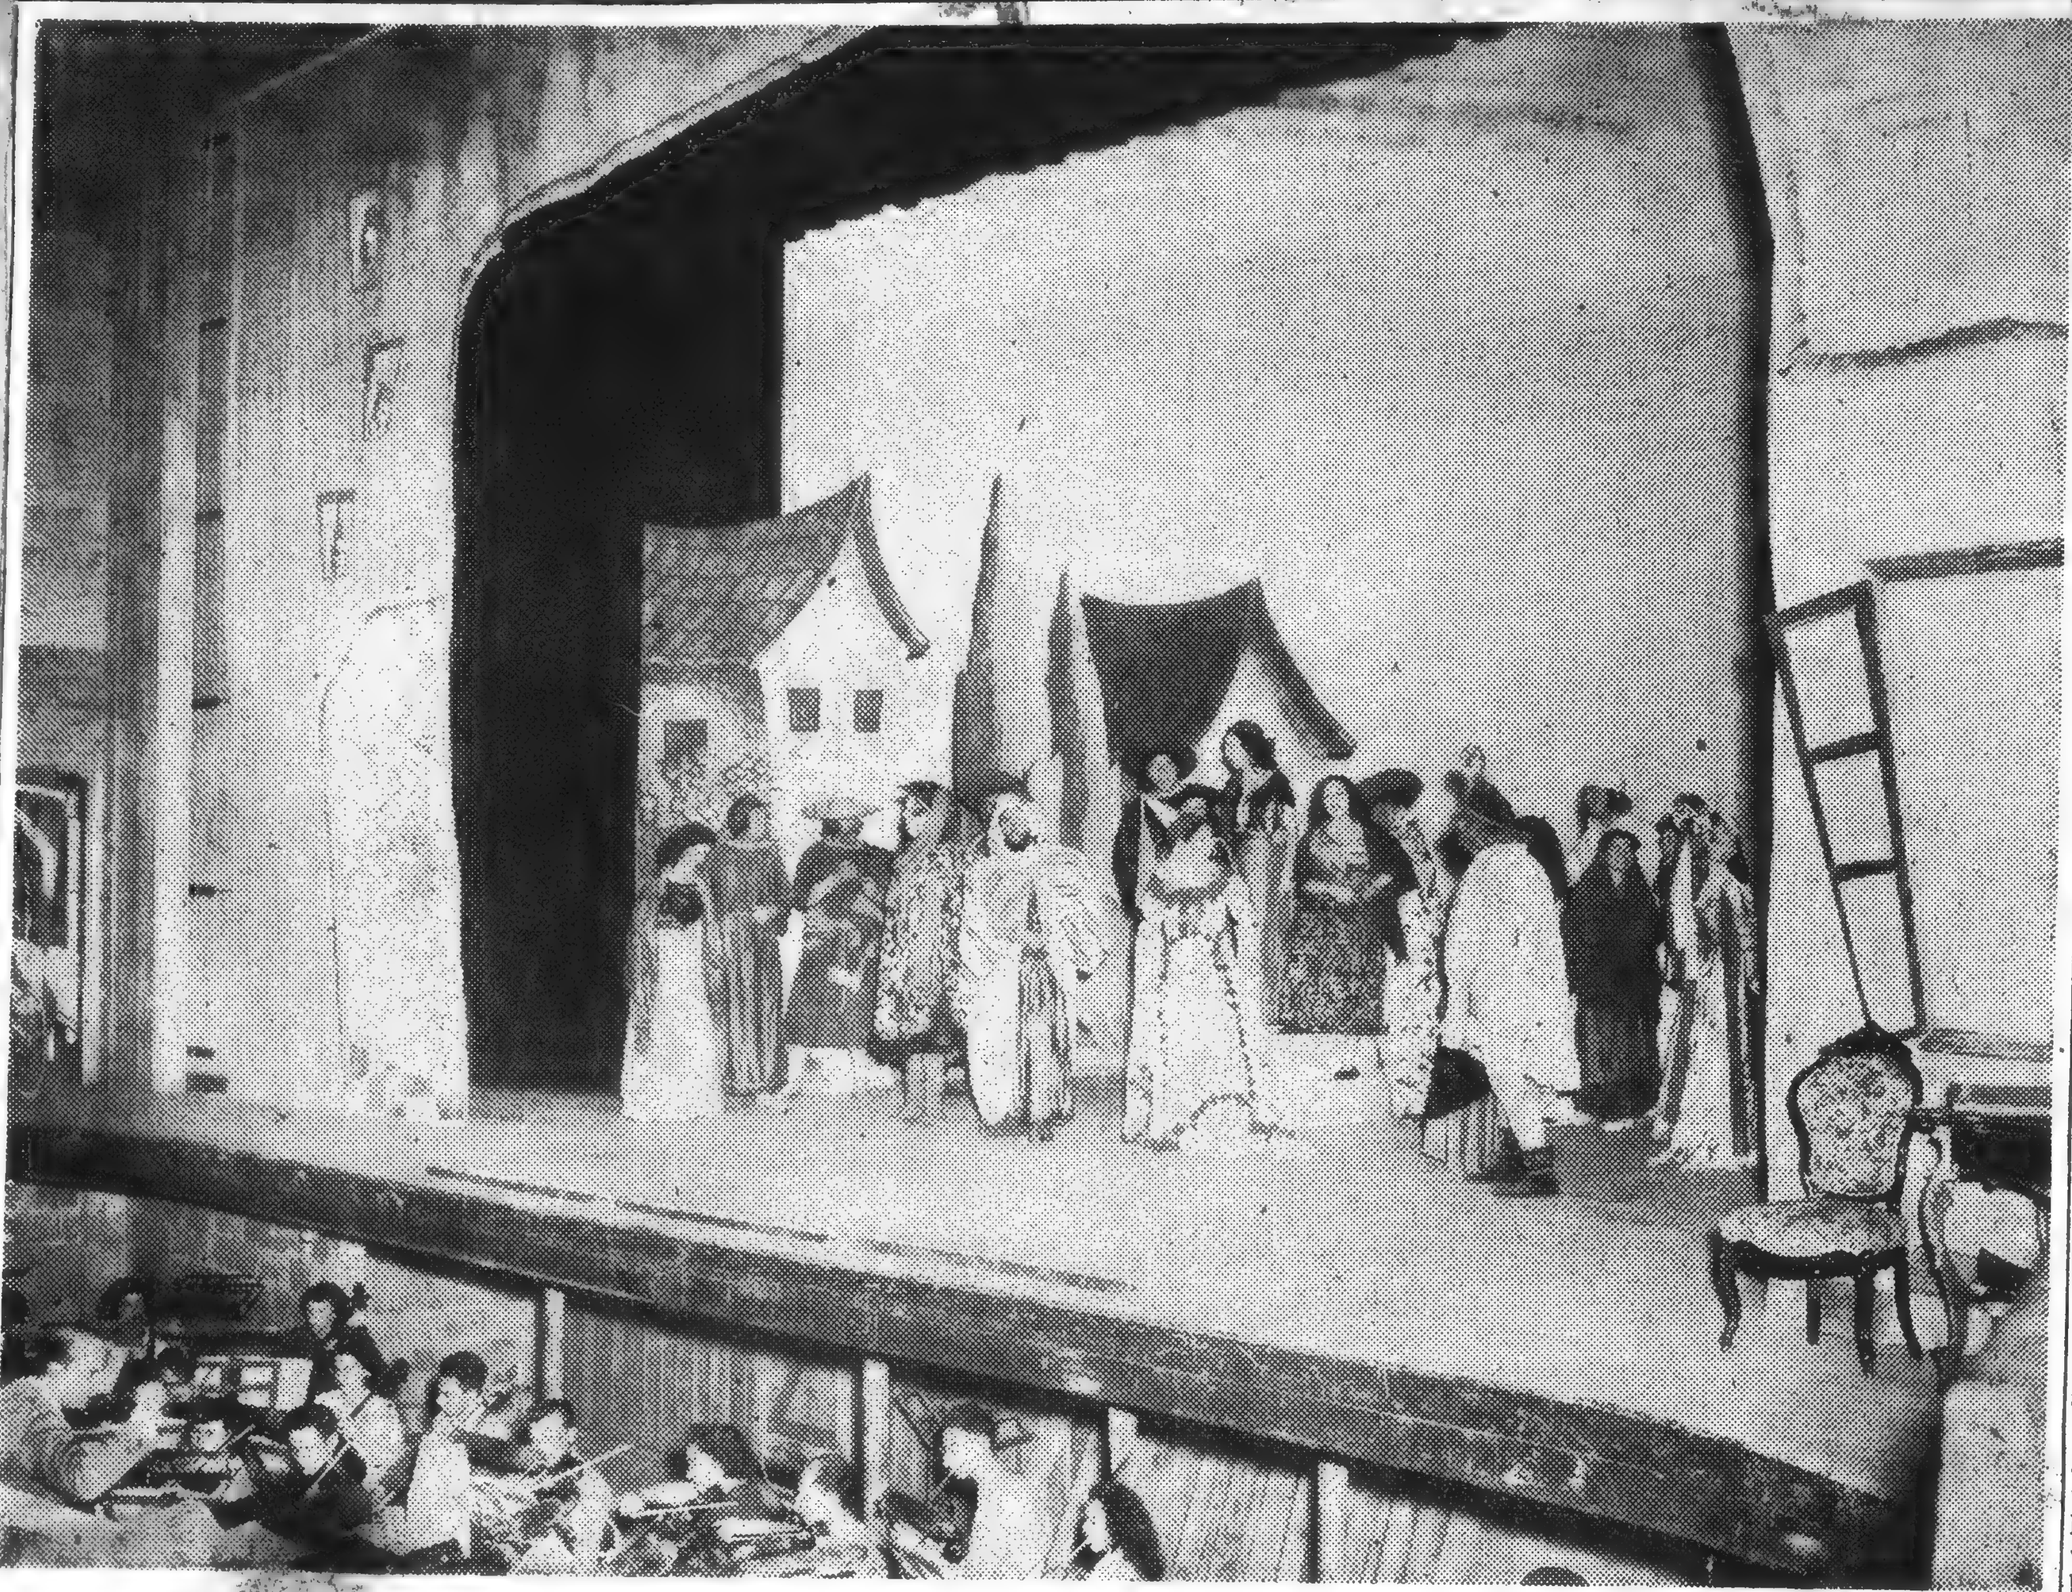
The third and final series of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be given Thursday, Saturday and Sunday.

Leonard Bernstein will return as guest conductor Thursday night.

Robert Shaw, youthful choral conductor, will direct the orchestra and the Berkshire festival chorus in Debussy's "The Blessed Damozel" and Brahms' Requiem on Saturday night. Ellen Faull, Frances Yeend and James Pease will be soloists.

Dr. Koussevitzky will lead the orchestra in Beethoven's Symphony No. 3 (Eroica) and Sibelius' Symphony in D major No. 2 Saturday afternoon.

Pittsfield, Massachusetts. Tuesday, August 10, 1948.



Babbitt

OPERA, TANGLEWOOD VERSION: Backed by the chorus, three of the principals in Rossini's "A Turk in Italy," sing a trio in the final scene of the first act in last night's opening performance by students in the opera department of the Berkshire Music Center. A second performance will be given tomorrow evening at 8.15 in the theatre concert hall.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
PERKSHIRE EAGLE
AUG 12 1948

Third Series Opens Tonight

Leonard Bernstein To Conduct BSO Festival Program

Leonard Bernstein will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the opening of the third and ~~last~~ series of Berkshire Festival concerts in the Music Shed tonight at Tanglewood at 8.15.

The program for this evening will be:

Une Nuit sur le Mont-Chauve, Moussorgsky (A Night on Bald Mountain), Orchestral Fantasy
Petrouchka, a burlesque in four scenes Stravinsky
(Piano solo, Lucas Foss)
Symphony No. 5, op. 45, 47, Shostakovitch

Rimsky-Korsakov conducted the first performance of the Moussorgsky work in St. Petersburg in 1886, after he had revised and edited it. Modeste Petrovitch Moussorgsky, born at Karevo in 1839, had died five years before his work was completed and orchestrated by the conductor.

"Petrouchka" will be played in its entirety, with the scenes of the people's fair at Shrovetide, at Petrouchka's, at the Moor's and again at Shrovetide, towards evening. Portions of this ballet, such as the third scene and the final tragedy, are seldom played in concert performances.

Shostakovitch composed his fifth symphony for performance in celebration of the 20th anniversary of the U.S.S.R.. It was first performed at Leningrad in November, 1937.

Tickets for seats in the rear are on sale at the box office, England Brothers and the Blue Bird Sh[illegible] Stockbridge. General admis[illegible] will be sold three hours befor[illegible] concert.

Music

Music Center Opera Group Scores in 'Turk in Italy'

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

TANGLEWOOD — Boris Goldovsky, chief of the opera section of the Berkshire Music Center, presented an opera by Rossini to the Friends of the Center last night which, he stated, "has never before been heard by anyone living today." In accordance with a policy established three years ago when Benjamin Britten's "Peter Grimes" was given its American premiere, and continued last year with the revival of a neglected Mozart opera, "Idomeneo," the opera department of the center continued the tradition this year by resurrecting an opera by a composer whose main contemporary exhibit from a very prolific creative life is the "Barber of Seville."

"The Turk in Italy," written in 1814, was played in various cities until about 1840 when it fell into neglect, more because of its opera bouffe plot, according to Goldovsky, than because of its music. Last night's presentation consisted of the realignment of Rossini's music, and the near-rewriting of the plot. There are six characters participating in an abundance of rich concerted vocal numbers.

The production was the best ever achieved by the students at the center by every point of measurement. Chief and main credit, however, should go to Mr. Goldovsky. The alterations to the story to make the part of a poet, in the original an insignificant role, into one of the most important characters, may well have a bit of autobiographical writing on the part of Goldovsky. In any case, that character turns out to be a sort of stage manager in "Our Town," continually narrating the action which is about to take place, and frequently becoming involved himself, in fact, to a degree which in the finale is entirely unexpected.

But Goldovsky gave the production drive and direction. There was not a suspicion all evening of a delay or indecision in the action. The sets were colorful and brilliant, and the costumes were equally picturesque.

Narrator Opens Scene

The poet-narrator, played by Francis Barnard, appears at the very outset and, after a two-bar orchestral introduction, immediately relates the situation and what is to be expected. Then comes a bright and tuneful overture. For tone here the orchestra was inadequate, but it gave alert response to vital directing. As the opera proceeded, the orchestral tone improved and in the accompaniment it was firm and definite and in various episodes with decorative figures, the young musicians played with increasing confidence and genuine effectiveness.

The music is witty and fresh and the vocal parts are written more for display than for substance. The overture, however, and a soprano aria in the final scene for Fiorilla have long, lyrically beautiful lines. The general impression is of lighthearted bubbling gaiety and music appropriate to the frivolous nature of the text.

Adele Addison as Zaida first to appear, used her lovely voice to sing give the gypsy role in unusual portrayal. Arthur Schoep as Geronio, the betrayed husband, not only sang with distinction but was outstanding histrionically. The most lavish opportunities fall to the role of the wife, Fiorilla, played by June Gardner, a coloratura soprano, who distinguished herself in all her many arias and ensembles. David Lloyd as the lover, Narciso, has won his place vocally already at Tanglewood this season in his appearances with the orchestra. Marshall Heimbaugh as the Turk was impressive in his imposing costume but less consistently telling vocally.

Early in the second scene of the first act Fiorilla has a beautiful florid aria which was sung with lavish apulence of voice by Miss Gardner. Soon arrives the first of several typically Gilbert and Sullivan patter songs which are entirely in place in this type of opera, for it is gay and light and fantastically incredible, a veritable Pirandello piece of six characters in search of an author. In the fourth scene, in Fiorilla's pavilion occurs a remarkable, musically colorful quartet by the wife, her husband and the two suitors, the Turk and the lover. The stage action of the principals and of the chorus moved with dispatch and with professional disposition. The orchestra was crisp and incisive.

The final (fifth) scene of the first act was the occasion of continuing ensembles, one a striking quartet by the four male characters which here includes the roving Poet, who is in and out of the action like Mephistofeles. It is written in canonic style, and finally enlists the two ladies to form a sextet which was the climax and finale of the act.

Quartet Impressive

The shorter second act resorts to an inevitable masked ball to confuse and in due time unshuffle the mixup. Here another quartet with the gypsy, the wife, the Turk and the lover was especially impressive. The final scene by the seashore, where the Turk seeks to carry home the lady of his attentions and the subsequent denouement is typical comic opera material and exceedingly amusing.

The whole evening was so swiftly joyous and continuously entertaining that the nature of the text is accepted without dissent. Mr. Goldovsky was called from the pit at the final curtain to share the eagerly cordial applause of the packed house. With him he brought his co-workers, Nassan Abaskhairoun, the scenic designer; Leo Van Witsen, costume designer; Robert J. Lawthers, technical director; Helmuth Wolfes, who revised the music with additional orchestrations; and Sarah Caldwell, who worked on the translation and the recitatives. For the second performance tomorrow night, James Pease will do the poet, Robert Goss the husband (Geronio) and David Garen, the lover. The other characters will repeat their roles.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
PERKSHIRE EAGLE
AUG 11 1948

Babbitt

FESTIVAL SOLOISTS: Frances Yeend, soprano, and James Pease, bass-baritone, will be the soloists in the Brahms "Requiem," with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Robert Shaw conducting, at Tanglewood Saturday evening. Both Miss Yeend and Mr. Pease have appeared at the Berkshire Festival before. They created leading roles in the American premiere of "Peter Grimes," two years ago and were soloists last summer in Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
PERKSHIRE EAGLE

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

AUG 11 1948

TSCHAIKOWSKY PROGRAM HEARD BY RECORD 11,900

Boston Symphony Acclaimed by Largest Audience at Tanglewood

By WILLARD M. CLARK

Lenox, Aug. 10—The combination of Koussevitzky, the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the music of Peter Ilyitch Tschaikowsky drew a record 11,900 people to Tanglewood tonight. They heard performances which were worth traveling any number of miles and undergoing any kind of hardships returning home.

Magnificent Performance

Highlighting the program was the magnificent performance of the B-flat minor piano concerto with Seymour Lipkin as soloist. This 21-year-old lad provided a reading the equal of which we have not heard for years and he received from Dr. Koussevitzky and the players the most perfect collaboration.

Dr. Koussevitzky was frankly delighted with Lipkin's playing. During every cadenza he faced the pianist and smiled broadly. It was pleasant to see this interest on the part of the famous conductor for this youth, who is also one of his students in conducting this season.

Plenty of Technique

Too often we listen to this concerto as a pure piece of bravura. On recordings we have it taken at breakneck speed and with force to crush mountains. There was plenty of technique tonight. But, in addition, Lipkin has a tone of exquisite purity, an enviable legato and a feeling for line. He brought to his reading a rare insight into the intentions of the composer, and so the performance became something very human, and it was so intended to be.

The audience reacted strongly to the performance and Lipkin was called back many times, sharing his honors gracefully with Dr. Koussevitzky and the players.

The program opened with a grandly spacious reading of the "Pathetique" symphony. No more despairing music has ever been penned than may be found in the first and last movements of this sixth symphony. It is a soul-searing experience to listen to them. Even during the relative gaiety of the two movements, one feels the undercurrent of unrest and longing. Such music is the breath of life to Dr. Koussevitzky. The performance became something very personal, a true Koussevitzky communication.

The program concluded with a tremendous performance of the "Overture Solennelle, 1812." It brought the huge audience to its feet. Pent-up emotions were released in a storm of bravos. The traditional Tschaikowsky program ended. The audience was surfeited with the music they wanted to hear and they went home content.

Tops July 31

The paid attendance was 11,900 to top the previous 1948 record of 10,300 on July 31.

Tomorrow night the opera department of the Berkshire Music Center will give its second and final presentation of Rossini's "The Turk in Italy.'

The third and final series of concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra will be given Thursday, Saturday and Sunday.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
PERKSHIRE EAGLE

AUG 11 1948

Tanglewood

Tonight at 8.15

Second performance of Rossini's "The Turk in Italy," by the opera department. All seats have been assigned.

Tomorrow Afternoon

Opera scenes at 4.30 in the theatre-concert hall: Scene 1, Act 2, from "Der Freischutz" (Weber); excerpt from Act 2 of "Rigoletto." (Verdi); two scenes from "Romeo and Juliet" (Gounod); aria from Act 3 of "Don Carlos" (Verdi); final scene from Eugene Onegin (Tchaikovsky). The performance will be in addition to the opera scenes scheduled for Friday afternoon.

Tomorrow Night

Opening concert of Series 3 of Berkshire Festival by Boston Symphony Orchestra, Leonard Bernstein conducting: Moussorgsky's "Une Nuit sur le Mont-Chauve" ("A Night on Bald Mountain"); Stravinsky's "Petrouchka"; Shostakovitch, symphony No. 5.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

AUG 11 1948

Tanglewood Will Have Two Concerts On This Week End

Lenox, Aug. 10—Two concerts at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood will attract more than usual notice this coming week end. In a recital Saturday afternoon at 3.30 Gregor Piatigorsky, assisted by Ralph Berkowitz, pianist, will introduce a new sonata, written in the past spring for Mr. Piatigorsky by Paul Hindemith. At their last symphony concert Friday evening the advanced orchestra will play an elegy composed in memory of the late Mrs. Andrew H. Hepburn, who presented Tanglewood to the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The tribute to Mrs. Hepburn was written at Tanglewood in the past three weeks by Robert Kurka, pupil in composition of Darius Milhaud. Composed for performance by English horn and strings, it will be conducted by Seymour Lipkin, pupil of Serge Koussevitzky. Born in Cicero, Ill. 26 years ago, the young composer studied at Columbia University. His wife, May, a pianist and teacher of piano, is also a student at the Center.

Mrs. Hepburn and her aunt, Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan, gave the estate of her grandparents, the late Mr. and Mrs. Richard Dixey, and their children and grandchildren, to the orchestra in the fall of 1936. After one more season in the tent, a mammoth Music Shed was built on the property in 1938, and later the theatre-concert and chamber music halls, studios and other buildings. The original house, one of the earliest summer homes of Berkshire County, is used for administration and studios. Mrs. Hepburn's family will attend the memorial concert.

Mr. Piatigorsky, noted cellist, who heads the chamber music department of the school and is on the faculty of the Curtis Institute, Philadelphia, will include in his program Beethoven's Sonata in A major and Schumann's Fantasiestucke. Mr. Berkowitz, executive assistant to Dr. Koussevitzky, director of the Center, was soloist in the Bach concert opening the Berkshire Festival. He also is a member of the Curtis faculty.

Friday night's program will include Vivaldi's "Concerto Grosso in D minor", Palmer's K-19, Glazunoff's Violin Concerto, Sebastiani's "Fiesta" and Rimsky-Korsakov's "Scheherazade".

Both concerts will be open to friends of the Berkshire Music Center

---

BERKSHIRE ENSEMBLE TO PLAY TONIGHT: These members of the Boston Symphony wind sections will present a free program this evening at 8.30 at the Berkshire Museum under the auspices of Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge. Left to right, they are Raymond Allard, bassoon; Louis Speyer, English horn, who organized the ensemble; Willem Valkenier, French horn; Pasquale Cardillo, clarinet; and James Pappoutsakis, flute. They will be assisted by pianist Lukas Foss of the orchestra.

Program Listed For Concert Here Tonight

The program has been announced for the concert by the Berkshire Woodwind Ensemble tonight at 8.30 at the Berkshire Museum. Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge is sponsoring the event, which is free.

The program:

Divertimento in D .... Haydn
Marcia—Siciliano—Minuetto—Finale
Flute, oboe, bassoon, horn
Divertissement, Opus 6 .... Roussel
Flute, oboe, clarinet, bassoon, horn, piano
Suite (d'apres Corrette) .... Milhaud
Entree et Rondeau—Tambourin—Musette—Serenade—Fanfare — Rondeau—Menuets—Le Coucou
Oboe, clarinet, bassoon
Sonata for English horn and piano, 1941 Hindemith
Slow—Allegro Pesante—Moderate—Scherzo, Moderate—Allegro Pesante
Quartet in C, 1941 .... Berger
Allegro—moderato—Andante—Allegro
Flute, oboe, clarinet, bassoon
Quintet, K. 452 .... Mozart
Largo—Allegro moderato—Larghetto—Rondo
Piano, oboe, clarinet, bassoon, horn

This Clipping From
HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT TELEGRAM

AUG 1 1 1948

All-Tschaikowsky Program Breaks Attendance Records

All Previous Figures for This Year at Tanglewood Smashed as 11,900 Persons Assemble to Hear Boston Symphony Orchestra in "Extra" Concert Directed by Koussevitzky—Seymour Lipkin Piano Soloist—Only Three Series C Concerts, Thursday, Saturday and Sunday Remain on Season's Program.

All previous attendance records for this year at Tanglewood were broken last night when 11,900 persons poured through the gates of the Lenox estate to hear the all-Tschaikowsky program played by the Boston Symphony orchestra under the leadership of Serge Koussevitzky.

~~While~~ the cowd set no all-time records, some previous special events having attracted as many as 13,000, it was one of the largest to be drawn by an evening concert, and it overflowed from the huge music shed with its capacity of 5,000 to fill the benches around the shed and spread out over the lawns in all directions. The highest previous paid attendance this season was 10,300 at the special concert on July 31.

Magnificent performances of the three Tschaikowsky works that comprised the program, rewarded the mammoth audience which responded with a genuine ovation. The concert opened with a moving interpretation of the Sixth ("Pathetique") symphony. This was followe by a performance of the popula First piano concerto, with Seymou Lipkin as soloist. The program clos ed with a tremendous rendition o the "Overture Solonnelle, 1812, which brought the immense audi ence to its feet to roar and shou approval. One of the great tribute of the evening was paid to M Lipkin, the 21-year-old winner of th 1948 Rachmaninoff Fund awar who this summer has been studyin conducting with Dr. Koussevitzk at the Berkshire Music center.

Last evening's concert was one c the two "extra" concerts arrange for the Boston Symphony in addi tion to the nine regular "series concerts of the festival season an the four intimate Bach-Mozart con certs that preceded it. Of the sea son there now remain only the thre "Series C" concerts which will tak place on Thursday and Saturda evening and Sunday afternoon.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
PERKSHIRE EAGLE

AUG 11 1948

Music

11,900 Hear Tchaikovsky Played by BSO

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

The record attendance of the season swarmed in and around the Shed at Tanglewood last night to hear the "extra" Tchaikovsky concert played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky. Eleven thousand nine hundred was the figure announced by the box office, which meant 6000 in the Shed and 6000 outside. This figure was all the more remarkable when it is considered that it has been accepted as a fact that it was necessary to draw on week-end visiting crowds to swell attendance to such numbers. This was essentially a neighborhood audience, drawn from the environs of 50 miles or more.

Everyone felt more than amply rewarded with a program which reached ecstatic heights. Dr. Koussevitzky laid on with lavish extravagance and the orchestra responded with superb tonal splendor. The B minor symphony, the "Pathetique" is by now considered a "specialte de la maison." And without cavil the Boston conductor has given it, by years of refining, a distinction quite his own. Tchaikovsky can stand such treatment. Such exaggerations or tamperings with details as it pleases one to apply to his music only augment its abundance of emotion. The symphony has rarely been given a more dramatic reading. Koussevitzky's unique sense of spacious and theatrical timing forced the last ounce of sentiment and passion from it. The absorbed audience remained transfixed and mouse-still seemingly for minutes after the last lamenting note of the final movement had been sounded.

Lipkin Brilliant

Seymour Lipkin, 21-year-old new piano sensation of the year, was the soloist in the B flat minor concerto. Young Lipkin has recently been awarded the Rachmaninoff fund prize after a national competition. He has also been an assistant to George Szell, conductor of the Cleveland Orchestra, and has been at the Berkshire Music Center this season as a student in the conducting class of Dr. Koussevitzky. His performance was brilliant and galvanic. In the slow movement, he showed a sense of poetic expression and warmth of tone which proved that it had taken a bit of time to gain control of himself before such a huge and near overwhelming mass of listeners, for in the first movement his technique was more to the fore than an impression that he thoroughly understand the music. An urge to hurry was plain indication of a mild case of the jitters. The audience, completely sympathetic to the engaging young man, gave every shred of approval their hands, and, of many, their voices, could convey.

The evening closed with a thunderous performance of the "1812" Overture. With the organ, the percussion and particularly the cathedral chimes banging away at their best, the last few bars became inaudible when the rising surge of applause completely overran the tonal explosion coming from the stage and the audience took over in a wild rush of noisy enthusiasm.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
PERKSHIRE EAGLE

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

AUG 11 1948

TSCHAIKOWSKY PROGRAM HEARD BY RECORD 11,900

Boston Symphony Acclaimed by Largest Audience at Tanglewood

By WILLARD M. CLARK

Lenox, Aug. 10—The combination of Koussevitzky, the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the music of Peter Ilyitch Tschaikowsky drew a record 11,900 people to Tanglewood tonight. They heard performances which were worth traveling any number of miles and undergoing any kind of hardships returning home.

Magnificent Performance

Highlighting the program was the magnificent performance of the B-flat minor piano concerto with Seymour Lipkin as soloist. This 21-year-old lad provided a reading the equal of which we have not heard for years and he received from Dr. Koussevitzky and the players the most perfect collaboration.

Dr. Koussevitzky was frankly delighted with Lipkin's playing. During every cadenza he faced the pianist and smiled broadly. It was pleasant to see this interest on the part of the famous conductor for this youth, who is also one of his students in conducting this season.

Plenty of Technique

Too often we listen to this concerto as a pure piece of bravura. On recordings we have it taken at breakneck speed and with force to crush mountains. There was plenty of technique tonight. But, in addition, Lipkin has a tone of exquisite purity, an enviable legato and a feeling for line. He brought to his reading a rare insight into the intentions of the composer, and so the performance became something very human, and it was so intended to be.

The audience reacted strongly to the performance and Lipkin was called back many times, sharing his honors gracefully with Dr. Koussevitzky and the players.

The program opened with a grandly spacious reading of the "Pathetique" symphony. No more despairing music has ever been penned than may be found in the first and last movements of this sixth symphony. It is a soul-searing experience to listen to them. Even during the relative gaiety of the two movements, one feels the undercurrent of unrest and longing. Such music is the breath of life to Dr. Koussevitzky. The performance became something very personal, a true Koussevitzky communication.

The program concluded with a tremendous performance of the "Overture Solennelle, 1812." It brought the huge audience to its feet. Pent-up emotions were released in a storm of bravos. The traditional Tschaikowsky program ended. The audience was surfeited with the music they wanted to hear and they went home content.

Tops July 31

The paid attendance was 11,900 to top the previous 1948 record of 10,300 on July 31.

Tomorrow night the opera department of the Berkshire Music Center will give its second and final presentation of Rossini's "The Turk in Italy."

The third and final series of concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra will be given Thursday, Saturday and Sunday.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
PERKSHIRE EAGLE

AUG 11 1948

Tanglewood

Tonight at 8.15

Second performance of Rossini's "The Turk in Italy," by the opera department. All seats have been assigned.

Tomorrow Afternoon

Opera scenes at 4.30 in the theatre-concert hall: Scene 1, Act 2, from "Der Freischutz" (Weber); excerpt from Act 2 of "Rigoletto." (Verdi); two scenes from "Romeo and Juliet" (Gounod); aria from Act 3 of "Don Carlos" (Verdi); final scene from Eugene Onegin (Tchaikovsky). The performance will be in addition to the opera scenes scheduled for Friday afternoon.

Tomorrow Night

Opening concert of Series 3 of Berkshire Festival by Boston Symphony Orchestra, Leonard Bernstein conducting: Moussorgsky's "Une Nuit sur le Mont-Chauve" ("A Night on Bald Mountain"); Stravinsky's "Petrouchka"; Shostakovitch, symphony No. 5.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

AUG 11 1948

Tanglewood Will Have Two Concerts On This Week End

Lenox, Aug. 10—Two concerts at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood will attract more than usual notice this coming week end. In a recital Saturday afternoon at 3.30 Gregor Piatigorsky, assisted by Ralph Berkowitz, pianist, will introduce a new sonata, written in the past spring for Mr. Piatigorsky by Paul Hindemith. At their last symphony concert Friday evening the advanced orchestra will play an elegy composed in memory of the late Mrs. Andrew H. Hepburn, who presented Tanglewood to the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The tribute to Mrs. Hepburn was written at Tanglewood in the past three weeks by Robert Kurka, pupil in composition of Darius Milhaud. Composed for performance by English horn and strings, it will be conducted by Seymour Lipkin, pupil of Serge Koussevitzky. Born in Cicero, Ill. 26 years ago, the young composer studied at Columbia University. His wife, May, a pianist and teacher of piano, is also a student at the Center.

Mrs. Hepburn and her aunt, Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan, gave the estate of her grandparents, the late Mr. and Mrs. Richard Dixey, and their children and grandchildren, to the orchestra in the fall of 1936. After one more season in the tent, a mammoth Music Shed was built on the property in 1938, and later the theatre-concert and chamber music halls, studios and other buildings. The original house, one of the earliest summer homes of Berkshire County, is used for administration and studios. Mrs. Hepburn's family will attend the memorial concert.

Mr. Piatigorsky, noted cellist, who heads the chamber music department of the school and is on the faculty of the Curtis Institute, Philadelphia, will include in his program Beethoven's Sonata in A major and Schumann's Fantasiestucke. Mr. Berkowitz, executive assistant to Dr. Koussevitzky, director of the Center, was soloist in the Bach concert opening the Berkshire Festival. He also is a member of the Curtis faculty.

Friday night's program will include Vivaldi's "Concerto Grosso in D minor", Palmer's K-19, Glazunoff's Violin Concerto, Sebastiani's "Fiesta" and Rimsky-Korsakov's "Scheherazade".

Both concerts will be open to friends of the Berkshire Music Center

---

BERKSHIRE ENSEMBLE TO PLAY TONIGHT: These members of the Boston Symphony wind sections will present a free program this evening at 8.30 at the Berkshire Museum under the auspices of Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge. Left to right, they are Raymond Allard, bassoon; Louis Speyer, English horn, who organized the ensemble; Willem Valkenier, French horn; Pasquale Cardillo, clarinet; and James Pappoutsakis, flute. They will be assisted by pianist Lukas Foss of the orchestra.

Program Listed For Concert Here Tonight

The program has been announced for the concert by the Berkshire Woodwind Ensemble tonight at 8.30 at the Berkshire Museum. Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge is sponsoring the event, which is free.

The program:

Divertimento in D .... Haydn
Marcia—Siciliano—Minuetto—Finale
Flute, oboe, bassoon, horn
Divertissement, Opus 6 .... Roussel
Flute, oboe, clarinet, bassoon, horn, piano
Suite (d'apres Corrette) ...... Milhaud
Entree et Rondeau—Tambourin—Musette—Serenade—Fanfare — Rondeau—Menuets—Le Coucou
Oboe, clarinet, bassoon
Sonata for English horn and piano, 1941 Hindemith
Slow—Allegro Pesante—Moderate—Scherzo, Moderate—Allegro Pesante
Quartet in C, 1941 .... Berger
Allegro—moderato—Andante—Allegro
Flute, oboe, clarinet, bassoon
Quintet, K. 452 .... Mozart
Largo—Allegro moderato—Larghetto—Rondo
Piano, oboe, clarinet, bassoon, horn

This Clipping From
HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT TELEGRAM

AUG 1 1 1948

All-Tschaikowsky Program Breaks Attendance Records

All Previous Figures for This Year at Tanglewood Smashed as 11,900 Persons Assemble to Hear Boston Symphony Orchestra in "Extra" Concert Directed by Koussevitzky—Seymour Lipkin Piano Soloist—Only Three Series C Concerts, Thursday, Saturday and Sunday Remain on Season's Program.

All previous attendance records for this year at Tanglewood were broken last night when 11,900 persons poured through the gates of the Lenox estate to hear the all-Tschaikowsky program played by the Boston Symphony orchestra under the leadership of Serge Koussevitzky.

[illegible] the cowd set no all-time records, some previous special events having attracted as many as 13,000, it was one of the largest to be drawn by an evening concert, and it overflowed from the huge music shed with its capacity of 5,000 to fill the benches around the shed and spread out over the lawns in all directions. The highest previous paid attendance this season was 10,300 at the special concert on July 31.

Magnificent performances of the three Tschaikowsky works that comprised the program, rewarded the mammoth audience which responded with a genuine ovation. The concert opened with a moving interpretation of the Sixth ("Pathetique") symphony. This was followed by a performance of the popula First piano concerto, with Seymou Lipkin as soloist. The program closed with a tremendous rendition o the "Overture Solonnelle, 1812, which brought the immense audience to its feet to roar and shou approval. One of the great tribute of the evening was paid to Mr Lipkin, the 21-year-old winner of th 1948 Rachmaninoff Fund awar who this summer has been studyin conducting with Dr. Koussevitzk at the Berkshire Music center.

Last evening's concert was one o the two "extra" concerts arrange for the Boston Symphony in addition to the nine regular "series concerts of the festival season an the four intimate Bach-Mozart concerts that preceded it. Of the season there now remain only the thre "Series C" concerts which will tak place on Thursday and Saturda evening and Sunday afternoon.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
PERKSHIRE EAGLE

AUG 11 1948

Music

11,900 Hear Tchaikovsky Played by BSO

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

The record attendance of the season swarmed in and around the Shed at Tanglewood last night to hear the "extra" Tchaikovsky concert played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky. Eleven thousand nine hundred was the figure announced by the box office, which meant 6000 in the Shed and 6000 outside. This figure was all the more remarkable when it is considered that it has been accepted as a fact that it was necessary to draw on week-end visiting crowds to swell attendance to such numbers. This was essentially a neighborhood audience, drawn from the environs of 50 miles or more.

Everyone felt more than amply rewarded with a program which reached ecstatic heights. Dr. Koussevitzky laid on with lavish extravagance and the orchestra responded with superb tonal splendor. The B minor symphony, the "Pathetique" is by now considered a "specialte de la maison." And without cavil the Boston conductor has given it, by years of refining, a distinction quite his own. Tchaikovsky can stand such treatment. Such exaggerations or tamperings with details as it pleases one to apply to his music only augment its abundance of emotion. The symphony has rarely been given a more dramatic reading. Koussevitzky's unique sense of spacious and theatrical timing forced the last ounce of sentiment and passion from it. The absorbed audience remained transfixed and mouse-still seemingly for minutes after the last lamenting note of the final movement had been sounded.

Lipkin Brilliant

Seymour Lipkin, 21-year-old new piano sensation of the year, was the soloist in the B flat minor concerto. Young Lipkin has recently been awarded the Rachmaninoff fund prize after a national competition. He has also been an assistant to George Szell, conductor of the Cleveland Orchestra, and has been at the Berkshire Music Center this season as a student in the conducting class of Dr. Koussevitzky. His performance was brilliant and galvanic. In the slow movement, he showed a sense of poetic expression and warmth of tone which proved that it had taken a bit of time to gain control of himself before such a huge and near overwhelming mass of listeners, for in the first movement his technique was more to the fore than an impression that he thoroughly understand the music. An urge to hurry was plain indication of a mild case of the jitters. The audience, completely sympathetic to the engaging young man, gave every shred of approval their hands, and, of many, their voices, could convey.

The evening closed with a thunderous performance of the "1812" Overture. With the organ, the percussion and particularly the cathedral chimes banging away at their best, the last few bars became inaudible when the rising surge of applause completely overran the tonal explosion coming from the stage and the audience took over in a wild rush of noisy enthusiasm.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
AUG 11 1948

LIPKIN IS SOLOIST AT TANGLEWOOD

Pianist Plays B Minor Concerto as Koussevitzky Presents Tchaikovsky Program

By OLIN DOWNES

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 10 — A special Tchaikovsky program was given by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra tonight in the music shed, with Seymour Lipkin, the pianist, who was the winner last spring of the Rachmaninoff Fund national piano contest, as soloist in the performance of the B Flat Minor Concerto. Mr. Lipkin had a remarkable success, remarkable not less for his musicianship, authority, and sense of symphonic proportion than for his abundant virtuosity and the fire with which he projected the music.

To this should be added the beauty and lyricism of his style in the slow movement, when he made the piano sing as lyrically as he had made it roar and declaim with barbaric pomp and ceremony in earlier pages. Mr. Lipkin had the music in the palm of his hand, so far as virtuosity is concerned, but it is not often that a pianist of 21 displays the reserve power and the architectural sense of line and climax which was immediately manifest. With the opening chords and the launching by the orchestra over them of the great theme for the strings there was the sense of the structure as a whole.

The end was felt in the beginning, and everything that followed fell inevitably into place. No point was missed; no episode, however exciting or climactic, caused the hearer to lose the sweep of the grand concerto. If one had reservation about this performance it would be that it was almost too authoritatively done by so young a man.

Only Appearance Since April

This, we believe, was Mr. Lipkin's first public appearance before an audience of big dimensions since he won the Rachmaninoff Fund prize in Carnegie Hall. On that occasion he played but one movement of the concerto he interpreted this evening. Tonight he more than fulfilled the promise of the earlier performance.

But the soloist's deed of derring-do was by no means the only feature of this concert. Dr. Koussevitzky preceded the concerto with the "Symphonie Pathetique" and followed it by a revival that he accomplished with really stupendous effect of the "1812" overture. There is nothing that need be said today of the immortal symphony, its blazing passion and its tragical power, and the final lament which is no mere personal outpouring, but an elegy for fated humanity. The symphony was driven home, although the tempi of the last three movements, especially the second and third, was uncommonly fast, and, perhaps, unnecessarily so.

A score which for all its familiarity and unending popularity remains a colossal and always astonishing masterpiece had the effect to be expected. The astonishing moment was the "1812" overture. With it Dr. Koussevitzky fairly capped the sensations of the evening.

A Monumental Piece

For a few decades the purists and academicians and the high priests of the musical art have been accustomed to condescend if not to sneer at this monumental piece, composed on order, for a public occasion. Well, Tchaikovsky knew his business. He had also the musical ideas and the themes, some original, some traditional, to back him up. Here was theatrical gesture, if you will, in the magnificently constructed music. Here, also, was grandeur.

The old hymns, the songs of rejoicing that stream like flying banners from the orchestra, have a lordliness and power which are inescapable. But it takes a conductor who understands all this, and has the capacity to bring it forth, to realize what a creation the old "1812" overture is.

There were long demonstrations for young Mr. Lipkin, and there was just as resounding demonstration for the conductor and the overture that brought the concert to an end. The audience numbered 12,000.

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
AUG 1 2 1948

City Club Buses to Go To Tanglewood Again

The City Club will charter buses to take Albanians to the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood again ~~Sunday~~ afternoon, Mrs. Sally Weyers, chairman, announced today.

The buses will leave from the club, 257 State St., at 12:30 p. m. and will return to Albany about 7 p. m. Reservations may be made by calling the club between 10 a. m. and 8 p. m. daily.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
STAR
AUG 11 1948

Music

An Old Rossini Opera Is Given New Life

By ROBERT A. HAGUE

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 10—The final week of the 1948 Berkshire Festival opened Monday evening with a performance of Rossini's opera buffa, The Turk in Italy, presented by the Opera Department of the Berkshire Music Center in the theater-concert hall at Tanglewood. Staged and conducted by Boris Goldovsky, who also had revised the libretto and put it into English with the aid of Sarah Caldwell, the 134-year-old opera made a decided hit with its first Tanglewood audience.

It was a delightful evening, full of surprises and laughter. Thanks to Mr. Goldovsky and an uncommonly talented cast of young singing actors, an ancient, moldy comic opera was thoroughly revitalized and turned into a witty and stylish entertainment which romped across the stage with the pace and sparkle of a slick modern musical comedy. And, being in English, it was easy to follow and enjoy, despite the many complications and twists of its farcical plot.

• • •

In resuscitating The Turk in Italy, a work first produced in 1814 in Milan, seen briefly in other European cities and in New York and then forgotten, Mr. Goldovsky has taken the Rossini music from the several existing versions of the score, and rearranged and reordered it to suit the revised text. He has had part of it re-orchestrated by Helmuth Wolves and added newly composed piano recitatives in the Rossini style. The result is a lively, fluent, well-integrated score that always sounds like Rossini, even when it isn't.

And while none of this music is exactly memorable, all of it is very pleasant to listen to. It is everywhere facile, melodious and sprightly, and some numbers, like the charming sextet, "When a Woman Has Fallen in Love," are as good as anything in Rossini's more enduring opera, The Barber of Seville.

• • •

As for the text, finding Romani's original plot for The Turk too unwieldy and ridiculous for modern usage, Mr. Goldovsky has tossed most of it overboard and started from scratch in an effort to bring the story closer to present-day audiences. The poet, only a secondary character in the original, has become the opera's key figure, who "lives in front of the curtain, virtually writes the opera as it progresses, and is on equal terms with the people on both sides of the footlights."

This device permits considerable edifying and amusing byplay between the poet and the characters in the story, including a great deal of hilarious kidding of the stuffier contrivances and traditions of the operatic stage in general. Knowing them always to have proved successful, the poet takes for the principal ingredients of his plot a young and pretty Italian wife, an old jealous husband and a young and bashful lover. But his manipulations are upset by many unexpected events. The wife, for example, falls in love with a handsome, visiting Turk, instead of with the lover; a gypsy girl, who also loves the Turk, flaunts all tradition by refusing to faint when she should, and when the poet tries to bring on a happy conclusion by having the wife return to her husband, the wife berates him for thinking of so routine a solution.

• • •

Monday night's cast was uniformly excellent in voice and action, and worked together with extraordinary rapport. Francis Barnard sang the poet's lines with clarity and distinction and acted the role with suitable animation and style. June Gardner was an engaging wife, delivering her coloratura passages with considerable brilliance, and Adele Addison was a captivating and sweet-voiced gypsy. David Lloyd's fine tenor was admirably used in the role of the shy lover, as was Marshall Heinbaugh's warm baritone in the part of the [illegible] Turk. And Arthur Schoep as the hapless husband, sang well and got all the comedy there was out of his role.

The chorus sang with notable freshness and vigor, and the student orchestra gave a spirited and [illegible]lifluous account of Rossini's music. Nassan Abiskhairoun's cleverly designed settings and the bright, clear colors of Leo Van Witsen's costumes added a lot to the visual pleasures of the evening.

But, most of all, it was Mr. Goldovsky's evening. I can think of many other operas and opera houses that might profit by his sure and enlivening touch.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
PERKSHIRE EAGLE
AUG 12 1948

Music

Woodwind Ensemble Player Recalls Study With Pagerey

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

Pasquale Cardillo, clarinetist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and ~~member of the Berkshire~~ Woodwind Ensemble which played at the Berkshire Museum last night under the sponsorship of Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, was proud to recall the early years of study of his instrument here in Pittsfield under the guidance of Louis F. Pagerey of 509 Tyler Street. Cardillo is a native of North Adams and came to Pittsfield regularly as a young man to pursue his studies.

He was one of six Boston Symphony men who gave a program which began with a Michael Haydn Divertimento (in D), ended with the Mozart quintet, (K 452) and included four later and contemporary works. The director of the ensemble is Louis Speyer, oboeist and English horn player. He was assisted by James Pappoutsakis, flute; Cardillo, clarinet; Raymond Allard, bassoon; Willem Valkenier, French horn; and Lukas Foss, pianist.

An audience which required placing chairs in the wings of the stage heard a program which required a different combination of instruments in each work. The sonority produced in the classics was rich and satisfying. The grace and refinement of the performances were of the superior character which was to be expected of artists of their calibre, but its actual execution is always a matter of fresh and charming surprise.

The French have always had a flair for writing for wind instruments, and last night's choices strongly supported that opinion. Darius Milhaud, at present on the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center, was present and obliged to acknowledge the applause which followed his Suite (d'apres Corrette) for oboe, clarinet and bassoon. It consists of eight short sketches of witty and volatile spirit. They were played with an appropriate touch, proving the composer's understanding of the medium he selected. The sextet of the late Albert Roussel (Opus 6) is remarkably deft in the use of wind timbres and emerges with exceptional facility to the ear.

The Hindemith sonata for English horn and piano, played by Mr. Speyer and Mr. Foss, consists of a half-dozen short movements, of which two are marked "allegro pesante." This well illustrates portions of the music, while in other sections the oboe had long lyrical lines, admirably played by Mr. Speyer, which are supported and vitalized by more vigorous contrapuntal treatment in the piano.

The Berere quartet in C, dated 1941, is for flute, oboe, clarinet and bassoon. The three short movements have a lovely andante between two skillfully written allegros, jerky in spots and abrupt in their endings.

The closing Mozart quintet showed the artists' excellence of phrasing to best advantage. Foss added plenty, to say the least, of zest to the piano assignments, but it brought the program to a rousing close, and the audience cordially showed their appreciation to Mrs. Coolidge when Mr. Speyer graciously stepped to the front of the stage and shook her hand in homage and gratitude.

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
AUG 1 1 1948

Nearly 12,000 Hear Tschaikowsky Concert

By RAYMOND MORIN

LENOX, Wednesday—Serge Koussevitzky once told this reviewer that Tschaikowsky was ~~the Boston~~ Symphony's "Specialty of the House." In the all-Tschaikowsky program last night at Tanglewood he again proved that claim. He also made it clear he is not restricted to stereotyped interpretations.

This extra concert in the Berkshire Festival attracted the largest audience of the Summer—nearly 12,000. The soloist was Seymour Lipkin in the "Pianoforte Concerto in B-flat". Also programmed were "Symphony No. 6 in B Minor (Pathetique), Opus 74" and "Ouverture Sole-Belle, 1812, Opus 49."

Highly Personalized

From the symphony's opening tones in wood-winds, Dr. Koussevitzky directed an engrossing but surprisingly individual reading of the work. Throughout, there was an impression that every tone was of great moment. The active phrases moved steadfastly toward and from climaxes. Tonally, there was sharp penetration by brasses, velvety tones in muted violins (played conspicuously slower than is Koussevitzky's custom), crystaline phrases by reeds.

The symphony was given a highly personalized interpretation. I have never known the conductor to linger so over its emotional passages, or perform the rapid sections more so. From any other conductor, these deviations from custom might inspire criticism, particularly toward the almost savage approach to some of the fiery climaxes.

Beautiful Intonation

The second movement has a "joiede-vivre" quality that was due, in part at least, to an unlagging tempo. Beautiful intonation was achieved by the strings in the slow middle section. The chattering third movement moved from a swift opening in light strings to bursting climaxes in full orchestra. It was brilliant execution. In sections where cues must be given with split second rapidity None were more neglected. When the rhythm was established in full orchestra, the conductor at times appeared almost motionless. What showmanship!

Instead of the usual doleful conception of the final movement, into which morbid-minded theorists seem bent upon injecting a prediction of the composer's mythical suicide, Dr. Koussevitzky made it an eloquent and moving experience.

It seems to be the fashion to try to out-Horowitz the Tschaikowsky Piano Concerto. Very few succeed in equalling that pianist's interpretation. At least, as he once performed it under Toscanini.

Lipkin manifested a wealth of pianistic gifts. He has not only a fluent technic but it is a tremendous one. Also he has a stimulus in his playing that gives it vitality. He is stylistically attractive and has a keen sense of musicianship.

Tendency to Dwell

If indeed one were to take issue with Lipkin's interpretation of this perennial work, it would be with his tendency to dwell too lengthily over the work's quietly emotional passages. The most notable example of this was in the final section of the first movement's cadenza where the pianist nearly severed the line of continuity with exaggerated ritards and decrease of tempo.

On the other hand, there is a certain reward in these arbitrary conceptions which extract the work from the hackneyed. Certainly in the work's salient demands the pianist responded with brilliance. The bristling tempos that he set for himself proved him worthy of fulfillment and the technical hazards were met with aplomb.

Superb Accompaniment

Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra gave Seymour a superb accompaniment.

Series C with which the festival will conclude, will open its three concerts on Thursday night. Leonard Bernstein and the Boston Symphony will play Moussorgsky's "Night on Bald Mountain," Stravinsky's "Petrouchka" (complete), and Shostakovich's "Symphony No. 5."

Tanglewood—Summer Home Of The Boston Symphony

ATTAWA - CAN - AUG 11TH

Serious Young Students In A Beautiful Setting

The following is the first in a series of four articles on Tanglewood, home of the Berkshire Music Festival at Lenox, Massachusetts, written by the music and drama editor of The Evening Citizen, who spent a week there observing the students and attending the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

By Lauretta Thistle
Evening Citizen Music Editor

LENOX, Mass.—"So you're going to Tanglewood. What is this Tanglewood? Everyone but me seems to have heard of it." Thus the aggrieved voice of a friend.

What is Tanglewood?

Tanglewood is the music of Mozart floating out through the trees and over a beautiful lawn on a golden Sunday afternoon.

Tanglewood is a melange of beautiful women in Fifth Avenue gowns who dine on lobster thermidor after the concert and students in sport shirts and slacks who have hitchhiked to the music center and who make a dinner of hamburger.

As You May Never Hear It

Tanglewood is hearing a familiar symphony played as you may never hear it again — for just as the strings begin an idyllic theme a tone-deaf sparrow, in the tree a few feet away, adds some extra notes. His performance shows a sturdy disregard for dotted quarters and for Koussevitsky's beat, but it is part of Tanglewood.

...they have the rights of the matter, for the concerts were originally planned as open-air events. Only after Koussevitsky had refused outright to run the risk of having concerts "rained out" was the construction of buildings begun. That was 11 years ago.

Today a lone cellist is warming up, fiddling furiously, as the early-comers wander in and look at their surroundings — rough stone and cement floor, unfinished wood walls and roof, and the many doors open to the sunlight, the smell of green trees and the sound of an occasional gust of wind in the leaves—a breeze that will later make its own contribution to a symphony, rustling like the whisper of a drumroll in the distance.

Suddenly you realize that the room is filled with people, and a moment later the 35 orchestra members, dapper in their white summer suits, are all tootling and scraping like mad, trying to catch up with the diligent cellist.

Tanglewood is the sight of serious young students throwing themselves down on the grass beside composer Aaron Copland to discuss composing styles and techniques. Two youngsters toting a great double-bass pass by. Over in the buffet section a couple of lads, over a glass of "pop's punch" (10 cents; 25 on Sundays) discuss styles of conducting—Koussevitsky, it seems, has adopted some mannerisms from his dynamic young protege Leonard Bernstein!

"Sweet chance that led my steps this way" at a time when a Mozart program and perfect summer weather conjoin to make this first day at the Berkshire Festival a memorable one. Tanglewood, the rambling estate at Lenox, Massachusetts, where the Boston Symphony Orchestra gives these summer concerts, is incredibly beautiful as it nestles among the Berkshire Hills—hills which are Cape Breton-like in their modest, comfortable stature.

Spirit Reaches Out

Even before you come near the music center itself, the pleasant spirit of the festival reaches out and warms you in its glow. The mile-and-a-half hill leading down from the village of Lenox is crowded with automobiles — and most of them stop to offer a drive to those on foot, students and visitors alike. It's an old Tanglewood custom.

This Sunday afternoon concert of Mozart, because it calls for a small orchestra, is held in the small theater concert hall, instead of the massive Music Shed with its accommodation for 6,000. Today about 1,200 people are under the roof of the little hall, some dozens more have paid for seats along the side of the building, and hundreds listen from the lawn outside.

These "outsiders" are an integral part of the festival concerts. They stretch out on motor rugs, sit on Sunday papers, or perhaps are formal enough to bring camp stools. They comprise grandparents, teen-agers and some even younger, and they believe that theirs is the best way to enjoy the Tanglewood concerts. Perhaps

Thunderous Applause

A pause, and then a greeting of thunderous applause. That sprightly little figure in trim brown tropicals, is Serge Koussevitsky. The warmth of his reception signifies several things—the audience's high regard for him as one of the greatest conductors of our day and as one of the staunchest friends of new composers and young performers; tribute to him for his devotion and sacrifice to the cause of the Berkshire Music Center; and, of course, anticipation of the pleasures to be had from this concert.

Both familiar and lesser known works are included on the program. The serenade for eight wind instruments brings its own peculiar pleasure, especially at that point where the horns and clarinets keep silent and let the oboes and bassoons frolic with a menuetto in canon style. This is high-hearted sportiveness with contrapuntal music—counterpoint for the fun of it.

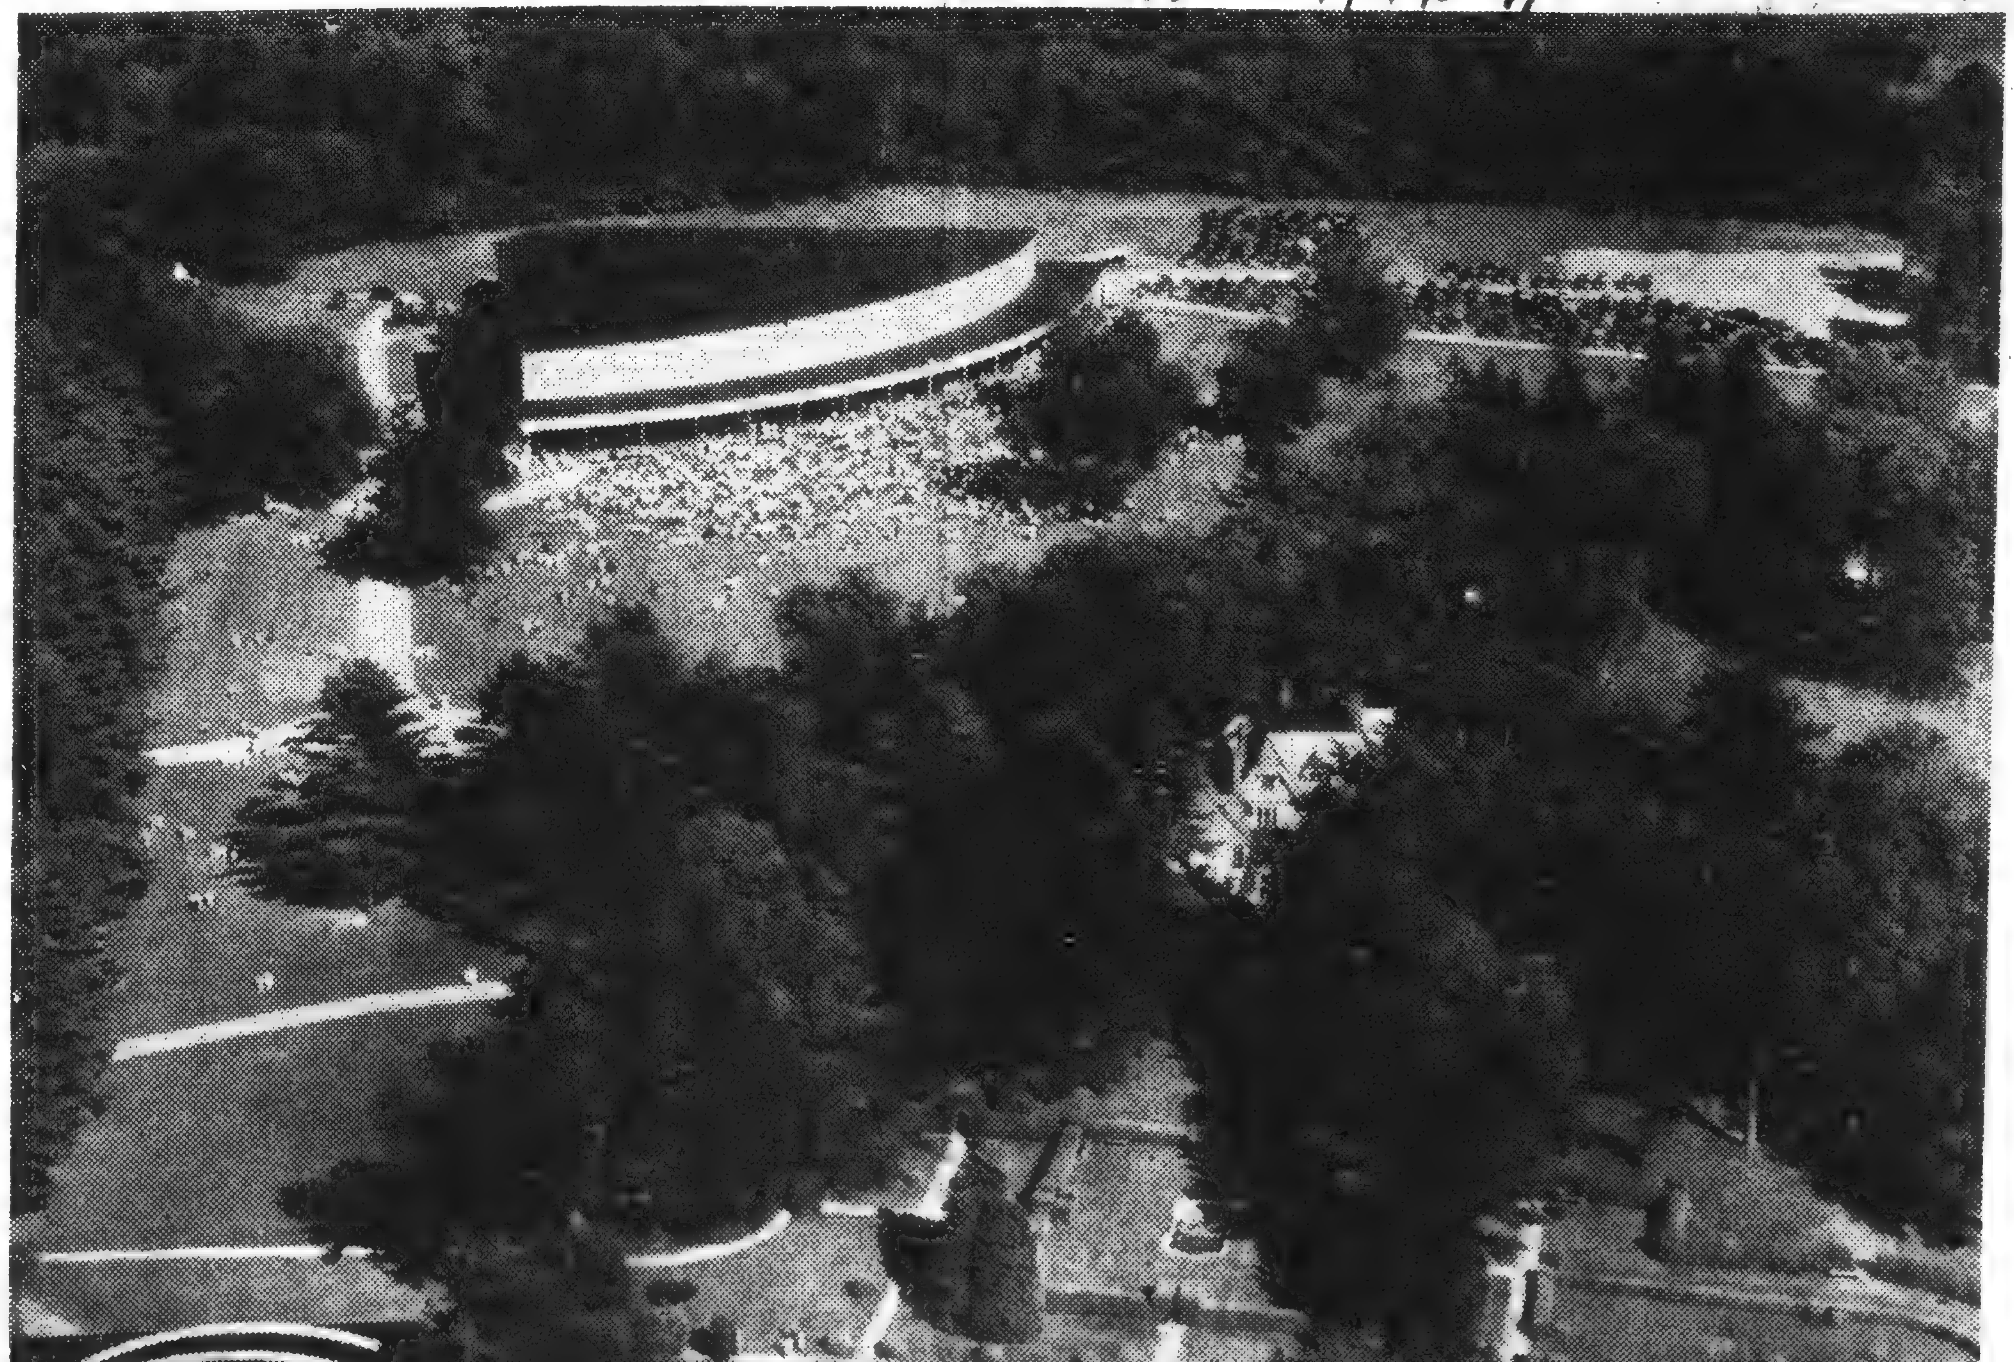
A piano concerto (G major, K453) with a Berkshire alumnus, Lukas Foss, as soloist ,and a lesser known symphony, No. 34, bring us to the crowning glory of the afternoon: Mozart's last-but-two symphony, No. 39. The sweet, clean sound of the strings increases in brilliance until you are almost convinced that it is visible, as a rainbow is visible. You could almost reach out and touch it.

Then the wealthy young New York matrons and the great-grandmothers leaning on canes and the serious young student conductors are moving slowly and happily towards the gate. The great sea of automobiles is broken up into rivers—an endless stream going towards Lenox, smaller ones meandering off in other directions.

There are, I suppose, many fine ways to begin a week at Tanglewood but it seems to me that the happiest prescription of all is Mozart.

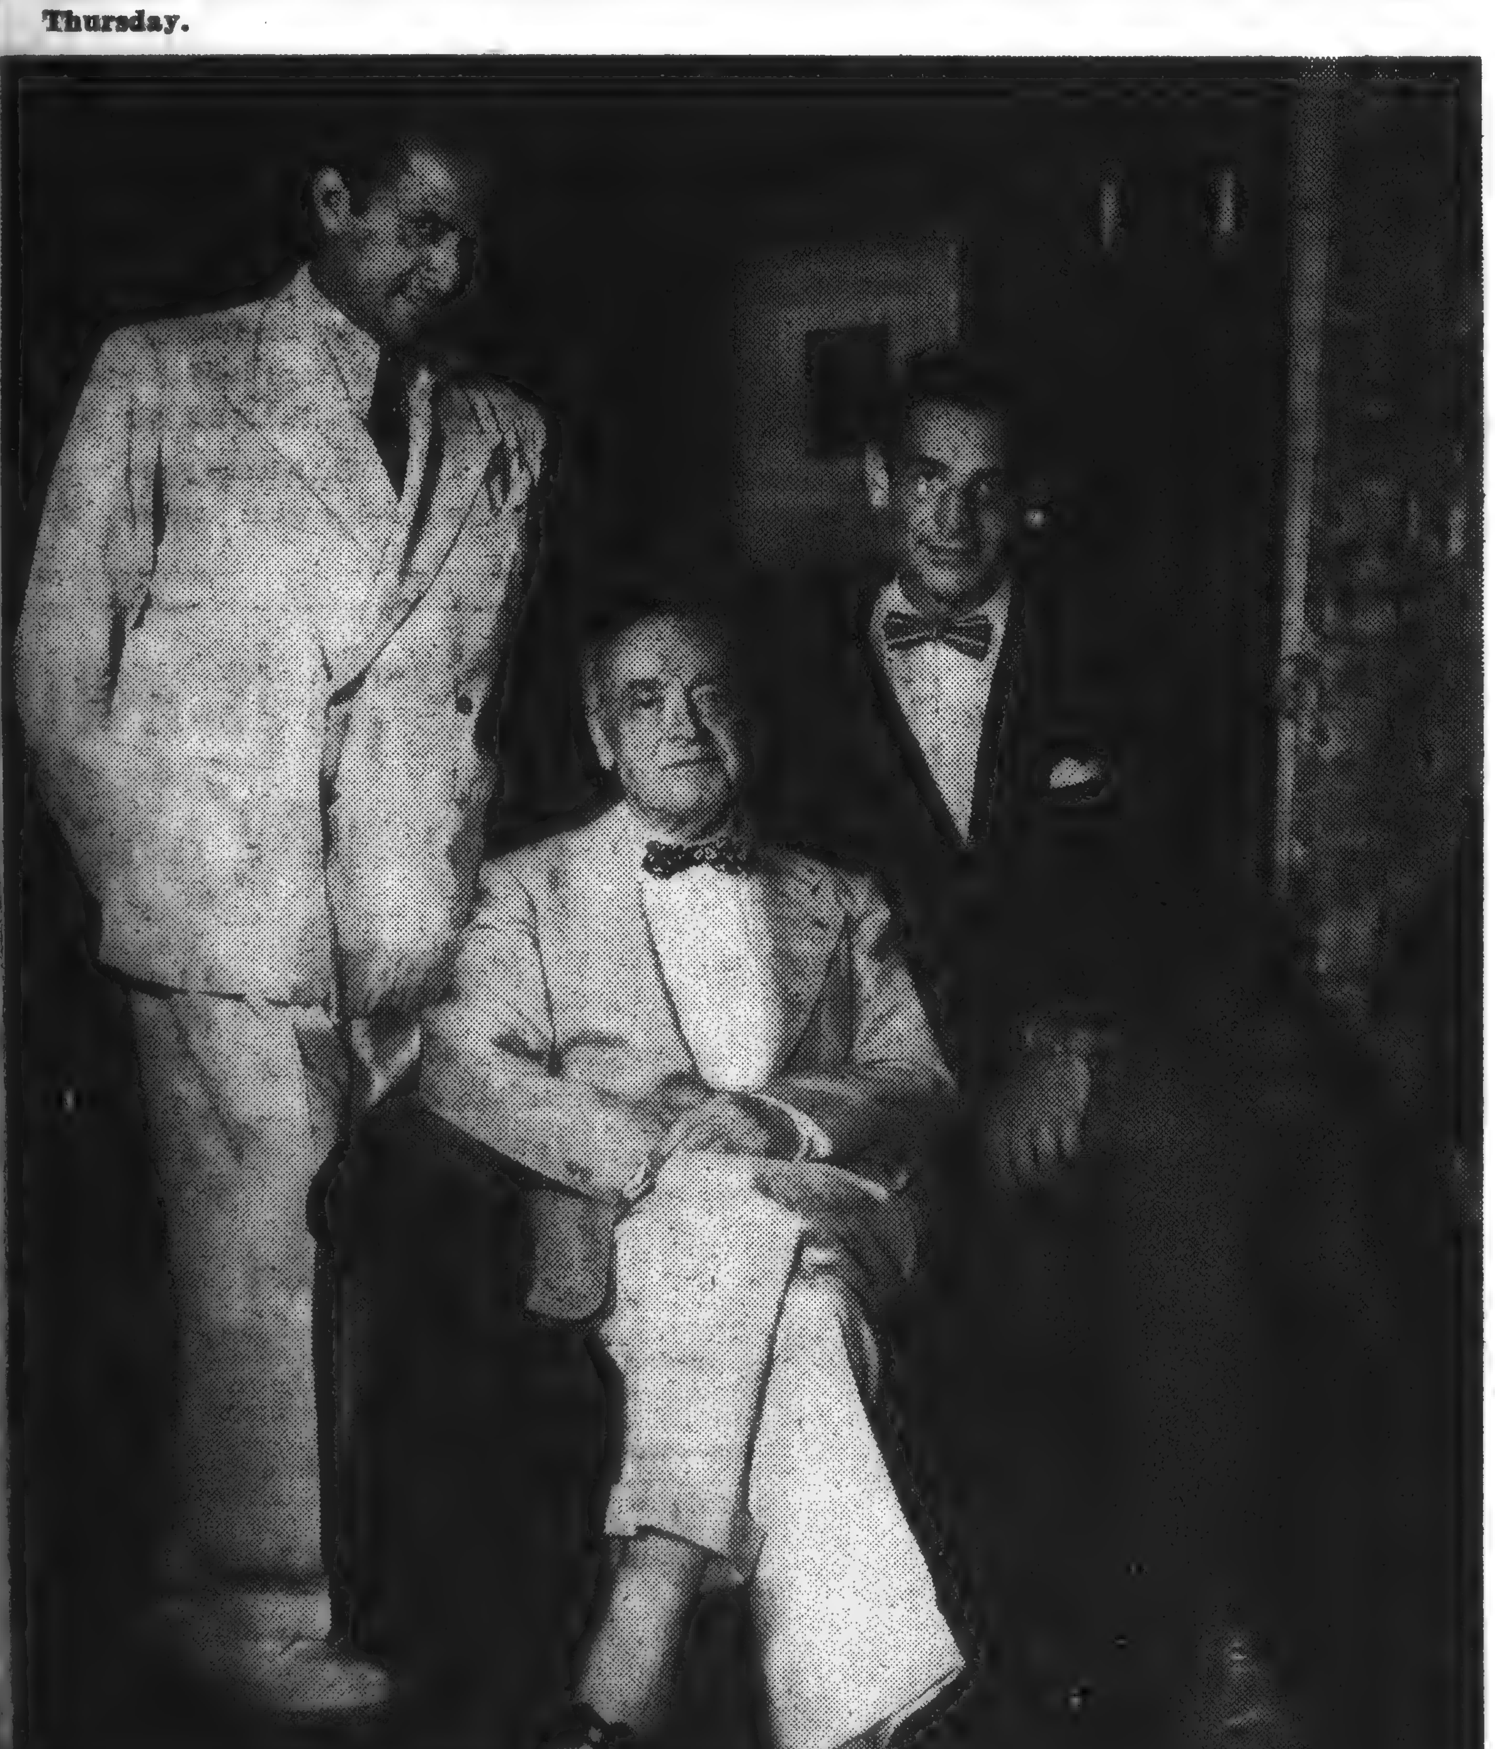
[To Be Continued Tomorrow]

QUEBEC — Output of mines in the province of Quebec has greatly increased during the first six months of 1948, compared with teh same period in 1947, a report of the Quebec Mines Department showed yesterday.



MUSIC FOR TEN THOUSAND PEOPLE—An aerial view of the huge Music Shed at Tanglewood, in Lenox, Massachusetts, where the Boston Symphony Orchestra gives its summer concerts in the famous Berkshire Festival series. Six thousand people hear the concerts from seats in the open shed and thousands more listen from the lawn outside. The house in the trees is the main office of the school which is run in conjunction with the festival.

Below: In center is the noted Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Festival. At left, Eleazar de Carvalho, Brazilian conductor who will direct today's concert at Tanglewood. At right, Leonard Bernstein, alumnus of the Berkshire Music Center, who conducted at Tanglewood last Sunday and will again this Thursday.



TANGL

By RAYMOND MORIN

DURING the past 15 years, Tanglewood has grown from a legend into America's favorite mecca for Summer music.

The first Berkshire Music Festival, in 1934, attracted 5000 persons. Last Summer about 150,000 visited Tanglewood and the present festival promises to surpass that total.

The chief fascination is superb music performed by the Boston Symphony in a perfect setting. The estate covers more than 200 acres. It is generally associated with Lenox but actually it lies over the town line in Stockbridge.

Tanglewood overlooks and borders Lake Mahkeenac and the Berkshire Hills reach up majestically from all directions. It has beautiful gardens, lawns, and walks.

The main building is a huge fan-shaped arena called the Shed. It is open on three sides and its roof covers 6000 seats and shelters several hundred more auditors in the rear and on both sides of the auditorium.

A statement on the Shed's first printed program (Aug. 5, 1937) still holds true: "It is gratifying to be able to report that the most optimistic predictions have been realized. The entire auditorium is free from dead spots, and the reception of the music at every seat is found to be substantially perfect."

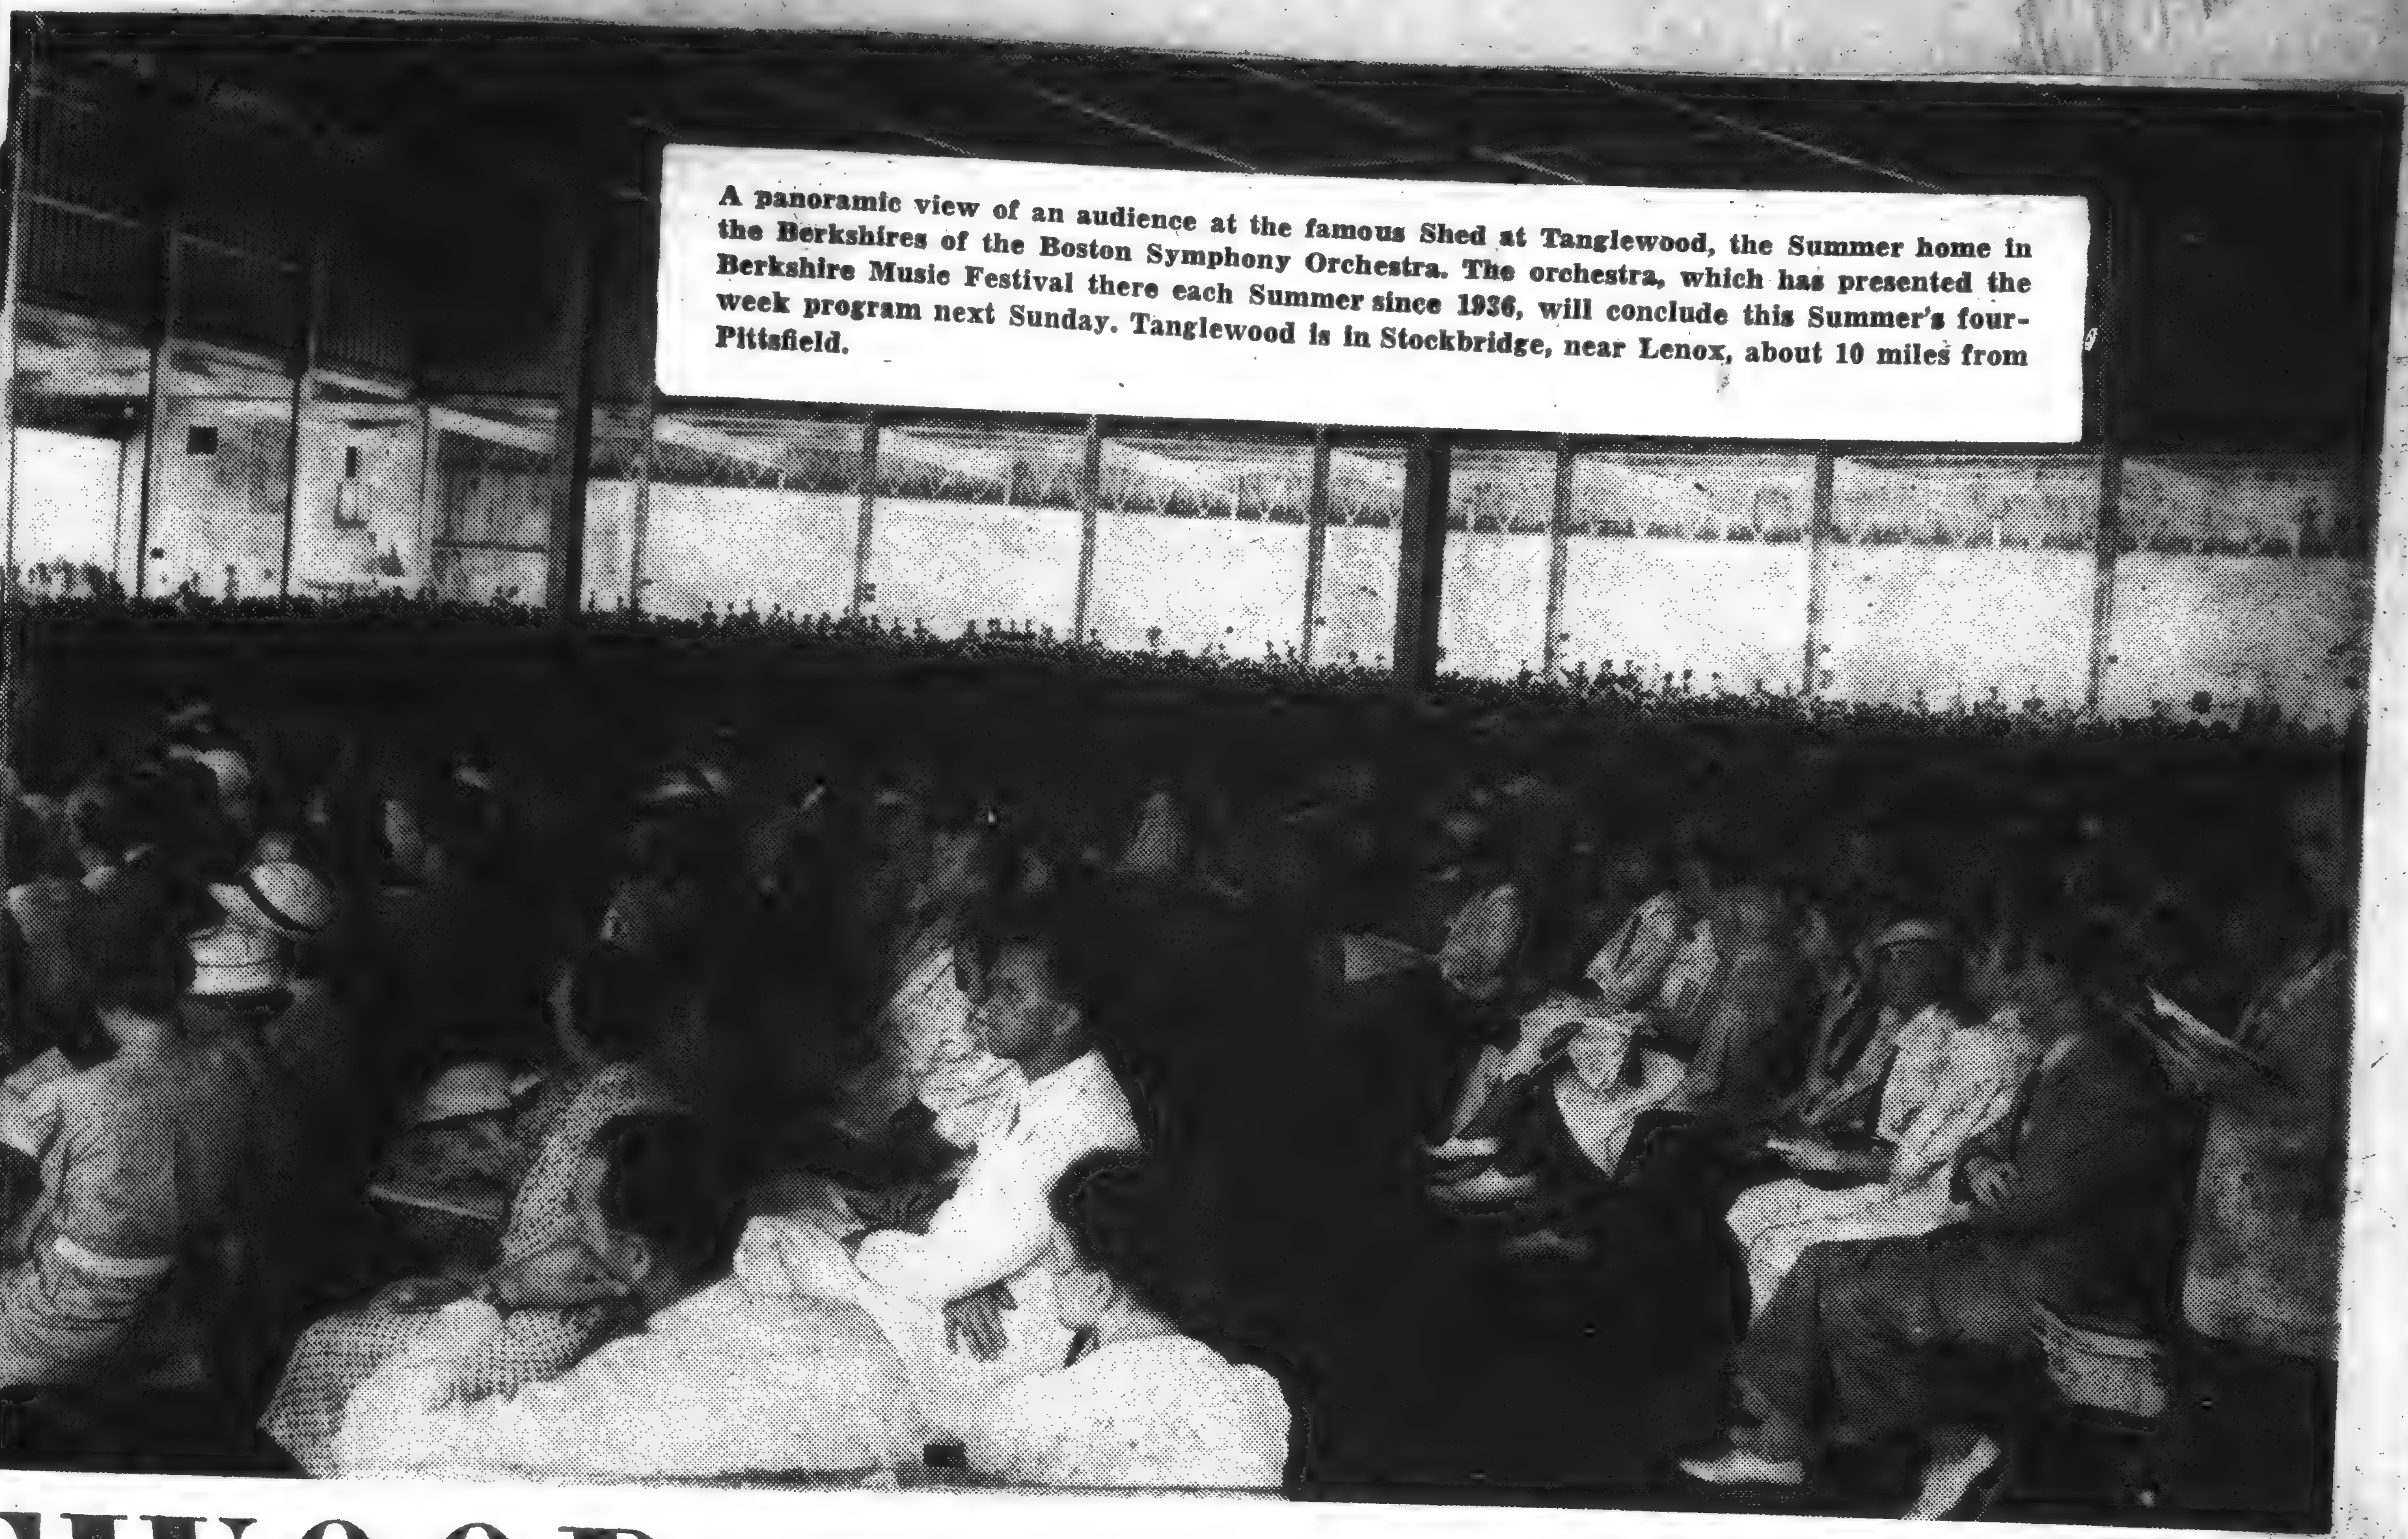
TANGLEWOOD audiences are world-wide. Here one mingles with celebrities from the stage and screen, statesmen, royalty, the great and near-great of music, and thousands of plain folks who just love music.

Music critics from throughout the nation come to Tanglewood. They have their own headquarters and are provided with every facility, including direct wires to their newspapers.

Tanglewood's beacon of inspiration and indefatigable governor is Serge Koussevitzky. Under his guidance since 1936, the Berkshire Festivals have grown to amazing numerical and artistic proportions.

Even World War II failed to deal a blow of temporary inactivity. The low ebb occurred in 1943, and to keep the thread of continuity unbroken, Dr. Koussevitzky conducted a series of concerts at Lenox Town Hall for the benefit of the Red Cross.

The Berkshire programs have been made notable by the first American performance of many important works, such as the operas, "Idomeneo" by Mozart; "Peter Grimes" by Benjamin Britten; Shostakovitsch' "Symphony No. 7," Vaughan-Williams' "Sympho-



A panoramic view of an audience at the famous Shed at Tanglewood, the Summer home in the Berkshires of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The orchestra, which has presented the Berkshire Music Festival there each Summer since 1936, will conclude this Summer's four-week program next Sunday. Tanglewood is in Stockbridge, near Lenox, about 10 miles from Pittsfield.

EWOOD

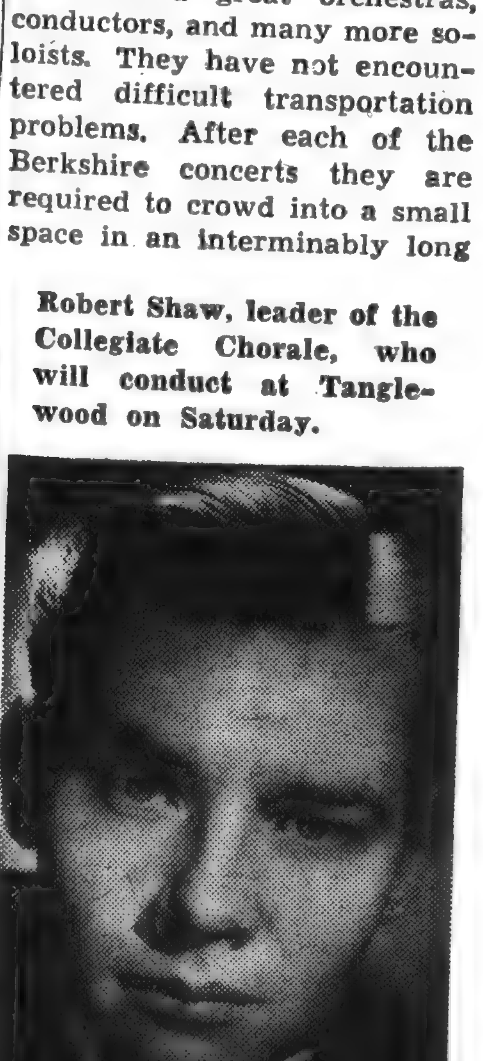
COUNTRY'S OUTSTANDING SUMMER MUSIC CENTER

ny No. 5," and Rossini's opera, "A Turk in Italy."

How do you account for Tanglewood's magnetic attraction?

Throughout the Fall and Winter, most of its patrons have heard great orchestras, conductors, and many more soloists. They have not encountered difficult transportation problems. After each of the Berkshire concerts they are required to crowd into a small space in an interminably long line of cars that crawl sluggishly down the mile-and-a-half stretch from the grounds to the center of Lenox.

Robert Shaw, leader of the Collegiate Chorale, who will conduct at Tanglewood on Saturday.



THEY HAVE to struggle to find a place to sleep and gasp at what it costs them. If they have not reserved seats in the Shed they frequently run the risk of being drenched and pray that the weather man will be merciful for just a few more hours.

Yet, when they set out for Tanglewood these things hardly cross their minds.

How did it all begin?

A good starting point is a fierce thunderstorm that roared during the Summer of 1850. Two strangers were driven by it into the rock crevices of Monument Mountain. They were Herman Melville and Nathaniel Hawthorne.

It was Hawthorne who christened Tanglewood. "The Scarlet Letter" had launched its author upon a successful career during the Spring of 1850 and the citizen from Salem and Concord sought a change of scene.

He had visited Berkshire County the previous year and he knew Samuel Gray Ward of Lenox, host to intellectuals. Ward was a friend of William Aspinwall Tappan who owned land upon which stood the Little Red Cottage.

Hawthorne occupied the Red Cottage from the early Summer of 1850 to November, 1851. While he was writing the "House Of The Seven Gables," Melville was spinning the tale of "Moby Dick" about a dozen miles away.

And, of course, there were the "Tanglewood Tales." No one knows exactly why Hawthorne coined the name "Tanglewood." His son Julian merely explained, "Tanglewood was what we called it." Nathaniel's wife said to a young visiting painter, "Here is our little red shanty." He replied, "The temple of arts and Muses."

THE "RED SHANTY" burned to the ground 40 years later, and the 24th of last month an exact replica of the house, built by the National Federation of Music Clubs, was dedicated. It is being used for students' studios.

Hawthorne hadn't been entirely happy in the Berkshires. In his "notebooks" on one of "The Twenty Days" he wrote: "This is a horrible, horrible, most horrible climate. One knows not, for 10 minutes together, whether he is too cool or too warm . . . I detest it! I detest it!! I detest it!!! I hate Berkshire with my whole soul, and would joyfully see its mountains laid flat!"

Perhaps his informal visit with Melville helped persuade him to remain.

Since that Summer, nearly a century ago, when a thunderstorm brought two great writers together, Tanglewood has indeed been wedded to the Muses. When Ellen Tappan married Richard C. Dixey, music made its bow at Tanglewood. He was a successful pianist from Boston. They added a music room and opened its doors to musicians. Paderewski was one who accepted its hospitality.

In September, 1918, the musical spotlight again shone upon the Berkshire Hills. Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, widow of a Boston physician who had settled in Pittsfield, sponsored the first Berkshire Festival of Chamber Music. It took place in her "Temple of Music" at South Mountain in Pittsfield, toward Lenox.

This year for the third time, the Berkshire Festival has benefited by the generosity of Mrs. Coolidge, the guiding spirit of chamber music in this country. The past two seasons the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress was responsible for the Summer chamber music concerts at Tanglewood. This year, a series of concerts devoted to the music of Schubert are a personal gift of Mrs. Coolidge.

THE SCENE now remains in Stockbridge but the time is 1934. Henry Hadley had conducted the Worcester Festival for one season 10 years before. He had conducted the Seattle, San Francisco and New York Symphony Orchestras. But he had a cherished ambition—to conduct a large orchestra out-of-doors.

He so expressed himself on a visit to Stockbridge and that Spring a friend of his visited Pittsfield to inquire into the possibilities. He was advised to visit two ladies living in Stockbridge — Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith and Mrs. Owen Johnson.

They received the encouragement and co-operation of Mrs. William Fulton Barrett of Great Barrington and soon the Pittsfield Chamber of Commerce added its support.

The value of such an undertaking was impressed upon property-holders, hotel and transportation companies, and residents. The result was that on Thursday and Saturday afternoons, and Sunday evening, August 23, 25, and 26, 1934, the first Berkshire Symphonic Festival was held in Stockbridge.

The locale was the horseshoe ring of the Dan Hanna Farm at Interlaken in the township of Stockbridge. The first program opened with Berlioz' overture, "The Roman Carnival, Opus 9" and closed with the third and fourth movements from Tschaikowsky's "Symphony in F Minor, No. 4, Opus 36."

Continued on Next Page

TANGLEWOOD

Continued from Preceding Page

All went well except that a musically - innocent chauffeur sounded his F-sharp horn during a passage in D major and a nostalgic movement was embellished by a dog that decided to bay at the moon.

THE AUTUMN of 1934 marked the oganization of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., with Miss Smith as president. It became a Massachusetts corporation with the following purposes defined in its by laws:

". . . to encourage education in the arts, to organize, conduct, and support an annual musical festival, to provide opportunities for developing musical and artistic talents, to encourage in any other activities that will legitimately aid and foster art."

Henry Hadley conducted the first two Berkshire Festivals. They drew audiences of 5000 and 8000. Then Mr. Hadley became ill and had to resign conductorship. The trustees were unwilling to abandon the project and realized that its continued success depended upon an orchestra of highest stature.

They turned to Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony. For the conductor it meant the first step toward the fulfillment of an early dream. Thus, with the performances of the Bach Chorale "Komm Gott, Schopfer, Heiliger Geist," Aug. 13, 1936, the Boston Symphony and its distinguished conductor became associated with a venture that in a few short years was destined to become the greatest of its kind in America.

This series of three concerts (attracting audiences of 15,000) was given at "Holmwood," Mrs. Margaret Emerson's place in Stockbridge. A larger tent than that originally used was constructed and the shell was reconstructed. But it soon became clear that the Berkshire Festival must expand and material considerations became involved.

One afternoon, that August of 1936, Mrs. Gorham Brooks (later Mrs. Andrew H. Hepburn, recently deceased) was listening to the orchestra in Boston's Symphony Hall with her aunt, Mrs. Mary Aspinwall Tappan.

She asked herself a question —"Why shouldn't I give Tanglewood to the Boston Symphony?" She offered it and it was gratefully accepted.

AND AGAIN a great thunderstorm raised its voice. It was during the Summer of 1937. Beneath a huge tent, Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony were proclaiming the greatness of Wagner when defied by tremendous phrases from the skies. Wagner's brassy statements were silenced and the conductor decided that a tent just would not do.

One newspaper reported that "the trombones began to ship water." Another told of a dignified lady who was forced to remove her shoes and stockings and trudge across the grounds in bare feet.

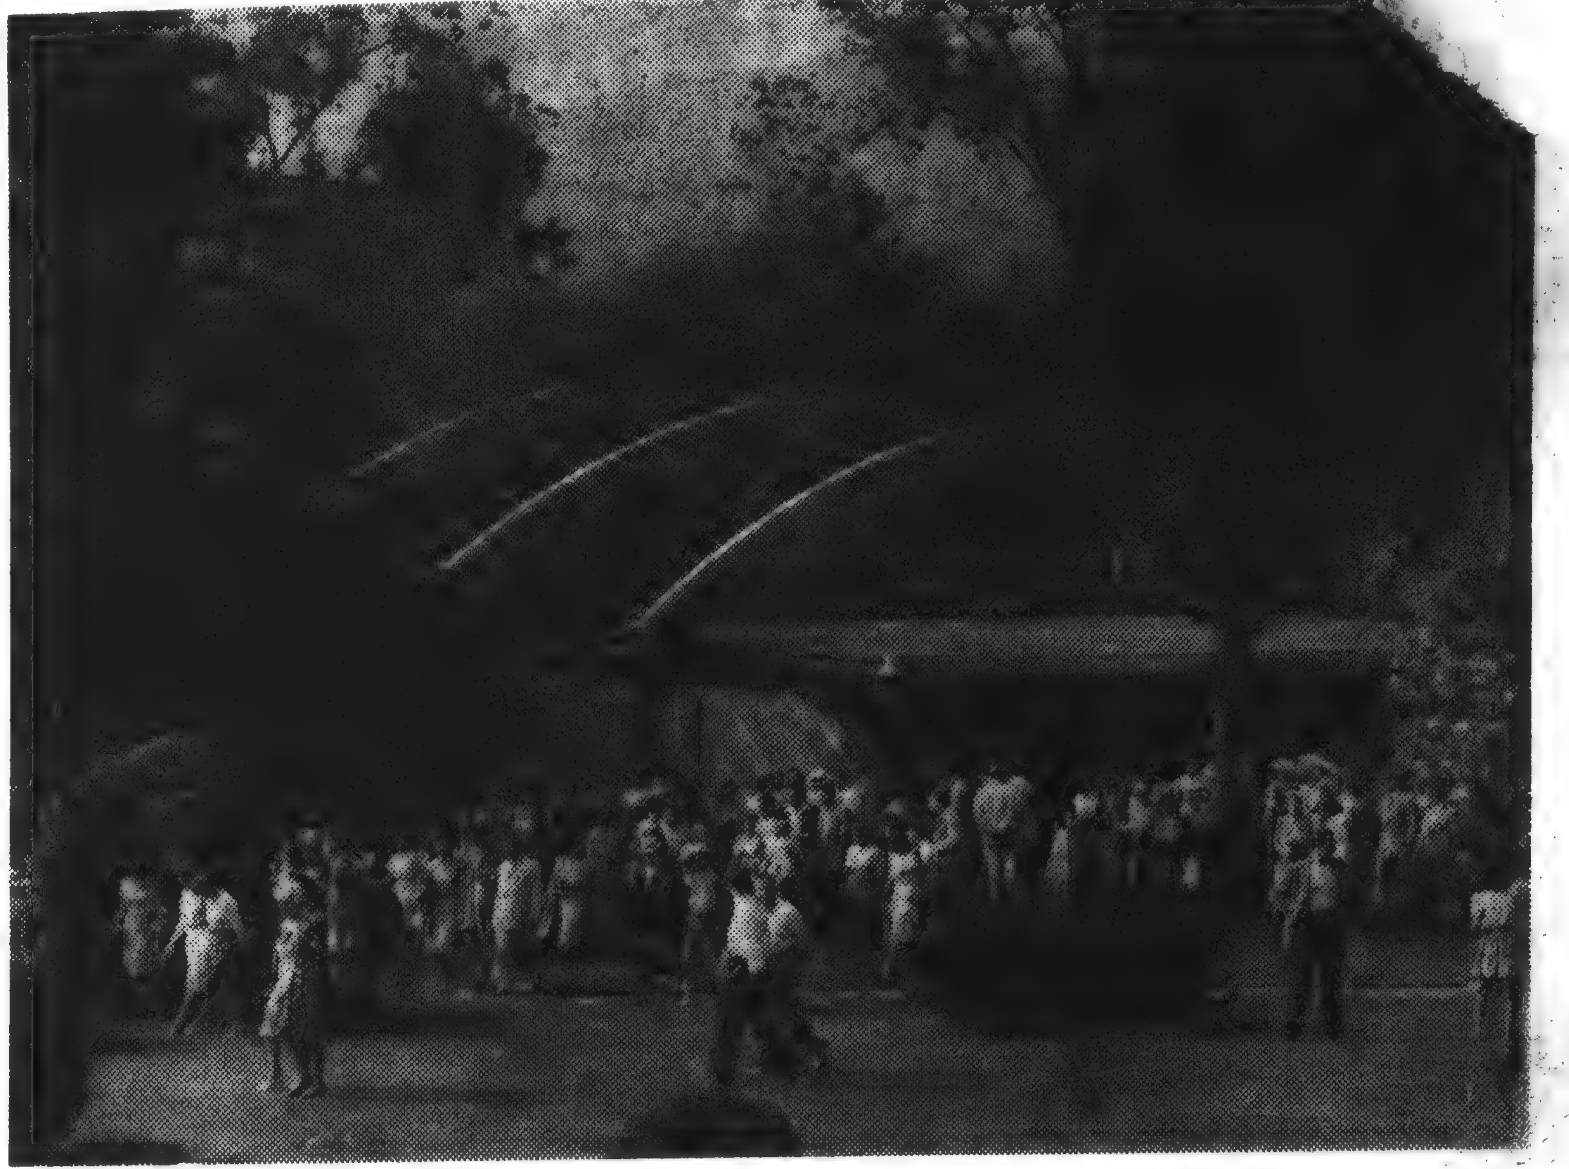
A movement was started to raise $80,000 to build a suitable and permanent shelter. In December the ground was broken, in March steel began to arrive for its construction, and on Aug. 4, 1938 the Shed was dedicated.

The years have seen many more changes at Tanglewood. A Theater-Concert Hall was built through the generosity of friends. The operatic performances are given here, and many concerts of Bach and Mozart for large chamber orchestra. It seats about 1200.

The Chamber Music Hall, dedicated to music of this genre, seats 400. There is a handsome reception and exhibition room, added this year, to the right of the main entrance.

Entire plate glass front and back, the room is 15 feet high and its roof spreads over the gate, bringing the offices to the left into one harmonious unit. The new building also houses the school book and music store.

In 1940, another important part of Dr. Koussevitzky's dream was realized with the establishment of the Berkshire Music Center for talented young students. Some of its alumni are Leonard Bernstein, Thor Johnson, Lukas Foss, and Seymour Lipkin.



Music lovers at the Theater-Concert Hall, seating 1200. which is used for large chamber orchestra and operatic productions.

THIS SUMMER there is an enrollment of 445, or 28 more than last year, and the largest number in its history. Speakers at the opening exercises on July 4 were Dr. Koussevitzky, founder and director of the school; Aaron Copland, assistant director, and Dr. Lewis Perry, chairman of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

Featured in the exercises was the traditional singing by the entire student body of Randall Thompson's "Alleluia," composed for the first opening ceremonies. The school offers private instruction to those sufficiently talented for acceptance, it has its own orchestras, and an opera department headed by Boris Goldovsky.

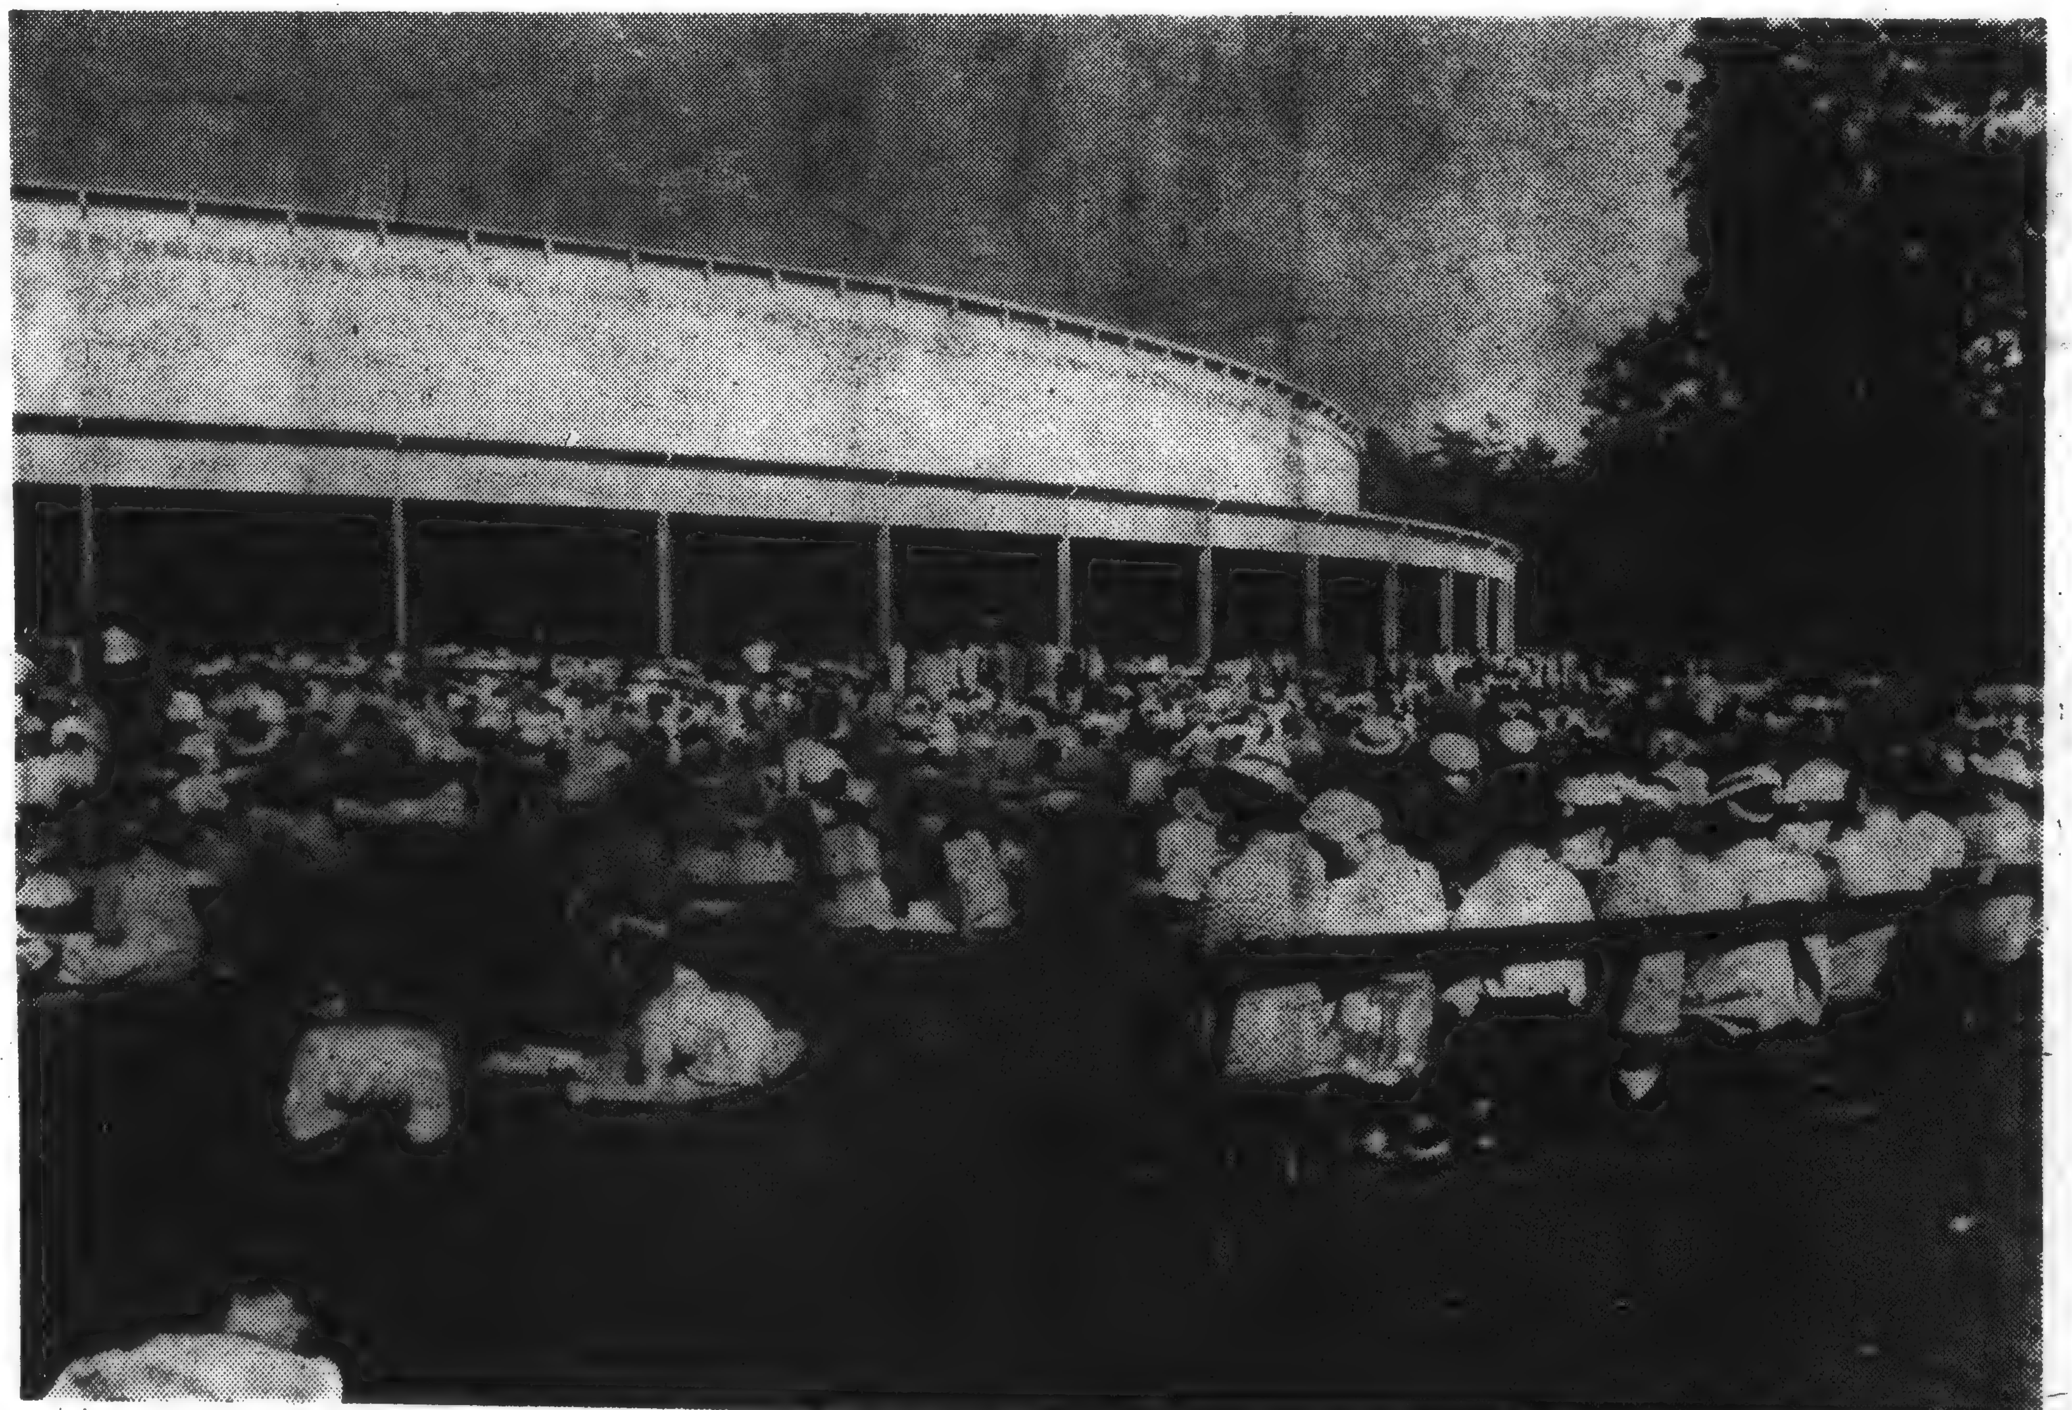
Last season two guest conductors appeared for the first time on the Tanglewood podium — they were Leonard Bernstein and Robert Shaw. They are conducting again this year, as is Eleazar de Carvalho, the Brazilian conductor who has heretofore devoted his talents to the student orchestras.

One more week remains of this festival. If you are planning to attend the concerts on Tuesday, Thursday, Saturday evenings, or the concluding concert next Sunday afternoon, do not expect to obtain seats in the Shed unless you already have your tickets—your chances of getting them at this late date are slim.

But there is general admission to the grounds and the acoustics are excellent even from distant points. Also be forewarned that if you do not arrange for your housing in advance you may find yourself in the predicament of hundreds of frantic searchers.

The settings of Hawthorne's Little Red Cottage has retained its beauty but its immediate profile has been changed by great music and the thousands who come here in search of it.

An overflow crowd at a Sunday concert relaxing on the lawn before the Shed.



This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
~~PM~~
STAR
AUG 12 1948

—— Music ——

Pianist in Debut at Tanglewood

By Robert A. Hague

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 11.—It is scarcely news that Tchaikowsky is still good box office, and so it is no surprise that the biggest crowd so far of the Tanglewood season, nearly 12,000, turned out to hear last night's all-Tchaikowsky concert by the Boston Symphony under Serge Koussevitzky.

Seymour Lipkin

Nor is there much new to be said about the three works which made up the program — the Pathetique symphony, the piano concerto in B-flat minor and the 1812 overture—so many times before have Dr. Koussevitzky and the Bostonians performed them at Tanglewood and elsewhere. It will suffice to report that both conductor and orchestra were in top Tchaikowsky form, which is very top indeed, and the ghost of Peter Ilyitch need have no cause to be disturbed.

Unless, perhaps, that restless spirit should wince at bit at having Dr. Koussevitzky drag that old warhorse, the 1812, out of the armory and again expose it to a public hearing on what was patently a non-patriotic occasion. But, on second thought, he would probably forgive the good doctor, seeing how much fun he had conducting it, and seeing how it gave him the chance to prove that besides producing the most beautiful tone of any orchestra in the land, the Boston band can also make the most noise.

• • •

The only novelty of the evening was the Tanglewood debut of Seymour Lipkin, 21-year-old Detroit pianist, who this year won the Rachmaninoff Fund piano award in a nationwide contest, and who is also known as a promising conducting pupil of Serge Koussevitzky at Tanglewood and of George Szell at Cleveland. Playing the solo part of the Tchaikowsky concerto, Mr. Lipkin impressed the large audience with the breadth and magnitude of his keyboard technique. He can play fast and loud, slow and soft, and for the most part with considerable authority.

But this listener has to admit some surprise that the young pianist should have come so far and still lack so many of the musical attributes which lend a performance interest and distinction. Most of his playing seemed purely an exercise in dynamics, and was wanting in rhythmical security, musical feeling and emotional depth.

In the more commanding passages of the first movement, he rattled off the notes and banged away, not always with complete accuracy, producing a generally harsh and unpleasant tone. His playing in the cadenza and elsewhere was a bit forced and hurried, and he did not always appear to be cooperating closely with conductor and orchestra in matters of tempo and rhythm. In the intervening softer and lighter sections, his tone was more pleasing and his passagework was cleaner. But what poetry there is in the music of the second movement eluded him, and his playing in general was short on lyricism and warmth.

Mr. Lipkin made his best showing in the final allegro, where his rhythmic sense seemed surer and his mechanical virtuosity could be put to good effect. Here again, however, the pianist's generous expenditure of physical and nervous energy could not quite make up for his lack of real fire or individuality of expression.

• • •

The Berkshire Festival concludes with this weekend's two concerts. On Saturday evening, Robert Shaw will conduct the Festival chorus, orchestra and soloists in The Blessed Damozel of DeBussy and the Brahms Requiem. For the finale, Sunday afternoon, Dr. Koussevitzky will direct performances of Beethoven's Eroica Symphony and the Second Symphony of Sibelius. This latter combination should bring out a crowd as big as last night's Tchaikowsky, if the good weather continues.

This Clipping From
VAN WERT, OHIO
TIMES-BULLETIN
AUG 12 1948

Musical Shrine

The home of a man who had not the slightest interest in music has now become a musical shrine. This strange fate has come to Tanglewood, the western Massachusetts home of Nathaniel Hawthorne, who wrote there "The House of Seven Gables" and "Tanglewood Tales." For the last 10 years it has been the headquarters of the Berkshire Festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the leadership of its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

Recently a reconstruction of Hawthorne's little red house was presented by the National Federation of Music Clubs to the orchestra to be used as a studio. Menning Hawthorne of North Woodstock, Conn., great-grandson of the writer, who was one of the speakers, referred to Nathaniel's indifference to music.

Even if Hawthorne was no music lover, he was a master craftsman in a kindred field, that of literature. Both lovers of literature and of music will applaud the generous action of the National Federation of Music Clubs, which insures the perpetual maintenance of one of America's notable literary shrines.

NEW YORK CITY, N. Y.
VILLAGER
AUG [illegible] 1948

Leads Symphony Tonight

To night, when the Boston Symphony Orchestra is heard at the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, it will have at its helm a Villager whose fame as a conductor is growing steadily. He hardly needs an introduction to music-lovers, for the career of Leonard Bernstein, W. 10th St., is already legendary.

Mr. Bernstein is right at home in Tanglewood and with the Boston Symphony, for he has conducted several times there during the past two seasons. A protege of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, Mr. Bernstein's abilities and talents were early recognized and encouraged by the noted conductor of the Boston Symphony.

He became well-known four years ago when he substituted at last minute's notice for the renowned Bruno Walter in conducting the New York Philharmonic. Since then he has been conductor of the New York City Symphony and guest conductor with all the major orchestras in this country, as well as in Canada, Europe and the Near East.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
AUG 12 1948

Elegy in Tribute To Mrs. Hepburn At Tanglewood

Lenox, Aug. 11—Residents of Lenox and Stockbridge are especially invited to the concert at Tanglewood Friday evening, when an elegy, written in tribute to Mrs. Andrew H. Hepburn, will be played. Guest cards will be issued at the office of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center and at the gate to neighbors and friends of Mrs. Hepburn, who gave her family's summer home to the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Mrs. Hepburn died at her home in Concord a few weeks before the opening of the Tanglewood season.

The elegy, written at Tanglewood by Robert Kurka, a student in composition at the school, will be played by the advanced student orchestra and conducted by Seymour Lipkin, a pupil in conducting of Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Center and music director of the Boston Orchestra. Before the playing of the piece Dr. Koussevitzky will speak in appreciation of the gift that has made possible the school and the continuance of the Berkshire Festival on a permanent basis.

In 1940 the Berkshire Music Center was started, fulfilling a dream of Dr. Koussevitzky. Mrs. Hepburn's daughter, Miss Violet Brooks, was one of the first students. The lawns where the Tappan and Dixey children played are a campus this summer for 462 talented students of music from 42 states and 13 foreign countries. They say that they learn more in six weeks at Tanglewood then in many months elsewhere. More than 100 are on scholarships. No young musician with talent is turned away because he has no money for tuition. They are given opportunity to study conducting, composition, opera, orchestral playing and choral singing under leading composers and musicians, with the direction and inspiration of the Boston Orchestra's distinguished conductor, principals of the orchestra and other men who are outstanding in their fields of musicianship.

The developments at Tanglewood, and especially the Music Center, were watched with keen interest and approval by Mrs. Hepburn. The introduction of new music by Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Orchestra, and by the student groups, the creation of new compositions, and the function of her former home as a center for training musicians who take what they learn back to their homes throughout the country and the world were a source of deep pleasure to her.

The concert will be held in the [illegible] Shed at 8:15. It will be the

---

Cir. (D 83,058)

This Clipping From
NASHVILLE, TENN.
BANNER
AUG 12 1948

KEYNOTES

BY BARBARA KEEBLE

Attention in the music world has been focused of late on Tanglewood which closes its school and festival Sunday, August 15. Serge Koussevitsky as director of the Berkshire Music Center has been ably assisted by a man whose name is often mentioned these days.

Significantly enough, AARON COPLAND was born at the turn of the century, for already his contribution to American music spells the progress so characteristic of life in this country since 1900.

A thumbnail sketch of the Brooklyn composer shows he began musical study none too early in his youth. First teachers in piano and composition were conservative and unsatisfactory. This realization led him to France where he was one of the first Americans to study with the French composer, Nadia Boulanger.

Copland started composing and before long wrote "Symphony." When he was 25 it was premiered in the United States by Walter Damrosh, who said, "If at that age he can compose such a symphony, he can also commit murder." His bars remained musical, however, and there followed a ballet, "Grohg," which won half of the great prize awarded in composition by RCA Victor.

The next 20 years found Mr. Copland writing much. Gradually he has established himself as the most admired and by young composers the most emulated American music writer.

He has written all kinds of music including that for three films—"Our Town," "Of Mice and Men" and one now in production based on John Steinbeck's story, "The Red Pony." In fact, he went directly from Hollywood to Tanglewood where he is in his third year as assistant musical director of the Berkshire Music Center.

Part of his very time consuming job at the school involves teaching composition. Out of the studio he is definitely "man about" and with the number of people on his coattails that the term implies. He is most friendly and exudes a vital concern in the task at hand. There is nothing of the long haired musician about him. His two feet seem to be solidly planted.

Of local interest is his friendship with William Strickland, conductor of the Nashville Symphony, which he regards very highly. Some seven or eight years ago he was commissioned by Strickland to write a composition for a contemporary organ series.

Recent works by Copland include a prize winning ballet for Martha Graham, "Appalachian Spring" and "Symphony No. 3" commissioned by the Koussevitsky Music Foundation. At present he is working on a clarinet concerto which he was commissioned to write by Benny Goodman.

✦ ✦ ✦

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
AUG 12 1948

Tchaikovsky

Koussevitzky Conducts His Music at Tanglewood

By Francis D. Perkins

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 11.—Tchaikovsky, Serge Koussevitzky, and the Boston Symphony Orchestra drew the largest Berkshire Festival audience of the summer, nearly 12,000, to last night's concert in the Tanglewood Music Shed. The attendance figure was particularly notable since this was an extra concert not in the regular subscription series.

Dr. Koussevitzky's all-Tchaikovsky program included the Pathetic Symphony, Concerto in B flat minor and the 1812 Overture. The soloist in the concerto was Seymour Lipkin, who won the Rachmaninoff fund prize last April, and who has been active here this summer as a student conductor. The aim of the Rachmaninoff fund was to discover a young artist of exceptional ability, and Mr. Lipkin can be so described in last night's performance. There was poise, and thorough and mature technical mastery, along with discerning musicianship and interpretative understanding and a noteworthy clarity of medium; his playing gave evidence of remarkable power employed with taste and discretion. The orchestra's accompaniment was well unified and in expressive accord with the talented soloist.

This Clipping From
BAYONNE, N. J.
TIMES
AUG 12 1948

Newark Foundation Plans For Symphony Concerts

Plans have been completed for a series of symphony orchestra concerts as part of the forthcoming 1948-49 season of Griffith Music Foundation performances at the Mosque Theater, Newark. The symphony series will open Tuesday evening, December 14, with a concert by the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra under the leadership of its renowned musical director, Bruno Walter.

Another feature of the symphony series which will dovetail in with special events, the master piano series and other performances which will mark the Foundation's entire season, will be a visit of the Little Orchestra Society of New York for a concert with the sensational French pianist, Samonson Francois, as guest soloist. The latter event is scheduled for January 13. This will be separate and distinct from the series of Young People's concerts which the Little Orchestra Society will give, plans for which have already been announced.

Other features of the symphony series will be two appearances of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the famed Serge Koussevitzky. The dates for these two concerts will be February 17 and March 17, respectively. A general announcement of the Foundation's plans for the forthcoming season, which promises to exceed all others in brilliance and in the standard of artists and musical organizations [illegible] will be made next month.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
~~PM~~
STAR
AUG 12 1948

Music

Pianist in Debut at Tanglewood

By Robert A. Hague

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 11.—It is scarcely news that Tchaikowsky is still good box office, and so it is no surprise that the biggest crowd so far of the Tanglewood season, nearly 12,000, turned out to hear last night's all-Tchaikowsky concert by the Boston Symphony under Serge Koussevitzky.

Seymour Lipkin

Nor is there much new to be said about the three works which made up the program — the Pathetique symphony, the piano concerto in B-flat minor and the 1812 overture—so many times before have Dr. Koussevitzky and the Bostonians performed them at Tanglewood and elsewhere. It will suffice to report that both conductor and orchestra were in top Tchaikowsky form, which is very top indeed, and the ghost of Peter Ilyitch need have no cause to be disturbed.

Unless, perhaps, that restless spirit should wince at bit at having Dr. Koussevitzky drag that old warhorse, the 1812, out of the armory and again expose it to a public hearing on what was patently a non-patriotic occasion. But, on second thought, he would probably forgive the good doctor, seeing how much fun he had conducting it, and seeing how it gave him the chance to prove that besides producing the most beautiful tone of any orchestra in the land, the Boston band can also make the most noise.

• • •

The only novelty of the evening was the Tanglewood debut of Seymour Lipkin, 21-year-old Detroit pianist, who this year won the Rachmaninoff Fund piano award in a nationwide contest, and who is also known as a promising conducting pupil of Serge Koussevitzky at Tanglewood and of George Szell at Cleveland. Playing the solo part of the Tchaikowsky concerto, Mr. Lipkin impressed the large audience with the breadth and magnitude of his keyboard technique. He can play fast and loud, slow and soft, and for the most part with considerable authority.

But this listener has to admit some surprise that the young pianist should have come so far and still lack so many of the musical attributes which lend a performance interest and distinction. Most of his playing seemed purely an exercise in dynamics, and was wanting in rhythmical security, musical feeling and emotional depth.

In the more commanding passages of the first movement, he rattled off the notes and banged away, not always with complete accuracy, producing a generally harsh and unpleasant tone. His playing in the cadenza and elsewhere was a bit forced and hurried, and he did not always appear to be cooperating closely with conductor and orchestra in matters of tempo and rhythm. In the intervening softer and lighter sections, his tone was more pleasing and his passagework was cleaner. But what poetry there is in the music of the second movement eluded him, and his playing in general was short on lyricism and warmth.

Mr. Lipkin made his best showing in the final allegro, where his rhythmic sense seemed surer and his mechanical virtuosity could be put to good effect. Here again, however, the pianist's generous expenditure of physical and nervous energy could not quite make up for his lack of real fire or individuality of expression.

• • •

The Berkshire Festival concludes with this weekend's two concerts. On Saturday evening, Robert Shaw will conduct the Festival chorus, orchestra and soloists in The Blessed Damozel of DeBussy and the Brahms Requiem. For the finale, Sunday afternoon, Dr. Koussevitzky will direct performances of Beethoven's Eroica Symphony and the Second Symphony of Sibelius. This latter combination should bring out a crowd as big as last night's Tchaikowsky, if the good weather continues.

This Clipping From
VAN WERT, OHIO
TIMES-BULLETIN
AUG 12 1948

Musical Shrine

The home of a man who had not the slightest interest in music has now become a musical shrine. This strange fate has come to Tanglewood, the western Massachusetts home of Nathaniel Hawthorne, who wrote there "The House of Seven Gables" and "Tanglewood Tales." For the last 10 years it has been the headquarters of the Berkshire Festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the leadership of its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

Recently a reconstruction of Hawthorne's little red house was presented by the National Federation of Music Clubs to the orchestra to be used as a studio. Menning Hawthorne of North Woodstock, Conn., great-grandson of the writer, who was one of the speakers, referred to Nathaniel's indifference to music.

Even if Hawthorne was no music lover, he was a master craftsman in a kindred field, that of literature. Both lovers of literature and of music will applaud the generous action of the National Federation of Music Clubs, which insures the perpetual maintenance of one of America's notable literary shrines.

Cir. (D 83,058)
This Clipping From
NASHVILLE, TENN.
BANNER
AUG 12 1948

KEYNOTES

BY BARBARA KEEBLE

Attention in the music world has been focused of late on Tanglewood which closes its school and festival Sunday, August 15. Serge Koussevitzky as director of the Berkshire Music Center has been ably assisted by a man whose name is often mentioned these days.

Significantly enough, AARON COPLAND was born at the turn of the century, for already his contribution to American music spells the progress so characteristic of life in this country since 1900.

A thumbnail sketch of the Brooklyn composer shows he began musical study none too early in his youth. First teachers in piano and composition were conservative and unsatisfactory. This realization led him to France where he was one of the first Americans to study with the French composer, Nadia Boulanger.

Copland started composing and before long wrote "Symphony." When he was 25 it was premiered in the United States by Walter Damrosh, who said, "If at that age he can compose such a symphony, he can also commit murder." His bars remained musical, however, and there followed a ballet, "Grohg," which won half of the great prize awarded in composition by RCA Victor.

The next 20 years found Mr. Copland writing much. Gradually he has established himself as the most admired and by young composers the most emulated American music writer.

He has written all kinds of music including that for three films—"Our Town," "Of Mice and Men" and one now in production based on John Steinbeck's story, "The Red Pony." In fact, he went directly from Hollywood to Tanglewood where he is in his third year as assistant musical director of the Berkshire Music Center.

Part of his very time consuming job at the school involves teaching composition. Out of the studio he is definitely "man about" and with the number of people on his coattails that the term implies. He is most friendly and exudes a vital concern in the task at hand. There is nothing of the long haired musician about him. His two feet seem to be solidly planted.

Of local interest is his friendship with William Strickland, conductor of the Nashville Symphony, which he regards very highly. Some seven or eight years ago he was commissioned by Strickland to write a composition for a contemporary organ series.

Recent works by Copland include a prize winning ballet for Martha Graham, "Appalachian Spring" and "Symphony No. 3" commissioned by the Koussevitsky Music Foundation. At present he is working on a clarinet concerto which he was commissioned to write by Benny Goodman.

★ ★ ★

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
AUG 12 1948

Tchaikovsky

Koussevitzky Conducts His Music at Tanglewood

By Francis D. Perkins

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 11.—Tchaikovsky, Serge Koussevitzky, and the Boston Symphony Orchestra drew the largest Berkshire Festival audience of the summer, nearly 12,000, to last night's concert in the Tanglewood Music Shed. The attendance figure was particularly notable since this was an extra concert not in the regular subscription series.

Dr. Koussevitzky's all-Tchaikovsky program included the Pathetic Symphony, Concerto in B flat minor and the 1812 Overture. The soloist in the concerto was Seymour Lipkin, who won the Rachmaninoff fund prize last April, and who has been active here this summer as a student conductor. The aim of the Rachmaninoff fund was to discover a young artist of exceptional ability, and Mr. Lipkin can be so described in last night's performance. There was poise, and thorough and mature technical mastery, along with discerning musicianship and interpretative understanding and a noteworthy clarity of medium; his playing gave evidence of remarkable power employed with taste and discretion. The orchestra's accompaniment was well unified and in expressive accord with the talented soloist.

NEW YORK CITY, N. Y.
VILLAGER
AUG 12 1948

Leads Symphony Tonight

To night, when the Boston Symphony Orchestra is heard at the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, it will have at its helm a Villager whose fame as a conductor is growing steadily. He hardly needs an introduction to music-lovers, for the career of Leonard Bernstein, W. 10th St., is already legendary.

Mr. Bernstein is right at home in Tanglewood and with the Boston Symphony, for he has conducted several times there during the past two seasons. A protege of Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, Mr. Bernstein's abilities and talents were early recognized and encouraged by the noted conductor of the Boston Symphony.

He became well-known four years ago when he substituted at last minute's notice for the renowned Bruno Walter in conducting the New York Philharmonic. Since then he has been conductor of the New York City Symphony and guest conductor with all the major orchestras in this country, as well as in Canada, Europe and the Near East.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
AUG 12 1948

Elegy in Tribute To Mrs. Hepburn At Tanglewood

Lenox, Aug. 11—Residents of Lenox and Stockbridge are especially invited to the concert at Tanglewood Friday evening, when an elegy, written in tribute to Mrs. Andrew H. Hepburn, will be played. Guest cards will be issued at the office of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center and at the gate to neighbors and friends of Mrs. Hepburn, who gave her family's summer home to the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Mrs. Hepburn died at her home in Concord a few weeks before the opening of the Tanglewood season.

The elegy, written at Tanglewood by Robert Kurka, a student in composition at the school, will be played by the advanced student orchestra and conducted by Seymour Lipkin, a pupil in conducting of Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Center and music director of the Boston Orchestra. Before the playing of the piece Dr. Koussevitzky will speak in appreciation of the gift that has made possible the school and the continuance of the Berkshire Festival on a permanent basis.

In 1940 the Berkshire Music Center was started, fulfilling a dream of Dr. Koussevitzky. Mrs. Hepburn's daughter, Miss Violet Brooks, was one of the first students. The lawns where the Tappan and Dixey children played are a campus this summer for 462 talented students of music from 42 states and 13 foreign countries. They say that they learn more in six weeks at Tanglewood then in many months elsewhere. More than 100 are on scholarships. No young musician with talent is turned away because he has no money for tuition. They are given opportunity to study conducting, composition, opera, orchestral playing and choral singing under leading composers and musicians, with the direction and inspiration of the Boston Orchestra's distinguished conductor, principals of the orchestra and other men who are outstanding in their fields of musicianship.

The developments at Tanglewood, and especially the Music Center, were watched with keen interest and approval by Mrs. Hepburn. The introduction of new music by Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Orchestra, and by the student groups, the creation of new compositions, and the function of her former home as a center for training musicians who take what they learn back to their homes throughout the country and the world were a source of deep pleasure to her.

The concert will be held in the [illegible] at 8:15. It will be the

---

This Clipping From
BAYONNE, N. J.
TIMES
AUG 12 1948

Newark Foundation Plans For Symphony Concerts

Plans have been completed for a series of symphony orchestra concerts as part of the forthcoming 1948-49 season of Griffith Music Foundation performances at the Mosque Theater, Newark. The symphony series will open Tuesday evening, December 14, with a concert by the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra under the leadership of its renowned musical director, Bruno Walter.

Another feature of the symphony series which will dovetail in with special events, the master piano series and other performances which will mark the Foundation's entire season, will be a visit of the Little Orchestra Society of New York for a concert with the sensational French pianist, Samonson Francois, as guest soloist. The latter event is scheduled for January 13. This will be separate and distinct from the series of Young People's concerts which the Little Orchestra Society will give, plans for which have already been announced.

Other features of the symphony series will be two appearances of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the famed Serge Koussevitzky. The dates for these two concerts will be February 17 and March 17, respectively. A general announcement of the Foundation's plans for the forthcoming season, which promises to excel all others in brillia[illegible] and in the standard of artis[illegible] musical organizations [illegible] will be made next month

CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE
AUG 12 1948

ON THE AISLE

Season's Largest Crowd Hears Youthful Lipkin Play Tschaikowsky with Koussevitzky

By Claudia Cassidy

(Chicago Tribune Press Service)

Tanglewood, Mass., Aug. 11—"And in the evening, fireworks." Serge Koussevitzky drew the largest audience of the festival season Tuesday night, an even 12,000 customers, when he chose a Tschaikovsky program in which the "Pathetique" and the "1812" overture surrounded Seymour Lipkin, 21 year old winner of the Rachmaninoff fund contest, who was launched on his new career with the Concerto in B flat minor. As the performance also was broadcast over the ABC network, he should be rather well known by now.

And the verdict unquestionably will be that no second rater has stepped into the shadow of the saturnine Russian in whose memory the fund has been established. There may be doubts as to whether Mr. Lipkin will be at his best in that particular Russian's music. On the basis of the Tschaikovsky, he will not be. But he is a true musical talent, a pianist of sincerity, integrity, and skill, and, as you probably know, he has been an apprentice conductor in Cleveland with George Szell, under whose direction he will play a Mozart concerto with the Chicago Symphony orchestra next season. Considering Mr. Lipkin's immediate talents, and the fact that he has studied with Rudolph Serkin, that Mozart may display more of his true quality than his debut Tschaikovsky.

—o—

Yet whatever the music, Mr. Lipkin could scarcely have bowed under more auspicious conditions. To have such a conductor and such an orchestra on such a night is the stuff that debut dreams are made of; to have in addition Koussevitzky's deep personal interest in a boy even now conducting Tanglewood's student orchestra—that is a situation rarely encountered. The soloist responded to that urgent challenge with a deeply musical performance, lyrical, limpid, and with a touch of charming caprice in the andantino and the scherzo. It lacked the power to soar over the orchestra and the demoniac brilliance that can make the concerto blaze, but it was playing impossible to hear without wanting to know more about the player.

—o—

The "Pathetique," of course, is a Koussevitzky showpiece. With such an orchestra, with so rare a singing tone, such splendor of strings and brass, and such sudden ferocity in attack, how could it be otherwise? Not many conductors can make such an effect of the third movement and not have the fourth an anticlimax. But then almost no conductors can duplicate the Koussevitzky feat of turning the "1812" from a retired war horse to a prancing charger who can hold its own in solemn procession. In such performance you can really call it "Ouverture Solennelle."

This Clipping From
LAWRENCE, MASS.
TRIBUNE
AUG 13 1948

Bernstein Conducts Berkshire Concert

LENOX, Aug. 12 (AP)—Leonard Bernstein appeared as guest conducted of the Boston Symphony orchestra tonight in the opening concert of the Berkshire festival's final series

More than 6,500 attended the performance despite a heavy downpour. Several hundred, some in raincoats, others huddled under ponchos and blankets, sat outside the huge music shed.

The final concerts in the series will be presented Saturday night and Sunday afternoon.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
AUG 13 1948

Tanglewood to Honor Memory of Donor

Tanglewood tonight will honor its donor, the late Mrs. Andrew H. Hepburn, with an elegy performed by the advanced student orchestra and a tribute to Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director of the music center.

Mrs. Hepburn died at her home in Concord, Mass., just before the opening of this year's Berkshire Music Festival. She presented her family's summer home at Lenox to the Boston Symphony orchestra in 1937. The music center at Tanglewood was established in 1940, and now has 450 students.

The elegy to be played tonight was written by Robert Kurka, a student of Dr. Koussevitzky.

THE NEW YORK TIMES, TH

[From Late Editions of Yesterday's Times.]

LIPKIN IS SOLOIST AT TANGLEWOOD

Pianist Plays B Minor Concerto as Koussevitzky Presents Tchaikovsky Program

By OLIN DOWNES

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 10—A special Tchaikovsky program was given by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra tonight in the music shed, with Seymour Lipkin, the pianist, who was the winner last spring of the Rachmaninoff Fund national piano contest, as soloist in the performance of the B Flat Minor Concerto. Mr. Lipkin had a remarkable success, remarkable not less for his musicianship, authority, and sense of symphonic proportion than for his abundant virtuosity and the fire with which he projected the music.

To this should be added the beauty and lyricism of his style in the slow movement, when he made the piano sing as lyrically as he had made it roar and declaim with barbaric pomp and ceremony in earlier pages. Mr. Lipkin had the music in the palm of his hand, so far as virtuosity is concerned, but it is not often that a pianist of 21 displays the reserve power and the architectural sense of line and climax which was immediately manifest. With the opening chords and the launching by the orchestra over them of the great theme for the strings there was the sense of the structure as a whole.

The end was felt in the beginning, and everything that followed fell inevitably into place. No point was missed; no episode, however exciting or climactic, caused the hearer to lose the sweep of the grand concerto. If one had reservation about this performance it would be that it was almost too authoritatively done by so young a man.

Only Appearance Since April

This, we believe, was Mr. Lipkin's first public appearance before an audience of big dimensions since he won the Rachmaninoff Fund prize in Carnegie Hall in April. On that occasion he played but one movement of the concerto he interpreted this evening. Tonight he more than fulfilled the promise of the earlier performance.

But the soloist's deed of derring-do was by no means the only feature of this concert. Dr. Koussevitzky preceded the concerto with the "Symphonie Pathetique" and followed it by a revival that he accomplished with really stupendous effect of the "1812" overture. There is nothing that need be said today of the immortal symphony, its blazing passion and its tragical power, and the final lament which is no mere personal outpouring, but an elegy for fated humanity. The symphony was driven home, although the tempi of the last three movements, especially the second and third, was uncommonly fast, and, perhaps, unnecessarily so.

A score which for all its familiarity and unending popularity remains a colossal and always astonishing masterpiece had the effect to be expected. The astonishing moment was the "1812" overture. With it Dr. Koussevitzky fairly capped the sensations of the evening.

A Monumental Piece

For a few decades the purists and academicians and the high priests of the musical art have been accustomed to condescend if not to sneer at this monumental piece, composed on order, for a public occasion. Well, Tchaikovsky knew his business. He had also the musical ideas and the themes, some original, some traditional, to back him up. Here was theatrical gesture, if you will, in the magnificently constructed music. Here, also, was grandeur.

The old hymns, the songs of rejoicing that stream like flying banners from the orchestra, have a lordliness and power which are inescapable. But it takes a conductor who understands all this, and has the capacity to bring it forth, to realize what a creation the old "1812" overture is.

There were long demonstrations for young Mr. Lipkin, and there was just as resounding demonstration for the conductor and the overture that brought the concert to an end. The audience numbered 12,000.

Music Events Tonight

Mozart's "Don Giovanni," offered by Lemonade Opera at Greenwich Mews Playhouse; a program of scenes from operas by the Opera Workshop of Columbia University's Summer Session at McMillin Theatre, and a concert by the Goldman Band, Edwin Franko Goldman, conductor, at Prospect Park, Brooklyn, all will be presented tonight at 8:30 o'clock.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT
AUG 13 1948

Rossini Work Presented At Tanglewood

Opera Department Gives 'Turk in Italy'; Goldovsky Directs

A great deal of second-rate Rossini music has been worked around into an amusing light opera affair by Boris Goldovsky and the opera department of the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood where it was displayed Monday and Wednesday this week.

This latest version of "Il Turco In Italia" is something of a pasticcio, Mr. Goldovsky is free to admit. Its score has been pieced together from a number of incomplete copies of the original, or reclaimed from later operas in which the composer had made secondhand use of them. However, Mr. Goldovsky assured his audiences, all the material employed in the Berkshire reconstruction, was at one time or another part of the original music for "The Turk." The only exceptions are a few recitives, and additional orchestrations by Helmuth Wolfes.

Book Made Over

With the libretto, on the other hand, Mr Goldovsky has taken extensive liberties, rearranging both book and text. He has begun with a familiar theater devise. As the opera opens, a poet is engaged in writing a new drama. He leads onstage the characters as he creates them, a rich old husband, a faithless young wife, the Grand Turk of whom she is enamoured, a gypsy beloved by the Turk, a naive youth suffering unrequited love for the wife. The author then sets the characters busy about the standard intrigues of opra bouffi. For a while they get quite out of hand. Eventually, a "happy ending" is arrived at, with one of the characters, the faithless wife herself, falling in love with the author.

Despite the fact that all this is pretty much stock stuff in the field of early comedy, Mr. Goldovsky has managed, with a bit of wit here, a bit of fancy there, and a great deal of scrambling around from plot to counterplot, to arrive at some lively humors. The result is that theaterwise, this "Turk In Itlay" is an entertaining, farcial caper. It has no special style or flavor, but is amusing enough in a standard comic opera way.

Substandard Score

The score of "The Turk", however, is quite a different proposition. It is replete with the charatteristic mechanics of Rossini writing, the array of chattering setpieces, the patter songs, coloratura steeplechases, grand arias king-size choral and overture crescendi. But it is substandard stuff. It is sadly lacking in muscial richness, musical invention, and the great Rossini brilliance, piquency and elegance of style. It is a busy score, but it is also this and repetitious. Sung in English as it is, it sounds a little too close to a Gilbert and Sullivan parody of Rossini.

Mr. Goldovsky has done wisely to cleave to "The Turk" essentially as a theater piece, and to carry it along at a pace brisk enough to skate over its thinness as music. Aided by an excellent cast, he has achieved a bright, clean performance, if not a very imaginative one. The orchestra's contribution is neat and vigorous, the company sings with verve and poise, and the work of both components is nicely integrated.

Both James Pease, as the poet and Robert Goss as the husband, sang and acted Wednesday night's performance with easy, veteran skills.

June Gardner appeared as Fiorilla, the faithless cause of it all. Ornamental to look upon, she acted with vivacity and sang with sturdy soprano, if one somewhat chalky in quality. In the opening and closing scenes she sang too loudly, but otherwise her work was sweet and agile.

In the lesser role of the gypsy, Adele Addison sang with a larklike voice. Also in a smaller part, David Lloyd was excellent as the youthful lover. His initial aria had perhaps the most beauty and style of any single incident in the opera. Marshall Heinbaugh made a rather too placid Turk. The chorus was alert and bold.

The settings, by Nassan Abiskhairoun, identified in press notices as an Egyptian sculptor, were pretty dreadful, I'm afraid. They showed no grasp of the opportunities to hand in this specific opera, or of the problems of scenic design in general. Leo van Witsen's costumes were nondescript.

—T.H.P.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT
AUG 13 1948

Concert Tonight Honors Memory Of Tanglewood Donor

The memory of the donor of Tanglewood, Mrs. Andrew H. Hepburn, will be honored at a concert there tonight. Mrs. Hepburn died at her home at Concord, Mass., a few weeks before the opening of the present Berkshire Music Festival.

As a tribute to Mrs. Hepburn, who gave her family's Lenox, Mass., summer home to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, an elegy by Robert Kurka, student at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, will be played. It will be performed by the advanced student orchestra, conducted by Seymour Lipkin, pupil of Serge Koussevitzky, director of the music center and conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Before the playing of the piece, Dr. Koussevitzky will speak in appreciation of the gift of 200 acres and buildings which has made possible the school and the continuing of the Berkshire Music Festival on a permanent basis.

The first Berkshire Music Festival, in 1934, and the second in 1935, were held at the Hanna Farm, Stockbridge, Mass. The following year the concerts were given at Holmwood in adjacent Lenox. By 1937, however, the festival was seeking another place literally to pitch its tent, when Mrs. Hepburn offered Tanglewood to the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The orchestra has been located there since. The shed, where the concerts are given each year, was completed in August 1938.

Mrs. Hepburn's daughter, Miss Violet Brooks, was one of the first students of the Berkshire Music Center established at Tanglewood in 1940. The center now has more than 450 students.

Music Makes Your Farewell Easier

The following is the last in a series of four articles on Tanglewood, home of the Berkshire Music Festival at Lenox, Massachusetts, written by the music and drama editor of The Evening Citizen, who spent a week there observing the students and attending the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

By Lauretta Thistle
Evening Citizen Music Editor

LENOX, Mass. — They are well over 80, both of them, but these ladies scorn the use of taxis. They think nothing of the mile and a half to Tanglewood before hearing Mahler.

A woman 50 years their junior rides by, complaining that the train trip up from New York is so tiresome — why, it takes nearly five hours. She is rebuked by her soft-voiced companion from Mobile, Alabama — people who complain about a five-hour trip, indeed! In the car behind is a gentleman from Los Angeles, who has come to this Berkshire Music Festival for several seasons.

Now the tide of people is swelling as it nears the gate. On the last afternoon at Tanglewood all your pleasures have a keener edge. The stately old trees have added dignity, and even the formal gardens, which ordinarily seem artificial and forbidding, reveal new beauty of their own in the sunlight.

You pick your way among the people who are spreading their rugs and blankets in choice listening spots on the lawn, and try to avoid blocking the view of too many amateur photographers.

Once again the friendliness of Tanglewood envelops you. Your neighbors at the concerts of the past week are now old acquaintances. The happy little family from Albany, who bring their picnic lunches and stay all day, are under a tree over there. You remember how the little girl turned to her parents in delight when Koussevitsky made those funny faces during the Brandenburg Concerto.

Oh, there's the woman who was pleading with her husband the other night: "But let's stay for a while — the Brahms will be so nice." It seems the good man was unable to stomach the Piston and Prokofieff. I wonder who won that argument . . .

One last look over the grounds before you take your seat. Pleasant memories linger around every part of the estate. Over there by the main house you attended Koussevitsky's birthday party (he was seventy-four) and watched him laugh at the riotous "jam" session which some of his talented "children" had staged in his honor

On the far side is the theater concert hall where you heard the students do remarkably fine singing in an excerpt from Aida. It was there too that Boris Goldovsky asked Gretchaninoff to stand up so the audience might see him.

Like a grace note, comes a fleeting recollection of the horrified expression on the face of the tiny chipmunk who came to the door that day. He sat up and listened attentively, and then scuttled away in a most philistine manner: "Good heavens! Opera!"

But now the concert has begun and you are one with ten thousand other people watching Leonard Bernstein set himself to the task of moulding orchestra and organ, chorus and soloists, into a group which will guide us through the deep sorrow and exalted release of Mahler's Resurrection Symphony.

The depths of despair and the panic of hopeless wanderings are powerful and terrible in the first movement, and this inspired young conductor makes us taste the full bitterness, for the foundations must be laid deep. This basic mood lasts even into the fourth movement, where we are fearful of placing too much faith in the contralto solo of childlike hope and mysticism. But the final message of resurrection and freedom is overwhelming in its life-giving power . . . we are swept on from pinnacle to pinnacle, and the symphony ends only because there is a limit to the joy that humans can endure.

The clear sunlight seems pale as you leave the grounds, after the brilliant light which seemed to surround that magnificent music—music that eases your farewell to Tanglewood.

Ottawa Cit. Aug 14

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM

AUG 13 1948

Music

Russians Have Their Tanglewood Innings

By ROBERT BAGAR.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 13. — Last night's All-Russian program at Tanglewood was performed before 6500 people. The night was damp, and occasionally the tone of the Boston Symphony's strings went threadbare, although never enough to damage things. The conductor was Leonard Bernstein. The pieces were the Moussorgsky "Night on Bald Mountain," the Stravinsky "Petrouchka" in its entirety, and the Shostakovich "Fifth Symphony."

To all this Mr. Bernstein, as usual, gave everything he had. It is, perhaps, that in giving so much he sometimes causes the music he is conducting to come out strained, lacking the poise it otherwise would have.

For my tastes the Moussorgsky fell heir to much too heavy handling. Even so, there were moments or even whole pages when there was complete definition and expression.

Witches' Sabbath Effective.

I did hear descriptive sequences in the Moussorgsky. The convocation of evil spirits, sorcerers and whatnot known as the Witches' Sabbath in this work came through the orchestral web frantically, and, therefore, effetively.

Besides there was a general feeling of the ominous in Mr. Bernstein's rendering of all the music.

The "Petrouchka" proved rather interesting as regards performance. It was obvious that the batonist had an over-all conception of the work. Yet he pushed too relentlessly, I thought, for best possible results.

"Petrouchka" is an amazing fabric of just about everything there is. Stravinsky poured into it so many effects, so many tricks in instrumental combinations, that the listener is dazzled and often enough, its interpreter and the musicians. There are sudden flashes or rhythms coming on serene passages, loops and dives from pianissimo to fortissimo—in short, this piece requires the most concentrated attention every moment of the way.

Unscheduled Fluffs.

Quite a few times last night we heard fluffs from instruments, and, ironically, just where they would be heard in all their pristine glory. A trumpet, a bassoon, a French horn, and so on, all provided stellar features, unscheduled as they were.

I think this was because Mr. Bernstein did call for tempos that were hard on his musicians. In such an atmosphere the instrumentalist is not at ease, not ready to produce exactly what is wanted of him. And, in a general sense, the "Petrouchka" — for all its planned course — fell ever so slightly from grace in its occasionally broken continuity.

As for the Shostakovich "Fifth," it began like a dream and went right on. Here is music that requires no particular treatments to come out clearly. Even so, you'll hear as many variations of it as there are batonists.

What I enjoyed especially in Mr. Bernstein's rendering was the elastic quality of his tempos. They had the bounce and the freedom that you get only from the best jazz players. But his idea of this work had much more to offer than that, for he played the slow movement almost like an idyl, smoothly and persuasively.

It could be that the orchestra had got accustomed to the weather, because there was scarcely a departure from the straight and narrow path in the reading. The musicians were at their very best, behaving like a complete team, all-for-one-and-one-for-all stuff. Laugh, if you wish, but that is one way in which to get perfection in orchestral performance. And, if I'm not mistaken, that's what we more or less got in last night's Shostakovich.

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

AUG 13 1948

Boston Symphony Opens Final Berkshire Series

By RAYMOND MORIN

LENOX, Friday—The Boston Symphony with Leonard Bernstein conducting opened the final series of three Berkshire Music Festival concerts last night at Tanglewood with three powerful Russian works. First played was Moussorgskys ominous panorama, "A Night on Bald Mountain"; then Stravinskys "Petrouchka," a burlesque in four scenes, and Dimitri Shostakovich's "Symphony No. 5, No. 907 47."

Thus far in this long and comprehensive festival, musical drama has been meted out in balanced proportions. Perhaps "orchestral drama" would be more descriptive. At any rate, last night's audience of 6500 was given a large dose of emotion-laden music. A full picture of its emotional qualities was projected by Bernstein whose baton style and drama are synonymous. The young conductor (not to be outdone by Robert Shaw and Eleazar de Carvalho who share the podium with him and Dr. Serge Koussevitzky during this festival) emptied his bag of tricks, and gave an impressive exhibition of undeniable talent.

Intense Atmosphere

He was most successful in the Stravinsky music. Recognizing that here the orchestra is not an instrument of ingratiating intonation but a hard, metallic, percussive source of sounds, Bernstein drew from it all the makings of intense atmosphere. Stravinsky's untamed rhythms from Russian folk-dance, realistic and straight melodic lines, and sometimes harsh instrumentation were all bared without camouflage.

It was some of this festival's most vigorous playing, comparable to the final movement of Himdemith's "Matthias the Painter" and the opening movement of Tschaikowsky's "Pathetique Symphony"—both conducted by Dr. Koussevitzky. The titles of the four movements may give you an inkling of the setting—"People's Fair at Shrovetide," "At Petrouchka's," "At the Moor's," and "People's Fair at Shrovetide (towards evening)." The substance of the music is deeply imbedded in the scenario by Stravinsky and Alexander Benois. The first ballet scene pictures activity at the fair. People rush about in droves, an organgrinder, groups of drinkers, dancers, and three puppets—Petrouchka, a Moor, and a ballerina. Scene 2—Petrouchka, is kicked on stage, the ballerina enters, and he tells of his despair. Scene 3—The ballerina and the Moor dance ,the Moor and Petrouchka querrel, the ballerina disappears. Scene 4—A peasant enters with a bear, a merchant with two Gypsies. The atmosphere reverts back to the original whirling picture.

Extraordinary Performance

All of this may seem like space-taking program notes, but it helps to explain the vividness with which Bernstein drew his canvasses from the orchestra. The overall picture of this huge scoring was so thoroughly integrated by the conductor that there was a tendency to overlook the extraordinary podium performance he gave. He delivered rapid-fire cues without the slightest trace of hesitancy. This and the Moussorgsky score being so thoroughly within his interpretive province, the pictorial threads were drawn tight and were unfolded with camera-like precision. As important was the superb response by the orchestra, the strings sang or spoke sharply as ordered. The woodwinds played around the themes with beautiful tone, while the horns pierced through. The timpani intensified the picture, and the piano (under Lukas Foss' capable hands) gave an added brush of scintillation to the picture.

Preceding the Stravinsky torrent, Bernstein led the orchestra in a vivid reading of the Moussorgsky music. It is "old stuff" to remind you that not Moussorgsky, but Rimsky-Korsakoff is responsible for this brilliant orchestration. Last night's audience did not hear a "run-of-the-mill" performance of Moussorgsky's "Brain-Child." The horrid-looking Russian composer's version of "Dance Macabre" or "The Witches," or what have you left an indelible impression. As Moussorgsky felt no intellectualism in his writing, and certainly Rimsky did not try to inject any, last night's interpretation contented itself to images of subterranean sounds, spirits, witches' sabbaths, orgies, darkness, and finally, daybreak.

Satanic Send-Off

As you have surmised, Tanglewood shed and its surrounding vista was the scene last night of Machievellian activity. Bernstein and the Boston Symphony gave the festival's last act a Satanic send-off. Even is space allowed our deadline is crowding us so the Shostakovich symphony will have to be forfeited.

Saturday night we return to more conservative surroundings. Robert Shaw, the Boston Symphony, the festival chorus, Ellen

---

This Clipping From
HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT TELEGRAM

AUG 13 1948

Tanglewood Concert Draws 6,500 Despite Storm Threat

Overflow Audience of 1,500 Braves Rain to Hear First Concert of Final 1948 Series from Lawn—Records May be Set by Saturday and Sunday Crowds if Weather is Fair—Bernstein Conducts Boston Symphony in Concert With Strong Russian Flavor—Moussorsky, Stravinsky and Shostakovich Works Played.

In the face of a threatening storm, 6,500 persons passed through the gates of Tanglewood in Lenox last evening to hear the first concert in the third and final series of the 1948 Berkshire symphonic festival.

1,500 Sit Outdoors

This meant that approximately 1,500 accepted the risks of listening outside the shelter of the huge music shed on a night when all signs pointed to rain. Festival officials are no longer greatly moved by the fact that 11,000 to 12,000 people flock through the gates on a bright Sunday afternoon or a fair evening when stars twinkle and the moon floats in a clear sky, although this means that 5,000 or 6,000 people will be spread over the Tanglewood lawns. But they still marvel at the devotion to music represented by an out-of-door audience on a night of threatening weather. The overflow crowd was thoroughly equipped with raincoats, ponchos or blankets and none seemed greatly to mind the little rain that did fall during the concert.

Serge Koussevitzky, for last evening's concert, called on Leonard Bernstein, one of his proteges who is no stranger to the Tanglewood podium, to conduct the Boston orchestra in a program that had a strong Russian flavor.

Play Moussorgsky Work

Moussorgsky's suite "A Night on Bald Mountain," was the opening offering, this musical description of a series of witches' orgies taking the place on the program of Weber's overture to "Der Freischutz" which originally had been scheduled. Then the orchestra played, in its entirety Stravinsky's "Petrouchka" suite including the scene in the Moor's house and the final tragedy of Petrouchka which usually are omitted in orchestral performances. The final number was the Fifth symphony of Dimitri Shostakovich who owes his introduction to this country to Dr. Koussevitsky's enthusiasm for his work but whose art still fails to impress some musicians. The Fifth was given a powerful performance last evening.

Remaining now on the festival schedule are only the Saturday evening concert and Sunday afternoon performance which will bring the 1948 season to a close. For these as for each preceding concert, the 5,000-seat music shed has long been sold out and only outside space will be available to those who apply for general admission tickets. But the outside space is unlimited and with any sort of decent weather the festival board sees a possibility that attendance records for this year will be broken by these final-weekend affairs.

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES-UNION

AUG 13 1948

Bernstein Scores in Tanglewood Concert

By EDGAR S. VAN OLINDA

Leonard Bernstein, brilliant young alter ego of Serge Koussevitzky, had his evening of triumph, Thursday night when he conducted the Boston Symphony orchestra in three works by Russian composers. The iron curtain was temporarily lifted and three competent musical diplomats spoke their pieces. And no member of the audience pulled a Gromyko until the conclusion of the feast of reason, wit and musical persiflage.

"A Night on Bald Mountain," Moussorgsky at his imaginative best tells in orchestral form a kind of Hallowe'en story with eerie tonal effects and ghostly orchestration. This was followed by the "burlesque," as it was programmed, Stravinsky's musical score from the ballet, "Petrouchka," picturing in colorful clothing, a kind of Russian mardi gras. This amusing but thoroughly integrated bit of musical escapism brought into play the virtuosity of the Bostonians, resulting in a delightful experience of aural pyrotechnics.

THE MORE SERIOUS portion of the program was devoted to the playing of the "Sixth" symphony by Shostakotitch, which in spite of the name of this revolutionary Russian composer proves its right to become an established favorite in the major orchestras' repertoires for many years to come. Nothing more beautiful than the third, or "largo" movement, has been heard at Tanglewood this season. Conducting without score, Mr. Bernstein again demonstrated that he is no mere "flash-in-the-pan" musician, but that his reputation has been built on a firm musical foundation, maturing year after year. The penultimate concert of the season tonight at 8:15 will present "The Blessed Damozel," by Debussy and the Brahms' "German Requiem," conducted by the distinguished young American choral director, Robert Shaw. Vocal soloists will be Ellen Faul, Eunice Alberts, Frances Yeend, James Pease, with the festival chorus.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

AUG 13 1948

BERNSTEIN ON PODIUM

Conducts His Second Concert at Tanglewood Festival

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 12—Leonard Bernstein conducted his second concert tonight in the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood. The program marked the beginning of the third and last series of festival concerts for this summer.

The weather was rainy during the afternoon, discouraging some potential listeners, but a large audience heard the Overture to Weber's "Der Freischuetz," the complete score of Stravinsky's ballet, "Petroushka," and Shostakovitch's Fifth Symphony.

[268]

Pittsfield, Massachusetts. Friday, August 13, 1948.

Music Shed Seats Sold Out for Final Week End

Eunice Alberts

Robert L. Shaw

Ellen Faull

Robert L. Shaw Guest Conductor Tomorrow Night

TANGLEWOOD—The 6000 seats in the Music Shed have been sold out for the final concerts of the Berkshire Festival tomorrow night and Sunday afternoon, according to officials of the Festival this morning. General admission tickets will be available a few hours before each concert. Last night's crowd of 6500 was far below the attendance a year ago when 12,000 turned out for the first concert program of the concluding series. The weather was responsible for the drop in attendance but Festival officials are looking for huge crowds at the final week-end concerts.

Robert Shaw, for the past two years choral director at the Berkshire Music Center, will appear as guest conductor with the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow evening at 8.15. The first half of the program will feature Ellen Faull, soprano and Eunice Alberts, contralto, in Debussy's "La Damoiselle Elue," lyric poem for women's chorus, solo voices and orchestra. The Festival chorus, with Frances Yeend, soprano and James Pease, baritone-bass, will appear in Brahms' German Requiem.

For a time Mr. Shaw studied at Pomona College in Claremont, Cal., to be a minister, like his father, Rev. Shirley R. Shaw, when he became assistant leader of the glee club. In his junior year he was told by Fred Waring, who went West to make the movie, "Varsity Show," on the Pomona campus, that a job would be waiting for him in New York at the end of his college course. In 1938 Mr. Shaw assumed direction of the Waring glee club, a five-nights-weekly radio show, trained choruses for Billy Rose's Aquacades in New York and San Francisco, and for Broadway shows, including "Carmen Jones," "Laughing Room Only," and "The Seven Lively Arts."

To Replace Charlie McCarthy

In 1941 he organized the Collegiate Chorale, which has sung at Carnegie Hall and Town Hall in New York City Center, and with orchestras under Toscanini, Stokowski and Koussevitzky. He served in the Navy during the war and in 1946 he was appointed director of choral activities at the Juilliard School of Music in New York. He has replaced, with the chorale, for the summer the Edgar Bergen-Charlie McCarthy radio show over NBC.

Miss Faull has sung leading roles with the New York City, Pittsburgh and New England Opera Companies in "Eugene Onegin," "The Magic Flute," "The Marriage of Figaro," "Donna Anna," "Il Travatore," "Don Giovanni," and "The Old Maid and the Thief."

Miss Alberts, a former Berkshire Music Center student, has appeared with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in eight concerts since 1946.

Miss Yeend, who sang the leading role in the first American performance of "Peter Grimes" at the Berkshire Music Center two years ago, appeared with the orchestra last year and in 1946 in Beethoven's ninth symphony. She started her musical career by winning the Percy Rector Stevens award for singing in a high school in Portland, Ore., and directing two choirs in Pullman, Wash. She has also studied dancing and acting and has appeared in several radio performances.

Abandoned Lawyer's Career

Mr. Pease, a native of Indianapolis, abandoned a lawyer's career for music. After being admitted to the Bar, he entered the Philadelphia Academy of Vocal Arts on a scholarship. He was a student in the opera department of the Berkshire Music Center in 1942 and then entered the military service as a pilot of a Flying Fortress. After his discharge from the service he returned to his career to sing with the Worcester and New York City Senter opera companies, the Toronto and Chicago orchestras and the Montreal Festival. He had one of the leading roles in "Peter Grimes" at the Tanglewood performance.

Tonight Tanglewood will pay its tribute to Mrs. Andrew H. Hepburn who with her aunt, Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan, gave the 200-acre estate to the Boston Symphony Orchestra for a music center. Mrs. Hepburn died a few weeks before the 1948 Festival opened. Residents of Lenox and Stockbridge are invited to tonight's concert in the Music Shed when an elegy, written in tribute to Mrs. Hepburn, will be played. The elegy was created by Robert Kurka, a student in composition at the Music Center, and will be played by the advanced student orchestra and conducted by Seymour Lipkin. Dr. Koussevitzky will speak in appreciation of the gift of Tanglewood and will then conduct the largo of Vivaldi's concerto in A minor with Kenneth Gordon as soloist. Aaron Copland will conduct his "Billy the Kid" suite from the ballet. In the second half of the program the orchestra will play "Three Argentine Sketches," by Pia Sebastiani, a student, and Eleazer de Carvalho will lead the orchestra in Beethoven's "Leonore" overture No. 2.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
AUG 14 1948

At Tanglewood

Bernstein Conducts Entire 'Petrouchka' Score

By Arthur V. Berger

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 13.—The final week end of the Berkshire Festival opened here last night with the Boston Symphony Orchestra brilliantly conducted in Russian music by Leonard Bernstein. To supplement the three major orchestral concerts, the week end also offers the usual events sponsored by the Berkshire Music Center. Among these, tonight's program of the advanced student orchestra was notable. This weekly event takes place in the same huge Tanglewood shed that accommodates the Boston Symphony program, and though held on a less grand scale and much more modestly attended, it is likely to yield more substance that is off the beaten track for those who welcome surprise more than the standard programs all over again.

Tonight three top men of the faculty shared the podium with conducting students, namely Serge Koussevitzky, Aaron Copeland and Eleazor de Carvalho. As a curtain-raiser Seymour Lipkin, of the conducting class, led a brief elegy by Robert Kurka, a student in composition here this summer under Darius Milhaud. It was written in memory of Mrs. Andrew H. Hepburn, one of the donors of the Tanglewood estate that houses both the Boston Symphony and its music school. Comment on this event will appear in Sunday's Herald Tribune.

The delight of last night's concert was, for me, the performance of Stravinsky's "Petrouchka" in its entirety, instead of in the familiar suite. Some of the experts felt that the music in this form is inseparable from the ballet stage action. But I found it fascinating, absorbing at every moment. And I attribute this in no small degree to Mr. Bernstein's dramatic sense and interior grasp of the score. We forget how intriguing the interludes are, how prophetic of the rites of spring. For almost the only chance we have to hear them is when they are glossed over by the second-rate orchestras maintained by ballet companies.

Mr. Bernstein, as he is often inclined to be, was more than a bit hectic last night. The opening music, depicting the bustle of the holiday crowd of Russian peasants, sufficiently embodies activity in Stravinsky's oscillating textures. Driving the players and speeding up the tempo, here and elsewhere, only serves to unnerve the soloists, and may have been responsible last night for some deviation from precise articulation. This uneasiness, this need to anticipate audience reaction, is something that Mr. Bernstein will, I hope, eliminate as he matures, for his gift is, I believe, unsurpased among young conductors before the public in our country today, and it is sufficient to win audiences without being driven so.

Stravinsky's evocations of the accordion in the brass section were conveyed last night as I have never heard them before, and, given the magnificent forces of the Boston Symphony, Mr. Bernstein was able to reveal many other details as well. The program also included Moussorgsky's "Night on Bald Mountain" and the Shostakovitch Fifth Symphony. The whole evening left me with the desire to hear Mr. Bernstein in the opera house, for he combines musicianship and rhetoric so well.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
AUG 14 1948

Young artists prominent in the final week's events of the Berkshire Festival, Tanglewood, are James Pease, bass baritone; Eunice Alberts, contralto, and David Lloyd, tenor.

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
AUG 14 1948

Berkshire Festival Lists Tonight's Program

The Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood will present Debussy's "The Blessed Damozel" and Brahms' "Requiem" at 8:15 p. m. today, with Robert Shaw conducting.

In the Debussy work, Ellen Faull, soprano, and Eunice Alberts, contralto, will be the soloists with the women's chorus. The "Requiem" will feature Frances Yeend, soprano, and James Pease, bass, as the soloists with the festival chorus.

The festival will close with the 3:30 p. m. performance tomorrow, when the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be heard in Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony No. 3 and Sibelius' Symphony No. 2 in D Minor. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct.

This Clipping From MICHIGAN CHRONICLE
DETROIT, MICH.
AUG 14 1948

Carol Brice In "Jacoste" Role

Carol Brice, the most sensational American contralto sang the role of Jacoste, the legendary Grecian queen again last evening before an estimated seven thousand music lovers at the Berkshire Music Festival. The Jacoste role is part of the opera oratorio "Oedipus Rex," written by Igor Stravinsky. The performance marked Miss Brice's eighth consecutive appearance with the Boston Symphony. She performs with the Boston Symphony again on Sunday afternoon when she will sing her famous rendition of De Falla's "El Amor Brujo." This work is one of Miss Brice's more popular recordings which she waxed with Dr. Fritz Reiner and the Pittsburgh Symphony.

This Clipping From
CINCINNATI, OHIO
INDEPENDENT
AUG 14 1948

Carol Brice Sings Jacoste Role With Boston Symphony

Carol Brice, the most sensational American contralto, sang the role of Jacoste, the legendary Grecian queen again last evening before an estimated seven thousand music lovers at the Berkshire Music Festival. The Jacoste role is part of the opera oratorio "Oelipus Rex," written by Igor Stravinsky. This performance marked Miss Brice's eighth consecutive appearance with the Boston Symphony. She performs with the Boston Symphony again on Sunday afternoon when she will sing her famous rendition of De Falla's "E'l Amor Brujo." This work is one of Miss Brice's more popular recordings which she waxed with Dr. Fritz Reiner and the Pittsburgh Symphony.

After completing this performance on Sunday, Miss Brice will return to New York and began furnishing and decorating her new home which she has purchased in St. Albans, Long Island.

[269]

Pittsfield, Massachusetts. Friday, August 13, 1948.

Music Shed Seats Sold Out for Final Week End

Robert L. Shaw Guest Conductor Tomorrow Night

Eunice Alberts

Robert L. Shaw

Ellen Faull

TANGLEWOOD—The 6000 seats in the Music Shed have been sold out for the final concerts of the Berkshire Festival tomorrow night and Sunday afternoon, according to officials of the Festival this morning. General admission tickets will be available a few hours before each concert. Last night's crowd of 6500 was far below the attendance a year ago when 12,000 turned out for the first concert program of the concluding series. The weather was responsible for the drop in attendance but Festival officials are looking for huge crowds at the final week-end concerts.

Robert Shaw, for the past two years choral director at the Berkshire Music Center, will appear as guest conductor with the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow evening at 8.15. The first half of the program will feature Ellen Faull, soprano and Eunice Alberts, contralto, in Debussy's "La Damoiselle Elue," lyric poem for women's chorus, solo voices and orchestra. The Festival chorus, with Frances Yeend, soprano and James Pease, baritone-bass, will appear in Brahms' German Requiem.

For a time Mr. Shaw studied at Pomona College in Claremont, Cal., to be a minister, like his father, Rev. Shirley R. Shaw, when he became assistant leader of the glee club. In his junior year he was told by Fred Waring, who went West to make the movie, "Varsity Show," on the Pomona campus, that a job would be waiting for him in New York at the end of his college course. In 1938 Mr. Shaw assumed direction of the Waring glee club, a five-nights-weekly radio show, trained choruses for Billy Rose's Aquacades in New York and San Francisco, and for Broadway shows, including "Carmen Jones," "Laughing Room Only," and "The Seven Lively Arts."

To Replace Charlie McCarthy

In 1941 he organized the Collegiate Chorale, which has sung at Carnegie Hall and Town Hall in New York City Center, and with orchestras under Toscanini, Stokowski and Koussevitzky. He served in the Navy during the war and in 1946 he was appointed director of choral activities at the Juilliard School of Music in New York. He has replaced, with the chorale, for the summer the Edgar Bergen-Charlie McCarthy radio show over NBC.

Miss Faull has sung leading roles with the New York City, Pittsburgh and New England Opera Companies in "Eugene Onegin," "The Magic Flute," "The Marriage of Figaro," "Donna Anna," "Il Travatore," "Don Giovanni," and "The Old Maid and the Thief."

Miss Alberts, a former Berkshire Music Center student, has appeared with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in eight concerts since 1946.

Miss Yeend, who sang the leading role in the first American performance of "Peter Grimes" at the Berkshire Music Center two years ago, appeared with the orchestra last year and in 1946 in Beethoven's ninth symphony. She started her musical career by winning the Percy Rector Stevens award for singing in a high school in Portland, Ore., and directing two choirs in Pullman, Wash. She has also studied dancing and acting and has appeared in several radio performances.

Abandoned Lawyer's Career

Mr. Pease, a native of Indianapolis, abandoned a lawyer's career for music. After being admitted to the Bar, he entered the Philadelphia Academy of Vocal Arts on a scholarship. He was a student in the opera department of the Berkshire Music Center in 1942 and then entered the military service as a pilot of a Flying Fortress. After his discharge from the service he returned to his career to sing with the Worcester and New York City Senter opera companies, the Toronto and Chicago orchestras and the Montreal Festival. He had one of the leading roles in "Peter Grimes" at the Tanglewood performance.

Tonight Tanglewood will pay its tribute to Mrs. Andrew H. Hepburn who with her aunt, Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan, gave the 200-acre estate to the Boston Symphony Orchestra for a music center. Mrs. Hepburn died a few weeks before the 1948 Festival opened. Residents of Lenox and Stockbridge are invited to tonight's concert in the Music Shed when an elegy, written in tribute to Mrs. Hepburn, will be played. The elegy was created by Robert Kurka, a student in composition at the Music Center, and will be played by the advanced student orchestra and conducted by Seymour Lipkin. Dr. Koussevitzky will speak in appreciation of the gift of Tanglewood and will then conduct the largo of Vivaldi's concerto in A minor with Kenneth Gordon as soloist. Aaron Copland will conduct his "Billy the Kid" suite from the ballet. In the second half of the program the orchestra will play "Three Argentine Sketches," by Pia Sebastiani, a student, and Eleazer de Carvalho will lead the orchestra in Beethoven's "Leonore" overture No. 2.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM

AUG 14 1948

Young artists prominent in the final week's events of the Berkshire Festival, Tanglewood, are James Pease, bass baritone; Eunice Alberts, contralto, and David Lloyd, tenor.

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS

AUG 14 1948

Berkshire Festival Lists Tonight's Program

The Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood will present Debussy's "The Blessed Damozel" and Brahms' "Requiem" at 8:15 p. m. today, with Robert Shaw conducting.

In the Debussy work, Ellen Faull, soprano, and Eunice Alberts, contralto, will be the soloists with the women's chorus. The "Requiem" will feature Frances Yeend, soprano, and James Pease, bass, as the soloists with the festival chorus.

The festival will close with the 3:30 p. m. performance tomorrow, when the Boston Symphony Orchestra will ~~be heard in~~ Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony No. 3 and Sibelius' Symphony No. 2 in D Minor. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct.

This Clipping From
MICHIGAN CHRONICLE
DETROIT, MICH.

AUG 14 1948

Carol Brice In "Jacoste" Role

Carol Brice, the most sensational American contralto sang the role of Jacoste, the legendary Grecian queen again last evening before an estimated seven thousand music lovers at the Berkshire Music Festival. The ~~Jacoste role is~~ part of the opera oratorio "Oedipus Rex," written by Igor Stravinsky. The performance marked Miss Brice's eighth consecutive appearance with the Boston Symphony. She performs with the Boston Symphony again on Sunday afternoon when she will sing her famous rendition of De Falla's "El Amor Brujo." This work is one of Miss Brice's more popular recordings which she waxed with Dr. Fritz Reiner and the Pittsburgh Symphony.

This Clipping From
CINCINNATI, OHIO
INDEPENDENT

AUG 14 1948

Carol Brice Sings Jacoste Role With Boston Symphony

Carol Brice, the most sensational American contralto, sang the role of Jacoste, the legendary Grecian queen again last evening before an estimated seven thousand music lovers at the Berkshire Music Festival. The Jacoste role is part of the opera oratorio "Oedipus Rex," written by Igor Stravinsky. This performance marked Miss Brice's eighth consecutive appearance with the Boston Symphony. She performs with the Boston Symphony again on Sunday afternoon when she will sing her famous rendition of De Falla's "E'l Amor Brujo." This work is one of Miss Brice's more popular recordings which she waxed with Dr. Fritz Reiner and the Pittsburgh Symphony.

After completing this performance on Sunday, Miss Brice will return to New York and began furnishing and decorating her new home which she has purchased in St. Albans, Long Island.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

AUG 14 1948

At Tanglewood

Bernstein Conducts Entire 'Petrouchka' Score

By Arthur V. Berger

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 13.—The final week end of the Berkshire Festival opened here last night with the Boston Symphony Orchestra brilliantly conducted in Russian music by Leonard Bernstein. To supplement the three major orchestral concerts, the week end also offers the usual events sponsored by the Berkshire Music Center. Among these, tonight's program of the advanced student orchestra was notable. This weekly event takes place in the same huge Tanglewood shed that accommodates the Boston Symphony program, and though held on a less grand scale and much more modestly attended, it is likely to yield more substance that is off the beaten track for those who welcome surprise more than the standard programs all over again.

Tonight three top men of the faculty shared the podium with conducting students, namely Serge Koussevitzky, Aaron Copeland and Eleazor de Carvalho. As a curtain-raiser Seymour Lipkin, of the conducting class, led a brief elegy by Robert Kurka, a student in composition here this summer under Darius Milhaud. It was written in memory of Mrs. Andrew H. Hepburn, one of the donors of the Tanglewood estate that houses both the Boston Symphony and its music school. Comment on this event will appear in Sunday's Herald Tribune.

The delight of last night's concert was, for me, the performance of Stravinsky's "Petrouchka" in its entirety, instead of in the familiar suite. Some of the experts felt that the music in this form is inseparable from the ballet stage action. But I found it fascinating, absorbing at every moment. And I attribute this in no small degree to Mr. Bernstein's dramatic sense and interior grasp of the score. We forget how intriguing the interludes are, how prophetic of the rites of spring. For almost the only chance we have to hear them is when they are glossed over by the second-rate orchestras maintained by ballet companies.

Mr. Bernstein, as he is often inclined to be, was more than a bit hectic last night. The opening music, depicting the bustle of the holiday crowd of Russian peasants, sufficiently embodies activity in Stravinsky's oscillating textures. Driving the players and speeding up the tempo, here and elsewhere, only serves to unnerve the soloists, and may have been responsible last night for some deviation from precise articulation. This uneasiness, this need to anticipate audience reaction, is something that Mr. Bernstein will, I hope, eliminate as he matures, for his gift is, I believe, unsurpased among young conductors before the public in our country today, and it is sufficient to win audiences without being driven so.

Stravinsky's evocations of the accordion in the brass section were conveyed last night as I have never heard them before, and, given the magnificent forces of the Boston Symphony, Mr. Bernstein was able to reveal many other details as well. The program also included Moussorgsky's "Night on Bald Mountain" and the Shostakovitch Fifth Symphony. The whole evening left me with the desire to hear Mr. Bernstein in the opera house, for he combines musicianship and rhetoric so well.

ping From
RK, N. Y.
TRIBUNE
UG 14 1948

glewood

Conducts Entire chka' Score

hur V. Berger ass., Aug. 13.—The d of the Berkshire

ed here last night
ton Symphony Or-conducted in by Leonard Bern-plement the three stral concerts, the so offers the usual
ored by the Berk-Center. Among these, rogram of the ad-
nt orchestra was not-ekly event takes place e huge Tanglewood commodates the Bos-hony program, and on a less grand scale
ore modestly attended,
o yield more substance
the beaten track for welcome surprise more standard programs all three top men of the ared the podium with students, namely Serge ky, Aaron Copeland and Carvalho. As a curtainmour Lipkin, of the con-ass, led a brief elegy by rka, a student in com-ere this summer under lhaud. It was written in f Mrs. Andrew H. Hep-of the donors of the d estate that houses

Boston Symphony and its hool. Comment on this l appear in Sunday's ribune.

ight of last night's con for me, the performan sky's "Petrouchka" in nstead of in the famil
ome of the experts
music in this form is from the ballet
But I found it fascin at every moment.
e this in no small ernstein's dramati
rior grasp of th
t how intriguing are, how prophet spring. For al nce we have to they are glosse
nd-rate orchest
y ballet compa
ernstein, as he o be, was more last night.
depicting the crowd of fficiently em vinsky's oscil the player tempo, here rves to unn ay have ht for som articulati his need t reaction, rnstein
s he ma ve, unsur ctors be y today n audi
so.
avinsky dion i yed la ther ificer hon veal

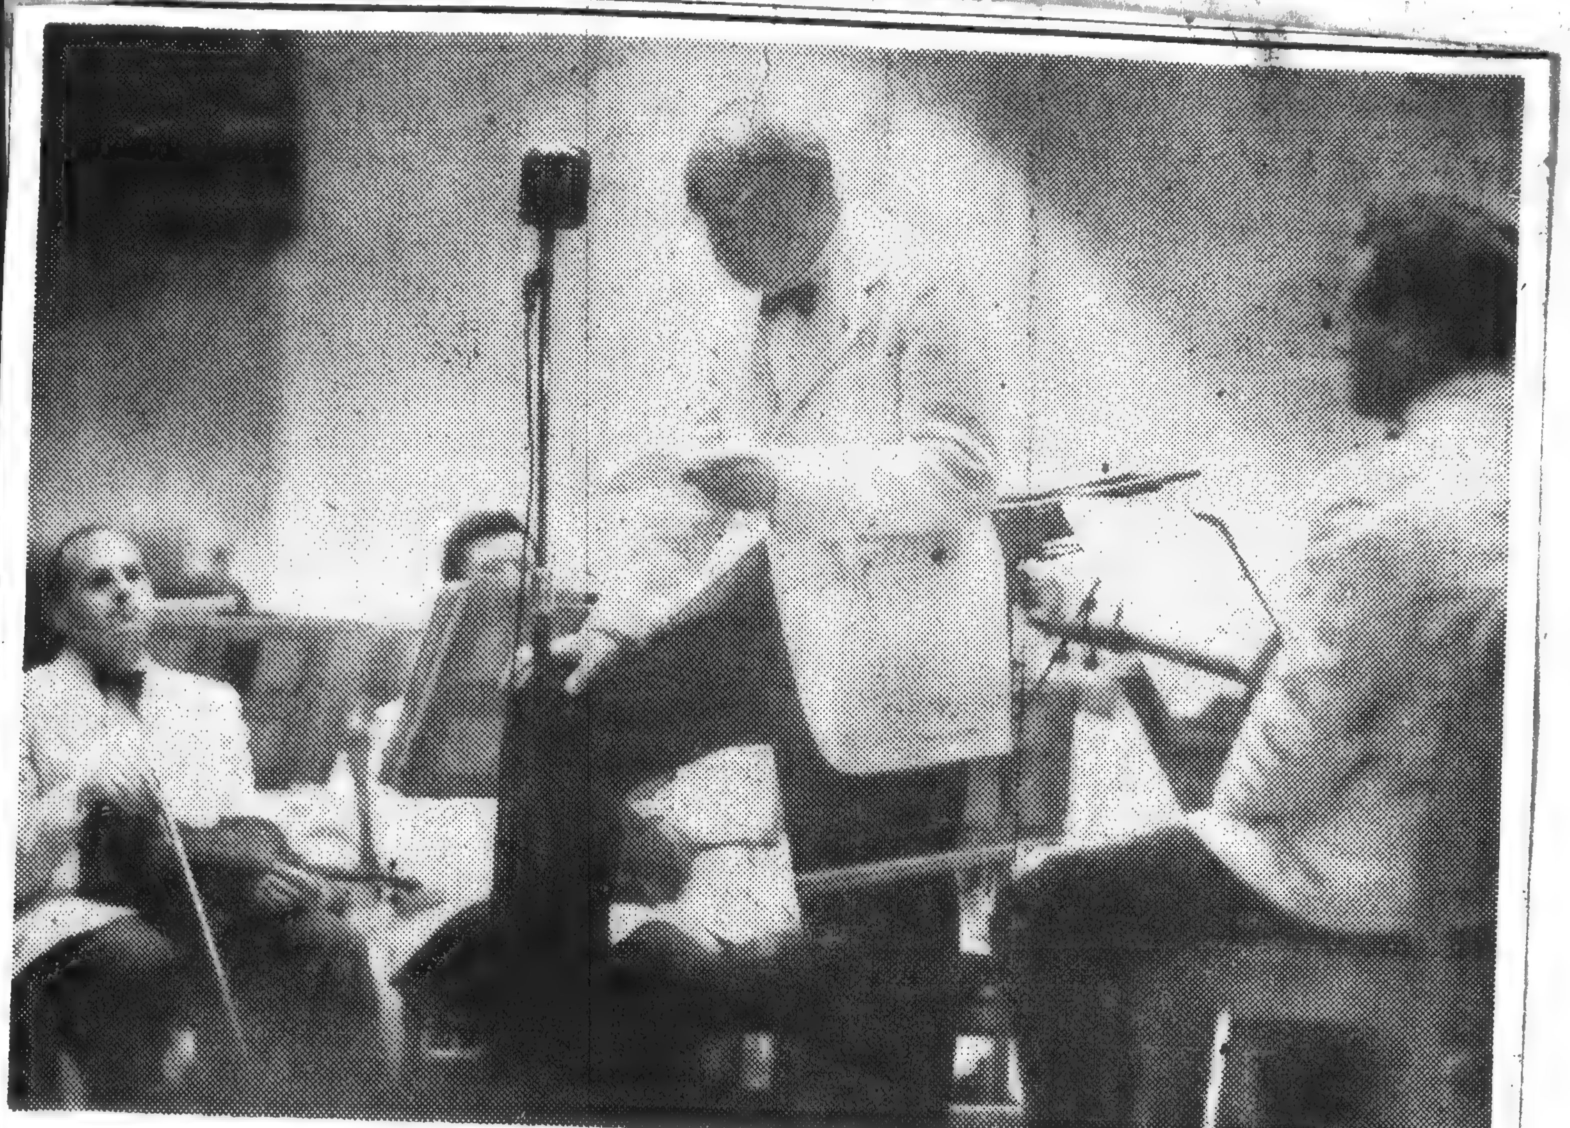
This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
PERKSHIRE EAGLE

AUG 14 1948



TANGLEWOOD TRIBUTE: Dr. Serge Koussevitzky reads a tribute to Mrs. Andrew H. Hepburn during last night's memorial concert honoring the donor of Tanglewood. Babbitt

Music Center Honors Donor Of Tanglewood

Koussevitzky Joins In Tribute to Mrs. A. H. Hepburn

TANGLEWOOD — Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the students of the Berkshire Music Center paid tribute last night to the late Mrs. Andrew H. Hepburn, who donated her Tanglewood estate in 1937 to the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Three thousand persons attended the event, which was featured by the presentation of an elegy in her memory written by Robert Kurka, a former violin pupil of Kathleen Parlow in 1939 at South Mountain in Pittsfield.

Kurka, an instructor of composition at the City College of New York and a student of composition under Darius Milhaud at the Music Center, was commissioned by Dr. Koussevitzky to write the short elegy, which opened the sixth and final concert of the advanced student orchestra of the Music Center. The crowd was the largest to attend a student concert this season.

Before the opening of the concert, Dr. Koussevitzky read a short eulogy and asked that the Kurka elegy, which Seymour Lipkin conducted, and the Vivaldi-Siloti Largo from the concerto grosso in D minor which Koussevitzky conducted, be received without applause in memory of Mrs. Hepburn. Dr. Koussevitzky then explained how the gift of the 200 acre estate was made by Mrs. Hepburn and he spoke of the importance of the Music Center for the students.

Dr. Koussevitzky read the following paragraph from a letter he received from Mrs. Hepburn shortly before her death on June 1:

> It moves me deeply to think of the joy and inspiration you have given to hundreds of thousands of people and of the opportunities to the young musicians who might never have been heard of and who are our musicians of the future.

"She was so modest that little did she realize how great was her part in this development with her contribution to American musical life," said Dr. Koussevitzky.

Family Present

Among those present for the event were members of Mrs. Hepburn's family, including her husband; her son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Curtis Prout; her daughter, Miss Violet Brooks; her son and daughter-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Shepard Brooks; and her son, Peter Brooks.

Aside from the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, many of Mrs. Hepburn's friends and neighbors in Lenox and Stockbridge attended the concert.

The program also included Glazounov's concerto with Kenneth Gordon as violin soloist and Irwin Hoffman, conductor; Dubensky's fugue for 18 violins with Howard Shanet, conductor; Copland's "Billy the Kid," with the composer conducting, and Eleazar de Carvalho conducting three Argentine sketches of Sabastiani and the Beethoven "Leonore" overture No. 2.

This Clipping From TORONTO, CANADA
GLOBE & MAIL

AUG 14 1948

Notes of Music

A Turk in Tanglewood; Torres-Mahler at Prom

Importance of the Berkshire Music Centre to musical America, apart from the annual festival concerts of the ~~Boston Symphony, was~~ pointed up Monday night when Rossini's "Turk in Italy" was presented by an all-student cast of singers and orchestra. Its libretto, written in English and only slightly based on the original text of Romani's, and its revised musical score were news that brought critics from New York and Boston papers and representatives from the Metropolitan Opera Company, as well as top-flight musicians from the surrounding area.

The opera was the biggest attempt by Director Boris Goldovsky to give the opera department the double role of school and experimentation centre. In line with past years, he kept to English, but this time it meant scrapping the original libretto which he considered too "loose" and uninteresting. The poet who had a secondary role in the original, with not even one aria, found himself the chief character. Portrayed by a bass-baritone, given witty lines and much freedom of movement and opportunities for pantomime, the role would be a "natural" for Ezio Pinza. Music was taken from various editions of "Turk in Italy" to provide him with arias.

Also otherwise the plot has became changed at the hands of Mr. Goldovsky. As it was performed at Tanglewood the result is a series of near-slapstick comedy reminiscent of Rossini's "Barber of Seville." The finale, which involves a masked ball with two masquerading as the Turk and a gypsy masquerading as the wife, packs a surprise wallop. The plot is tight, the situations amusing and brought continual laughter from the audience which showed approval of the whole performance.

Not so general was commedation of the text. One criticism was that many of the lines were too "smart-alecksy." This observer thought the first act of five scenes, went smoothly but the English bogged down in the second act of three scenes. Mr. Goldovsky apparently strived for word-simplicity so that the opera would be on a level with the lightest of musical comedies. As a result, the English was too consistently basic to offer interest of change.

The music was all from the original; much of it Rossini used for "Barber of Seville," writen three years later. Whether the opera would offer enough difference to warrant production, therefore, might be questioned. On the other hand, its English text and its "Barber" music might be audience-drawing a boon to the producer. There is no doubt about the music's appeal and the opera possesses fine ensemble numbers, including quintets, quartets and sextets.

* * *

This Clipping From
MONTREAL, CANADA
GAZETTE

AUG 14 1948

Rossini's 'Turk'

A highlight of the final week of the Berkshire Festival will be the first performances in America for more than a hundred years of The Turk in Italy by Rossini on Monday and Wednesday evenings in the Theatre-Concert Hall at Tanglewood. Tickets have been issued to friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM

AUG 14 1948

New Opera Presented At Tanglewood

By ROBERT BAGAR.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 14.—The advanced student orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center gave its sixth and final concert of the season last night. The first two numbers of the program were played in memory of the late Mrs. Andrew H. Hepburn, who donated to the Boston Symphony Orchestra the estate upon which the Berkshire Festival is now established. The varied program was presented under several conductors, professional and student.

Serge Koussevitzky addressed the audience with a tribute to Mrs. Hepburn, following which he requested that there be no applause after the first two pieces. These were an elegy by Robert Kurka, a student at the Center who was specially commissioned to do this work, and the largo from the Vivaldi-Siloti Concerto Grosso in D minor. Seymour Lipkin conducted the first, and Dr. Koussevitzky the second.

Other works scheduled were the Glazounov violin concerto, with Kenneth Gordon playing the solo part and Irwin Hoffman conducting Copland's "Billy the Kid" under the composer's direction; the fuge for 18 violins by Dubensky, led by Howard Shanet; two sections from "Tres Estampas Argentinas" by Pia Sebastinani and the "Lenore" Overture No. 2, conducted by Eleazar De Carvalho.

Premiere of a Satire.

Yesterday afternoon the opera department of the Berkshire Music Center offered a world premiere of Robert E. Middleton's satirical "Life Goes to a Party." The work is in one act, and it calls for a cast of eight characters.

The subject of this work is a photographer's assignment at a costume party during Mardi Gras in New Orleans. He takes six shots, in all, each one descriptive of some Aesop fable. The idea is the application of the Aesop moral to human manifestations of our time.

Since this is a comic piece with a series of vignettes more or less on the order of blackouts, it would have been better for the work, which does have a considerable amount of humor, to boil down these sketches to almost barest details. As it is, they are much too long for the best possible projection of the comedy. Also, after seeing and hearing the first of them, the listener knows what's coming, thereby losing some interest in the proceedings because of their length.

Score Lively and Humorous.

The score, which was performed mostly by Alfred Popper at the piano with some assitance by several other instruments, is lively, expressively humorous, and quite the most effective part of the opera. All the members of the cast labored well in delivering their assignments, one or two especially that of Ellen Faull, being rather difficult.

Miss Faull did a takeoff of a singer who tries to be a Galli-Curci (the fable of the frog and the ox) and, as you would expect, rather collapses from the effort. The score requires of the soprano some heroic singing, almost without letup, for the success of the gag.

Before that there was a skillful presentation in English of nine secenes from Mozart's "La Clemenza Di Tito." Miss Vose, Phyllis Curtin, Juliet Hayes, Ilona Stresser, David Poleri and Roger Fee were the principals. The chorus also participated.

Both productions were under the supervision of Boris Goldovsky, assisted by Barbara Lawthers, Leo Van Witsen, Nassan Abiskhairoun, Sarah Caldwell, Jan Meyerowitz and Felix Wolfes. Miss Caldwell conducted both works.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

AUG 14 1948

Tanglewood Opera Students Salute Goldovsky

FLUSHED WITH SUCCESS, the student cast of Rossini's "Turk in Italy" direct applause to their director, Boris Goldovsky, at end of performance Monday during this final week of the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood. Left to right: Adele Addison, Marshall Heinbaugh, Francis Barnard, June Gardner, Robert Goss, David Lloyd, Mr. Goldovsky, head of the opera school. The opera was revived for its first performance in 100 years.

The brilliant Tanglewood season will end with two concerts, tonight at 8:15, and Sunday at 3:30, in the shed. Tonight Robert Shaw will conduct a chorus in Debussy's "La Damoiselle Elue," with Ellen Faul, soprano, and Eunice Alberts, contralto. The program will close with Brahms' Requiem, with Frances Yeend, soprano, and James Pease, baritone, as soloists.

Sunday, Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Music Center, will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Beethoven's Third Symphony and Sibelius' Second Symphony.

GOLDOVSKY GIFTED

Adroit Version of Seldom Heard Opera "Il Turco" Exemplifies His Talents

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

There are no two ways about it, Boris Goldovsky is a greatly gifted man. We are doubly fortunate to have him in our midst now that that Gibraltar of opera, the Metropolitan, shows signs of crumbling. This department has not always been in full agreement with Mr. Goldovsky's theories of operatic production. It believes that in certain works the singing and the quality of the singing voices are more important than stagecraft; that in such works it matters less that an artist looks the part than that he can sing the music of it. And if the players can sing acceptably and act with a certain amount of creditability, what if they do steal an occasional glance at the conductor or even, in Mr Goldovsky's pet phrase, make love to him?

* * *

But there are operas that need the Goldovskian touch and respond to it as a plant does to water and sunshine. Take Rossini's "The Turk in Italy," not so much revived by him (or even resuscitated) as recreated at Tanglewood last week. A conventional revival of the piece, as Rossini and Romani wrote it, would probably have fallen flat, even if provided with one of the fabulous casts of opera's Golden Age.

Mr. Goldovsky was far too perceiving to depend exclusively on composer and librettist, though the one, even at 22, was no tyro and the other a competent hand. Without altering the score beyond the addition of a few recitatives and a judicious re-ordering of numbers, plus a careful selection from its various versions (the work of Helmuth Wolfes), Mr. Goldovsky overhauled "Il Turco" so thoroughly that he caused the dead to come to life. We must make certain that we get it in Boston next season, provided we can have it as it was done in Tanglewood, which does not seem to be an unreasonable stipulation. This was not a sumptuous production, calculated to overtax the resources of the New England Opera Theatre, merely an uncommonly adroit one.

* * *

My acquaintance with the original "Il Turco in Italia"—and, as I say, there was more than one version of it—is confined to a rather hurried perusal of the vocal score at the Boston Public Library. The orchestral score was not published, and the Tanglewood performance was based on more than one manuscript score, with missing orchestrations supplied by Mr Wolfes, whose researches in the opera were responsible for bringing it to Mr Goldovsky's attention. The program also credited Sarah Caldwell with being Mr. Goldovsky's co-worker in the matter of translation and additional recitatives. These last were accompanied at the piano, according to the fashion of the day.

Mr Goldovsky's successful restoration of Mozart's "Idomeneo" last year was partly due to his ingenious rearrangement of the music and tightening of the plot. It is his belief that works such as this and "Il Turco" have fallen by the wayside because of shortcomings in the libretto. He is probably right. However much the music may matter, even in the older operas, it is not all-important.

The principal difference between this present version of "Il Turco" and its predecessors would seem to lie in the greatly increased importance of the role of The Poet. As I observed when the Tanglewood revival of "Il Turco" was first announced Boston had a passing acquaintance with Paer's "Il Maestro di Cappella," in which the composer, seated at the harpsichord, is supposed to improvise the opera as it goes along. In "The Turk in Italy" it is the librettist who is thus seen in the act of creation. Mr Goldovsky, however, has turned this minor and incidental role into a decidedly major one. His manner of freely consorting with the figments of his imagination strains credulity to such an extent that, in its present form, "The Turk in Italy" must be described as a fantasy, and a very amusing and provocative one.

* * *

To cap the climax, the Poet at the end appropriates the lady in the case, thus winning out over her elderly husband, her foppish lover, and the intruding Turk, who had planned to abduct her. Mr Goldovsky quaintly declared to last Monday's audience that he found the original ending, in which she returns to her doting and doddering spouse, "revolting."

In my dispatch from Tanglewood I was obliged to disregard the singing players. They were all excellent. On Wednesday evening, incidentally, three of the six were different. In Monday's cast Francis Barnard was the The Poet, Adele Addison, the Gypsy; Arthur Schoep, the Husband; June Gardner, the Wife; Marshall Heinbaugh, Selim, the Turk; and David Lloyd, the Lover. Messrs. Schoep and Heinbaugh seemed the most completely professional. Miss Gardner was charming to see, though her singing of the florid music did not always measure up. When it comes to the taste, imagination, and high pictorial quality of the whole, one must not overlook Nassan Abiskhairoun and Leo Van Witsen, respectively, responsible for the scenery and the costumes, and the technical director, Robert J. Lawthers. Mr Goldovsky directed the student orchestra with his accustomed authority. It all added up to a most delightful evening.

LOS ANGELES, CAL.
TIMES

AUG 15 1948

HALF NOTES

The Berkshire Festival will close this afternoon with Serge Koussevitzky conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony and the Second Symphony of Sibelius. Yesterday Robert Shaw was scheduled to conduct the Festival chorus in Debussy's "The Blessed Damozel" and Brahms' Requiem. Frances Yeend, soprano, and James Pease, baritone, were soloists in the Requiem.

"Minuet for Drums," a new ballet by Ted Shawn, based on Stefan Lorant's book, "The New World," will have its premiere at the Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival Theater Aug. 27. The ecstatic press agent avers that, "Far excelling any prosaic routine of dance patterns, this new choreography has coupled the excitement of a Ringling Brothers' extravaganza and the lightning action of a Cheyenne rodeo to the artistic subtlety of dance theater at its peak." The action concerns the report given to Catherine de Medici, Regent Queen of France in 1564, by M. de Laudonierre concerning his expedition to the new world. The music is by Richard Malaby and the costumes and settings, which are by John Christian, were inspired by the engravings of the Dutch artist, De Bry.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

AUG 15 1948

Serge Koussevitzky

Lotte J. Neustein

Who conducts the closing Berkshire Festival concert this afternoon in Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

Time Corrected For Concert At Tanglewood

By MARJORIE C. TOWER

Meriden is fast becoming Tanglewood conscious, with the greatest interest shown from among those of college age. Because the recent special article on Tanglewood listed unfortunate mistakes in the Boston Symphony concert hours, I hasten to print the entire remaining programs through the final concert on August 15, with the corrected concert hours.

Thursday evening, Aug. 5, at 8:15:
Beethoven—Symphony No. 6—"Pastoral"
Stravinski—"Oedipus Rex"—with Male Chorus and Soloists—Carol Brice, contralto; David Lloyd, tenor; James Pease, bass; Wesley Addy, Narrator.

Saturday evening, Aug. 7, at 8:15:
Prokoffief—"Romeo and Juliet," Suite No. 2
Vaughn Williams—Symphony No. 6
Strauss—"Don Quixote"
Violoncello Solo: Gregor Piatigorski

Sunday afternoon, Aug. 8, at 3:30:
(Eleanor Carvalho conducting)
Berlioz—Fantastic Symphony
Villa Lobos—Madona
Falla—(Soloist: Carlo Brice)
El Amor Brujo
Siqueira—"Nordestina"—Suit No. 1

Special Tschaikowski Program
Tuesday, Aug. 10 at 8:15:
Symphony No. 6—"Pathetic"
Piano Concerto No. 1
Soloist, Seymour Lipkin
Ouverture Solennelle, "1812"

Thursday evening, Aug. 12, at 8:15:
(Leonard Bernstein conducting)
Weber—Overture to "Der Freischutz"
Stravinsky—"Petrouchka"—(complete)
Shostakovitch—Symphony No. 5

Saturday evening, Aug. 14, at 8:15:
(Robert Shaw conducting)
Debussy—The Blessed Damosel
Female chorus and soloists — Ellen Faull, soprano, Eunice Alberts, contralto
Brahms—Requiem
Chorus and soloists — Frances Yeend, soprano; James Pease, bass

Sunday afternoon, Aug. 15, at 3:30:
Beethoven—Symphony No. 3—"Eroica"
Sibelius—Symphony No. 2

Among the musical events enlivening the last two weeks is the production of the little-known opera of Rossini, "Il Turco in Italia". The opera department will present this opera on Monnday, Aug. 9 and Wednesday Aug. 11.

The Bershire Music Center at Lenox(Massachusetts(was founded in 1940 by the Boston Symphony Orchestra as a realization of a long-cherished wish of Dr. Koussevitski, who is its director. The school is attended by young musicians of talent who acquire experience by performing under the supervision of the principals of the orchestra and other distinguished members of the faculty.

In 1946 the Society of the Berkshire Music Center was established for those interested in the development of the school. A voluntary contribution to the support of the center constitutes membership in the society. Guest tickets to performances by students of the Center will be issued to Friends.

Saturday morning rehearsals at 10 a. m. are open to the public for a small fee which benefits the orchestra's pension fund.

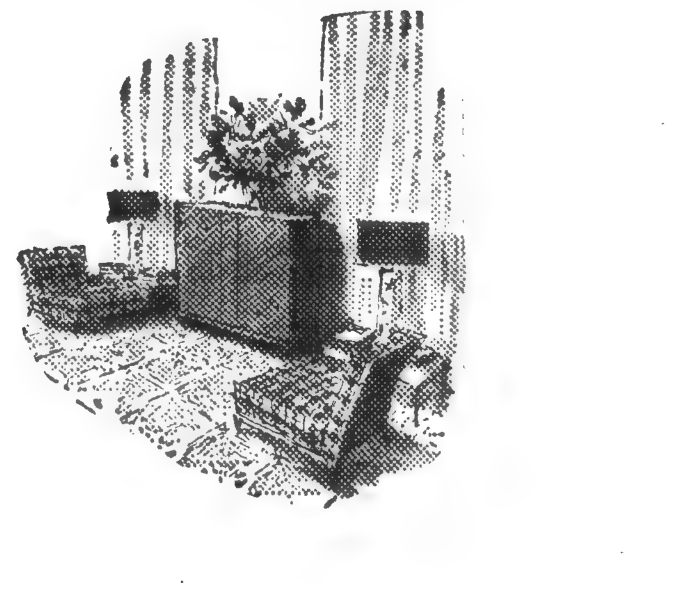
This Clipping From
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD-TIMES

AUG 15 1948

Debussy, Brahms Works Given at Tanglewood

LENOX, Aug. 14 (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra with Robert Shaw as guest conductor presented Debussy's "Blessed Damozel" and Brahms' "Requiem" tonight before an appreciative crowd of 8,300 at Tanglewood's Berkshire music festival.

Ellen Faull and Eunice Alberts were soloists for the first presentation: The Berkshire chorus with Frances Yeend, soprano, and James Pease, bass, as soloists featured the Brahms' "Requiem."



THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

CORDIALLY INVITES YOU TO A DEMONSTRATION OF THE

RCA VICTOR Berkshire

SERIES

OF HIGH FIDELITY RADIO-TELEVISION PHONOGRAPHS

EXHIBITION ROOM
MAIN ENTRANCE
TANGLEWOOD

BENEFIT
BERKSHIRE MUSIC CENTER
SCHOLARSHIP FUND

Open daily until August 15, 1948

Cir. (D 203,600)

This Clipping From
NEW ORLEANS, LA.
TIMES-PICAYUNE-STATES

AUG 15 1948

Crowds Hear Selections at Berkshire Music Festival

BY WALTER S. JENKINS
(Special to The Times-Picayune)

Pittsfield, Mass.—Two important musical events opened the last week of the Berkshire Music Festival. Tuesday night, the Boston Symphony orchestra, under the direction of Dr. Koussevitsky, presented an all-Tschaikowsky concert, and Wednesday night, the opera department gave a performance of Rossini's early opera, "The Turk in Italy," the first American performance since 1840.

Tuesday night's concert attracted the largest of the sesaon's audiences, not only because of Dr. Koussevitsky's reputation as an interpreter of Tschaikowsky, but because the evening's soloist was Seymour Lipkin, pianist, who earlier in the year won the coveted Rachmaninoff award for young pianists. Some 11,000 persons filled the spacious music shed and the surrounding lawns to hear the Sixth Symphony, the B Flat Minor Concerto and the 1812 Overture.

Despite the magnificant playing of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, one could not disregard the criticisms levelled at the judges for choosing Mr. Lipkin as winner of the most important award, for despite his many excellent qualities as a pianist, he lacked the maturity one would expect to find in a professional artist. It was not until the last movement of the concerto that the soloist achieved sufficient poise to be artistically impressive.

If, in certain previous performances of the overture, cannons were used to describe the battle scene, there was little need for their use in Tuesday's performance, so perfect are the acoustics of the huge music shell. The battery of timpany and bass drums was of suffiicent power to provide any illusion of battle which Tschaikowsky intended.

Boris Goldowsky has been a pioneer in recent years reviving operas which have long reached their natural death and which have had little interest, except to music students. But in his revivals he has aided in filling a wide gap in the understanding of audiences who know only the ripened fruits of operatic composers. "Turk in Italy" is an excellent example of an opera which presages the Rossini "The Barber of Seville" and an understanding of "The Barber" is enhanced by first hand observation of an early attempt at opera writing on the part of Rossini.

Among the cast whom New Orleanians will remember is James Pease, who made several impressive appearances in this city. He sang the role of the poet, displaying not only a splendid voice but an improvement in his sense of the theater. Other singers in the cast toward whom impressarios should turn their attention were Adele Addison, soprano, and David Lloyd, tenor, both of whom would be valuable additions to our own company.

Subsequent concerts this week included one Thursday night by the Boston Symphony orchestra under the baton of Leonard Bernstein, Saturday's concert directed by Robert Shaw, programming Debussy's Blessed Damozel and the Brahms Requiem and the final concert on Sunday afternoon, conducted by Dr. Koussevitsky.

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 15 1948

Final Concert To Be Given At Tanglewood

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 14—(AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra with Robert Shaw as guest conductor presented Debussy's "Blessed Damozel" and Brahms' "Requiem" tonight before an appreciative crowd of 8,300 at Tanglewood's Berkshire Music Festival.

Ellen Faull and Eunice Alberts were soloists for the first presentation. The Berkshire chorus with Frances Yeend, soprano, and James Pease, Bass, as soloists featured the Brahms requiem.

In the afternoon, Gregor Piatigorsky, noted cellist and head of the chamber music department at the music center here, introduced a new sonata written for him last spring by Paul Hinesmith.

Piatigorsky, a faculty member of the Curtis Institute in Philadelphia, included in his program selections from Beethoven and Schumann.

The 11th season of the Berkshire festival will end tomorrow when Dr. Serge Koussevitzky returns to the podium to lead the orchestra in Beethoven's Symphony No. 3 Eroica and Sibelius Symphony in D Major.

This Clipping From JACKSON, MISS.
NEWS

AUG 15 1948

Local Musician Plays in Orchestra At Music Center

Theodore C. Russell, conductor and director of the Jackson Symphony Orchestra is playing with the Department II Orchestra at Tanglewood the Berkshire Music Center in Lenox, Mass., where he has been since the first of July, he writes in a letter to friends in Jackson.

Participation in this group is permitted only for the best players, and a concert is given every Friday night.

Rehearsal occupies three hours each morning, and there is a different faculty conductor each week. Mr. Russell has been playing under the direction of such famous conductors as: Leonard Bernstein. the Berkshire Music Center in Serge Koussevitsky (who initiated 1940); Richard Burgin concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra; Carvalho and Copland.

Besides having the distinction of playing in the Department II Orchestra Mr. Russell has been attending a class for conductors each afternoon and playing chamber music for an hour and a half each day.

Mr. Russell's letter states: "I am looking forward to bringing back as much as I can in the way of knowledge and experience, . .in anticipation of a successful 1948-1949 season for the Jackson Symphony Orchestra."

CHORUS IS HEARD WITH SYMPHONY IN BRAHMS' REQUIEM

Orchestra Also Presents Debussy's 'Blessed Damozel' Before Audience of 8300 at Tanglewood

Lenox, Aug. 14 (AP)—The Boston Symphony with Robert Shaw as guest conductor presented Debussy's "Blessed Damozel" and Brahms' Requiem tonight before an appreciative crowd of 8300 at Tanglewood's Berkshire Music Festival.

Are Soloists

Ellen Faull and Eunice Alberts were soloists for the first presentation. The Berkshire Chorus with Frances Yeend, soprano, and James Pease, bass, as soloists featured the Brahms Requiem.

In the afternoon, Gregor Piatigorsky, noted cellist and head of the chamber music department at the music center here, introduced a new sonata written for him last spring by Paul Hinesmith.

Piatigorsky, a faculty member of the Curtis Institute in Philadelphia, included in his program selections from Beethoven and Schumann.

Season to End

The 11th season of the Berkshire Festival will end tomorrow when Dr. Serge Koussevitzky returns to the podium to lead the orchestra in Beethoven's Symphony No. 3 Eroica and Sibelius Symphony in D Major.

This Clipping From
SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH
DESERET NEWS

AUG 15 1948

The Berkshires Interest W. L. Maxwell

I THOUGHT YOU might be interested in one or two of the things that are happening here at the Music Center.

In the past week we have heard commendable performances from two of our Utah girls. On July 22 in the Theater-Concert Hall we witnessed a most delightful evening of opera scenes. These were put on by the opera department under the direction of Boris Goldovsky of the New England Conservatory.

THE OPENING SCENE was that of Pergolesi's "Livietta and Tracollo." Peggy Lee Whiting of Provo gave a charming interpretation of Livietta. The clever story has to do with two lovers who in comic bits attempt to outwit each other into believing they are of better standing than is really the case. However, through several tricks of fate, they eventually find out the truth of the situation and discover that they love each other for their true selves. Peggy's sprightly acting captivated the audience and she was called back for several curtain calls, which was something for the experienced eyes before she was performing.

Rather fittingly for us on July 24 was the celebration at Tanglewood for the dedication of the "Little Red House" by the National Federation of Music Clubs. This is the restoration of the little home where Nathaniel Hawthorne wrote "The House of Seven Gables," "Tanglewood Tales" and others of his masterpieces. The music federation has rebuilt the house for practice rooms for students at Tanglewood.

AFTER THE DEDICATION ceremony, in which Koussevitzky participated, there was a lovely program given by the federation scholarship students. LuCretia Ferre sang well and was congratulated by some of the notable people there.

Richard Condie, who is here attending the Center, and I attend many classes together and gather up all the significant points we can find.

THERE IS A CONCERT nearly every night and sometimes we have them in the afternoons as well. Many times it seems well worth the while to have made the trip back here for just one of the individual concerts. The Juilliard String Quartet has done some outstanding work in their Bartok concerts. Of course the Boston Symphony is excellent. Koussevitsky is tremendous.

I'm studying choral work under Robert Shaw and Hugh Ross. They are both outstanding but quite different in their approaches. I've gone to New York twice with Shaw to attend his rehearsals and broadcast. He is a very pleasant fellow and quite easy to talk to.

THERE WAS AN interest in Madrigals which showed on the first day of arrival. I've been kept busy directing groups of these in the past three weeks. It is quite interesting to find who those are who come to sing. They are people from Juilliard, New England Conservatory, NBC, New York churches and many other places of note. The association with them is stimulating. We get together and have a grand time.

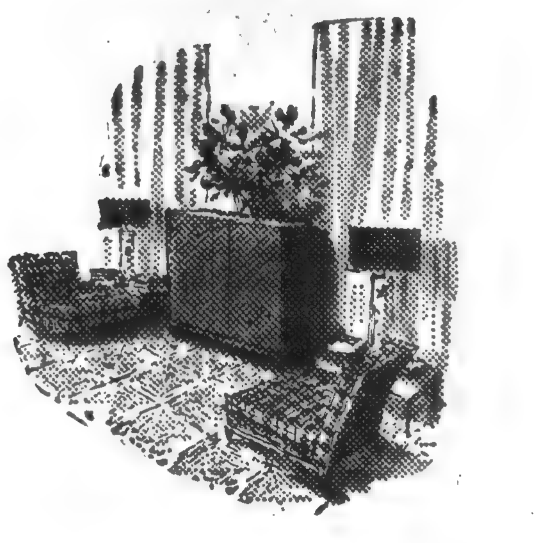
Tanglewood is a "Mecca" for the musicians. It is a place where one can drink in the beauties of the Art.

THE SETTING is perfect in the New England Berkshires. As the name implies, it is heavily wooded. Below the Tanglewood estate is a beautiful lake nestled down in the Stockbridge bowl.

Surrounding the lake are lovely homes and in the distance are church spires jutting up from the trees as the only indication of another quaint New England village. The estate itself is lovely in its landscape. Formal gardens cover part of the place.

Yours,
LeGrand.

[272]



THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

CORDIALLY INVITES YOU TO A DEMONSTRATION OF THE

RCA VICTOR Berkshire

SERIES

OF HIGH FIDELITY RADIO-TELEVISION PHONOGRAPHS

EXHIBITION ROOM
MAIN ENTRANCE
TANGLEWOOD

BENEFIT
BERKSHIRE MUSIC CENTER
SCHOLARSHIP FUND

Open daily until August 15, 1948

This Clipping From
NEW ORLEANS, LA.
TIMES-PICAYUNE-STATES

AUG 15 1948

Crowds Hear Selections at Berkshire Music Festival

BY WALTER S. JENKINS
(Special to The Times-Picayune)

Pittsfield, Mass.—Two important musical events opened the last week of the Berkshire Music Festival. Tuesday night, the Boston Symphony orchestra, under the direction of Dr. Koussevitsky, presented an all-Tschaikowsky concert, and Wednesday night, the opera department gave a performance of Rossini's early opera, "The Turk in Italy," the first American performance since 1840.

Tuesday night's concert attracted the largest of the sesaon's audiences, not only because of Dr. Koussevitsky's reputation as an interpreter of Tschaikowsky, but because the evening's soloist was Seymour Lipkin, pianist, who earlier in the year won the coveted Rachmaninoff award for young pianists. Some 11,000 persons filled the spacious music shed and the surrounding lawns to hear the Sixth Symphony, the B Flat Minor Concerto and the 1812 Overture.

Despite the magnificant playing of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, one could not disregard the criticisms levelled at the judges for choosing Mr. Lipkin as winner of the most important award, for despite his many excellent qualities as a pianist, he lacked the maturity one would expect to find in a professional artist. It was not until the last movement of the concerto that the soloist achieved sufficient poise to be artistically impressive.

If, in certain previous performances of the overture, cannons were used to describe the battle scene, there was little need for their use in Tuesday's performance, so perfect are the acoustics of the huge music shell. The battery of timpany and bass drums was of suffiicent power to provide any illusion of battle which Tschaikowsky intended.

Boris Goldowsky has been a pioneer in recent years reviving operas which have long reached their natural death and which have had little interest, except to music students. But in his revivals he has aided in filling a wide gap in the understanding of audiences who know only the ripened fruits of operatic composers. "Turk in Italy" is an excellent example of an opera which presages the Rossini "The Barber of Seville" and an understanding of "The Barber" is enhanced by first hand observation of an early attempt at opera writing on the part of Rossini.

Among the cast whom New Orleanians will remember is James Pease, who made several impressive appearances in this city. He sang the role of the poet, displaying not only a splendid voice but an improvement in his sense of the theater. Other singers in the cast toward whom impressarios should turn their attention were Adele Addison, soprano, and David Lloyd, tenor, both of whom would be valuable additions to our own company.

Subsequent concerts this week included one Thursday night by the Boston Symphony orchestra under the baton of Leonard Bernstein. Saturday's concert directed by Robert Shaw, programming Debussy's Blessed Damozel and the Brahms Requiem and the final concert on Sunday afternoon, conducted by Dr. Koussevitsky.

This Clipping From
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 15 1948

Final Concert To Be Given At Tanglewood

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 14—(AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra with Robert Shaw as guest conductor presented Debussy's "Blessed Damozel" and Brahms' "Requiem" tonight before an appreciative crowd of 8,300 at Tanglewood's Berkshire Music Festival.

Ellen Faull and Eunice Alberts were soloists for the first presentation. The Berkshire chorus with Frances Yeend, soprano, and James Pease, Bass, as soloists featured the Brahms requiem.

In the afternoon, Gregor Piatigorsky, noted cellist and head of the chamber music department at the music center here, introduced a new sonata written for him last spring by Paul Hinesmith.

Piatigorsky, a faculty member of the Curtis Institute in Philadelphia, included in his program selections from Beethoven and Schumann.

The 11th season of the Berkshire festival will end tomorrow when Dr. Serge Koussevitzky returns to the podium to lead the orchestra in Beethoven's Symphony No. 3 Eroica and Sibelius Symphony in D Major.

This Clipping From JACKSON, MISS.
NEWS

AUG 15 1948

Local Musician Plays in Orchestra At Music Center

Theodore C. Russell, conductor and director of the Jackson Symphony Orchestra is playing with the Department II Orchestra at Tanglewood the Berkshire Music Center in Lenox, Mass., where he has been since the first of July, he writes in a letter to friends in Jackson.

Participation in this group is permitted only for the best players, and a concert is given every Friday night.

Rehearsal occupies three hours each morning, and there is a different faculty conductor each week. Mr. Russell has been playing under the direction of such famous conductors as: Leonard Bernstein. the Berkshire Music Center in Serge Koussevitsky (who initiated 1940); Richard Burgin concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra; Carvalho and Copland.

Besides having the distinction of playing in the Department II Orchestra Mr. Russell has been attending a class for conductors each afternoon and playing chamber music for an hour and a half each day.

Mr. Russell's letter states: "I am looking forward to bringing back as much as I can in the way of knowledge and experience . . in anticipation of a successful 1948-1949 season for the Jackson Symphony Orchestra."

CHORUS IS HEARD WITH SYMPHONY IN BRAHMS' REQUIEM

Springfield Republican

Orchestra Also Presents Debussy's 'Blessed Damozel' Before Audience of 8300 at Tanglewood

Aug 15

Lenox, Aug. 14 (AP)—The Boston Symphony with Robert Shaw as guest conductor presented Debussy's "Blessed Damozel" and Brahms' Requiem tonight before an appreciative crowd of 8300 at Tanglewood's Berkshire Music Festival.

Are Soloists

Ellen Faull and Eunice Alberts were soloists for the first presentation. The Berkshire Chorus with Frances Yeend, soprano, and James Pease, bass, as soloists featured the Brahms Requiem.

In the afternoon, Gregor Piatigorsky, noted cellist and head of the chamber music department at the music center here, introduced a new sonata written for him last spring by Paul Hinesmith.

Piatigorsky, a faculty member of the Curtis Institute in Philadelphia, included in his program selections from Beethoven and Schumann.

Season to End

The 11th season of the Berkshire Festival will end tomorrow when Dr. Serge Koussevitzky returns to the podium to lead the orchestra in Beethoven's Symphony No. 3 Eroica and Sibelius Symphony in D Major.

This Clipping From
SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH
DESERET NEWS

AUG 15 1948

The Berkshires Interest W. L. Maxwell

I THOUGHT YOU might be interested in one or two of the things that are happening here at the Music Center.

In the past week we have heard commendable performances from two of our Utah girls. On July 22 in the Theater-Concert Hall we witnessed a most delightful evening of opera scenes. These were put on by the opera department under the direction of Boris Goldovsky of the New England Conservatory.

THE OPENING SCENE was that of Pergolesi's "Livietta and Tracollo." Peggy Lee Whiting of Provo gave a charming interpretation of Livietta. The clever story has to do with two lovers who in comic bits attempt to outwit each other into believing they are of better standing than is really the case. However, through several tricks of fate, they eventually find out the truth of the situation and discover that they love each other for their true selves. Peggy's sprightly acting captivated the audience and she was called back for several curtain calls, which was something for the experienced eyes before she was performing.

Rather fittingly for us on July 24 was the celebration at Tanglewood for the dedication of the "Little Red House" by the National Federation of Music Clubs. This is the restoration of the little home where Nathaniel Hawthorne wrote "The House of Seven Gables," "Tanglewood Tales" and others of his masterpieces. The music federation has rebuilt the house for practice rooms for students at Tanglewood.

AFTER THE DEDICATION ceremony, in which Koussevitzky participated, there was a lovely program given by the federation scholarship students. LuCretia Ferre sang well and was congratulated by some of the notable people there.

Richard Condie, who is here attending the Center, and I attend many classes together and gather up all the significant points we can find.

THERE IS A CONCERT nearly every night and sometimes we have them in the afternoons as well. Many times it seems well worth the while to have made the trip back here for just one of the individual concerts. The Juilliard String Quartet has done some outstanding work in their Bartok concerts. Of course the Boston Symphony is excellent. Koussevitsky is tremendous.

I'm studying choral work under Robert Shaw and Hugh Ross. They are both outstanding but quite different in their approaches. I've gone to New York twice with Shaw to attend his rehearsals and broadcast. He is a very pleasant fellow and quite easy to talk to.

THERE WAS AN interest in Madrigals which showed on the first day of arrival. I've been kept busy directing groups of these in the past three weeks. It is quite interesting to find who those are who come to sing. They are people from Juilliard, New England Conservatory, NBC, New York churches and many other places of note. The association with them is stimulating. We get together and have a grand time.

Tanglewood is a "Mecca" for the musicians. It is a place where one can drink in the beauties of the Art.

THE SETTING is perfect in the New England Berkshires. As the name implies, it is heavily wooded. Below the Tanglewood estate is a beautiful lake nestled down in the Stockbridge bowl.

Surrounding the lake are lovely homes and in the distance are church spires jutting up from the trees as the only indication of another quaint New England village. The estate itself is lovely in its landscape. Formal gardens cover part of the place.

Yours,
LeGrand.

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

15 1948

FESTIVAL CROWDS CUT BY SHOWERS

By RAYMOND MORIN

LENOX, Sunday—Great expectations for record-breaking attendance at the closing series of Berkshire Music Festival concerts at Tanglewood were shattered Thursday night and ~~last~~ night by persistent showers.

Thursday night's concert, a program of Russian scores conducted by Leonard Bernstein, would normally have attracted nearly double the 6500 attendance.

Last night there was an attendance of 8500. The shed seats 6000, but the rest of the audience was required to sit or stand about on the grounds—not a pleasant prospect after a day of rain. The general admission to grounds being two dollars, this has been expensive rain for the Boston Symphony, which loses from $5000 to $8000 in the event of heavy downpour.

Robert Shaw made his one and only Berkshire Festival appearance this Summer in last night's concert. A few days ago, however, he conducted the Berkshire Center students in Bach's "St. Matthew's Passion."

Typical Shaw Night

The incomparable young American choral conductor interpreted two scores with Boston Symphony; the Festival chorus; Ellen Faull and Frances Yeend, Sopranos; Eunice Alberts, con-

They were Bebussy's lyric poem "The Blessed Damozel," and Brahms' "A German Requiem."

This was a typical Robert Shaw night, as you will discover if you see him in the forthcoming Civic Music series. Having seen him work many times, and talked with him about his work as many more, I have been trying to arrive at a theory to explain just how he seems to go on where most other choral conductors leave off.

Last night's concert was excellent for theorizing. The Debussy being a tenderly expressive score, filled with the composer's suave, polished nuance of instrumental coloring; and the Brahms—fervent, holy statements, told with compelling but simple music.

Beautiful Execution

One of the most conspicuous virtues in Shaw's art is the absolute complement he makes between text and music. To most conductors this is solely and purely a problem in phonetics, diction, and oral phrase. For me, the top moment was the beautiful chorus, "How Lovely Is Thy Dwelling Place," from the Brahms score.

Here Shaw did not strive only for lovely words through expressive intonation. The technical methods were there to see. But in spite of them one had the feeling that this was a prayer being sung, instead of a choral performance with holy words.

The preceding chorus, "Behold, All Flesh Is As The Grass . . ." was also beautiful ensemble execution, but the important thing was the strong current of consolation, resignation, and hope that pervaded and that really captured the imagination.

Chorus Effective

So many times when listening to mixed choruses one's points of interest are the very things that are made comparatively irrelevant by Shaw — range from soprano to bass, balances between choirs, precision of attacks, unanimity of phrase, etc.

Last night, Shaw made of the chorus a single instrument or a group of instruments at will. They assumed the tonal colorings of a vocal orchestra. They performed not as individuals but as contributing forces. Their common ground was the messages they shared through the written texts.

No less effective was the Debussy score to Rossetti's poem. The program notes declared that Sarrazin's French translation did not preserve the special antique simplicity of the original, and the English translation is certainly a wider departure, but the French in which it was sung still retained much of the pure and delicate shading of the poem.

Combined Choruses

The women's chorus gave the Debussy music delicate beauty steeped in word meanings. The combined men's and women's choruses for the Brahms sang with virility and admirably balanced results.

In his performance here last year, Shaw assumed a conservative attitude toward the orchestra. He has obviously increased his knowledge of the instruments, because while they played well last year (notably in the Bach "Cantata, No. 50," this time they seemed to benefit from increased baton support.

Although Miss Faull evidenced weakness in her low range and in phrase conclusions, her high tones, which soared above the full orchestral background, were rich and penetrating. Her musicianship throughout was excellent and most noteworthy were sensitive changes of timbre between phrases. In her role of "The Damozel" she demonstrated a good knowledge of French style.

Festival Ends Today

Miss Alberts unfortunately possesses a voice of insufficient body to transcend the orchestral coloring of the Debussy score. There were moments of good resonance but the score of the narrator can be far more effective than Miss Alberts made it.

Soloists for the Brahms "Requiem" were Miss Yeend and Mr. Pease. The latter gave his best performance of several during the festival. In the solo, "Lord, Make Me Know the Measure of My Days," there was a full, unfailing quality that made for conviction. Mr. Shaw suppressed the background to the soloist's advantage.

Miss Yeend sang with pure, firm tone, and a pleasant quality of lyricism. Most attractive was her calm, persuasive transmission of the text.

This great festival will come to a close this afternoon. Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony will be heard in two important works — Beethoven's "Symphony No. 3 (Eroica) in E Flat Major," and "Symphony No. 2, In D Major, Opus 43" by Jean Sibelius.

10A Springfield Repub

Youthful Musicians Score In Concerts at Tanglewood

Conductors DeCarvalho and Bernstein, Pianist Seymour Lipkin and Young Singers in Rossini Opera Register Personal Triumphs in Final Week

By VICTOR PRAHL

The accent was on youth during the final week of concerts at Tanglewood and Dr. Koussevitzky relaxed comfortably in his box seat while three of his young assistants took over for a series of concerts. In addition there was a remarkable demonstration of what can really be done in the way of making an opera a live show, and the debut of a 21-year-old pianist destined to a fine career.

Eleazar de Carvalho, young Brazilian conductor, has been heard with the student orchestra during the last two seasons but Sunday afternoon marked his debut at Tanglewood conducting the Boston Symphony. He showed his metal immediately in a gripping performance of the "Fantastic Symphony" by Berlioz. This work which can be tedious and drawn out was vital, vivid and arresting throughout its five movements.

Gentle Gestures

Mr. Carvalho is a handsome conductor and pleasant to watch. Music seems to well from his stocky torso and he succeeds in achieving the desired result from his men without much fuss His gestures are soft and gentle, more like a sculptor caressing his clay than the motions of the average conductor. There was however, plenty of fire and punch in the Spanish rhythms of Manuel de Falla's ballet "El Amor Brujo" and the dances from Jose Siqueira's "Nordestina Suite." But Mr. Carvalho is not of the prima-dona school. Obviously his intention is to give the music a chance and this he achieves with the greatest economy of means. The reaction of the audience was highly enthusiastic.

Carol Brice appearing for the second time on this series sang the solos in the de Falla ballet, her gorgeous chest tones adding the primative folk quality essential to the work's full expression. Mr. Carvalho conducted the entire program without score and Miss Brice, as is her habit, sang from memory.

This season's offering from the opera department, Rossini's "The Turk in Italy" produced for the first time on Monday night, was an unqualified success. Its realization was a feather in the cap of Boris Goldovsky and his associates for the opera's restoration as presented, was largely their creation and without doubt an improvement on the original. The amusing story was told in perfect English, the sets and costumes were colorful, the acting of professional caliber and all of the voices excellent. The whole production was in good taste and served forth with youthful exuberance. The opera in its present state should find a permanent place in the repertoire of progressive opera companies.

Adele Addison Acts Well

June Gardner (Fiorilla) has an unusual voice rather tremulous of tone but capable of exceptional clarity in the execution of florid airs, and remarkably full for a coloratura. Her voice rang out clearly over the chorus and orchestra in the ensemble numbers. Adele Addison of Springfield was suited perfectly to the role of Zaida, the gypsy. She was picturesque, acted well, and her personal quality of voice lent warmth to the part. Francis Barnard (thepoet) is a singing actor in the true Mozart tradition, a master of the light with a perfect enunciation and a fine lyric baritone. He is a born Don Giovanni.

Marshall Heinbaugh was a rich voiced, ardent, philandering Turk, David Llyod (the lover) sang the tenor airs with a fine feeling for their lyricism, and Arthur Schoep brought humor and musicality to the role of Geronio, the husband. The chorus sang as one, with a fresh, buoyant tone and the orchestra played with a balanced restraint that gave this light rococo score its full scope. It was Boris Goldovsky's most creditable achievement up to date.

Young Pianist Scores

Seymour Lipkin, a student in the conducting class at the Center and an apprentice conductor of the Cleveland Symphony, was soloist in the Tchaikowsky piano concerto on Tuesday night. He is amazingly well equipped pianistically but it was his sound musicianship and true innate musicality that gave this old battle horse renewed vigor. There was a sweeping breadth, an understanding conception of the work as a whole, and a balanced integration of piano and orchestra.

He was impressively convincing with his powerful chords of the opening measures, his sure control in change of tempi, sensitive interweaving of cross rhythms with the orchestra and the musical interplay throughout. We have never heard the waltz of the second movement taken at such speed but it was music and not mere display. Mr. Lipkin is a small man but his playing is big. It has all the requisite qualities, musicality, beauty of tone, technical mastery and virtuosity. One can only conclude that the decision of the judges in the Rachmaninoff piano award was a just one.

His success with the audience was tremendous. The prolonged applause was surpassed only by the ovation given Dr. Koussevitzky after his rousing performance of the "1812 Overture." Nor can this great conductor's performance of the "Pathetique," even though familiar be taken casually. It was electrifying.

Youth triumphed further on Thursday night when Leonard Bernstein conducted the complete version of Stravinsky's "Petrouchka" and the "Fifth" by Shostakovich. This dynamic conductor, who approaches the modern school with such a comprehensive understanding, was in top form, rousing the audience to cheers with his dramatic reading of these two important works. And t night still another young conductor finally had his big opportunity in two choral works, Brahm's "Requiem" and Debussy's "Blessed Damozel." What must be recorded as the most successful year in the history of the Berkshire Center will end this afternoon with Dr. Koussevitzky conducting two great symphonies, Beethoven's "Eroica" and the "Second" by Sibelius.

NEW RECORDINGS

This Clipping From
SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH
DESERET NEWS

LuCretia Ferre Finds Humor At 'Tanglewood'

. . . I AM AT THE orchestra rehearsal of Gretchaninoff's Marriage" and am waiting for my cue. You know how these beginning rehearsals are — the orchestra gets most of the work-out and you wait. We perform it on Sunday. I don't know of how much interest this will be, but I thought you might like to know what goes on behind the scenes here at Tanglewood.

The weeks are really flying by. There is always so much to do. We begin at 9 every morning (the opera department is the only one that holds forth on Saturday, also). From 9 to 12:15 or 12:30 we coach and stage; 12:30 to 1:30, lunch; 1:30 to 3:30 or 4, more staging, then a lecture by Mr. Goldovsky, after which I have St. John Passion rehearsal three times a week from 4:30 to 5:30 with Bob Shaw.

ONCE A WEEK we try to stick in an evening of staging. Monday night a forum is conducted on all types of questions. Usually Leonard Bernstein is the moderator.

Tuesday is Boston Symphony Orchestra concert; ~~Wednesday~~; Schubert concert; Thursday, Boston Symphony; Friday, Dept. II orchestra with three student conductors (very fine) and with Bernstin, Carvalho and Bergen. On Saturday another Boston Symphony, also on Sunday. In between, different departments perform. Last Thursday night we had our first opera series—I sang in "Faust" and "La Traviata." Saturday, July 24, I sang in a recital sponsored by the National Federation.

That, in a nut shell, is the schedule.

TANGLEWOOD is beautiful. There is nothing modern about the buildings. When shed, barn or garage is mentioned, they mean just that. We start out in the barn just outside the gates and down the hill. It is a big red barn with three small rooms between the top floor and the basement. The basement is just a dirt floor.

The shed is huge, with a covering over stage and audience. The theater is a wooden structure with half dirt and half cement floor. The garage is a structure with 27 rooms and a piano in every room. The chamber music hall and practice stage are the same type of structure as the garage.

THE LAKE IS LOCATED about a mile from the main house in Tanglewood. Students are always running down for a swim. Mr. Goldovsky very often, when the heat is really bad, will announce that the lecture for today will be at the lake, so we all trip down to the lake and have our opera in the water.

The lectures are most interesting and Mr. G is a walking encyclopedia on opera. The worst thing any singer here can be called or spoken of is that he or she "acts like an opera singer." He is very strict and an avid advocate of English opera. A great many of the opera scenes we are giving are his translations of the language operas into English. He makes no cuts, no transpositions. Scores are sung just as written. He accepts no authority for either except the composer himself. And if the high B-flat at the end of Micaela's aria in "Carmen" is sung in his hearing, he really "blows his top," because it is not in the original score.

HIS LECTURES CONTAIN unusual items, such as nonsense phrases in operas, phrases that through cuts and years of printing don't fit in with the rest of the opera. Which is all very interesting, since most people have never noticed them. . . .

Enough for opera. It was Koussie's (Dr. Koussevitzky is called Koussie for short here) birthday yesterday. Leonard Bernstein sang the St. Louis Blues with words of his own about the doctor, while conductors provided the boogie accompaniment.

The place sounds like a mad house between chamber music, two orchestras, choral groups and the opera going at once. One would think a straight-jacket would be needed.

UNDER A PINE or behind a bush you can always run across some one vocalizing or practicing some instrument. And at night you get the same thing. There are practice rooms in the dormitory and from the time you get home till 10:30 you can hear everything but tap dancing. My roommate was doing a lot of practicing on her violin one day and some one came up and tacked a practice schedule on the door of our room.

Here it is two or three days later. Am now again waiting for rehearsal. This time for "Pique Dame." Goes on tomorrow. (If you can read this you should be given a medal. You will notice I am writing on the back of a six-page mimeographed copy of Koussie's opening address at the Berkshires this year.) Heard a thrilling performance last night of the Boston Symphony—Bach's Overture in D Major, a Hindemith work and Beethoven's Fifth Symphony.

Sincerely,
LuCretia

This Clipping From DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS

AUG 15 1948

NOTEBOOK

Stravinsky "Oedipus" Performed

By FRANCIS D. PERKINS

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 14.—Stravinsky's opera oratorio "Oedipus Rex" completed the first concert of the Berkshire festival's second series by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky's direction. David Lloyd sang the title role and Carol Brice as Jocasta. What with the weather, the usual contingent of listeners on the lawn was absent, but the music shed was filled by an audience of 6,300

"Oedius Rex" has been heard in New York as straight oratorio, as opera with stationary singers and mobile puppets, and as straight opera. In this last form, it was produced by the Juilliard School a few months ago, and therefore does not need further extensive discussion. The performance here with James Pease tripling as Creon, Tiresias and the Messenger and Glenn Schnittke as the Shepherd completing the cast, and with Wesley Addy as the narrator, was the first in these festivals. This is the form in which "Oedipus" was first introduced to America by Dr. Koussevitzky and the Bostonians twenty years ago.

Clipping From

YORK TIMES, SUNDAY, AUGUST 8, 1

Entrance Gate Without Chill at Tanglewood

Globe Aug 15th

An entrance gate is usually a window where you pay your fee and then go through a hole in a fence. At Tanglewood a way has been found to take the chill off this. It is a reception room walled with glass, free of access, directly beside the ticket window and entrance gate, leaving an unobstructed view of what you are buying on the other side of the fence with your ticket money. It is a vestibule with "Welcome" on the doormat.

Eliel Saarinen, the eminent Finnish architect, now resident in this country, designed it. The structure is simplicity itself—glass, steel, and a little wood, a roof and rainshed on slender stanchions, with brilliant overhead lighting at night from lamps under heavy glass squares in the ceiling. A touch of color is added by painting the steel window frames a powder blue.

The vestibule is also a show window—a show window, that is, into which the customer can step and sample the ware for sale. The ware is music. There is a grand pianoforte on which students at this, the Berkshire Music Center, give free recitals; there are two of the magnificent new phonographs (without a trace of needle-whirr) called "Tanglewood edition," and a library of record albums with an attendant to put them on the machine.

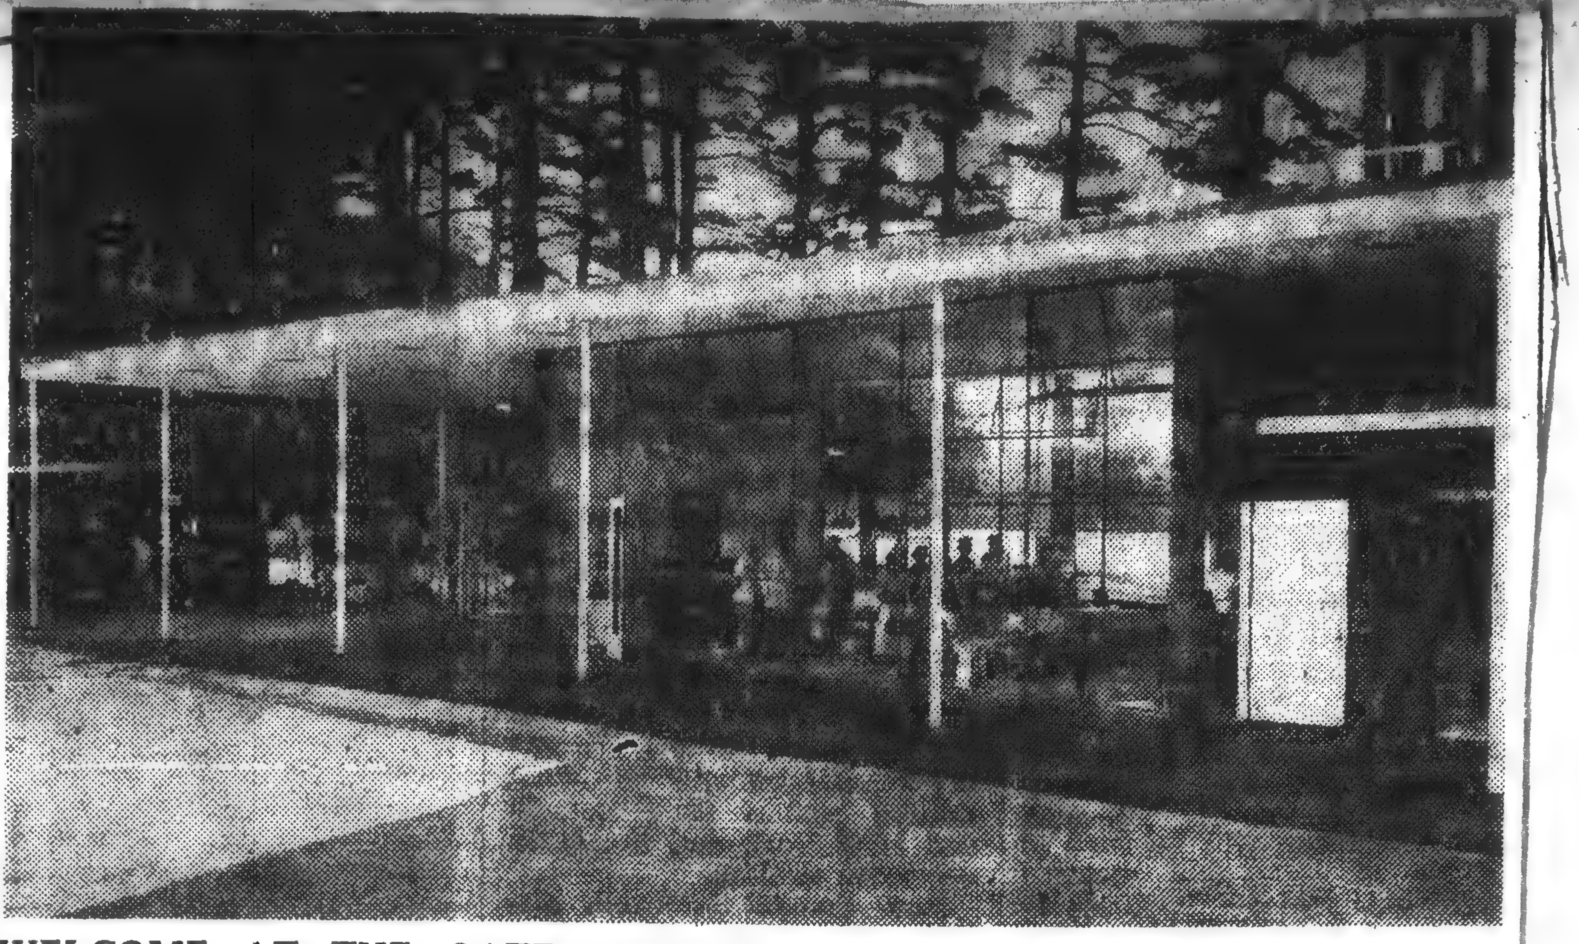
Schumann's pianoforte concerto was pealing into this glass room and spilling out through its open doors and windows into the grounds on one side and on the other into the automobile parking lot. Two big comfortable settees upholstered in light green, a low long table carrying a bowl filled daily with fresh flowers, and a collection of excellent paintings of New England landscapes by contemporary artists, these for sale, add to the amenities of the welcome.

Adjoining this glass room is the Tanglewood music store, an almost equally happy design. Its doors are sliding screens of a height from ground to roof, which can be pushed back, thus opening the whole store to light and air, or in rain and wind closed entirely. Inside, where you buy music, books about music, pocket scores, phonograph records, souvenirs, booklets and picture postal cards, all the counters are mounted on casters, so that they can be wheeled about to suit the convenience of customers and salesmen. That unit, too, has been kept to stark simplicity, and the very simplicity is itself aesthetic.

Mr. Saarinen was in large part the architect of the big Music Shed where the main orchestral concerts are performed, he designed entirely the smaller opera-theatre, and it is probable that he will occupy the position of Architect Designate for Tanglewood as new buildings are added.

This vestibule—cheerful, entertaining, hospitable—is an idea which other institutions might like to copy. It is a genuine welcome at the gate.

L. P.



WELCOME AT THE GATE—The new glass vestibule at the entrance to Tanglewood, designed by Eliel Saarinen, an original idea which other institutions might like to copy.

"Oedipus" ranks among Stravinsky's major masterpieces; the cumulative effect of the music is impressive. It fulfills the composer's intentions; there is dignity and a certain remoteness, a stylization appropriate to a modern presentation of a universally known classic legend, and yet the emotions of the situation and characters are conveyed. One is conscious of the inexorable fate which so often pervades Greek tragedy, wreaking woes for which none of those involved are personally responsible.

Another factor is the dominating dark hues of the score with its chorus, varied indeed by measures of brighter color in the orchestra, by passages in which personal emotion comes to the front in the vocal solos, or by the plangent brass which announces the tragic narrative of death near the close.

* * *

From time to time, indeed, this listener was also conscious of a sense of length and repetition which might be less apparent in a stage performance, but the prevalent impression was one of music which combined projection of the inevitability of the story with expressive sympathy for those concerned in it.

The men's chorus trained by Hugh Ross sang admirably with spirit and expressiveness; the orchestra was in excellent form and there was a memorable co-ordination, in tonal proportion and in expressive understanding, between the choral and instrumental ensembles, under a conductor long acquainted with this music who knows this score both externally and inwardly. (Copyright, 1948, by The New York Tribune, Inc.)

This Clipping From SEATTLE, WASH.
TIMES

AUG [illegible]

News About RECORDS

CHARLES MUENCH is a Frenchman largely unknown to American music lovers outside the main centers, although destined to have a big part in our music-making.

He makes his American recording debut by conducting the New York Philharmonic-Symphony in Saint-Saens' "Organ Symphony, No. 3 in C Minor" (Columbia; four 12-in.).

When you've heard the records you understand why the Boston Symphony chose him to succeed its venerable conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. They make it clear there will be no pronounced conductorial changes down Boston way. It would be premature to say he is a younger Koussevitzky, of course. Yet the similarity in approach and style is striking. Anyone habituated to Koussevitzky methods is swathed warmly in the familiar.

There is decided individuality in his conducting, however. A pleasing quality is of bounding energy under a very tight rein—that and a sensitive intelligence in pace and accent. He gives the amiable organ symphony a cheery illumination. The organ part is played by E. Nies-Berger.

●

SPEAKING of Koussevitzky and the Boston—they are represented in the new recordings by Franz Schubert's boyish and naively Mozart-like "Fifth Symphony" (RCA Victor; three 12-in.). If you didn't know better, you might mistake it for Mozart in the latter's phase when he is most like Haydn. The reading is entirely pleasing but the recording is not. It is scratchy and, in places, muffled.

●

A THIRD newly recorded symphony is Sibelius' oft-played and most popular Second, performed by the Philadelphia Orchestra under Eugene Ormandy (Columbia; five 12-in.). It is a nice job, commendable for the depth and poignancy of feeling that has been fully realized from a score jam-packed with it.

This Clipping From JACKSON, TENN.
SUN

AUG 15 1948

Boston Symphony Heard On United Nations Program

The first of two broadcasts presented by the ABC Symphony in conjunction with the United Nations radio program will be heard on Saturday, Aug. 21, at 2:30 p.m., with Thomas K. Sherman as guest conductor.

A program of works by European composers will be heard with Martial Singher, distinguished French baritone of the Metropolitan Opera, as soloist. On the following Saturday a program of American compositions will be presented with Gary Graffman, native pianist, as soloist.

Ben Cohen and Byron Price, assistant Secretaries General of the U.N., will speak on the broadcast, Cohen on Aug. 21 and Price on the second program.

According to Charles C. Barry, ABC vice-president in charge of programs and television, negotiations are under way for ABC next summer to present a series of broadcasts from UN headquarters at Lake Success, L.I. Special speakers will be heard and the music of various member nations presented.

The two current broadcasts, according to Scherman, will be in the nature of curtain raisers to next season's series. Scherman is the regular conductor of the Little Orchestra of New York.

Singher, who has been heard on many ABC broadcasts of the Metropolitan Opera, has chosen several operatic arias, two of them from rarely performed works. Elgar's "Introduction and Allegro" by the ABC Symphony will open the broadcast.

Singher will be heard in the "Trepak" from Moussorgsky's "Songs of Death" and the familiar "Monologue" of Boris from this composer's opera of the same name. In the "Monologue" Boris recounts the results of his reign and the ominous future.

Three of the ten "Legends" of Dvorak will follow. These were originally written by the Bohemian composer as piano duets but were orchestrated in 1881. They are in the idiom of Dvorak's native country. The three to be heard, all from Op. 59, are numbers 2, 3 and 5.

Singher's second group will comprise three selections—the aria of Zurga, "O Nadir Tendre Ami," which opens the third act of Bizet's "The Pearl Fishers"; the "Serenade" of Mephisto from Berloiz' "Damnation of Faust" and an 18th century French song, "Tambourin." The Bizet aria is brooding in color, for Zurga sings of the impending doom of his friend, Nadir and the girl, Leila, with whom both are in love. The "Serenade" is a mocking air in which Mephisto warns Marguerite and Faust.

Scherman will conclude the broadcast with a familiar number, Ravel's "Tombeau de Couperin." He will also conduct the ABC Symphony on the following Saturday.

---

ppics

Koussevitzky's Show

With the performance today of Beethoven's "Eroica" and the second symphony of Sibelius, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will bring to a close another Berkshire Music Festival. Fortunately, however, though he is to retire after one more season as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, he is expected to carry on as presiding genius at Tanglewood. The venerable maestro, now in his 75th year, will appear only on rare occasions as guest conductor at Symphony Hall, but there has been no intimation that he will not go on devoting his summers to the Berkshire Music Center.

This institution is largely of his making. Of course, no one man could do it all, and the Center now specializes in conducting, composition and opera, as well as chamber music, choral singing and public performance, but it's still Koussevitsky's show. The high spots are those brilliant concerts he conducts himself, with all his fascinating animation and soulful interpretation. Agitated or lackadaisical, coaxing or commanding, casting away phrase after familiar phrase as the composition unfolds, or supplicant as a crouching mendicant, he wrings the rapturous music from men and instruments in a manner quite his own.

One of the man's most noteworthy traits is his encouragement of young musicians and contemporary creations. His understanding of the aspirations of youth and his willingness to give modern works a hearing along with those of the old masters will prevent Boston or Berkshire programs ever stagnating as long as he remains director, whoever heppens to be on the podium. After 25 years on the job, a tenure almost twice as long as any predecessor's, Dr. Koussevitzky's retirement as permanent conductor had to come sooner or later, but at least the throngs that respond to Tanglewood's natural and cultural lures can look forward to more of his musical magic and standards of perfection.

THE BOSTON SUNDAY GLOBE—AUGUST 15, 1948

"The Turk in Italy" Is a Good Bet for N. E. Opera Theatre

By CYRUS DURGIN

Boris Goldovsky and the opera department of the Berkshire Music Center have done it again with Rossini's "The Turk in Italy," presented at Tanglewood twice last week. This is a case not of exhuming a neglected serious or comic opera, but of giving new life to a forgotten old piece by tricking it out with a partially new libretto. In this case the treatment seems to have worked nicely.

As a production, "The Turk in Italy" is the best yet put forth by the Berkshire Center. It surpasses "Peter Grimes" as lively stagecraft, and it has more color than last Summer's "Idomeneo." We are now speaking purely in terms of theatre, for both the Britten work, as modern music, and that of Mozart, undoubtedly surpass the score of Rossini, sparkling though it is.

The style of the new production brings up again the question of how opera ought to be done in the United States to give contemporary American audiences a really enjoyable time. Within the limits of musical propriety, Mr. Goldovsky appears to have gone on the theory of making "The Turk" a good show. He strove for a lively stage, broad low comedy where that was essential, and according to his excellent ideas of music-drama, made all his characters act and project words.

Now this is exactly what modern American audiences expect in the theatre—straight drama or musical. They want a good show above all. It doesn't matter how tenuous a plot may be, so long as it is theatrically effective. Mennotti's "Amelia Goes to the Ball," "The Old Maid and the Thief" and "The Telephone" are thin enough, but they make good theatre.

Repeated Words

"The Turk in Italy" in the present version is perhaps too long for a full evening. It might suitably be cut to form a curtain raiser, or half of a double bill. That means losing some of the music, but even so I believe it would be all to the good.

In his revisions of the libretto—which include a truly clever surprise ending—Mr. Goldovsky showed himself well aware of these requirements. The book now has a pleasing streamlined quality. Here and there the choice of words may have been a little tame, but that easily can be corrected for future performances.

But there is one matter in which the gifted musician fell down. That is the places where, for the sake of repeated musical phrases, the same word patterns also are repeated. If there is one thing that modern audiences call "opera" in the reproachful and stigmatizing sense, it is words repeated just for the sake of the music.

There is only one exception and a reasonable one: if the words are witty an audience will take them over and over again, all to the same musical notes. They have to be witty, however, and most of the repetitions I noticed were on conventional sentences that by themselves couldn't get a laugh. Having gone thus far in changing the libretto why not go the whole hog and add new words for the sake of strength, variety and wit?

Music and Cast

After one hearing the music of "The Turk in Italy" strikes me as mostly first-rate Rossini. One of the singers made a shrewd observation the morning after the premiere. "You know," the singer smiled, "that music still has a champagne quality even after you have been rehearsing it for nearly six weeks."

It does have a champagne sparkle. It is vivacious, light of touch and melodically distinguished even to the point of occasionally suggesting Mozart. It is also characterizing music for the most part. The Turk's staccato outbursts characterize him as the disturbed phrases do the Husband, the mocking fioriture typify the amorous Wife and the passionate song of Zaida indicates the ardent gypsy girl.

What the orchestration was like before Helmuth Wolfes touched it up, I cannot say. In his editing, it is solid and sonorous, but never thick or ponderous. The orchestra, like the vocal parts, does "sound" all the way.

There were two singers in the first performance who showed outstanding ability. Arthur Schoep, baritone, as the Husband, revealed a genuine talent for comic opera. He acted broadly and with pleasurably complete effect, all the while singing just as capably, and never slighting either characterization or music. There are many such roles in the active repertory which he could do well.

As Zaida, the Gypsy girl, Adele Addison justified the faith one has held for nearly 18 months in the extraordinary range of her gifts. The role is overshadowed, comically, by practically all the others, yet Miss Addison made Zaida a dynamic figure. Her soprano voice seems to have gained in size, too, and the polish of her phrasing and ornaments was professional rather than student.

The others were all competent, though not so outstandingly excellent as these two. Of the cast for Wednesday night, I cannot speak.

"The Turk in Italy" looks like a good bet, next season, for Mr. Goldovsky's New England Opera Theatre. Undoubtedly we may expect to hear it in Boston.

BEARING FRUIT

Students From Berkshire Music Center Contribute to Success of Festival

By OLIN DOWNES

ONE attends the concerts of the Berkshire Music Festival and visits the classrooms of the Berkshire Music Center, and the palm goes to Koussevitzky for the force of imagination and capacity for accomplishment which in this place has so strikingly realized his purposes.

The festival, which finishes this afternoon its eleventh season, is artistically the most distinguished and financially the most lucrative festival given in this country. It has reached the place where it can plan as it chooses where its artistic objectives are concerned, and its prestige and its practical resources suffice for the execution of any of its projects. But it is to be remembered that when Koussevitzky accepted the invitation of Gertrude Robinson-Smith and the Berkshire Symphonic Association to bring the Boston Symphony to Stockbridge he made known his intention that the festival should lead to the establishment of a music school of his own devising.

Few if any of those immediately interested in the institution of the festival took this latter communication too seriously. Get the festival. Let Koussevitzky tinker as he pleased with the school idea. But it did not work out that way. Koussevitzky persisted, at times almost inconveniently, with the plan of the school. The festival, meanwhile, waxed strong and big. It became a financial asset to the orchestra as well as to the Symphonic Association when these two bodies combined in its management. Today it doubles the profit and usefulness that it had for the Boston Symphony Orchestra before that organization took over entire control.

Shows Consideration

It is not to be said that Koussevitzky used the success of the festival as force majeur to drive through the establishment of the school or that there was any necessity for him to do so. He always had the careful consideration of his trustees and management for any artistic project that he contemplated. But it is true that the achievement of the festival placed him in the position where he could have said, had he chose, "No school? No Koussevitzky!" And if not Koussevitzky, what of the festival?

No such contingency, of course, arose. But when the time came, as soon it did, it was evidently advisable to go ahead with the school, as well as the festival. In the course of human affairs, in the august workings of fate, there may occur situations where it is reasonable to apply the rule that the best relations are those of which one does not speak. And here, today, is a flourishing school, as well as a flourishing festival.

This school, or Center, which is its actual name, had all sorts of problems of organization, operation and curriculum to meet, if only because of its unique character. Nor were Koussevitzky's approaches to these problems conventional. Each successive season was in one way or another an experiment—and is still. Eyebrows have been lifted, ominous prophecies expressed. The Center has gone on in its odd way of adventure, trial and error. In ways that some academicians find it hard to understand, it works! And how! the Boston Symphony concerts, gave what could be called a festival of its own. This festival, in its unpretentious way, proved also successful. The orchestra, for the greater part a post-graduate body, showed that it was fully capable of giving representative interpretations under Koussevitzky's guidance. It included in its programs the first concert performance in America of Shostakovich's Seventh symphony, which is no small task for any orchestra to play. That season proved in a special way the vitality, the tempo of development, the artistic integrity of the Center, an institution which already could stand on its own feet.

Opera School Added

In the course of the seasons an opera school had been added to its structure. This was decided suddenly, as the writer recalls, by Koussevitzky, and again there were those who thought that he was taking on too much, and overextending the scope of his undertaking. This had first centered upon studies of instrumental performance, composition and the development of conductors, with a school chorus to supplement the ministrations of the orchestra and to give the students the occasion for the practice of sight-reading and ensemble vocal performance.

At the festival, which ends today, this chorus, prepared by Hugh Ross, whose work has fostered its development through the seasons, was the body that performed in Stravinsky's "Oedipus Rex" under Koussevitzky and the Debussy "Blessed Damozel" and the Brahms Requiem under Robert Shaw's direction. In earlier seasons it has performed in the Beethoven Symphony, in works of Bach, Mozart and other masters. And from the Center, rising rapidly to view from under the shadow of the festival, have come the two conductors, Leonard Bernstein and Eleazar de Carvalho, at present the leading figures of a young group. They have directed festival concerts, eminently successful, maintaining fully orchestral standards that Koussevitzky established. Asked why, since he himself had elected not to conduct certain festival programs, he had not invited to his side internationally famous wielders of the baton, Koussevitzky replied that he had young men in his organization who would be able to conduct not only competently but with a freshness of approach and a youthful enthusiasm which he believed would please the public. The result fully vindicated his judgment.

Rising Generation

The products of the Berkshire Music Center are now seen to be important to the festival itself. Perhaps nothing is more important as a sign of the Center's productivity than the part that the young men have taken in these last three weeks of its concerts. The performances that Bernstein, de Carvalho and Robert Shaw have led, and the exhilarating and highly original performances under Boris Goldovsky of the opera school, of Rossini's diverting skit, "The Turk in Italy," are included among the signs that a rising generation of musicians is developing at Tanglewood. These young musicians are going places. They have proved themselves capable of supplying a highly charged animus of fresh spirit, force, enthusiasm, ideas to a musical situation in America greatly in need of an injection of those qualities. And that, too, from way back, has been a cardinal feature of the plans of Serge Koussevitzky.

IN "CARMEN"

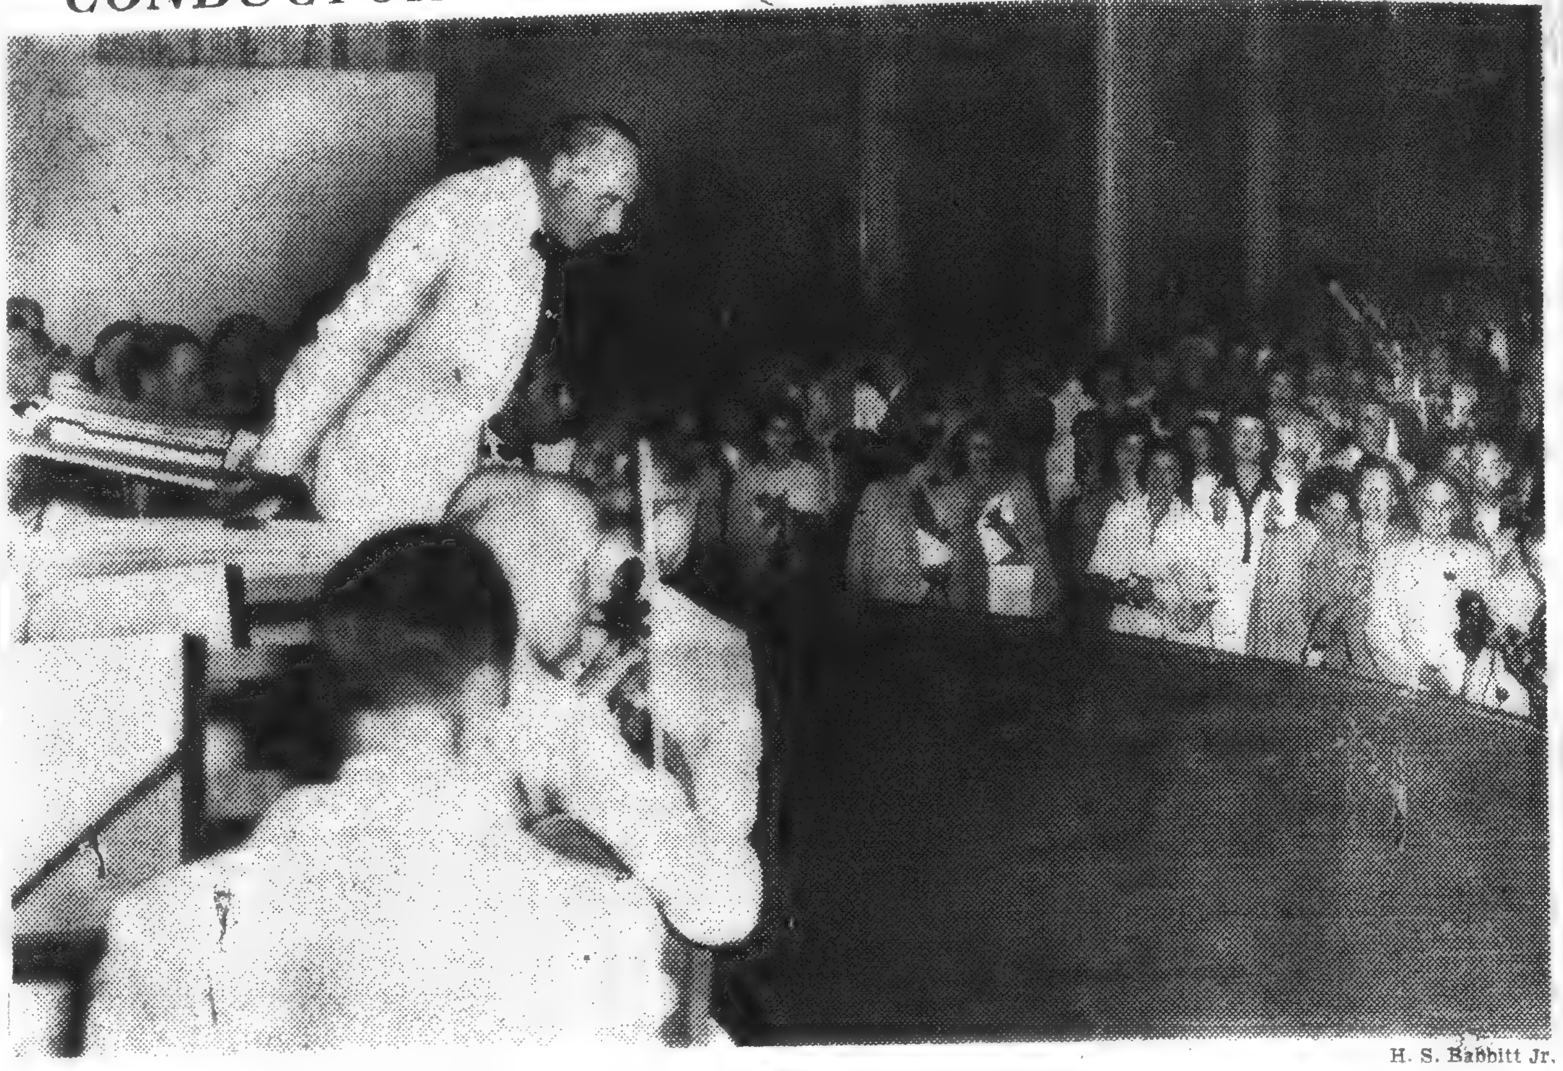
Murray Korman

Annabelle Lee sings Micaela with Salmaggi Company Saturday.

SINGERS ABROAD

Margaret Harshaw, who sang Brangaene, Amneris and Dalila in her first appearances at the Paris Opera this summer, has been engaged to go back next season. The company has also engaged Mary Bothwell, Canadian soprano, to go there next season to sing Elsa in "Lohengrin." . . . La Scala in Milan sends word of two of Arturo Toscanini's protégés: Herva Nelli is preparing to sing Aïda there next Sunday and Frank Guarrera is rehearsing the baritone lead for a later appearance in "The Pearl Fishers."

CONDUCTOR TAKES A BOW AS FESTIVAL ENDS



H. S. Babbitt Jr.

Serge Koussevitzky, musical director of the Berkshire Festival, will present Beethoven's "Eroica" and Sibelius' Symphony No. 2 in closing program at Tanglewood this afternoon.

By ROSS PARMENTER

THERE were so many fireworks when the musical resources of Tanglewood were put "on parade" recently that the cause for which the jamboree was staged was almost obscured. The United States Section of the International Society for Contemporary Music, which initiated the drive, hardly got mentioned. But the section has done all the spade work of establishing the International Musical Fund and the composers are the ones who have set themselves the task of raising $100,000 to help their colleagues abroad.

They are anxious not to affront European composers by being patronizing and merely charitable and they also want to be sure the money is spent wisely. Accordingly, a European Advisory Council has been set up to make recommendations and submit applications, and arrangements have been made to have grants distributed through the Paris office of UNESCO. The general rule will be not to furnish more than 50 per cent of the funds needed for any project proposed. Carleton Sprague Smith is one of the leaders of the movement. Aaron Copland and Howard Hanson spoke on its behalf when Serge Koussevitzky, as honorary chairman of the United States Section, gave the first benefit concert. The committee hopes other orchestras will also perform to aid the fund.

Effect of War

The second World War cut right across the Center's growth, but did not prevent it. There was a season when for perfectly sound reasons, including gasoline shortage, the Boston Symphony management decided that it should not go to Tanglewood, and that the operations of the Center must either be suspended for a period, or continued solely under Koussevitzky's responsibility. He decided to go on with it, first of all for the reason that, in wartime, consistently with the exigencies that confronted every citizen, it was more than necessary to preserve educational and cultural activity. Young men and women, for reasons of age or other cause, not called upon for war work, should not be left to drift or to forget their life's purpose; and art, too, was an imperative. He personally guaranteed the running expenses of the Center and engaged for their services as teachers and steadying factors in the student orchestra some leading members of the Boston Symphony.

The student orchestra, at prices much smaller than those asked for [275]

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
5 1948

Music

DAUMIER DREW PARIS OF SONG

By RAYMOND MORIN

PITTSFIELD, Sunday—You can learn a great deal about musical Paris during the first half of the 19th Century by examining the Boaz Piller Collection of Honore Daumier cartoons being currently exhibited at the Berkshire Museum.

Mr. Piller is contra-bassoonist with the Boston Symphony. His impressive collection of pictures and autographs of composers, and the Daumier cartoons, are being exhibited in conjunction with the Berkshire Music Festival at nearby Tanglewood.

Also being shown is a collection of old musical instruments owned by Robert Casadeaus, the distinguished French pianist.

We will leave it to Walter Merkel to describe the artistic merits of these 31 subjects of Daumier's acid pen, but even the layman is easily able to recognize their significance.

Paris of Chopin

Daumier's Paris was also that of Chopin, Liszt, and Berlioz. It was a setting of elegant salons, untidy street musicians, and the lace and corruption of Louis-Phillippe's Court.

Many of these cartoons were done for a radical sheet called "La Caricature," in which Daumier not only slaughtered the politicians (he was finally clapped into prison because he roughhandled Louis-Phillippe), but he revelled in pointing the finger of scorn at the niceties and naughtiness of contemporary musicians. He also ridiculed injustices with deft strokes.

Pictures a Street Scene

He pictures an emaciated old organ-grinder accompanying his neglected-looking wife on a Paris street. The old hag has her wide-spread mouth pitched for a high note, and facing her in the crown is a typical French gentilhomme, immaculately attired in top hat, gloves, and carrying a cane.

Daumier's explanation—" . . . and from her red lips drop tones sweet as the song of a bird."

More pathetic than humorous is another organ grinder with a performing dog in gawdy attire, both looking in despair at empty windows and reflecting — "The devil, if it rains today there will be no pennies for us."

The recent death-dealing troubles at the Metropolitan Opera had their counterpart in Daumier's day. He shows a group of ridiculously dressed troubadors singing from a balcony to an assemblage of awe-struck listeners.

Says Daumier — "Musicians playing for twelve consecutive hours for a fixed price, demanding no raise; M. Perrin, director making them a proposition."

A 'Bourgeois Dance'

The violent 'cellist, disgusted violinist, and exhausted horn player pictured above are performing for a "bourgeois dance." Daumier provided an accompanying cartoon depicting their preparation for the deplored task. They are weeping disconsolately.

From Daumier we learn that pool parlors are not an American institution, and that music invaded their interiors in the persons of accordionists. The artist shows one of these music squeezers valiantly trying to earn his keep, whlie a disgruntled patron turns to him and says—

"One hasn't the right as yet to murder people who play your instrument, but let us hope that it will come about."

A Chic Salon

There is ta chic salon and a dainty Miss is playing daintily at a dainty piano. Two effusive gentlemen are congratulating the papa of this musical offspring — "Ah, monsieur, your daughter possesses such talent! What talent! What talent! In MY family we all have superior talent for music. As for me, in my youth I had top power on the clarinet."

Daumier launched an attack against what he regarded as the cacophony of his day (he probably had Berlioz in mind) in a cartoon titled, "Pyrotechnical, rough, and diabolical music."

It shows a huge vat being viciously struck by a mallet, a cannon in the foreground about to be shot, and a goodly collection of brass instruments in the background.

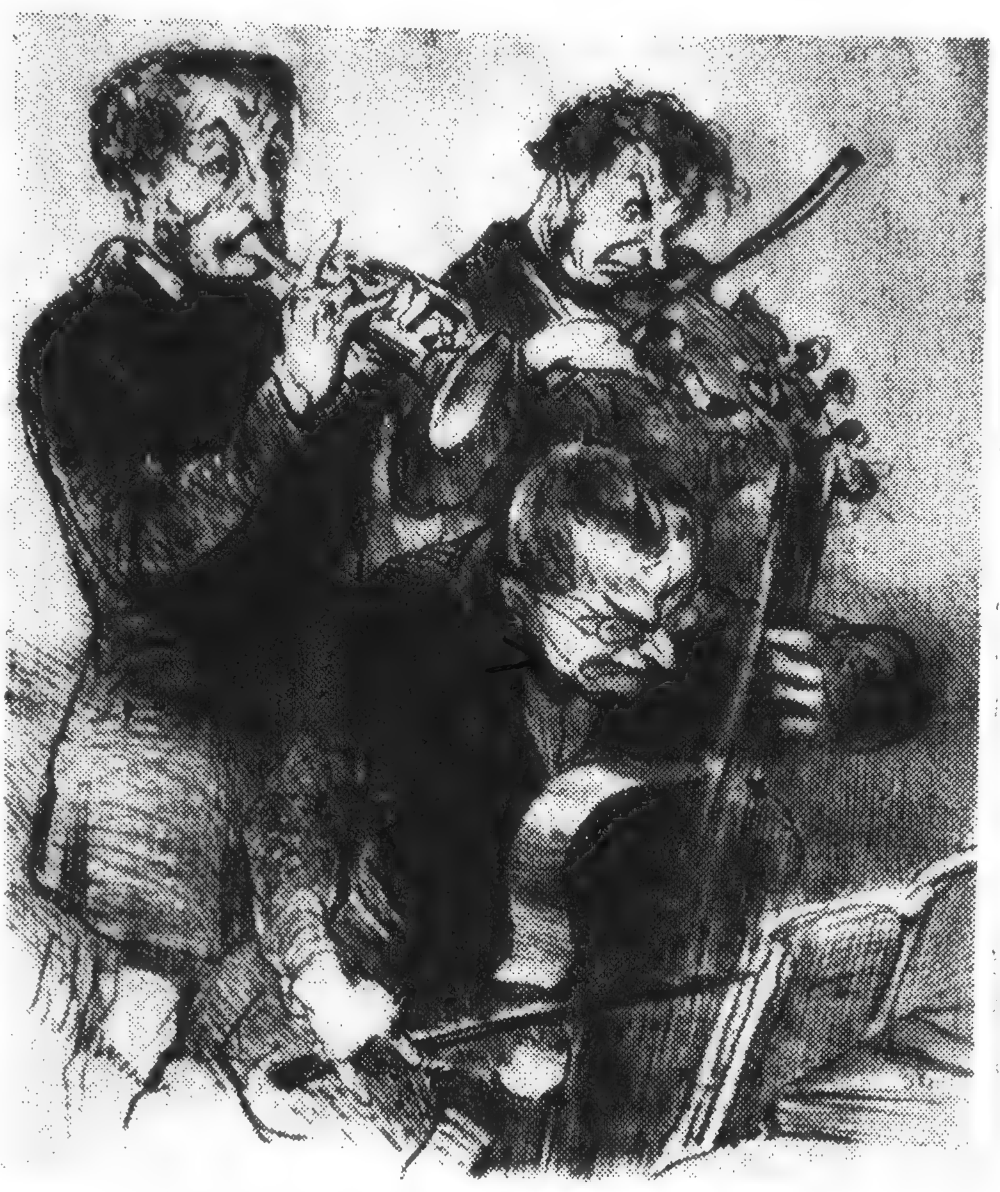
He wasn't so far wrong because a comparatively recent French composer required the use of a fire-siren in the performance of his score, another made with train imitations, Tschaikowsky used cannons in the "1812 Overture," and another composer wrote inserted hen cackles in an overture called "Chanticleer."

In his "Clarinet Teacher" cartoon, Daumier [illegible] date. The poor chap is giving despaired looks at a moronic youngster whose cheeks are filled with air to the bursting point. The title — "A young man about to acquire what it is convenient to describe as a concordant art."

Night club singers of the early 1800's also came to Daumier's attention. He pictures a tall, gangling, nose-heavy coloratura emitting high notes that you can almost hear. He explains that "it is the first requirement of a cafe-concert to sing from 7 o'clock until midnight, with or without trills, according to the taste of the patrons."

There are three "serious" cartoons in this rib-tickling collection—Gounod, Berlioz, and Offenbach. They are not mere disproportions of features for humorous effect but sensitive linear impressions.

But I don't want to place a clumsy foot on Mr. Merkel's territory.



IN PITTSFIELD EXHIBIT

"Orchestra for a Bourgeois Dance," one of 31 cartoons from the Boaz Piller collection being exhibited at the Berkshire Museum, Pittsfield.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
AUG 15 1948

Tanglewood Hears a Sonata By Hindemith

Piatigorsky Is Soloist in Work for Cello; Students' Compositions Are Heard

By Arthur V. Berger

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 14.—Paul Hindemith's cello sonata, played by Gregor Piatigorsky, was the chief novelty at this week end's concerts on the Tanglewood estate. The sonata was written during the last spring for Mr. Piatigorsky, who heads the Chamber Music department of the Berkshire Music Center, the school which is conducted here by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Also on the program were Beethoven's Sonata in A major and Schuman's "Fan tasiestucke," Op. 73. Ralph Berkowitz was the pianist.

The Hinemith sonata has a particularly fine middle movement, gently flowing in its outer sections and reflective in the middle part. The dominant mood of the whole is pastoral and mellow, almost lyrical, in a way that is characteristic of Hindemith's most recent writing. The last movement, however, a passacaglia, goes in at times for the formularized, somewhat academic writing of Hindemith's middle period, though the piano sonorities and several rhythmic patterns are striking. In general, as a matter of fact, throughout this sonata, the piano writing explores the instrument better than the writing for cello does. The wide-spacing of dry, figurated lines, very high and very low on the keyboard, is favorabl to setting the cello in relief. At no time is the cello engulfed in an ocean of blended sounds, which is often unhappily the case in cello sonatas.

The second of the three Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts was conducted by Robert Shaw in the shed tonight. The festival chorus assisted in Dubussy's "Demoiselle Elue" and the Brahms requiem. Soloists were Frances Yeend and Ellan Faull, sopranos; Eunice Alberts, contralto, and James Pease, bass.

Last night's concert of the student orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center listed two works by young members of the composition classes. Robert Kurka's elegy for English horn and strings, which he was asked to write in memory of Mrs. Andrew H. Hepburn, a benefactor of the school, was just about adequate to the occasion. As a rapidly executed commission, it judiciously attempted to do no more than maintain a somber mood through a brief curve of a line conceived in terms of modern chromaticism, and pursued with consistency, if without much profile. The Argentine sketches by Pia Sebastiani, Argentine composer in her early twenties, indicated promise and fine training. Miss Sebastiani, at nineteen, when these pieces were written, orchestrated with the expertness of a mature composer. Their reliance on color and the ostinato is a bit dated, but the stage is a good one for a young composer to pass through. Miss Sebastiani, who has studied abroad with Darius Milhaud, is now a member of Aaron Copland's class here this summer. Mr. Kurka is in Mr. Milhaud's group.

The routine nature of most of the evening was nicely relieved by the moments when Serge Koussevitzky mounted the podium briefly to work wonders with the student string body in a Vivaldi largo, and when Copland conducted his "Billy the Kid." The delight of hearing this score again was supplemented by the special illumination a composer gives when interpreting his own music, even though Copland, who conducts all too rarely, is, as a consequence, none too expert and experienced in the technique of the baton.

This Clipping From
PORTLAND, ME.
PRESS HERALD
AUG 16 1948

Berkshire Festival Ends Good Season

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 15. (AP)—The 11th season of the Berkshire Music Festival ended today on a sweet note.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and conductor Serge Koussevitzky gave 15 concerts and drew a record-breaking total of 112,500 paying music fans.

Jamming the huge concert shed on the 200-acre estate today was a crowd of 14,700 — largest were in "fair [illegible] ever for a single performance.

Doctor Koussevitzky and the orchestra received an ovation after playing Beethoven's Eroica symphony and Sibelius' Symphony Number Two.

This Clipping From
ATHOL, MASS.
NEWS
AUG 16 1948

Berkshire Music Festival Shatters Attendance Records

Lenox, Aug. 16 (AP)—A record-breaking crowd of 14,700 attended the closing performance of the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood yesterday.

A new total attendance record of 112.500 paid admission for the 15 concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, also was set.

The festival's 11th season was climaxed by the playing of Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony and Sibelius' Symphony Number Two.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
AUG 1

14,700 Attend Last Concert At Tanglewood

Koussevitzky Conductor in Beethoveu's 'Eroica' and 2d Sibelius Symphony

By Arthur V. Berger

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 15.—The Berkshire Festival came to a close here on the Tanglewood Estate with a record attendance of 14,700. The previous record was established at a Beethoven program last year when 14,000 attended. The exceptionally fine, clear weather today, following three afternoons of rain and rather low temperature, was no doubt instrumental in encouraging today's crowd. Not the least of the factors, too, of course, were Serge Koussevitzky's appearance on the podium and a program consisting of two proved drawing cards, Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony and the Sibelius Second Symphony.

Mr. Koussevitzky's reading of the Beethoven Symphony had its familiar drive and, in the more restrained moments, inwardness and repose. His swift pace in the first movement was particularly convincing today, since it maintained the continuity so well. And one was almost willing to forgive his usual brief bit of sentimentalizing toward the end of the exposition and the recapitulation, since the whole moved along with such conviction. A few ragged edges were to be expected in the playing of the orchestra, after more than three weeks of pretty steady, exacting work on the part of the players.

Last night's concert for chorus and orchestra, conducted by Robert Shaw, represented this energetic young conductor with somewhat less than his usual energy and abandon. A combination of two such moderately paced and intimate works as Debussy's "Damoiselle Elue" and the Brahms Requiem did not make for the most judicious program, especially in an outdoor shed, where many listeners sit far from the platform.

Also, Mr. Shaw did not quite grasp the magic and tenuousness of Debussy, and his Brahms was rather dragged out. The inner rhythmic intensity that should animate even some of the moderately paced sections was unhappily absent.

Ideally, one should prefer not so slow a pace. But if it is to be undertaken, it calls for a conductor who spins out atmosphere for all it is worth and who can bring the inner beat to the foreground. Mr. Shaw's personality is essentially quite of another kind, more direct and laconic.

This year's over-all attendance at the Berkshire Festival concerts was 170,500, as against 146,600 last season. Of this year's total, 112,500 attended the large orchestral concerts in the huge music shed, and the rest were present at the Bach-Mozart concerts of the reduced orchestra in the theater-concert hall and the student and other auxiliary concerts. Last season's total for the large orchestral concerts alone was 106,600.

[276]

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

AUG 15 1948

Music

DAUMIER DREW PARIS OF SONG

By RAYMOND MORIN

PITTSFIELD, Sunday—You can learn a great deal about musical Paris during the first half of the 19th Century by examining the Boaz Piller Collection of Honore Daumier cartoons being currently exhibited at the Berkshire Museum.

Mr. Piller is contra-bassoonist with the Boston Symphony. His impressive collection of pictures and autographs of composers, and the Daumier cartoons, are being exhibited in conjunction with the Berkshire Music Festival at nearby Tanglewood.

Also being shown is a collection of old musical instruments owned by Robert Casadeaus, the distinguished French pianist.

We will leave it to Walter Merkel to describe the artistic merits of these 31 subjects of Daumier's acid pen, but even the layman is easily able to recognize their significance.

Paris of Chopin

Daumier's Paris was also that of Chopin, Liszt, and Berlioz. It was a setting of elegant salons, untidy street musicians, and the lace and corruption of Louis-Phillippe's Court.

Many of these cartoons were done for a radical sheet called "La Caricature," in which Daumier not only slaughtered the politicians (he was finally clapped into prison because he rough-handled Louis-Phillippe), but he revelled in pointing the finger of scorn at the niceties and naughtiness of contemporary musicians. He also ridiculed injustices with deft strokes.

Pictures a Street Scene

He pictures an emaciated old organ-grinder accompanying his neglected-looking wife on a Paris street. The old hag has her wide-spread mouth pitched for a high note, and facing her in the crown is a typical French gentilhomme, immaculately attired in top hat, gloves, and carrying a cane.

Daumier's explanation—" . . . and from her red lips drop tones sweet as the song of a bird."

More pathetic than humorous is another organ grinder with a performing dog in gawdy attire, both looking in despair at empty windows and reflecting — "The devil, if it rains today there will be no pennies for us."

The recent death-dealing troubles at the Metropolitan Opera had their counterpart in Daumier's day. He shows a group of ridiculously dressed troubadors singing from a balcony to an assemblage of awe-struck listeners.

Says Daumier — "Musicians playing for twelve consecutive hours for a fixed price, demanding no raise; M. Perrin, director making them a proposition."

A 'Bourgeois Dance'

The violent 'cellist, disgusted violinist, and exhausted horn player pictured above are performing for a "bourgeois dance." Daumier provided an accompanying cartoon depicting their preparation for the deplored task. They are weeping disconsolately.

From Daumier we learn that pool parlors are not an American institution, and that music invaded their interiors in the persons of accordionists. The artist shows one of these music squeezers valiantly trying to earn his keep, whlie a disgruntled patron turns to him and says—

"One hasn't the right as yet to murder people who play your instrument, but let us hope that it will come about."

A Chic Salon

There is ta chic salon and a dainty Miss is playing daintily at a dainty piano. Two effusive gentlemen are congratulating the papa of this musical offspring — "Ah, monsieur, your daughter possesses such talent! What talent! What talent! In MY family we all have superior talent for music. As for me, in my youth I had top power on the clarinet."

Daumier launched an attack against what he regarded as the cacophony of his day (he probably had Berlioz in mind) in a cartoon titled, "Pyrotechnical, rough, and diabolical music."

It shows a huge vat being viciously struck by a mallet, a cannon in the foreground about to be shot, and a goodly collection of brass instruments in the background.

He wasn't so far wrong because a comparatively recent French composer required the use of a fire-siren in the performance of his score, another made with train imitations, Tschaikowsky used cannons in the "1812 Overture," and another composer wrote inserted hen cackles in an overture called "Chanticleer."

In his "Clarinet Teacher" cartoon, Daumier [illegible] date. The Night club singers of the early 1800's also came to Daumier's attention. He pictures a tall, gangling, nose-heavy coloratura emitting high notes that you can almost hear. He explains that "it is the first requirement of a cafe-concert to sing from 7 o'clock until midnight, with or without trills, according to the taste of the patrons."

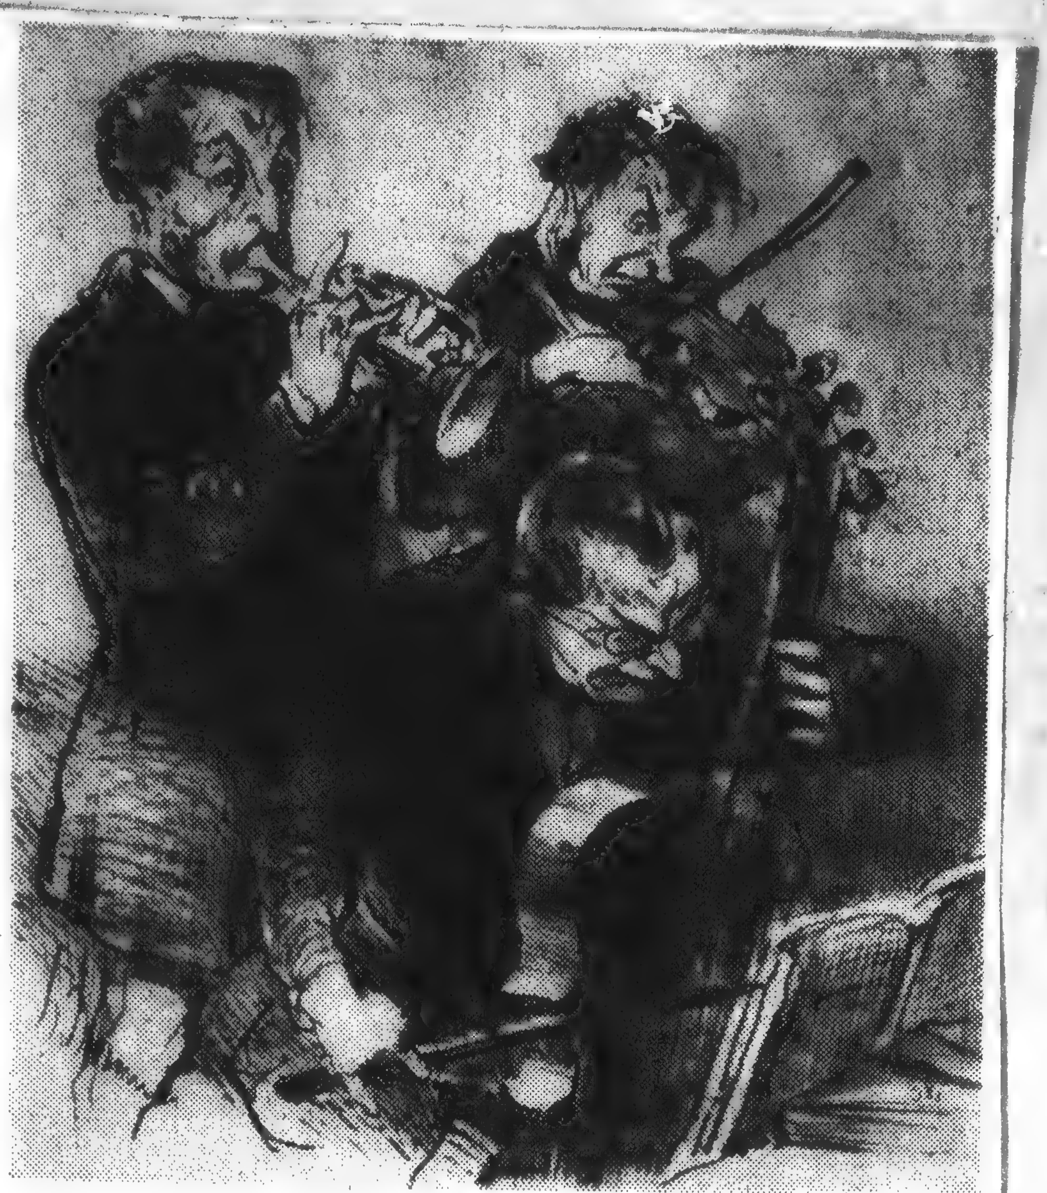
There are three "serious" cartoons in this rib-tickling collection—Gounod, Berlioz, and Offenbach. They are not mere disproportions of features for humorous effect but sensitive linear impressions.

But I don't want to place a clumsy foot on Mr. Merkel's territory.

poor chap is giving despaired looks at a moronic youngster whose cheeks are filled with air to the bursting point. The title—"A young man about to acquire what it is convenient to describe as a concordant art."



IN PITTSFIELD EXHIBIT

"Orchestra for a Bourgeois Dance," one of 31 cartoons from the Boaz Piller collection being exhibited at the Berkshire Museum, Pittsfield.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

AUG 15 1948

Tanglewood Hears a Sonata By Hindemith

Piatigorsky Is Soloist in Work for Cello; Students' Compositions Are Heard

By Arthur V. Berger

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 14.—Paul Hindemith's cello sonata, played by Gregor Piatigorsky, was the chief novelty at this week end's concerts on the Tanglewood estate. The sonata was written during the last spring for Mr. Piatigorsky, who heads the Chamber Music department of the Berkshire Music Center, the school which is conducted here by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Also on the program were Beethoven's Sonata in A major and Schuman's "Fantasiestucke," Op. 73. Ralph Berkowitz was the pianist.

The Hinemith sonata has a particularly fine middle movement, gently flowing in its outer sections and reflective in the middle part. The dominant mood of the whole is pastoral and mellow, almost lyrical, in a way that is characteristic of Hindemith's most recent writing. The last movement, however, a passacaglia, goes in at times for the formularized, somewhat academic writing of Hindemith's middle period, though the piano sonorities and several rhythmic patterns are striking. In general, as a matter of fact, throughout this sonata, the piano writing explores the instrument better than the writing for cello does. The wide-spacing of dry, figurated lines, very high and very low on the keyboard, is favorabl to setting the cello in relief. At no time is the cello engulfed in an ocean of blended sounds, which is often unhappily the case in cello sonatas.

The second of the three Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts was conducted by Robert Shaw in the shed tonight. The festival chorus assisted in Dubussy's "Demoiselle Elue" and the Brahms requiem. Soloists were Frances Yeend and Ellan Faull, sopranos; Eunice Alberts, contralto, and James Pease, bass.

Last night's concert of the student orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center listed two works by young members of the composition classes. Robert Kurka's elegy for English horn and strings, which he was asked to write in memory of Mrs. Andrew H. Hepburn, a benefactor of the school, was just about adequate to the occasion. As a rapidly executed commission, it judiciously attempted to do no more than maintain a somber mood through a brief curve of a line conceived in terms of modern chromaticism, and pursued with consistency, if without much profile. The Argentine sketches by Pia Sebastiani, Argentine composer in her early twenties, indicated promise and fine training. Miss Sebastiani, at nineteen, when these pieces were written, orchestrated with the expertness of a mature composer. Their reliance on color and the ostinato is a bit dated, but the stage is a good one for a young composer to pass through. Miss Sebastiani, who has studied abroad with Darius Milhaud, is now a member of Aaron Copland's class here this summer. Mr. Kurka is in Mr. Milhaud's group.

The routine nature of most of the evening was nicely relieved by the moments when Serge Koussevitzky mounted the podium briefly to work wonders with the student string body in a Vivaldi largo, and when Copland conducted his "Billy the Kid." The delight of hearing this score again was supplemented by the special illumination a composer gives when interpreting his own music, even though Copland, who conducts all too rarely, is, as a consequence, none too expert and experienced in the technique of the baton.

This Clipping From
PORTLAND, ME.
PRESS HERALD

AUG 16 1948

Berkshire Festival Ends Good Season

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 15. (AP)—The 11th season of the Berkshire Music Festival ended today on a sweet note.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and conductor Serge Koussevitzky gave 15 concerts and drew a record-breaking total of 112,500 paying music fans.

Jamming the huge concert shed on the 200-acre estate today was a crowd of 14,700—largest were in [illegible] ever for a [illegible] performance.

Doctor Koussevitzky and the orchestra received an ovation after playing Beethoven's Eroica symphony and Sibelius' Symphony Number Two.

This Clipping From
ATHOL, [illegible]
NEWS

AUG 16 1948

Berkshire Music Festival Shatters Attendance Records

Lenox, Aug. 16 (AP)—A record-breaking crowd of 14,700 attended the closing performance of the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood yesterday.

A new total attendance record of 112,500 paid admission for the 15 concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, also was set.

The festival's 11th season was climaxed by the playing of Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony and Sibelius' Symphony Number Two.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

AUG 16 1948

14,700 Attend Last Concert At Tanglewood

Koussevitzky Conductor in Beethoven's 'Eroica' and 2d Sibelius Symphony

By Arthur V. Berger

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 15.—The Berkshire Festival came to a close here on the Tanglewood Estate with a record attendance of 14,700. The previous record was established at a Beethoven program last year when 14,000 attended. The exceptionally fine, clear weather today, following three afternoons of rain and rather low temperature, was no doubt instrumental in encouraging today's crowd. Not the least of the factors, too, of course, were Serge Koussevitzky's appearance on the podium and a program consisting of two proved drawing cards, Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony and the Sibelius Second Symphony.

Mr. Koussevitzky's reading of the Beethoven Symphony had its familiar drive and, in the more restrained moments, inwardness and repose. His swift pace in the first movement was particularly convincing today, since it maintained the continuity so well. And one was almost willing to forgive his usual brief bit of sentimentalizing toward the end of the exposition and the recapitulation, since the whole moved along with such conviction. A few ragged edges were to be expected in the playing of the orchestra, after more than three weeks of pretty steady, exacting work on the part of the players.

Last night's concert for chorus and orchestra, conducted by Robert Shaw, represented this energetic young conductor with somewhat less than his usual energy and abandon. A combination of two such moderately paced and intimate works as Debussy's "Damoiselle Elue" and the Brahms Requiem did not make for the most judicious program, especially in an outdoor shed, where many listeners sit far from the platform.

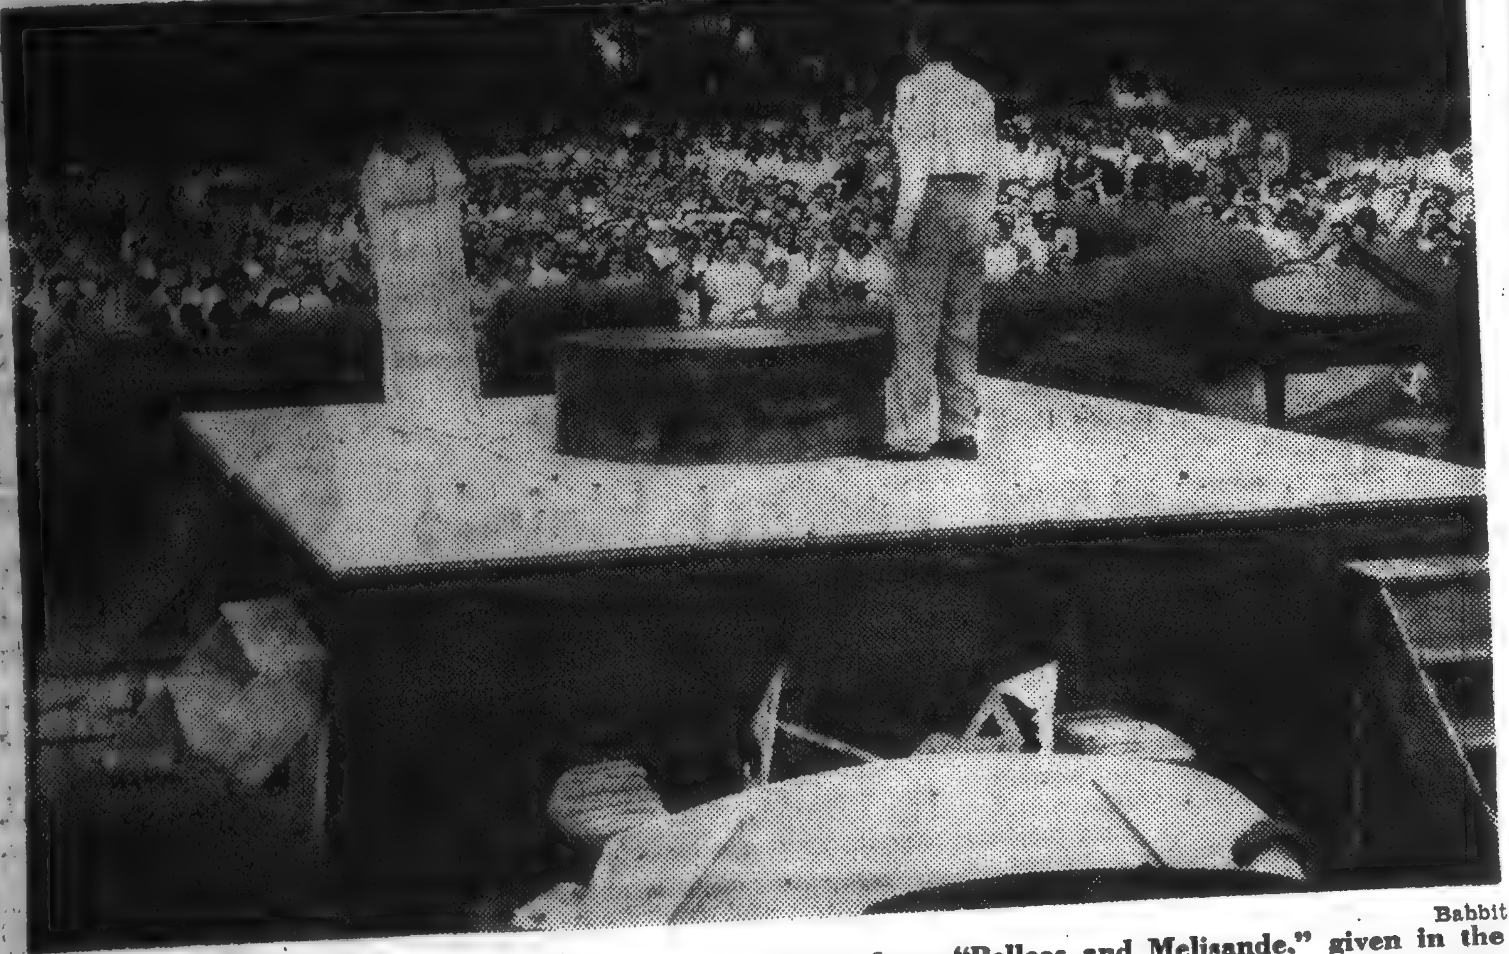
Also, Mr. Shaw did not quite grasp the magic and tenuousness of Debussy, and his Brahms was rather dragged out. The inner rhythmic intensity that should animate even some of the moderately paced sections was unhappily absent.

Ideally, one should prefer not so slow a pace. But if it is to be undertaken, it calls for a conductor who spins out atmosphere for all it is worth and who can bring the inner [illegible] to the foreground. Mr. Shaw's personality is essentially quite of another kind, more direct and laconic.

This year's over-all attendance at the Berkshire Festival concerts was 170,500, as against 146,600 last season. Of this year's total, 112,500 attended the large orchestral concerts in the huge music shed, and the rest were present at the Bach-Mozart concerts of the reduced orchestra in the theater-concert hall and the student and other auxiliary concerts. Last season's total for the large orchestral concerts alone was 106,600.

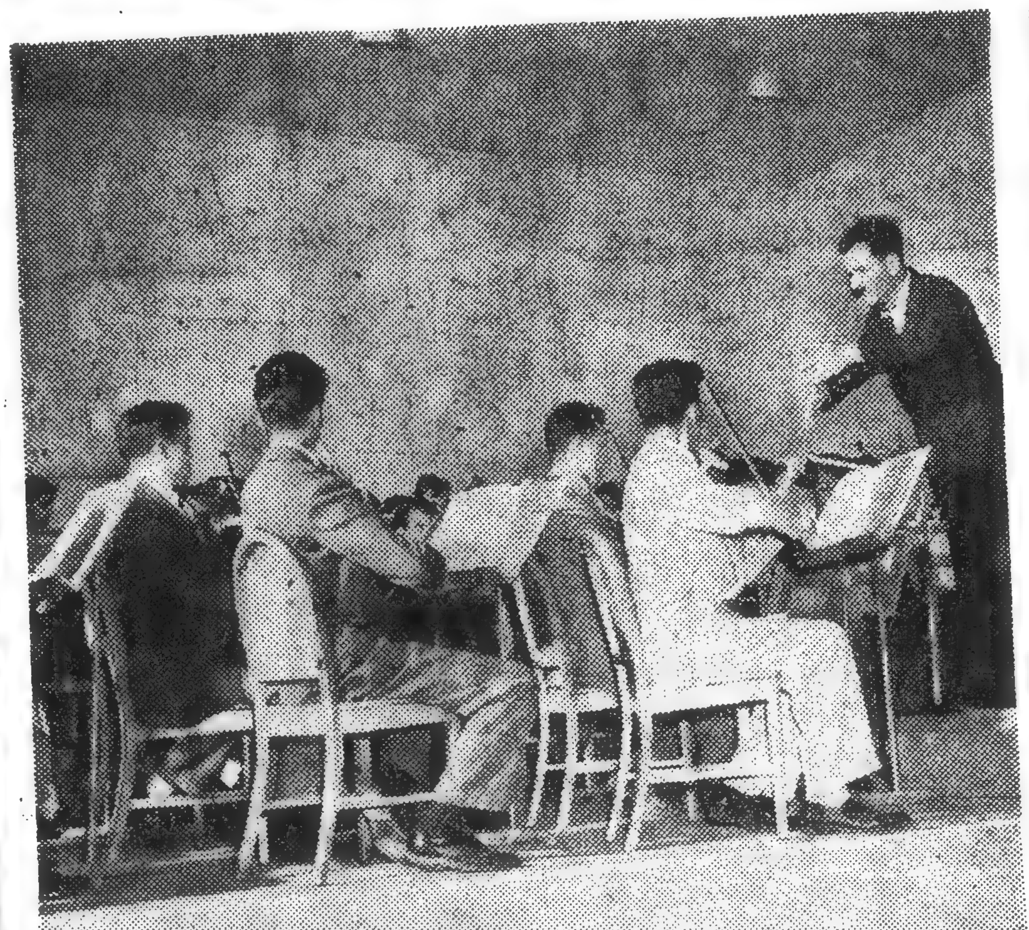
[a77]

Tanglewood Parades for Benefit of European Musicians



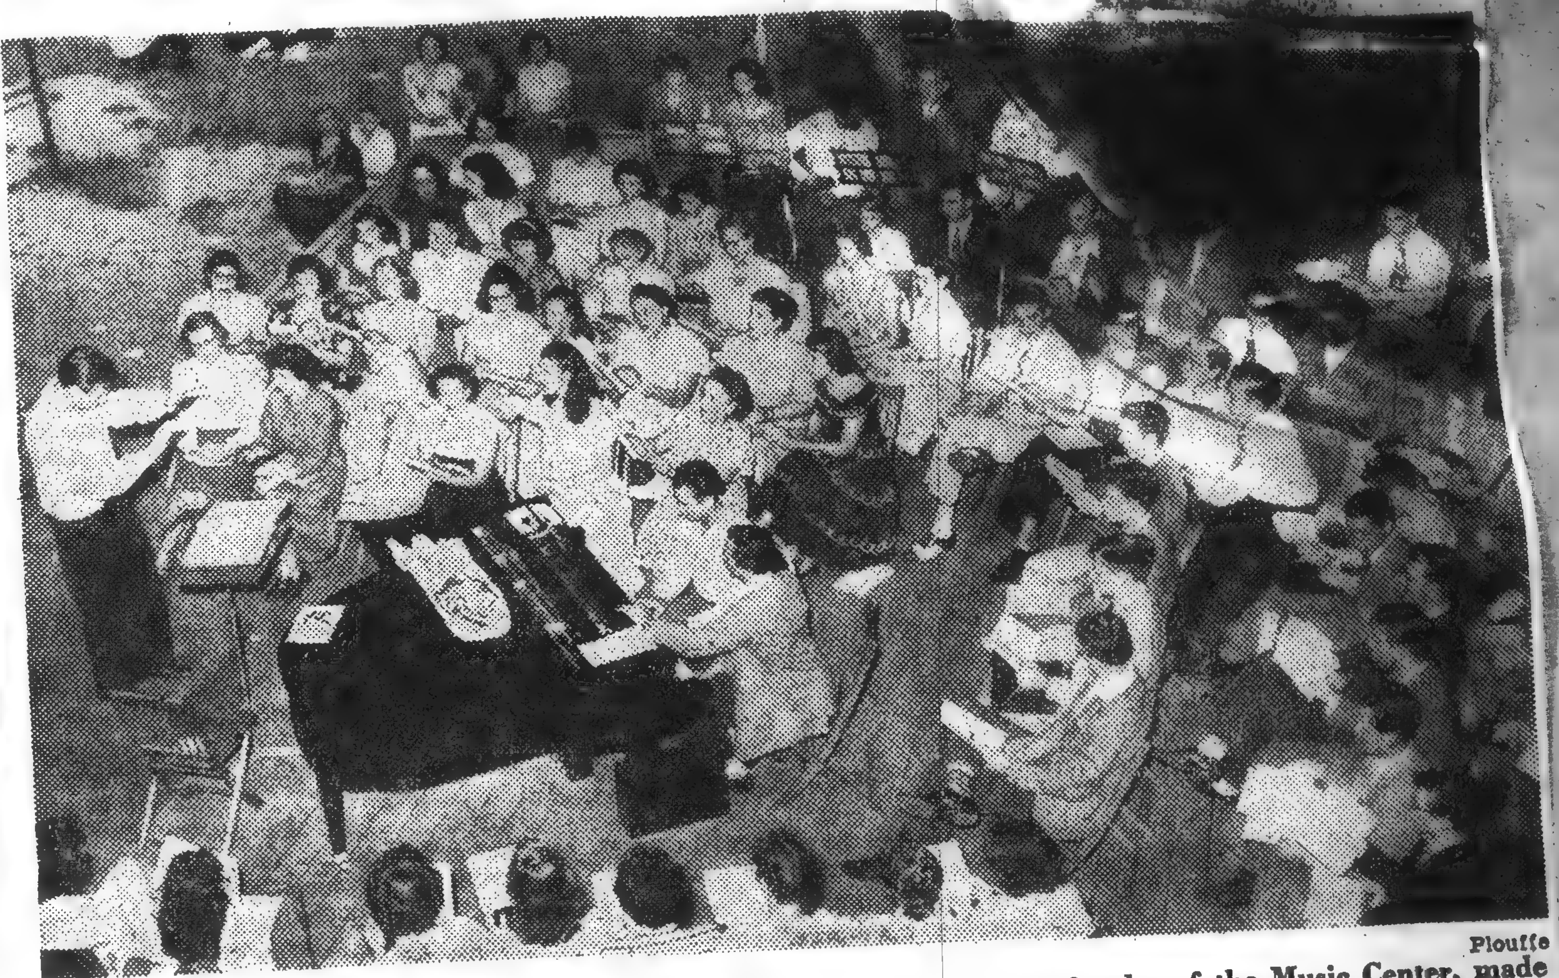
Babbitt

OPERA IN THE GARDEN: This fountain scene from "Pelleas and Melisande," given in the garden at Tanglewood was one of the opera department's contributions to the benefit staged yesterday afternoon and last evening. In principal roles are Janet Hayes, soprano, and Robert Rounseville, tenor.



Babbitt

MUSIC IN THE SHED: Irwin Hoffmann, one of the three student conductors at the Berkshire Music Center, leads the Department 2 student orchestra in Beethoven's "Coriolanus" overture.



Plouffe

SINGING ON THE STAGE: Robert Shaw, a member of the faculty of the Music Center, made a hit with the visitors as he conducted the Festival chorus in a demonstration at the rehearsal stage near the edge of the Tanglewood estate. Members of the chorus were also heard later in the Music Shed.

THE WINNER: Robert M. Wallbrunn of 310 East 44th Street, New York City, winner of the $2200 Berkshire model RCA radio-phonograph awarded as a door prize, is all smiles as Mrs. Lawrence K. Miller of Pittsfield shows him lucky number she drew from a box.

Tanglewood

Continued From First Page

ers and guests paraded onto the platform of the Music Shed for the manifestation and Dr. Serge Koussevitzky opened the program, explaining the plan of the International Society of Contemporary Music, of which he is chairman of the American section. He introduced Dr. Archibald MacLeish, poet, and former librarian of the Library of Congress, who served as chairman of the speaking program.

He expressed gratitude to Dr. Koussevitzky, his orchestra and to Tanglewood for being allowed to take part in what he said was a "noble undertaking." He declared that Dr. Koussevitzky's plan to aid needy composers and musicians in Europe is a "declaration of faith in the power of art," which, he added, will have direct and practical consequences.

"There is a relation between the world which calls itself the great world, and the world which calls itself the world of art," he said.

Dr. MacLeish reminded his audience that three years ago "we and our allies won a tremendous victory in the greatest and most destructive of all wars, a war so terrible that the entire world was united at its end in a common conviction that there must be an end of wars forever—that there must be peace.

"No one, I think, not even the most cynical, the most suspicious or the most revengeful, doubted the sincerity of that resolve in all men's minds in every country. War

CONDUCTOR AND SOLOIST: Eleazar de Carvalho, young Brazilian conductor, right, and Carol Brice, contralto, will appear at the Berkshire Festival Sunday afternoon. Carvalho will be the guest conductor with the Boston Symphony Orchestra while Miss Brice will be heard in the vocal parts of "El Amor Brujo." She also will appear as soloist tomorrow night, singing the role of Jacosta in Stravinsky's "Oedipus Rex," with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducting.

Radio Winner Tried To Give Ticket Away

TANGLEWOOD — "Find a penny, pick it up, and all the day you'll have good luck." The old adage held true for Robert M. Wallbrunn of 310 East 44th Street, New York City, who attended the benefit performance here last night.

Before starting off from Winsted, Conn., where he is a counselor at Camp Delaware, he and three companions simultaneously spotted a penny on the ground.

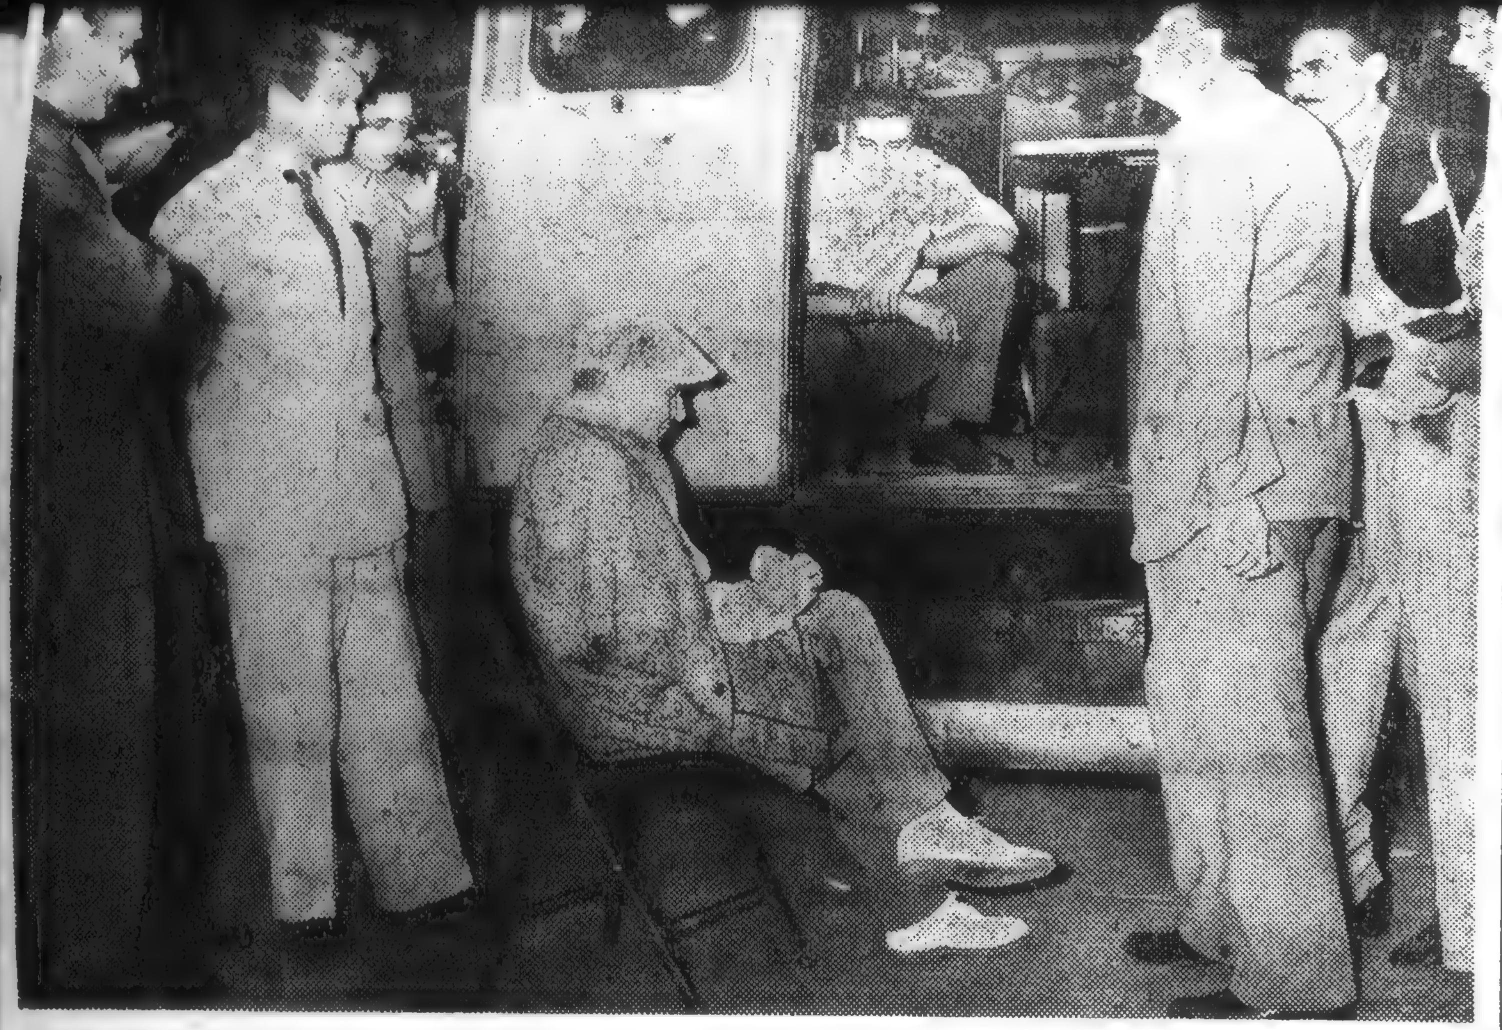
After quickly picking it up they soon received a ride to Lenox with a promise of the return trip. As they left the car, the group tried to give the driver a ticket for the ride, but he refused to take it. The result was that he turned down the equivalent of $2200, for the ticket won the first door prize of the evening, an RCA Victor, Berkshire Series Contemporary combination radio and record player.

Johann Strauss' "Voices of Spring," Sibelius' "Valse Triste," and Ravel's choreographic poem, "La Valse."

As the music ended and Dr. Koussevitzky acknowledged the ovation from the crowd, George E. Judd, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, stepped to the platform and with some difficulty, (because the public address system wouldn't work), he announced that 7000 attended the event and $10,000 was realized from the benefit. Then Mr. Judd called upon Mrs. Lawrence K. Miller of Pittsfield to draw the names of the winners of the door prizes. The $2200 Berkshire model RCA radio-phonograph was won by Robert W. Walbrunn, 310 West 44th Street, New York and 10 albums of records went to Mrs. Richard Snare of Old Town, Me.

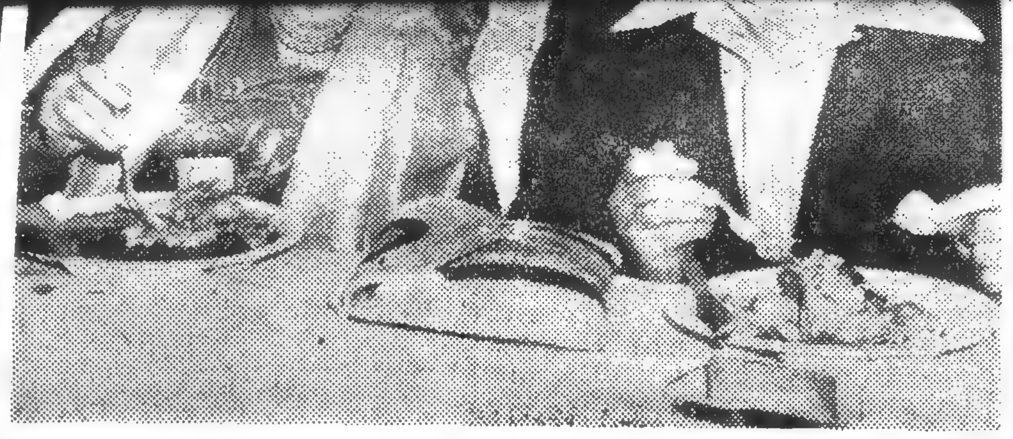
Babbitt

THANK YOU, JUDGE: Dr. Serge Koussevitzky expresses his appreciation to Supreme Court Justice Felix Frankfurter for the speech he delivered at the manifestation in which he called for support of the campaign to raise funds for needy musicians in Europe.



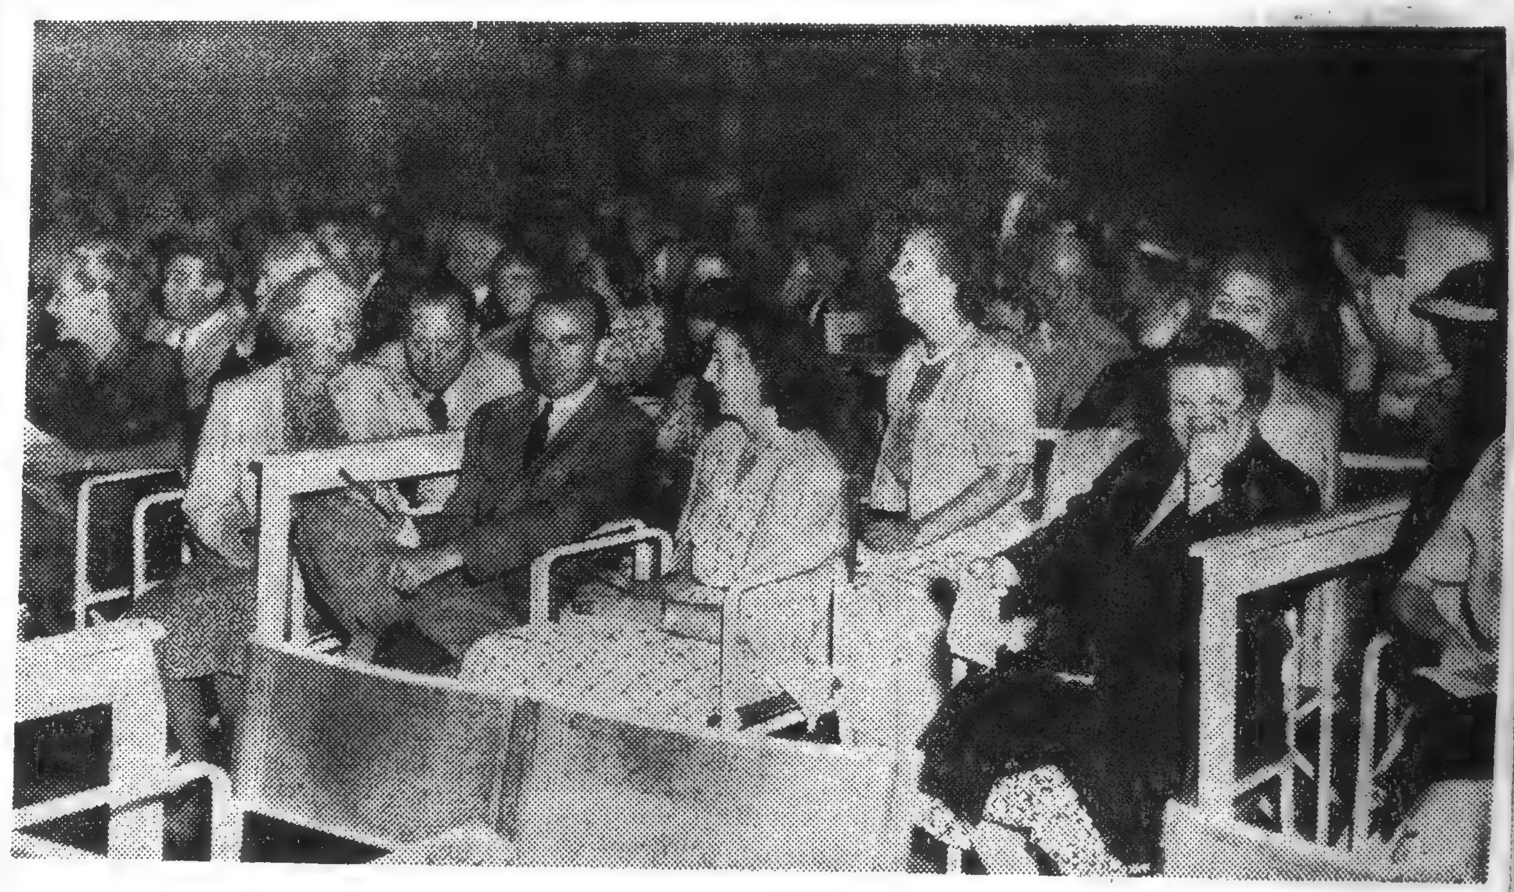
Babbitt

THE VOICE OF TANGLEWOOD: Dr. Serge Koussevitzky sits and listens to a recording of his voice made by this broadcasting crew attached to the Voice of America division of the U.S. Department of State. Records made at Tanglewood yesterday will be translated into 15 different languages and will be broadcast over the Voice of America to eight foreign countries.

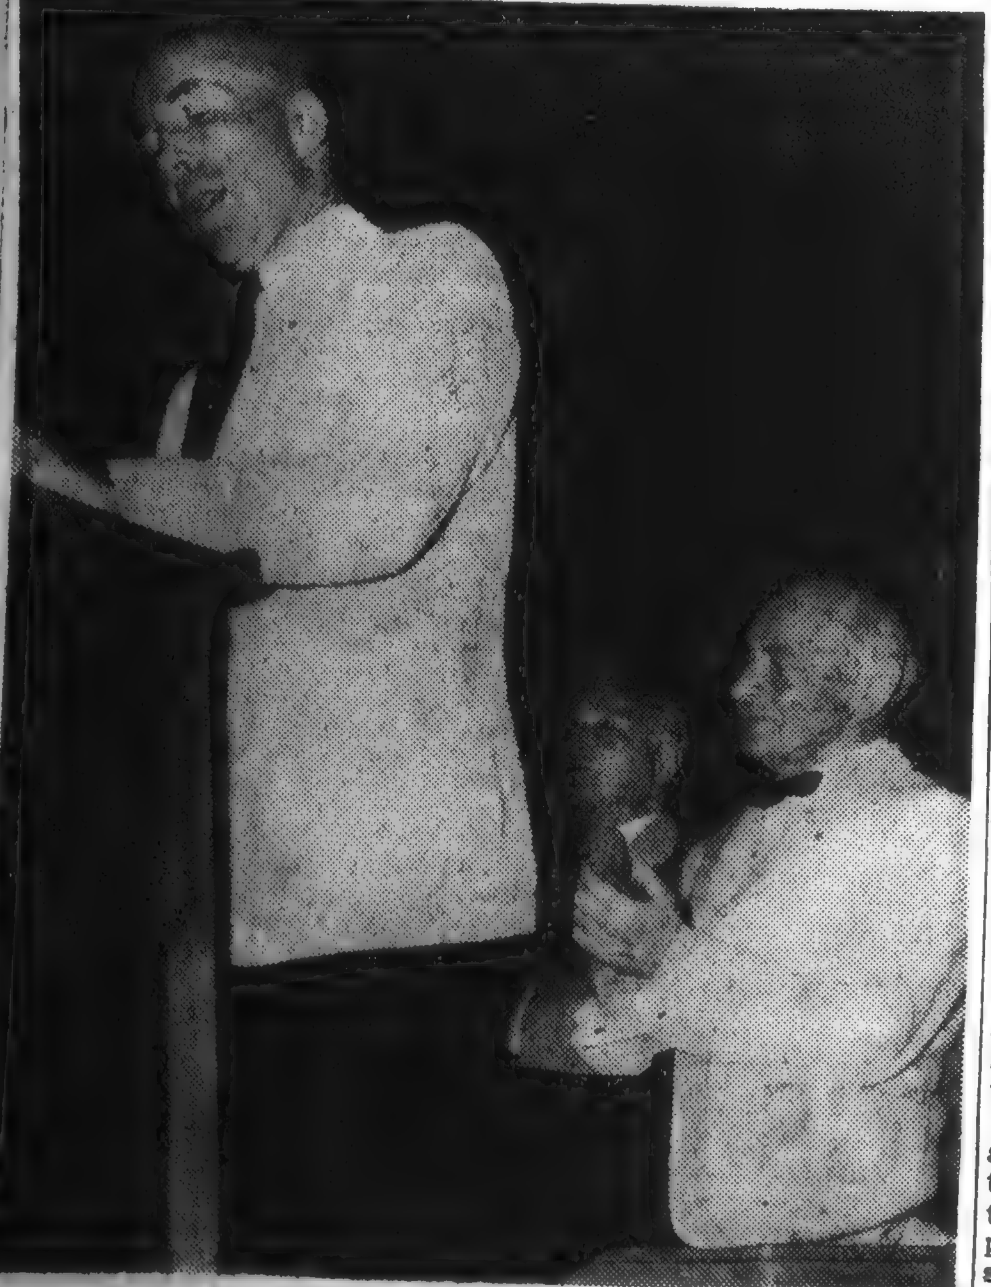


Babbitt

'FIRST LADY' AND FRIEND: Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, who has been described as the fairy godmother of chamber music, enjoyed her picnic lunch before the manifestation in the Shed, with Composer Aaron Copland, assistant director of the Music Center.



IN THE BOXES: Among the Berkshire County residents who turned out for the Tanglewood show were these members of the summer colony of Lenox. In the group are Mr. and Mrs. George K. Livermore, C. D. Jackson, Mr. and Mrs. William Channing, Mrs. Hayden Channing, Miss Anna R. Alexandre, Mrs. Alexandre Hoppin and Miss Kathleen Channing.



POET PRESIDES: Archibald MacLeish, former librarian of the Library of Congress, served as chairman of the manifestation in the Music Shed and reported on the plan to raise funds in this country for the European musicians.

was too terrible to be endured. Another was was inconceivable. Now, three years afterward, not only has our generation on this planet not made peace: We have even lost the certainty that war must not be thought of. Men have thought of war. Men have thought of war as possible. Men have thought of it with fear, with horror, with despair but they have thought of it. And thinking of it—thinking it possible that there should be war—peace, which was an absolute purpose, has become again a hope, longed for but not willed."

Agrees With Koussevitzky

Asserting that Dr. Koussevitzky is right in stating that "What is wrong with our age is ourselves," Dr. MacLeish, declared that "our danger lies in the fact that we no longer understand the meaning of our common humanity and therefore are unable to believe in it. If we believed in our own lives we would believe in all men's lives and if we believed in all men's lives the differences of doctrine would not defeat the will to peace. But how can a man believe in his own life? Only by perceiving its significance. And how can he perceive its significance? One way surely, and not the least, is through the forms of art."

He recalled "the failure of 1919 and all the other failures," adding the world cannot be frightened into peace by fear, or organized into peace by political machinery, or seduced into peace by commercial or economic self-interest."

Peace, he continued, must be founded on the realities of human life and must be evolved creatively out of life rather than being imposed upon life by force of arms or by political and economic organization, however skillfully contrived.

The United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, he said, is the first formal effort to establish peace, stating the "threads exist and are in our hands if we will use them."

He concluded that the Tanglewood on Parade program provided one of these threads which when drawn together will provide a net that can bind for peace.

Justice Frankfurter Speaks

Justice Frankfurter, speaking "for the laymen who know little about music but who love it," described the plan to aid European musicians as a cornerstone for peace, declaring that the only binding force for one world today is the arts, if disciplined.

"We are the limbs of the trunk of European culture," the justice declared, adding, "We cannot cut ourselves off from Europe without cutting off ourselves."

Composer Aaron Copland, assistant director of the Berkshire Music Center, and Dr. Howard Hanson of the Eastman School of Music also spoke. Among the composers present last night on the stage were Darius Milhaud, John Alden Carpenter, Walter Piston and Nicholas Nobokoff. Cablegrams were read from Pablo Casals, Jan Sibelius, Sir Adrian Boult, Francesco Malipiero and others.

The speaking was followed by a program by the entire Boston Symphony Orchestra in which they played Beethoven's Leonore No. 3 overture, "Peter and the Wolf," with Wesley Addy as narrator;

SEYMOUR LIPKIN, winner of this year's Rachmaninoff Fund contest, will play the Piano Concerto No. 1 with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the all-Tchaikovsky concert, with Dr. Koussevitzky conducting, at Tanglewood Tuesday evening, Aug. 10.

Babbitt

WALTZING ON THE LAWN: Hundreds remained after the fireworks display to enjoy dancing on the terrace between the Music Shed and the Tanglewood house. Frederick Fennell directed his "Ferocious Fiddlers" in waltz numbers which the dancers enjoyed until after midnight when they returned to their homes, "tired but happy."

Tanglewood Parades for Benefit of European M

Music

VOLUME I NUMBER I
AUTUMN 1947

EDITORS

Music & Literary . . JOHN CULSHAW
Art . . . . E. M. ROACH
Managing Editor . . F. E. ATTWOOD

Published by
THE DECCA RECORD COMPANY LTD
BRINXTON ROAD LONDON, S.W.9
Telephone: RELiance 3311 (11 lines)

Distributed in The United States of America by The London Gramophone Corporation, 16-18 West 22nd Street, New York.

"Music" is published four times a year. Single copies two shillings each; yearly subscription eight shillings and sixpence, post free.

EDITORIAL

The policy of "Music" can best be expressed by a quotation from the original letter sent to our contributors:—

"It is our intention to produce during the next few months the first issue of a new musical magazine. It is hoped that this will be a serious study of 'classical' and contemporary music, and we intend to approach the finest authorities in the country and request contributions.

"Although the magazine will be published by The Decca Record Company its scope will not be confined to recorded music. Our aim is to place before the public an attractive publication which will try to bridge the gap between the essentially academic type of review and the 'popular' music paper. By producing a magazine which will be as lavish as present circumstances permit and which will contain really first-class material we believe that we shall be meeting a very definite need . . . It is our belief that if we can secure the active co-operation of the best musicians in the country we can then produce a magazine of outstanding musical and literary quality."

We are proud to say we have gained their co-operation, and we think that without conceit we can claim that our contributors have set a high standard. That standard will be maintained and—as nothing is perfect—raised whenever possible. For this purpose we need the support of music-lovers everywhere, and by "music-lovers" we mean those who take an active interest in their wonderful hobby. This paper is not for those who remain stationary in the world of music, for music is the most progressive of the arts.

Progress, then, will be the password. Look around the musical world to-day and see what is happening. Perhaps never before in our history have so many people attended symphony concerts, opera and ballet. We believe that eighty

---

This Clipping From
BUFFALO, N. Y.
NEWS
AUG 16 1948

Berkshire Festival Sets Attendance Record

Special to THE BUFFALO EVENING NEWS

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 16.—The Berkshire Festival came to a close here on the Tanglewood estate with a record attendance of 14,700. Sunday, with a record attendance of 14,700. The previous record was established at a Beethoven program last year when 14,000 attended. Not the least of the factors in the record attendance was Serge Koussevitzky's appearance on the ~~podium~~ and a program consisting of two proved drawing cards, Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony and the Sibelius Second Symphony.

This Clipping From
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
JOURNAL-COURIER
AUG 16 1948

Berkshire Festival Concludes In Lenox

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 15—(AP)—The 11th season of the Berkshire Music Festival ended today on a sweet note.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and ~~Conductor Serge~~ Koussevitzky gave 15 concerts and drew a record-breaking total of 112,500 paying music fans.

Jamming the huge concert shed on the 200-acre estate today was a crowd of 14,700—largest ever for a single performance.

Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra received an ovation after playing Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony and Sibelius' Symphony Number Two.

This Clipping From
FALL RIVER, MASS.
HERALD-NEWS
AUG 16 1948

CONCERT DRAWS 14,700

LENOX, Aug. 16, (AP)—A record-breaking crowd of 14,700 attended the closing performance of the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood yesterday. A new total attendance record of 112,500 paid admissions for the 15 concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, ~~conducted by Serge Kousse~~vitsky, also was set. The festival's 11th season was climaxed by the playing of Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony and Sibelius' Symphony Number Two.

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL
AUG 16 1948

MUSIC FESTIVAL CLOSES

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 15.—(AP)—The 11th season of the Berkshire Music Festival ended today on a sweet note. The Boston Symphony Orchestra and ~~Conductor~~ Serge Koussevitzky gave 15 concerts and drew a record-breaking total of 112,500 paying music fans. Jamming the huge concert shed on the 200-acre estate today was a crowd of 14,700—largest ever for a single performance.

This Clipping From NASHUA, N. H.
TELEGRAPH
AUG 16 1948

Record Crowd at Music Festival

LENOX, Mass., August 16 (AP)—A record-breaking crowd of 14,700 attended the closing performance of the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood yesterday.

A new total attendance record of 112,500 paid admissions for the 15 concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitsky, also was set.

The Festival's 11th season was climaxed by the playing of Beethoven's "Eroica" symphony and Sibelius' symphony number two.

This Clipping From
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER
AUG 16 1948

Record Crowd Of 14,700 Attend Berkshire Final

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 16—(AP)—A record-breaking crowd of 14,700 attended the closing performance of the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood yesterday.

A new total attendance record of 112,500 paid admissions for the 15 concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge ~~Koussevitzky~~, also was set.

The festival's 11th season was climaxed by the playing of Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony and Sibelius' Symphony number two.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
AUG 16 1948

TANGLEWOOD ENDS A BANNER FESTIVAL

14,700 Hear Dr. Koussevitzky Conduct Closing Program—Series Drew 170,500

By ROSS PARMENTER
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 15—After six weeks of almost unbroken music-making, quietness settled on Tanglewood this evening. Students of the Berkshire Music Center gave the last of more than forty programs in the morning, and Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra closed the 1948 Berkshire Music Festival in the afternoon with a concert before 14,700 persons, largest audience to attend a single festival program.

The final concert brought the total attendance to 170,500, thereby breaking all previous records and making this festival the most financially successful of the eleven that have been held here. And this does not include the crowds for the three orchestral rehearsals and the friends of the Berkshire Music Center, who have attended the daily events by and for students. These, too, have set records, drawing an additional 58,000 persons.

The weather and events of the final week-end were characteristic. There was a downpour late yesterday afternoon, but there were clear skies at night, and today was cloudless with the sunlight green-gold on the tree-shaded lawns. And there was music galore.

'Cellist Plays in Theatre

After Gregor Piatigorsky's recital in the theatre yesterday afternoon, for instance, a woman who had already attended the Boston Symphony's rehearsal in the morning, turned to a friend and asked, "What's on next?"

The answer was a program of original works by composition students in the Chamber Music Hall. Then came the big concert in the shed at night. The young people had their innings at this event, for the conductor was Robert Shaw, the four soloists were young singers, and the program consisted of two choral works sung by the ninety-five women and eighty-five men students who form the festival chorus.

The first was Debussy's "The Blessed Damozel." The report was that the ethereal, sensitive music sounded somewhat attenuated at the back of the huge auditorium, but up close it was touching and beautiful. The young women of the chorus sang with skill and sympathy, and Ellen Faull, as the Damozel and Eunice Alberts as the narrator had fresh, youthful voices that fitted the poem, even if they did not have full concert brilliance.

Frances Yeend as Soloist

The other work was Brahms' "Requiem," sung in the original German and given without an intermission. To one listener it sounded rather long, but it was carefully prepared and the chorus, ranged in six tiers behind the orchestra, often sang with lovely effect. Frances Yeend, as the soprano soloist, revealed a pleasant, easy flowing voice, but her singing was not especially expressive. James Pease, the baritone, however, had dramatic emphasis, as well as a voice of splendid, rich timbre.

Mr. Piatigorsky's program was given as one of the faculty recitals. He was assisted by Ralph Berkowitz, executive assistant to Dr. Koussevitzky. Together they gave the world première of a new sonata written for the 'cellist by Paul Hindemith. It had an impressive closing passacaglia, but the first two movements, inventive and skillfully written as they were, hardly seemed the right preparation for such a finale.

Ovation for Conductor

As was only fitting, Dr. Koussevitzky was the dominating figure of the final concert. To close the festival that he has brought to its present eminence, he chose two famous works from the standard symphonic repertoire, Beethoven's "Eroica" and Sibelius' second symphony. And at the end he received a tumultous, standing ovation that lasted five minutes and brought him back to the stage six times.

The two symphonies came off splendidly. Under other hands the famous funeral march of the "Eroica" has sounded with greater grief, but in consequence the final movement was not overshadowed, and the conductor made it a really stirring resolution of a great work.

In the Sibelius, the wonderful resources of the orchestra were marshaled to a gathering climax that brought cheers before the final roll of the drums.

Tanglewood Parades for Benefit of European M

Music

VOLUME 1 NUMBER 1
AUTUMN 1947

EDITORS

Music & Literary . . JOHN CULSHAW
Art . . . . E. M. ROACH
Managing Editor . . F. E. ATTWOOD

Published by
THE DECCA RECORD COMPANY LTD
BRIXTON ROAD LONDON, S.W.9
Telephone: RELiance 3311 (11 lines)

Distributed in The United States of America by The London Gramophone Corporation, 16/18 West 22nd Street, New York.

"Music" is published four times a year. Single copies two shillings each; yearly subscription eight shillings and sixpence, post free.

EDITORIAL

The policy of "Music" can best be expressed by a quotation from the original letter sent to our contributors:—

"It is our intention to produce during the next few months the first issue of a new musical magazine. It is hoped that this will be a serious study of 'classical' and contemporary music, and we intend to approach the finest authorities in the country and request contributions.

"Although the magazine will be published by The Decca Record Company its scope will not be confined to recorded music. Our aim is to place before the public an attractive publication which will try to bridge the gap between the essentially academic type of review and the 'popular' music paper. By producing a magazine which will be as lavish as present circumstances permit and which will contain really first-class material we believe that we shall be meeting a very definite need . . . It is our belief that if we can secure the active co-operation of the best musicians in the country we can then produce a magazine of outstanding musical and literary quality."

We are proud to say we have gained their co-operation, and we think that without conceit we can claim that our contributors have set a high standard. That standard will be maintained and—as nothing is perfect—raised whenever possible. For this purpose we need the support of music-lovers everywhere, and by "music-lovers" we mean those who take an active interest in their wonderful hobby. This paper is not for those who remain stationary in the world of music, for music is the most progressive of the arts.

Progress, then, will be the password. Look around the musical world to-day and see what is happening. Perhaps never before in our history have so many people attended symphony concerts, opera and ballet. We believe that eighty

1

This Clipping From
BUFFALO, N. Y.
NEWS

AUG 1 6 1948

Berkshire Festival Sets Attendance Record

Special to THE BUFFALO EVENING NEWS.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 16.—The Berkshire Festival came to a close here on the Tanglewood estate with a record attendance of 14,700. Sunday, with a record attendance of 14,700. The previous record was established at a Beethoven program last year when 14,000 attended. Not the least of the factors in the record attendance was Serge Koussevitzky's appearance on the podium and a program consisting of two proved drawing cards, Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony and the Sibelius Second Symphony.

This Clipping From
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
JOURNAL-COURIER

AUG 1 6 1948

Berkshire Festival Concludes In Lenox

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 15—(AP)—The 11th season of the Berkshire Music Festival ended today on a sweet note.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and Conductor Serge Koussevitzky gave 15 concerts and drew a record-breaking total of 112,500 paying music fans.

Jamming the huge concert shed on the 200-acre estate today was a crowd of 14,700—largest ever for a single performance.

Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra received an ovation after playing Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony and Sibelius' Symphony Number Two.

This Clipping From
FALL RIVER, MASS.
HERALD-NEWS

AUG 16 1948

CONCERT DRAWS 14,700

LENOX, Aug. 16, (AP)—A record-breaking crowd of 14,700 attended the closing performance of the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood yesterday. A new total attendance record of 112,500 paid admissions for the 15 concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitsky, also was set. The festival's 11th season was climaxed by the playing of Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony and Sibelius Symphony Number Two.

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

AUG 1 6 1948

MUSIC FESTIVAL CLOSES

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 15.—(AP)—The 11th season of the Berkshire Music Festival ended today on a sweet note. The Boston Symphony Orchestra and Conductor Serge Koussevitzky gave 13 concerts and drew a record-breaking total of 112,500 paying music fans. Jamming the huge concert shed on the 200-acre estate today was a crowd of 14,700—largest ever for a single performance.

This Clipping From
NASHUA, N. H.
TELEGRAPH

AUG 16 1948

Record Crowd at Music Festival

LENOX, Mass., August 16 (AP)—A record-breaking crowd of 14,700 attended the closing performance of the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood yesterday.

A new total attendance record of 112,500 paid admissions for the 15 concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitsky, also was set.

The Festival's 11th season was climaxed by the playing of Beethoven's "Eroica" symphony and Sibelius' symphony number two.

This Cl[illegible]
NEW HA[illegible] CONN.
REGIS[illegible]

AUG 16 1948

Record Crowd Of 14,700 Attend Berkshire Final

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 16—(AP)—A record-breaking crowd of 14,700 attended the closing performance of the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood yesterday.

A new total attendance record of 112,500 paid admissions for the 15 concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, also was set.

The festival's 11th season was climaxed by the playing of Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony and Sibelius' Symphony number two.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

TANGLEWOOD ENDS A BANNER FESTIVAL

14,700 Hear Dr. Koussevitzky Conduct Closing Program—Series Drew 170,500

By ROSS PARMENTER
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 15—After six weeks of almost unbroken music-making, quietness settled on Tanglewood this evening. Students of the Berkshire Music Center gave the last of more than forty programs in the morning, and Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra closed the 1948 Berkshire Music Festival in the afternoon with a concert before 14,700 persons, largest audience to attend a single festival program.

The final concert brought the total attendance to 170,500, thereby breaking all previous records and making this festival the most financially successful of the eleven that have been held here. And this does not include the crowds for the three orchestral rehearsals and the friends of the Berkshire Music Center, who have attended the daily events by and for students. These, too, have set records, drawing an additional 58,000 persons.

The weather and events of the final week-end were characteristic. There was a downpour late yesterday afternoon, but there were clear skies at night, and today was cloudless with the sunlight green-gold on the tree-shaded lawns. And there was music galore.

'Cellist Plays in Theatre

After Gregor Piatigorsky's recital in the theatre yesterday afternoon, for instance, a woman who had already attended the Boston Symphony's rehearsal in the morning, turned to a friend and asked, "What's on next?"

The answer was a program of original works by composition students in the Chamber Music Hall. Then came the big concert in the shed at night. The young people had their innings at this event, for the conductor was Robert Shaw, the four soloists were young singers, and the program consisted of two choral works sung by the ninety-five women and eighty-five men students who form the festival chorus.

The first was Debussy's "The Blessed Damozel." The report was that the ethereal, sensitive music sounded somewhat attenuated at the back of the huge auditorium, but up close it was touching and beautiful. The young women of the chorus sang with skill and sympathy, and Ellen Faull, as the Damozel and Eunice Alberts as the narrator had fresh, youthful voices that fitted the poem, even if they did not have full concert brilliance.

Frances Yeend as Soloist

The other work was Brahms' "Requiem," sung in the original German and given without an intermission. To one listener it sounded rather long, but it was carefully prepared and the chorus, ranged in six tiers behind the orchestra, often sang with lovely effect. Frances Yeend, as the soprano soloist, revealed a pleasant, easy flowing voice, but her singing was not especially expressive. James Pease, the baritone, however, had dramatic emphasis, as well as a voice of splendid, rich timbre.

Mr. Piatigorsky's program was given as one of the faculty recitals. He was assisted by Ralph Berkowitz, executive assistant to Dr. Koussevitzky. Together they gave the world première of a new sonata written for the 'cellist by Paul Hindemith. It had an impressive closing passacaglia, but the first two movements, inventive and skillfully written as they were, hardly seemed the right preparation for such a finale.

Ovation for Conductor

As was only fitting, Dr. Koussevitzky was the dominating figure of the final concert. To close the festival that he has brought to its present eminence, he chose two famous works from the standard symphonic repertoire, Beethoven's "Eroica" and Sibelius' second symphony. And at the end he received a tumultous, standing ovation that lasted five minutes and brought him back to the stage six times.

The two symphonies came off splendidly. Under other hands the famous funeral march of the "Eroica" has sounded with greater grief, but in consequence the final movement was not overshadowed, and the conductor made it a really stirring resolution of a great work.

In the Sibelius, the wonderful resources of the orchestra were marshaled to a gathering climax that brought cheers before the final roll of the drums.

INCORRECT PAGINATION

per cent. of these audiences are intelligent, discriminating music-lovers, anxious to know more about the art and to study it from a variety of angles; to those people this magazine is dedicated. The remaining twenty per cent. of the audiences are the goats, the followers of ''stars,'' the ''personality'' chasers whose knowledge of and interest in music is negligible. We extend our invitation to the goats, and we hope sincerely that our contributors will lead them to another and far more beautiful fold.

To-day the focal point of musical composition is on Britain, and our progress during the past thirty years has been astonishing. To the composers of to-day and to-morrow we offer our respect and support. Theirs is the true creative work, but we can help them by discussing their music in our columns. For this we demand sincerity and knowledge from our writers. At the same time we intend to keep our readers well-informed of musical events in other countries. In this issue Dr. H. D. McKinney deals with current musical life in America, and in future editions we hope to carry reports from Europe.

Again, there is to-day great progress in the field of recording and record reproduction. This is, of course, our own special corner, and we shall endeavour to report accurately on every development that takes place. In many ways this progress has been the most amazing of all; the gramophone has developed from a kind of cheap and rather unpleasant toy into a musical instrument of the highest quality. This theme is fully discussed in this issue by Dyneley Hussey, the music critic of "The Times", but even as we write we cannot help pausing to think of the miracle which has made it possible for a great Symphony Orchestra of over a hundred players to be heard on demand in the living-room. There always was a danger, of course, that repeated hearings of a bad recording would establish false standards in the listeners' minds. To-day this danger has been overcome by scientific developments which enable the home listener to appreciate what we have chosen to call elsewhere "the living music of the concert hall."

Alongside the progress of music, musicians and musical reproduction there has been lamentably little progress in musical journalism. New publications, alive to the necessity of constructive thought in writing, have had short but beautiful existences. "Music" firmly intends to live even longer than Mr. Bernard Shaw, but to do this it will need support, and the right support.

The musicians are with us all the way; can we rely on the music-lovers to follow? In the cause of Music (and progress) we believe that they will.

Reproduction in whole or part of any material in this publication is expressly reserved. Inquiries for permission to reproduce should be made to The Editor, ''Music'' The Decca Record Company Ltd., 1/3, Brixton Road, London, S.W.9.

THE AMERICAN SCENE

some aspects of American musical life

by

Dr. H. D. McKINNEY

A CHANCE remark by a British publisher interested in American music that "Tanglewood must be the American Glyndebourne" has led me to conclude that an article such as this might well attempt to show in what characteristics our American music scene differs from yours here in England. For, of course, nothing could be more antipodal than Tanglewood, our great eastern summer festival held each year in the Berkshire Hills of Massachusetts, and your Glyndebourne Opera Festival, so beautifully housed on the rolling Sussex downs. The external character, as well as the impelling spirit behind these enterprises, is widely different, and this difference represents, it seems to me, that which exists between the English and American practices in music.

Without attempting to push this point too far or trying to define the real spirit of Demos, it may be said fairly that Tanglewood and all it represents is in every sense an epitome of the democratic aspect of our American music scene. For one thing, it is uncommonly wide in the scope of its activities and in the types of people for whom it was created. For another, it is a good example of a successful American "cultural activity", planned and executed by a liberal-minded artistic aristocracy for the benefit of a large number of people. And finally, it represents the tremendous desire of the Americans to improve themselves—to pull themselves out of a rather poor past, artistically speaking—and their willingness to pay whatever it costs. Let me describe this annual American festival briefly, for there is nothing like it in the world, and it represents some of our best and a few of our less worthy characteristics.

It may be said to be the inspiration of a typical foreign-born, idealistically-minded American artist who has—like so many

---

Tanglewood Parades for Be

This Clipping From
BUFFALO, N. Y.
NEWS
AUG 16 1948

Berkshire Festival Sets Attendance Record

Special to The BUFFALO EVENING NEWS.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 16.—The Berkshire Festival came to a close here on the Tanglewood estate with a record attendance of 14,700 Sunday, with a record attendance of 14,700. The previous record was established at a Beethoven program last year when 14,000 attended. Not the least of the factors in the record attendance was Serge Koussevitzky's appearance on the ~~podium~~ and a program consisting of two proved drawing cards, Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony and the Sibelius Second Symphony.

This Clipping From
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
JOURNAL-COURIER
AUG 16 1948

Berkshire Festival Concludes In Lenox

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 15—(AP)—The 11th season of the Berkshire Music Festival ended today on a sweet note.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and ~~Conductor Serge~~ Koussevitzky gave 15 concerts and drew a record-breaking total of 112,500 paying music fans.

Jamming the huge concert shed on the 200-acre estate today was a crowd of 14,700—largest ever for a single performance.

Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra received an ovation after playing Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony and Sibelius' Symphony Number Two.

This Clipping From
FALL RIVER, MASS.
HERALD-NEWS
AUG 16 1948

CONCERT DRAWS 14,700

LENOX, Aug. 16, (AP)—A record-breaking crowd of 14,700 attended the closing performance of the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood yesterday. A new total attendance record of 112,500 paid admissions for the 15 concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, ~~conducted by Serge Kousse~~vitsky, also was set. The festival's 11th season was climaxed by the playing of Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony and Sibelius' Symphony Number Two.

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL
AUG 16 1948

MUSIC FESTIVAL CLOSES

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 15.—(AP)—The 11th season of the Berkshire Music Festival ended today on a sweet note. The Boston Symphony Orchestra and ~~Conductor~~ Serge Koussevitzky gave 15 concerts and drew a record-breaking total of 112,500 paying music fans. Jamming the huge concert shed on the 200-acre estate today was a crowd of 14,700—largest ever for a single performance.

This Clipping From
NASHUA, N. H.
TELEGRAPH
AUG 16 1948

Record Crowd at Music Festival

LENOX, Mass., August 16 (AP)—A record-breaking crowd of 14,700 attended the closing performance of the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood yesterday.

A new total attendance record of 112,500 paid admissions for the 15 concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, also was set.

The Festival's 11th season was climaxed by the playing of Beethoven's "Eroica" symphony and Sibelius' symphony number two.

This C[illegible]
NEW HA[illegible] CONN.
REGI[illegible]
AUG 16 1948

Record Crowd Of 14,700 Attend Berkshire Final

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 16—(AP)—A record-breaking crowd of 14,700 attended the closing performance of the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood yesterday.

A new total attendance record of 112,500 paid admissions for the 15 concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, also was set.

The festival's 11th season was climaxed by the playing of Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony and Sibelius' Symphony number two.

This Clipping From
N. Y.

ENDS IVAL

ssevitzky gram—
,500

NTER
TIMES.
15—After unbroken settled on . Students sic Center than forty rning, and the Boston closed the Festival in concert be-argest audigle festival

ought the 0,500, there-ous records al the most the eleven
e. And this owds for the sals and the shire Music ttended the for students.
cords, draw-
00 persons.
vents of the haracteristic.
late yester-
e were clear today was light green-d lawns. And re.

Theatre

gorsky's resterday after-woman who d the Boston in the morn-
nd and asked,

program of mposition stu-
r Music Hall. concert in the young people this event, for
Robert Shaw,
re young singers, and the program consisted of two choral works sung by the ninety-five women and eighty-five men students who form the festival chorus.

The first was Debussy's "The Blessed Damozel." The report was that the ethereal, sensitive music sounded somewhat attenuated at the back of the huge auditorium, but up close it was touching and beautiful. The young women of the chorus sang with skill and sympathy, and Ellen Faull, as the Damozel and Eunice Alberts as the narrator had fresh, youthful voices that fitted the poem, even if they did not have full concert brilliance.

Frances Yeend as Soloist

The other work was Brahms' "Requiem," sung in the original German and given without an intermission. To one listener it sounded rather long, but it was carefully prepared and the chorus, ranged in six tiers behind the orchestra, often sang with lovely effect. Frances Yeend, as the soprano soloist, revealed a pleasant, easy flowing voice, but her singing was not especially expressive. James Pease, the baritone, however, had dramatic emphasis, as well as a voice of splendid, rich timbre.

Mr. Piatigorsky's program was given as one of the faculty recitals. He was assisted by Ralph Berkowitz, executive assistant to Dr. Koussevitzky. Together they gave the world première of a new sonata written for the 'cellist by Paul Hindemith. It had an impressive closing passacaglia, but the first two movements, inventive and skillfully written as they were, hardly seemed the right preparation for such a finale.

Ovation for Conductor

As was only fitting, Dr. Koussevitzky was the dominating figure of the final concert. To close the festival that he has brought to its present eminence, he chose two famous works from the standard symphonic repertoire, Beethoven's "Eroica" and Sibelius' second symphony. And at the end he received a tumultous, standing ovation that lasted five minutes and brought him back to the stage six times.

The two symphonies came off splendidly. Under other hands the famous funeral march of the "Eroica" has sounded with greater grief, but in consequence the final movement was not overshadowed, and the conductor made it a really stirring resolution of a great work.

In the Sibelius, the wonderful resources of the orchestra were marshaled to a gathering climax that brought cheers before the final roll of the drums.

[279]

American leaders of to-day—come up the hard way, and so is enthusiastic about helping others who are trying to do the same. Taking over the more or less derelict remains of a summer festival that was originally slanted toward the ideal of providing the smart Berkshire Hills district with the social amenities that are so conspicuously evident at Glyndebourne, Serge Koussevitzky and his co-operative board of directors of the Boston Symphony Orchestra have developed Tanglewood into a powerful directive force in American musical life. They had the good fortune to be able to acquire one of the most beautiful sites imaginable for their enterprise—an old Boston family estate overlooking a little lake, with the blue Berkshire peaks rising in quiet grandeur beyond. It was in a cottage on this New England estate that Hawthorne wrote his famous Tales; hence the name.

On the broad lawns above the lake there has been erected, after plans by an artist famous for his success with this type of architecture, a series of functional buildings for the varied needs of the festival. A huge shed, open on three sides to the fresh breezes of that section of country, provides ideal listening facilities for many thousands seated beneath its roof, without any need for amplification from the platform. And thousands more, sitting in picnic fashion on the lawns outside, can also enjoy the orchestral music, so good are the shed's acoustics. A little theatre and a miniature chamber music hall (each seating several hundred) provide the necessary facilities for the classes in orchestral ensemble, directing, interpretation, opera producing held under Koussevitzky's general direction and open to talented musicians from all parts of the country. For Tanglewood has been designed not only as a summer festival offering the standard fare that is provided by one of the world's great orchestras, but also as a school for perpetuating the musical ideals which Koussevitzky has gradually evolved for American music during the years of his residence in the new world.

This multifarious provision for musical activities, under economic conditions which make them possible for everyone, is a striking feature of the American scene. If we do not become a musical nation it certainly will not be for lack of opportunities! The concert-goer in such great metropolitan centres as New York, Philadelphia and Chicago has, during the greater part of the season, such a glut of musical riches laid out for him as to prove quite stultifying. Our tendency to over-statement has often been remarked in the comparatively austere confines of this land. New York City, the centre of American artistic activity, has, for example, a regular orchestral diet provided by three great orchestras, the Philharmonic, Philadelphia and Boston Symphony, each of which gives a series of subscription concerts during the season. In addition, the N.B.C. provides a weekly broadcast programme, many of them under Toscanini's direction. Through the whole season from October to May there is a constant flow of solo recitals by artists of international renown, as well as by the debutantes from Dubugne, anxious to try their fledgling wings in a New York appearance, and in an attempt to get a New York "notice." An excellent five o'clock Sunday chamber music series provides opportunities for becoming acquainted with this genus. The Metropolitan Opera goes on its present undistinguished way, providing about fourteen weeks of generally disappointing performances; but it does provide opportunity for hearing the regular operatic repertoire under conditions better than anything available here since the war. The civic fathers have had foresight enough (spurred on, one suspects, by such dauntless figures as former mayor La Guardia, who is a great music fan) to turn over a good-sized theatre which they unexpectedly found on their hands to Civic Opera and Civic Symphony Concerts. The results have been distinctly encouraging; you have heard some of the young Civic singers here in this year's London season, and Leonard Bernstein (one of the first young conductors to come out of the Tanglewood atmosphere) has given enthusiastic, if not always matured, interpretations of old and contemporary classics.

Such a breathless round would seem confusing to anyone but an American. But, on a somewhat different scale, it goes on the country over. Concert-going has become big business, centred in two large combines of managers in New York, each competing for the patronage of hundreds of local managers from coast to coast. The results are by no means always desirable from the artistic point of view, for doubtful dodges are sometimes employed to ensure audience appeal. But such a system does enable little backwater

---

This Clipping From EW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
UG 16

LEWOOD ENDS
NNER FESTIVA

Hear Dr. Koussevitzk
t Closing Program—es Drew 170,500

OSS PARMENTER
l to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

Mass., Aug. 15—Afte of almost unbroke
ing, quietness settled o d this evening. Student erkshire Music Cente ast of more than forty in the morning, and sevitzky and the Boston
Orchestra closed the hire Music Festival in on with a concert bepersons, largest audi-tend a single festival concert brought the lance to 170,500, there-all previous records this festival the most uccessful of the eleven en held here. And this lude the crowds for the tral rehearsals and the the Berkshire Music have attended the

by and for students.
ave set records, draw-
ional 58,000 persons.
er and events of the d were characteristic.
downpour late yester-
, but there were clear ht, and today was the sunlight greene-shaded lawns. And sic galore.

lays in Theatre

r Piatigorsky's reatre yesterday after-ance, a woman who ttended the Boston
hearsal in the morn-
a friend and asked,
t?"

was a program of by composition stu-
hamber Music Hall.
big concert in the
The young people gs at this event, for was Robert Shaw, four soloists were young singers, and the program consisted of two choral works sung by the ninety-five women and eighty-five men students who form the festival chorus.

The first was Debussy's "The Blessed Damozel." The report was that the ethereal, sensitive music sounded somewhat attenuated at the back of the huge auditorium, but up close it was touching and beautiful. The young women of the chorus sang with skill and sympathy, and Ellen Faull, as the Damozel and Eunice Alberts as the narrator had fresh, youthful voices that fitted the poem, even if they did not have full concert brilliance.

Frances Yeend as Soloist

The other work was Brahms' "Requiem," sung in the original German and given without an intermission. To one listener it sounded rather long, but it was carefully prepared and the chorus, ranged in six tiers behind the orchestra, often sang with lovely effect. Frances Yeend, as the soprano soloist, revealed a pleasant, easy flowing voice, but her singing was not especially expressive. James Pease, the baritone, however, had dramatic emphasis, as well as a voice of splendid, rich timbre.

Mr. Piatigorsky's program was given as one of the faculty recitals. He was assisted by Ralph Berkowitz, executive assistant to Dr. Koussevitzky. Together they gave the world première of a new sonata written for the 'cellist by Paul Hindemith. It had an impressive closing passacaglia, but the first two movements, inventive and skillfully written as they were, hardly seemed the right preparation for such a finale.

Ovation for Conductor

As was only fitting, Dr. Koussevitzky was the dominating figure of the final concert. To close the festival that he has brought to its present eminence, he chose two famous works from the standard symphonic repertoire, Beethoven's "Eroica" and Sibelius' second symphony. And at the end he received a tumultous, standing ovation that lasted five minutes and brought him back to the stage six times.

The two symphonies came off splendidly. Under other hands the famous funeral march of the "Eroica" has sounded with greater grief, but in consequence the final movement was not overshadowed, and the conductor made it a really stirring resolution of a great work.

In the Sibelius, the wonderful resources of the orchestra were marshaled to a gathering climax that brought cheers before the final roll of the drums.

Tanglewood Parades for Be

This Clipping From
BUFFALO, N. Y.
NEWS

AUG 16 1948

Berkshire Festival Sets Attendance Record

Special to THE BUFFALO EVENING NEWS.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 16.—The Berkshire Festival came to a close here on the Tanglewood estate with a record attendance of 14,700. Sunday, with a record attendance of 14,700. The previous record was established at a Beethoven program last year when 14,000 attended. Not the least of the factors in the record attendance was Serge Koussevitzky's appearance on the [redacted] and a program consisting of two proved drawing cards, Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony and the Sibelius Second Symphony.

This Clipping From
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
JOURNAL-COURIER

AUG 16 1948

Berkshire Festival Concludes In Lenox

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 15—(AP)—The 11th season of the Berkshire Music Festival ended today on a sweet note.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and Con[redacted] Koussevitzky gave 15 concerts and drew a record-breaking total of 112,500 paying music fans.

Jamming the huge concert shed on the 200-acre estate today was a crowd of 14,700—largest ever for a single performance.

Dr. Koussevitsky and the orchestra received an ovation after playing Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony and Sibelius' Symphony Number Two.

This Clipping From
FALL RIVER, MASS.
HERALD-NEWS

AUG 16 1948

CONCERT DRAWS 14,700

LENOX, Aug. 16, (AP)—A record-breaking crowd of 14,700 attended the closing performance of the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood yesterday. A new total attendance record of 112,500 paid admissions for the 15 concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, [redacted] vitsky, also was set. The festival's 11th season was climaxed by the playing of Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony and Sibelius' Symphony Number Two.

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

AUG 16 1948

MUSIC FESTIVAL CLOSES

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 15.—(AP)—The 11th season of the Berkshire Music Festival ended today on a sweet note. The Boston Symphony Orchestra and Con[redacted] Serge Koussevitzky gave 15 concerts and drew a record-breaking total of 112,500 paying music fans. Jamming the huge concert shed on the 200-acre estate today was a crowd of 14,700—largest ever for a single performance.

This Clipping From
NASHUA, N. H.
TELEGRAPH

AUG 16 1948

Record Crowd at Music Festival

LENOX, Mass., August 16 (AP)—A record-breaking crowd of 14,700 attended the closing performance of the Berkshire Music Festi[redacted] Tanglewood yesterday.

A new total attendance record of 112,500 paid admissions for the 15 concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitsky, also was set.

The Festival's 11th season was climaxed by the playing of Beethoven's "Eroica" symphony and Sibelius' symphony number two.

This C
NEW HA CONN.
REGIS

AUG 16

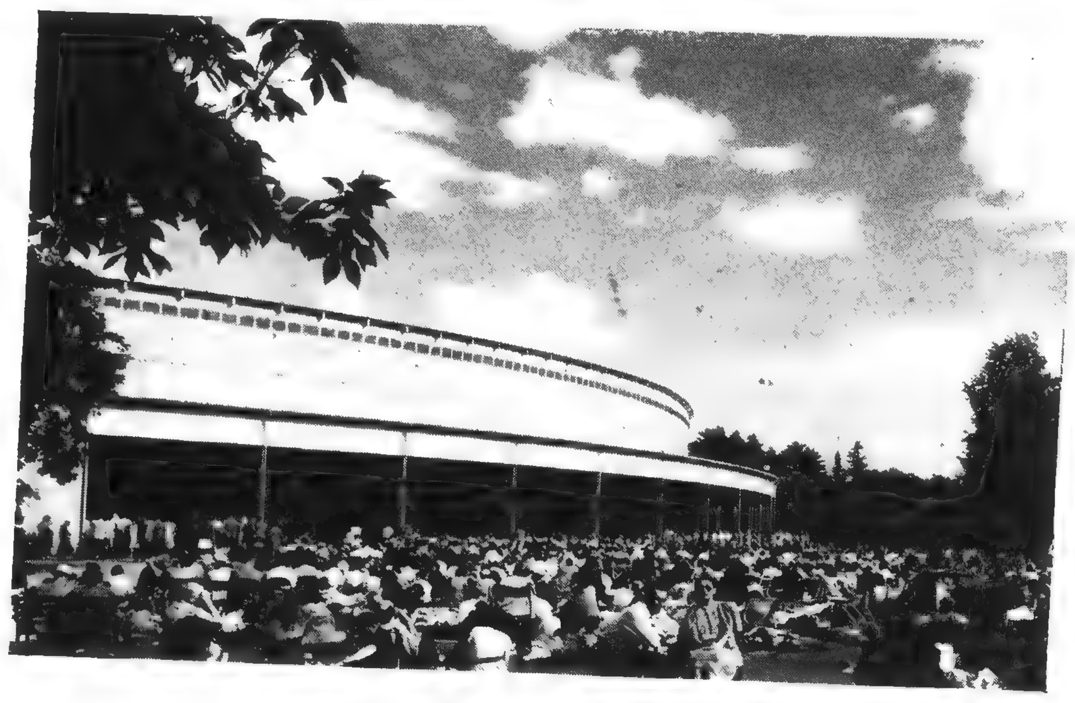
Record Crowd Of 14,700 Attend Berkshire Final

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 16—(AP)—A record-breaking crowd of 14,700 attended the closing performance of the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood yesterday.

A new total attendance record of 112,500 paid admissions for the 15 concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge [redacted], also was set.

The festival's 11th season was climaxed by the playing of Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony and Sibelius' Symphony number two.

communities, isolated by hundreds of miles from any real centre, to hear good music, well interpreted. Even the orchestras have taken to travelling; for with us, as with you, the war provided a tremendous upsurge of interest in orchestral music. Such first-class organizations as the Philadelphia Orchestra go annually on long and tiresome tours, and last spring Pierre Monteux brought the fine instrument he has fashioned in San Francisco on a tour to the east coast, covering some six thousand miles and playing forty-five concerts in forty-seven days.



Broadcasting, like concert management, is big business. And so it has to be made to pay. The result is a mass of contradictions; advertisers fasten on Toscanini, Koussevitzky, the Town Hall Chamber Music Concerts mentioned above, and the Metropolitan Opera, just as they do on Bob Hope, soap operas, mystery stories, quiz programmes, news reports, to carry the announcement of their wares. The "commercials" tacked on to good programmes, which are thus made available for over 35,000,000 receiving sets, without their owners paying a single penny, sound bad enough to us—to you they would be impossible. But the competition between the various broadcasting chains or networks, the result of America's much-vaunted system of private enterprise, has brought about a variety in programmes and a perfection in production technique which cannot be equalled elsewhere. While we perhaps cannot match the sustained novelty interest of your Third Programme, we do have plenty of new and unusual features. And I have yet to hear anything on the B.B.C. approaching the interpretative standards which are common to all our best programmes.

Another evidence of the spawning, yeasty condition of our musical traditions is the state of our musical education, for upon the generations just now coming to maturity depends the trend of our developments during the next few, very vital years. We have secured real independence of Europe in so far as the professional training of musicians is concerned. Where only a few years ago every student of high ambition felt he had to complete his musical training in Europe, to-day schools such as the Curtis in Philadelphia, the Eastman in Rochester, and the Juilliard in New York are not surpassed anywhere. There are some educators who feel that the pendulum has, in true American fashion, swung too far the other way, and that we now provide too many opportunities for our young musicians. They are apt to lack the sense of struggle and desire for a slow development over a period of years which alone can give an artist real maturity.

Our greatest problem then is not that of providing adequate opportunities for training professional musicians; rather is it the lack of proper opportunities within our social fabric for him to practise his profession, once he has been trained. It is encouraging to note that such schools as the Juilliard are inspiring their graduates to become leaders in the musical activities of the various communities from which they have come to New York, rather than encouraging them to become merely skilled performers.

A notable success in musical education, at least from the performing point of view, has been the enormous programmes in music conceived and carried out in the American lower and secondary schools. Youngsters in all the forty-eight states (naturally some districts provide better opportunities than others) have learned through class instruction and ensemble playing in orchestras and bands how to play music, and play it well. The greatest drawback to this mass movement in technical training was that it neglected to emphasise sufficiently the humanistic aspect of music, its place as a powerful factor in the development of the spiritual world of the past and its part in any decent living plan to-day. The experiences of many of the school supervisors of music in the recent war has changed their viewpoint considerably, and in the future music in the schools and universities is liable to be taught in a broader and more vital fashion. The great mass of American G.I.s now flooding the universities, eager to take advantage of opportunities never before available for them, is bound to alter educational procedure in music as well as in many other subjects.

As to American composers, not much can be said in an article as short as this. We have long had European domination here, clear back to the time in the nineteenth century when old Anthony Philip Heinrich came over from Bohemia and settled in the wilds of mid-

---

Tanglewood Parades for Be

This Clipping From
BUFFALO, N. Y.
NEWS
AUG 16 1948

Berkshire Festival Sets Attendance Record

Special to The Buffalo Evening News.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 16.—The Berkshire Festival came to a close here on the Tanglewood estate with a record attendance of 14,700. Sunday, with a record attendance of 14,700. The previous record was established at a Beethoven program last year when 14,000 attended. Not the least of the factors in the record attendance was Serge Koussevitzky's appearance on the ~~podium~~ and a program consisting of two proved drawing cards, Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony and the Sibelius Second Symphony.

This Clipping From
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
JOURNAL-COURIER
AUG 16 1948

Berkshire Festival Concludes In Lenox

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 15—(AP)—The 11th season of the Berkshire Music Festival ended today on a sweet note.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and ~~Conductor Serge~~ Koussevitzky gave 15 concerts and drew a record-breaking total of 112,500 paying music fans.

Jamming the huge concert shed on the 200-acre estate today was a crowd of 14,700—largest ever for a single performance.

Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra received an ovation after playing Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony and Sibelius' Symphony Number Two.

This Clipping From
FALL RIVER, MASS.
HERALD-NEWS
AUG 16 1948

CONCERT DRAWS 14,700

LENOX, Aug. 16, (AP)—A record-breaking crowd of 14,700 attended the closing performance of the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood yesterday. A new total attendance record of 112,500 paid admissions for the 15 concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, ~~conducted by Serge Kousse~~vitzky, also was set. The festival's 11th season was climaxed by the playing of Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony and Sibelius' Symphony Number Two.

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL
AUG 16 1948

MUSIC FESTIVAL CLOSES

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 15.—(AP)—The 11th season of the Berkshire Music Festival ended today on a sweet note. The Boston Symphony Orchestra and ~~Conductor~~ Serge Koussevitzky gave 15 concerts and drew a record-breaking total of 112,500 paying music fans. Jamming the huge concert shed on the 200-acre estate today was a crowd of 14,700—largest ever for a single performance.

This Clipping From
NASHUA, N. H.
TELEGRAPH
AUG 16 1948

Record Crowd at Music Festival

LENOX, Mass., August 16 (AP)—A record-breaking crowd of 14,700 attended the closing performance of the ~~Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood yesterday~~.

A new total attendance record of 112,500 paid admissions for the 15 concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, also was set.

The Festival's 11th season was climaxed by the playing of Beethoven's "Eroica" symphony and Sibelius' symphony number two.

This Clipping From
NEW HAV CONN.
REGI
AUG 16 1948

Record Crowd Of 14,700 Attend Berkshire Final

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 16—(AP)—A record-breaking crowd of 14,700 attended the closing performance of the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood yesterday.

A new total attendance record of 112,500 paid admissions for the 15 concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge ~~Koussevitzky~~, also was set.

The festival's 11th season was climaxed by the playing of Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony and Sibelius' Symphony number two.

This Clipping From YORK, N. Y.
ES
AUG 16 19

OD ENDS
FESTIVAL

Koussevitzk Program—170,500

MENTER
York Times.
Aug. 15—After nost unbroken ness settled on ning. Students
Music Center
ore than forty morning, and and the Boston a closed the ic Festival in a concert be-largest audisingle festival brought the 170,500, therevious records tival the most of the eleven here. And this crowds for the arsals and the kshire Music attended the

for students.
records, draw-
000 persons.
events of the characteristic.
r late yesterere were clear
today was nlight greened lawns. And re.

Theatre

igorsky's resterday after-woman who
the Boston
in the morn-
d and asked,

program of position stu-
Music Hall.
ncert in the oung people is event, for obert Shaw, young singers, and the program consisted of two choral works sung by the ninety-five women and eighty-five men students who form the festival chorus.

The first was Debussy's "The Blessed Damozel." The report was that the ethereal, sensitive music sounded somewhat attenuated at the back of the huge auditorium, but up close it was touching and beautiful. The young women of the chorus sang with skill and sympathy, and Ellen Faull, as the Damozel and Eunice Alberts as the narrator had fresh, youthful voices that fitted the poem, even if they did not have full concert brilliance.

Frances Yeend as Soloist

The other work was Brahms' "Requiem," sung in the original German and given without an intermission. To one listener it sounded rather long, but it was carefully prepared and the chorus, ranged in six tiers behind the orchestra, often sang with lovely effect. Frances Yeend, as the soprano soloist, revealed a pleasant, easy flowing voice, but her singing was not especially expressive. James Pease, the baritone, however, had dramatic emphasis, as well as a voice of splendid, rich timbre.

Mr. Piatigorsky's program was given as one of the faculty recitals. He was assisted by Ralph Berkowitz, executive assistant to Dr. Koussevitzky. Together they gave the world première of a new sonata written for the 'cellist by Paul Hindemith. It had an impressive closing passacaglia, but the first two movements, inventive and skillfully written as they were, hardly seemed the right preparation for such a finale.

Ovation for Conductor

As was only fitting, Dr. Koussevitzky was the dominating figure of the final concert. To close the festival that he has brought to its present eminence, he chose two famous works from the standard symphonic repertoire, Beethoven's "Eroica" and Sibelius' second symphony. And at the end he received a tumultous, standing ovation that lasted five minutes and brought him back to the stage six times.

The two symphonies came off splendidly. Under other hands the famous funeral march of the "Eroica" has sounded with greater grief, but in consequence the final movement was not overshadowed, and the conductor made it a really stirring rendition of a great work.

In the Sibelius, the wonderful resources of the orchestra were marshaled to a gathering climax that brought cheers before the final roll of the drums.

[279]

western America to write his Berliozian orchestral works, to which he gave such fanciful names as Ornithological Combat of Kings and The Columbial. There have been plenty of other foreign born composers who have carried on this tradition, as well as some American-born ones. Only in recent times have any real American voices begun to sound out their "barbarous yawps", as Whitman did so successfully in poetry. There is a spirit of crude vitality expressed in strongly rhythmical terms in the music of Roy Harris. His Third Symphony, known over here, is certainly his best work so far; lately this voice has somehow lost its vigour; perhaps he has become too engrossed in the teaching job which now interests him. Aaron Copland, once one of the B.Y.P. from Brooklyn, has developed steadily as an artist and has recently written some of our most significant music. A work such as his Appalachian Spring seems to many of us to contain the very essence of simple and honest Americanism. More readily perceived by you, perhaps, is the native flair of a man such as Blitzstein, for his music contains definite social connotations, quite brilliantly conveyed in the American vernacular. His Cradle will Rock and No for an Answer could have come out of no other background. Howard Hanson (at present director of the Eastman School) is naturally, because of his ancestry, thought of as a sort of native Sibelius, that composer's bleakness being somewhat tempered and adulterated in Hanson by a feeling of American sentimentality. He has been an ardent champion of contemporary music, and holds each year in Rochester an important festival made up entirely of American works. William Schuman is another composer who has undertaken to direct an important school; he has headed the Juilliard for over a year now and has ambitious plans for its further development. Samuel Barber, who has built his attractive style solidly on the foundations of the past, seems to have become more adventurous in his most recent works. Whether this will mar the strong sincerity and fine sense of form that are felt in his earlier style remains to be seen.

Two further parallels between English and American music may be briefly drawn. The war brought us, as it did you, a number of German and Continental scholars who have devoted their lives to what has awkwardly become known as musicology. Such men as Alfred Einstein and Curt Sachs have done considerable publishing since they have settled in America. The former has issued his fine new work on Mozart, based largely on his research in connection with revising the Köchel catalogue; and the latter has published his English edition of the History of the Dance, History of Musical Instruments and a monumental Commonwealth of Art since coming to New York. Musicology seems to have come into its own with the other sciences in the United States.

No statistics are available, but it would seem that the serious English composers have a much better chance of supporting themselves by writing music for the films than have our men. And a most telling and appropriate way they have made it, too; it would seem a better way of boiling the pot than teaching, which so many American composers have been forced into. Among the effective American film music writers have been Virgil Thomson (whose setting of Gertrude Stein's last opera Mother of Us All I heard just before I left New York), Aaron Copland, who provided almost ideal film settings for Of Mice and Men and Our Town, and Marc Blitzstein.

As one contemplates the hurrying, complex, shifting American scene from this distance of three thousand miles, it seems almost as if anything might happen there. War has certainly greatly accelerated American musical growth; even two years after the vent it is impossible to tell whether European music (together with European culture) has been dealt a death-blow, and whether America will be able to sustain the centre of gravity in an artistic ux that of necessity has shifted across the Atlantic. Our American musical life faces a critical period in its development; will it be able to maintain a real individuality in the face of the European onset and at the same time carry on the ideals of the great European traditions of the past? With lessons learned from history, will the American composer be able to let his style develop easily and naturally, without the undue forcing so prevalent in the world about him, finding his inspiration in the life of to-day, and, expressing himself simply, forcefully and sincerely? Time alone can tell.

Some of the greatest music of the past has come out of such an interaction of forces as is now taking place in America; there is no reason why we may not hope for similar results again.

THE SECOND ISSUE OF

Music

WILL CONTAIN A SPECIAL FEATURE ON

MUSICAL EDUCATION

CONTRIBUTED BY LEADING AUTHORITIES

Tanglewood Parades for Be

This Clipping From
BUFFALO, N. Y.
NEWS

AUG 16 1948

Berkshire Festival Sets Attendance Record

Special to The BUFFALO EVENING NEWS.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 16.—The Berkshire Festival came to a close here on the Tanglewood estate with a record attendance of 14,700 Sunday, with a record attendance of 14,700. The previous record was established at a Beethoven program last year when 14,000 attended. Not the least of the factors in the record attendance was Serge Koussevitzky's appearance on the [redacted] and a program consisting of two proved drawing cards, Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony and the Sibelius Second Symphony.

This Clipping From
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
JOURNAL-COURIER

AUG 16 1948

Berkshire Festival Concludes In Lenox

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 15—(AP)—The 11th season of the Berkshire Music Festival ended today on a sweet note.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and Con[redacted] Koussevitzky gave 15 concerts and drew a record-breaking total of 112,500 paying music fans.

Jamming the huge concert shed on the 200-acre estate today was a crowd of 14,700—largest ever for a single performance.

Dr. Koussevitsky and the orchestra received an ovation after playing Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony and Sibelius' Symphony Number Two.

This Clipping From
FALL RIVER, MASS.
HERALD-NEWS

AUG 16 1948

CONCERT DRAWS 14,700

LENOX, Aug. 16, (AP)—A record-breaking crowd of 14,700 attended the closing performance of the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood yesterday. A new total attendance record of 112,500 paid admissions for the 15 concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, [redacted] vitsky, also was set. The festival's 11th season was climaxed by the playing of Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony and Sibelius' Symphony Number Two.

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

AUG 16 1948

MUSIC FESTIVAL CLOSES

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 15.—(AP)—The 11th season of the Berkshire Music Festival ended today on a sweet note. The Boston Symphony Orchestra and Con[redacted] Serge Koussevitzky gave 15 concerts and drew a record-breaking total of 112,500 paying music fans. Jamming the huge concert shed on the 200-acre estate today was a crowd of 14,700—largest ever for a single performance.

This Clipping From
NASHUA, N. H.
TELEGRAPH

AUG 16 1948

Record Crowd at Music Festival

LENOX, Mass., August 16 (AP)—A record-breaking crowd of 14,700 attended the closing performance of the Berkshire Music Fest [redacted] Tanglewood yesterday.

A new total attendance reco of 112,500 paid admissions for 15 concerts by the Boston Symp ony orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitsky, also was set.

The Festival's 11th season was climaxed by the playing of Beethoven's "Eroica" symphony a d Sibelius' symphony number two.

This Cl From
NEW HA CONN.
REGI

AUG 16 1 3

Record Crowd Of 14,700 Attend Berkshire Final

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 16—(AP)—A record-breaking crowd of 14,700 attended the closing performance of the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood yesterday.

A new total attendance record of 112,500 paid admissions for the 15 concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge [redacted], also was set.

The festival's 11th season was climaxed by the playing of Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony and Sibelius' Symphony number two.

This Clipping From YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

AUG 16

VOOD END
R FESTIVA

Dr. Koussevitz sing Program—ew 170,500

PARMENTER
NEW YORK TIMES.
s., Aug. 15—Aft almost unbrok juietness settled o evening. Student ire Music Cente
f more than fort he morning, and zky and the Boston
iestra closed the Music Festival in ith a concert be-ons, largest audi-
a single festival

cert brought the to 170,500, there-previous records festival the most ssful of the eleven eld here. And this he crowds for the rehearsals and the Berkshire Music
ve attended the
and for students.
set records, draw-
58,000 persons.
nd events of the
ere characteristic.
npour late yester-
t there were clear and today was e sunlight green-haded lawns. And galore.

s in Theatre

Piatigorsky's re-yesterday after-
, a woman who ided the Boston
rsal in the mornriend and asked,

s a program of composition stu-
ber Music Hall. concert in the e young people
t this event, for
Robert Shaw,
the four soloists were young singers, and the program consisted of two choral works sung by the ninety-five women and eighty-five men students who form the festival chorus.

The first was Debussy's "The Blessed Damozel." The report was that the ethereal, sensitive music sounded somewhat attenuated at the back of the huge auditorium, but up close it was touching and beautiful. The young women of the chorus sang with skill and sympathy, and Ellen Faull, as the Damozel and Eunice Alberts as the narrator had fresh, youthful voices that fitted the poem, even if they did not have full concert brilliance.

Frances Yeend as Soloist

The other work was Brahms' "Requiem," sung in the original German and given without an intermission. To one listener it sounded rather long, but it was carefully prepared and the chorus, ranged in six tiers behind the orchestra, often sang with lovely effect. Frances Yeend, as the soprano soloist, revealed a pleasant, easy flowing voice, but her singing was not especially expressive. James Pease, the baritone, however, had dramatic emphasis, as well as a voice of splendid, rich timbre.

Mr. Piatigorsky's program was given as one of the faculty recitals. He was assisted by Ralph Berkowitz, executive assistant to Dr. Koussevitzky. Together they gave the world première of a new sonata written for the 'cellist by Paul Hindemith. It had an impressive closing passacaglia, but the first two movements, inventive and skillfully written as they were, hardly seemed the right preparation for such a finale.

Ovation for Conductor

As was only fitting, Dr. Koussevitzky was the dominating figure of the final concert. To close the festival that he has brought to its present eminence, he chose two famous works from the standard symphonic repertoire, Beethoven's "Eroica" and Sibelius' second symphony. And at the end he received a tumultous, standing ovation that lasted five minutes and brought him back to the stage six times.

The two symphonies came off splendidly. Under other hands the famous funeral march of the "Eroica" has sounded with greater grief, but in consequence the final movement was not overshadowed, and the conductor made it a really stirring resolution of a great work.

In the Sibelius, the wonderful resources of the orchestra were marshaled to a gathering climax that brought cheers before the final roll of the drums.

Tanglewood Parades for Benefit of European M

do you hear what I hear ?

Our diverse ways of listening

by W. R. ANDERSON

"IT ALL DEPENDS . . ." has become a catchword, but it is sound wisdom. When a friend gives an opinion about some work, and asks yours, it is wise to start with "It all depends what you heard, and what I heard"; for there is a large chance that the two of you did not by any means hear alike.

I put aside the actual physical hearing, which may well differ. Some people can hear more overtones ("harmonics") than others; on the matter of whether a singer is in tune, one man's ear is likely to be more acute than another's—the degree of acuteness being, it seems, settled at our birth; and there are other differences in hearing power. But I deal here with the broad differences in the ways we take in, apprehend and grasp our music. One or two ways are obvious: the story-weaver and the structure-lover, for example, may disagree strongly; they haven't really been hearing (or at least, apprehending) the same thing.

Psychology is helpful, and a psychologist, years ago, gave what I think is the clearest definition of the seven root ways of taking in music. Dr. Philip Vernon, himself an excellent amateur performer, got about two hundred people to peer into their mental and emotional processes when they heard music. Some of his helpers were laymen, some musicians. I need not detail the variety of ingenious experiments he made. Let us come directly to his analysis, put forward with all the caution of a scientist.

You may like to consider under which headings your own listening habits come; probably you will find that you belong to more than one category—perhaps, at different times, according to your humour or mood.

First—Music can alter our pulse-rate, our breathing, our muscular energy. Think of the capstan shanty or the war-dance. Music is used as an adjunct to medication; there are books upon that—its influence, for example, on the hysterical. I read of a surgeon's using Ravel's Bolero as a partial hypnotic, but I don't vouch for the story. Still, music and medicine have worked well together in

---

This Clipping From
BUFFALO, N. Y.
NEWS

AUG 16 1948

Berkshire Festival Sets Attendance Record

Special to The BUFFALO EVENING NEWS.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 16.—The Berkshire Festival came to a close here on the Tanglewood estate with a record attendance of 14,700, Sunday, with a record attendance of 14,700. The previous record was established at a Beethoven program last year when 14,000 attended. Not the least of the factors in the record attendance was Serge Koussevitzky's appearance on the [redacted] and a program consisting of two proved drawing cards, Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony and the Sibelius Second Symphony.

This Clipping From
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
JOURNAL-COURIER

AUG 16 1948

Berkshire Festival Concludes In Lenox

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 15—(AP)—The 11th season of the Berkshire Music Festival ended today on a sweet note.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and Cond[redacted] Koussevitzky gave 15 concerts and drew a record breaking total of 112,500 paying music fans.

Jamming the huge concert shed on the 200-acre estate today was a crowd of 14,700—largest ever for a single performance.

Dr. Koussevitsky and the orchestra received an ovation after playing Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony and Sibelius' Symphony Number Two.

This Clipping From
FALL RIVER, MASS.
HERALD-NEWS

AUG 16 1948

CONCERT DRAWS 14,700

LENOX, Aug. 16, (AP)—A record-breaking crowd of 14,700 attended the closing performance of the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood yesterday. A new total attendance record of 112,500 paid admissions for the 15 concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, [redacted] vitsky, also was set. The festival's 11th season was climaxed by the playing of Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony and Sibelius [illegible] Number Two.

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

AUG 1[illegible] 1948

MUSIC FESTIVAL CLOSES

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 15.—(AP)—The 11th season of the Berkshire Music Festival ended today on a sweet note. The Boston Symphony Orchestra and Cond[redacted] Serge Koussevitzky gave 15 concerts and drew a record-breaking total of 112,500 paying music fans. Jamming the huge concert shed on the 200-acre estate today was a crowd of 14,700—largest ever for a single performance.

This Clipping From
NASHUA, N. H.
TELEGRAPH

AUG 16 1948

Record Crowd at Music Festival

LENOX, Mass., August 16 A record-breaking crowd of 14,700 attended the closing performance of the Berkshire Music [redacted] Tanglewood yesterday.

A new total attendance of 112,500 paid admissions for the 15 concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitsky, also was set.

The Festival's 11th season was climaxed by the playing of Beethoven's "Eroica" symphony and Sibelius' symphony number two.

This Clipping From
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

AUG 16 1948

Record Crowd Of 14,700 Attend Berkshire Final

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 16—(AP)—A record-breaking crowd of 14,700 attended the closing performance of the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood yesterday.

A new total attendance record of 112,500 paid admissions for the 15 concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge [redacted], also was set.

The festival's 11th season was climaxed by the playing of Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony and Sibelius' Symphony number two.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

TANGLEWOOD ENDS A BANNER FESTIVAL

14,700 Hear Dr. Koussevitzky Conduct Closing Program—Series Drew 170,500

By ROSS PARMENTER

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 15—After six weeks of almost unbroken music-making, quietness settled on Tanglewood this evening. Students of the Berkshire Music Center gave the last of more than forty programs in the morning, and Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra closed the 1948 Berkshire Music Festival in the afternoon with a concert before 14,700 persons, largest audience to attend a single festival program.

The final concert brought the total attendance to 170,500, thereby breaking all previous records and making this festival the most financially successful of the eleven that have been held here. And this does not include the crowds for the three orchestral rehearsals and the friends of the Berkshire Music Center, who have attended the daily events by and for students. These, too, have set records, drawing an additional 58,000 persons.

The weather and events of the final week-end were characteristic. There was a downpour late yesterday afternoon, but there were clear skies at night, and today was cloudless with the sunlight green-gold on the tree-shaded lawns. And there was music galore.

'Cellist Plays in Theatre

After Gregor Piatigorsky's recital in the theatre yesterday afternoon, for instance, a woman who had already attended the Boston Symphony's rehearsal in the morning, turned to a friend and asked, "What's on next?"

The answer was a program of original works by composition students in the Chamber Music Hall. Then came the big concert in the shed at night. The young people had their innings at this event, for the conductor was Robert Shaw, the four soloists were young singers, and the program consisted of two choral works sung by the ninety-five women and eighty-five men students who form the festival chorus.

The first was Debussy's "The Blessed Damozel." The report was that the ethereal, sensitive music sounded somewhat attenuated at the back of the huge auditorium, but up close it was touching and beautiful. The young women of the chorus sang with skill and sympathy, and Ellen Faull, as the Damozel and Eunice Alberts as the narrator had fresh, youthful voices that fitted the poem, even if they did not have full concert brilliance.

Frances Yeend as Soloist

The other work was Brahms' "Requiem," sung in the original German and given without an intermission. To one listener it sounded rather long, but it was carefully prepared and the chorus, ranged in six tiers behind the orchestra, often sang with lovely effect. Frances Yeend, as the soprano soloist, revealed a pleasant, easy flowing voice, but her singing was not especially expressive. James Pease, the baritone, however, had dramatic emphasis, as well as a voice of splendid, rich timbre.

Mr. Piatigorsky's program was given as one of the faculty recitals. He was assisted by Ralph Berkowitz, executive assistant to Dr. Koussevitzky. Together they gave the world première of a new sonata written for the 'cellist by Paul Hindemith. It had an impressive closing passacaglia, but the first two movements, inventive and skillfully written as they were, hardly seemed the right preparation for such a finale.

Ovation for Conductor

As was only fitting, Dr. Koussevitzky was the dominating figure of the final concert. To close the festival that he has brought to its present eminence, he chose two famous works from the standard symphonic repertoire, Beethoven's "Eroica" and Sibelius' second symphony. And at the end he received a tumultous, standing ovation that lasted five minutes and brought him back to the stage six times.

The two symphonies came off splendidly. Under other hands the famous funeral march of the "Eroica" has sounded with greater grief, but in consequence the final movement was not overshadowed, and the conductor made it a really stirring resolution of a great work.

In the Sibelius, the wonderful resources of the orchestra were marshaled to a gathering climax that brought cheers before the final roll of the drums.

[279]

This Clipping From
GLENS FALLS, N. Y.

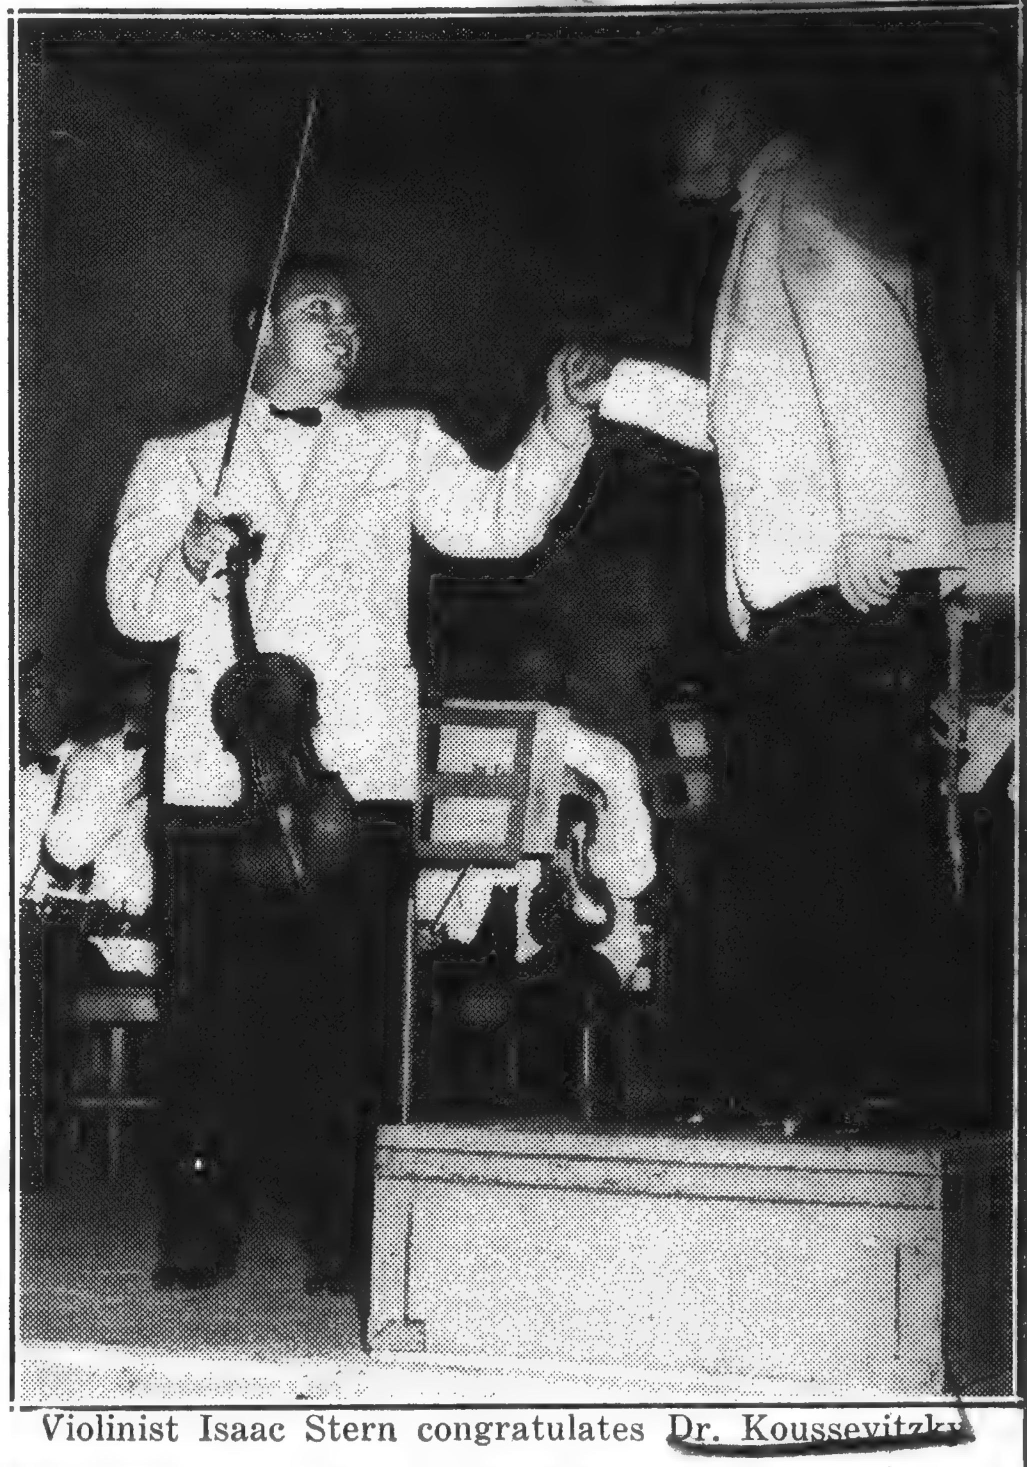
YORK TIMES, SUNDAY, AUGUST 8, 19

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
NEWS

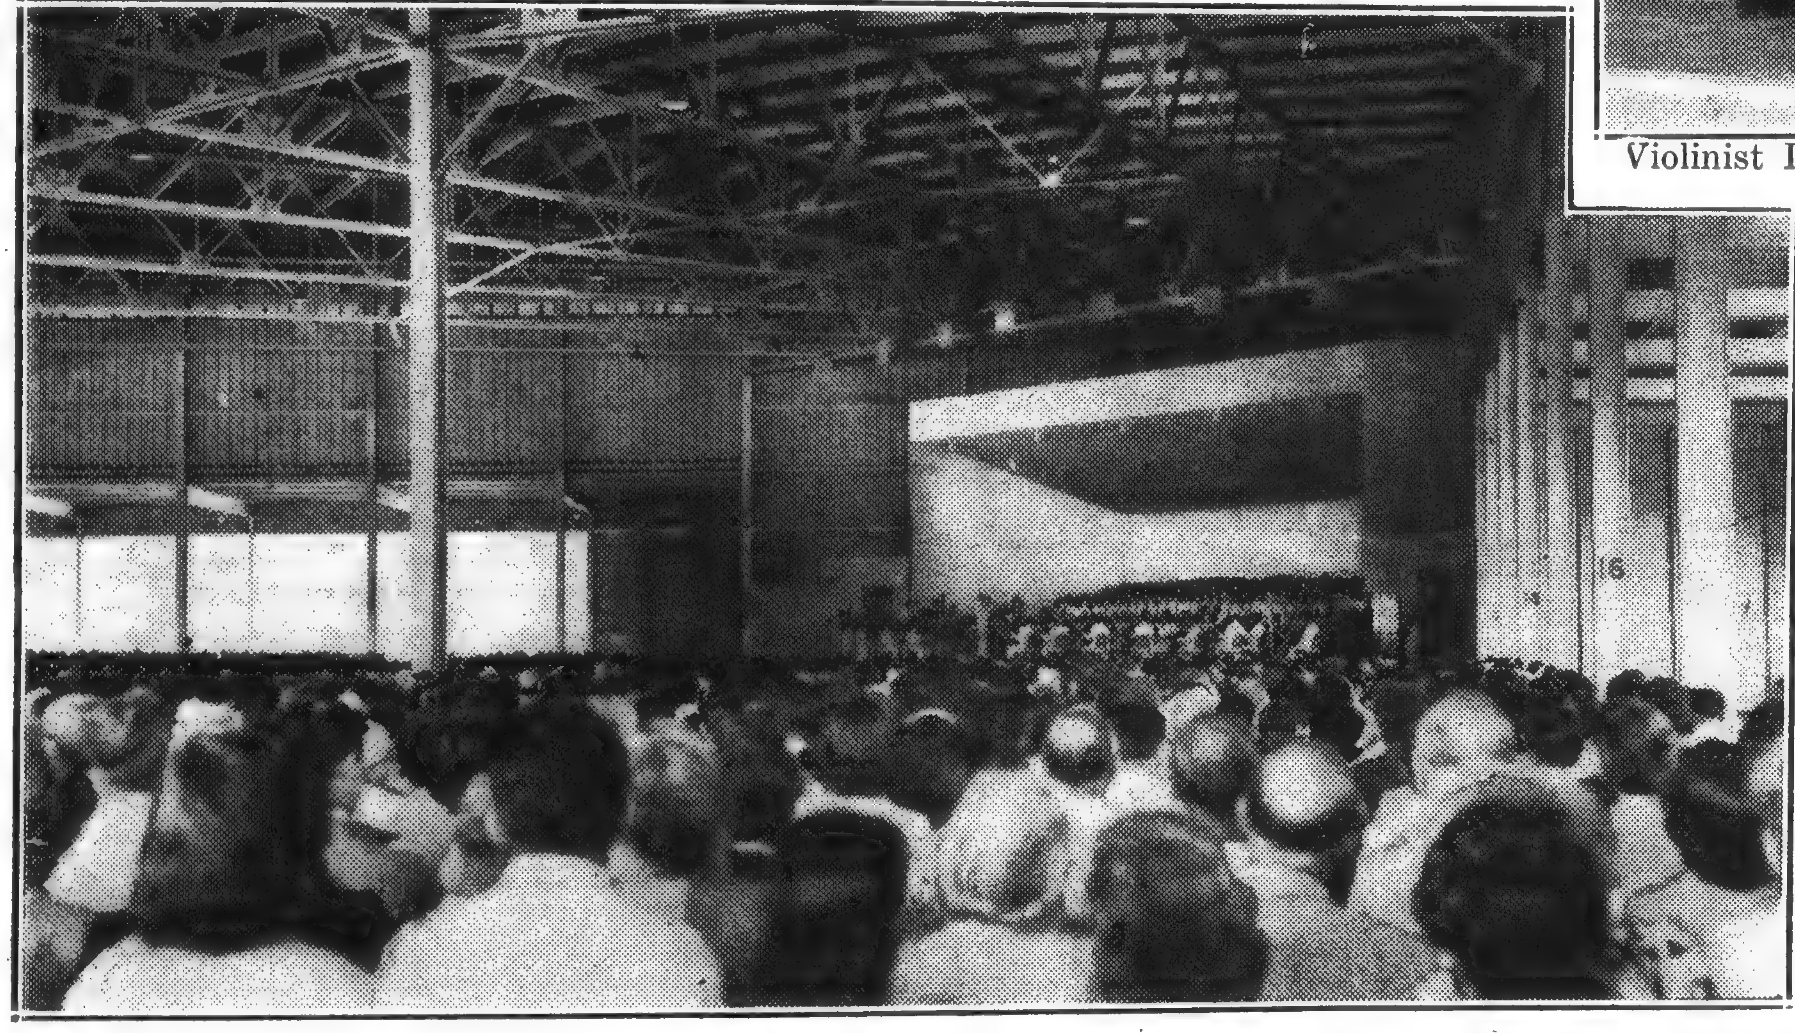
AUG 15 1948

(NEWS fotos by Morgan)

[illegible] audience relaxes on the lawn during a Festival performance.



Violinist Isaac Stern congratulates Dr. Koussevitzky.



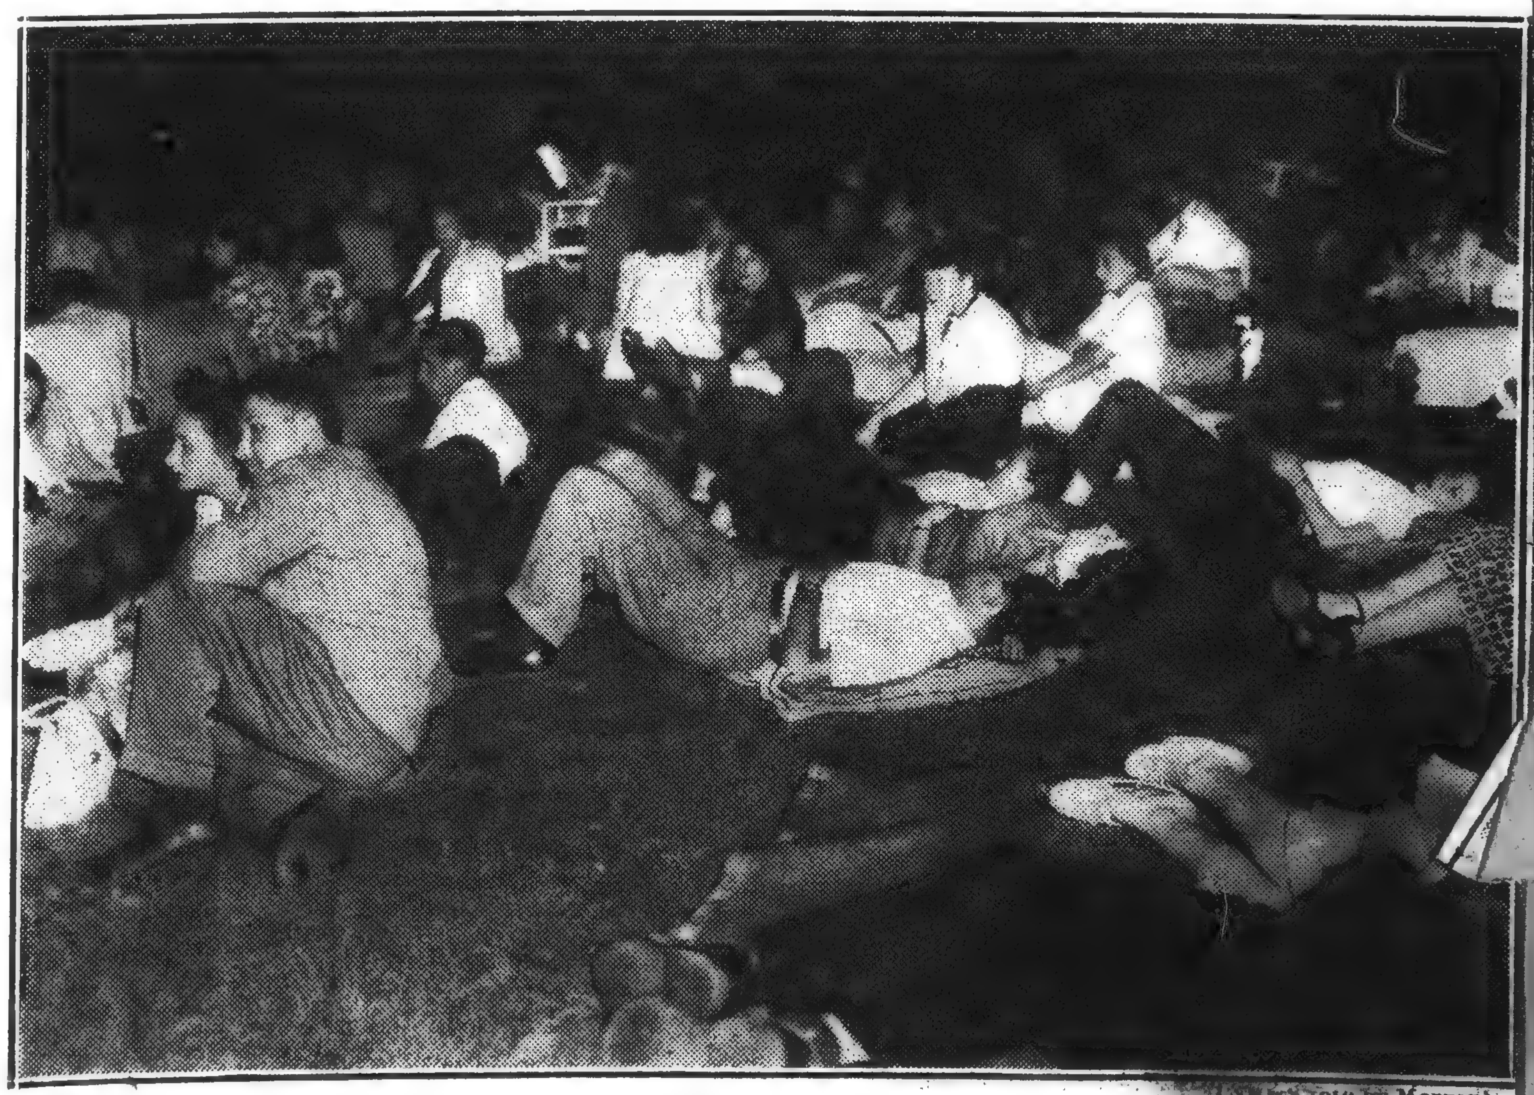
(NEWS foto by Morgan)

Music lovers hear a Sunday afternoon concert.

Berkshire Festival

In 1936, Bostonians Mrs. Mary Aspinwall Tappan and Mrs. Andrew Hepburn presented a 210-acre estate at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., to the Boston Symphony Orchestra as a hot weather haven. That year, the group began its association with the Berkshire Music Festivals which had been inaugurated in 1934. Ever since, with the exception of war years, the Boston Symphony has presented a Festival series of concerts each Summer. Members of the orchestra also serve on the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center, founded by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky as a laboratory for musicians. The handpicked students have six weeks of hard "living and working with music."

Pie-shaped Music Shed seats 6,000.

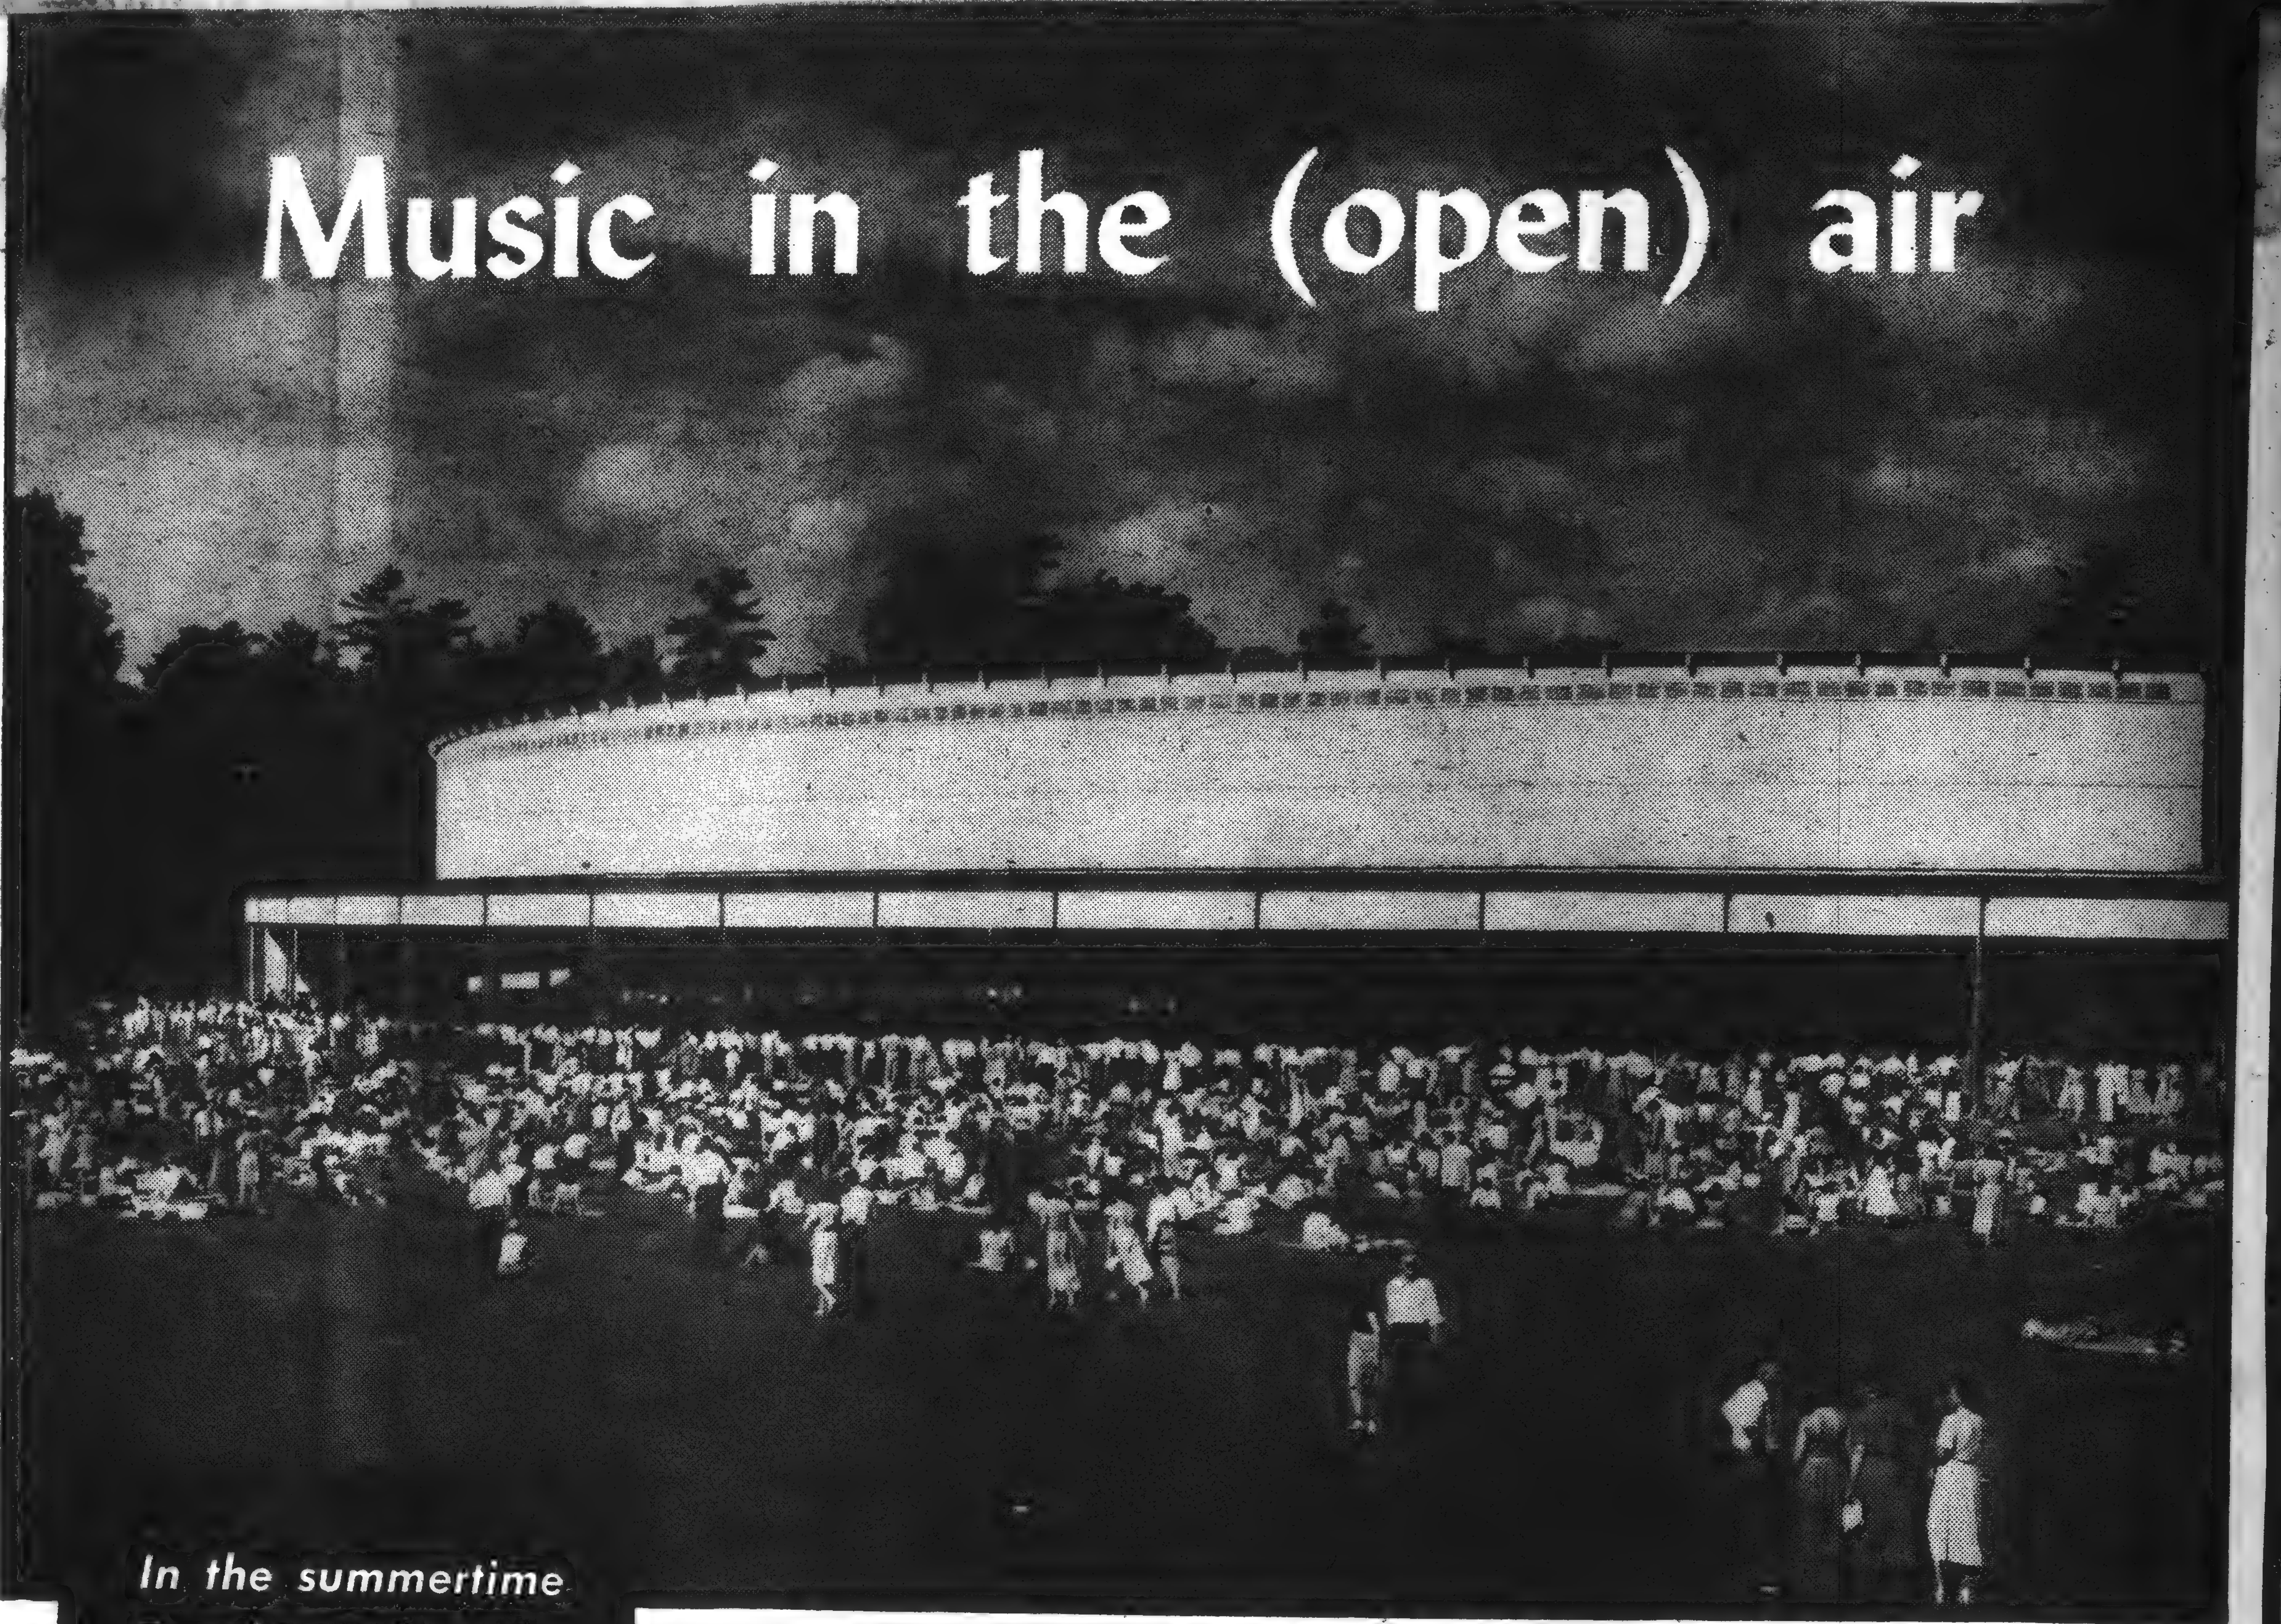


(NEWS foto by Morgan)

Informality is the keynote for music-listening outdoors.

Tanglewood Parades for Benefit of European

Music in the (open) air



In the summertime Tanglewood in the Berkshires echoes to young artists and Boston's Symphony

THROUGH fall and winter seasons, the Boston Symphony Orchestra men wear boiled shirtfronts and play music for proper Bostonians and impeccably dressed concertgoers in other cities they visit on tour. But in summer they change from their somber evening dress to white suits and take to the Berkshire hills, where on the 210-acre Tanglewood estate at Lenox, Mass., they perform for the Berkshire Musical Festival, a three-week end series of concerts. The audience's dress ranges from blue serge jackets and white flannels of still proper Bostonians to Basque shirts and shorts. But despite informal dress and the fact that about as many listeners lie about on the lawns as crowd into the 6000-seat music shed, the programs of Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, the Boston's director, are not pops concerts. The music is serious, yet not without delightful touches—like French horn players (see cover) who played passages of Mahler's Symphony No. 2 offstage. And when the Beethoven Sixth is played, the rustling of leaves makes it sound really pastoral. Along with the Festival, there is the Berkshire Music Center which provides six weeks' workshop training for 462 students—new generations of composers, conductors, singers and instrumentalists—under the tutelage of Dr. Koussevitsky, Aaron Copland, Darius Milhaud, Leonard Bernstein, Gregor Piatigorsky, Robert Shaw.

IT'S LYING ROOM ONLY instead of SRO at Tanglewood concerts, where there are seats for 6000. General admission ticketholders make themselves comfortable on the lawn.

SERGE KOUSSEVITSKY and his Boston Symphony Orchestra accept long and loud applause after performance of Brahm's first Symphony. Continued on next page

Tanglewood Parades for Benefit of European M

Music in the (open) air
continued

FOUTAIN SCENE from Debussy's Pellas and Melisande is rehearsed by two members of Tanglewood's opera group, Janet Hayes and Arthur Schoep. Tanglewood singers are ever trying new ways of presenting operas. Here they've chosen a spot which makes the usual artificial scenery unnecessary.

IN COSTUME ROOM of the opera group soprano Adele Addison tries on the dress she'll wear as Suzanna in Marriage of Figaro.

SET DESIGNERS put finishing touches on a flat for the prison scene of Verdi's Il Trovatore. They have a shop, but prefer working under the trees.

BETWEEN REHEARSALS two m shade, cool off and discuss on

CHAMBER MUSIC group rehe
Composer Artur Lourie is cond

OPERA DEPARTMENT HEAD casts of two operas—Aida and [281]

This Clipping From
GLENS FALLS, N. Y.

embers of the orchestral group relax in the e of Serge Prokofieff's latest compositions.

ırses in a studio at the Theater-Concert Hall.
ıcting the students in one of his own works.

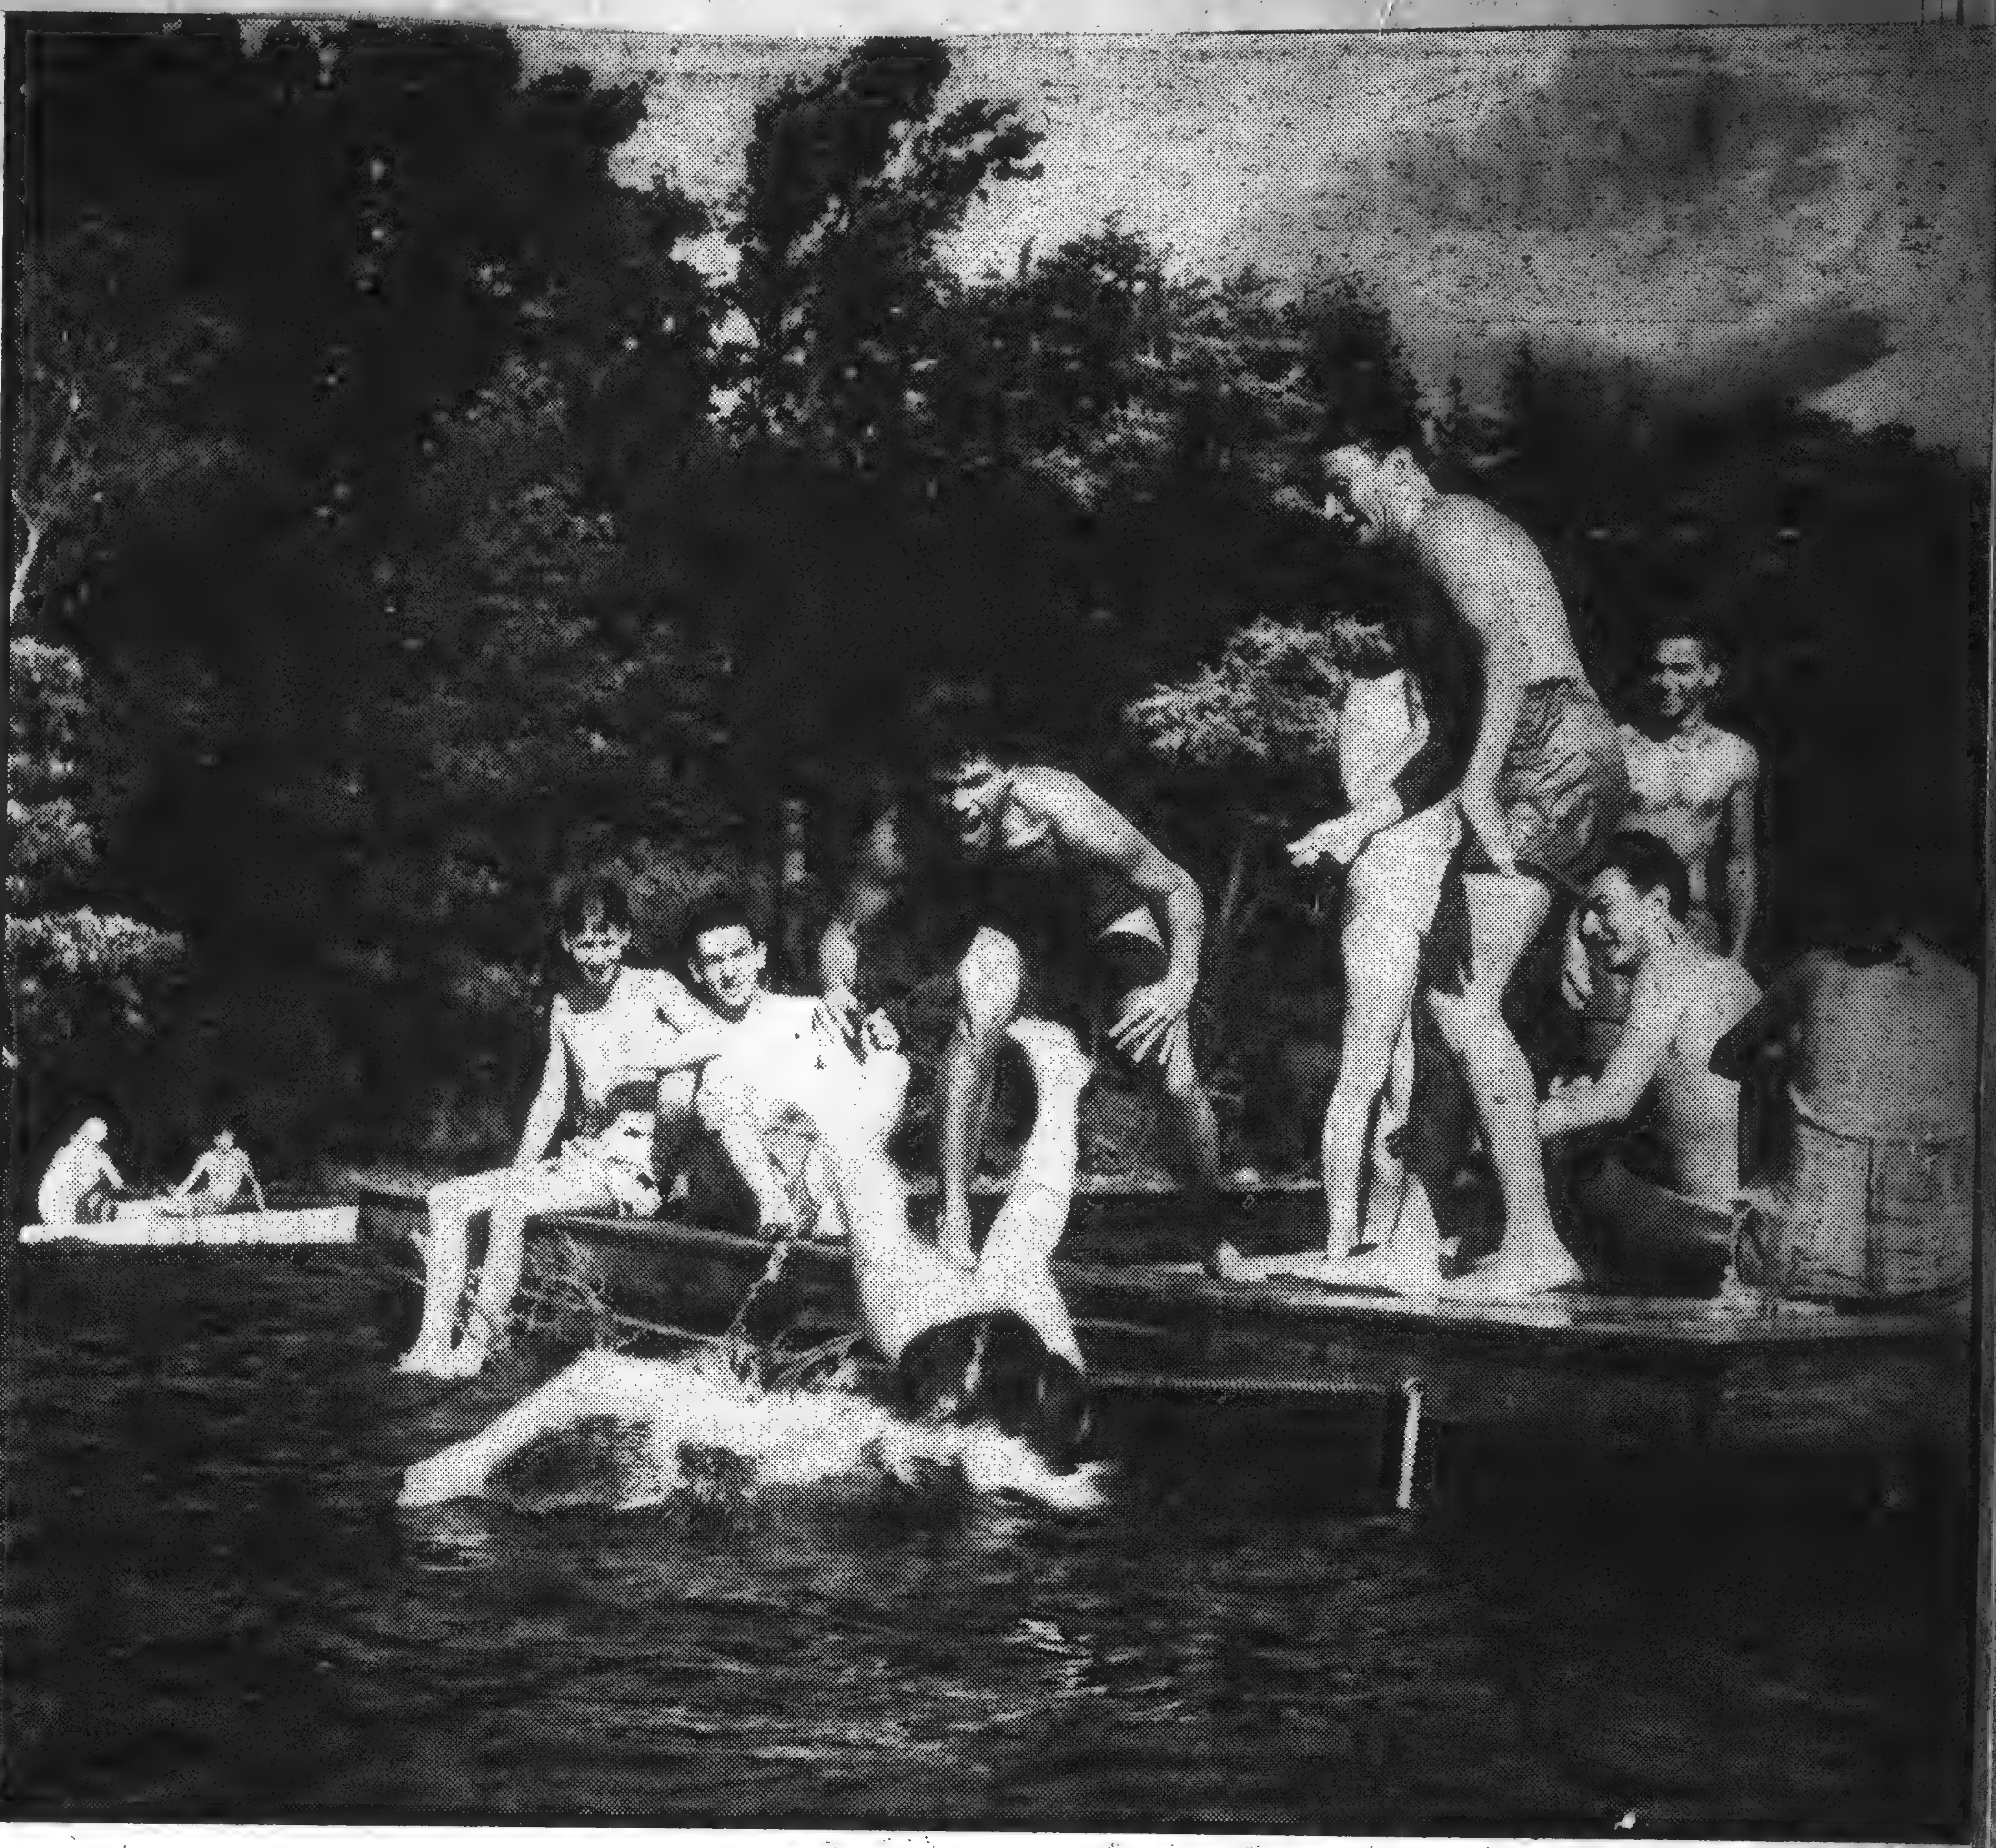
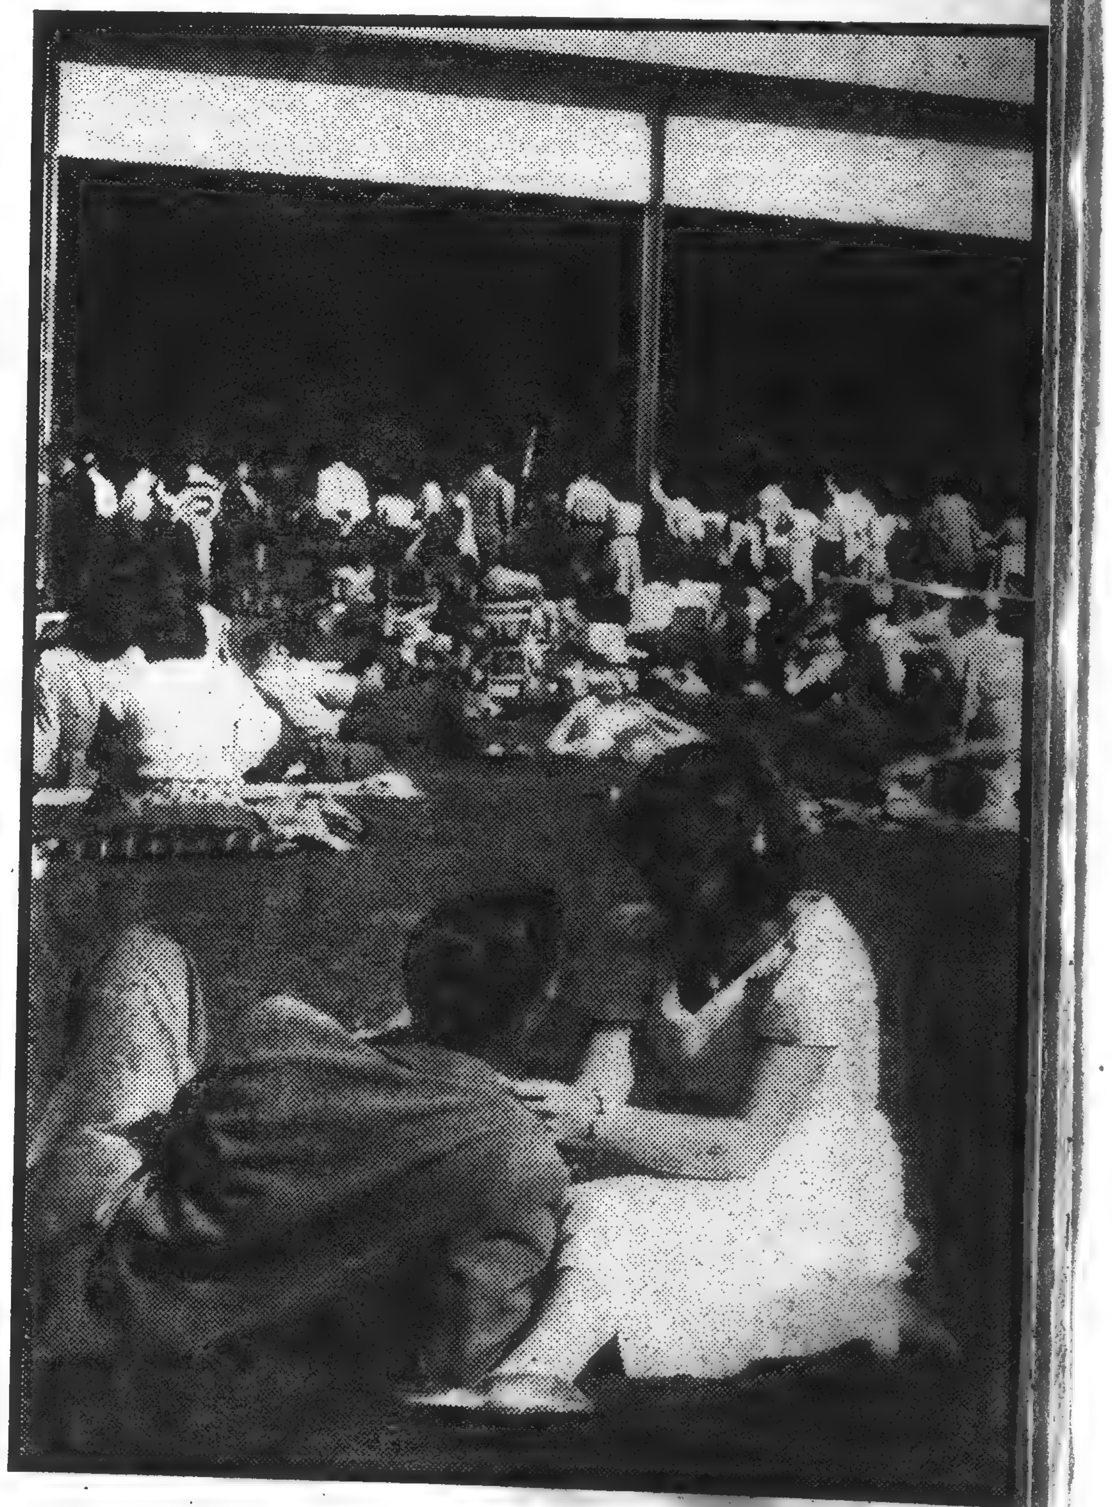
Boris Goldovsky (left) chats with stars of the Eugen Onegin—staged as workshop projects.



CHIEF RECREATION SPOT for Tanglewood musicians is Lake Mahkeenac which adjoins the Tanglewood estate. There, every clear late afternoon after a long day of rehearsals, the musicians gather, borrow a rowboat, go for a swim, and sometimes throw each other off this raft.

STAR photos by Bob Fuller and Ed McCarthy

VIOLIST Bob Karol takes refuge in an opera scenery shed to practice. His instructor is the Brazilian Eleazar de Carvalho.



HIS TIE must be straight, this young lady insists, before he can listen to Darius Milhaud conduct a Milhaud symphony.

[282]

Tanglewood Parades for Benefit of European M

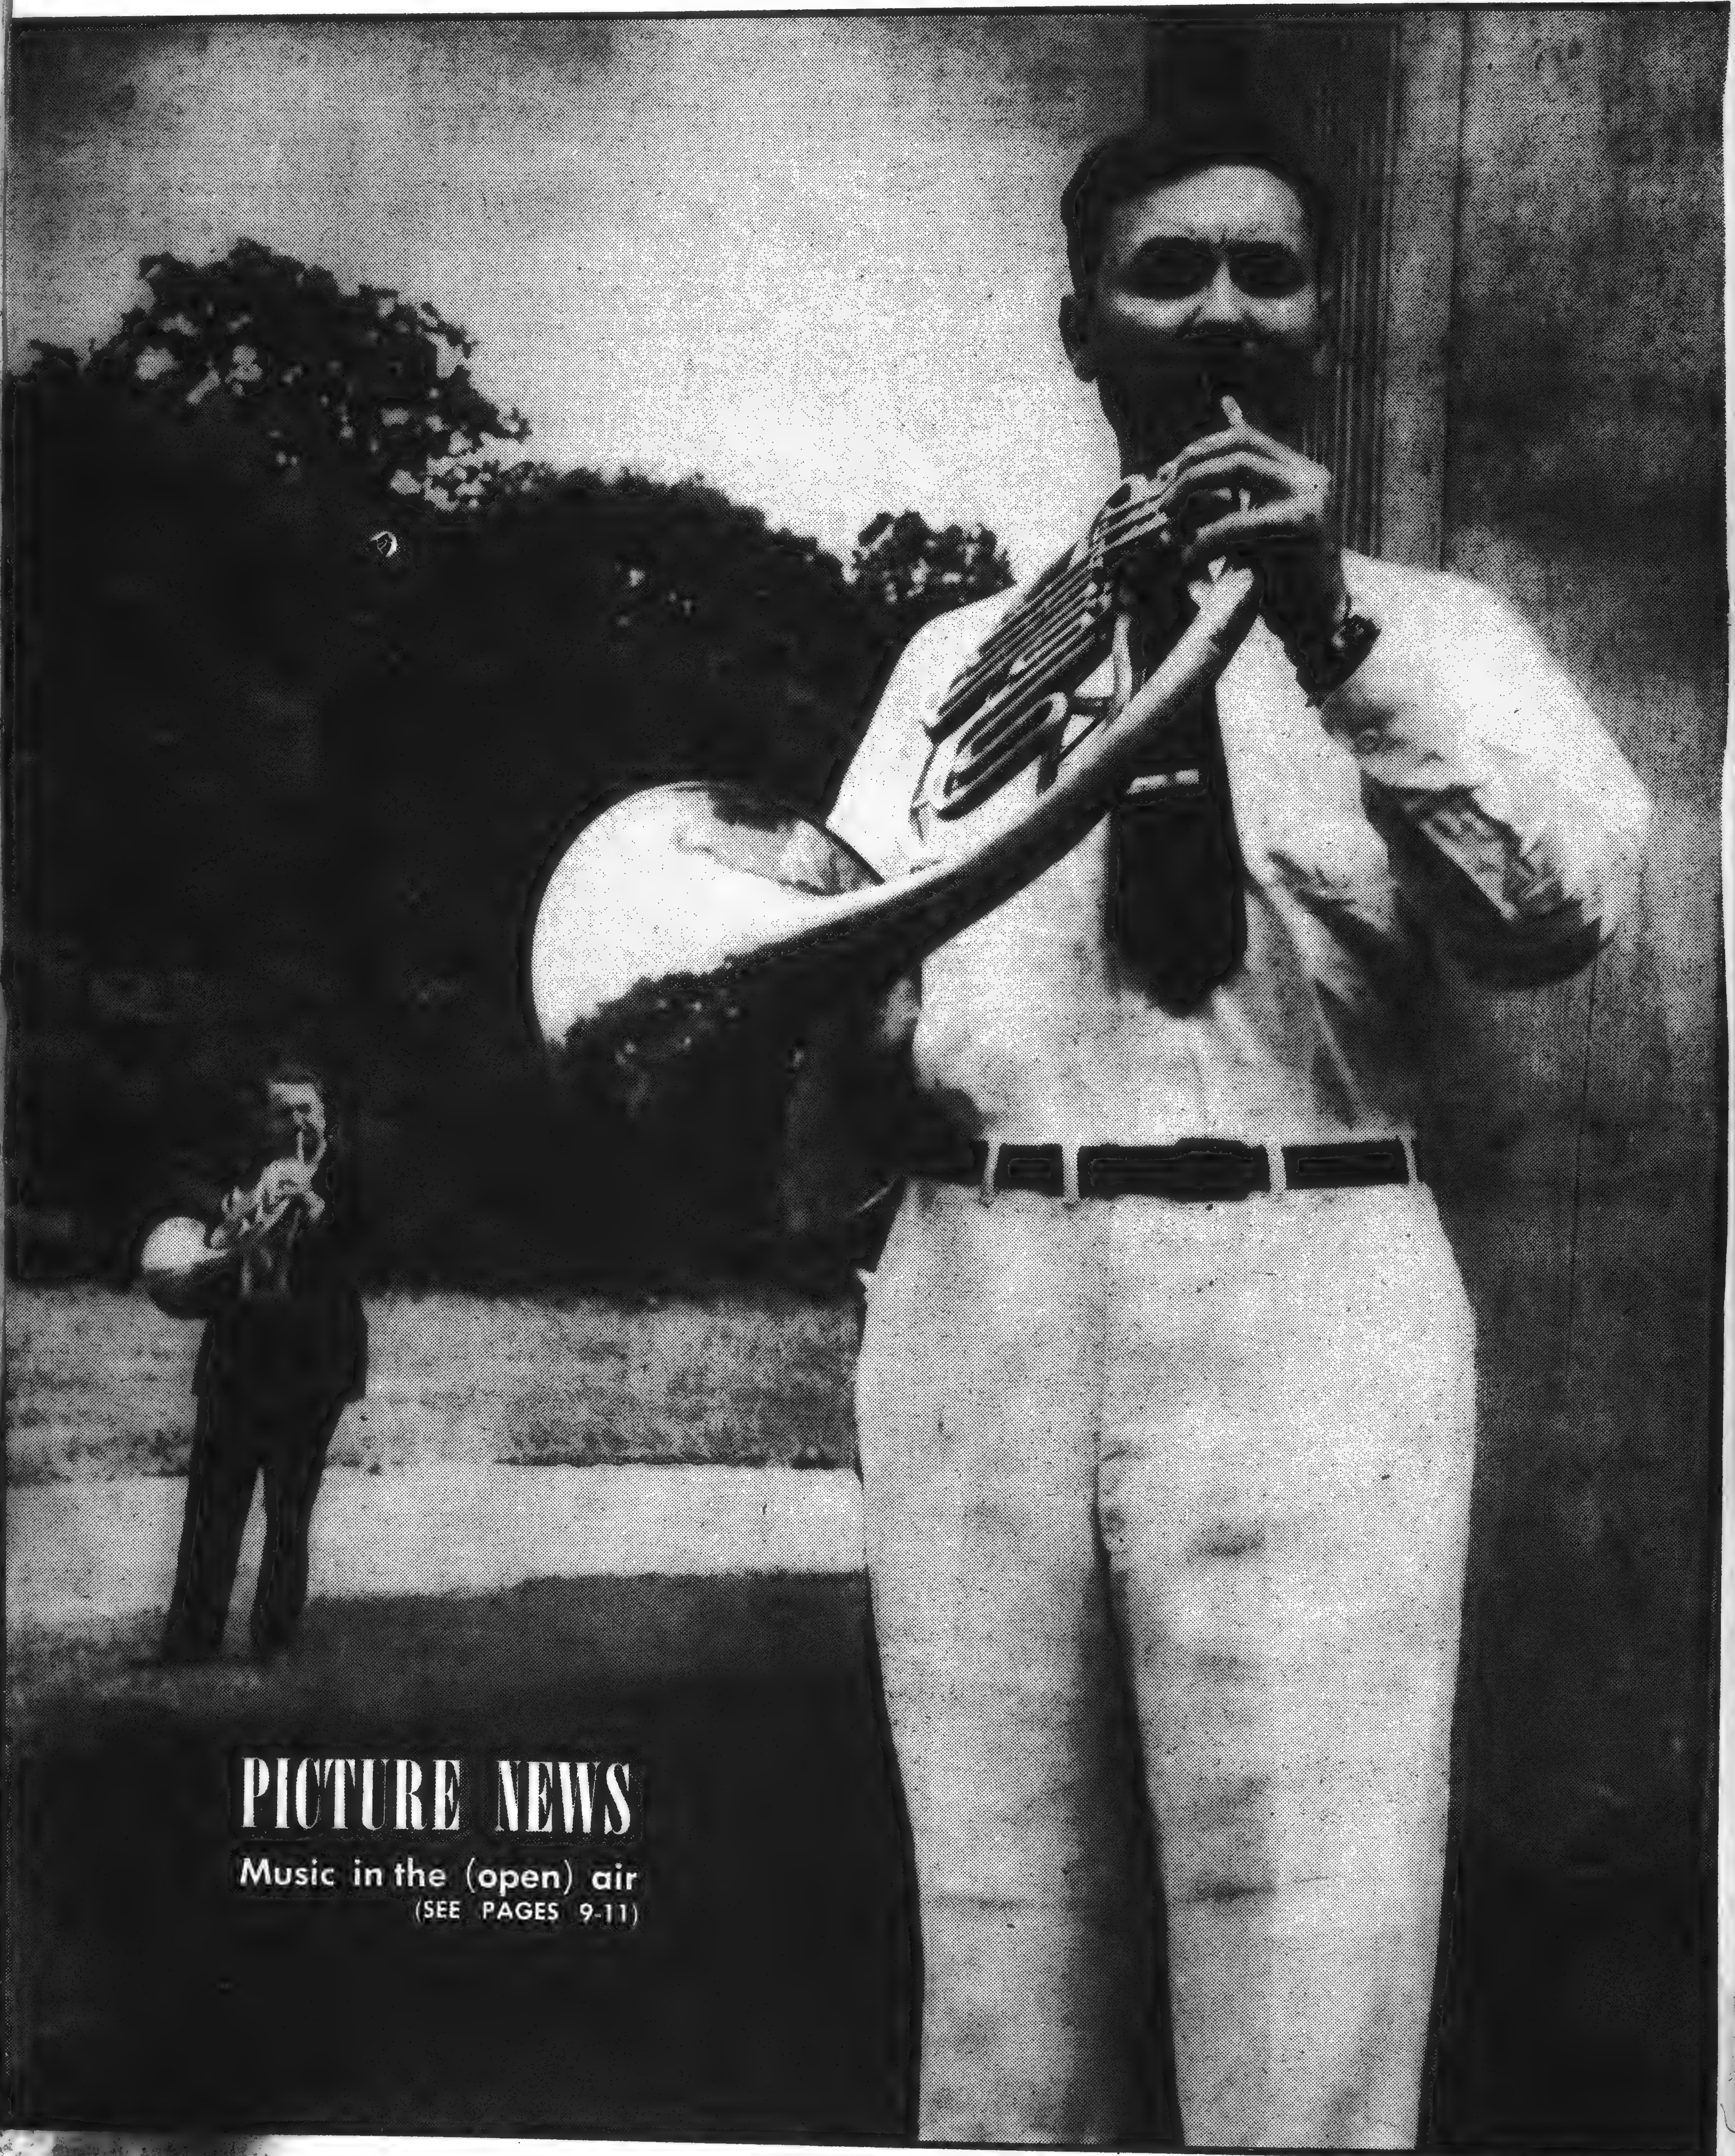
NEW YORK STAR

August 15, 1948

WEEKLY MAGAZINE AND 36-PAGE MAIN NEWS SECTION

WEEKEND EDITION—10c

Copyright, 1948, by the New York Star, Inc.



PICTURE NEWS

Music in the (open) air

(SEE PAGES 9-11)

Photo by Ed McCarthy

[283]

This Clipping From
GLENS FALLS N. Y.

YORK TIMES, SUNDAY, AUGUST 8, 19

This Clipping From:
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

14,700 Hear Final Concert At Festival

Beethoven and Sibelius Works Featured in Tanglewood Windup

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 15.—(Special.)—In a blaze of music, of sunshine and of attendance figures, the 1948 Berkshire Music Festival closed at Tanglewood here this afternoon.

A total of 14,700 persons jammed the music shed and swarmed the lawns, setting a new record for the festival, by about 700. The previous high had been attained at a Saturday night, all-Beethoven concert last year. Nearly 2000 more persons were encamped on the greensward than sat in the cool, steel-girdered shade of the shed itself. The grounds were still sodden from last night's downpour, but it failed to dampen the ardor of the army of plein-air music fanciers.

Two Symphonies.

The concluding program offered by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra was a solid diet of two symphonies, the Beethoven "Eroica" and the Sibelius second. The Beethoven performance brought the audience up shouting approval and waving its programs in a paper-y demonstration. It was splendid music making. Dr. Koussevitzky followed the score with utmost faithfulness. There was nothing new in this reading of the thrice-familiar work. But its spirit was bright and tender, and its conclusion especially so warm and hopefully stated, that it was a joy to hear. Dr. Koussevitzky so judiciously avoided dramatizing it, was so respectful toward Beethoven, yet at the same time so expressive, that it was a treat, in view of the many times that conductors have tried to aggrandize both themselves and Beethoven by overplaying the "Eroica." It has sometimes been said that Beethoven is not Dr. Koussevitzky's forte, but anyone hearing him today could not deny that he gave this third symphony the exact elegance, dimension and style demanded for it.

There is something about the magnificent melancholy of Sibelius, as of Tschaikowsky, which seems to offer a special challenge to Dr. Koussevitzky, a challenge which he meets in incandescent performance and interpretation. This was true here at Tanglewood again this afternoon, when he played the Sibelius Second Symphony with immense tension, excitement and an almost barbaric color. The reading culled all the dark, haunted emotion from the score and it seemed almost inappropriate to sit in the bright sunlight and listen to so black a symphony. And, as in the case of Tschaikowsky, Dr. Koussevitzky is able to pour out and whip up the drama of Sibelius without running over into sheer frenzy music or rant of emotion. He achieves a seizing intensity and brilliance of expressiveness, he builds the dimension of the work to titanic span, but the showmanship never exceeds the truth of the reading, nor the performance the plan and design which the composer set down.

Koussevitzky Rushed.

The concert concluded in the traditional hullaballoo. The final plagal measures of the Sibelius had hardly closed before the mob of Koussevitzky idolizers who had been on the lawn, made a rush for the shed, scrimmaging for a glimpse of the great doctor. There they clambered on the seats, shouting, whistling and whooping like a crowd watching the home team make a touchdown.

Dr. Koussevitzky went off and came back in his famous sauntering manner to take a dozen curtain calls. He beamed with pleasure, bowed and saluted all parts of the house, and had the orchestra up for applause a half dozen times. It was a great show, an immense tribute to a conductor, an orchestra and a festival which tops American symphonic achievement.

T. H. P.

This Clipping From
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE

AUG 16 1948

Koussevitzky Gets 'Bravos' At Tanglewood

By D. E. RITZ

"Bravos" were the order of yes- day at the concluding concert the Berkshire Festival at Tangle- od for Serge Koussevitzky and Boston Symphony Orchestra. ey were a part of the remark- e ovation given the beloved con- tor following the performance of the Sibelius Second Symphony and the Beethoven Symphony number 3, the "Eroica."

A record crowd attended the performance that was one of the most stirring of this year's programs.

On Saturday evening Robert Shaw conducted the orchestra and the festival chorus for Debussy's "La Demoiselle Elue" and Brahms' "A German Requiem." Ellen Faull, soprano, and Eunice Alberts, contralto, were soloists for the first; Frances Yeend, soprano, and James Pease, bass, for the latter. Heavy rain let up just before the Saturday evening program and a rainbow cleared the sky if not the mud.

The festival has concluded 11 seasons now. From an appeal to only a few, it has gained in popularity and is reaching more and more of the general public. And this without letting up in the least on standards.

No words can describe satisfactorily programs like those of Saturday and yesterday. They must be heard. To each they translate into a different emotional experience. Skill and craftsmanship in performance and devotion to ideals have played their part in making the festival what it is. It offers the best in programs and the best in performances regardless of circumstances.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN

AUG 16 1948

Berkshire Festival Ends

By MILES KASTENDIECK

TANGLEWOOD, LENOX, Mass., Aug. 16.—With a record-breaking crowd of 14,700, the Berkshire Festival ended on a note of triumph yesterday. The day was perfect, Tanglewood was at its best, the program was rich. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony rounded out the weekend in top form. A total of 112,500 people had attended the public concerts, 6,000 more than last year.

Two sure-fire symphonies were the attraction: Beethoven's "Eroica" and Sibelius' Second. Both ended on a note of triumph, and so did the orchestra. If Koussevitzky was in the vein for the Beethoven, he was even more so for the Sibelius. He saw to it that each work culminated in a blaze of tonal splendor, the line of which those who heard will not soon forget.

This was a time when the greatness of Koussevitzky and the greatness of the Boston Symphony shone in their full glory. The conductor imparted the enkindling spirit; the orchestra outdid itself. No matter how familiar the music, it sounded fresh in these inspired moments.

To say the audience was enthralled is to recognize the absorption with which it listens. It too, supplies inspiration. This one had the added excitement of being the largest ever to attend a Berkshire Festival concert. If it came to get a thrill, it did.

Robert Shaw conducted the Saturday night program. It consisted of two choral works: Debussy's "The Blessed Damozel" and Brahms' German Requiem. The regular Festival chorus participated. Some 8,500 people attended in spite of the downpours which continued up to the beginning of the concert.

While the performances of both works were good, there was nothing singular about them. Shaw's conducting was always musically sound. It still suggests a shyness and modesty not altogether satisfactory for the intrepretation of the big works he undertakes. His dynamics tend toward loud or soft, his manner toward the energetic or the tranquil. He should cultivate the in-between stages.

This type of conducting lent itself well to the Debussy. Since the dynamics maintain a consistent level, the musical qualities of the performance were the more apparent.

Another Festival is being planned for next year which will terminate Koussevitzky's 25th season with the Boston Symphony.

In the meantime the Berkshire music center has thrived this year. An overall estimate of attendance at all the musical events taking place since it opened on July 4 runs to 170,500.

This Clipping From
PORTLAND, ME.
EXPRESS

AUG 16 1948

14,700 At Closing Of Music Festival At Tanglewood

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 16. (AP)—A record-breaking crowd of 14,700 attended the closing performance of the Berkshire Music Fstival at Tanglewood, Sunday.

A new total attendance record of 112,500 paid admissions for the 15 concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzsky, also was set.

The Festival's 11th season was climaxed by the playing of Beethovn's Eroica Symphony and Sibelius' Symphony Number Two.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM

AUG 16 1948

Music

14,700 Hear Festival's Finale

By ROBERT BAGAR.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 16.—Ringing down the curtain on the Berkshire Music Festival of 1948, Serge Koussevitzky conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon, in the Music Shed at Tanglewood, through a two-part program offering of the "Eroica" Symphony of Beethoven and the Second Symphony of Sibelius.

With yesterday's attendance the total figures reached an impressive 170,500. Of these there were 58,000 free admissions, accounted for the fact that friends of the Berkshire Music Center (and their friends) obtain gratis admission to many of the events given here, barring, of course, the concerts of the Boston Symphony.

These concerts have themselves drawn 112,500 persons this summer, as compared with 106,600 last summer and 83,000 the summer before. All in all, it was the Berkshire Festival's most successful season, and the word is that plans for next year will be more or less on the basis of this.

Entirely Satisfactory.

Yesterday's symphonic program, played before 14,700, proved entirely satisfactory to the listeners. Mr. Koussevitzky's Beethoven—in this case the "Eroica"—went extremely well, I thought. There appeared to be a good deal of life and energy to the bigger movements, although they were never treated with anything but the most respectful attention. I thought I detected a tendency on the part of the horns to slow up things, no matter whether the tempo was fast or slow. Neither did this, however, prove an insurmountable obstacle to a performance which, considering all things, had class written over much of it.

The Sibelius, as you might expect, thundered out many voices. Dr. Koussevitzky is affectionate toward this symphony, and he has quite a few supporters, I'm sure. The melody, coming out piecemeal, as it does, then to flood us in its entirety, is something audiences have enjoyed ever since it was written, back in 1901. Yesterday's throng, which filled the shed and spread all over the back lawn, shouted its approval mightily.

On Saturday evening Robert Shaw appeared as conductor over the combined forces of the Boston Symphony and the Festival chorus, plus soloists, in two works. The first was the Debussy "La Demoiselle Elue," with Ellen Faull and Eunice Alberts in the solo spots. The second was the Brahms Requiem, featuring Frances Yeend and James Pease.

Special Precision.

Mr. Shaw displayed his familiar magic with merged instrumental and vocal groups. There was always, in the performance, the special precision that he has made a hallmark of his public appearances. For that matter, as a piece of design quite closely affiliated with the composer's work, Mr. Shaw's rendering of the Requiem was, considering its difficulties, a most expressive and continuously moving achievement. He was received with acclaim at the end of the evening and the audience embraced in its appreciation all the other parties involved.

There was an afternoon event in the theater-concert hall which attracted quite an audience and no little attention. This was a faculty recital performed by Gregor Piatigorsky and Ralph Berkowitz, presenting a program of music by Beethoven, Schumann and Hindemith, and it is with the Hindemith that most of us were especially concerned, since the work played—a piano and cello sonata—was given its world premiere.

This sonata in three movements exhibits the Hindemith addiction to contrapuntal writing. It is quite interesting counterpoint which is no mere adjunct of the piece but closely and essentially interwoven with his main ideas. A reflective, somewhat somber mood prevails throughout the music, and there are especially telling contrasts, as in some sections of the first and last movements, where the cello indulges in a kind of cantilena against the running figures of the piano. I am sure that I shall want to hear it again—and, quite likely, again and again. It seems almost superfluous to add that the program was beautifully performed by both artists.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN

AUG 16 1948

Record Attendance At Music Festival

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 16 (A. P.).—The eleventh season of the Berkshire Music Festival ended yesterday on a sweet note.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky, the conductor, gave fifteen concerts and drew a record-breaking total of 112,500 paying music fans. Jamming the huge concert shed on the 200-acre estate yesterday was a crowd of 14,700—largest ever for a single performance.

Koussevitzky and the orchestra received an ovation after

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

AUG 19 1948

String Quartet Gives First of Seven Concerts

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

The Berkshire string quartet gave the first of seven successive Wednesday evening programs last night in the Berkshire Museum under the sponsorship of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress. The occasion was the observance of the 30th anniversary of the founding of the Berkshire Festivals of Chamber Music by Mrs. Coolidge on South Mountain in 1918.

The initial program of the original festival had been played by a quartet also named the "Berkshire" and of which Hugo Kortschak and Sergei Kotlarsky had been violinists, Clarence Evans viola, and the late Emerson Stoeber, cellist. On that original program, played in the Temple of Music on South Mountain on Monday afternoon, Sept. 16, 30 years ago, one of the works was a quintet by Thuille in which the assisting pianist had been Mrs. Coolidge herself.

Last night the program consisted of string quartets by Schubert and Mozart, both in E flat major, with the last Bartok quartet between. The members of the present Berkshire quartet are Urico Rossi, first violin; Julius Hegyi, second violin: David Dawson, viola, and Fritz Magg, cello.

The real musical interest of the evening was the sixth Bartok quartet. Each of the four movements begin with a sad and plaintive introduction, given to a different and solo instrument each time. The introductions to the first two movements, played respectively by the viola and the cello, were passages of rarely eloquent playing and of superbly beautiful tone. The dramatic fantasy of Bartok was much more suitable material for the quartet than had been the opening Schubert. In this Bartok they displayed a breadth and sweep, and a deep feeling of immersion in the spirit of the music which had not been apparent in either of the two corner works, where they choked up and were often playing under shackles.

Bartok spaced his six quartets over some 30 or more years. Chronologically they show his youthful display of independence with revelations of influence by existing and preceding composers. They advance and revert to his own concepts. But the consistency of his instrumental writing proves that he had faith that what he may have considered experimental to begin, was a worthy, genuine, and personal conviction. Time is surely supporting his opinion. It is strange music to one attuned to the vertical writing of, for instance, the other two composers on last night's program, but it takes surprisingly little familiarity to become aware that this is music suited for string quartet and not adaptable for any other combination of tone sources. This, of course, is one of the unmistakable marks of talent, if not of genius. Furthermore, the tone groupings or clusters, they can hardly be called harmonies, fall agreeably on one's ears, in spite of the totally different method of the use of all his materials. The quartet made its greatest impression of

This Clipping From
GLENS FALLS

YORK TIMES, SUNDAY, AUGUST 8, 19

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT
AUG 16 1948

14,700 Hear Final Concert At Festival

Beethoven and Sibelius Works Featured in Tanglewood Windup

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 15.—(Special.)—In a blaze of music, of sunshine and of attendance figures, the 1948 Berkshire Music Festival closed at Tanglewood here this afternoon.

A total of 14,700 persons jammed the music shed and swarmed the lawns, setting a new record for the festival, by about 700. The previous high had been attained at a Saturday night, all-Beethoven concert last year. Nearly 2000 more persons were encamped on the greensward than sat in the cool, steel-girdered shade of the shed itself. The grounds were still sodden from last night's downpour, but it failed to dampen the ardor of the army of plein-air music fanciers.

Two Symphonies.

The concluding program offered by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra was a solid diet of two symphonies, the Beethoven "Eroica" and the Sibelius second. The Beethoven performance brought the audience up shouting approval and waving its programs in a paper-y demonstration. It was splendid music making. Dr. Koussevitzky followed the score with utmost faithfulness. There was nothing new in this reading of the thrice-familiar work. But its spirit was bright and tender, and its conclusion especially so warm and hopefully stated, that it was a joy to hear. Dr. Koussevitzky so judiciously avoided dramatizing it, was so respectful toward Beethoven, yet at the same time so expressive, that it was a treat, in view of the many times that conductors have tried to aggrandize both themselves and Beethoven by overplaying the "Eroica." It has sometimes been said that Beethoven is not Dr. Koussevitzky's forte, but anyone hearing him today could not deny that he gave this third symphony the exact elegance, dimension and style demanded for it.

There is something about the magnificent melancholy of Sibelius, as of Tschaikowsky, which seems to offer a special challenge to Dr. Koussevitzky, a challenge which he meets in incandescent performance and interpretation. This was true here at Tanglewood again this afternoon, when he played the Sibelius Second Symphony with immense tension, excitement and an almost barbaric color. The reading culled all the dark, haunted emotion from the score and it seemed almost inappropriate to sit in the bright sunlight and listen to so black a symphony. And, as in the case of Tschaikowsky, Dr. Koussevitzky is able to pour out and whip up the drama of Sibelius without running over into sheer frenzy music or rant of emotion. He achieves a seizing intensity and brilliance of expressiveness, he builds the dimension of the work to titanic span, but the showmanship never exceeds the truth of the reading, nor the performance the plan and design which the composer set down.

Koussevitzky Rushed.

The concert concluded in the traditional hullaballoo. The final plagal measures of the Sibelius had hardly closed before the mob of Koussevitzky idolizers who had been on the lawn, made a rush for the shed, scrimmaging for a glimpse of the great doctor. There they clambered on the seats, shouting, whistling and whooping like a crowd watching the home team make a touchdown.

Dr. Koussevitzky went off and came back in his famous sauntering manner to take a dozen curtain calls. He beamed with pleasure, bowed and saluted all parts of the house, and had the orchestra up for applause a half dozen times. It was a great show, an immense tribute to a conductor, an orchestra and a festival which tops American symphonic achievement.

T. H. P.

This Clipping From
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE
AUG 16 1948

Koussevitzky Gets 'Bravos' At Tanglewood

By D. E. RITZ

"Bravos" were the order of yes- rday at the concluding concert the Berkshire Festival at Tangle- od for Serge Koussevitzky and Boston Symphony Orchestra. ey were a part of the remark- e ovation given the beloved con- tor following the performance of the Sibelius Second Symphony and the Beethoven Symphony number 3, the "Eroica."

A record crowd attended the performance that was one of the most stirring of this year's programs.

On Saturday evening Robert Shaw conducted the orchestra and the festival chorus for Debussy's "La Demoiselle Elue" and Brahms' "A German Requiem." Ellen Faull, soprano, and Eunice Alberts, contralto, were soloists for the first; Frances Yeend, soprano, and James Pease, bass, for the latter. Heavy rain let up just before the Saturday evening program and a rainbow cleared the sky if not the mud.

The festival has concluded 11 seasons now. From an appeal to only a few, it has gained in popularity and is reaching more and more of the general public. And this without letting up in the least on standards.

No words can describe satisfactorily programs like those of Saturday and yesterday. They must be heard. To each they translate into a different emotional experience. Skill and craftsmanship in performance and devotion to ideals, have played their part in making the festival what it is. It offers the best in programs and the best in performances regardless of circumstances.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN
AUG 16 1948

Berkshire Festival Ends

By MILES KASTENDIECK

TANGLEWOOD, LENOX, Mass., Aug. 16.—With a record-breaking crowd of 14,700, the Berkshire Festival ended on a note of triumph yesterday. The day was perfect, Tanglewood was at its best, the program was rich. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony rounded out the weekend in top form. A total of 112,500 people had attended the public concerts, 6,000 more than last year.

Two sure-fire symphonies were the attraction: Beethoven's "Eroica" and Sibelius' Second. Both ended on a note of triumph, and so did the orchestra. If Koussevitzky was in the vein for the Beethoven, he was even more so for the Sibelius. He saw to it that each work culminated in a blaze of tonal splendor, the line of which those who heard will not soon forget.

This was a time when the greatness of Koussevitzky and the greatness of the Boston Symphony shone in their full glory. The conductor imparted the enkindling spirit; the orchestra outdid itself. No matter how familiar the music, it sounded fresh in these inspired moments.

To say the audience was enthralled is to recognize the absorption with which it listens. It too, supplies inspiration. This one had the added excitement of being the largest ever to attend a Berkshire Festival concert. If it came to get a thrill, it did.

Robert Shaw conducted the Saturday night program. It consisted of two choral works: Debussy's "The Blessed Damozel" and Brahms' German Requiem. The regular Festival chorus participated. Some 8,500 people attended in spite of the downpours which continued up to the beginning of the concert.

While the performances of both works were good, there was nothing singular about them. Shaw's conducting was always musically sound. It still suggests a shyness and modesty not altogether satisfactory for the intrepretation of the big works he undertakes. His dynamics tend toward loud or soft, his manner toward the energetic or the tranquil. He should cultivate the in-between stages.

This type of conducting lent itself well to the Debussy. Since the dynamics maintain a consistent level, the musical qualities of the performance were the more apparent.

Another Festival is being planned for next year which will terminate Koussevitzky's 25th season with the Boston Symphony.

In the meantime the Berkshire music center has thrived this year. An overall estimate of attendance at all the musical events taking place since it opened on July 4 runs to 170,500.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
AUG 16 1948

Music

14,700 Hear Festival's Finale

By ROBERT BAGAR.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 16.—Ringing down the curtain on the Berkshire Music Festival of 1948, Serge Koussevitzky conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon, in the Music Shed at Tanglewood, through a two-part program offering of the "Eroica" Symphony of Beethoven and the Second Symphony of Sibelius.

With yesterday's attendance the total figures reached an impressive 170,500. Of these there were 58,000 free admissions, accounted for the fact that friends of the Berkshire Music Center (and their friends) obtain gratis admission to many of the events given here, barring, of course, the concerts of the Boston Symphony.

These concerts have themselves drawn 112,500 persons this summer, as compared with 106,600 last summer and 83,000 the summer before. All in all, it was the Berkshire Festival's most successful season, and the word is that plans for next year will be more or less on the basis of this.

Entirely Satisfactory.

Yesterday's symphonic program, played before 14,700, proved entirely satisfactory to the listeners. Mr. Koussevitzky's Beethoven—in this case the "Eroica"—went extremely well, I thought. There appeared to be a good deal of life and energy to the bigger movements, although they were never treated with anything but the most respectful attention. I thought I detected a tendency on the part of the horns to slow up things, no matter whether the tempo was fast or slow. Neither did this, however, prove an insurmountable obstacle to a performance which, considering all things, had class written over much of it.

The Sibelius, as you might expect, thundered out many voices. Dr. Koussevitzky is affectionate toward this symphony, and he has quite a few supporters, I'm sure. The melody, coming out piecemeal, as it does, then to flood us in its entirety, is something audiences have enjoyed ever since it was written, back in 1901. Yesterday's throng, which filled the shed and spread all over the back lawn, shouted its approval mightily.

On Saturday evening Robert Shaw appeared as conductor over the combined forces of the Boston Symphony and the Festival chorus, plus soloists, in two works. The first was the Debussy "La Demoiselle Elue," with Ellen Faull and Eunice Alberts in the solo spots. The second was the Brahms Requiem, featuring Frances Yeend and James Pease.

Special Precision.

Mr. Shaw displayed his familiar magic with merged instrumental and vocal groups. There was always, in the performance, the special precision that he has made a hallmark of his public appearances. For that matter, as a piece of design quite closely affiliated with the composer's work, Mr. Shaw's rendering of the Requiem was, considering its difficulties, a most expressive and continuously moving achievement. He was received with acclaim at the end of the evening and the audience embraced in its appreciation all the other parties involved.

There was an afternoon event in the theater-concert hall which attracted quite an audience and no little attention. This was a faculty recital performed by Gregor Piatigorsky and Ralph Berkowitz, presenting a program of music by Beethoven, Schumann and Hindemith, and it is with the Hindemith that most of us were especially concerned, since the work played—a piano and cello sonata—was given its world premiere.

This sonata in three movements exhibits the Hindemith addiction to contrapuntal writing. It is quite interesting counterpoint which is no mere adjunct of the piece but closely and essentially interwoven with his main ideas. A reflective, somewhat somber mood prevails throughout the music, and there are especially telling contrasts, as in some sections of the first and last movements, where the cello indulges in a kind of cantilena against the running figures of the piano. I am sure that I shall want to hear it again—and, quite likely, again and again. It seems almost superfluous to add that the program was beautifully performed by both artists.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN
AUG 16 1948

Record Attendance At Music Festival

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 16 (A. P.).—The eleventh season of the Berkshire Music Festival ended yesterday on a sweet note.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky, the conductor, gave fifteen concerts and drew a record-breaking total of 112,500 paying music fans. Jamming the huge concert shed on the 200-acre estate yesterday was a crowd of 14,700—largest ever for a single performance.

Koussevitzky and the orchestra received an ovation after

This Clipping From
PORTLAND, ME.
EXPRESS
AUG 16 1948

14,700 At Closing Of Music Festival At Tanglewood

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 16. (AP)—A record-breaking crowd of 14,700 attended the closing performance of the Berkshire Music Fstival at Tanglewood, Sunday.

A new total attendance record of 112,500 paid admissions for the 15 concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzsky, also was set.

The festival's 11th season was climaxed by the playing of Beethovn's Eroica Symphony and Sibelius' Symphony Number Two.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
AUG 19 1948

String Quartet Gives First of Seven Concerts

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

The Berkshire string quartet gave the first of seven successive Wednesday evening programs last night in the Berkshire Museum under the sponsorship of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress. The occasion was the observance of the 30th anniversary of the founding of the Berkshire Festivals of Chamber Music by Mrs. Coolidge on South Mountain in 1918.

The initial program of the original festival had been played by a quartet also named the "Berkshire" and of which Hugo Kortschak and Sergei Kotlarsky had been violinists, Clarence Evans viola, and the late Emerson Stoeber, cellist. On that original program, played in the Temple of Music on South Mountain on Monday afternoon, Sept. 16, 30 years ago, one of the works was a quintet by Thuille in which the assisting pianist had been Mrs. Coolidge herself.

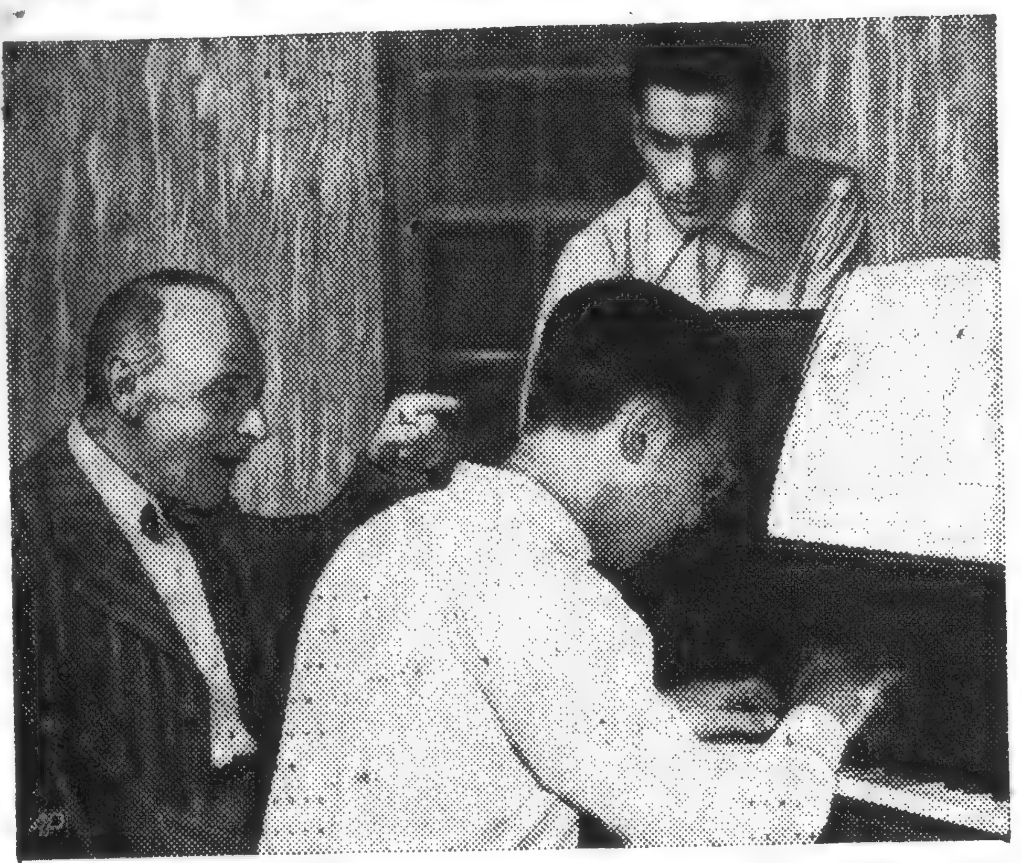
Last night the program consisted of string quartets by Schubert and Mozart, both in E flat major, with the last Bartok quartet between. The members of the present Berkshire quartet are Urico Rossi, first violin; Julius Hegyi, second violin; David Dawson, viola, and Fritz Magg, cello.

The real musical interest of the evening was the sixth Bartok quartet. Each of the four movements begin with a sad and plaintive introduction, given to a different and solo instrument each time. The introductions to the first two movements, played respectively by the viola and the cello, were passages of rarely eloquent playing and of superbly beautiful tone. The dramatic fantasy of Bartok was much more suitable material for the quartet than had been the opening Schubert. In this Bartok they displayed a breadth and sweep, and a deep feeling of immersion in the spirit of the music which had not been apparent in either of the two corner works, where they choked up and were often playing under shackles.

Bartok spaced his six quartets over some 30 or more years. Chronologically they show his youthful display of independence with revelations of influence by existing and preceding composers. They advance and revert to his own concepts. But the consistency of his instrumental writing proves that he had faith that what he may have considered experimental to begin, was a worthy, genuine, and personal conviction. Time is surely supporting his opinion. It is strange music to one attuned to the vertical writing of, for instance, the other two composers on last night's program, but it takes surprisingly little familiarity to become aware that this is music suited for string quartet and not adaptable for any other combination of tone sources. This, of course, is one of the unmistakable marks of talent, if not of genius. Furthermore, the tone groupings or clusters, they can hardly be called harmonies, fall agreeably on one's ears, in spite of the totally different method of the use of all his materials. The quartet made its greatest impression of

This Clipping From
HAGERSTOWN, MD.
HERALD
AUG 16 1948

Hawthorne Cottage Restored In The Berkshires



Maestro and students at work in a famous studio—Serge Koussevitzky, left, directs Seymour Lipkin at the piano, as Howard Shanet of Hunter College, New York, watches.

Hawthorne's red house, which has been restored by the National Federation of Music Clubs for the studios of Serge Koussevitzky and and Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist.

AP Newsfeatures

Lenox, Mass. — The Hawthorne cottage at Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., has been restored and now houses three studios, including Serge Koussevitzky's class in advanced orchestra conducting.

Mrs. Guy Patterson Gannett of Portland, Me., former president of the National Federation of Music Clubs and chairman of the committee for restoration, has presented the house where Nathaniel Hawthorne lived in 1850-1851 to the Berkshire Music Center.

There the novelist wrote "The House of Seven Gables."

A two-day music festival was arranged for the dedication.

Manning Hawthorne, the oldest grandson of the novelist, and Henry Wadsworth Longfellow Dana, great grandson of the poet, were among scheduled speakers, as was Mrs. Royden J. Keith of Chicago, national president of the federation, and Gay Tapley of Portland, Me.

This Clipping From WILMINGTON, DEL.
NEWS
AUG 17 1948

Of This 'n' That

We were reminded the other day of the Berkshire Music Festival and of the great man who is bowing out as its conductor this year, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

The stories of Dr. Koussevitzky's kindness and generosity are legion, but another added to the score will do no harm.

The people with whom this story concerns itself are a group of elderly German and Austrian refugees. These men and women were spending the summer in Lenox, the site of the festival, at a camp operated by the Cooperative Residence Club of New York. Probably very few people have heard of the club, which does outstanding work in its field.

At any rate, this group, the average of which was well over 70, was a very lonely bunch. Unused to the ways of this country and its language, many of them had the additional handicap of having to forget horrible concentration camp experiences and the loss of loved ones to Hitler's tyranny.

Dr. Koussevitzky was instrumental in making their summer a happy one. Twice he threw open the gates of Tanglewood to the entire camp. The first time was to a rehearsal of the symphony orchestra on his birthday. But the second time he made special arrangements for the group will probably be a cherished memory to all of those "campers" who attended. For this time the Boston Symphony Orchestra's program included Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, with the final chorus of Schiller's "Ode to Joy", a particularly moving piece of music, and dear to the hearts of all Germans.

Thus, by a simple act of generosity, Dr. Koussevitzky endeared himself to these people, and gave them an impression of this country which they will never forget.

* * *

A United Press dispatch of recent date tells about a 28-year-old cow giving birth to her 26th calf. If one is acquainted with the accepted limits of barnyard stock, this in itself is enough to elevate the eyebrows. After all, experts calculate that at 28 a cow is equivalent in age to a human being of 90.

However, one or two innocent or coincidental details even further embellish this story. For instance, the scene of the phenomenon is a town called (believe it or not) Ripley, Maine. And the owner of that remarkable cow is none other than a Mrs. Vitam, who if she lives up to her name, sounds like a most invigorating individual.

Mrs. Vitam claims her aged mama bovine is the oldest in the state and possibly one of the oldest in he country, and officials at a Boston animal hospital support her contention with the statement that the average life of a cow is 15 years.

To add to her laurels, Mrs. Vitam's amazing animal produced 18 quarts of milk up until a year ago, which, from the economist's viewpoint, was a heck of a time to stop with milk prices skyrocketing almost every day —even to produce the miracle of a cow's age. At any rate we nominate the Maine marvel for membership in the new honorary bovine sorority, Alfalfa Chapter of Moo Gramma Moo.

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES-UNION
AUG 17 1948

Tanglewood

AGED MUSICIAN CLOSES SEASON

By EDGAR S. VAN OLINDA

The 1948 season of the Boston Symphony orchestra at Tanglewood in the Berkshires closed Sunday afternoon in a blaze of glory. Some 15,000 music lovers converged within and without the great shed to establish an all-time record for attendance. At the conclusion, Dr. Koussevitzky, responding to almost hysterical applause audible and visual, his face lighted up by an inner glow and hundreds of amateur and professiona camera bulbs, waved an "auf wiedersehn" in the best Chatauqua salute fashion.

THE SEPTUAGENARIAN plus, conductor, but musically, ageless director of the orchestra, confined the program to two monumental symphonic works; th "Eroica" of Beethoven, and th Number Two, in D-major by Sibelius. Dr. Koussevitzky said jus about everything that could b mentioned about these two contrasting works during their performances, making the remarks o a reviewer a case of "carryin coals to New castle." Suffice it t say, in the humble opinion o this member of the audience, i was an emotional experience neve to be forgotten.

Saturday night s program de voted to choral works by the Festival chorus, conducted by the brilliant, young American arrange and member of the faculty o Berkshire Music Center, Rober Shaw. We are unable to report o Debussy's "The Blessed Damozel," since intolerable traffic regulations at Lenox prevented thous ands of cars (our's among them from reaching their parking space until the conclusion of this work

HOWEVER, THE monumenta and awe-inspiring performance o the Brahms "German Requiem more than compensated for ou enforced absence from the Frenc composer's contribution, magnif cent as it undoubtedly was. Elle Faul, soprano and Eunice Albert contralto were the incidental so loists.

In the "Requiem," Franci Yeend soprano and James Pease, bas products of the vocal departmen of the Berkshire Music Cente were the soloists. Miss Yeend' beautifully placed soprano soare clearly above the orchestra' might, with Mr. Pease's lighte bass, at times, undistinguishabl above the orgy of sound. Mr Brahms has written difficult, a times, vocalism which extends th limits of the human voice. Thes young, fresh singers took the highest reaches of the score in thei stride—and always right in th middle of the altissimo notes.

TANGLEWOOD ENDS A BANNER FESTIVAL

Aug 16

14,700 Hear Dr. Koussevitzky Conduct Closing Program—Series Drew 170,500

By ROSS PARMENTER
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 15—After six weeks of almost unbroken music-making, quietness settled on Tanglewood this evening. Students of the Berkshire Music Center gave the last of more than forty programs in the morning, and Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra closed the 1948 Berkshire Music Festival in the afternoon with a concert before 14,700 persons, largest audience to attend a single festival program.

The final concert brought the total attendance to 170,500, thereby breaking all previous records and making this festival the most financially successful of the eleven that have been held here. And this does not include the crowds for the three orchestral rehearsals and the friends of the Berkshire Music Center, who have attended the daily events by and for students. These, too, have set records, drawing an additional 58,000 persons.

The weather and events of the final week-end were characteristic. There was a downpour late yesterday afternoon, but there were clear skies at night, and today was cloudless with the sunlight green-gold on the tree-shaded lawns. And there was music galore.

'Cellist Plays in Theatre

After Gregor Piatigorsky's recital in the theatre yesterday afternoon, for instance, a woman who had already attended the Boston Symphony's rehearsal in the morning, turned to a friend and asked, "What's on next?"

The answer was a program of original works by composition students in the Chamber Music Hall. Then came the big concert in the shed at night. The young people had their innings at this event, for the conductor was Robert Shaw, the four soloists were young singers, and the program consisted of two choral works sung by the ninety-five women and eighty-five men students who form the festival chorus.

The first was Debussy's "The Blessed Damozel." The report was that the ethereal, sensitive music sounded somewhat attenuated at the back of the huge auditorium, but up close it was touching and beautiful. The young women of the chorus sang with skill and sympathy, and Ellen Faull, as the Damozel and Eunice Alberts as the narrator had fresh, youthful voices that fitted the poem, even if they did not have full concert brilliance.

Frances Yeend as Soloist

The other work was Brahms' "Requiem," sung in the original German and given without an intermission. To one listener it sounded rather long, but it was carefully prepared and the chorus, ranged in six tiers behind the orchestra, often sang with lovely effect. Frances Yeend, as the soprano soloist, revealed a pleasant, easy flowing voice, but her singing was not especially expressive. James Pease, the baritone, however, had dramatic emphasis, as well as a voice of splendid, rich timbre.

Mr. Piatigorsky's program was given as one of the faculty recitals. He was assisted by Ralph Berkowitz, executive assistant to Dr. Koussevitzky. Together they gave the world première of a new sonata written for the 'cellist by Paul Hindemith. It had an impressive closing passacaglia, but the first two movements, inventive and skillfully written as they were, hardly seemed the right preparation for such a finale.

Ovation for Conductor

As was only fitting, Dr. Koussevitzky was the dominating figure of the final concert. To close the festival that he has brought to its present eminence, he chose two famous works from the standard symphonic repertoire, Beethoven's "Eroica" and Sibelius' second symphony. And at the end he received a tumultous, standing ovation that lasted five minutes and brought him back to the stage six times.

The two symphonies came off splendidly. Under other hands the famous funeral march of the "Eroica" has sounded with greater grief, but in consequence the final movement was not overshadowed, and the conductor made it a really stirring resolution of a great work.

In the Sibelius, the wonderful resources of the orchestra were marshaled to a gathering climax that brought cheers before the final roll of the drums.

This Clipping From
GLENS FALLS, N. Y.
POST STAR

This Clipping From
NEW ORLEANS, LA.
ITEM

AUG 16 1948

Tanglewood's Busiest Man Is Grounds Boss

BY MARILYN BARNETT

TANGLEWOOD, LENOX, Mass.—When you hear the sound of the musical horn at Tanglewood it is usually eight minutes before concert time and is a signal for pedestrians to clear the walks.

For the sound of the musical horn means that Dr. Serge Koussevitzky is being escorted to the back stage entrance of the music shed.

It's an odd cortege: The horn is sounded by gruff but friendly Ward Gaston, who for 19 years has been superintendent of Tanglewood. Every concert night he climbs into his dark green auto, alerts the guards at each entrance, and then drives up the road to Serannk—the estate of Dr. Koussevitzky.

Koussevitzky, Mrs. Koussexitzky (and guests) are bundled into the maestro's black limousine. Then the two-car motorcade starts back to Tanglewood.

At 61, Ward Gaston is still working hard. During his life he has peddled milk, worked on a steamboat, "fired the Boston to Albany run," done a turn as a brakeman, been a carpenter, painter and horse trainer.

HAS CREW OF 25

He once superintended a Connecticut estate. In 1930 came to Lenox to work for the superintendent of Tanglewood. When the superintendent died he (Gaston) was made chief.

A crew of 25 men work under him over the 210 acres which comprise Tanglewood. He is no slouch when it comes to transmitting orders and seeing them carried out.

It's up to him and his men to keep the lawns at Tanglewood well manicured (there are 40); the 78 little hemlocks must be trimmed; the hedges (one of which is three-tenths of a mile long, nine feet high, 12 feet wide) must be clipped; trash must be cleaned away.

On the grounds are boxes, four feet high and eight feet long, in which picnickers and concert-goers toss trash. These must be emptied each day.

Everyone here at Tanglewood knows Gaston. The other day ex-Postmaster Jim Farley stopped to shake hands, musicians stop to say hello; veteran concert-goers never come in the main gate without a "hello" for him.

STAYS UP LATE

His duties do not stop at policing Tanglewood. On most big concert nights he never gets to bed before three in the morning. He cannot go to bed until the last car has pulled out of the fields in front of Tanglewood. (The two areas hold 5000 cars). Sometimes a musician will stay in the shed to practice; or someone gets lost or sick and is unable to find or drive a car. So Gaston must keep the big flood lights on until the last car has gone.

Gaston was born in West Stockbridge, Mass., of French parents. He's been married 35 years. His son and daughter-in-law edit and publish the Town Crier, a local publication.

Are musicians too temperamental? "They're just like anyone else—take Dr. Koussevitzky. He's a genius but he's human," Gaston said, and was then off to give an order for trimming a shapely green maple.

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

AUG 16 1948

Festival's Coffers Gain This Season

By Staff Correspondent

LENOX, Aug. 16—Audiences totaling 113,400 attended the Berkshire Music Festival's Bach, Mozart, and Shed concerts completed yesterday afternoon at Tanglewood. This is 6800 more than last year with a $25,000 gross increase in gate receipts.

Including the student events of the Berkshire Music Center and rehearsals of the Boston Symphony, the complete total was 171,400, or 25,000 more than 1947. This makes the Berkshire Festival by far the most lucrative project of its kind in the United States.

It is interesting to compare these figures with those of the Lewisohn Stadium concerts which attracted more than 300,000 patrons this Summer and suffered a deficit of more than $80,000.

Yesterday's concert brightened the weekend box-office with an attendance of 14,700. Thursday and Saturday nights' audiences were seriously depleted by heavy downpours.

Last week's activities opened Monday night with the first American performance in more than 100 years of Rossini's forgotten operatic skit, "The Turk in Italy."

All-Tschaikowsky Night

Tuesday night marked an extra event in the festival's schedule—an all-Tschaikowsky concert by the Boston Symphony, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, with Seymour Lipkin as piano soloist.

Technique Brilliant

Mr. Lipkin studied at the Berkshire Music Center in 1942, and returning in 1946, was one of Dr. Koussevitzky's conducting students. He was chosen by George Szell as one of two apprentice conductors of the Cleveland Orchestra last season. Last Spring, he was winner of the Rachmaninoff Fund national piano contest.

The pianist was applauded warmly for his brilliant technique and an exciting but at times arbitrary performance of the familiar "Concerto in B-flat." The program also included the 'Pathetique Symphony" and came to a sonorous close with the "Overture 1812."

Thursday night's concert returned Leonard Bernstein to the podium for his second and last festival appearance. He demonstrated great talent, marred only by a number of disturbing mannerisms, in three Russian works—Moussorgsky's "A Night on Bald Mountain," Stravinsky's "Petrouchka" and "Shostakovich's "Symphony No. 5."

Residents of Lenox and Stockbridge were invited especially Friday night to attend a tribute to the late Mrs. Andrew H. Hepburn, who donated her Tanglewood estate in 1937 to trustees of the Boston Symphony.

The audience heard the first presentation of an elegy in her memory written by Robert Kurka, a former violin student of Kathleen Parlow and a student in composition of Darius Milhaud at the Center. The work was commissioned by Dr. Koussevitzky.

At the ceremonies, Dr. Koussevitzky read the following paragraph from a letter he received from Mrs. Hepburn shortly before her death June 1:

> "It moves me deeply to think of the joy and inspiration you have given to hundreds of thousands of people, and of the opportunities to the young musicians who might never have been heard of and who are our musicians of the future."

Her Part Great

The conductor commented, "She was so modest that little did she realize how great was her part in this development with her contribution to American musical life."

Despite wet grounds and threatening weather, 8500 persons came to hear Robert Shaw in his only Tanglewood appearance Saturday night. The outstanding young American choral conductor (who will appear on the forthcoming Civic Music Series with his Collegiate Chorale) selected Debussy's "The Blessed Damozel," and Brahms' "A German Requiem."

Frances Yeend was outstanding among three women soloists. The others were Ellen Faull and Eunice Alberts. James Pease, bass, gave an excellent performance in the Brahms score, and Mr. Shaw conducted with persuasion and a high degree of musicianship.

Dr. Koussevitzky entrusted the success to the festival's closing concert yesterday afternoon to two great symphonic works, Beethoven's "Symphony No. 3 in E-flat (Eroica)" and Sibelius' "Symphony No. 2."

The Boston Symphony conductor, who is retiring after the forthcoming season, was given a rousing ovation. His great energy and sound musicianship have been consistent throughout his arduous Tanglewood schedule but were never more evident than yesterday afternoon.

R. M.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

AUG 16 1948

14,700 Persons Attend Final Berkshire Concert

Thus Ends the Magnificent Festival Which Drew 170,500 Friends of Music to Tanglewood

By WILLARD M. CLARK

Lenox, Aug. 15—Hardly had the shouts and exultation of the finale of the Second Symphony of Jan Sibelius been uttered when they were taken up by the 14,700 persons who attended this final concert of the Berkshire Music Festival given here by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky. This number exceeds by 700 the largest audience the festival has had.

Many Musical Events

It has been a magnificent festival with 112,500 persons attending the Bach-Mozart series, the festival series, Tanglewood on parade and the all-Tschaikowsky program. It is estimated that when those friends of music who attended the student programs are counted, that 170,500 persons attended Tanglewood during the season.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky chose to program two symphonies for this final concert, the "Eroica" or Third Symphony, of Beethoven and the Second Symphony of Sibelius. It was a happy coupling. Both men were of approximate age when they wrote their symphonies; both were in the fullness of the powers and conscious of their freedom of utterance.

"Memorable Listening"

Today these symphonies were given magnificent readings by Koussevitzky and were played with all the virtuosity of which the Boston players are capable. They provided memorable listening. Some of it, as for instance, the variation finale of the "Eroica" and the finale of the Sibelius with its dramatic change from D minor to D major, was unforgettable. Koussevitzky was in his most communicative spirit. No more need be said.

There have been many highlights during the festival programs. One will not soon forget the stupendous reading and performance which the Boston players and Leonard Bernstein gave the Second or "Resurection" Symphony of Mahler, or the Bernstein reading of the complete "Petrouchaka" suite by Stravinsky. The Koussevitzky direction of the Brahms First Symphony and Stravinsky "Oedipus Rex" were outstanding, while his performance of Tschaikowsky's "Sixth Symphony" was a tremendous achievement.

Proved His Worth

Carvalho, the young Brazilian composer, próved his fine worth in his reading of the "Fantastic Symphony" of Berlioz and gave a first performance of "Madonna" a symphonic poem by Villa-Lobos.

Another first performance in America was Koussevitzky's reading of the Sixth Symphony of Vaughn-Williams. The opera department under Boris Goldovsky brought new life to Rossini's ancient opera "A Turk in Italy."

A Superb Season

Yes, it has been a superb season and so this Berkshire Festival will continue, larger and finer, if possible, every year. The Berkshire Center will continue to bring together students from every part of this country and many foreign lands, training them in their respective fields and providing a true American leadership for the future.

Holyoke [illegible] Aug 16 48

There were 14,700 people listening in rapt mood to the concert at Tanglewood yesterday. Officially, for some reason, the authorities at Tanglewood count attendance at every concert and proclaim it. This was the largest attendance ever at any of these concerts. It was the most perfect day that one can dream of for the Berkshires in August. Nature was trying to atone for her rains and winds of the three days before. And it was the closing day. Serge Koussevitzky himself was conducting. It was his last appearance as official conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra. Presumably the Berkshire Music center will have his entire attention from now on. The combination of the climax of the season, the final controlling appearance of Koussevitzky with the orchestra to which he has contributed such increase of greatness, and the sparkling sunshine charging the cleared air raised the great concert at Tanglewood to excess levels. The program was old-time as compared with some that have marked the season.

Even for the day before Koussevitzky had chosen to bring out new conductors. During the season there have been several new conductors. Audiences went into raptures over the proofs of the vigor and forward march of the orchestra and its willingness to give new works masterly presentation.

For yesterday the Beethoven Eroica Symphony, written for Napoleon but never laid in his unappreciative lap, was chosen and the Sibelius Second Symphony. Dr. Koussevitzky never builds program without telling why or how they are arranged. The program notes explained that both symphonies were written by the composers when they were in their thirties and before they had full measure of a hard world. Their visions were still undimmed. They are magnificent and immortal works. It was good to have them together. It is unnecessary to say that the orchestra was in one of its highest hours. This reporter recalls hearing the Sibelius Second Symphony in the opera house in Mexico City in pre-war-days.

The violins in the staccato passages were so thrilling that you almost jumped out of your seat. They were wierdly dramatic. Dr. Koussevitzsky has plenty of fire in his temperament and in his conducting. The staccato passages were thrilling. They didn't scare you. Also the benign spirit that lies over Tanglewood is more soothing than the excited mood of that Mexican opera house.

One of the joys of the Tanglewood concert is the supreme hush that can overlay 14,700 people, most of them listening reverently, out under the sunshine to the great music. You can feel the lift of the senses into an exalted aura. It was an experience, having been charged with that supreme music to share in the calls and recalls for the great master to come back. He did it until he felt the bravas had been fully spoken The audience was just as jubilant for the orchestra.

Tanglewood's great season has drawn about 225,000 people counting those who have attended the festival, orchestral concerts and the music center and the chamber music concerts. Music is language that all men can speak together. Tanglewood and the Russian from America Serge Koussevitzky, who has created it, are beacons for harmony in its most beautiful expression.

This Clipping From
GLENS FALLS, N. Y.
POST STAR

This Clipping From
NEW ORLEANS, LA.
ITEM

AUG 16 1948

Tanglewood's Busiest Man Is Grounds Boss

BY MARILYN BARNETT

TANGLEWOOD, LENOX, Mass.—When you hear the sound of the musical horn at Tanglewood it is usually eight minutes before concert time and is a signal for pedestrians to clear the walks.

For the sound of the musical horn means that Dr. Serge Koussevitzky is being escorted to the back stage entrance of the music shed.

It's an odd cortege: The horn is sounded by gruff but friendly Ward Gaston, who for 19 years has been superintendent of Tanglewood. Every concert night he climbs into his dark green auto, alerts the guards at each entrance, and then drives up the road to Serannk—the estate of Dr. Koussevitzky.

Koussevitzky, Mrs. Koussexitzky (and guests) are bundled into the maestro's black limousine. Then the two-car motorcade starts back to Tanglewood.

At 61, Ward Gaston is still working hard. During his life he has peddled milk, worked on a steamboat, "fired the Boston to Albany run," done a turn as a brakeman, been a carpenter, painter and horse trainer.

HAS CREW OF 25

He once superintended a Connecticut estate. In 1930 came to Lenox to work for the superintendent of Tanglewood. When the superintendent died he (Gaston) was made chief.

A crew of 25 men work under him over the 210 acres which comprise Tanglewood. He is no slouch when it comes to transmitting orders and seeing them carried out.

It's up to him and his men to keep the lawns at Tanglewood well manicured (there are 40); the 78 little hemlocks must be trimmed; the hedges (one of which is three-tenths of a mile long, nine feet high, 12 feet wide) must be clipped; trash must be cleaned away.

On the grounds are boxes, four feet high and eight feet long, in which picnickers and concert-goers toss trash. These must be emptied each day.

Everyone here at Tanglewood knows Gaston. The other day ex-Postmaster Jim Farley stopped to shake hands, musicians stop to ay hello; veteran concert-goers never come in the main gate without a "hello" for him.

STAYS UP LATE

His duties do not stop at po-cing Tanglewood. On most big concert nights he never gets to ed before three in the morning. e cannot go to bed until the last r has pulled out of the fields front of Tanglewood. (The two eas hold 5000 cars). Sometimes a musician will stay in the shed to practice; or someone gets lost or sick and is unable to find or drive a car. So Gaston must keep the big flood lights on until the last car has gone.

Gaston was born in West Stockbridge, Mass., of French parents. He's been married 35 years. His son and daughter-in-law edit and publish the Town Crier, a local publication.

Are musicians too temperamental? "They're just like anyone else—take Dr. Koussevitzky. He's a genius but he's human," Gaston said, and was then off to give an order for trimming a shapely green maple.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

AUG 16 1948

14,700 Persons Attend Final Berkshire Concert

Thus Ends the Magnificent Festival Which Drew 170,500 Friends of Music to Tanglewood

By WILLARD M. CLARK

Lenox, Aug. 15—Hardly had the shouts and exultation of the finale of the Second Symphony of Jan Sibelius been uttered when they were taken up by the 14,700 persons who attended this final concert of the Berkshire Music Festival given here by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky. This number exceeds by 700 the largest audience the festival has had.

Many Musical Events

It has been a magnificent festival with 112,500 persons attending the Bach-Mozart series, the festival series, Tanglewood on parade and the all-Tschaikowsky program. It is estimated that when those friends of music who attended the student programs are counted, that 170,500 persons attended Tanglewood during the season.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky chose to program two symphonies for this final concert, the "Eroica" or Third Symphony, of Beethoven and the Second Symphony of Sibelius. It was a happy coupling. Both men were of approximate age when they wrote their symphonies; both were in the fullness of the powers and conscious of their freedom of utterance.

"Memorable Listening"

Today these symphonies were given magnificent readings by Koussevitzky and were played with all the virtuosity of which the Boston players are capable. They provided memorable listening. Some of it, as for instance, the variation finale of the "Eroica" and the finale of the Sibelius with its dramatic change from D minor to D major, was unforgettable. Koussevitzky was in his most communicative spirit. No more need be said.

There have been many highlights during the festival programs. One will not soon forget the stupendous reading and performance which the Boston players and Leonard Bernstein gave the Second or "Resurection" Symphony of Mahler, or the Bernstein reading of the complete "Petrouchaka" suite by Stravinsky. The Koussevitzky direction of the Brahms First Symphony and Stravinsky "Oedipus Rex" were outstanding, while his performance of Tschaikowsky's "Sixth Symphony" was a tremendous achievement.

Proved His Worth

Carvalho the young Brazilian composer, proved his fine worth in his reading of the "Fantastic Symphony" of Berlioz and gave a first performance of "Madonna" a symphonic poem by Villa-Lobos.

Another first performance in America was Koussevitzky's reading of the Sixth Symphony of Vaughn-Williams. The opera department under Boris Goldovsky brought new life to Rossini's ancient opera "A Turk in Italy."

A Superb Season

Yes, it has been a superb season and so this Berkshire Festival will continue, larger and finer, if possible, every year. The Berkshire Center, will continue to bring together students from every part of this country and many foreign lands, training them in their respective fields and providing a true American leadership for the future.

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

AUG 16 1948

Festival's Coffers Gain This Season

By Staff Correspondent

LENOX, Aug. 16—Audiences totaling 113,400 attended the Berkshire Music Festival's Bach, Mozart, and Shed concerts completed yesterday afternoon at Tanglewood. This is 6800 more than last year with a $25,000 gross increase in gate receipts.

Including the student events of the Berkshire Music Center and rehearsals of the Boston Symphony, the complete total was 171,400, or 25,000 more than 1947. This makes the Berkshire Festival by far the most lucrative project of its kind in the United States.

It is interesting to compare these figures with those of the Lewisohn Stadium concerts which attracted more than 300,000 patrons this Summer and suffered a deficit of more than $80,000.

Yesterday's concert brightened the weekend box-office with an attendance of 14,700. Thursday and Saturday nights' audiences were seriously depleted by heavy downpours.

Last week's activities opened Monday night with the first American performance in more than 100 years of Rossini's forgotten operatic skit, "The Turk in Italy."

All-Tschaikowsky Night

Tuesday night marked an extra event in the festival's schedule—an all-Tschaikowsky concert by the Boston Symphony, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, with Seymour Lipkin as piano soloist.

Technique Brilliant

Mr. Lipkin studied at the Berkshire Music Center in 1942, and returning in 1946, was one of Dr. Koussevitzky's conducting students. He was chosen by George Szell as one of two apprentice conductors of the Cleveland Orchestra last season. Last Spring, he was winner of the Rachmaninoff Fund national piano contest.

The pianist was applauded warmly for his brilliant technique and an exciting but at times arbitrary performance of the familiar "Concerto in B-flat." The program also included the "Pathetique Symphony" and came to a sonorous close with the "Overture 1812."

Thursday night's concert returned Leonard Bernstein to the podium for his second and last festival appearance. He demonstrated great talent, marred only by a number of disturbing mannerisms, in three Russian works—Moussorgsky's "A Night on Bald Mountain," Stravinsky's "Petrouchka" and "Shostakovich's "Symphony No. 5."

Residents of Lenox and Stockbridge were invited especially Friday night to attend a tribute to the late Mrs. Andrew H. Hepburn, who donated her Tanglewood estate in 1937 to trustees of the Boston Symphony.

The audience heard the first presentation of an elegy in her memory written by Robert Kurka, a former violin student of Kathleen Parlow and a student in composition of Darius Milhaud at the Center. The work was commissioned by Dr. Koussevitzky.

At the ceremonies, Dr. Koussevitzky read the following paragraph from a letter he received from Mrs. Hepburn shortly before her death June 1:

> "It moves me deeply to think of the joy and inspiration you have given to hundreds of thousands of people, and of the opportunities to the young musicians who might never have been heard of and who are our musicians of the future."

Her Part Great

The conductor commented, "She was so modest that little did she realize how great was her part in this development with her contribution to American musical life."

Despite wet grounds and threatening weather, 8500 persons came to hear Robert Shaw in his only Tanglewood appearance Saturday night. The outstanding young American choral conductor (who will appear on the forthcoming Civic Music Series with his Collegiate Chorale) selected Debussy's "The Blessed Damozel," and Brahms' "A German Requiem."

Frances Yeend was outstanding among three women soloists. The others were Ellen Faull and Eunice Alberts. James Pease, bass, gave an excellent performance in the Brahms score, and Mr. Shaw conducted with persuasion and a high degree of musicianship.

Dr. Koussevitzky entrusted the success to the festival's closing concert yesterday afternoon to two great symphonic works, Beethoven's "Symphony No. 3 in E-flat (Eroica)" and Sibelius' "Symphony No. 2."

The Boston Symphony conductor, who is retiring after the forthcoming season, was given a rousing ovation. His great energy and sound musicianship have been consistent throughout his arduous Tanglewood schedule but were never more evident than yesterday afternoon.

R. M.

Holyoke [illegible]

There were 14,700 people listening in rapt mood to the concert at Tanglewood yesterday. Officially, for some reason, the authorities at Tanglewood count attendance at every concert and proclaim it. This was the largest attendance ever at any of these concerts. It was the most perfect day that one can dream of for the Berkshires in August. Nature was trying to atone for her rains and winds of the three days before. And it was the closing day. Serge Koussevitzky himself was conducting. It was his last appearance as official conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra. Presumably the Berkshire Music center will have his entire attention from now on. The combination of the climax of the season, the final controlling appearance of Koussevitzky with the orchestra to which he has contributed such increase of greatness, and the sparkling sunshine charging the cleared air raised the great concert at Tanglewood to excess levels. The program was old-time as compared with some that have marked the season.

Even for the day before Koussevitzky had chosen to bring out new conductors. During the season there have been several new conductors. Audiences went into raptures over the proofs of the vigor and forward march of the orchestra and its willingness to give new works masterly presentation.

For yesterday the Beethoven Eroica Symphony, written for Napoleon but never laid in his unappreciative lap, was chosen and the Sibelius Second Symphony. Dr. Koussevitzky never builds program without telling why or how they are arranged. The program notes explained that both symphonies were written by the composers when they were in their thirties and before they had full measure of a hard world. Their visions were still undimmed. They are magnificent and immortal works. It was good to have them together. It is unnecessary to say that the orchestra was in one of its highest hours. This reporter recalls hearing the Sibelius Second Symphony in the opera house in Mexico City in pre-war-days.

The violins in the staccato passages were so thrilling that you almost jumped out of your seat. They were wierdly dramatic. Dr. Koussevitzky has plenty of fire in his temperament and in his conducting. The staccato passages were thrilling. They didn't scare you. Also the benign spirit that lies over Tanglewood is more soothing than the excited mood of that Mexican opera house.

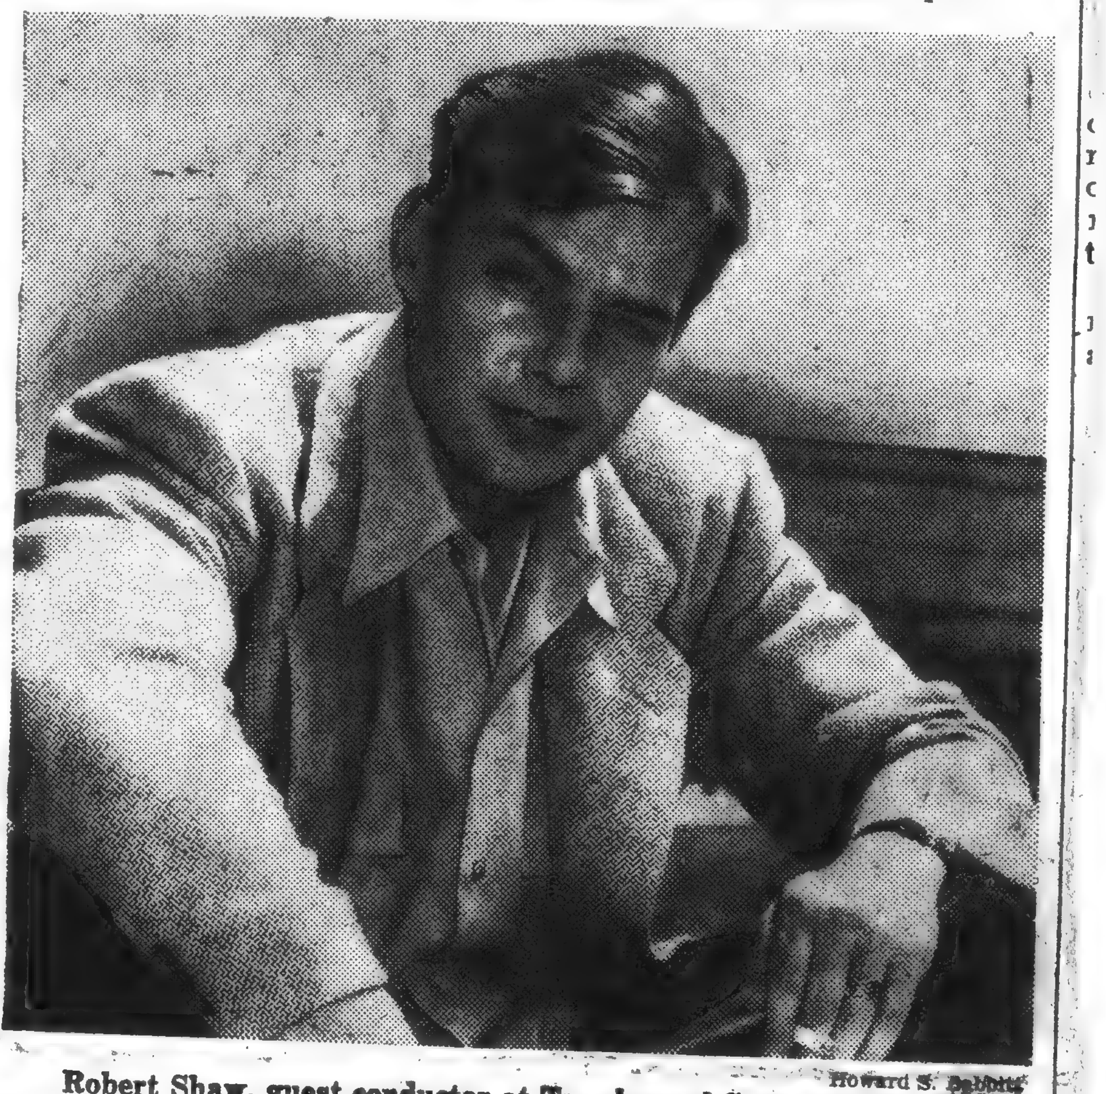
One of the joys of the Tanglewood concert is the supreme hush that can overlay 14,700 people, most of them listening reverently, out under the sunshine to the great music. You can feel the lift of the senses into an exalted aura. It was an experience, having been charged with that supreme music to share in the calls and recalls for the great master to come back. He did it until he felt the bravas had been fully spoken The audience was just as jubilant for the orchestra.

Tanglewood's great season has drawn about 225,000 people counting those who have attended the festival, orchestral concerts and the music center and the chamber music concerts. Music is language that all men can speak together. Tanglewood and the Russian from America Serge Koussevitzky, who has created it, are beacons for harmony in its most beautiful expression.

MUSICIANS APPEARING IN FINAL WEEK AT TANGLEWOOD

Three young singers who will be heard in closing programs at the Berkshire Festival: Left, James Pease, bass-baritone, soloist in Brahms Requiem Saturday and member of the cast of "The Turk in Italy" tomorrow and Wednesday nights; center, Eunice Alberts, contralto soloist Saturday night in Debussy's "The Blessed Damozel"; right, David Lloyd, tenor, is one of the principals in the Rossini opera.

Adele Addison, who sings Zaida in "The Turk in Italy."



Howard S. Babbitt

Robert Shaw, guest conductor at Tanglewood Saturday night.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

AUG 18 1948

Musical Tolerance

To the Editor of THE EAGLE:—

Now that the Tanglewood season is over, it may be profitable to reflect upon how, in Massachusetts at least, music appreciation seems to vary with longitude.

While at Tanglewood the Boston Symphony Orchestra received tremendous public acclaim. In Pittsfield the audience of Mr. Antunio Mastriaco, the organ virtuoso, is often so numerous that many listen from the sidewalk. In Becket an anonymous soloist—a cornetist, we think — penetrates the eventide somnolence unmolested, right through the book. At Springfield, 500 drum and bugle corps, it is announced, have been invited to compete at the Eastern States Exposition. But at Boston, inhabitants of Beacon Street have successfully resisted the establishment of a music conservatory within those muted precincts. It would have been just too noisy.

It would seem that at some point between the Berkshire Hills and the Atlantic Ocean a little air becomes a sour note, possibly at Belchertown.

ALBERT M. JACKSON,
Lee.

Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

JEWISH NEWS
DETROIT, MICH
8/20/48

Lipkin Acclaimed by Tanglewood Critics

Seymour Lipkin, Detroit pianist who won the Rachmaninoff Fund Prize, scored another triumph last week as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the baton of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, at the Tschaikovsky program at the Tanglewood concert in Lenox, Mass.

Olin Downes wrote in the N. Y. Times that "Lipkin had a remarkable success, remarkable not less for his musicianship, authority, and sense of symphonic proportion than for his abundant virtuosity and the fire with which he projected the music."

Francis B. Perkins wrote in the N. Y. Herald-Tribune that Lipkin's "playing gave evidence of remarkable power employed with taste and discretion."

Lipkin is the son of Dr. and Mrs. Ezra Lipkin.

This Clipping From
GLENS FALLS, N. Y.

Fine Music Is Always Remembered!

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY, Director

After You've heard and enjoyed these artists at Tanglewood . . . enjoy them all year 'round in your home—on records!

Robert Shaw

conducting the RCA Chorale and Symphony Orchestra in "BRAHM'S REQUIEM" with Eleanor Steber, soprano, and James Pease, baritone.

Leonard Bernstein

pianist, conductor—in "RAVEL"—Concerto for piano and orchestra

Koussevitzky

conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra in BEETHOVEN'S Symphony No. 2 in D
SCHUBERT'S Symphony No. 5

Copland

(Guest Composer at Tanglewood)
RODEO (Four Dance Episodes)

Also—many other fine selections, being played at Tanglewood, in stock in our record department.

Fourth Floor

England Brothers

---

2 PROTEGES PROVE KOUSSEVITZKY FAITH IS AMPLY JUSTIFIED

By THEODOLINDA C. BORIS
Special to The BUFFALO EVENING NEWS.

TANGLEWOOD, Mass., Aug. 2.—Serge Koussevitzky, one of the world's great conductors, has given thousands of music-lovers unforgettable experiences as they have listened to his Boston Symphony Orchestra in its home city, on tour or at the Tanglewood Festival concerts. He has given the contemporary composer the heartening encouragement of repeated performances of new works. He has rendered continuous and faithful service to the cause of music in this country.

One of the services which the good doctor has given to music in part transcends, at least for this observer, even some of his most magnificent performances. That service is his encouragement, of young musicians, notably young conductors, in his Berkshire Music Center, the famed conductor's, "dream-come-true" school in which a hand-picked student body exemplifies, for a six-week summer session, Koussevitzky's happy phrase, "living and working in music."

Two Students Stand Out

Certainly the most newsworthy aspects of the opening week-end of the 1948 Tanglewood Festival concern two former proteges of Koussevitzky, both of whom are assistants to "Koussy" as instructors in conducting at the center.

They are Leonard Bernstein, who has made a meteoric advance from the conducting student of a few years ago to music director of the New York City Symphony, guest conductor of many major orchestras here and abroad, and newly-appointed artistic director of the Palestine Philharmonic for 1948-49; and Eleazar de Carvalho, brilliant young Brazilian composer and conductor, a Tanglewood student in 1946 and a faculty member since last year.

In his adroit direction of Mahler's "Resurrection" symphony at Sunday afternoon's concert, Mr. Bernstein reaffirmed with unmistakable authority his unusual gifts as a conductor of fine talent.

Handles Difficult Piece

Despite the musical verbosity and considerable "sound and fury" which even the most partisan of Mahlerites must admit are in this score, he succeeded admirably in holding his audience of some 8000 persons intent upon its unfolding. With unequivocal enthusiasm, the audience gave its approval, augmenting its applause with shouts and whistles.

De Carvalho, who impressed this writer last Summer as one of the finest new conducting talents it has been her good fortune to hear, corroborated that initial impression with a remarkable and heartfelt interpretation of Richard Strauss' tone poem, "So Spake Zarathustra," at Friday evening's student concert. Again, he was conducting the splendid Student Orchestra of the Center. Again, he achieved a reading which was a passionate recreation of the music.

Players Applaud Conductor

The gift that this young man has is given to very few. It is not only that he makes the music live, he is the music. He is graceful, he is intense and he is always authoritative.

The two young men present an arresting contrast—Bernstein brilliant, assured, given to balletic antics on occasion, is in short, a superb showman; De Carvalho, equally brilliant and assured but far more able to persuade the listener that his interpretation is based on a sincere personal conviction about the music.

The Boston Orchestra and the Center Chorus (admirably trained, by the way, by Hugh Ross) gave Bernstein fullest co-operation, as did the soloists, Nan Merriman, contralto, and Ellebelle Davis, soprano. The Student Orchestra was fully as devoted in its response to De Carvalho, and the players joined eagerly in the audience's ovation for the Brazilian, who is a favorite with the young instrumentalists.

Other Treats Offered

Other points of particular interest during a week-end overflowing with good things musically were Koussevitzky's spacious and beautiful reading of the Brahms' Symphony; Isaac Stern's brilliant performance, which the Boston players as brilliantly abetted, of Prokofieff's First Violin Concerto; the surprising warmth of the adagio in Walter Piston's Third Symphony, most of which, though thoughtfully-wrought, held to his usual somewhat impersonal style, and the unusual tonal colors of Malhaud's Second Symphony, conducted by the composer himself.

Ovations for Koussevitzky, who retires as conductor of the Boston Symphony after next season and a final bow at Tanglewood next Summer, reached a new heighth of affectionate warmth at the concerts of this opening week-end of the 11th season of the Berkshire Music Festival.

Tops at Tanglewood

Thanks to radio, stay-at-home Bostonians have heard several of the concerts at Tanglewood this summer and know, from the waves of applause flooding from their loudspeakers, how large the audiences in the Berkshires have been. But it is also good to have statistical evidence. When Dr. Koussevitzky put down his baton at the conclusion of the Sibelius symphony at the final concert Sunday afternoon, he turned to receive the cheers of 14,700 people, the largest audience ever to attend a Berkshire performance and a fairly sizeable assembly even when measured in baseball or horse-racing terms! Those of us who have qualms about the final success of the Braves and Red Sox may derive comfort from the thought that at least the Boston Symphony ended its season well in first place.

The total attendance at Tanglewood this summer was 170,500, compared with 146,000 last year. This was the more impressive in view of the slump in patronage reported recently by most entertainment enterprises. The explanation may lie in the fact that while Dr. Koussevitzky has steadfastly maintained the artistic standards of the festival, he has consistently welcomed and encouraged the musical ambitions of hundreds of young men and women through the Berkshire Music Center and by public recognition of such unusual talents as those of Robert Shaw, Leonard Bernstein and Boris Goldovsky. In short, while Tanglewood has grown older, it has by no means lost the excitement of youth, novelty and experimentation.

Boston Herald
Aug [illegible] '48

This Clipping From

Fine Music Is Always Remembered

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY, Director

After You've heard and enjoyed these artists at Tanglewood . . . enjoy them all year 'round in your home—on records!

Robert Shaw

conducting the RCA Chorale and Symphony Orchestra in "BRAHM'S REQUIEM" with Eleanor Steber, soprano, and James Pease, baritone.

Leonard Bernstein

pianist, conductor—in "RAVEL"—Concerto for piano and orchestra

Koussevitzky

conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra in BEETHOVEN'S Symphony No. 2 in D

SCHUBERT'S Symphony No. 5

Copland

(Guest Composer at Tanglewood)

RODEO (Four Dance Episodes)

Also—many other fine selections, being played at Tanglewood, in stock in our record department.

Fourth Floor

England Brothers

Tops at Tanglewood

Thanks to radio, stay-at-home Bostonians have heard several of the concerts at Tanglewood this summer and know, from the waves of applause flooding from their loudspeakers, how large the audiences in the Berkshires have been. But it is also good to have statistical evidence. When Dr. Koussevitzky put down his baton at the conclusion of the Sibelius symphony at the final concert Sunday afternoon, he turned to receive the cheers of 14,700 people, the largest audience ever to attend a Berkshire performance and a fairly sizeable assembly even when measured in baseball or horse-racing terms! Those of us who have qualms about the final success of the Braves and Red Sox may derive comfort from the thought that at least the Boston Symphony ended its season well in first place.

The total attendance at Tanglewood this summer was 170,500, compared with 146,000 last year. This was the more impressive in view of the slump in patronage reported recently by most entertainment enterprises. The explanation may lie in the fact that while Dr. Koussevitzky has steadfastly maintained the artistic standards of the festival, he has consistently welcomed and encouraged the musical ambitions of hundreds of young men and women through the Berkshire Music Center and by public recognition of such unusual talents as those of Robert Shaw, Leonard Bernstein and Boris Goldovsky. In short, while Tanglewood has grown older, it has by no means lost the excitement of youth, novelty and experimentation.

Boston Herald
Aug 23 '48

---

2 PROTEGES PROVE KOUSSEVITZKY FAITH IS AMPLY JUSTIFIED

By THEODOLINDA C. BORIS
Special to The Buffalo Evening News.

TANGLEWOOD, Mass., Aug. 2.—Serge Koussevitzky, one of the world's great conductors, has given thousands of music-lovers unforgettable experiences as they have listened to his Boston Symphony Orchestra in its home city, on tour or at the Tanglewood Festival concerts. He has given the contemporary composer the heartening encouragement of repeated performances of new works. He has rendered continuous and faithful service to the cause of music in this country.

One of the services which the good doctor has given to music in part transcends, at least for this observer, even some of his most magnificent performances. That service is his encouragement, of young musicians, notably young conductors, in his Berkshire Music Center, the famed conductor's, "dream-come-true" school in which a hand-picked student body exemplifies, for a six-week summer session, Koussevitzky's happy phrase, "living and working in music."

Two Students Stand Out

Certainly the most newsworthy aspects of the opening week-end of the 1948 Tanglewood Festival concern two former proteges of Koussevitzky, both of whom are assistants to "Koussy" as instructors in conducting at the center.

They are Leonard Bernstein, who has made a meteoric advance from the conducting student of a few years ago to music director of the New York City Symphony, guest conductor of many major orchestras here and abroad, and newly-appointed artistic director of the Palestine Philharmonic for 1948-49; and Eleazar de Carvalho, brilliant young Brazilian composer and conductor, a Tanglewood student in 1946 and a faculty member since last year.

In his adroit direction of Mahler's "Resurrection" symphony at Sunday afternoon's concert, Mr. Bernstein reaffirmed with unmistakable authority his unusual gifts as a conductor of fine talent.

Handles Difficult Piece

Despite the musical verbosity and considerable "sound and fury" which even the most partisan of Mahlerites must admit are in this score, he succeeded admirably in holding his audience of some 8000 persons intent upon its unfolding. With unequivocal enthusiasm, the audience gave its approval, augmenting its applause with shouts and whistles.

De Carvalho, who impressed this writer last Summer as one of the finest new conducting talents it has been her good fortune to hear, corroborated that initial impression with a remarkable and heartfelt interpretation of Richard Strauss' tone poem, "So Spake Zarathustra," at Friday evening's student concert. Again, he was conducting the splendid Student Orchestra of the Center. Again, he achieved a reading which was a passionate recreation of the music.

Players Applaud Conductor

The gift that this young man has is given to very few. It is not only that he makes the music live, he is the music. He is graceful, he is intense and he is always authoritative.

The two young men present an arresting contrast—Bernstein brilliant, assured, given to balletic antics on occasion, is in short, a superb showman; De Carvalho, equally brilliant and assured but far more able to persuade the listener that his interpretation is based on a sincere personal conviction about the music.

The Boston Orchestra and the Center Chorus (admirably trained, by the way, by Hugh Ross) gave Bernstein fullest co-operation, as did the soloists, Nan Merriman, contralto, and Ellebelle Davis, soprano. The Student Orchestra was fully as devoted in its response to De Carvalho, and the players joined eagerly in the audience's ovation for the Brazilian, who is a favorite with the young instrumentalists.

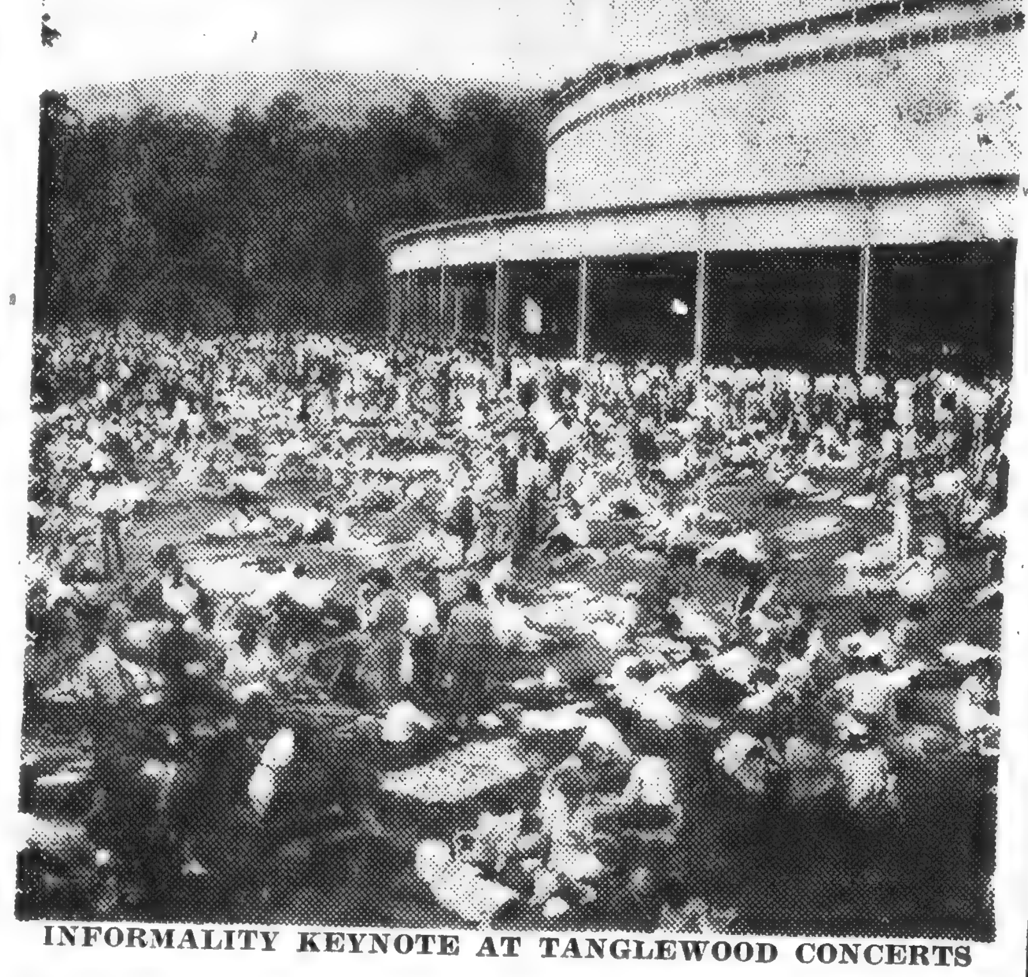
Other Treats Offered

Other points of particular interest during a week-end overflowing with good things musically were Koussevitzky's spacious and beautiful reading of the Brahms' Symphony; Isaac Stern's brilliant performance, which the Boston players as brilliantly abetted, of Prokofieff's First Violin Concerto; the surprising warmth of the adagio in Walter Piston's Third Symphony, most of which, though thoughtfully-wrought, held to his usual somewhat impersonal style, and the unusual tonal colors of Malhaud's Second Symphony, conducted by the composer himself.

Ovations for Koussevitzky, who retires as conductor of the Boston Symphony after next season and a final bow at Tanglewood next Summer, reached a new heighth of affectionate warmth at the concerts of this opening week-end of the 11th season of the Berkshire Music Festival.

Tanglewood Parades for Benefit of European M

This Clipping From
NEW ORLEANS, LA.
TIMES-PICAYUNE-STATES
AUG 22 1948



INFORMALITY KEYNOTE AT TANGLEWOOD CONCERTS

Berkshire Concerts Shell for Other Musical Events

BY WALTER S. JENKINS
(Special to The Times-Picayune)

Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.—The Berkshire Music Festival came to an impressive close this past week-end with a concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Dr. Koussevitsky playing Beethoven's third symphony and the second symphony by Sibelius. The weather, which had been uncertain during the last half of the week, cleared to attract an audience of 15,000 persons, making the occasion truly festive.

The Berkshire Festival here is, strictly speaking, a three-week series of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Those concerts form, however, an exterior shell beneath which lie innumerable musical events of smaller proportions which lend importance and distinction to a degree not made possible by the formal concerts alone. These secondary events are a part, not of the formal festival, but of the Berkshire Music Center which opens at the beginning of the summer as a school for musicians in the field of orchestra, chamber, and choral music, and in composition and conducting.

Unlike many summer schools, the music center attracts more pre-professional musicians than it attracts professionals or teachers for refresher training. As a result, the departments embrace members who are at the dawn of professional achievements instead of those who have passed the peak of achievement. Each department is relatively youthful, with unbounded energies and enthusiasm.

In the field of composition, students worked this summer with Aaron Copland and Darius Milhaud; in conducting with Dr. Koussevitsky, Leonard Bernstein, and Eleazar Carvalho; in chorus with Hugh Ross and Robert Shaw; in opera with Boris Goldowsky; and in chamber music with members of the symphony. Each department prepared informal concerts and lectures which were open to students and to subscribers who, for a nominal fee became members of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center. Such a situation resulted quite naturally in a critical, discriminating, and enthusiastic audience for Tanglewood's activities, and created a stimulus for the best possible accomplishments by students and faculty.

These programs by no means devoted themselves to the hackneyed war-horses of standard repertoire alone, for in Piatagorgsky's cello recital last Saturday, he introduced a new cello sonata by Paul Hindemith, while the chamber music program of Sunday morning contained a new work by Milhaud for oboe, clarinet, and bassoon, Stravinsky's "Pastorole" for violin and woodwinds, along with Beethoven's string quartet opus 59 No. 1, and the G minor piano quartet by Brahms.

For those whose curiosity in music extends no further than formal concerts, the Boston Symphony Orchestra provides them under most advantageous conditions, yet the function of Tanglewood, through the Music Center, in conjunction with the festival, provides a musical education and experience difficult to duplicate anywhere during the summer. So stimulating is the experience of being at Tanglewood, the audience is representative of every state in this country, and of several foreign countries.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
JUL 22 1948

DEDICATION SPEAKERS: Mrs. Guy Patterson Gannett, left, past president of the National Federation of Music Clubs, is chairman of the organization's Little Red House project at Tanglewood which will be the center of attraction over the week end. Mrs. Gannett will make the presentation of the Little Red House, restored on the site where Nathaniel Hawthorne lived, to the Berkshire Music Center at dedicatory exercises Saturday. Mrs. Royden J. Keith, right, president of the federation, will also be one of the speakers. Plans for the replica of the house were drawn by Gregory B. Lloyd of Lenox, a GE draftsman. It was built by Harold Felton, Lenox contractor.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
AUG 21 1948

FELIX WINTERNITZ, VIOLINIST, 76, DEAD

Former Concert Artist Taught Many of Boston Symphony —Classmate of Kreisler

FELIX WINTERNITZ
Aaron Alberts

Felix Winternitz, teacher who was a well-known concert violinist here in the early 1900's, died yesterday of a heart attack at the Harvard Faculty Club in Cambridge, Mass., where he had resided for several years. He was 76 years old.

Because of a leg injury received about forty years ago while hunting deer in Maine, Mr. Winternitz retired from the concert stage, and devoted his entire time to teaching, first at the New England Conservatory of Music, in Boston, and later as a private teacher in that city and New York.

Among his friends were Fritz Kreisler, a classmate at the Vienna Conservatory, where Mr. Winternitz was graduated at the age of 13, and Mischa Elman, who played in a quartet with him at his home until a year ago when Mr. Winternitz suffered his first heart attack.

When 14 years old he was a violinist in the Vienna Opera Orchestra, and three years later he came to the United States as a violinist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. At one time half of the members of the Boston Symphony were his pupils.

Son of Physician-Playwright

He was born in Linz, Austria, near Vienna, and was a son of Leopold Winternitz, a physician who wrote several plays that were produced in the Austrian capital. He was the last of a family of seven brothers. Only one other brother, Arnold, followed a musical career, serving as a pianist and a director of the Hamburg (Germany) Opera Company.

The others entered different professions—Kurt was in the Austrian diplomatic service; Hugo was a medical doctor in Halle, Germany; Walter was a general in the Austrian Army; Max was a chemist, and Ostwald, when he first came to this country, was a reporter for THE NEW YORK TIMES.

Another friend of Mr. Winternitz was William B. Chase, former Music Editor of THE NEW YORK TIMES. Mr. Winternitz visited the Chase Farm at Whitefield, N. H., during the summer for many years to play chamber music. While in Vienna Leopold Auer was his teacher.

Several of his compositions for violin and piano were played by Fritz Kreisler and recorded by the famous violinist. They included "Dream of Youth," "Forsaken" and "The Blue Lagoon."

Met Brahms in Youth

When a youth Mr. Winternitz met Brahms, and subsequently the composer's sonatas became his favorite and best-played music. A "musician's musician," he also was an excellent judge of violin playing and at one time owned a Guarnerius.

After the death in 1932 of his wife, the former Antoinette Iwersen of Segeberg, Germany, a singer, Mr. Winternitz traveled extensively, giving up active teaching at the same time. While visiting his brother, Kurt, in Manila, about ten years ago, he made one of his rare appearances, as guest soloist with the Manila Orchestra. More recently he played before some friends at Bryn Mawr (Pa.) College.

Before retiring from the concert stage he made several tours as a violinist in the United States and the Far East. Dr. Milton C. Winternitz, former dean of the Yale Medical School, is a first cousin.

Surviving are three sons, Robert Winternitz, Roland Winters, of Hollywood, who plays the role of "Charlie Chan" in the movies, and Kurt Winternitz of Washington; a grandson, Walter H., and a granddaughter, Toni.

This Clipping From
GLENS FALLS, N. Y.
POST STAR
AUG 27 1948

The all-Tschaikowski program given at Tanglewood on Aug. 10 was an outstanding event. Knowing they were to hear a full program of the famous Russian composer's works conducted by Dr. Koussevitzky, as well as interest in Seymour Lipkin the young pianist, drew an audience of nearly twelve thousand. Eleven thousand nine hundred was the figure announced by the box office, which meant 6,000 in the shed and 6,000 outside. This figure was remarkable because it was essentially a neighborhood audience. It had previously been accepted as a fact that week-end visiting crowds were necessary to build attendance to such figures.

To say that everyone was amply rewarded would be to put it mildly. The playing of the orchestra reached ecstatic heights. Dr. Koussevitzky's reading of the familiar Pathetique Symphony was masterly. The great conductor's interpretations are always characterized by strict attention to the composer's underlying thought as expressed in every group of notes, no matter how small. His climaxes are wonderful, starting with a whisper he builds and builds until it seems the end had been reached, but still he inspires his men who respond with the seeming impossible.

Seymour Lipkin, the 22-year-old piano sensation of the year, was soloist in the B flat minor Concerto. A recent winner of the Rachmaninoff Fund prize after national competition, he is studying conducting with Koussevitzky at the Berkshire Music Center. He has also been assistant to George Szell, conductor of the Cleveland orchestra.

Mr. Lipkin's performance was brilliant. His tone was resonant and of lovely quality. He showed a remarkable sense of poetic expression for one of his years. The audience gave him a great ovation.

The evening closed with a thunderous performance of the "1812" Overture. With the organ, the percussion and the cathedral chimes banging away at their best, the last few measures became inaudible when the rising surge of applause completely submerged the tonal explosion coming from the stage, and

Page 18, Col. 2)

Recommended art events:

"High Dunes," by George Grosz, an original oil by one of the best-known painters of today and the only artist in this series with a first-rate international reputation, at the First National Bank, 237 Glen Street.

"Barn Playhouse," the final exhibition and resume of the season, including the three prize winners (see below), at the Summer theatre just north of Bolton Landing.

"Museum of Modern Art," Summer fare which includes the memorial show of the lovely paintings of the late Pierre Bonnard held over by popular demand, plus a group of 50 photographs by fifty photographers selected by Edward Steichen and covering many of the best prints of the last hundred years, plus a selection of contemporary paintings and sculpture from the walls of six private collectors, plus their series of old or exceptional films, plus air-conditioning, and plus the sculpture garden which is just about the most attractive and pleasant place to eat and drink in New York, at 11 West 53rd Street.

"Homer and Johnson," water-colors and drawings by Winslow Homer and oils by his contemporary Eastman Johnson, American "old masters" both, and, in addition, a selection of portraits by such famous French artists as Corot, Cezanne, Renoir, Degas and others, at the Wildenstein Galleries, 19 East 64th Street.

"Group Show," of paintings by Picasso, Braque, Max Weber, Abraham Rattner, Marsden Hartley, and others, including a young painter from Paris named Patrix who seems to be somewhat of a discovery, at the Rosenberg Gallery, 16 East 57th Street.

* * *

It isn't often enough that we can write about local art events; but, last week two occurred that deserve the space allowed this column.

As you all know, the Barn Playhouse, just above Bolton Landing, has kindly extended the use of its lobby for a rotating Summer art display. Paintings, drawings, and photographs by nearly all of the local practitioners of these media have been shown at one time or another this Summer. They were selected and hung by Dorothy Dehner (Mrs. David Smith) who is a well-known painter and all-year resident of Bolton Landing. A jury of three was appointed to keep an eye (or eyes) on these shows throughout the season and to select three prize-winners at the end. The judges were Mr. Douglass Crockwell, Mr. David Smith, and this writer.

We gentlemen of the jury met last Sunday evening and surveyed the field. Our own work and the work of the wives of the judges were naturally exempt. Without argument but with much friendly discussion, we selected the winners, all three of whom are residents of Glens Falls.

Bill Bingham won first prize ($10) for his "Reclining Nude" painted this Summer in Woodstock, N. Y., where he was studying with Kuniyoshi. We felt that it was expertly brushed and conceived. The repetition of line and form in the body, tent, and blanket, plus the lovely sky and soft color entitled [illegible] that it was difficult to rank them. They are all, we felt, real advances in conception and execution for the artists and placed them above the ranks of amateurs or "Sunday painters."

They will be on exhibit this week and next at the theatre along with others selected from the season's exhibits and a few not shown before. We feel that many thanks should go to Dorothy Dehner for her work in selecting and hanging these shows and to Mr. Joe Crosby for his interest in this project and his generosity in providing space and prizes; and we are sure that next season will bring forth even better work from the artists of this area.

The other local exhibit was a one-day affair at the South Hartford Fair a week ago Thursday. About ten pictures from Glens Falls were mixed in with perhaps twice that number by painters of the Hartford region. It was the first time something of that sort had been attempted at this Farm and Garden event. Mrs. Truman Temple was in charge and handled the problems that arose with tact and enthusiasm. As an experiment, it seemed a real success, although next year some understanding as to the artists getting their pictures in on time will have to be worked out in advance. Nothing was sold, which was disappointing; but the exhibit drew an interested and large crowd. It was a fine opportunity for local painters to exhibit their wares and there is no reason why it cannot develop into something of mutual benefit to artists and visitors alike in years to come.

HARTFORD - TIMES

AUG 21 1948

Dr. Koussevitzky Makes Them Like His Moderns

By CARL E. LINDSTROM

WELL over 100,000 persons heard eleven concerts in the big Shed at Tanglewood this season, a new high record. This in itself may seem to be merely the culmination of a Festival which has been exceedingly successful from its beginning, but there was a record of another sort and the combination of the two gives pause. Dr. Koussevitzky played more modern music in this series than even he, a notable partisan of modern music, ever did before. We must take this word "modern" in its easily used, popular sense to cover anything new, dissonant, exotic, abstruse or technical as opposed to familiar, long accepted music containing easily recognizable medodies.

This column had some misgivings after the first few concerts at Tanglewood lest Koussevitzky at last had overstepped himself in his partiality for noise and novelty. From remarks heard — some of them quoted here — it seemed that the venerable conductor's loyal following had at last had enough. They longed for Tschaikowsky and Beethoven and they said so. But the statistics are reassuring.

Apparently people griped about the modern music but came to the concerts anyway. We've heard things like these soft complaints here in Hartford too. Traditionally, the Boston Orchestra brings the new, the hard-to-listen-to stuff and yet there has never been any falling off in attendance at the Bostonians concerts here.

* * *

WHAT A TREMENDOUS educational force the Tanglewood concerts have been this year! These tens of thousands have listened to Hindemith, Piston, Stravinsky, Milhaud and many others. It must have broken down some of the resistance toward this kind of music. One is reminded of the immeasurable effect which the pictures from the Kaiser Friedrich Museum in Berlin have had in their exhibitions on tour. Long ago attendance passed the million mark. Thousands of these people, it can be safely surmised, never before have set foot in a picture gallery; they went simply because there was drama and heroic association with these so-called salt mine pictures. These works of art had been rescued by Patton's men. Therefore glamour. There was something to see — Rubens. Tintoretto, Van Eykes, Rembrandt — but that was incidental to the historic fact. Who shall say that in some subtle, subconscious way these great works of art have not made their impact upon even uninitiative beholders?

Same way with the modern music at Tanglewood. There is no suggestion here that this music requires only the patina of familiarity to take its place beside Purcell, Bach and Mozart. Perhaps they are not immortal at all — very likely not. But it is necessary for us to hear this music anyway. It is the cultural furniture of our day; it is our obligation to live with it. It may be that this age of ours, with all its astonishing volume of musical production, is actually more sterile than any other. Even if that were true — which it probably is not — we would still be required to have our being among the cultural appurtenances of the twentieth century. We must, if necessary, sit through a thousand compositions of contemporary aspirants if only for the sake of discovering a single Unfinished Symphony or an Eroica.

* * *

DR. KOUSSEVITZKY PROGRAMMED the Eroica at Tanglewood. It is, of course, a great symphony but just what does it have to do with us today? It was in its day a social document, breathing fire and revolution against the convention of more than 100 years ago. It set its world back on its heels; but that was another world. It does not signify the same thing for us today; its interest is historical. It is of interest to us because we can say "In these terms Beethoven addressed his age." How he would have spoken today is another matter. But we have our own musical spokesmen for this atomic age, or whatever you want to call this monstrous period. They may not be Beethovens but, in the language of 1948, so what?

We can and do surround ourselves with the relics of a previous day. Pewter and flintlocks and primitive furniture haven't anything to do with today and yet we find an escape in treasuring such associations with America's yesterdays. How much of Rameau and Rossini is pewter and flintlock?

There are those who don't vibrate in tune with modern architecture and modern furniture. That much of it will last long enough to be collector's items in the future is doubtful. But such as it is it is our style; it is the best we have been able to do. Not inconceivably, another generation will be treasuring the bare bones of Stravinsky and Harris and Schoenberg. But let it be said that they were our relics and not our discards.

Berkshire Festival

Koussevitsky Conducts In The Grand Manner

The following is the second in a series of four articles on Tanglewood, home of the Berkshire Music Festival at Lenox, Massachusetts, written by the music and drama editor of The Evening Citizen, who spent a week there observing the students and attending the concerts of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

By Lauretta Thistle
Evening Citizen Music Editor

"No, no! It must have soobstawns!"

Koussevitsky throws off his grey cape, bounces off the podium and outlines with eloquent arms the shape the music is to take. The second violinists raise their bows and try once more to get "substance".

A moment later in the rehearsal, their conductor has flung his arms down again, bringing the sound of one hundred instruments to an uneven halt. This time he strides over to the double-basses and shakes his fist at them. What he says is unintelligible, but doubtess it is vehement, for the double-bass is his own instrument, and perhaps the words are Russian, for after twenty-four years on this continent Koussevitsky still lapses into Russian when he gets excited, and his normal English is overlaid with a heavy Russian accent.

The great machine endowed with human feelings and human failings which is the Boston Symphony Orchestra swings into action again, and this time a couple of pages of the Brahms First Symphony are played before the implacable conductor shakes his head and halts its progress. Now we can see the fruit of the musicians' long association with him, for he does not speak at all. He simply sketches the phrase with his baton, and they understand.

They reach the magnificent final movement, and at last they are making the kind of music which Koussevitsky hears in his mind's ear, for he leads them through the broad streams of melody without interruption.

The thousands of people who have paid their dollar for this Saturday morning rehearsal at Tanglewood applaud timidly and murmur their appreciation to each other. After the concert tonight they will be able to give full vent to their admiration — they will clap and shout their "Bravos" for minutes at a time.

But now Koussevitsky is nodding a welcome to the young violinist Isaac Stern. After a last corroborating tune-up, soloist, orchestra and conductor, a magnificent trio, are engaged in the intimate give-and-take of a Prokofieff Violin Concerto. That difficult matter of balance, when the muted tones of the violin mount higher and higher, softer and softer, against the whispering choir of woodwinds, worries the conductor. Without stopping the orchestra he motions to his concertmaster to go down to the center of the vast music shed and listen. The concertmaster listens, returns with a reassuring nod, and the concerto goes on.

This is the kind of painstaking, perfectionist work that lies behind the Koussevitsky reputation. In an actual concert there will be more opportunity to observe the famous gestures—the powerful little head thrown back, arms outspread, a beatific smile on his face; or head drawn down between hunched shoulders, fists clenched, and face contorted and beseeching.

The tradition of conducting in the grand manner was passed on to Koussevitsky from Nikisch, they say, and through Koussevitsky to young Leonard Bernstein. Showmanship? Undoubtedly. But it is showmanship based on craftsmanship of the most uncompromising kind.

There are not two Koussevitskys, one of rehearsals and one of the concert stage. There is one Koussevitsky, who has mastered the art of conducting—at rehearsal, giving his men guidance in straight, technical terms, transmitting his intense feeling for the music by reduced cues; at the concert, giving fuller rein to his gestures, to bring the audience into the new, vital experience which he makes of almost everything he conducts.

He approaches the Beethoven Fifth as if he and the orchestra were still full of the rapture of first acquaintance. But Koussevitsky's genius is equally at the service of the moderns, and all his life he has given inestimable aid to contemporary composers. A new symphony by Walter Piston of Harvard, composed last summer, sounds at first discordant, then engaging, and finally exciting. How much of this magic is Piston's, and how much Koussevitsky's? Well, both of them come to the stage for the resounding acclaim, so you applaud both of them, and go home wanting to hear that symphony again.

To Be Continued

[290]

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES

SEP 1- 1948

MAJOR MUSIC UNITS CANNOT PAY WAY

Deficit for 37 Companies for 1947-48 Season $3,225,348 Despite Public, Private Aid

By HOWARD TAUBMAN

Virtually no major opera house or symphony orchestra in the world expects to pay its own way next season or in the foreseeable future.

A survey made by THE NEW YORK TIMES of the financial status of leading musical organizations showed yesterday that in nearly every case an operating deficit was as certain as death and taxes.

The deficit of thirty-seven representative opera companies and orchestras in this country for the 1947-48 season was $3,225,348, and the future, it was agreed by managements everywhere, holds out little hope for improvement.

If the deficits for lesser musical outfits in the United States as well as for all the operas and orchestras in foreign countries were to be added, it was estimated that the figures would run up to $15,000,000.

The actual operating deficits of many organizations, it was pointed out, are even larger than the audited figures. Some orchestras like the New York Philharmonic-Symphony, the Boston and the Philadelphia have endowment funds, and the annual income from these funds helps to cut down deficits measurably.

Save for one or two musical organizations, like the Hollywood Bowl series, that operate in the black because of special conditions, no orchestra or opera house paid its way last year on the basis of money taken in from the sale of tickets. Ticket sales accounted for as little as 30 per cent of the income of some groups and went up as high as 84.2 per cent in the case of the Metropolitan Opera.

Deficits in this country were met in a variety of ways. The most common was the public campaign for funds. Most of the orchestras in the United States, with the exception of a handful of the most renowned in the East, were obliged to raise from $50,000 to $200,000 a year in advance of the season.

Like Community Chest Drives

The campaigns for funds for musical organizations in these towns were conducted in the same way that a Community Chest or hospital fund campaign might be conducted. Committees canvassed the town, sent out appeals by mail and made personal visits to leading citizens. In Dallas the letter carriers delivered a notice to each resident on their routes.

The days of the one Maecenas who personally met deficits each season are finished. No musical organization in this country could any longer point to figures like Otto H. Kahn, a pillar of the Metropolitan for many years; Henry Lee Higginson, who founded and supported the Boston Symphony for many years; Clarence H. Mackay, who helped the New York Philharmonic; Harry H. Flagler, who aided the New York Symphony, and William A. Clark, main support of the Los Angeles Philharmonic.

Funds were raised last season from a large number of people throughout the country in contributions from $5 to $1,000. Donations of more than $1,000 were few. The Central City Opera Association in Colorado, for example, raised a sustaining fund of $25,000 for its 1948 season by getting gifts of $250 from each of 100 citizens.

The experience of musical organizations abroad revealed that deficits in every case were met, not by campaigns and individual contributions, but by state and city subsidies.

The Colon Opera in Buenos Aires which, according to our Argentine correspondent, is regarded "as an adornment of the national culture", is described "as wholly a state enterprise and not a business." Its deficit of 6,000,000 pesos (the peso was quoted at 4.80 to the dollar) was met entirely by government subsidy, in this case from the municipality of Buenos Aires.

The Italian Government set aside funds totaling about $2,200,000 to cover the opera season in its cities for 1947-48. Because of the drastic rise in the costs of putting on opera, a great many of the country's provincial opera houses could not open at all. However, the four principal theatres—La Scala in Milan, the Rome Opera, the San Carlo in Naples and the Fenice in Venice—were able to remain in business, thanks to state assistance.

Helped by Governments

In France, Germany, Russia, Hungary, Sweden and all the other European countries opera companies and orchestras depended on large contributions from the public treasuries. This was true even in Great Britain, where the Covent Garden Opera became a national institution last spring. Before that, however, English orchestras and operas had begun in recent years to receive public subsidies in a break with the British tradition that musical organizations were to be privately maintained.

Even in the United States there has been a growing tendency in the last few seasons for public treasuries to contribute to musical organizations. Some cities appeared to be reluctant to call it a subsidy officially, but grants of up to $70,000 were provided for such things as concerts in the schools and special concerts at nominal rates of admission. Denver gave its orchestra the use of the city auditorium free of rent, and Portland, Ore., let its symphony have the auditorium at half the usual rental rates.

The American cities that last season helped their orchestras with grants of assistance were San Francisco, Baltimore, Los Angeles, Denver, New Orleans, Salt Lake City (the state and county contributed), Portland, Ore., Houston, Buffalo and Indianapolis (which made a grant of $50,000).

Of the big eastern organizations the Metropolitan Opera Association had some public assistance in the form of an exemption from the real estate taxes for that part of its building used in the production of opera.

One manager, Harl McDonald of the Philadelphia Orchestra, said, "Please stress the fact that the City of Philadelphia contributes nothing to the orchestra, which is one of its most important advertising implements, and imposes a tax, which we consider unjust." This tax is a 10 per cent admissions tax in addition to the 20 per cent Federal admissions tax.

Likens Orchestras to Museums

Characteristic of the response from managers and heads of musical organizations in this country was this note struck by Helen Black, business manager of the Denver Symphony:

"Everything possible is done to increase our income but no matter what method or methods are used it does not seem possible in the near future, if ever, to earn enough to maintain a professional or even a semi-professional orchestra of the quality demanded by the symphony-loving public today, or of the quality to which the young children should be exposed.

"If we are to improve the tastes of our future audiences it is our contention that schools, art museums and symphony orchestras are a vital part of the educational and cultural facilities of a community. Schools and art museums not expected to pay their way, and symphony orchestras should be in the same category.

"For example, the concerts for school children have an admission price of 25 cents for each concert to assure every child an opportunity to attend. That would not be possible were the prices established on a purely commercial basis. It is our hope that at some time all orchestras will speak of their maintenance fund as just that and stop using the word deficit which has a psychologically bad effect on the minds of the general public. Art museums do not talk about deficits. Why should symphony orchestras?"

It developed in the course of THE TIMES survey that the major conservatories of the country, like the universities and unlike the orchestras and operas, were not expected to try to pay their own way.

A report from the Curtis Institute in Philadelphia indicated that all students were there on scholarships and that the school was maintained entirely by endowment. William Schuman, president of the Juilliard School, said that tuition fees covered only about half the cost of educating the student—less in the case of students with scholarships — and that endowment made up the difference. The Peabody Conservatory in Baltimore said 75 per cent of its gross income came from tuition fees and the difference had to be made up by public campaigns and subsidies.

Not Lacking in Patronage

The difficulties of musical organizations here and abroad were not caused by failure of public patronage. The survey showed that most of the orchestras and operas queried had booming attendance records. The New York Philharmonic-Symphony played to 93.4 per cent of capacity; the Philadelphia to 92 per cent; the Boston, 90 per cent; the Dallas, 91 per cent; the San Francisco, 93 per cent; the Metropolitan Opera, almost 100 per cent. The average throughout the country was better than 80 per cent.

In the case of the major symphony orchestras and operas, contracts for recording and broadcasting helped to cut down the size of the deficit. The most famous, long-established institutions were the more fortunate in this respect, while the newer groups had little income from these sources. Where a musical organization obtained a commercial sponsor for its broadcasts, it had a chance to come close to getting out of the red.

Bruno Zirato, co-manager of the New York Philharmonic-Symphony, said: "There is no possibility of paying our own way next season from operations, but only by contributions and possibly by commercial sponsorship of our Sunday broadcast concerts." With yesterday's report that the New York Philharmonic-Symphony had made arrangements with a commercial sponsor, it seemed likely that this organization would be able to cut its deficit appreciably.

George A. Sloan, chairman of the board of the Metropolitan Opera, observed that the company's prospects depended a great deal "on our box-office revenues and whether they will hold up to the high level of the past two seasons." He added that "we are making every effort to affect further economies and to increase our revenues; for example, we are now examining closely into the possibilities of television and motion pictures."

Various Means Used in Drives

Some managements reported that the raising of sustaining funds was accomplished with little trouble each year. A few said that it took quite a bit of doing.

The Utah Symphony undertook a campaign to raise funds for three years but found that many contributors gave only as much as they would for one year, with the result that there must be an annual campaign. In New Orleans it was found that a joint campaign for several musical organizations produced less satisfactory results than separate campaigns for each.

One management said it could get little support from business organizations in its towns, but most cities reported that business enterprises contributed regularly. In Portland, Ore., the revived symphony got a $10,000 contribution from the musicians' union.

The biggest item in the costs of all musical organizations was labor. The Metropolitan Opera's figure of 75.5 per cent of its budget for all its employes, artistic, backstage and administrative, was the highest because it requires so large a staff.

The average for other musical organizations was about 60 per cent for orchestra players, conductors and soloists. The highest weekly minimums of instrumentalists were $139.50 at the Metropolitan Opera; $125 for next season at the New York Philharmonic-Symphony; $105 for the Boston Symphony; $100 for the Philadelphia Orchestra. In most other ensembles the weekly minimum was below $100, with the scale going down to $60 and $55 in some of the smaller cities.

The sizes of the halls of the country's musical organizations vary, and that appeared to be an economic factor of importance.

This Clipping From NEW REPUBLIC
NEW YORK, N. Y.
AUG 30 1948

MUSIC: Rossini at Tanglewood

HAVING BROUGHT Benjamin Britten's "Peter Grimes" to America in 1946, and rescued Mozart's noble "Idomeneo" from complete neglect in 1947, the opera department of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood had a reputation to sustain in picking out a work for production this summer. Back in midwinter, professional gossip reported that a musical version of Lillian Hellman's "The Little Foxes" by Marc Blitzstein would be the choice. But Blitzstein did not finish his score in time for adequate preparation, and furthermore he sold the rights to Cheryl Crawford for Broadway production sometime this autumn.

When Rossini's "The Turk in Italy" was finally announced as this year's Tanglewood project, the prospect quickened few musical pulses. Except for "The Barber of Seville" and the Overture to "William Tell," both of which are scorned by the intelligentsia, Rossini is a forgotten composer. The resuscitation of one of his most obscure works, a failure even at its first performance in 1814, looked like a fruitless venture in musicological research.

But at the Tanglewood première (the first American performance of the opera since 1840) scoffers were converted in the first half-hour. The music bubbled and rippled and tossed out gay festoons of florid melody; the plot situations maintained an unbroken crescendo of hilarity; the English text was blithe and gay, devoid of the stilted versification that is the curse of nearly every translated opera.

To be sure, the Milan audience of 1814 would scarcely recognize the work in its present form, for Boris Goldovsky, director of the Tanglewood opera school, retailored it extensively to make it measure up to modern theatrical standards. Since Rossini himself wrote three widely different versions, revising the opera radically each time it was presented in a new place, Goldovsky felt justified in reshuffling the numbers and sharpening the plot. He lifted the minor figure of a poet into the central role, gave the story a straight and effective line, and wrote a brand-new trick ending. He composed new recitatives, in the style of Rossini, to fit the new text. But all the arias, duets and ensembles are left exactly as Rossini wrote them, though there are some cuts, as well as some orchestrations (by Helmuth Wolfes) of passages for which original scores no longer exist in any library.

Without sacrificing the spirit of early nineteenth-century opera bouffe, Goldovsky has transformed "The Turk in Italy" into a satire of the period farce of which it is representative. Taking the audience into his confidence in a prologue, the poet explains that he is about to work out a new drama before their eyes. Nothing can be better, he avers, than a triangular intrigue involving a fatuous old husband, a flirtatious young wife and an ardent lover. One by one he brings out the characters attached to wires like puppets, loosens them and sets them in action. Obviously the play will unreel itself effortlessly if the triangular formula can be depended upon. But a Turk, landing on the shores of Italy for completely baffling reasons, and a gypsy girl, of equally vague origins, enter the scene, to the complete surprise and dismay of the poet.

For the rest of the evening the audience shares his bewilderment as his neat three-sided plot is distorted into a wild and unpredictable pentagon. The climactic scene, at a masquerade, with the three men dressed in identical Turkish costumes and the two girls in identical candy-striped dresses, is as absurd and diverting a melee as you will find on the operatic stage.

Probably not even Goldovsky himself knows quite how he managed to

---

Tanglewood Parades for Benefit of European M

This Clipping From
GASTONIA, N. C.
GAZETTE

AUG 27 1948

U. S. Now World's No. 1 Musical Nation

"Quietly and almost unobserved, the United States has become the No. 1 musical nation of the world," declares H. W. Heinsheimer in The Reader's Digest for September. "The country which to other nations seemed merely the colossus of the fastest trains, the most automobiles, telephones, bathtubs and refrigerators, has taken the world's best music to its heart in a big way." Mr. Heinsheimer is a music publisher and author of the book, "Menagerie in F Sharp." His Digest article is condensed from Pageant.

America's operas, concerts, and recitals, in 1947, outdrew big-league baseball, attendance-wise, by a ratio of 3 to 2. The Metropolitan Opera's Saturday broadcasts were heard over 278 radio stations; Bing Crosby's show is carried on 240.

Symphony orchestras throughout the country now number more than 100, Heinsheimer points out. The Boston Symphony, in its summer concerts in the Berkshire Hills, draws over 100,000 people, from every state.

America's delight in classical music has spread far beyond the big cities which were formerly considered the cultural centers. Texas, without a single symphony orchestra 12 years ago, today has ten. In 1930, more than half of all classical records were sold in New York, Philadelphia, Boston, and San Francisco; now only a fifth of such sales are made in the big cities.

Music lovers' devotion to their favorite art has been strikingly manifested, more than once, by large donations of money. When the Met invited its radio audience to help purchase a new building, more than $1,000,000 in small change and bills was contributed. In 1945, the eight-year-old Oklahoma Symphony, faced with a large deficit, announced its intention to liquidate. Immediately angry protests poured in, many accompanied by gifts ranging from dimes and quarters to substantial checks. A "Save the Symphony Week" was proclaimed by the mayor of Oklahoma City. Enough money was raised to pay off the deficit and guarantee a new season.

No longer considered upstarts in the musical world, America's singers now rank with the best. Today more than half of the Metropolitan Opera's artists are Americans; when the Met began in 1883, it had only one American singer and she had been raised and trained in Europe.

BROCKTON, MASS.
ENTERPRISE-TIMES

SEP 2 - 1948

Berkshire Music Festival At Tanglewood Ends Season

The Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood has again concluded another successful season. Many Brocktonians attended these orchestral musicals this summer and from all comment given, they have declared the programs to be the best ever. Sinc 1937, when Tanglewood became the home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, this cultural centre has grown to be one of America's best loved musical foundations.

Behind the word Tanglewood there lies a great history. History, which to begin with, concerns two thunderstorms in Berkshire county. They occurred during a period of 87 years and each had invaluable consequences. The first storm resulted in the beginning of a friendship between two men, Nathaniel Hawthorne and Herman Melville. This was during the summer of 1850 that Herman Melville and Nathaniel Hawthorne, strangers, who were enjoying a picnic party in Stockbridge, were driven to the rocks of Monument Mountain to seek cover. Neither one of the well known writers knew of one another, and during the two hours of the storm, the two men formed the basis for a lasting friendship.

The next storm took place in the summer of 1937 when the symphonic festivals were held for the first time outdoors on the grounds of Tanglewood. On this evening of Aug. 12 during the presentation of a Wagner program, the thunderstorm which appeared ruined tents which had been erected for the occasion and the noise of the storm became so great that the music was brought to a stop. The stopping of this concert came to be known as the $100,000 thunderstorm. It had last been proven that a substantial building should be provided for concerts and during that same evening, the appeal was so great that $20,000 was pledged by the music lovers. Needless to say, a music shed was installed during the next year.

One might question just how the first storm can be connected with Tanglewood. Following his visit to Berkshire county before his marriage, Nathaniel Hawthorne some years before 1850 decided that he would take refuge there with his wife and two children in order to seek better writing atmosphere.

Two days following the meeting on Monument Mountain by Melville and Hawthorne, Melville with several other friends called on Hawthorne at the red cottage and walked to the lake. From this time on, the meetings between Hawthorne and Melville were frequent. The red cottage stood at Tanglewood for some 40 years after Hawthorne left it, before it was burned to the ground. Since the year 1929 a bronze tablet has been erected at the sight.

The history of the music in the Berkshires can be continued along to the month and year of September, 1918, when the first Berkshire Festival of Chamber Music was held at South Mountain under the direction of Mrs. Elizabeth Coolidge, who did so much for the encouragement of music both in America and in Europe. It was through the means of Mrs. Coolidge, who built the first temple of music together with composer Henry Hadley, that the music concerts be held "beneath a sky full of stars in the shadow of great hills," near the little red cottage.

In the years that followed such names as Mrs. Margaret Emerson, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, Mrs. Owen Johnson, Mrs. William Fulton of Great Barrington and Serge Koussevitzky appeared. In 1934 the Berkshire Symphonic Festival Inc., held its first musical in the horseshow ring at the Dan Hanna Farm at Stockbridge with 65 players participating, and in 1935, 85 players were present for the concert again given at the Hanna Farm.

Such was the early life of the music centre. The climax of its existence made its appearance in the autumn of 1936. For the first time that fall, Mrs. Gorham Brooks presented the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the country place of "Tanglewood," her estate near the line of Lenox, which covered more than 200 acres. The estate was a perfect setting for the concerts and needless to say the idea of giving Tanglewood to the Boston Symphony was gratefully donated by Mrs. Brooks, soon after very few concerts.

During the seasons of 1940 and 1941 the musical centre grew to great proportions highlighted by Dr. Koussevitzky's great leadership and magnificence and now following the war years, the foundation is still flourishing. The success of the concerts is well illustrated by writer Mrs. Sylvia Dreyfus. "Seven thousand people free and friendly, listen together and forget racial, social religious prejudices in their mutual enjoyment. Surely there is a lesson in this practical demonstration of amity, accompaniment of a great orchestra."

DALLAS, TEX
EXPRESS
8/28/48

Kisses Carol Brice's Hand

Eleazar de Carvalho, young Brazilian conductor, student of Dr. Serge Koussevitsky and an instructor at the famed Berkshire school, kissed Carol Brice's hand before 19,500 music lovers at Tanglewood last Sunday. That was his way of showing his appreciation for Miss Brice's great rendition of Manuel DeFallo's "El Amor Brujo." The great contralto recorded the work earlier for Columbia Masterworks with Fritz Reiner and the Pittsburg Symphony Orchestra.

While the act of kissing Miss Brice's hand before 19,500 whites is in itself of no major significance, the sharp line of contrast between the customs of the U. S. and those of South America and continental Europe was drastically emphasized. Mr. Carvalho being a Brazilian was possibly acting out of the well-spring of the traditions of his non jim-crow homeland — Brazil has no color line — black and white Brazilians play, worship, work and die side by side. It is extremely doubtful if a major conductor, after having resided in the States for a length of time, becoming accustomed to the deep prejudices and the stringent racial taboos which must be respected, if one is to make a living from one's artistic endeavors, would risk antagonizing American music audiences by kissing a Negro woman's hand in public, regardless of her artistic stature.

The world of art and music is much more liberal than other fields of endeavor in America. Yet, regardless of how great a Negro artist becomes, it is still customary that the "Yardstick" Negro contralto, Negro baritone, etc., be used in referring to race artists. If Eleazar Carvalho's conduct of last Sunday — as trite as the kissing of a hand seems—is to be a true indication of his conduct in American music circles, Negro Americans should welcome his presence and look forward to the day when he will have his own orchestra, for then, maybe, he will be able to help lead the way in tearing down some of the other stereotypes that hamper the American Negro's final but complete integration into the world of serious music.

Miss Brice's triumph at Tanglewood was a major one. She won the plaudits of America's major critics. She set a standard for vocal interpretation which many will find difficult to follow.

WAKEFIELD, MASS.
ITEM

SEP 23 1948

Out in the Berkshires

"Berkshires: the Purple Hills," edited by Roderick Peattie, is concerned with a section of this state that is especially attractive at this season of the year. Roderick Peattie has written delightfully of the country hills and valleys, roads and streams, even the fishing and gardening. Other contributors to the volume describe Indian legends of the countryside, bits of history, of the arts and literature of the region—the Summer theatre, Winter sports, the famous musical festival (at Tanglewood). All this makes for an appreciative, lyrical, leisurely portrait of the country you will wish to see this Fall.

Mark Antony de Wolfe Howe has told "The Tale of Tanglewood; scene of the Berkshire music festival," the origin and progress of the music festivals, and explained Nathaniel Hawthorne's early sojourn at Tanglewood. While this "tribute" is indeed a welcome souvenir of rewarding sessions of great music—and fine vistas—to many, it is also of interest to those who find this region new this year.

---

turn so complicated a trick so successfully. Everything is impeccable in taste, yet hearty and immediate in humor; charm and ribaldry are delicately balanced. The physical production was a more complete success than either of Tanglewood's two predecessors. The staging was simple but handsome, with no trace of artiness, and the student cast acted with admirable ensemble and style. If the singing revealed no potential major artists like Frances Yeend in "Peter Grimes" and Anne Bollinger in "Idomeneo," it was at least always lively, pleasant and reasonably capable in the execution of the florid figurations.

Two days before the opera, Serge Koussevitzky conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the first American performance of the Sixth Symphony by Ralph Vaughan Williams, who at 75 is one of England's most honored composers. A big work and a highly serious one, the symphony aroused sharply divided opinions. I found its first three movements academic and sterile, devoted mostly to the reworking of technical devices which had produced more spontaneous results in earlier works. The finale is remarkable. It is 12 minutes long and never rises above a pianissimo, as it carries a single, unostentatious theme through a series of contrapuntal events to a resigned conclusion. It is like the valedictory of an orator who realizes, after a lifetime of rhetoric and elocution, that no other manner of speaking can equal the power of hushed understatement. In the Sixth Symphony the result is disquieting, for the superior effectiveness of the finale makes the storm and stress of the earlier movements seem hardly worth the trouble.

CECIL SMITH

MEMPHIS, TENN.
COMMERCIAL APPEAL

SEP 12 1948

MUSIC WILL MISS HIM

Koussevitzky Begins His 25th, Final Season At Boston

Special to The Commercial Appeal

BOSTON, Sept. 11.—Serge Koussevitzky will open his 25th and final season as director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Friday, Oct. 8. The concert will be given in Boston's Symphony Hall and will start the orchestra's 68th season.

Through a quarter of a century Dr. Koussevitzky has devoted the greater part of his career to his orchestra, while identifying himself with the country which is now his own.

The conductor will base his opening program on the one which was his choice for his opening concert in Boston in the Autumn of 1924. It includes Vivaldi's "Orchestral Concerto in D Minor," and Brahms' "Variations on a Theme by Haydn." Honegger's "String Symphony" replaces the same composer's "Pacific 231," and Beethoven's "Seventh Symphony" will close the program.

NEW YORKER
NEW YORK CITY
SEP 4 - 1948

OUR FOOTLOOSE CORRESPONDENTS

KOUSSEVITZKY AT TANGLEWOOD

STOCKBRIDGE, MASS.

AT a time when American writing has come to be seriously menaced by the demands of the book clubs and the publishers for popular biographies and novels, and when noncommercial American painting depends mainly on a few New York galleries and the gamble of foundation patronage, it is surprising and reassuring to find, in the Berkshire Music Festival and the music school connected with it, a center of creative activity that is not merely surviving with difficulty but flourishing with conspicuous vigor.

The Berkshires have a cultural tradition, but it has been a sporadic one. In the middle of the last century, a number of writers came here, mostly from around Boston. Holmes spent several summers on a family estate near Pittsfield, and Longfellow came to board for the summer in a house that had belonged to Herman Melville's uncle. Hawthorne, in the early summer of 1850, rented, near Lenox, a little house on the estate of a rich family named Tappan. He wrote "The House of the Seven Gables" there; but he was annoyed by the variable weather, and his wife did not much like the "Red Cottage." He stayed only through the autumn of the following year, but he pinned on the Tappan estate the name Tanglewood, which he had invented for it in describing it as the background for his "Wonder-Book" and "Tanglewood Tales," those frigid retellings of the Greek myths assigned to an intolerable tutor named Eustace. Herman Melville came, also in 1850, to live in a farmhouse near Pittsfield, which he bought and called Arrowhead. He already knew the country, where as a boy he had visited the Melville house, in which Longfellow had stayed. He lived here for over thirteen years, and wrote "Moby Dick," "Pierre," and "The Piazza Tales," dedicating the second of these to Greylock, a mountain whose remote summit, rising above its nearer neighbors, he could see from the porch where he worked. Here he first met Hawthorne, at a picnic, and occasionally used to call on him. But, in spite of Melville's admiration for the writings of the older man, it cannot be said that their association had anything of Coleridge and Wordsworth. Both were solitaries; and Melville, returned from the sea, does not seem even much to have rejoiced in his family life. He eventually left, as had Hawthorne.

Other celebrities came and went; but Berkshire County, unlike Concord, which did have its organic intellectual life, remained fundamentally a place to which well-to-do people from Boston, ranging to the far end of their state, came to sit through serene summers. Later on, in the Big Money period, Lenox became a nesting place for millionaires. The mansion of Anson Phelps Stokes, which had a hundred rooms, was said, at the time it was built, to be the largest private house in the United States. Andrew Carnegie eventually bought it and died there. Not long after 1900, Edith Wharton moved to Lenox with her husband, in order to get away from the social routine of Newport and find better conditions for writing. She built a big, half châteaulike house, with Italian gardens and terraces, where, like Melville, she lasted hardly more than a decade, entertaining Clyde Fitch and Henry James, and paying visits to Charles Eliot Norton, who lived not far away at Ashfield. Of the impoverished natives in the hills, she brought away the grim impressions that she dramatized in "Summer" and "Ethan Frome." She says in her memoirs that she was happy here, but her great villa, with its high, white, stuccoed ceilings and its dark painted panels of flowers and fruit, though it today houses the senior class of the Foxhollow girls' school, has a desolate emptiness which one cannot help connecting with the lives of the very rich in the American early nineteen-hundreds that she describes in her novels of the period, as the cedars and the marble fountains have a bleakness that make one feel they could never have recalled Italy. In general, that whole gross era of extravagant expense and display seems to have barged into the Berkshire Hills only to founder there without leaving any permanent effects. The old, low, white New England houses of the Holmeses and of Melville's uncle (the last house now the Pittsfield Country Club) are still practicable as human dwellings; they have lived on, with their shrubbery and towering trees, from the post-Revolutionary past. But the millionaires' civilization seems as distant and dead as Pompeii. Already a number of its palaces have been demolished to escape paying taxes, and their great cellars, still strewn with debris, yawn spookily among decayed outbuildings, lawns reverting to meadows, and huge masses of hemlock and spruce. The Stokes place is now a Jesuit school. The residence of Mrs. Henry White, a gingerbread Tudor cottage on the scale of a summer hotel, has lately,

Calvert
Lifebuoy
B.O.
GEM BLADES
BURMA SHAVE
BALLANTINE ALE and BEER
PHILIP MORRIS
de la Torre

11 - 12 X

[293]

who had been flying on from Cleveland every weekend for the purpose of hearing the concerts, and I saw a party of young people, camped on the lawn on a blanket, who displayed a small sign on a pole reading, "Wanted: A Hitch to N.Y.C."

OVER the whole Tanglewood undertaking has presided the Russian-born Koussevitzky, whose artistic and human range makes possible for it the broadest scope. It has always been Koussevitzky's distinction that his genius is creative and educative, and that he has aimed to be something more than a brilliant and applauded conductor; and it has been his good fortune that private means have enabled him to act as a patron as well as an influential musician. In Russia, he backed Scriabin, when the latter was an avant-garde composer not yet well known, not only putting his music over by playing it at concerts but advancing him the money he needed to finish one of his more ambitious pieces; and, having acquired a publishing company, he brought out Stravinsky's "Petrouchka" and "Le Sacre du Printemps." In 1908, he set up a fund for the assistance of young composers. And from 1910 to 1914 he took an orchestra by boat down the Volga on a series of summer tours, giving concerts in all the provincial towns before audiences of which the members had sometimes never seen an orchestra. At his "Concerts Koussevitzky" in Paris, from 1921 to 1924, he played an immense amount of new French and Russian music: Ravel and the composers of "Les Six," Prokofiev and Stravinsky. Since he has been with the Boston Symphony, he has presented, in the course of his twenty-four years, more new music by American composers than any other conductor in America and has contributed at least as much to creating the reputations of Aaron Copland, Walter Piston, and Roy Harris, both by performing their music and by commissioning compositions by them, as he did in promoting those of the Russians. During Koussevitzky's first years in the United States, he does not seem to have taken much interest in the country: he delayed learning English and spent all his vacations abroad. But he applied for American citizenship in 1936, and the next summer made his first appearance at the Berkshire Festival. He had in the meantime come to think more highly of American musical training than he appears to have done at first, and he had been filling up the vacancies in his orchestra with American-born musicians in place of the foreign

This is the ne

FABULOUS and exciting...open-he the new Greenbrier offers you in the easy informality of the sports c chandelier blazes down on bare sh the background echoes the contrast historic Virginia wing against the c
Draper decoration. You'll want to p

Superb golf (3 courses)—Sam
—5 Har-Tru Courts • Trail R heated pool • Meyer Davis Mus

WHITE SULPHUR SPR

Edward T. Lawless, Vice President and General M call in New York, BR 9-6347; in Chicag

11-12X

as a matter of fact, been turned into a super-inn, which charges twenty-five dollars a day for one of the former masters' rooms, fifteen for one of the servants'.

AMONG these shells of both phases of Berkshire life, a new organism has taken root. Under the patronage of a Pittsfield lady, Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, there had been held in the summers, since 1918, a series of small chamber-music festivals in a hall built for the purpose at South Mountain. In the summers of 1934 and 1935, the composer Henry Hadley conducted three-concert festivals in a horse-show ring at Stockbridge. The next summer the three concerts were given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, and that autumn the inheritor of the Tappan estate, a music-loving lady, Mrs. Andrew H. Hepburn, had the idea of giving Tanglewood to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to be used for a festival on a bigger scale. Koussevitzky, to whom the offer was made, received it with gracious thanks, but did not have any notion as to what it was proposed to give him. He had to go to Mr. George E. Judd, the manager of the orchestra. "Tanglewood?" cried Mr. Judd. "Every child knows what Tanglewood is!" The present was accepted with alacrity. A tent was put up for the concerts in 1937, but one of the evenings was ruined by a thunderstorm, which came on during a Wagner program and reached a climax with the "Ride of the Valkyries," with the result of rendering it inaudible, and Koussevitzky declared that thereafter he would have to have something more substantial. The funds were rapidly raised—twenty thousand dollars was promised by the audience that night—and a steel auditorium was built, which was ready the following summer. Koussevitzky then got a grant of money from the Rockefeller Foundation and added a theatre for opera and a chamber-music hall, and he established a music school to teach composing and conducting, orchestral playing, and choral and operatic singing. The old gray house on the place, built in the sixties, steep-gabled and narrow-porched, was used for the offices and studios of what was now called the Music Center; and Hawthorne's little red cottage, which in the meantime had been burned down, was reconstructed as a studio for Koussevitzky. The old-fashioned landscape gardening, with its dark, dominating trees, its huge, bushy hemlock hedges, its alleys roofed over with grape arbors, and its fine views of lake and mountain—the whole place is a kind of plateau—that sometimes give the impression of mid-nineteenth-century paintings, made a marvellous setting for music. The older and more natural grandeurs were perfectly adapted to the art to which their owner had desired to devote them.

The difference between the Music Center at Tanglewood and the earlier cultural activities of the region is significant of the changed role in which America has found herself figuring since the end of the last war. The old Lenox and Stockbridge and Pittsfield were New England and well-to-do: their writers and artists were people of leisure. But Tanglewood is international, seriously professional, and completely democratic. Among four hundred and sixty-two students this season, there are men and women from fifteen countries and from forty-two states, about a hundred and forty of whom have scholarships and about a hundred and twenty of whom are war veterans taking advantage of the G.I. Bill of Rights. No student of evident ability is refused because he cannot pay: if necessary, lodging and food are provided free of charge. The music that is played and sung is derived from a great variety of nationalities and schools and periods: European and North and South American. The teaching of composition is conducted by the American Aaron Copland, with whom is associated every year some other distinguished composer. The visiting instructors have included Hindemith, Samuel Barber, Honegger, and Milhaud. The audience comes from all over—one hears every sort of native and foreign accent—and represents a wide range of income levels, from the subscribers who pay fifteen dollars for a box seat at a series of three concerts to boys and girls who make pilgrimages with rucksacks from Boston and New York and pay a two-dollar admission fee to sit outside on the grass, where the music can be clearly heard. I met this summer a middle-aged businessman ones of whom it had been mainly composed. When he applied for his final naturalization papers in 1941, he told reporters that the United States was the land "where I have carved out my career in life. . . . This is where I want to spend the rest of my days, in an atmosphere of freedom and achievement. The old country is a thing of the past. The United States is the only country in the world today in which artistic and musical ability can find free expression." He added that the Bolsheviks had confiscated his property in 1918 and that the Nazis had now taken over his house in Paris.

11 - 12 X

This action of Koussevitzky's and the founding and success of Tanglewood have thus, to some extent, been brought about by the closing of the doors of music in other parts of the world. But the artistic self-confidence of the United States had, of course, been growing stronger ever since the early twenties, and the American musical groups that had been studying modern composers and cultivating native talent had long been preparing the way for the original work of the school; so that the fusion of Koussevitzky and the native movement in music has resulted in the vigorous growth, since 1940, of an American musical center of national and international importance. It is not merely that the various departments of the student activity at Tanglewood have been kept up, like the Boston Symphony, to a high standard of discipline and quality, that conducting is taught by Koussevitzky and the instruments by the men in his orchestra (with Gregor Piatigorsky giving instruction in chamber music this summer), that composing is taught by Copland, that the choruses are trained by Robert Shaw, and that the opera is directed by Boris Goldovsky, the director of the New England Opera Theatre, in Boston. But one feels, on the part of these teachers as well as on that of the students, pervading the whole place, a spirit of excited enthusiasm and a sense of satisfactory accomplishment.

A CONTRIBUTION of any sum, however little, to the organization known as the Friends of the Berkshire Festival admits you to all the student concerts, which take place almost every day and are hardly inferior in interest to the advertised professional concerts, for the students play their own compositions, which are sometimes quite remarkable, as well as a variety of classics, and the student chamber orchestra affords an opportunity to hear chamber music from Mozart to Schoenberg always competently, often admirably, played. For a visitor on a holiday, the Festival thus provides entertainment that seems inexhaustible. He can go to a concert every day, often twice a day; and the conditions for listening to music are, except in the event of rain, perfect. He does not have to storm the abrupt steps, to battle the glass doors and the evening clothes, as he does at Carnegie Hall, or to navigate funereal streets from which the snow, ice, and slush are never removed, as he does to get to Symphony Hall, in Boston—shutting out, in either case, with an effort the city whose buildings and traffic press like the sea on a diver's bell. Here on top of the Tanglewood hill, you can sit serene and unhurried, mind clear and nerves relaxed. The big "shed" in which the orchestra plays is open at the sides, and you can look out at great walls of trees—motionless except when an aspen glistens in a wind—that rise out of sight so that they seem to hang like tapestries of leaves and needles. The grounds are so extensive that, even at the best-attended concert, you are never uncomfortably crowded.

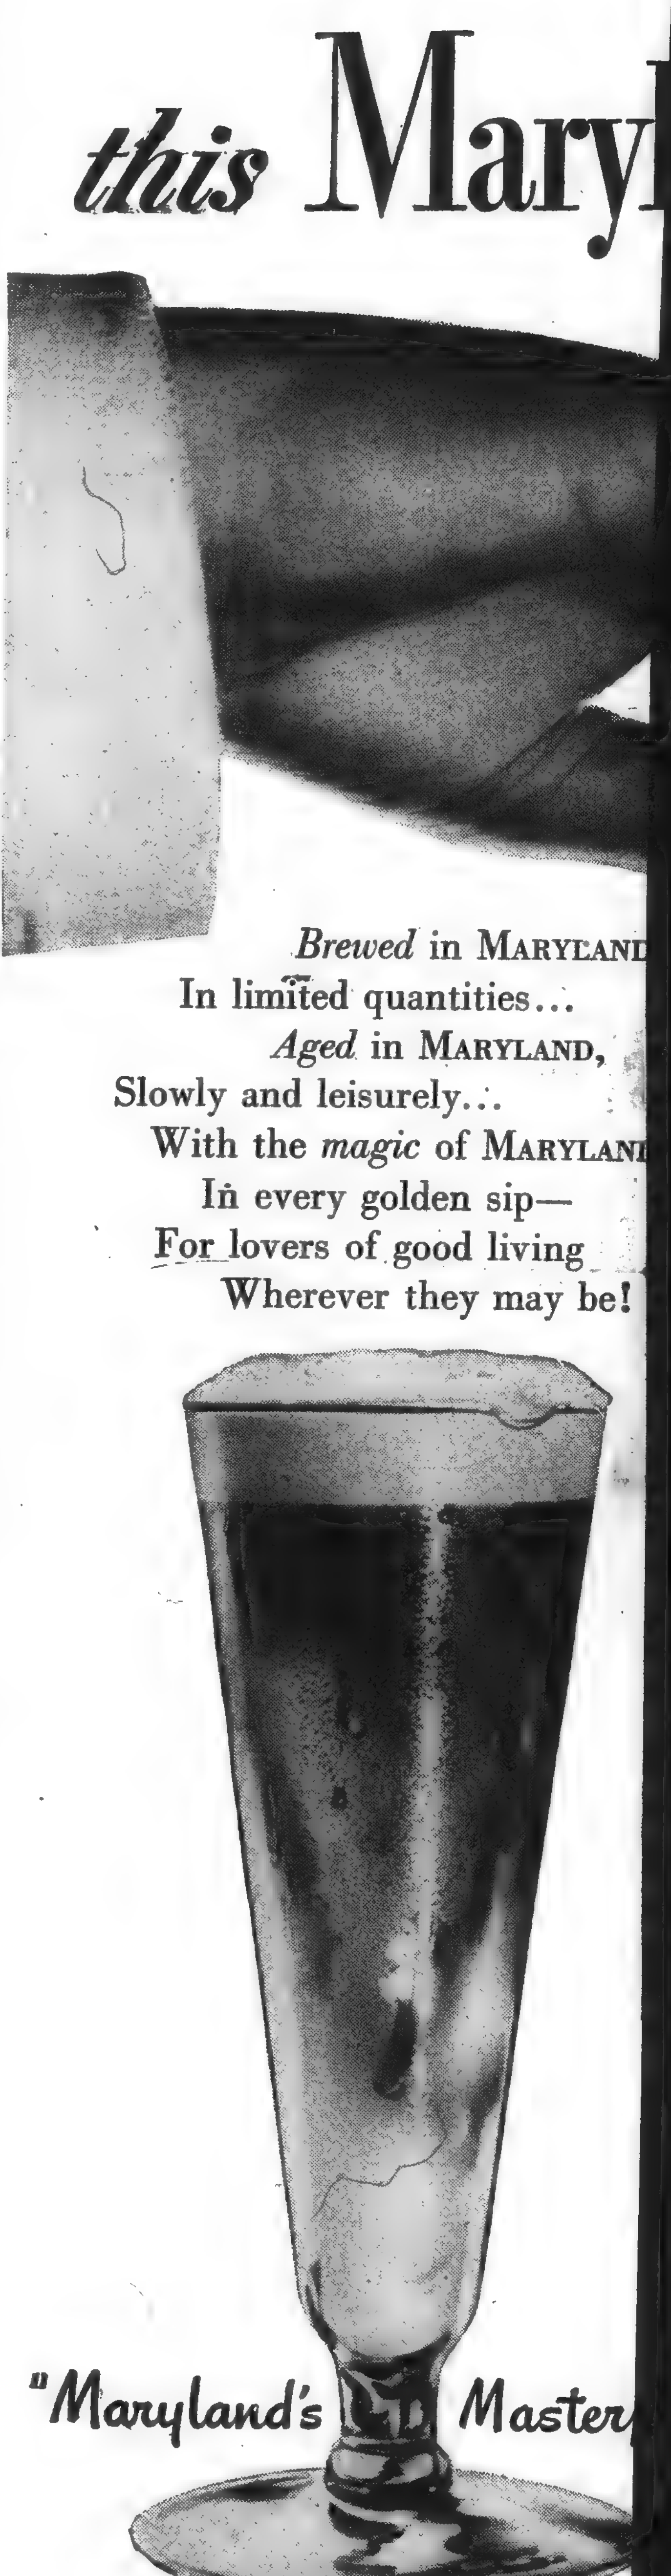
As for the programs, the present writer is not a music critic but a member of what one of the speakers at a Tanglewood benefit this summer called "the lay but indispensable public." Mindful of the stern admonition given me by Aaron Copland that "out of every two words about music written by a literary man, at least one will be the very last word that a musician would have chosen to apply," I can only give my layman's impressions, whose only possible value will be that of conveying to another layman the kind of thing he may expect.

On the more difficult modern side, then, this year, you had a cello sonata by Hindemith, written for Piatigorsky and played for the first time, which seemed to me mostly rather shadowy or crumbling away into holes like something in a painting by Dali. A chamber concerto, with solo violin, by Lourié traced a wavering outline, fragile and faint, like the thin thread of a twilight reverie. On the other hand, a Kammersymphonie by Schoenberg was last season one of the most striking events, unrolling and convoluting its sharp, dark sounds like shavings of steel in the morning air till they seemed to become more tangible than the instruments that were making the music. I am sorry that

11—12x

I came too late this summer to hear the whole series of Bartók quartets played by the Juilliard String Quartet. I was told by an authority on modern music that the effect of these quartets was rather enhanced by a tendency on the part of the American musicians to swing the rhythms more markedly than the traditional strings would do.

At the opposite pole from all this are the resounding popular programs with which Koussevitzky seems to aim to please as many people as possible and the last of which drew this year, on a Sunday afternoon, a record audience of fourteen thousand seven hundred people. I did not much look forward last year to hearing Ravel's "Bolero," and did not much look forward this year to an all-Tchaikovsky evening, which consisted of the "Pathétique" Symphony, the First Piano Concerto, and the "1812" Overture; but when Koussevitzky brought them to life, rescuing them from banality, with all his resourceful musicianship and his dramatic imagination, I was probably as much thrilled by them as anybody. Leonard Bernstein, Koussevitzky's pupil, has also his enthusiastic following. It seemed to me that this young man had very much improved since last year. There were only a few moments this season when, conducting as he does without baton, he gave the impression a little of doing an interpretative dance to the music rather than of guiding the orchestra. He took on the Second Symphony of Mahler, of which I hope it is not vulgar to say that it has everything in it but the kitchen stove, with its vast orchestra and fancy percussion, its chorus and its female soloists, and its offstage passages for which groups of brass have continually to be going out to contribute little semi-detached episodes, one of which gives rise to the illusion that there is a cabaret next door. This symphony takes most of the afternoon: it makes one feel that one has lived it like a lifetime. But Bernstein had studied it with care, and he put the whole thing through with delicacy, variety, and energy. He made it more interesting than I ever remember to have heard a Mahler symphony made before. And though in Strauss's "Don Quixote" the sheep and the wind machine and all the literary paraphernalia of the tone poems of the turn of the century seem irrelevant today and a bore, the Don Quixote voice of the cello, in the hands of Piatigorsky, spun out finely the slow residue of sweetness that always made the real enchantment of the Bavarian brewer's grandson. The effect of the blitz on Vaughan Williams was



Brewed in MARYLAND
In limited quantities...
Aged in MARYLAND,
Slowly and leisurely...
With the magic of MARYLAN
In every golden sip—
For lovers of good living
Wherever they may be!

11/12x

I came too late this summer to hear the whole series of Bartók quartets played by the Juilliard String Quartet. I was told by an authority on modern music that the effect of these quartets was rather enhanced by a tendency on the part of the American musicians to swing the rhythms more markedly than the traditional strings would do.

At the opposite pole from all this are the resounding popular programs with which Koussevitzky seems to aim to please as many people as possible and the last of which drew this year, on a Sunday afternoon, a record audience of fourteen thousand seven hundred people. I did not much look forward last year to hearing Ravel's "Bolero," and did not much look forward this year to an all-Tchaikovsky evening, which consisted of the "Pathétique" Symphony, the First Piano Concerto, and the "1812" Overture; but when Koussevitzky brought them to life, rescuing them from banality, with all his resourceful musicianship and his dramatic imagination, I was probably as much thrilled by them as anybody. Leonard Bernstein, Koussevitzky's pupil, has also his enthusiastic following. It seemed to me that this young man had very much improved since last year. There were only a few moments this season when, conducting as he does without baton, he gave the impression a little of doing an interpretative dance to the music rather than of guiding the orchestra. He took on the Second Symphony of Mahler, of which I hope it is not vulgar to say that it has everything in it but the kitchen stove, with its vast orchestra and fancy percussion, its chorus and its female soloists, and its offstage passages for which groups of brass have continually to be going out to contribute little semi-detached episodes, one of which gives rise to the illusion that there is a cabaret next door. This symphony takes most of the afternoon: it makes one feel that one has lived it like a lifetime. But Bernstein had studied it with care, and he put the whole thing through with delicacy, variety, and energy. He made it more interesting than I ever remember to have heard a Mahler symphony made before. And though in Strauss's "Don Quixote" the sheep and the wind machine and all the literary paraphernalia of the tone poems of the turn of the century seem irrelevant today and a bore, the Don Quixote voice of the cello, in the hands of Piatigorsky, spun out finely the slow residue of sweetness that always made the real enchantment of the Bavarian brewer's grandson. The effect of the blitz on Vaughan Williams was this Maryl

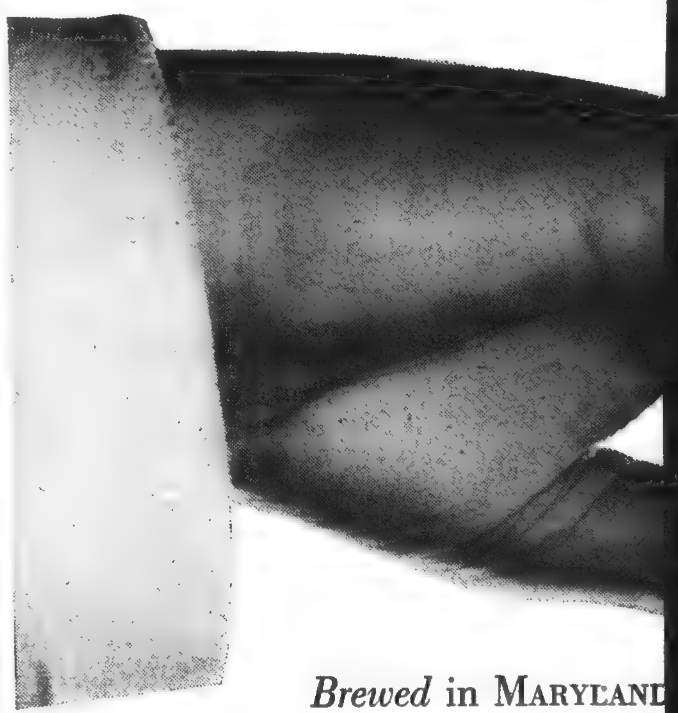
Brewed in MARYLAND
In limited quantities...
Aged in MARYLAND,
Slowly and leisurely...
With the magic of MARYLANI
In every golden sip—
For lovers of good living
Wherever they may be!

"Maryland's Master



11/12X

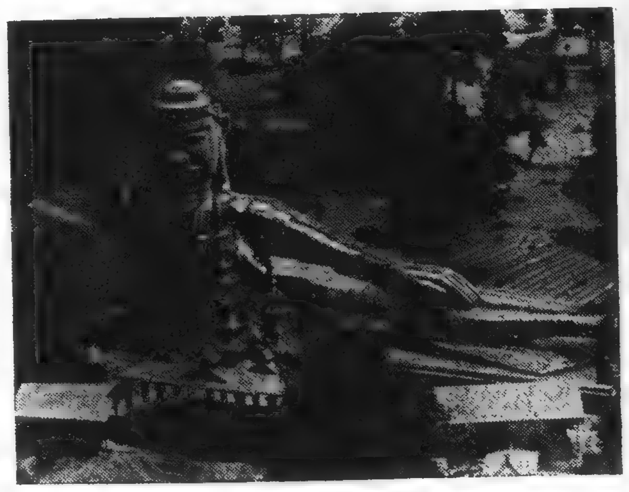
"Trovatore" this summer, and last summer copious excerpts from "Don Carlos" and "Traviata"—came out particularly well, partly, I suppose, because Verdi cannot fail to be dramatic and lively, but also because the young singers are able to bring to these old pieces a freshness that makes one forget the trappings of the traditional opera house, of which they have come to be almost as much the furniture as plush curtains and gold prosceniums, and even make one hear the music with new ears.

Mr. Goldovsky deserves so much credit for his work with these students and their operas that I feel a little ungrateful in complaining of what I feel to be the only detail that may be considered out of place at Tanglewood. It has been Mr. Goldovsky's custom to appear at one side of the stage and deliver a little speech before every raising of the curtain. Now, these speeches are sometimes informative, but they occasionally defeat their purpose, when Mr. Goldovsky, whose knowledge of opera plots is evidently encyclopedic, tells a good deal more than is necessary and ends by confusing his hearers. What is worse, he gives somewhat the effect, partly intentional, but partly, because of his imperfect accent, probably unintentional, of appearing as a comic monologuist. He is invariably applauded with laughter by a certain proportion of the audience, who seem to think they are witnessing a revue; but his effect on some of the rest is to set their teeth on edge. His jokes are by no means on a level with his admirable staging of opera, and we could dispense with his improvised pleasantries, especially when repeated the third or fourth time, on triangular situations, apropos of the fountain scene from "Pelléas et Mélisande," in which Mélisande drops her wedding ring into the water. I do not know how a worse introduction could have been made to this dialogue of thin beaten gold, which was plausibly impersonated and charmingly sung by Mr. Robert Rounseville and Miss Janet Hayes. (Miss Hayes, who sang three of the "Fêtes Galantes" at another of the student concerts, has the sense and the tone of Debussy.) One would also be glad to dispense with Mr. Goldovsky's politics. The plot of "Idomeneo" is concerned with a king of Crete who, caught by a bad storm on his way home from the Trojan War, invokes the intervention of Neptune at what turns out to be a disastrous price. Mr. Goldovsky, if I understood him, attempted last summer to connect this legend with the

High-spots on KL
Royal

★ You know them o
★ Can you name

Leave New York, via KLM's Royal Route . . . next day see one of Europe's most famous landmarks!



Out where "the dawn comes up like thunder" . . . Batavia bound KLM passengers glimpse this giant Buddha!

KLM's Royal Route is a skyway lo
sands of miles than twice the dista globe! Each day, above the great continents, KLM passengers look such famous landmarks as these.
ride to half a hundred different dest
all enjoy the same, superb Royal Rou
all fly with the confidence inspired by Oldest Airline!

FROM NEW YORK: Daily Flights to ALL EUR
FAR EAST, SOUTH AFRICA
FROM MIAMI: Daily Flights to JAMAICA
WEST INDIES, AND VENEZ

K·L
ROYAL DUT

See your local travel agent or KLM Royal Dutch A
2-4000. Other KLM offices in Washington, D. C., Miam

11-12X

THE NEW YORKER

well as the summer residents are rather put out by the appearance of so many strange people, so much busier about what they are doing than rural New Englanders usually are, and evidently enjoying the stimulus of some source of inspiration which the townspeople do not understand. The rapacity with which the hotelkeepers and others attempt to exploit these outsiders is amusingly combined with an instinct to make things uncomfortable for them and to give them their less-than-money's-worth in as grudging a way as possible. But this, too, is characteristic of the present situation of the United States confronted with its new responsibilities as an international power. One could wish that these responsibilities were elsewhere as adequately met as they have been at Tanglewood. That both talent and the general public will appreciate a top-notch leadership has been strikingly demonstrated here. As you walk back to Lenox from Tanglewood after one of the big concerts, you are reminded by the hiss and crash of departing cars and buses that this, as the voice of their era, is what Koussevitzky has to compete with, with his few concentrated moments of sweet and subtle sound. But the occupants of these vehicles have come here to listen to his orchestra—the old ladies from the obsolete mansions, the youngsters who have no cars getting rides with the young married couples who have and who have come here on their vacations; and tonight these mechanical horsepowers have had to hush their huffings and puffings while their owners sat quiet in the Tanglewood shed and heard what the orchestra had to say. —EDMUND WILSON

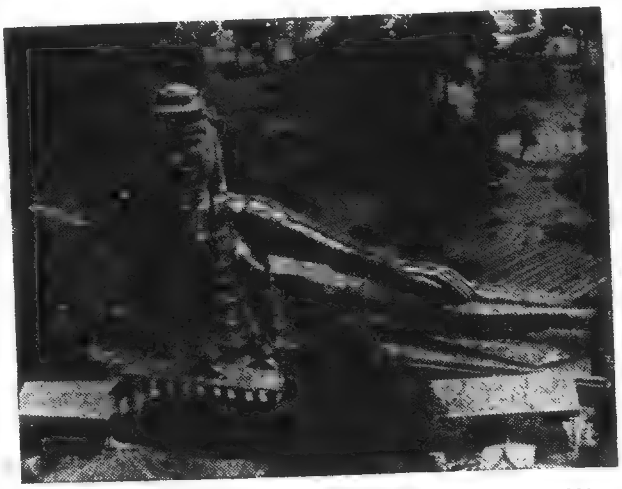
"Trovatore" this summer, and last summer copious excerpts from "Don Carlos" and "Traviata"—came out particularly well, partly, I suppose, because Verdi cannot fail to be dramatic and lively, but also because the young singers are able to bring to these old pieces a freshness that makes one forget the trappings of the traditional opera house, of which they have come to be almost as much the furniture as plush curtains and gold prosceniums, and even make one hear the music with new ears.

Mr. Goldovsky deserves so much credit for his work with these students and their operas that I feel a little ungrateful in complaining of what I feel to be the only detail that may be considered out of place at Tanglewood. It has been Mr. Goldovsky's custom to appear at one side of the stage and deliver a little speech before every raising of the curtain. Now, these speeches are sometimes informative, but they occasionally defeat their purpose, when Mr. Goldovsky, whose knowledge of opera plots is evidently encyclopedic, tells a good deal more than is necessary and ends by confusing his hearers. What is worse, he gives somewhat the effect, partly intentional, but partly, because of his imperfect accent, probably unintentional, of appearing as a comic monologuist. He is invariably applauded with laughter by a certain proportion of the audience, who seem to think they are witnessing a revue; but his effect on some of the rest is to set their teeth on edge. His jokes are by no means on a level with his admirable staging of opera, and we could dispense with his improvised pleasantries, especially when repeated the third or fourth time, on triangular situations, apropos of the fountain scene from "Pelléas et Mélisande," in which Mélisande drops her wedding ring into the water. I do not know how a worse introduction could have been made to this dialogue of thin beaten gold, which was plausibly impersonated and charmingly sung by Mr. Robert Rounseville and Miss Janet Hayes. (Miss Hayes, who sang three of the "Fêtes Galantes" at another of the student concerts, has the sense and the tone of Debussy.) One would also be glad to dispense with Mr. Goldovsky's politics. The plot of "Idomeneo" is concerned with a king of Crete who, caught by a bad storm on his way home from the Trojan War, invokes the intervention of Neptune at what turns out to be a disastrous price. Mr. Goldovsky, if I understood him, attempted last summer to connect this legend with the

High-spots on KL
Royal

★ You know them a
★ Can you name

Leave New York, via KLM's Royal Route . . . next day see one of Europe's most famous landmarks!



Out where "the dawn comes up like thunder" . . . Batavia bound KLM passengers glimpse this giant Buddha!

KLM's Royal Route is a skyway lo
sands of miles than twice the dista globe! Each day, above the great continents, KLM passengers look such famous landmarks as these.
ride to half a hundred different dest
all enjoy the same, superb Royal Rou
all fly with the confidence inspired b
Oldest Airline!

FROM NEW YORK: Daily Flights to ALL EUR
FAR EAST, SOUTH AFRICA
FROM MIAMI: Daily Flights to JAMAICA
WEST INDIES, AND VENEZ

ROYAL DUT

See your local travel agent or KLM Royal Dutch A
2-4000. Other KLM offices in Washington, D. C., Miam

11-12X

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH
TRIBUNE

SEP [illegible] 1948

Salt Lake Musician Returns From Berkshire Festival

By MAUD ROBINSON

Just returned to Salt Lake from the annual Berkshire Music festival at Tanglewood, Lennox, Mass., Richard P. Condie brings an account of six weeks of wonderful opportunity for 465 orchestra leaders, professional musicians, singers and teachers, from 47 states, Cuba, West Indies, Canada, France, even far off Jerusalem.

Mr. Condie, well known as assistant with the Tabernacle choir and as a teacher of the university's mixed chorus, says "it was a valuable experience meeting students doing such varied professional work."

Famous Syhphony

The work all centered around Boston Symphony orchestra led by Koussevitsky which gave three or ~~four~~ concerts weekly—with a No. 2 orchestra made up from students who had to pass a rigorous test. Mr. Condie enrolled in the choral department under Robert Shaw and Hugh Ross, with 200 in the chorus.

"We did Brahms' requiem, Blessed Damosel, by De Bussey and Bach's St. John's Passion," he reports, "with Mahler's resurrection symphony. Leonard Bernstein, Koussevitsky's first assistant, conducted."

Worth Copying

That the U.'s winter programs will benefit from the Tanglewood production of scenes from various operas with costumes and scenery is likely—

"I hope we shall be able to do much the same thing in Salt Lake this winter," Mr. Condie says enthusiastically. "Also I should like to do Bach's cantata No. 4, and perhaps Mozart's Requiem with the U. orchestra. I hope my chorus also may sing in Beethoven's Solemnis Mass with the Utah Symphony, and in Bach's St. Matthews Passion."

Great Men Frolic

Tanglewood saw a justice of the U. S. supreme court, Felix Frankfurter, and a noted poet, and a librarian of congress, Archibald Macleish, dancing on the green at Tanglewood this summer.

"Twelve thousand people brought their lunches to this concert for relief of musicians in Europe," said Mr. Condie. "The music program was all Strauss waltzes and Sibelius selections. Thousands danced on the smooth turf. It was in the band shell on the magnificent lawns of the large estate which is Tanglewood, and facing the shell is the $100,000 'shed,' a roof with no walls but with finest acoustics, built to shelter the student audiences and visitors. At this concert, 'Tanglefoot on Parade,' work was set aside for a day of celebration and fine music."

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
PERKSHIRE EAGLE

SEP 24 1948

Non-Concert Time of Visit To Tanglewood Is Problem

George E. Judd, Manager of Boston Symphony Orchestra, Tells Rotary Guests 'Must Be Carefully Nursed'

A visitor to Tanglewood spends only about two hours of his time listening to a concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, but not enough thought is being given by Berkshire County to the other 22 hours of his day.

That was the thought expressed to Rotarians at their weekly luncheon meting at the Hotel Sheraton yesterday noon by George E. Judd, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

A visitor to this section during the Berkshire Festival "must be carefully nursed," Mr. Judd believes, so that he will go away with a good impression of the Berkshires and want to return another year.

He credited the Berkshire Hills Conference and its public relations officer, Paul W. Foster of Great Barrington, for doing a "magnificent job for this county in furnishing information on rooms and food for Festival visitors.

While passing out orchids, Mr. Judd informed the Rotarians that he wanted to publicly give credit to The Berkshire Evening Eagle for the support this newspaper has given through the years to the Berkshire Festival.

The greatest problem facing Tanglewood today, Mr. Judd stated, is traffic.

"I don't know the answer to it but I hope you can solve it."

Reviews Orchestra History

Mr. Judd reviewed briefly the history of the Boston Symphony Orchestra as ~~well as the Berkshire Festival,~~ disclosing that it has been discovered the Boston Symphony Orchestra once gave a concert in Stockbridge before the turn of the century but the program presented at that time has never been located.

"We are offering a season ticket to the person who can produce that program," said Mr. Judd, explaining a search of newspaper files and other publications has proved futile.

"Can you imagine The Eagle allowing the Boston Symphony today to play in Stockbridge without making a line about it?" asked Mr Judd.

He let the Rotarians know that the Berkshire Festival is aware of the fact that it has competition adding the "Festival is here because it is here." Europe was down and out for a long time beecause of the war, Mr. Judd continued but there are other musical centers making their appearance again.

In explaining that 165,000 people listened to the 60 concerts at Tanglewood this year, Mr. Judd declared that "You'll find here the largest audience for chamber music in the United States," adding it is the outgrowth of the work of Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge of this city and others.

In breaking down the attendance at the Festival concerts Mr. Judd reported that one-third are year-around residents of the county, one-third move into this county for the summer and one-third are commuters.

During the 68-year history of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the musicians have played 2000 compositions with Beethoven's Fifth leading. There have been 750 soloists with the orchestra which has played a total of 10,000 concerts since 1880.

John D. Lynch, president of the Rotary Club presided and introduced Jay C. Rosenfeld, music critic of The Eagle, who presented Mr. Judd.

Peter Van S. Rice, chairman of the speakers' bureau of the Community Chest, told briefly of the aims of the Chest in this city and urged support of the Rotarians in the forthcoming campaign.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 28,008)

This Clipping From LEWISTON, ME.
SUN
APR 12 1948

KOUSSEVITZKY RETIRES

Boogie-woogie addicts and other so-called patrons of popular music may only yawn and say "so what." but it means a great deal in the world of serious music that ~~Serge~~ Koussevitzky is retiring in 1949 as ~~conductor of the~~ Boston Symphony Orchestra.

In a quarter of a century, the famous Russian-born conductor has made the Boston Symphony one of the world's finest orchestras. Many critics outside of Boston claim it has no equal. Its excellence has certainly added to the lustre of Boston as a cultural center, but the news of Koussevitzky's retirement is offset by announcement of a successor who shows promise of becoming a great conductor in his own right.

He is Charles Muench, a native of Alsace, who has conducted the Boston Symphony at guest appearances during his brief stay in this country, including three weeks of this season. Muench came here late in 1946 from Paris, where he was conductor of the Paris Conservatory Orchestra. After his education in Paris and Germany, Muench conducted the Leipzig Gewandhaus Orchestra, and later founded the Paris Philharmonic. Tall and striking, he is a vigorous figure on the podium, and during his sojourn here has won the acclaim of numerous critics for his first-rate ability.

So, although Boston is to lose Koussevitzky, who has become almost as much a fixture of the city as its Common, it gains a promising replacement. And Koussevitzky will not be far away, since he will continue as a director of the Berkshire Music Center, where so many talented young musicians have been trained. Now 74, he has many more contributions yet to make to the world of music.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th St., NEW YORK 11, N.Y.
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Cir. (D 169,855)

This Clipping From PHILADELPHIA, PA.
NEWS
APR 16 1948

Boston Symphony
—At Academy

By PITTS C. CARTER

The Philadelphia Forum presented the Boston Symphony Orchestra last ~~night at the~~ Academy of Music under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky. The capacity audience gave the visitors a tremendous ovation.

Although the Boston is one of the great orchestras of the world, last night they did not seem to be in their top form. The program opened with a fine reading of Mozart's Jupiter Symphony, which was followed by Prokofieff's Scythian Suite, "Ala and Lolli." This latter work is most unrewarding and full of meaningless dissonances and empty crescendos. Koussevitzky did a noble job of conducting the complicated score, but the men, understandably, did not seem to have their hearts in it.

The final work on the program was the popular Second Symphony of Sibelius. It was given an exciting and dramatic interpretation, but in certain sections one could have wished for a more subtle pianissimo and a more surging, full-bodied string tone to enhance the more romantic passages.

However, the concert was an enjoyable one and the orchestra and its conductor deserved the prolonged applause.

The third and final concert in the 20th annual festival of the American Society of Ancient Instruments was presented last night before a capacity audience in the Bellevue-Stratford hotel.

Members of the ensemble were Jo Brodo, pardessus de viole; Josef Smit, viola da gamba; Florence Rosensweig, pardessus de viole; Maurice Ben Stad, basse de viole and Flora Stad, harpsichord. Soloist of the evening was William Kincaid, first flutist in the Philadelphia orchestra.

The program offered a variety of interesting and unusual works by Purcell, Telemann and Florentio Maschera.

END OF VOLUME

END OF REEL

PLEASE

REWIND